Încercare de sinteză privind cercetările la nivel international

Primul care a folosit numele populare ale stelelor pentru concluzii etnologice a fost Grimm; în lucrarea sa Mitologia germană el a abordat numele Via lactea și noțiunea de cale de paie. Mándoki trece în revistă, pe scurt, și ceilalți contributori timpurii, cum ar fi Andree (1878) sau Potanin (1883) sau alții[1].

Denumirea prin referentul lapte este o practică prezentă nu doar în cultura grecească, ci și în culturile fino-ugrice și diferitele etnii din Siberia (Lebeuf 199; Kuperjanov 2020) În Estonia denumirea curentă este Linnutee sau „Drumul Păsărilor", dar și forma Piimatee „Calea Laptelui" este cunoscută, probabil ca o influență germană (Kuperjanov 2020:53).

Printre denumirile uzuale din culturile fino-ugrice Kuperjanov (2020) menționează următoarele: Calea cerească, Calea păsărilor, Calea sufletelor, Calea urmelor (percepție în care Calea Lactee e reprezentată ca o scenă mitică de vânătoare). Calea cerească și Calea păsărilor au ca referent drumul pe care păsările migratoare călătoresc primăvara și toamna, conduse de o pasăre albă, asemănătoare cu o lebădă, cu capul unei fecioare frumoase de care toate păsările de pradă precum șoimii sau vulturii se tem. Pe lângă popoarele fino-ugrice, credința de mai sus este bine documentată și în rândul popoarelor turco-altaie și al unor popoare slave (Lebeuf 1996: 150; Kuperjanov 2020: 53).

Calea Lactee ca drum al sufletelor celor decedați este un motiv întâlnit în multe culturi și religii, de exemplu vechea mitologie germană, cultura vechilor tătari sau cultura amerindienilor (Lebeuf 1996: 150, Harva 1959). Calea Lactee este percepută, în acest context, ca drumul pe care sufletele și/sau pasărea sufletului îl urmează către lumea de dincolo. Pentru popoarele fino-ugrice, pasărea sufletului este o rață, un scufundător sau o gâscă. (Lebeuf 1996: 149; Kuperjanov 2020: 53). În interpretarea creștină Calea lactee este percepută ca un loc al pelerinilor, un drum al pelerinilor sau al sufletelor. Ea este calea pe care Fecioara Maria a urmat-o către ceruri (Kuperjanov 2020: 53). În culturile necreștine, caracterul de pelerinaj, de drum sacru este prezent, calea lactee fiind reprezentată ca: drumul spre Meca la tătari sau drumul sufletelor către Valhalla la nordici, respectiv drumul pe care a mers Dumnezeu la iacuți sau drumul vânătorului celest în cultura hanti sau drumul Omului Pădurii la voguli, aceste reprezentări nefiind nimic altceva decât simbolul strămoșilor mitici sau simbolul sufletelor morților în straturile arhaice ale tradițiilor eurasiatice și americane (Lebeuf 1996: 150). Calea Lactee ca arborele lumii este o viziune caracteristică nu numai cosmologiei fino-ugrice, ci aproape tuturor popoarelor (Kuperjanov, 2020: 55).

Într-un studiu dedicat denumirilor Căii Lactee în Peninsula Balcanică, Darina Mladenova (1998) precizează că există două arii de răspândire, și anume: „1) aria centrală, mai recentă, cu interpretări ale Căii Lactee ca „paie împrăştiate"; 2) aria periferică, arhaică, în care interpretările ca „paie" lipsesc" (Maldenova 1998: 43). Aria sud-est europeană a reprezentărilor Căii Lactee ca paie are o zonă centrală, una de sud, una de nord, una de vest și una de est. După Harva (1959), tipul de cosmonim care conține lexemul paie a fost cunoscut de turcii caucazieni, osmanlii și multe popoare balcanice și este de origine persană, lucru amintit și de Potanin (1883 apud Mándoki 1965: 119).

Aria centrală curpinde arealul lingvistic bulgar şi sârbocroat, partea de vest a teritoriului românesc, dialectele aromân şi megleno-român, limba maghiară, albaneza de nord, turca şi o parte din dialectele greceşti. „În afara Peninsulei Balcanice, această reprezentare există în Sardinia, Asia Mică, regiunea munţilor Caucaz, partea de sud-vest a Asiei, Peninsula Arabică, Africa de Nord şi de Est, caracterizând unele limbi turanice, iranice şi semitice, armeană (unde este atestată cel mai devreme - în sec. VII) și unele limbi caucaziene şi africane" (Maldenova 1998: 43).

În partea centrală a Peninsulei Balcanice predomină legendele și denumirile privind paiele furate de un fin de la nașul său și împrăștiate apoi pe drum. Acest areal central cuprinde întregul teritoriu lingvistic bulgar şi pe cel sârbocroat, dialectele albaneze de nord, dialectele greceşti din Epirul de Nord şi din insula Corfu (Maldenova 1998: 43). În zona de sud Mladenova identifică legendele legate de figura unui „popă hoţ, după care Calea Lactee s-a format din paiele pe care un popă le-a furat şi, ducându-le, le-a împrăştiat în drumul său. Această interpretare este caracteristică mai ales pentru greci - ea este atestată în Macedonia, Epir, Elada Centrală şi Peloponez [...]Din greacă, acest model onomasiologic, împreună cu legenda respectivă, a pătruns în dialectele bulgare de sud-vest (şi tot aşa în unele localităţi din Bulgaria de Nord)" (Maldenova 1998: 43). În zona de nord paiele sunt furate de figura unui țigan, variantă răspândită în unele dialecte maghiare de sud-vest şi altele pe teritoriul României, în Banatul de Nord, Crişana şi Transilvania. La vest paiele sunt legate de imaginea Sfântului Petru (Maldenova 1998: 44). Aria arhaică, în care imaginea paielor împrăștiate lipsește, este reprezentată, crede Mladenova (1998 44) la nord de denumirile românești Drumul robilor, Calea lui Troian, la sud de modelul onomasiologic grecesc al râului Iordan[2] şi la vest de denumirile slovene cu sintagma Cale romană.

Tehnica calchierii este prezentă și în cosmonimia din limbile turcice, arată Gyarmati (1993), dar în aceste limbi influența termenilor greci sau latini este absentă (cu excepția lexemului Südyolu din Azerbaidjan, calchiat destul de recent probabil după rusescul Млечный Путь „Calea Lactee” (Gyarmati 1993: 225).

Dintre numele Căii Lactee folosite de popoarele turcice, cele mai frecvente sunt cele care descriu forma sau culoarea acestui fenomen ceresc, Gyarmati (1993) aduce ca exemple, printre altele următoarele lexeme: Yolaq „Calea Celestă” din limbile ciagatai și uigură, Kök yolu, Gök yolu „Calea Cerului” din limba turcă osmanlie, Gök kapusu „Poarta cerului”, Gök yarugu „Fisura/Crestătura Cerului”, Gökdere „Pârâul cerului” - lexeme dialectale turcești, Qar yol'i „Calea zăpezii” din dialectal teleut, Xro coli „Calea brumii”, „Calea înghețată” din limba altaică (Gyarmati 1993: 226). Aceste denumiri se bazau pe aspectul vizual general și pe asemănarea exterioară, parametrii fizici speciali, aspectul și culoarea Căii Lactee evocând imagini ale unei „căi” sau „căi înzăpezite” și pentru vechii observatori nomazi din populațiile turcice. În același grup semantic pot fi încadrate și variantele din limba kazahă Aq maya joli, turkmenă Aqmä yanin Yol'i „Calea cămilei albe” și kirghiză Koy jolu „Calea oilor”, toate însemnând „Calea lactee” și toate create prin analogie semantică și extensie de sens: „calea celor mai de preț animale”. (Gyarmati 1993: 226)

Multe denumiri populare ale Căii Lactee au caracter mitologic. Yakovleva (2023) explică acest caracter mitologic prin faptul că imaginea Căii Lactee formează structura modelului mitopoetic al lumii, denumirile ei reprezentând verbalizarea ideilor omului arhaic despre acest obiect cosmic ca un fel de loc de graniță care separa lumea „proprie” de cea „străină”.

Există câteva denumiri de largă circulație. Una dintre ele este cea care integrează lexemul paie, răspândit din zona Africii de Nord, a Mediteranei până în Caucaz. (Ioniță 2006, Mándoki 1965). Gyarmati (1993) subscrie la ideea lui Mándoki (1965) privind denumirile cu referentul paie în contextul unor civilizații de tip agricol.

În limbile turcice, la fel ca în alte limbi, numele care încep cu cuvântul „paie” pot fi adesea găsite ca nume ale Căii Lactee, de exemplu: Saman oyr'isi în limbile ciagatai și azeră, lexemele turcești Samanogrusu ~ Samanugrusu ~ Tur. Dial. Samanugrisi (lexem turcesc dialectal, cuvântul tătar Saman uyrisi „Hoț de paie”, Samanyolu (limbile găgăuză și turcă), Saman yoli (limba uigură), Saman yoli (limba taranci), Sàmân yôli (limba uzbegă), Samanyulï (tătară crimeeană), Samanci fol, Samancïnïn folu (limba kirghiză), Kaz Saban fol'i (limba cazahă) cu sensul „Calea paiului”, lexemul dialectal turcesc Samanyalagi ~ Samanyolagi însemnând „Poteca paiului” și Samandölcen „Paiele împrăștiate”. În limbile turcice, denumirile „Calea paiului” sau „Poteca paiului” au fost create prin calc, modelul putând proveni din limba arabă. (Gyarmati 1993: 229). Strămoșii acestor popoare, care probabil se ocupau cu agricultura, cultivarea porumbului pe câmpiile fertile ale râurilor, observau fenomenele cerului cu sute de mii de stele acumulate în acest mod ciudat al cerului și le amintea de paiele căzute și împrăștiate pe drumuri. Aceste nume sunt larg cunoscute în și întreaga Mediterana, dar rădăcinile lor nu pot fi clar și inechivoc stabilite, conchide (Gyarmati 1993). Este de notat, totuși, că varianta care conține lexemul paie pare a fi cea mai veche din punctul de vedere al atestării: cea mai veche atestare cunoscută până în prezent datează din secolul al VII-lea și poate fi găsită în cosmogonia scriitorului armean Sirakaci, care arată că, în timpul unei ierni reci, Vaggn, strămoșul armenilor, a furat paie de la Varsama, strămoșul asirienilor, de aceea Calea Lactee este numită în mod tradițional urma hoțului de paie.” (Sirakaci 1962, 69 apud Mándoki 1965: 139).

Pe baza denumirilor Căii Lactee utilizate în limbile turcice, prezentate de către Imre Gyarmati (1993) creionăm următorul model:

1. Denumiri autohtone, creații proprii ale limbilor turcice, precum cele de tipul „Calea Cerului”, „Drumul Cerului”, „Poarta Cerului”, „Pârâul Cerului”, care se bazează cel mai probabil pe forma, aspectul exterior al Căii Lactee așa cum este văzută de observatorii de pe Pământ. Tot aici se integrează Denumirile „Albul”, „Calea înzăpezită”, „Calea înghețată” exprimă culoarea fenomenului ceresc examinat. Denumirile cu referent animalier („Calea cămilei albe”, „Calea oilor”), pot fi explicate prin faptul că nomazii își plasau animalele preferate pe calea cerului. Aceste denumiri își au originea în culturile turcice și probabil nu sunt influențate de alte culturi și limbi. Nomazii cunoșteau foarte bine cele mai evidente caracteristici ale cerului înstelat chiar înainte de a adopta. religia musulmană.

2. Denumiri care reflectă influențe ale popoarelor învecinate sau de contact. Limbile fino-ugrice au catalizat apariția unor denumiri cu sensul „Calea păsărilor” și „Calea gâștelor sălbatice”, care reflectă interese economice; migrația păsărilor de la nord-vest la sud-est a jucat un rol economic important și în viața populațiilor turcice. Denumirile cu lexemul paie reflectă influențe persane, iar denumiri de tipul Der ti (limba tuvană) Xalläп sigä (limba yakută) însemnând „Cusătura cerului”, „Marginea cerului” sunt calcuri din limba mongolă.
3. Denumiri care reflectă influență islamică. Formarea numelor „Calea Pelerinilor” (Äji yolu din limba nogai, Haciyolu din limba turcă), „Calea Kaabei” (lexemele dialectale turcești Kâbeyolu ~ Kabeyolu), regionalismul turcesc Mekkeyolu „Calea care duce la Mecca” sau Hicazyolu „Calea care duce la Hijäz” poate fi legată de răspândirea conceptului de lume musulmană.
4. Denumiri mitologice precum expresia yakută Ayl uolun xayisarin suola „Urma cerului spiritului bun masculin”

Denumiri populare românești ale Căii lactee

În varianta online a Dicționarului explicativ al limbii române denumirile populare ale Căii Lactee sunt următoarele: Calea-Laptelui, Calea-Robilor, Drumul Robilor, Brâul-Cosânzenii , Brâul-lui-Dumnezeu, Brâul-Popii, Calea lui-Troian, Calea-Orbilor, Calea-Șchiopilor, Calea-Țiganului, Drumul-Laptelui, Paiele-Țiganului, Calea-Orbilor.

Diversele denumiri populare ale Căii-Lactee constituie obiectul studiului semnat de Maria Bojan, Numiri populare pentru Calea Lactee și a articolului semnat de Vasile C. Ioniță, Între metaforă şi metonimie. Cu privire la astronime. Daniela Butnaru, în schimb, analizează un text din fondul de Manuscrise al Bibliotecii Academiei Române din București, text care a fost trimis ca răspuns la apelul făcut și chestionarul trimis de Nicolae Densușianu cu scopul de aduna informații și materiale privitoare la „tradițiunile istorice și anticitățile țerilor locuite de Români” (Butnaru 2024), chestionar cunoscut mai ales sub denumirea Chestionarul istoric (în două părți, 1893 și 1896). În 1896 a mai fost demarată o acțiune de documentare în privința cosmonimelor populare românești, acțiune gândită și organizată de profesorul Ion Otescu, autorul volumului Credințele țăranului român despre cer și stele.

Butnaru (2024) identifică denumirile Calea albă și Drumul robilor. Pamfile (1915) menționează următoarea serie de sinonime pentru Calea laptelui: Calea rătăcită, Calea rătăciților, Calea robilor, Calea țiganului, Calea șchiopilor. Bojan (1970) menționează o listă mai lungă: Drumu Robilor; Calea Robilor; Calea Ţiganului; Paicle Ţiganului sau Ţiganilor ; Cărarea Ţiganilor ; Drumu Ţigăieşilor ; Urma Ţiganului; Ţiganii cu Paiele ; Drumu Naşului ; Drumu Mocanului; Drumu lu(i) Traian; Calea lui Traian; Drumu lu Trăian ; Calea lu Trăian; Cărarea lu Trăian ; Drumu lu Troian;Calea lu Troian ; Cărarea lui Troian ; Troian(u); Drum(u) (de) pe; Calea de pe Cer; Drumu Cerului; Drumu Ţării ; Drumu de Fier ; Drumu Mare ; Drum(u); Calea Laptelui ; Drumu Laptelui; Drum(u) cu (de) Paie(le); Caru cu (de) Paie); Cărarea de Paie sau Paielor; Calea (e) de Paie; Paie; Drumu Orbilor; Cringu Cerului; Drumu Rătăciţilor; Coromislă; Rariţ. În afară de aceste denumiri mai există soluții sintagmatice descriptive sau explicative precum: Dumnezău o cărat paie cu caru ; drumu un[d]e a pierdul țiganu fînu; se vede dîra (1/26); o furat finu dă la nănașu paie şi-o făcut urmă după el ; drumu pe ceri pe unde o mers caru cu paiele ; drumu țiganilor cînd o dus pleava ; Trifan mere cu caru cu paie ; drumu mocanului (când o furat fin ş-a dat la oi); drumu robului; paiele țiganilor (d-aceie n-au țîganii paie); Ceaţă pă ceri (Pamfile 1915). Bojan (1970) adaugă la această listă denumirile: Calea Şchiopilor; Briul Rătăcit şi Calea Rătăcită, Briul Luminos. Micul dicționar academic, coordonat de Ion Coteanu, (2010) menționează și denumirea de crug[3] pentru Calea Lactee, lexem atestat în 1508 în Liturghierul slavonesc. Tot acolo este listată varianta Drumul nașului[4], calea (sau drumul, cărarea) mocanului[5]. Aceeași sursă menționează și variantele regionale Calea orbilor sau orbul cerului[6] sau razele nopții[7], precum și urma-țiganului, tot cu circulație regională[8].

Denumirile populare românești ale Căii Lactee s-au format pe baza unei analogii cu valoare de metaforă, concretizată prin combinarea unui lexem cu referent fizic-geografic, exprimat prin substantive în nominativ cale, cărare, drum, urmă, fişie, crîng, briu, car, troian și a unuia cu referent mitologic, popular sau legendar, exprimat printr-un substantiv la genitiv sau acuzativ: al robilor, al lui Traian, al ţiganului, al naşului,, al mocanului, al laptelui, al paielor, al orbilor, al şchiopilor, al rătăciţilor, al cerului, de fier, de paie (Bojan 1970; 70). „În multe cazuri, elementele legendei de la care s-a pornit formează denumiri corelate semantic. Astfel, din legenda lui Traian, care a dusâ la Roma pe robii daci, desprindem denumirile Drumul Robilor şi Drumul lui Traian. La fel, din legenda hoțului de paie se desprinde corelaţia de termeni din cadrul denumirilor amintite: car, paie, țigan, urmă, cărare etc. Semnalăm şi faptul că transferul metaforic nu s-a oprit la un singur cuvint din limbă, ci a trecut şi asupra sinonimelor lui: de la ideea de „cerc", la crîng (în v.sl. cu sensul de cerc") şi la brîu; de la drum, la cale, cărare, urmă. Toate aceste elemente s-au cristalizat în sintagme, primind, functional şi valoric, calitatea de substantive proprii" (Bojan 1970; 70).

Tudor Pamfile motivează expresia Calea Laptelui sau Lactee prin elemente de mitologie: „Drumul robilor a fost făcut de Dumnezeu spre a arăta celor scăpați de robie calea întorsului acasă. Unii din acești robi se zice că au fost luați de tătari, alții că ar fi fost răpiți de căpcăuni, alții că au fost luați de Traian, alții că au fost duși spre miazăzi " (Pamfile, 1915: 191).

Bojan (1970) grupează denumirile Căii Lactee după răspândirea geografică în trei mari categorii:

1) termeni cu arii mari de răspîndire şi relativ compacte (Drumul Robilor, Drumul Ţiganului)
2) termeni cu arii mici de răspîndire şi aproximativ egale (Drumul lui Traian, Drumul Orbilor şi Calea Laptelui)
3) termeni care nu formează arii importante, fiind uneori denumiri izolate (Drumul Cerului, Troianul, Drumul Paielor, Calea Rătăciţilor).

Tabel 1. Răspândirea denumirilor populare ale Căii Lactee (Bojan 1970).

Denumirea cu cea mai mare frecvență de utilizare și cu cea mai mare răpândire geografică este Calea Robilor, explicat de Fochi (1976:70) ca însemnând: „ drumul celor robiţi, adică al celor care au făcut fapte rele"; „pe el merg cei răi la iad, să muncească veşnic" (Fochi 1976:70), oamenii luați în robie de către turci şi de tătari (Fochi 1976: 69), sau drumul celor duși în robie de romani (Otescu 1907:43). Drumul (Calea) Robilor, este cunoscută și folosită în Muntenia, Oltenia, în Moldova şi Dobrogea, cu precizarea că în sudul Moldovei varianta Calea Robilor e folosită alternativ cu Drumul, Calea sau Cărarea lui Traian, Trăian sau Troian şi cu Drumul, Calea sau Cărarea Ţiganului (Ioniţă 2006). V. Bogrea (1924) aliniază variantele Calea Robilor și Calea Țiganilor pe fondul sinonimiei dintre țigan și rob în anumite perioade istorice. Revista Albina, a publicat în martie 1928 o poveste din mitologia românească, despre formarea Galaxiei Calea Lactee (Drumul Robilor)[9] Vasile Bogrea (1924) explică variantele Calea robilor și Calea orbilor printr-un proces de etimologie populară dublată de o contaminare semantică bazată pe un obicei istoric atestat: acela de orbire a robilor, „Iară, decinde de apa Gherului, sânt Tătarăi ce le zicu Împărați si sânt Tătarăi cei buni și mulți, cei ce socotesc pre ceialanți că le sânt lor robi; si aceștiia lăcuesc di spre Răsărit, spre troianul ce au făcut robii tătărești, care s'au batut cu Tatarăi." (Bogrea, 1924: 419), lexemul rob catalizând apariția formei orb: „robii tataresti*= odraslele, fiii celor orbi s. orbiți" (Bogrea, 1924: 419). Seria sinonimică Calea robilor, Calea orbilor sau de Calea Tiganului respectiv Paiele Tiganului, continua Bogrea (1924), se bazează pe același proces semantic de contaminare, lexemele rob și țigan având seme commune, printre care și acela de [+PRIVAT DE LIBERTATE].

Dicționarul lui Șăineanu (1929) vorbește de denumirile Drumul robilor și Calea lui Troian, după numirea geografică Calea Troianului. Substantivul troian face parte din mai multe toponime: „Muntele Traianul (Troianul, în denumirea locală) din hotarul Săcelului, în amintirea împăratului care stăpânea o parte din Dacia (Filipașcu 1940: 17). La sud de Moisei se află „muntele Traian, de unde izvorăște pârâul Dragoș" (Demeter, Marin, 1935, 99). Legenda spune că pe muntele Troian din Lăpuș trăiau mai demult uriașii. „Spuneau că pe Șes, pe Troian, între Groși și Suciu erau niște oameni foarte mari, față de cum suntem noi, cei de astăzi" (Bilțiu 1999: 146). „Cimitirele tumulare propriu-zise apar în nordul Transilvaniei abia în bronzul târziu. Un astfel de cimitir se afla pe terasa înaltă, lungă de câțiva km și lată de mai multe sute de metri, numită Troian, din stânga râului Suciu (Țibleș), la aproximativ 1,5 km nord-est de localitatea Suciu de Sus" (Marmația 2003: 123)."[10]

În literatura etnografică românească, drumul și șanțul lui Traian ca denumire populară pentru Calea Lactee a fost atestată frecvent. În 1896, profesorul Ion Otescu a început să colecteze cosmonimele populare românești cu ajutorul dascălilor din mediile rurale. Rezultatele cercetărilor sale au fost sintetizate într-un studiu voluminos în 1907. Denumirile Căii Lactee asociate cu Traian, precum „Troianul" apar și în cronicile moldovenești din secolul al XVII-lea. Hermann (2024) arată că sintagma „Calea lui Traian" în Maramureș, dar apare și un alt nume: „Drumul Robilor", care, în narațiunile populare culese la începutul secolului trecut, este asociat, direct sau indirect, cu împăratul roman care a cucerit Dacia. Prima mențiune a acestei structuri defensive Calea Troianului ca numele Căii Lactee se găsește, crede Hermann (2024) , la József Lugossy care, la începutul anilor 1840, a cules și a documentat numele Calea Traianului și Aeruke Traianului/Arca Traianului printre românii

În țara tătărească, dacă îi duceau pe bieții creștini de-ai noștri – spuneau cei ce au scăpat de acolo – îi batjocoreau și-i puneau la tot felul de munci grele.

Între robi erau odată doi frați, un flăcău și o fată. Într-o zi tătarii plecară după jaf și lăsaseră acasă numai o babă, mama lor. Tătăroaica se puse să ardă cuptorul și a trimis pe fată și flăcău să aducă niște lemne de la pădure. S-au dus ei la pădure... și duși au fost. Iacă și tătarii acasă. Făcând ei numărătoarea robilor, au găsit lipsă o pereche: flăcăul și fata. Au încălecat tătarii iute pe cai și goană după ei, pe drumul dincotro aduseseră robii aceia.

Dar flăcăul și fata nu țineau drumul, ci tot prin păduri și locuri neumblate își căutau cale, luându-se după stele și mergeau numai noaptea, de teamă să nu fie găsiți de tătari.

Lui Dumnezeu i se făcu milă de bieții fugari și a poruncit stelelor să se aprindă mai tare și mai întinse atunci pe cer și o fâșie alburie, ca o cărare de lumină în lungul drumului de pe pământ ce duce spre Țările Românești.

Flăcăul și fata s-au luat după drumul cel alb însemnat pe cer până au ajuns acasă.

Cică de atunci dunga albicioasă de acolo de sus s-a numit Drumul Robilor, până în ziua de azi, pentru că le-a arătat drumul în vremea de demult celor care fugeau din robie.

Și, Doamne, ce de robi au fost! Câte stele sunt pe cer. Și așa povestesc bătrânii și așa sfârșesc ei povestea asta: Atunci n-are să se mai vadă pe cer Drumul Robilor când n-o mai fi robie pe pământ"."

din Maramureș ca nume transferate de la fostele structuri terestre la mediul celest, referindu-se la constelația Căii Lactee, informație publicată apoi în volumul din 1855, înainte deci de atestarea din culegerea făcută de profesorul Otescu. .

Conform Dicționarului de regionalisme și arhaisme din Maramureș (Ștef 2011) Drumu lui Troian cu sensul de Calea Lactee este depistabilă în mai multe puncte din Maramureș (Ieud, Rozavlea, Săcel) sau Cărarea lui Stroian (Giulești). În România se găsesc sate cu numele de Traian în judeţul Bacău, Brăila, Constanţa, Galaţi, Ialomiţa, Iaşi, Mehedinţi, Olt, Satu Mare, Teleorman, Tulcea, Neamţ. Toponimele care conțin lexemul Troian sunt considerate a fi legate de împăratul roman Marcus Ulpius Traianus, cuceritorul Daciei. ideea de șanț sau dig respectiv ideea de drum, cărare, drum de picior[11].

Ciorănescu (2007) arată că troian are sensurile:

„1. Dig de protecție săpat într-o perioadă nedeterminată de-a lungul unei linii aproximativ paralele cu lunca Dunării, atribuit greșit împăratului Traian. –

2. Cantitate mare de zăpadă, nămete, noian. –

3. Grămadă, morman, teanc. –

4. (Olt.) Potecă într-o fîneață. –

5. (Olt.) Urma saniei pe zăpadă. Sl. trojanŭ (Cihac, II, 423; Șeineanu, Semasiol., 179; Tiktin), cf. sb. trojan. Der. directă din lat. Trāĭānus (Tagliavini, Arch. Rom., XII, 218) nu este posibilă fonetic. Apare în doc. din sec. XV. Amintirea lui Traian nu s-a păstrat în obiceiurile populare rom.; și că numele său s-ar fi perpetuat în sl. în legătură cu această construcție defensivă, nu este semnificativ, căci este vorba de o tradiție fără temei și cu siguranță tîrzie. – Der. tro(i)eni, vb. (a se îngrămădi zăpada; a fi drumurile blocate de zăpadă).” (Ciorănescu 2007:805)

Micul dicționar academic (Coteanu 2010) descrie lexemul ca fiind unul vechi, atestat la Grigore Ureche și listează următoarele sensuri:

„1. întăritură primitivă făcută de popoarele antice, constând dintr-un dig lung de pământ, cu șanț de apărare.

2. (Olt) Închisoare.

3. Cantitate mare de zăpadă (adusă de vânt și) așezată în formă de valuri sau de dune Si: nămete, (reg) omăt.

4. În ~iene În straturi mari.

5. Cantitate mare de diverse obiecte sau materii Si: grămadă, (pop) morman.

6. Pajiște.

7. Stradă.

8. Cărare făcută de animale.

9. Urmă lăsată de sanie sau de car.

10. Urmă făcută de apa care se scurge.

11. Model de cusătură în formă șerpuitoare.

12 (Ast; reg; ~ul-cerului) Calea lactee.”[12]

Mladenova (1998) explică relațiile dintre cosmonimul Calea lui Troian și valurile, șanțurile de apărare care poartă același nume: „Compararea ariilor de răspândire a denumirilor Căii Lactee, legate de împăratul Traian, cu valurile cu şanţ (printre care şi cele două foarte cunoscute Brazda lui Novac de nord cu numele popular Troian, şi Brazda lui Novac de sud cu numele populare Brazda lui Iorgovan, Valul lui Traian, Troianul, arată că aria meridională de astronime urmează linia celor două valuri. Aceasta dovedeşte proveniența astronimelor de la toponimele respective. Deosebit de convingător este faptul că astronimul Troianul, Troianul cernlui se întâlneşte numai în aria de sud, adică acolo unde se găsesc valurile numite Troianul. Această coincidenţă în răspândirea astronimelor şi toponimelor se observă şi în cazul astronimelor Troianul. Drumul lui Troian, folosite pe malul Oltului - drumul pe malul Oltului s-a numit via Traiana şi acum este păstrat cu numele Calea Troianului. Mecanismului formării astronimului de la toponim constă în asemănarea Căii Lactee cu drumul terestru sau cu valul pe care este şi un drum pentru soldaţii de gardă. La această asemănare contribuie şi orientarea vest-est a valurilor Troian. care coincide cu orientarea preponderentă a Căii Lactee. Denumirea Căii Lactee prin transferul numelui unui drum terestru este larg răspândită" (Mladenova 1998: 46 47).

În ceea ce privește sensul variantei Calea lui Troian, Ioniţă (2006) menționează paronimia Traian (Trăian) ca antroponim și apelativul troian, care însă aduce în discuție și un alt posibil sens, acela de „îngrămădire de zăpadă". Ioniță (2006) diferențiază variantele Drumul (Calea, Cărarea) lui Traian, la care rticolul precedând substantivul confirmă ideea că termenul Troian este înţeles şi utilizat ca nume propriu respective variantele Troianul şi Troianul Cerului, înregistrat de I. Otescu, care nu mai operează ca un antroponim: „ Cuvîntul apare fie fără determinări (Troianul), îie într-o construcţie morfologică specifică substantivelor comune (Troianul Cerului), în ambele cazuri, cu articol enclitic. Aceasta ne îndreptățește să credem că formele Troianul şi Troianul Cerului au avut la bază un alt criteriu semantic. Ele trebuie să fi pornit chiar de la cuvîntul românesc (de origine slavă) troian, cu sensul de „îngrămădire de zăpadă ete.", sub influența căruia s-a produs şi transformarea, lui a neaccentuat (din Traian), în o." Ioniță (2006)

Atât Bogrea (1924) cât și Lazăr Șăineanu (1887) fac o analiză diacronică a evoluției sensurilor lui troian, ambii acceptând o etimologie legată de numele împăratului roman. Astfel, Bogrea (1924: 420-422) îl citează pe Dimitrie Cantemir, care vorbește în Descriptio Moldaviae de "fossa Traiani Imperatoris", descriind detaliile evoluției semantice a termenului, de la contaminările cu termeni slavi însemnând „trei" la apariția sensului „șanț", „val de tranșee" și acela de „drum militar" sau „ Heerstrasse" respectiv „model de cusătură": „ Adevărata descendență a drumului lui Traian, via Traiana (coborând, de la Porolissum-Moigrad in jos, pe valea Oltului), -e Calea Troianului, nume oltean existent până azi (v. Șăineanu, Semasiologie, p, 254; P. Cancel, Despre ‚Rumân" si despre unele «probleme lexicale vechi slavo-romane, p. 80 sqq.). Ca „Strada 'lastricata da Traiano imperator", ea figureaza si 'n harta lui Del Chiaro (v. noua editie a,|storiei* acestuia, de N. lorga): e aceiasi cu „cardarmaua* cântecului popular, caldarâmul despre care vorbeam altă dată (Dacoromania, II, 653113), — Troian se zice, insă, si azi, in Banat, o uliță", ‚strada" (comunicat de dl. Daicovici): troian= via strata e, de altfel, atestat in Anonimul bănățean (ed. Crețu, p.. 375). Chiar urma lăsata pe teren de nămetii de zăpadă, troiene ei înșiși, ca valla nivea ce sânt (cf. a troieni), se chiama troian (Rev. Pădurilor, XXXV [1923], p, 20), cum si o cusătura şerpuita de linicuri (sic) împrejurul căreia se fac florile (Codin, O seamă de cuvinte din Muscel, p. 74), „anumite ornamentații,. cusute pe pânza (acelasi, Ingerul Românului, p, 339)." Bogrea (1924: 422). De altfel, Bogrea (1924) citează și sinonimele arhaice ale lexemului troian, așa cum ele apar în letopisețul lui Miron Costin, hindichiul, definit în DEX ca un regionalism penru „tranșee", „șanț"[13], enumerând o serie de toponime în care apare lexemul Traian, Troian , „atâtea alte ruine sau accidente topografice, care nu aveau a face nimic cu el" (Bogrea 1924: 422).

În Cronica anonimă a Moldovei lexemul hindichi[14] se referă la hotarul Moldovei: „Şi au mersu de au îmblat scriind hotarul Moldovii, care să începe de la hindichiul lui Traian, împăratul Rîmului, şi miarge până. la Nistru, cum să vede şi astădzi" (CAM 1975). În textul acestei cronici, atribuită de Bogdan Petriceicu Hașdeu lui Nicolae Milescu Spătarul, „se vorbește despre Traian Ulpie , că pe unde mergea , drumuri mari de peatră şi şanţuri groaznice tragea, pe unde și ambla, precum și până astăzi se vĕd și la noi aici în țară, cărora încă trocănuri le zicein, rămăind de atuncea de în om în om acel nume, carele se trage și până astăză , măcar că foarte puțină sînt, care să știe drept ce le zic troïanuri ? iar acesta este adevărul, că de oştirea acelui mare împărat, Traian Ulpie, sint ridicate și nu numai aici , ci și printr'alte țări așa aŭ făcut, cum s'aŭ zis, pentru ca să rămâie neamului omenesc pomenire de mari și de puternice faptele lui . Cuvintul luat obicinuit în sens de morman, nemete adică grămadă de pământ sau de zăpadă se aplică la figurat pentru grămadă în genere", precizează Șăineanu (1887: 179).

În volumul Incercare asupra semasiologiei limbei române, Lazăr Șăineanu stabilește sensul lexemului troian ca fiind „val de pământ" sau „şanţ", sau, prin extensie de sens, „zidiri sau ziduri mari": „ Vorba troïan a devenit româneşte un nume comun pentru orice grămadă de pământ, pentru orice întărire mai înălţată, pentru orice nemete saŭ movilă de omăt. Intr'un document slavon de la Ştefan cel Mare din 1489, troian figurează între cele căteva cuvinte românești intercalate în textul slavic, ca bucată, rĕdiu, limbă - dulce, Rumăr și se ia drept delimitare hotarnică (Hasdeŭ, Arhiva ist . I, 1. 155)." (Șăineanu 1887: 179).

Făcând apel la o axiomă istoriografică conform căreia narațiunile populare pot păstra faptele istorice de-a lungul secolelor dacă sunt „actualizate" de către cercetători și la idea eliadescă a distingerii istoriei reale de istoria imaginară (care trăiește în conștiința comunităților tradiționale), Hermann (2024) încearcă să urmărească relația formelor troian și traian din denumirile Căii Lactee. Așadar, substantivul neutru troian, troiene are puțin de-a face cu faptele împăratului roman Traian în Dacia, arată Hermann (2024), aducând în sprijinul afirmației sale pozițiile similare ale unor lingviști români. Primul lingvist la care face apel este Alexandru Cihac, care identifică o etimologie slavă menționând sensurile „morman de zăpadă", „cantitate mare, îngrămădire de zăpadă" precum și semnificația „pășune îngrădită" folosită în Transilvania (Cihac 1879: 423). Hermann (2024) subliniază că Cihac folosește ortografierea cu litere mici, „troian de pe ceriu", semn că substantivul comun troian nu este identic cu numele propriu Traian, indicând deopotrivă că este identic cu Calea Sfântului Iacob („chemin de St. Jacques") cunoscută de francezi și Calea Lactee („voix lactée").

Densușianu (1901) și Alexandru Philippide (1923) confirmă etimonul slav și consideră varianta cu majuscule „Calea Traianului" o modificare deliberată și recentă a variantei – „calea troianului". Ambii conchid că trojanŭ ar fi putut pătrunde în limbile slave balcanice din latină, dar pe baza argumentelor fonetice ei resping cu fermitate ideea că acesta ar fi putut pătrunde în limba română ca o urmare directă, nemijlocită a prezenței împăratului Traian sau a romanilor în Dacia (cf Hermann 2024). Alexandru Rosetti (1978) arată și el că lexemul românesc troian cu sensul de „șanț", „un val de apărare", nu este un derivat direct din numele împăratului Traian (Traianus), ci prin intermediar slav. Hermann subliniază că nici unul din lingviștii menționați nu neagă legătura lexemului troian cu numele împăratului Traian, căci, de exemplu, cuvântul bulgar trojanŭ este forma slavă a numelui Traian, arată Densușianu (1901), menționând că popularitatea lui Traian printre slavii sudici a făcut ca el să intre în mitologia lor (aspect semnalat și de Șăineanu 1887). Numele său apare adesea în denumirile localităților din Peninsula Balcanică, în special în asociere cu „văile" care brăzdează regiunea. Hermann respinge, prin urmare, legătura semantică inechivocă dintre substantivul troian din denumirile populare ale Căii lactee care conțin acest lexem și numele împăratului roman, dar subliniază paralelismul dintre mecanismele de asociere a cosmonimului popular referitor la Calea Lactee și mitul etnogenezei la români și la maghiari, Cercetătorul lansează ideea cele două mituri istorice despre origini, și anume credința că secuii sunt descendenți ai sciților și hunilor (reflectat în denumirea Csaba útja) și că românii sunt descendenți ai romanilor (reflectată în denumirea Calea lui Troian) să fi fost asociate cu mitul Căii lactee cam în aceeași perioadă și în mod similar, dar pe căi separate (Hermann, 2024: 192). Etnogeneza a trecut astfel din istoriografie în discursul culturii populare, devenind astfel parte a conștiinței naționale și parte a mitului național.

Lexemul paie în denumirea Căii Lactee este o practică răspândită în mai multe zone din Asia, Europa și Africa, are ca sursă cultura arabă și în România cunoaște o răspândire accentuată în zona Banatului, în zona centrală a Transilvaniei și în Maramureș (Ioniță 2006). Lexemul ar fi putut veni dinspre limbile slave din sud sârbă sau croată Ioniţă (2006) sau din limba turcă, prin intermedierea graiurilor sârbo-croate (Bojan 1970: 69).

Structurile care conțin lexemul paie îmbogăesc inventarul de denumiri calchiate, cu o istorie lungă și bogată: „Peste denumirile tradiţionale s-au suprapus cele împrumutate şi au continuat să circule în paralel: romanii au împrumutat grecescul Kiklos Galaktikos, traducându-1 în Circulus Lacteus, dar înainte de a face acest împrumut aveau denumirea lor: Via Caeli Regia „Drumul împărătesc al Cerului". Via Lactas sau Via Lactea nu sunt altceva decât calchieri ale denumirii originare greceşti. Dar, pentru că limba latină era limba ştiinţifică a Europei, denumirea a fost preluată prin traducere şi introdusă şi în alte limbi ale continentului; cf. engl. Milky Way, genn. Milcstrasse, fr. Voie Lactee, it. Via Lattea". (Ioniţă 2006: 21)

Dincolo de împrumutul din limba latină, cercetărorii români acceptă și ideea că denumirea Calea Laptelui să fie de sorginte autohtonă: „Dar […] nu excludem eventualitatea ca denumirile să se fi născut independent una de alta. Aşa, de exemplu, denumirile româneşti similare, Drumul (Calea) Laptelui, pot să nu fie traduceri cărturăreşti ale denumirii savante, latine. Ele sunt, de fapt, puţin răspândite: în Carpaţii sudici şi la nord de aceştia, la poalele munţilor, în depresiunea Petroşanilor, în zonele Sibiului şi ale Braşovului şi, izolat, în cea a Aradului. Faptul că Drumul (Calea) Laptelui coincide cu zone intens păstorite şi cu vechi tradiţii păstoreşti este o dovadă în plus că denominatorii au fost păstorii acestor regiuni (v. Bojan 1970, 68). Ioniţă (2006: 22)

Ioniţă (2005: 208) menționează denumirea de Calea Albă: „ Prin mijlocul crângului trece Calea-Albă, una dintre numeroasele denumiri ale Căii Lactee". Denumirile populare Crângul sau Brâul (Luminos) al Cerului, atestate numai în câteva puncte din sudul Moldovei, reflectă latinescul circulus, cu sensul de cerc din denumirea latină a Căii Lactee, Circulus Lacteus sau Orbis Lacteus, „constituindu-se însă pe un element de provenienţă slavă, în cazul lui crâng, şi autohtonă, în cazul lui brâu" (Ioniță 2006: 68). Crângul cerului se leagă de dubletul calea robilor/calea orbilor, este de părere Mladenova (1998), care arată că denumirea Calea robilor și Calea orbilor se bazează pe o simplă relație de metateză, ambele fiind formate pe teren românesc după model slav, ca și denumirea crângul cerului: „ astronimul Calea orbilor, răspândit mai ales în Moldova de sud şi Muntenia de est; de astronimul Orbu cerului, atestat o singură dată în satul Horgeşti, judeţul Bacău, ca şi de astronimul Crângul cerului - înregistrat în patru localităţi din Moldova. Iată ipoteza noastră: în latină, după modelul vechi grecesc, s-au folosit în unele denumiri ale Căii Lactee lexemele Circulus, Circus, Orbis [lacteus]. Ca nume ale Căii Lactee, aceste lexeme nu s-au păstrat în limbile romanice. Însă, după părerea noastră, în primul component al astronimului Orbu cerului se ascunde chiar lat. orbi..'> „cerc" şi deci forma internă a astronimului este „cercul cerului". Nouă ni se pare că evoluţia semantică „boltă cerească"-> „Calea lactee", propusă în DA pentru Crângul cerului. nu este foarte convingătoare. După părerea noastră, cuvântul crâng păstrează aici sensul slav inițial „cerc" şi astronimul este un calc făcut de dacoromâni după denumirea cu formă internă: cercul cerului" din limba populaţiei romanizate, pe care o reconstruim ca •orbis caeli. Forma Orbu cerului, în loc de forma aşteptată •orbe (< lat. orbi.'> „cerc"), se explică prin confuzia între orbis „cerc" şi orbus „lipsit de ceva; orb", înregistrată încă din latină. […] Calea orbilor e transformată de slavi, ca rezultat al metatezei licvidei, în Calea robilor (pentrn slavi, protoslav. •orbii „rob" a coincis cu orb din Calea orbilor). (Mladenova 1998: 47-48)

Atlasul coordonat de Deme-Imre (1980) consemnează variantele: szekérút „Calea căruței” , ég útja „calea cerului”, hadak útja „calea hadelor”.

Judit Kozma (2009) face o analiză comparativă a cosmonimelor populare maghiare cu cele germane. Clasificarea pe care o propune ne dă prilejul să selectăm lexemele legate de Calea lactee, organizate pe segmente tematice. Astfel, în limba maghiară există denumiri ale Căii lactee în următoarele câmpuri semantice:

- Categoria obiectelor de uz casnic, în care intră două denumiri legate de stofe și îmbrăcăminte: Szépasszony vászna „Țesătura ielelor”, Isten palástja „Mantaua lui Dumnezeu”
- Dromonime sau sintagmele care conțin lexemul drum, cale: Angyal útja „Calea îngerului”, Jézusútja „calea lui Isus” Öregisten országútja „Drumul bătrânului Dumnezeu”[20], Szent Pétör útja „Drumul sf. 3) Denumiri de origine creștină medievală: Szent Péter útja „Drumul Sfântului Petru”
4) Denumiri moderne Pável bicsiklétája sau „Bicicleta lui Pavel”, denumire folosită în comunitățile ceangăiești din Moldova, o creație lexicală mai recentă, cu circulație locală, cu siguranță.

Cercetările acestor cosmonime vechi au fost făcute nu doar de lingviști sau etnografi sau oameni de știință[23], ci și de poeți, printre care Fazekas Mihály[24].

Varianta Hadak útja înseamnă în limba română 1. Drumul oștilor, 2. Drumul neamurilor. În literatura de specialitate primul sens este cel citat, însă substantivul had, atestat din 1055 sub forma hodu, are depotrivă sensul de neam[25]. Ba mai mult, substantivul a fost împrumutat și de limba română sub forma de hadă, cu sensurile 1 Ceată. 2 Droaie. 3 Familie. 4 Neam. 5 (Fig) Tagmă. Sinonim, prin urmare cu „fel”, „grup”, „castă”[26]. Sintagma Hadak útja a fost atestă în 1405 în glosarul cunoscut drept Schlägli szójegyzék sub forma Hadi út și majoritatea opiniilor converg spre a considera expresia numele străvechi unguresc al Căii Lactee, există și opinia conforma căreia ar fi calchierea expresiei germane Heerstrasse („drum militar”)[27]. József Erdődi susține în mod eronat că acesta este folosit în prezent doar în Ținutul Secuiesc. Date mai recente demonstrează că este cunoscută în tot arealul lingvistic maghiar (printre care județele Hajdú, Heves, Zala, Győr-Sopron, Pest, Békés și Nógrád dar și Transilvania și chiar zonele ceangăiești din Moldova)[28].

Varianta Hadak utja este, de asemenea, veche, în literatură însă infiltrându-se târziu, în secolul al XIX-lea. Construcția în sine hadi ut cu sensul de via militaria este mult mai veche: hodu utu (1055), hodút (1211), hadút (1417), hadi út (1472).[29]

Varianta Országút a fost atestată în Kolozsvári glosszák /Glosele clujene în 1577 sub forma Orzag úta cu sensul de via lecta (Pálfi 1907: 54), apoi în glosarul lui Szikszai Fabricius (1590) sub forma „Ország uta”, purtând același sens.

Varianta Szalmásút are o serie de variante precum Cigányok útja „Drumul țiganilor”, Cigányok szalmázása „Drumul de paie al țiganilor”, Szénatolvaj útja „Drumul hoțului de paie”, Szent Péter útja „Drumul Sfântului Petru”, Takarodó út „Drumul retragerii” sau „Drumul orei de culcare”.

Mándoki László este de părere că originea termenului szalmásút calea cu paie poate fi trasată până la culturile agricole mediteraneene, de unde a fost introdus în zona lingvistică maghiară de către alte popoare. Migrația romilor prin Ungaria a avut loc aproximativ în aceeași perioadă (secolele XIV-XV), de unde și amestecul de nume. Varianta Angyalok útja cu sensul de „Calea îngerilor” are o circulație relativ restrânsă[30] .

Imre Gyarmati (1993) arată că printre popoarele fino-ugrice, ale căror zone de locuire sunt învecinate cu cele ale popoarelor turcice, structura „Calea păsărilor/gâștelor sălbatice” este cunoscută în general și poate fi găsită în tot arealul lingvistic fino-ugric, cu excepția limbii maghiare, afirmă Gyarmati (1993: 227). József Erdődi afirmă, în schimb, că la sfârșitul secolului al XIX-lea, locuitorii din Vágújhely foloseau denumirea de calea păsărilor pentru Calea Lactee, deci reminiscențe ale denumirii „Calea Păsărilor” existau încă în limba maghiară[31],

[31] Idee care transpare și în studiul lui Gyarmati (1992: 228) care arată că în cazul multor populații turcice schimbarea de paradigmă în stilul de viață a însemnat și schimbări în privința denumirii Căii Lactee: astfel, islamizarea

Trebuie remarcat că multe denumiri sunt legate de evenimentul istoric al descălecatului și de lungul drum al triburilor maghiare din Asia spre Europa: Hadak útja „Drumul neamurilor", *Szarvasnyom „*Urma cerbului" (trimitere la legenda cerbului miraculous, animalul totemic al etnogenezei maghiare sau de memoria venirii hunilor în Europa, Csaba útja „Drumul lui Csaba", Csillagösvény „Cărarea stelelor", toate păstrate în legenda crăișorului Csaba.

Szabó T. 1957 și Zsigmond (1997) menționează următoarele denumiri ale Căii Lactee, folosite de către comunitatea maghiară din România Angyal útja. Barát útja, Cigányok útja, Csaba útja, Égnek az útja, Fáradt embereknek az úttyik Hadak útja, Halottak úttylk, Hétfejű sárkány, Éjjeli kegyelet, Tündérek fordulója, Szépasszony Vászna Kálejá cséruluj, Kálejá luj Traján, Pásztor útja, Polyvás út, Retecsit út, Seregek útja, Szegén útja, Tejút, Tündérek útja, Udvari út, Zárvák úttyik. Azi mai sunt folosite sintagmele care cuprind lexemul cale și lexemele szalmás, tejes, hadaké, cigányoké, szenté, hétfejű sárkányé, tündéreké, raboké, angyaloké, sintagmele inspirate din legenda cerbului miraculos sau cele legate de iele szépasszony fiind ieșite deja din uz. Comunitatea ceangăiască din Moldova cunoaște și folosește variantele Rabok útja (Angyal útja, Barát útja, Hadak útja, Égnek az útja, Fáradt Embereknek az úttyik, Halottak úttyik, Kálejá cséruluj, Kálejá luj Traján, Pásztor útja, Retecsit út, Seregek útja, Szegén útja, Udvari út, Tündérek útja, Zárvák úttyik, Tejút, (Zsigmond 1997). Dintre acestea, Kálejá cséruluj, Kálejá luj Traján, Pásztor útja, Retecsit út sunt împrumuturi evidente din limba română: Calea cerului, Calea lui Traian, Calea păstorului, Drumul rătăcit.

Denumirea Tündérek útja cunoscută în Moldova face apel la credința în zâne, figura ielelor numite Szépasszony apărând în denumirea Căii Lactee, nume cândva cunoscut și folosit și în Ținutul Secuiesc (Kandra 1971: 413, Zsigmond 1997: 182). Attila Szabó și colegii săi au întâlnit, de asemenea, variantele „robok uttya" și „rabok uttyik" în mai multe locuri printre ceangăii din Moldova în timpul cercetărilor lor de teren din 1949, toate fiind forme traduse din românescul Calea robilor. Mándoki László înșiră patru tipuri de explicații privitoare la sintagma „Calea lui Csaba", „Drumul de paie" și „Calea hadelor/neamurilor". Potrivit uneia dintre ele, este vorba despre paiul care a căzut din căruța Sfântului Petru. O altă idee spune că drumul lui Csaba arată spre sud și crăișorul a venit pe acest drum pentru a-i ajuta pe secui. A treia legendă populară se referă la maghiarii care au urmat această cale în timpul descălecatului. A patra idee este, de asemenea, istorică și se referă la drumul făcut de strămoșii locuitorilor din Dornești /Hadikfalva (Suceava), care au migrat din Siculeni /Madéfalva (Harghita) în Bucovina sub oblăduirea lui András Hadik[32].

Denumirea maghiară Tejút este relativ recentă, sintagma apărând în sub forma Tejes-útnak în opera lui Zrínyi Szigeti Veszedelem, în 1662 sub forma Tejút în lucrarea lui Komáromi Csipkés György, Békeséges Tűrés Ösztöne[33], alături de varianta téj út „Calea laptelui" și expresia arhaică Égen levő ország „Țara de pe cer".

Denumirea românească în care apare determinantul ţigani(i), este considerată de unii cercetători (Mladenova 1998:44) că provine din limba maghiară. La baza denumirilor care cuprind cuvintele ţigan şi paie stă de regulă anecdota cu ţiganul care a furat paie de la naşul său (Ioniţă 2006, Pamfile 1915: 188). Zsigmond crede și el că denumirea Calea Țiganilor ar fi o calchiere după ungurescul Ciganyokuccsa, Ciganyok utja (Zsigmond 1997).

a provocat schimbări atât de mari și profunde în viața și istoria culturală a popoarelor turcice, încât accentul s-a mutat asupra tradițiilor lumii mahomedane. Acest lucru se poate observa în faptul că Calea Lactee simbolizează „Calea pelerinilor spre Mecca" pentru unii musulmani turci — în special pentru cei care trăiesc mai departe de populațiile fino-ugrice, care cultivau denumirile legate de drumul sau calea păsărilor călătoare. Este posibil ca și popoarele turcice occidentale (limba turcă) să fi cunoscut denumirile „Calea păsărilor/gâștelor sălbatice", dar aceste denumiri au fost uitate odată cu schimbările fundamentale în obiceiuri. Un fenomen similar ar fi putut avea loc și în rândul maghiarilor. Înainte de cucerire, probabil că și ei cunoșteau denumirile „Calea păsărilor/gâștelor sălbatice", dar în noua lor patrie vechile denumiri ale stelelor au devenit obscure și, în timp, au fost înlocuite cu altele noi. Numele maghiare Tûndérek útja „Calea Zânelor", Isten úttya „Calea lui Dumnezeu", Róma útja „Calea Romei" sunt de origine mai târzie și se pot observa schimbări foarte semnificative în viața poporului maghiar, noua concepție despre lume și influența religiei creștine asupra lor.

Există așadar un mechanism de calchiere reciprocă în privința denumirilor populare ale Căii lactee: Calea robilor a pătruns prin calchiere și în limba maghiară, sintagmele cu referentul țigan au u fost calchiate în limba română după model maghiar. Variantele cu referentul paie fac parte dintr-un orizont mai larg, fiind probabil preluări din terțe limbi.

Calea orbilor și Calea robilor poate fi un caz de metateză, dar bazată pe relația lexemului românesc rob cu lexemul din protoslavă, orbъ care înseamnă „rob" și formată din protobaltoslavicul *árbas cu sensul de „rob„ sau „servitor", provenită din lexemul protoindoeuropean *h₃órbʰos, care ar fi purtat și sensul de „rob", și sensul de „orfan". O altă explicație apropie Orbul cerului de Crângul cerului, sema comună fiind ideea de „cerc", „mișcare circular", pe baza formelor latinești orbis, orbiculus. În sensul afirmației noastre aducem faptul că forma Calea orbilor, răspândită în Transilvania nu a fost preluată, calchiată deloc în limba maghiară, unde a pătruns și s-a răspândit remarcabil varianta Calea robilor.

Credem că proveniența formei crângul cerului ar putea fi analizat și în perspectiva unei calchieri din expresia maghiară kerengő, derivat de la verbul din proto-maghiară kering. Verbul kering, derivat de la radicalul de origine fino-ugrică ker (kerə̈* cu sensul de „cerc, roată, inel; rotund, rulant; a se învârti, a se roti, a se învârti") a fost atestat în 1372[34], apoi în 1416 în Codicele vienez/ Bécsi codex (Mészöly 1916) și cu sensul de încercui, înconjura, a merge în cerc (lat. ambitus). Marele dicționar de regionalisme coordonat de Kiss (2019) listează următoarele forme regionale și dialectale ale lexemului: keremaringol, keremaringózik, karingózik, kerinbogázik, kering, keringel, keringél, kéringél, keringol, kéringet, keringet, keringőzik, keringózik, keröng, toate cu sensul de „a merge", „a se deplasa", „a hoinări", „a vagabonda", „a umbla", „a migra". În Dicționarul lui Szarvas-Simonyi (1890) apar formele, karing, karingó, karingoz, karingál, kerëng, kering, be-kerëng, el-kerëng, föl-kerëng, ki-kerëng, körül-kerëng, meg-kereng, kerëngél, kerëngés, kerenget, kerëngetdëgél, kerëngő, toate având ca semă comună ideea de „mișcare", „mișcare circulară": kerülés /circuitus (Szarvas-Simonyi II 1890: 227). Prin sensul kerülés, kereng, kering a ajuns să desemneze, prin extensie de sens, și „mersul în pădure", „deplasarea în pădure" sau „activitatea de pază a pădurilor". Lexemul kereng, kering a fost atestat și cu privire la mersul stelelor sau mișcarea obiectelor cosmice: Járásánál nem acképpen kerenget az égen, mint egyéb tsillagoc „Când se mișcă, nu se învârte pe cer ca alte stele" sau A tsillagok szuntelen körös-körül kerengvén Stelele se învârt neîncetat în cercuri" (Szarvas-Simonyi II 1890: 227).

Concluzii

Atât în limba maghiară, cât și în limba română mecanismul formării cuvintelor prin referent mitologic este detectabil, ca și denumirile legate de sememul culoare: Calea albă respectiv Nagy (fehér) út „Marele drum alb". Denumirile legate de imaginea unor mase de oameni în mișcare este mai pregnantă în inventarul de nume maghiare dar nu lipsește din lista de demumiri românești, mai ales Calea rătăciților și Calea robilor, ambele având un sens conotativ care tinde spre sensurile afective negative (rătăcit, rob). Dintre denumirile cu același tip de conotație notăm o serie de nume folosite de către comunitatea maghiară din România: Fáradt embereknek az úttyik „Drumul oamenilor obosiți" Halottak úttyik „Drumul morților", Szegén útja „Drumul săracilor", Zárvák úttyik „Drumul orfanilor", acest ultim exemplu poate susține și etimonul slav orbъ (cu sensul de „rob" și „orfan") pentru Calea robilor/ Calea orbilor.

O diferență notabilă este prezența pregnantă a soluțiilor denominative cu referent sacral în denumirile maghiare și lipsa referentului sacral-creștin în inventarul de nume românești, semn că acest procedeu de creație lexicală nu a funcționat în limba română, dar a funcționat în limba maghiară, poate ca reminiscență fino-ugrică sau influență a contactelor cu popoarele turco-altaice din perioada premergătoare descălecatului (denumirile maghiare coagulând atât referințe creștine cât și precreștine, mitologice dar cu elemente sacrale: Istenbarázdája „Brazda lui Dumnezeu", Angyal útja „Calea îngerului", Jézusútja „calea lui Isus" Öregisten országútja „Drumul bătrânului Dumnezeu" , Szent Pétör útja „Drumul sf. Petru", Búcsújárók útja „Drumul pelerinilor", Éjjeli kegyelet útja „Calea smereniei nopții”, Tündérek útja „Calea zânelor”, Isten úttya „Drumul lui Dumnezeu”, Jézuskának az útja „Drumul micului Isus”, Angyalútja „Calea îngerului”, , Barátútja „Calea călugărului”, ”, Angyalok útja „Calea îngerilor”, Tündérek útja „Calea zânelor”, Szépasszonyok útja „Calea ielelor). Ținând cont de seria sinonimică din care face parte lexemul troian „șanț”, „tranșee”, „val de apărare”, „dig”, „meterez”, „hindichi” (cu toate sensurile etimonului turcesc din care provine) dar și „brazdă”, „vale” (Brazda lui Troian, Brazda lui Iorgovan, Brazda lui Novac) și de ocurențele sinonimelor sale precum cel semnalat în Cronica anonimă a Moldovei (1975), s-ar putea investiga în continuare relația lexemului cu acele lexeme au ca semă comună [+hotar]: ogor, hotar, dar și canal, baraj, zid[35].

DIFFICULTIES IN IDENTIFYING THE DIRECT OBJECT

Loredana-Liliana Buzoianu
Senior Lecturer, "Dunărea de Jos", University of Galați

Abstract: In Romanian syntax, the complement constitutes a class of secondary syntactic functions that complete the meaning of the governing element, typically a verb. This category encompasses the direct object, the secondary object, the indirect object, the prepositional complement, the possessive complement, the agent complement, and the comparative complement, each characterized by specific semantic, morphological, and syntactic features. Linguistic communication attains completeness only through the association of the verb with its appropriate complement, whether explicitly expressed or implied. The present article seeks to outline the genuine difficulties and grammatical pitfalls encountered in the identification of the direct object.

Dacă subiectul, predicatul şi atributul reprezintă fiecare câte o funcţie sintactică, complementul este o clasa de funcţii sintactice secundare, comparabilă cu clasa de funcţii sintactice de asemenea secundare a circumstanţialului. Fără a exista, ca în domeniul limbii în general şi a gramaticii în special, reguli rigide, clasa complementului (cuprinzând complementul direct, complementul secundar, complementul indirect, complementul prepoziţional, complementul posesiv, complementul de agent și complementul comparativ) se individualizează prin anumite particularităţi comune, în regula generală de natură semantică, morfologică şi sintactică. După Corneliu Dimitriu, toate complementele conțin pe lângă poziția sintactică și o poziție semantică (directă/indirectă) care depind de conținutul semantic al centrului lor verbal. Din această cauză, termenul regent nu funcționează singur, fără o completare a sensului care este dată de adjuncți. (apud Corneliu Dimitriu, Tratat de gramatică a limbii române, II, Sintaxa, Institutul European, Iaşi, 2002, pag. 1374-1375)

Dacă ar fi să definim complementul, ținând cont de tradiția gramaticilor române, acesta ar fi partea secundară de propoziţie care determină un verb la un mod predicativ sau la un mod nepredicativ, o locuţiune verbală, un verb copulativ + numele predicativ, un adjectiv, un numeral cardinal, un adverb, o interjecţie predicativă: Ofer spre exemplificare enunțuri cu poziții sintactice în accepțiune modernă: M-a rugat ceva [c.sec.], Cartea oferită de Ion [c.ag] este bună, \El îşi aduse aminte de copilărie [c.prep.] , Fumul este caracteristic focului[c.i] , Cartea este utilă copilului. [c.i], Iată hoţul [c.d].

Complementul direct, conform GALR, GBLR, este o funcție sintactică impusă de un verb obligatoriu tranzitiv și se realizează printr-un nume în cazul acuzativ, ocupând o poziție de actant în relația cu centrul verbal tranzitiv.

Complementul direct se confundă adesea cu cel secundar, însă complementul secundar presupune prezența obligatorie a complementului direct, în timp ce complementul direct nu este condiționat de prezența complementului secundar.

De exemplu*: Mănâncă un măr*. [Cd]

O colegă mă [Cd] învăță lecția [C. sec.]

Clasa de substituție:

A. La nivel propozițional:

1. Realizări nominale

a. Complementul direct poate fi exprimat prin substantive în cazul acuzativ cu prepoziția pe sau fără prepoziția pe. De menționat că prepoziția pe este un morfem al acuzativului, în cazul complementului direct care exprimă o ființă.
De ex. Intenționa să-l ajute pe Ion. Intenționa să-și cumpere o mașină.

b. Complementul direct mai poate fi exprimat prin substituți substantivali (pronume, numerale).
De ex. Îl aștept pe primul/pe al său /pe aceea.
Nu doresc nimic.

Parcă aș vrea ceva.
Îi ajut pe toți.

c. situație aparte o ocupă al și cel. Complementul direct poate fi exprimat printr-o construcție atunci când semiindependentele al și cel sunt urmate de alte părți de propoziție.

- Al este urmat de un adjectiv posesiv, de un substantiv sau de un substitut în genitiv, în această situație este dublat de un clitic, precum: Pe ai mei i-am felicitat. Mi-am șters penarul, dar pe al verșoarei mele l-am uitat. Nu îi certa pe ai ei/acestora niciodată.

Observație. Al are dublă interpretare, după GALR (2005, p. 235, Vol. I), astfel el poate fi un formant al posesivului fără funcție sintactică, dar poate fi considerat și pronume semiindependent- în acest caz substituie substantivul și îndeplinește toate funcțiile sintactice pe care le are substantivul. În orice caz, al este considerat morfem de marcare suplimentară a ideei de posesie. Această posesie impune cazul genitiv pentru substantive și pronume personale, demonstrative, nehotărâte, relative, interogative, negative: Citesc o carte a ei/a tuturor/ a acestuia/ a cuiva. A nimănui nu lipsește./ A cui chiulește?

Al_2- pronume semiindependent, complement direct, iar tău este adjectiv pronominal posesiv cu funcția sintactică de atribut adjectival.

În tradiția gramaticii românești, al_1 indică obiectul posedat, iar forma pronominală posesivă care îl însoțește indică posesorul. Într-un enunț ca: În casa mea nu vei fi binevenit, mea este un adjectiv pronominal posesiv cu funcția de atribut adjectival.

- În ceea ce privește cel, poate fi complement direct când este urmat de un numeral sau un grup prepozițional, de exemplu: Pe cei dintâi i-am aplaudat. / Pe cei din clasă nu i-am felicitat.

După GBLR, cel poate fi:- pronume semiindependent: Pe cel din urmă îl aștept.

- Adjectiv pronominal semiindependent: Pe cei doi căței i-a adoptat./ O să vânez vulpea cea vicleană.
- Poate fi omonim cu marca cel din structura superlativului relativ: Cel mai frumos a cântat verișoara mea.

B. realizări nonnominale:

a. adverbe formate cu sufixul de modalitate –ește:
Vorbește românește/oltenește.

b. verbe la forme verbale non-finite: - infinitiv: Începe a merge. Nu știe a vorbi. Poate cânta. - supin: Se apucă de citit. Are de scris.

- gerunziu: Am auzit tunând.

Observație. În Gramatica limbii contemporane de Iorgu Iordan și Vladimir Robu, 1978, astfel de structuri: Începe a merge. Poate cânta. Se apucă de citit. Are de scris sunt, de fapt, niște predicate verbale compuse alcătuite dintr-un verb semiauxiliar de modalitate (de ex. a trebui, a putea, a avea, a fi, a vrea, a părea, a-i veni) sau de aspect (a da, a începe, a prinde, a porni, a apuca, a se lua, a sta etc) urmate de verbe la conjunctiv, infinitiv sau supin, (uneori, foarte rar și la participiu). (p. 592). GALR II consideră aceste structuri ca fiind predicate complexe al enunțării (v. exemplele GALR II: Ion se apucă de învățat lecția. Ion poate învăța lecția. El urmează să învețe lecția. Lecția este de învățat. Dorința lui X este de a învăța lecția). Confuziile în identificarea complementului direct apar și prin prima interpretării acestor construcții ca fiind predicate verbale compuse și ajung ca să fie calificate, greșit, drept predicative

Capcane gramaticale. Relaţia complementului direct cu alte poziţii sintactice

Complementul direct este apropiat uneori, din punct de vedere semantic, de alte părţi de propoziţie.

I. Complementul direct se confundă adesea cu complementul prepoziţional. (vezi G. G. Neamţu, Teoria şi practica analizei gramaticale, pag. 365)

a. S-a supărat pe Ion. Se înfurie pe Ion. Se întristează pe situație. Se mânie pe Ion.

b. Ești invitat a participa la concurs. Vina a fost dată pe Ion.
c. I-a cășunat pe Ion. I-a venit pe Ion. I s-a pus pata pe Ion.
d. Mizez pe Ion. Contez pe Ion. Pariez pe Ion.
e. Pune pariu pe Ion. Pune ochii pe Ion. A pus mâna pe Ion. A dat vina pe Ion.

Având întrebări comune (pe cine ? sau ce ?) şi construcţii identice sau apropiate cu prepoziţia " pe ", deosebirea se face prin focalizarea atenției pe centru-verbal.

Metode de interpretare:

1. Dacă centrul verbal este un verb intranzitiv fiind o construcție reflexivă cu clitic reflexiv fără funcție sintactică (cum e în exemplele de la a.), cuvântul subliniat este complement prepozițional.
2. Dacă centrul verbal este un verb intranzitivizat prin trecerea la o construcție pasivă (cum e în exemplele de la b.), cuvântul subliniat este complement prepozițional.
4. Dacă centrul verbal este un verb impersonal sau locuțiune verbală impersonală (cum e în exemplele de la c.), atunci cuvântul subliniat este complement prepozițional.

În exemplele de mai jos, exista verbul regent copulativ și construcții cu a fi existențial, impersonal, deci verbe intranzitive, prin urmare, cer complemente prepoziționale și nu complemente directe. Deși în aceste situații echivalentul este clar un complement prepozițional putând fi contras prin de ceva, la ceva.

Ex: Este inapt a merge cu bicicleta. (regent: operator copulativ, deci intranzitiv, contragere: de ceva)

Sunt dispus a veni la întâlnire. (regent: operator copulativ, contragere: la ceva)

Îi este teamă (frică, ruşine, silă, greaţă) a mai vorbi. (regent: verbul a fi predicativ, impersonal, deci intranzitiv; contragere: de ceva).

1. Este complement direct când se poate dubla cu o formă clitică de Ac. (Îl laudă pe Ion- c.d., dar * Îl contez pe Ion- c.prep./ Îl mizez pe Ion/* Îl se supără pe Ion/ * Îl pune pariu pe Ion)
2. Doar în cazul complementului direct se poate realiza o construcție pasivă (Este lăudat de părinți, dar * Ion este contat/este mizat de părinți) (vezi GBLR, p.428)

II. Complementul direct se confundă adesea cu subiectul.

În exemplu: Se întreabă asta.[S/ C.d.], avem un context ambiguu, deoarece verbul se întreabă ar putea fi impersonal, deci intranzitiv și în această situație, asta nu poate fi complement direct, ci subiect, dar, în același timp, verbul se întreabă ar putea avea un subiect subînțeles și atunci cuvântul asta este complement direct.

Pentru aclarifica situaţia, e nevoie să se citească cu atenţie contextul în care apare şi, dacă are subiect subînţeles, avem un complement direct, dar, dacă nu are subiect, atunci , asta este subiect.

Avem următoarele situații:

1. Există construcții impersonale cu subiect nonanimat, acestea nu pot admite complement direct, deoarece sunt intranzitive.

a. Mă doare gâtul. Mă interesează cartea. Îmi convine prețul. Îmi vine a plânge. Mă amuză situaţia. Mă miră rezultatul. Mă avantajează rochia. (impersonale cu subiect nonanimat, aplicând regula priorității subiectului în fața complementului direct, avem de-a face cu un subiect nonanimat) a. Se știe rezultatul. Se aude un zgomot. Se observă o schimbare.

2. Dacă verbul regent este o c*onstrucție pasiv-reflexivă, impersonală (*exemplele de la a.) sau *o construcție reflexiv-impersonală (*exemplele de la b.), avem tot un subiect postverbal, nu complement direct.

b. Se întâmplă ceva. S-a rupt o creangă. S-a stricat drujba. Nu se cuvine asta! Nu se cade asta!

III. Complementul direct se confundă adesea cu complementul secundar

Ex. L[C.d]-am învățat lecția[C.sec.] la biologie.

GBLR (p. 428) recomandă aplicarea principiului unicității pe baza căruia s-a delimitat complementul direct de complementul secundar sau de complementul predicativ al obiectului (CPO)

Repere de identificare corectă:

1. Complementul secundar nu se poate dubla printr-o formă clitică pronominală de acuzativ. Ex. Îl [C.d.] învață pe Ion[C.d.] biologia [C.sec], dar nu *Mă o învață.
2. Complementul secundar este condiționat de prezența complementului direct în GV: El spune data[Cd.] plecării. vs. El îl întreabă pe Ion[Cd.] lecția[C.sec].
3. Complementul secundar nu permite realizarea unui raport de coordonare cu un complement direct: L-a învățat pe Ion sau biologia.

IV. Complementul direct se confundă adesea cu complementul predicativ al obiectului

Complementul predicativ al obiectului presupune o relație ternară și implică un verb al atribuirii, un subiect, un complement (obiect direct sau indirect) și un complement predicativ al obiectului. Anumite verbe cer un complement predicativ al obiectului, nu complement direct:

a. A boteza, a chema, a denumi, a intitula, a numi, a porecli, a(-i) spune/ zice: L-au botezat Ion. /Îl cheamă Ion. / L-au numit Ion./ L-au poreclit Bossul. /

b. A alege, a angaja, a desemna, a unge: L-au ales șef/ L-au angajat doctor. /

c. A lua care presupune prepoziția drept: L-au luat drept director.

Repere de identificare corectă:

1. Complementul predicativ al obiectului nu se poate dubla printr-o formă clitică pronominală de acuzativ. (cf. GBLR, p. 429)
2. Complementul predicativ al obiectului nu se poate dubla printr-o formă nominală (GN): Pe Ion[Cd.] l-au numit șef[CPO].

Observație. Uneori același verb regent poate cere complemete diferite, deoarece se poate diferenția semantic:

Exemplu: El aduce ("transporta") apa[c d] - complement direct

El aduce ("seamănă") cu mama [c.prep] lui - complement prepoziţional

DEVELOPING LINGUISTIC AND CULTURAL COMPETENCE THROUGH THE COMMUNICATIVE-FUNCTIONAL MODEL IN MOTHER TONGUE TEACHING AT LOWER SECONDARY LEVEL

Violeta-Teodora Lungeanu
Lecturer, PhD, "Dunărea de Jos" University of Galați

Abstract: Having a fundamental role in developing literacy competence and ensuring access to knowledge, mother tongue language study defines a series of objectives in which the goal of fostering students' autonomous personality development harmonizes with that of developing the key-competence of communication in the mother tongue. From this perspective, the present study analyzes the conceptual background of the Romanian Language and Literature curriculum for lower secondary education, identifying the directions that language sciences and literary sciences imprint on the study of the discipline in lower secondary school, as well as the way in which the main European frameworks for language study in school substantiate the entire educational strategy, ensuring its functionality, social relevance, and curricular coherence.

Keywords: mother tongue teaching; communicative-functional model; key-competence; lower secondary level; European frameworks

Structurarea modelului comunicativ pentru predarea limbii și literaturii române

Abordarea actuală în studiul limbii și literaturii române la ciclul gimnazial este reflectată în modelul comunicativ-funcțional, care relaționează finalitățile disciplinei cu profilul de formare al absolventului, structurat în conformitate cu așteptările societății contemporane. În acord cu aceste așteptări, modelul comunicativ este cel care oferă studiului maternei un model coerent și structurat de studiu al limbii în realitatea comunicării. Avându-și punctul de plecare în domeniile pragmaticii, abordarea actuală asupra limbajului vine din nevoia de a-l contextualiza, de a-l privi ca formă a interacțiunii umane. În teoria actelor vorbirii, limba este un proces social[1], iar codificarea socială pe care o conferim actului de comunicare este la fel de importantă ca enunțarea propriu-zisă. În acord cu perspectiva pragmatică, limba este privită ca un instrument în acțiune, care se raportează la intenția[2] vorbitorului, la regulile de comportament comunicațional[3], la adaptarea mesajului în raport cu contextul socio-cultural sau la standardele coerenței și coeziunii. Dacă sociolingvistica, ca „studiu interdisciplinar, al cărui obiect îl constituie variația sistematică a structurii unei limbi și a structurii comunității care o folosește"[4], analizează utilizarea limbii în raport cu regulile socioculturale, de pe un alt palier al pragmaticii, cel al lingvisticii enunțării, care privește enunțarea ca „act individual de utilizare a limbii"[5] și descrie relațiile existente între enunț și utilizatorii săi, limba devine, în primul rând, un act performativ, o formă de utilizare concretă a limbii.

Datorită acestor teritorii de cercetare, s-a trecut și în școală de la studiul limbii ca model ideal la analiza ei în realitatea comunicării. Așadar, limba – cu utilizarea ei, determinată de variabilele situației de comunicare, de statutul social și cultural al interlocutorilor și de tipul relațiilor care stabilește între aceștia – reprezintă nucleul modelului comunicativ adoptat de programele actuale de limba și literatura română. La acest model constituit s-au adăugat și contribuțiile aduse de psiholingvistică, din care didactica a reținut, mai ales, importanța utilizării funcționale a limbii, relaționând-o cu procesele psihice proprii indivizilor care le produc și le interpretează într-o situație.

[1] În această direcție, din filozofia limbajului putem identifica teoriile lui J.L. Austin (How to Do things with Words, 1962) asupra actelor performative, care sunt de natură locuționară (actul de a spune ceva, numind realitatea) și ilocuționară (a exprima o aserțiune, a da un ordin, a face o promisiune etc.).

[2] John R., Searle, Speech Acts: an Essay in the Philosophy of Language, Cambridge University Press, London, 1969

Aceste direcții au fost completate de viziunea constructivistă asupra învățării limbii, care interpretează procesul în termeni de implicare a elevilor în situații de învățare, considerându-l, mai ales, un proces individual, la care profesorul participă mai mult prin oferirea unor suporturi tehnice necesare învățării (de ordin vizual, auditiv, acțional, multimedia etc.)[6]. De pe aceste poziții și în acord cu psihologia socială, care consideră că învățarea limbii este mult mai eficientă în contexte sociale, prin comunicarea cu ceilalți, modelul comunicativ urmărește antrenarea elevului în activități de comunicare semnificative și în acord cu nevoile și preocupările lui. În centrul acestui model se află chiar elevul, care devine agent al învățării, cu rol activ și conștient de propriul traseu educațional. De aici, nevoia aplicării modelului în contextul unor metode active, axate pe acțiune individuală, care promovează învățarea dimensionată social, pe principiul cooperării.

Configurarea modelului a fost influențată, în timp, și de teoriile lingvisticii textuale și de cele ale receptării. Din sfera primelor teorii, amintim aici de accentul pus pe macrostructurarea tipurilor de texte și pe elementele specifice analizei discursului – coerență, coeziune etc.. În ce privește receptarea textului, reținem faptul că modelul comunicativ include lectura în cadrul proceselor orientate spre elev, și nu spre text. Modelul orientării spre cititor[7], ale cărui baze au fost puse de teoreticienii hermeneuticii și ai semioticii, s-a circumscris, în interiorul modelului comunicativ al disciplinei, competenței de lectură. Datorită acestei structurări a competenței, lectura a devenit un proces cu multiple valențe: interactiv (text-lector-context), orientat (către un scop declarat al lecturii), de construcție (cu interpretări și sensuri plurale) și social (cu utilizare imediată în comunitate).

Finalitățile disciplinei. Raportarea la profilul absolventului (competențe-cheie vizate)

Din deschiderea studiului limbii și literaturii române către științele limbii și ale literaturii, dar și către noile teorii din psihologie și pedagogie, abordarea comunicativă a putut să-și configureze un model didactic optim, care să răspundă imperativelor societății contemporane. Mai mult decât atât, studiul maternei după tiparul funcțional și centrarea sa asupra aspectelor comunicării a permis armonizarea cu celelalte discipline din aria curriculară „limbă și comunicare” și a adus cu sine avantajul unei viziuni coerente asupra studiului limbilor.

Dacă analizăm coordonatele profilului de formare al absolventului de gimnaziu pe dimensiunea competenței de comunicare în limba maternă, vedem că studiul ei în școală pregătește elevul pentru un rol activ în societatea cunoașterii - căutarea, colectarea, procesarea de informaţii și receptarea de opinii, idei, sentimente într-o varietate de mesaje ascultate/ texte citite; exprimarea unor informaţii, opinii, idei, sentimente, în mesaje orale sau scrise, prin adaptarea la situaţia de comunicare; participarea la interacţiuni verbale în diverse contexte şcolare şi extraşcolare, în cadrul unui dialog proactiv[8].

În programele de gimnaziu, formarea competenței de comunicare se structurează pe două din cele trei componente ale disciplinei – componenta lingvistică și componenta interrelațională. Prima componentă are drept finalitate conștientizarea importanței codului lingvistic în comunicare, desemnând ca centru de noutate și de interes în învățare activități în care se realizează dirijat familiarizarea elevilor cu norma lingvistică, raportând achizițiile lingvistice anterioare pe care aceștia le-au dobândit în familie sau în anii de școlaritate anteriori la norma limbii române standard. Cea de-a doua componentă, cea interrelațională, urmărește mai ales utilizarea funcțională a limbii, în cadre socioculturale anume delimitate, urmărind înțelegerea limbii ca instrument de comunicare în contexte diverse și semnificante.

Analizând aceste două componente prin raportare la Cadrul european comun de referință pentru limbi, observăm că programa se aliniază structural și conceptual cu acest document, chiar dacă el vizează în principal studiul limbilor străine. Punerea în acord cu cele trei componente ale competenței de comunicare lingvistică (componenta lingvistică, componenta sociolingvistică și componenta pragmatică)[9] este o armonizare care conferă coerență studiului limbilor în cadrul ariei Limbă și comunicare, facilitând raportarea la un cadru mai amplu și la o serie de principii unitare.

•Cadrul european comun de referință pentru limbi
Componenta lingvistică (cunoștințe și deprinderi lexicale, fonetice, sintactice)
Componenta sociolingvistică (parametrii socioculturali ai utilizatorului);
Componenta pragmatică (utilizarea funcțională a resurselor lingvistice)
•Programa d limba și literatura română pentru gimnaziu
Componenta lingvistică (limba română între uz și normă)
Componenta interrelațională (adecvarea comportamentului comunicativ la context

Compararea acestor axe coordonatoare (Fig.1) permite câteva observații legate de particularitățile studiului maternei: componenta lingvistică a programei vizează mai mult decât simpla corectitudine și pune accent pe normativitate (cunoașterea și aplicarea normelor ortografice, ortoepice și morfologice), reflexivitate lingvistică (capacitatea de a justifica anumite selecții lingvistice), stilistică gramaticală (exploatarea valorii expresive a părților de vorbire). Componenta interrelațională absoarbe competența sociolingvistică și pe cea pragmatică, extinzând, din prima corespondență, adaptarea vorbirii la partener și utilizarea registrelor limbii către zona mai largă a identității culturale și a diversității. Dimensiunea pragmatică se corelează atât cu zona producerii de text (tipare textuale, acte de limbaj), cât și cu cea a receptării textului (sens global, inferențe etc.).

Așadar, finalitatea studiului limbii în gimnaziu este aceea de a-i oferi elevului instrumente lingvistice care să-i permită să recepteze și să producă mesaje adecvate în contexte de comunicare variate. Așa cum am văzut, achizițiile lingvistice sunt cele din sfera limbii literare, ca variantă obligatorie în situațiile de comunicare oficială și de comunicare scrisă, dar și ca opțiune recomandată în toate interacțiunile sociale. Viziunea instrumentală asupra limbii se extinde și asupra dimensiunii interrelaționale, urmărind învățarea performării actelor de limbaj în corelație cu contextul de comunicare, a strategiilor de ascultare activă și de argumentare sau persuasiune, a atitudinilor comunicative.

În acord cu dimensiunea metalingvistică, dar și cu principiile predării integrate urmărite de programă, formarea competenței de comunicare nu este urmărită doar în contextul unor situații de comunicare curente, ci și în raport cu o serie de comunicări „excepționale" ale discursului literar. De această dată, finalitățile disciplinei sunt acelea de a-i conștientiza pe elevi asupra puterii limbajului (cum se spune e, cel puțin, la fel de important ca ce se spune) prin reflecții „științifice" asupra limbajului literaturii sau prin analiza specificității limbajului în creațiile artistice. Prin asocierea activităților de comunicare cu cele de receptare a unor texte literare se pun bazele pentru integrarea în sistemul de valori personale al elevului a valorilor universale promovate de literatură (libertatea, pacea, prietenia, dreptatea, toleranța etc.), ca dimensiuni esențiale ale contextului social actual, deschizându-se, astfel, calea spre configurarea celei de-a doua competențe centrale a disciplinei – competența culturală.

Pentru că disciplina limba și literatura română nu reprezintă doar un context de antrenament al abilităților de comunicare, ci și unul pentru formarea atitudinilor și valorilor, aceasta oferă, mai ales prin literatură, teren fertil pentru dezvoltarea competenței-cheie de exprimare și sensibilizare culturală. Și aici, profilul de formare al absolventului de gimnaziu cuprinde trei coordonate în acord cu specificul disciplinei: aprecierea unor elemente definitorii ale contextului cultural local și ale patrimoniului național și universal; realizarea de lucrări creative folosind diverse medii, inclusiv digitale, în contexte școlare și extra-școlare; participarea la proiecte și evenimente culturale organizate în contexte formale sau nonformale[10]. Parametrii în care este transpusă această competență-cheie în programa de gimnaziu[11] vizează deopotrivă înțelegerea propriei identități și a patrimoniului cultural, în contextul diversității și multitudinii modalităților de exprimare culturală. De aici, literatura va fi înțeleasă, în primul rând, ca depozitarul valorilor, credințelor și simbolurilor unei comunități, iar efortul profesorului va fi orientat mai ales spre a face această dimensiune vizibilă și relevantă pentru dezvoltarea elevilor.

Finalitățile acestui demers, de ordin aptitudinal (capacitatea de a exprima idei figurative, experiențe, emoții în forme artistice și culturale) și atitudinal (interes, respect și apreciere față de diversitatea expresiilor culturale) sunt greu măsurabile și evaluabile, însă se afiliază unui scop mai înalt al educației, circumscris acelei zone de dezvoltare a personalității, echivalentă conceptului de bildung. Accepția pe care i-o oferă sistemul educațional german acestui termen e ceea ce își construiește fiecare personalitate, pe lângă intervenția pedagogică, materializată în achiziția de cunoștințe, abilități, norme, valori etc.. B*ildung,* așadar, se raportează mai ales la capacitatea fiecăruia de a reflecta asupra experiențelor personale sau colective, la capacitatea de a emite judecăți asupra realității, într-un cuvânt la procesul de maturizare[12]. Din perspectiva acestuia, studiul literaturii – așa cum este gândit și în programa pentru gimnaziu – este direcționat către perspectiva implicării culturale a elevului în societate, în acord cu un anume set de valori. Chiar dacă societatea pluralistă de astăzi nu poate avea aceleași valori, există, totuși, un set de valori comune[13] pe care Europa le împărtășește: respectul pentru tradiții, știință și artă, toleranța și generozitatea, libertatea de exprimare și flexibilitatea în gândire etc.

În acest cadru mai larg, cea mai importantă funcție a literaturii este aceea de a reprezenta un teren fertil pentru experiențele de ordin estetic, căci elevul poate trăi prin lectură vieți posibile, poate experimenta emoții și situații pe care nu le va întâlni în universul proxim. Renunțarea la înțelegerea literaturii ca un construct muzeal și canonic (care valida apartenența la națiune prin cunoașterea literaturii naționale) a creat cadrul mai larg al abordării literaturii ca discurs cultural despre lume, care abordează teme variate, dar uman-universale, circumscrise celor patru direcții tematice ale programei: Eu și universul meu familiar, Eu și lumea din jurul meu, Orizonturile lumii, Reflecții asupra lumii. În interiorul acestor câmpuri tematice însuși conceptul de „text" se lărgește, asociind textului literar

Așadar, finalitatea urmărită de programa disciplinei pentru gimnaziu - formarea unui individ capabil să utilizeze limba română în scopul învățării, atât în perioada școlarității, cât și pe toată durata vieții, capabil să utilizeze limba română în scopul inserției sociale, capabil să-și asume propria identitate lingvistică și culturală, sensibil la valorile interculturale și multiculturale[15] - derivă din competențele-cheie și reflectă în mod armonios liniile de forță ale profilului absolventului de gimnaziu.

MORPHOLOGICAL ANALYSIS OF THE LEXICAL FAMILY OF FLEUR (FLOWER). DERIVATIONS, METAPHORICAL EXTENSIONS AND PRODUCTIVITY

Rodica Roman
Lecturer, PhD, "Lucian Blaga" University of Sibiu

Abstract: This article explores the lexical family of fleur (flower) by analysing its morphology, semantics and interdisciplinary circulation. It traces the Latin origin of the root (flos, floris), its phonetic evolution and the coexistence of popular forms (fleur, fleurir) and scholarly forms (floral, floriculture). The wealth of suffixal, prefixal and compound derivations illustrates the lexical productivity and morphological creativity of the French language. Floral vocabulary proves to be both a heuristic and symbolic tool, used in the exact sciences, the humanities and social sciences, as well as in literature and popular culture. This study highlights how floral vocabulary constitutes a genuine instrument of mediation between scientific language, poetic imagination and cultural cognition.

Keywords: fleur (flower); lexical family; lexical and symbolic versatility

Introduction

La famille lexicale de fleur constitue un domaine d'étude particulièrement riche, car elle touche à la fois à la morphologie lexicale, à la sémantique et aux transferts métaphoriques. Le terme botanique fleur appartient au vocabulaire fondamental du français, mais il est également au cœur d'un réseau lexical dense, utilisé dans les sciences naturelles, la littérature, l'esthétique et les discours sociaux.

L'analyse morphologique de cette famille permet de comprendre comment un nom commun simple s'est développé en un ensemble de termes appartenant tantôt au registre courant, tantôt au lexique technique. Le vocabulaire floral, riche en métaphores visuelles et en structures morphologiques productives, favorise la conceptualisation de phénomènes complexes grâce à sa capacité d'évoquer l'idée de croissance, d'épanouissement, de rayonnement ou de prolifération.

Comment les sciences se sont-elles approprié le vocabulaire floral, quels procédés linguistiques ont permis cette diffusion, et quelles fonctions (descriptives, heuristiques ou pédagogiques) ces emprunts remplissent-ils dans les discours scientifiques contemporains ?

Cet article se propose d'examiner cette appropriation sous trois angles complémentaires : (1) l'héritage botanique et les mécanismes de dérivation morphologique qui ont facilité la diffusion du lexique floral dans les sciences naturelles ; (2) la dimension métaphorique et figurative qui a permis son intégration dans des disciplines éloignées de la botanique ; (3) les enjeux épistémologiques, terminologiques et cognitifs qu'implique cette circulation interdisciplinaire.

La méthodologie adoptée dans cette étude s'appuie sur l'analyse d'un ensemble de ressources complémentaires destinées à éclairer la structure et l'évolution de la famille de mots fleur-/flor-. Les outils lexicographiques et lexicométriques en constituent la base. Ces sources fournissent la plupart des exemples illustrant les phénomènes morphologiques et sémantiques. L'enquête s'appuie également sur des sources linguistiques spécialisées pour soutenir et contextualiser les observations. Pour les emplois relevant des domaines technique et scientifique, l'étude mobilise également des ressources en ligne, comme des sites professionnels, des sources spécialisées et des blogs thématiques. Ces matériaux permettent de documenter la vitalité contemporaine des formes en fleur-/flor- dans les terminologies scientifiques et techniques.

Pour des raisons esthétiques et de lisibilité, nous avons choisi de ne pas inclure les liens utilisés pour étayer les exemples mentionnés dans la dernière partie de l'article (Les discours contemporains) dans le texte. Ceux-ci sont dans la sitographie, classés dans l'ordre dans lequel ils apparaissent dans le texte.

L'étymologie du mot « fleur » vient du latin florem, forme accusative du substantif flos, floris, qui désignait la partie colorée d'un végétal, souvent colorée et parfumée (Petit Robert). Le passage du latin au français illustre un processus phonétique régulier, qui a toutefois laissé subsister deux formes héritées, révélatrices de l'évolution différenciée du vocabulaire.

Dans l'évolution populaire, le latin florem a subi des transformations phonétiques classiques; il a été transmis à l'ancien français sous la forme flor, qui a progressivement évolué vers flur, puis vers fleur au cours du Moyen Âge. Les formes savantes, telles que floral, floraison ou floralies, ont été réintroduites ou calquées plus tardivement sur le latin classique flor-.

Cette coexistence de fleur- et flor- reflète d'une part la continuité de la transmission orale du latin romanisé, à l'origine des termes du langage quotidien, et d'autre part la persistance du prestige du latin classique, mobilisé pour créer ou maintenir des dérivés savants, surtout dans les domaines scientifique, technique ou littéraire.

Ainsi, le radical flor- est resté intact dans les emprunts savants, tandis que le radical fleur- est le résultat d'une longue évolution populaire. L'ensemble forme un réseau lexical cohérent dans lequel les deux racines, tout en présentant une divergence formelle, renvoient à un même champ notionnel. Les doublets (Grevisse, 157) sont un exemple typique de la manière dont le français conserve simultanément l'héritage vivant du latin vulgaire et l'héritage, plus érudit, du latin classique.

La famille lexicale de fleur se distingue par sa richesse morphologique et sémantique, ainsi que par sa capacité à s'adapter à différents registres : populaire, scientifique, littéraire ou médiatique.

Le sous-ensemble des termes formés à partir du radical fleur- concerne essentiellement des noms, des adjectifs et des verbes d'usage courant.

Outre le lexème de base fleur, on distingue les noms fleuraison (épanouissement des fleurs), fleuret (épée d'escrime) et fleuron (ornement en forme de fleur), les adjectifs fleuri (couvert de fleurs) et fleuronné (orné de fleurons), ainsi que les formes verbales fleurir (produire des fleurs) et fleurer (répandre une odeur agréable).

La famille lexicale comporte également une branche savante, issue du latin flor-, utilisée principalement dans le lexique scientifique et technique. Nous retenons les noms suivants : floraison « épanouissement des fleurs », floralies « exposition de fleurs », flore « ensemble des espèces végétales qui croissent dans une région déterminée », floréal « huitième mois du calendrier républicain », florès « forme la locution faire florès qui signifie réussir », floribondité « qualité d'une plante qui produit beaucoup de fleurs », florilège « recueil de pièces choisies », florin « pièce de monnaie », défloration « action de déflorer une jeune fille », efflorescence « transformation de certains cristaux par perte d'eau », inflorescence « regroupement de plusieurs fleurs », ainsi que les adjectifs floral « relatif aux fleurs » et florissant « qui fleurit », et le verbe déflorer « dépouiller un végétal de ses fleurs ».

Les innovations lexicales constituent l'un des procédés essentiels d'enrichissement du vocabulaire français. La famille morphologique issue du radical fleur- (et de sa variante savante flor) constitue un ensemble cohérent qui met en œuvre presque toutes les ressources de la morphologie dérivationnelle du français : suffixation, préfixation, parasynthèse, ainsi que composition savante ou lexicale (Grevisse, p. 168). Guilbert considère quant à lui le mot comme « un ensemble de traits » et insiste sur les glissements sémantiques et la dimension créative de ce processus, ainsi que sur son rôle dans la formation de lexiques techniques ou scientifiques (Guilbert, p. 125, 196). Les exemples illustrent bien cette complémentarité entre rigueur formelle et dynamique sémantique.

La suffixation nominale est le procédé le plus productif dans les exemples sélectionnés. Les suffixes -age, -ment, -ette, -iste et -icien permettent de former des noms d'action, de résultat, de collectif ou d'agent.

Les exemples fleurage, effleurage et enfleurage illustrent la polyvalence remarquable du suffixe -age, qui permet de dériver des noms d'action, des collectifs ou des opérations techniques. Le mot fleurage désigne un décor composé de fleurs, souvent utilisé dans un contexte esthétique. Il s'agit d'un nom collectif construit sur la base fleur-. Ce terme illustre l'une des valeurs centrales du suffixe : la désignation d'un ensemble ou d'un motif répétitif. Effleurage désigne l'action d'effleurer dans le domaine de la tannerie ou du travail des peaux. Effleurage appartient au lexique technique et illustre la capacité de la famille de mots fleur- à s'inscrire dans des pratiques artisanales précises. En parfumerie, le terme enfleurage désigne une opération qui consiste à capter les parfums des fleurs par des graisses absorbantes. Ce mot illustre la manière dont un suffixe très productif peut servir de support à des lexèmes spécialisés. Sa relation avec le verbe enfleurer confirme sa formation régulière. Ces trois exemples montrent que le suffixe -age est souple et s'attache non seulement au sens concret des fleurs, mais aussi à des opérations techniques spécialisées.

Le suffixe -ment joue donc un rôle clé dans l'abstraction des significations et leur migration vers des registres techniques. Le dérivé fleurissement désigne l'action de fleurir ou le résultat, un espace couvert de fleurs. Il présente une valeur aspectuelle double, entre action et résultat, caractéristique du suffixe -ment. Dans effleurement, le radical a perdu son sens floral concret. Le verbe effleurer ayant pris un sens figuré (« toucher légèrement »), le nom renvoie à une action abstraite, légère, presque perceptive. Il illustre clairement la dérivation sémantique. À l'inverse, affleurement appartient au lexique spatial ou géologique. Il désigne l'action d'atteindre la même hauteur ou la même surface. Ce terme illustre parfaitement la transformation métaphorique du radical: la notion de « fleur qui affleure » (qui émerge) a évolué vers une valeur géométrique.

Les suffixes diminutifs et d'agent ont été utilisés pour construire les mots fleurette, fleuriste et fleurettiste. Fleurette est un diminutif de fleur, avec le suffixe -ette qui apporte une nuance de petitesse, voire d'affection. On reste dans le domaine concret, à l'inverse de certains dérivés plus abstraits. Fleuriste désigne un professionnel qui travaille avec les fleurs. Le suffixe -iste crée un nom d'agent ou de métier. Ce mot relève du lexique courant. La dérivation fleurettiste appartient au domaine de l'escrime. Ce mot illustre un phénomène intéressant : bien qu'il soit morphologiquement dérivé de fleurette, il désigne l'utilisateur du fleuret, une arme d'escrime. C'est la proximité phonique qui explique la fixation du terme, même si la base sémantique s'est autonomisée.

À l'aide de suffixes savants : -ique et -icien ont été créé le mot floristique, qui désigne les phénomènes liés à la flore, et le terme floristicien, qui désigne le spécialiste de ce domaine. Floristique désigne ce qui a rapport à la flore. Il appartient au domaine de la botanique et illustre la rencontre entre la morphologie savante et le lexique scientifique. Le floristicien est le spécialiste de la floristique. Le suffixe -icien permet de créer des noms de métier ou de spécialité scientifique. Il s'agit d'une dérivation secondaire : floristique → floristicien. Ce type de formation correspond à l'évolution interne des lexiques spécialisés. Ces deux formes témoignent de la productivité des suffixes savants dans les lexiques scientifiques. Elles appartiennent à un vocabulaire spécialisé hérité de la tradition botanique.

La préfixation est un procédé qui peut conférer une orientation aspectuelle, itérative, temporelle ou privative aux mots dérivés des radicaux fleur- et flor-.

Avec les mots défleurir (« perdre ses fleurs ») et défleuraison/défloraison (« chute ou disparition des fleurs »), on observe un emploi privatif du préfixe indiquant la perte ou la disparition. Ces mots relèvent principalement du domaine botanique, à l'exception de défloraison, qui peut aussi avoir un emploi plus général (par exemple en viticulture).

Le préfixe re- marque la répétition ou le retour d'un processus : refleurir (« fleurir à nouveau ») et refleurissement (« action ou résultat de ce retour »). Le caractère régulier de la dérivation témoigne de la stabilité de la base fleur-.

Les unités préfixées préfloraison et postfloraison appartiennent au domaine de la botanique descriptive. Préfloraison désigne la disposition des pièces florales avant la floraison, tandis que postfloraison désigne la disposition après la floraison. Les préfixes pré- et post- témoignent d'une structuration temporelle des phases d'un phénomène botanique. Ces termes spécialisés assurent une précision descriptive importante dans la terminologie scientifique.

Trois verbes relèvent d'une formation parasynthétique : effleurer, affleurer et enfleurer. Dans ces cas, le verbe n'existe ni sans préfixe (fleurer n'a pas ce sens) ni sans suffixe verbal. Effleurer signifie « toucher légèrement » et affleurer se situe dans le champ spatial avec le sens de « mettre deux pièces contiguës au même niveau ». Enfleurer est un terme lié à la parfumerie qui signifie « imprégner d'odeur de fleur ». Il se distingue des deux autres par son sens spécialisé, mais conserve une formation régulière. Cette formation simultanée témoigne de la capacité de la parasynthèse à générer des verbes dotés d'un sens autonome.

Certains termes ne relèvent pas de la dérivation, mais résultent de la composition, qu'elle soit fondée sur des éléments savants ou sur la simple juxtaposition lexicale.

Les composés savants analysés appartiennent tous au domaine scientifique ou agricole : floriculture (flori- + -culture) est un terme appartenant au domaine de l'agronomie/horticulture et désigne la culture des fleurs ; florifère (flori- + -fère, « qui porte ») désigne ce qui porte des fleurs ; et l'adjectif floricole (flori- + -cole, « qui vit de / concerne ») désigne ce qui vit sur les fleurs ou ce qui est relatif aux fleurs ou à leur culture. Ces termes montrent une hybridation entre racines savantes latines et terminologie scientifique contemporaine.

Les composés lexicaux fleurdelisé, passiflore et solifleur manifestent la créativité compositionnelle du français et la capacité du radical floral à se combiner dans des domaines variés. Fleurdelisé, adjectif formé sur « fleurs de lys », un mot composé devenu fleurdeliser, qui a reçu ultérieurement la suffixation adjectivale. Passiflore est un mot botanique composé moderne issu de deux bases latines (passio, « passion » et flos, « fleur »). La base flor- est savante, non liée directement à fleur moderne, mais rattachée à la même étymologie latine. Le nom solifleur (soli- « seul » + fleur), qui désigne un vase pour une seule fleur, constitue un exemple de création lexicale moderne souvent utilisée dans les arts décoratifs.

L'ensemble de ces formes constitue un exemple assez complet de la créativité morphologique du français. Les procédés de suffixation, de préfixation, de parasynthèse et de composition s'y articulent pour donner naissance à une série cohérente, mais diversifiée, de lexèmes, montrant à la fois l'évolution sémantique, la diversification des domaines (botanique, parfumerie, géologie, design, artisanat) et la stabilité du radical analysé dans le système du français.

À cette structure double, fleur- et flor-, qui se présente, comme nous l'avons vu, de manière dynamique (Guilbert, p. 155), s'ajoutent les extensions métaphoriques et figurées, toujours renouvelées, qui reposent sur plusieurs caractéristiques fondamentales expliquant le dynamisme du mot dans l'imaginaire linguistique. Sa forte symbolique, d'abord, en fait un terme immédiatement visualisable. L'image de la fleur se présente sans effort et fournit, selon Umberto Eco, une « unité culturelle » aisément activable, donc disponible pour des transferts de sens (Eco, p. 163). À cette puissance iconique s'ajoute une richesse symbolique considérable (beauté, croissance, fragilité, éphémère, apparence, etc.) qui alimente ce qu'Eco nomme la « sémiosis illimitée », c'est-à-dire la capacité d'un signe à engendrer sans cesse de nouveaux parcours interprétatifs (Eco, p. 368-372). La flexibilité du mot, qui circule du registre poétique au scientifique, du sentimental au journalistique, confirme cette productivité. Le mot fleur agit comme une matrice ouverte permettant, selon Lakoff, la construction de métaphores conceptuelles fondées sur l'expérience sensorielle et culturelle partagée (Lakoff et Johnson, p. 20). Cette continuité naturelle entre le concret et l'abstrait facilite la conceptualisation de phénomènes matériels ou immatériels en s'appuyant sur des schémas cognitifs que Lakoff décrit comme des « cartographies » entre domaines d'expérience (Lakoff et Johnson, p. 12). Enfin, une longue tradition littéraire a fixé, enrichi et diffusé ces images, renforçant ainsi la stabilité et la disponibilité culturelle de la métaphore florale.

Les usages non botaniques, figurés, ancrés dans l'histoire de la langue et constamment renouvelés dans les discours contemporains, révèlent la capacité du lexique floral à modéliser des réalités variées : émotions, états humains, processus économiques, phénomènes sociaux, esthétique, moralité ou spiritualité. Pour organiser cette diversité, nous distinguons trois grands axes : (1) les métaphores de la croissance et de l'épanouissement ; (2) les lexicalisations poétiques ou héritées de l'histoire littéraire et (3) les métaphores de surface ou d'apparition, plus discrètes mais assez productives.

1. Métaphores de l'épanouissement

L'un des principaux schèmes métaphoriques associés à fleur est celui de la croissance organique, fondé sur le cycle végétatif : bourgeon → floraison → épanouissement → déclin. Ce cycle naturel offre une représentation cognitive simple et puissante, facilement transposable à d'autres domaines. Métaphores de la maturité et de la jeunesse :

la fleur de l'âge : moment idéal d'un parcours de vie, correspondant à la plénitude physique et mentale (TLFi)
dans la fleur de : « en plein épanouissement » (PR) mine florissante : « qui témoigne d'une bonne santé » (PR)
Métaphores de développement économique ou intellectuel/ éducatif L'idée de floraison est fréquemment appliquée à des domaines non végétaux afin de signifier une croissance rapide ou une émergence visible :
la fleur d'une civilisation : ce qu'il y en a de meilleur (PR) une économie en pleine floraison (https://skstalents.fr/article/une-economie-en-pleine-floraison) une floraison de talents (PR) efflorescence (au sens figuré de prolifération) : « prodigieuse efflorescence de l'art gothique » (Gautier) (PR)
Ces usages montrent la capacité de la fleur à représenter la vitalité, l'énergie émergente.

2. Lexicalisation poétique et héritage littéraire

Une deuxième catégorie d'extensions métaphoriques provient de la littérature et de la tradition culturelle. Elles sont souvent figées ou semi-figées, ce qui témoigne d'une longue histoire.
Florilège : métaphore de la sélection esthétique

Le terme florilège, issu du latin florilegium, désignait chez les humanistes une « cueillette de fleurs » au sens figuré, c'est-à-dire un recueil de morceaux choisis ; la tradition est encore vivante de nos jours pour qualifier une sélection de textes particulièrement remarquables.

Florilège de discours savants sur le vin (titre du livre écrit par A. Jaboulet-Vercherre)
Fleuron : valeur symbolique de l'excellence

Issu du diminutif floron, le terme signifie d'abord « petite fleur » avant d'évoluer vers « ornement en forme de fleur ». Le mot fleuron, fréquemment employé par les écrivains du XIX^{e} siècle, en est venu à désigner l'élément le plus brillant d'un ensemble, que ce soit dans une œuvre, une collection ou un corpus.
Le fleuron de l'industrie (PR)
Ce fleuron de l'aviation commerciale « a vocation à jouer un rôle majeur dans la compétition internationale », estime encore Bercy. (Le Nouvel Observateur 2002)
Autres lexicalisations figées :
fleur bleue : sentimental(e) naïf(ve), expression d'origine littéraire (Novalis, Heinrich von Ofterdingen) (Dictionnaire des symboles) lancer des fleurs à qqn : « complimenter » (PR) comme une fleur : « de manière douce » (TLFi) être fleur : « être démuni d'argent » (TLFi) faire une fleur à qqn : « offrir un cadeau » (TLFi)

Ces expressions témoignent de la force du symbole, de sa diffusion et de son ancrage dans la mémoire collective. Elles participent à la richesse de la famille lexicale en lui ajoutant des sédimentations successives.

3. Métaphores d'apparition, de surface ou de fragilité

Certaines métaphores issues de fleur sont moins évidemment liées à l'idée de beauté ou d'épanouissement ; elles sont fondées sur l'idée de ce qui apparaît brièvement à la surface.
Effleurer et la notion de contact superficiel

Le verbe effleurer (préfixe es- + fleur) signifiait à l'origine « enlever la fleur de la farine », c'est-à-dire éliminer la couche superficielle. Il a ensuite évolué vers d'autres sens :
effleurer qqch de la main : « toucher légèrement » (PR) effleurer un sujet : « examiner superficiellement » (PR).

Dans les deux cas, c'est l'idée de surface qui prédomine. La réalité n'est pas pénétrée, mais seulement effleurée, perçue dans ses contours. L'expression à fleur de reprend cette même valeur, en signifiant « presque au niveau de, au ras de, sur le même plan que » (PR).

De son côté, le verbe effleurer illustre l'extension sémantique la plus subtile. D'abord associé à un contact léger, il s'est étendu au domaine intellectuel et psychologique, comme le montre son emploi chez Mauriac lorsqu'il confesse « La pensée ne m'avait jamais effleuré que je dusse m'en servir » (PR).

Les métaphores corporelles telles que « une rougeur lui a fleuri au visage » ou « un sourire a fleuri sur ses lèvres » relèvent d'une tradition littéraire qui réactive l'image d'une fleur surgissant soudainement, fragile et immédiatement visible.

4. Métaphores de dissolution ou de prolifération

La racine fleur- s'étend également à la désignation de phénomènes relevant de la surface, de la pellicule ou de la multiplication, selon des usages appartenant principalement aux domaines techniques (chimique ou agricole). On peut citer :

efflorescence : « transformation de certains cristaux par perte d'eau » (PR) effleurescent : « couvert de sel en efflorescence » (PR) fleur de sel : cristallisation du sel à la surface de l'eau (https://fr.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fleur_de_sel) fleur du vin : « moisissures à la surface » (TLFi) fleur de lait : « crème » (TLFi).

L'ensemble de ces extensions montre que la fleur ne se réduit pas à un simple symbole de beauté ou d'épanouissement ; elle peut également figurer l'apparition fugace, la prolifération parfois excessive ou la pellicule superficielle qui se manifeste à l'interface entre la matière et l'air.

Ces emplois métaphoriques et figurés confirment que la fleur n'est pas seulement un motif poétique traditionnel, mais un véritable outil conceptuel. Sa flexibilité sémantique permet de générer de nouvelles images, adaptées aux registres littéraires, scientifiques ou médiatiques.

Les discours contemporains, qu'il s'agisse des médias, des réseaux sociaux ou du marketing, continuent d'exploiter ce potentiel métaphorique.

Dans les médias économiques, on rencontre régulièrement des syntagmes comme secteur floricole, secteurs en pleine floraison ou économie florissante, qui traduisent l'idée de croissance rapide et visible, tout en conservant une tonalité positive et dynamique. On parle ainsi de floraison d'idées pour désigner une abondance créative, ou de mur floral (souvent associé aux événements de mode et mariages) dans le vocabulaire décoratif. Des expressions plus éphémères, comme vibes florales (calque lexical de l'anglais floral vibes) ou design floral (de l'anglais floral design) montrent que le champ lexical de la fleur reste un terrain privilégié pour la création néologique et stylistique, s'adaptant aux tendances visuelles et émotionnelles de la communication numérique. Sur les réseaux sociaux, la métaphore florale se renouvelle. On parle par exemple de floraison de trends sur TikTok pour désigner l'abondance des tendances TikTok, et de tutoriels fleuris pour désigner des contenus bien décorés ou tutoriels fleurs pour désigner des contenus explicatifs qui enseignent comment réaliser, utiliser ou représenter des fleurs dans différents domaines. Les mouvements qui fleurissent représentent une métaphore pour la diffusion rapide et harmonieuse de pratiques sociales ou politiques.

Avec l'importance croissante accordée aux études sur la biodiversité, certains termes sont revitalisés (par exemple, calendrier de floraison ou phénologie florale) et renforcent la présence de la famille lexicale dans les débats publics.

Eau-de-fleurs, marchand de fleurs, secteur/ marché floricole sont des lexicalisations transparentes et motivées par la sémantique et illustrent la créativité accessible aux locuteurs ordinaires, et leur rôle dans les expressions culturelles, commerciales ou décoratives.

Le marketing contemporain exploite de manière intensive l'imaginaire floral, devenu l'un des réservoirs symboliques les plus productifs pour valoriser des produits ou des services. L'expression univers fleuri désigne ainsi un ensemble de signes (couleurs, motifs, narrations) évoquant la profusion, la douceur ou la naturalité et créant un environnement sensoriel immédiatement séduisant.

De même, la signature florale, très présente en parfumerie, renvoie moins à la présence effective de fleurs dans la composition qu'à une promesse olfactive. Elle suggère un style, une atmosphère, un geste créatif associé à l'élégance ou à la sensualité. On parlera aussi de notes florales pour qualifier un thé, un café, un savon ou même un détergent, conférant à ces produits une dimension esthétique, sensible et valorisante.

En médecine, les expressions telles qu'efflorescence cutanée, désignant l'ensemble d'éruptions dermatologiques se déployant à la surface de la peau, et thérapie florale mobilisent toutes deux une métaphore fondée sur l'analogie entre la floraison végétale et l'apparition visible d'un phénomène d'origine physico-chimique ou clinique. L'expression thérapie florale ne se limite pas à évoquer l'usage de préparations à base de fleurs. Elle repose sur une conception symbolique et analogique du végétal. Les fleurs y sont envisagées comme des vecteurs d'harmonie, de rééquilibrage émotionnel et de restauration énergétique.

L'identité florale d'une marque repose sur le même principe, celui d'ancrer l'image d'une entreprise dans des référents floraux afin de lui conférer une aura de délicatesse, de fraîcheur ou d'authenticité. Il s'agit d'un travail de stylisation dans lequel la fleur devient un emblème graphique et sémantique porteur de valeurs positives. Quant à la gamme florale, elle réunit des produits que l'on souhaite percevoir comme harmonieux, raffinés ou apaisants, en utilisant des appellations et des codes visuels floraux pour créer une unité esthétique.

L'expression expérience florale, très utilisée dans l'événementiel et le secteur du luxe, relève d'une stratégie immersive. Elle vise à faire vivre au public un moment perçu comme délicat, sensoriel et enveloppant, dans lequel la fleur fonctionne comme une métaphore d'élégance et d'abondance plutôt que comme un décor réel.

Dans tous ces cas, les termes utilisés ne désignent pas nécessairement des fleurs réelles. Ils activent un réseau de connotations (pureté, sensualité, délicatesse, naturalité etc.) qui relèvent davantage de l'imaginaire collectif que du référent botanique. Le vocabulaire floral devient alors un marqueur symbolique capable de rehausser l'attrait d'objets ou de produits ordinaires.
Ainsi, la fleur, devenue signe, opère comme un puissant opérateur de distinction et d'embellissement dans le discours marketing contemporain.

Conclusion

La coexistence de formes courantes, savantes et figurées souligne la richesse morphologique du radical fleur/ flor, capable de générer aussi bien des termes concrets que des notions abstraites, et de se prêter à des usages spécialisés comme à des créations symboliques. Les facteurs qui expliquent cette appropriation sont la précision descriptive initiale du lexique floral, issue du regard botanique, la force heuristique de ses images, qui facilitent la conceptualisation de phénomènes complexes et sa capacité à circuler entre langue commune et discours savant, permettant une grande adaptabilité. La productivité du radical repose ainsi sur une continuité entre tradition et innovation, qui garantit la durabilité et la diversité de la famille lexicale dans la langue française contemporaine.

TIME CONCEPTUALIZATION IN FRENCH IDIOMATIC EXPRESSIONS: LINGUISTIC, PHILOSOPHICAL AND CULTURAL CONVERGENCES

Lucia Balanci
Lecturer, PhD, "Alecu Russo" Bălți State University, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: This article explores the conceptualization of time in French idiomatic expressions by integrating linguistic, philosophical and cultural perspectives. Drawing on thinkers such as Plato, Augustine, Kant, Bergson, Blaga, Hall and Eliade, the study shows that time is not merely a measurable physical category, but a culturally mediated construct shaped by collective memory and symbolic frameworks. French and Romanian idioms reveal diverse representations of duration, transience, irreversibility and mythical or experiential time. A contrastive analysis highlights the challenges of translating temporal idioms, which require not only semantic equivalence but also the preservation of imagery, stylistic value and cultural connotations. Ultimately, the phraseology of time emerges as a meaningful site for understanding how communities interpret temporal experience and articulate their worldview.

Keywords: time conceptualization; idiomatic expressions; cultural temporality; linguistic worldview; metaphorical representation

La langue n'est pas uniquement un instrument de communication ; elle constitue également un miroir des représentations culturelles propres à une communauté. Parmi les notions universelles que le lexique et la phraséologie d'un idiome reflètent, le temps occupe une place privilégiée. Loin de s'imposer comme une catégorie stable et homogène, le concept de temps se révèle profondément relatif, façonné par les cadres culturels et cognitifs au sein desquels il est appréhendé. Ainsi, les langues ne se limitent pas à exprimer la temporalité : elles la modèlent, la découpent et la symbolisent selon leurs propres schémas mentaux.

La langue française dispose d'un répertoire particulièrement riche d'expressions idiomatiques liées au temps, dans lesquelles se condensent des valeurs morales, esthétiques et sociales. Issues de l'usage populaire comme de la tradition littéraire, ces unités linguistiques traduisent la manière dont la culture française conçoit la durée, l'action, l'attente ou encore la fugacité des événements. En articulant des dimensions historiques, affectives, sociales et culturelles, elles participent à la construction d'une vision singulière du temps. Leur transposition dans d'autres langues – notamment en roumain – met au jour une série de défis d'ordre sémantique, pragmatique et culturel, révélant la spécificité des imaginaires temporels propres à chaque communauté linguistique.

Dans cette perspective, le présent article se propose d'examiner la conceptualisation du temps dans les expressions idiomatiques françaises en croisant trois niveaux d'analyse : linguistique, philosophique et culturel. Il s'agira d'étudier les mécanismes par lesquels la langue encode et transmet une représentation particulière de la temporalité, tout en identifiant, dans une démarche comparative, les éventuelles correspondances ou divergences observables en roumain. Cette approche intégrée permettra enfin de mettre en lumière les principaux enjeux traductologiques que soulève le transfert interculturel de ces unités idiomatiques, dont la signification repose sur des cadres symboliques profondément enracinés dans la culture française.

Le temps constitue l'une des notions fondamentales de l'expérience humaine et l'un des centres d'intérêt majeurs de la philosophie, de la linguistique, de la psychologie et de l'art. Il représente à la fois une réalité objective, mesurable en heures, jours, années ou siècles, et une catégorie subjective, vécue et interprétée à travers la conscience.

La signification du concept a généré de nombreuses divergences d'interprétation, ce qui rend difficile la formulation d'une définition universellement admise et exempte de controverses. Les chercheurs avancent des perspectives multiples quant à la manière de mesurer le temps et de l'intégrer dans un cadre de référence rigoureux.

Du point de vue étymologique, le terme temps provient du latin tempus, de la même racine que le grec ancien τέμνω / témnô, « couper », qui fait référence à une division du flot du temps en éléments finis et évoque en même temps le partage de la durée[1].

Le temps est perçu à la fois comme un moment, un instant, et comme un processus continu et irréversible par lequel le présent se transforme sans cesse en passé (Grimaldi, 1993 :6). Le Dictionnaire Oxford définit le temps comme « un processus indéfini et continu de l'existence des événements au passé, présent et futur, envisagés comme une unité » [2].

En philosophie, le temps constitue l'une des questions majeures. Dans un sens plus strictement philosophique, il est souvent envisagé comme le milieu homogène et indéterminé au sein duquel les événements se déroulent. Dans l'Antiquité, Platon lui attribuait un rôle secondaire, le considérant comme une représentation inférieure de l'éternité. Ainsi Platon considérait que « [L'auteur du monde] s'est préoccupé de fabriquer une certaine imitation mobile de l'éternité, et, tout en organisant le Ciel, il a fait cette image éternelle qui progresse suivant la loi des Nombres, cette chose que nous appelons le Temps. Donc, le Temps est l'image mobile de l'éternité immobile » (Platon, 1970 : 14).

Au XVIIIe siècle, le philosophe allemand Emmanuel Kant grandit le rôle du temps, dans lequel il voit une forme universelle permettant de saisir les phénomènes. Dans la vision du savant, le temps n'est pas un concept empirique dérivé de l'expérience, mais une condition a priori de la perception, rendant possible la distinction entre simultanéité et succession (Pitou, 1998).

Selon Thomas d'Aquin « le concept du temps renferme la notion de durée, celle-ci étant l'attribut de toute existence (Nys, 1897 : 31). Dans la conception d'Aristote, le temps constitue « le nombre du mouvement », c'est-à-dire la mesure de l'intervalle entre le « avant » et le « après », quantifié par une unité arbitraire. Il soulignait le caractère « continu » du temps, puisqu'il appartient au mouvement, conçu comme un processus inachevé et perpétuellement en devenir (apud, Paty, 2001 : 54).

Pour Saint-Augustin le temps est « une intuition spontanée : on comprend ce qu'est le temps, mais on ne peut l'expliquer. Puisque le présent devient aussitôt passé, le temps ne peut être défini de manière rationnelle. S'il pouvait l'être, il serait statique et coïnciderait dès lors avec l'éternité (Vieillard-Baron, Jean-Louis, 2000 : 25). Dans ce sens, Augustin affirmait : « Qu'est-ce donc que le temps ? Si personne ne me le demande, je le sais; mais, si on me le demande, et que je veuille l'expliquer, je ne le sais plus » (Ibidem).

Dans son ouvrage Les Confessions, il distingue trois dimensions du présent :

- le présent du passé (la mémoire),
- le présent du présent (la conscience immédiate),
- le présent du futur (l'attente).

Le penseur considérait que « le passé est le temps de la nostalgie et de l'imaginaire (comme dans les débuts des contes "Il était une fois..." ou dans les mythes). Le futur, au contraire, est le temps de l'espérance, des projets, mais aussi des craintes », tandis que le présent demeure la seule réalité vécue (Ibidem, p. 26).

Blaise Pascal considérait que le temps fait partie de ces notions évidentes, reconnues de tous, mais néanmoins indéfinissables. Les souvenirs, le rêve ou les transformations provoquées par le passage de la vie — telles que le vieillissement — nous donnent l'idée que « le temps a passé ». Toutefois, le philosophe soulignait la nécessité de distinguer deux dimensions fondamentales en philosophie: le temps physique, mesuré par des instruments (montre, horloge, calendrier, chronologie), et le temps vécu en notre conscience (apud, Barreau, 2009: 20).

En termes psychologiques, selon le savant français Henri-Louis Bergson le temps est compris de deux manières: soit par la conscience, soit par la technique. Donc il parle du temps vécu ou subjectif et du temps de la durée ou objectif. Le temps subjectif de la conscience est lié à nos représentations (pensées, sentiments, …) alors que le temps objectif, ou celui de l'horloge agit comme une mesure commune, universelle du temps (Bergson, 1970 : 54).

[2] https://en.oxforddictionaries.com/definition/time

Louis Aragon citant une métaphore d'Elsa Triolet, disait : « Le temps n'est pas une voiture qui passe, nous ne la regardons pas des bas-côtés de la route, elle nous emmène avec elle, on vit à l'intérieur de la voiture » (Wilmet, 1988 : 6).

Concurremment, la « fuite du temps » transforme de façon ininterrompue l'avenir en passé.

Cette trajectoire rétrospective crée un seuil de conversion obligatoire, c'est le présent. Dans cet ordre d'idées, le philologue belge Marc Wilmet considère qu'il faut distinguer trois types de présent :

- Le présent des physiciens. Atomique, en déplacement perpétuel, insaisissable;
- Le présent des psychologues comme état « de conscience » (chez Bergson) ou temps « privé » (chez Russel);
- Le présent des linguistes comme rapport de concomitance institué entre acte de langage (renonciation) et un événement (l'énoncé) grâce à divers « mots temporels » (Wilmet, 1988 : 8).

Parmi les moyens linguistiques permettant d'exprimer le temps, Marc Wilmet opère une distinction entre plusieurs catégories lexicales :

- des substantifs, tels que le présent, le passé, l'avenir, mais aussi des noms abstraits renvoyant à des caractéristiques temporelles comme durée, répétition, reprise, etc. ;
- des adjectifs, par exemple actuel, futur, contemporain, bref, rare, fréquent, auxquels s'ajoutent certains adjectifs à valeur spatio-temporelle tels que éloigné, lointain, etc. ;
- des adverbes, comme maintenant, hier, demain, alors, la veille, le lendemain, longtemps, souvent, toujours, ainsi que les indications temporelles précises : août 1938, l'année 1940, etc. ;
- des conjonctions et locutions conjonctives, incluant quand, après que, avant que, à mesure que, aussi longtemps que, qui organisent l'articulation temporelle des événements dans l'énoncé.

Les mots qui expriment mieux le temps sont les verbes et les adverbes.

Envisagé comme partie intégrante de la culture, la dimension de la temporalité se révèle bien plus complexe que le temps physique, universel et objectif, mesurable, uniforme et irréversible. Au-delà du temps conventionnel, généralement admis, chaque culture possède ses propres flux temporels qui configurent subtilement l'ensemble des actions, des comportements, des créations et des valeurs qui la définissent. Cette perspective s'appuie sur plusieurs approches théoriques majeures – celles de Lucian Blaga, Edward T. Hall, Mircea Eliade, Joseph Nuttin - qui mettent en évidence la pluralité des représentations du temps et leur ancrage dans l'inconscient collectif d'un peuple.

Dans sa Trilogie de la culture (2011), Lucian Blaga introduit le concept d'horizon temporel pour désigner la manière dont chaque culture perçoit et organise le flux du temps. Le philosophe distingue deux plans :

- un horizon temporel conscient, qui englobe le temps physique et psychologique, commun à toute l'humanité ;
- un horizon temporel inconscient, propre à chaque communauté, marqué par des dispositions affectives et axiologiques particulières (Blaga, 2011 : 72).

Cet horizon inconscient fait partie intégrante de la matrice stylistique d'une culture, c'est-à-dire du système de catégories profondes qui orientent la pensée, la création et la perception du monde.

Ainsi, le temps n'est pas neutre : il est modelé par les archétypes culturels et reflète la sensibilité d'un peuple à la vie, à la mort, au progrès ou au destin.

Blaga illustre aussi cette diversité à travers trois métaphores culturelles du temps :

- le temps-cascade, orienté vers le passé, symbole de déclin et de nostalgie ;
- le temps-fleuve, centré sur le présent, fluide et continu ;
- le temps-fontaine, ascendant, lié à l'idée d'élévation et d'espérance (Blaga, 2011 : 73 - 74).

Ces trois modèles constituent des schémas culturels de temporalité, révélant la manière dont une civilisation valorise ou dévalorise les trois dimensions du temps. Certaines cultures méditerranéennes ou romantiques, par exemple, idéalisent le passé et méprisent le futur, tandis que d'autres, d'inspiration messianique, conçoivent le temps comme un mouvement ascendant vers le perfectionnement.

L'anthropologue américain Edward T. Hall affirme que « le temps est culture » (1989 : 11), insistant sur le fait qu'il est impossible de le séparer des systèmes symboliques et comportementaux propres à chaque société. Il propose une typologie à trois niveaux :

- la culture consciente, explicite et verbalisée ;
- la culture privée, partagée mais implicite ;
- la culture primaire, inconsciente, qui forme la « grammaire cachée » des comportements et des valeurs (Ibidem, 6).

Le temps s'y inscrit comme un principe d'organisation de la vie sociale, une structure cognitive et comportementale que chaque culture développe inconsciemment. Dans ce sens, Hall distingue deux grands types de structuration temporelle :

- le temps monochronique, propre aux cultures occidentales (États-Unis, Europe du Nord), qui est linéaire, séquentiel et orienté vers la tâche ;
- le temps polychronique, typique des cultures méditerranéennes, arabes ou latino-américaines, souple, relationnel et simultané (Hall, 1989 : 230).

Dans les sociétés monochroniques, le temps est vécu comme une ressource mesurable (Ibidem, 53), qu'il faut gérer, économiser ou perdre (gagner du temps, perdre son temps). Dans les sociétés polychroniques, au contraire, il est perçu comme un espace vécu, traversé par la subjectivité et les relations humaines (avoir du temps pour quelqu'un, laisser le temps au temps). Hall associe ces deux logiques à des dominantes psychologiques : la première, rationnelle et analytique, relève de l'hémisphère gauche du cerveau ; la seconde, imaginative et affective, de l'hémisphère droit (Ibidem, 52-53). Ces observations soulignent combien la temporalité, loin d'être un simple cadre physique, est un système symbolique enraciné dans la cognition et les valeurs culturelles.

Toutefois, ces deux modèles ne se manifestent jamais à l'état pur : chaque culture se situe à un point différent du spectre temporel, selon la prédominance d'une ou de l'autre logique. Hall souligne ainsi la coexistence de multiples flux temporels dans la structure d'une même société, qu'il représente sous la forme d'un mandala du temps, un schéma symbolique où se croisent neuf formes temporelles (Ibidem, 53).

Ce mandala de la temporalité comprend quatre couples principaux :

- temps physique / temps métaphysique**,
- temps sacré / temps profane**,
- temps biologique / temps personnel**,
- temps synchrone / microtemps **;
- au centre se situe le métatemporel, qui regroupe les représentations, théories et métaphores du temps (Hall, 1989 : 27).

Cette conception rejoint celle de Mircea Eliade, pour qui le temps sacré est circulaire et réversible, associé aux rites et aux mythes, tandis que le temps profane est linéaire, historique et irréversible. La coexistence de ces deux régimes temporels au sein d'une même culture explique la dualité des représentations idiomatiques : certaines expriment la fuite irrévocable du temps (le temps s'enfuit), d'autres la réversibilité ou la suspension du vécu (hors du temps, le temps s'arrête) (Dincă, 2018 : 59).

La convergence des théories de Blaga, Hall et Eliade met en lumière le caractère pluriel et symbolique du temps, conçu comme un réseau de flux où se croisent les dimensions physique, psychologique, sociale et spirituelle. Chaque culture développe sa propre poétique de la temporalité, perceptible dans les métaphores linguistiques, les proverbes et les expressions idiomatiques, qui condensent les valeurs collectives d'une communauté et traduisent sa manière d'habiter le monde.

Dans cette optique, la langue apparaît comme le reflet vivant de la mémoire et de la sensibilité d'un peuple. Le temps y est exprimé non seulement à travers la grammaire (les temps verbaux), mais aussi par un ensemble d'unités idiomatiques riches en images et en connotations culturelles. La phraséologie française et roumaine conserve un vaste trésor expressif qui reflète la manière dont les communautés perçoivent la fuite du temps, la durée, l'éphémère ou l'éternel. Ces expressions, souvent d'origine populaire, ont pénétré le langage littéraire et sont devenues de véritables repères de la mentalité collective. Issues de registres variés — populaires, poétiques ou savants —, elles circulent aussi bien dans la langue quotidienne que dans la littérature, selon les sources d'inspiration qui les ont fait naître. Les expressions idiomatiques désignant le temps trouvent leurs origines dans la vie sociale, la religion, les valeurs morales et spirituelles, la mythologie ou, tout simplement, dans l'expérience quotidienne.

Examinons quelques expressions idiomatiques qui illustrent la manière dont la culture et la mentalité collective se reflètent dans la phraséologie temporelle.

- Quand les poules auront des dents - expression attestée à la fin du XVIII[e] siècle, elle désigne une situation impossible, un événement qui ne se produira jamais. En 1884 circulait également la variante humoristique quand les poules urineront. Elle équivaut à l'adverbe jamais et correspond à d'autres expressions synonymes : la semaine des quatre jeudis, remettre aux calendes grecques, à la Saint-Glinglin.

Des équivalents culturels existent dans d'autres langues : les Anglais disent when pigs fly (« quand les cochons voleront »), les Espagnols cuando las ranas críen pelo (« quand les grenouilles auront des poils ») et les Allemands wenn Fische fliegen lernen (« quand les poissons apprendront à voler »).

En roumain, on trouve de nombreuses variantes populaires: la Paștele cailor, la Sfântu-Așteaptă, când o face plopul pere și răchita micșunele, când se va împrieteni șoarecele cu pisica, când mi-oi vedea ceafa, când va secera scumpia, când va înflori bostanul, când lupii cu mieii vor paște împreună, când mi-oi vedea ceafa, când or înflori căpșunile iarna, când s-o lipi cerul de pământ etc.

- Remettre aux calendes grecques* - dans le calendrier romain, les calendes désignaient le premier jour du mois, date à laquelle on réglait les dettes. Comme les Grecs ne connaissaient pas cette division, « remettre aux calendes grecques » signifie reporter quelque chose à une date qui n'existe pas — autrement dit, ne jamais l'accomplir.
- À Pâques ou à la Trinité* - cette expression trouve son origine dans la chanson satirique Malbrough s'en va-t-en guerre, composée au XVII[e] siècle pour ridiculiser le duc de Marlborough. Le refrain affirme qu'il reviendra « à Pâques ou à la Trinité », c'est-à-dire jamais. Elle exprime ainsi une attente vaine ou un événement indéterminé.
- À la Saint-Glinglin* - Apparue à la fin du XIX[e] siècle, cette tournure désigne une date fictive, synonyme de jamais. Son origine probable réside dans une déformation de l'ancien mot seing («signe, signal »), associée à des jeux de mots sur les sons de cloches. Autrefois, les paysans réglaient leurs dettes à certaines fêtes religieuses (par exemple à la Saint-Michel), mais « à la Saint-Glinglin » désignait un moment inexistant — le jour où ils ne paieraient jamais.
- Ce n'est plus le temps où Berthe filait / du temps que la reine Berthe* filait - dans les campagnes françaises, on disait autrefois : « Cela s'est passé du temps où la reine Berthe filait. » L'expression, qui signifie « il y a très longtemps », trouve son origine dans les légendes entourant Berthe aux grands pieds, épouse du roi Pépin le Bref. Considérée comme un modèle de bonté et de piété, la reine était représentée filant inlassablement la laine pour vêtir les pauvres. L'image de Berthe avec son fuseau est devenue le symbole de l'industrie féminine et d'un temps ancien, presque légendaire. L'expression évoque donc un passé révolu, lointain, équivalent à autrefois ou il y a fort longtemps.

Les expressions phraséologiques liées au temps fonctionnent comme de véritables archives de l'expérience collective. Elles reflètent divers aspects de la vie et de la culture :

- La vie agraire et les rythmes de la nature : când se crapă de ziuă – au chant du coq ;
- Les croyances populaires et religieuses : la Paștele cailor – à la Saint-Glinglin ;
- L'humour et l'ironie populaire : când o face broasca păr – quand les poules auront des dents;
- La tradition épique et le conte : de când tata moșu – du temps que la reine Berthe filait.

Sur le plan sémantique, les expressions idiomatiques du temps peuvent être regroupées en plusieurs catégories, exprimant :

- La durée : cât e ziulica de mare – toute la sainte journée ;
- Le moment précis : în crucea nopții – à minuit ;
- L'époque lointaine ou mythique : de când cu Moș Adam – au temps où les bêtes parlaient ;
- La rapidité : cât ai bate din palme – en moins de rien ;
- L'ajournement indéfini : la sfântul așteaptă – à la Saint-Glinglin.

Ces catégories montrent que le temps idiomatique n'est jamais neutre : il est chargé de valeurs affectives, culturelles et stylistiques, révélant la manière dont chaque peuple ressent, imagine et désigne le passage du temps.

La traduction des expressions phraséologiques désignant le temps, du français vers le roumain (ou inversement), exige l'emploi de procédés variés, utilisés avec discernement. Une traduction littérale ou un calque forcé risquent de réduire l'expressivité ou de provoquer des confusions dans la langue d'arrivée, en raison :

- des différences culturelles, liées à des réalités ethnographiques spécifiques (par ex. : la vremea lui Papură Vodă – sans équivalent direct en français) ;
- de la polysémie et de la richesse imagée, lorsque les métaphores ne peuvent être rendues littéralement sans perte de sens ;
- de la stabilité structurelle des expressions figées, qui perdent leur signification si leur composition lexicale est altérée.

Les linguistes bulgares Vlahov et Florin (1986) distinguent deux modalités principales de traduction des phraséologismes :

- par un équivalent idiomatique dans la langue cible ;
- par un procédé non phraséologique, lorsque l'équivalent direct n'existe pas.

Le choix de la méthode dépend du statut de l'expression dans les deux systèmes phraséologiques et doit tenir compte de l'image métaphorique, de la structure lexico-syntaxique et des particularités stylistiques. À ce propos, le linguiste Soloviov (1968) souligne que toute expression figée repose sur une image, et que le rôle du traducteur consiste à préserver cette image afin d'en maintenir la valeur artistique et les connotations culturelles.

L'analyse traductologique des expressions idiomatiques temporelles met en évidence une série de procédés spécifiques de transfert, destinés à préserver leurs valeurs sémantiques et culturelles.

1. Équivalence totale – lorsque l'expression possède une identité formelle et sémantique dans les deux langues.

Exemples : din clipă în clipă – d'un instant à l'autre ; din toate timpurile – de tout temps ; de azi pe mâine – du jour au lendemain ; în plină iarnă – au cœur de l'hiver ; în spiritul vremii – dans l'esprit du temps.

2. Équivalence partielle – les expressions sont proches par le sens, mais différentes par la forme ou la nuance.

Exemples : cât e ziulica de mare – toute la sainte journée ; în zorii zilei – à la pointe du jour ; pe nepusă masă – au dépourvu / sans crier gare.

3. Équivalence contextuelle – l'expression est adaptée selon la situation et le registre.

Par exemple, *în zori de zi (*Ion Creangă) a été traduit tantôt par au chant du coq, tantôt par à l'aube, selon le contexte narratif.

4. Équivalence stylistique – emploi d'une expression possédant la même valeur expressive, même si sa structure diffère.

Ex. : la Sfântul Așteaptă – à la Saint-Glinglin ; cât ai bate din palme – en deux coups de cuiller à pot.

L'équivalent stylistique doit préserver les significations dénotatives et connotatives, en évitant toute discordance sémantique, stylistique ou métaphorique. Les éléments de l'expression doivent présenter une structure comparable et respecter les indices lexico-grammaticaux, et autant que possible, être dépourvus de coloris national trop marqué, afin d'assurer le transfert correct de l'image.

5. Équivalence sémantique – recherche d'un correspondant fonctionnel, même si l'image métaphorique diffère.

Exemples : la Paștele cailor / la anul când o-nflori bostanul → quand les poules auront des dents; până atunci o să curgă multă apă pe Nistru → ce n'est pas demain la veille.

6. L'analogie est un procédé fréquent et efficace, utilisé :

a) lorsque les composants des deux expressions ont des significations similaires malgré des formes différentes (Ex. : într-un ceas rău – sous une mauvaise étoile) ;

b) lorsque les éléments diffèrent, mais que le sens global coïncide, ce qui produit une transformation analogique.

Exemples :

Roumain : la Sfântu-Așteaptă, la Paștele cailor, când o face broasca păr, când o face plopul pere…
Français : quand les poules auront des dents, à la Saint-Glinglin, à Pâques ou à la Trinité, aux calendes grecques.

L'analogie est plus souvent utilisée que l'équivalence sémantique, car elle offre des solutions idiomatiques, proches de l'usage naturel de la langue cible.

7. Le calque – reproduction fidèle de la structure de l'expression, mais au risque d'en affaiblir l'expressivité.

Ex. : a se culca odată cu găinile → se coucher avec les poules.

Le calque est un procédé courant, utilisé non seulement par les traducteurs mais aussi par les locuteurs bilingues (Coltun, 2000 : 187).

Ex. : « Baba, care se culcase odată cu găinile... » → « La vieille qui s'était couchée avec les poules... » (La Belle-mère aux trois brus, p. 281).

Le calque peut parfois produire un effet comique ; toutefois, lorsqu'il est exécuté avec habileté, son caractère artificiel devient imperceptible.

Ex. : « ...cum ai prinde dumneata un pui de găină din pătul, încă de când făcea plopșorul pere și răchita micșunele... » →

« ...comme vous prenez un poussin sorti de l'œuf, du temps où le peuplier faisait des poires et l'osier des violettes. » (Moș Ion Roată et Cuza Vodă, I. Creangă, p. 219).

Ainsi, l'analyse menée montre que le temps, loin d'être une simple catégorie objective et mesurable, constitue une construction culturelle et symbolique profondément enracinée dans les visions du monde propres à chaque communauté linguistique. Les perspectives philosophiques – de Platon, Aristote, Augustin, Pascal, Kant ou Bergson –, tout comme les approches anthropologiques et culturelles de Blaga, Hall et Eliade, convergent vers l'idée que la temporalité est multiple : elle relève simultanément du vécu, du pensable et du dicible.

Les expressions idiomatiques françaises et roumaines apparaissent ainsi comme des condensés de mémoire collective, où se cristallisent des représentations de la durée, de la succession, de l'attente ou de l'irréversibilité. Leur analyse met en évidence une véritable poétique culturelle du temps, façonnée par les imaginaires populaires, les rites, la tradition religieuse, la sensibilité esthétique et l'expérience quotidienne.

Sur le plan traductologique, l'étude confirme que la reproduction de ces unités nécessite une médiation interculturelle attentive. Le sens littéral ne suffit pas : il convient de préserver l'image fondatrice, la valeur expressive et les connotations culturelles qui sous-tendent chaque expression. Les procédés d'équivalence, d'analogie ou, lorsque cela s'avère nécessaire, de calque maîtrisé, permettent de restituer au mieux ces représentations temporelles sans en trahir la portée symbolique.

De ce fait, la phraséologie du temps se révèle être un espace pertinent d'observation des rapports complexes entre langue, culture et pensée. Située au carrefour de la linguistique, de la philosophie et de l'anthropologie, elle permet de comprendre comment les communautés humaines organisent leur perception du réel, expriment la fugacité de l'expérience vécue et attribuent un sens à la dynamique temporelle qui façonne leur existence individuelle et collective.

COMMUNICATION AND MEMORY – A CLOSE LINK

Dana Carmen Zechia
Lecturer, PhD, "Mircea cel Bătrân" Naval Academy, Constanţa

Abstract: Communication is important in the language classroom and not only. What is the link between communication and memory and how do they relate. This article discusses some ideas on this issue and at the same time tries to go deeper and find some explanations levels of memory, behavior and communication.

Language is a mystery and it rides on a deeper, broader one called 'memory'. Communication and memory are deeply intertwined; while memory is required for language comprehension and speech production, communication is a tool to aid memory. Techniques like clear, simple language, patience, and open-ended questions improve communication for those with memory loss, while communication itself—like speaking aloud—can help encode memories into long-term storage.

Keywords*: communication; memory; language techniques; comprehension; speech production*

Some issues appear over and over again when we think of communication. What does it mean to communicate and how does the depth of communication influence language use outside the experimental laboratory?

With language we build great bridges, we express our deep feelings and our spiritual aspirations and start our most subtle linguistic theories. Language is the most special treasure of the human race. It is a mystery linking one person to another one over space and time. When we learn a second language, we move from one mystery to another. To teach a second language is to watch and guide that movement.

But language, mystery as it is, rides on a deeper, broader mystery called "memory". In this human life at least, the self that speaks and reads and responds to language, is made of memories. Remembering is more than bringing back to mind some kind of replica of what we saw or heard in the past. We attribute to memory whatever changes in behavior seem to show a correlation with something in the past events.

What is 'remembered' consists of events and parts of events or more precisely, it consists of information from events and parts of events. In this sense, evidence for 'learning' comes from observation of changes in behavior, and 'learning' itself consists of changing what has been 'remembered', in modifications of the bases for action that are provided by memory.

Even if a student may repeat over and over the forms of the language, in doing so he or she may not be using the language. Language use requires communication and communication means the resolution of uncertainties. A person who says, 'I believe they come at 6 o'clock' in response to the question 'What time do you think they come?' is communicating – resolving the questioner's uncertainty – unless the two of them take part in a language course reading a dialogue containing these lines. We can say that there is communication and 'communication'.

This idea is useful as it forces us to notice what we are and are not doing while teaching and as it suggests ways in which we can improve. There are certain values this view of communication and language use has. We can see one rather limited way of interpreting this view that is seriously inadequate, and that may therefore blind us to a central fact about memory and about learning in general. This interpretation assumes that information – that which is 'communicated' – consists of facts, including fictional pseudo facts.

According to this view, a student who is reciting a memorized dialog in class does not convey information, and hence one is not communicating in real language. In restricting attention to the 'fact-fict' band of information, this view represents an unfortunately narrow band of cognitivism, which would allow us to assume a dichotomy between body and mind, or between intellect and emotion. Full communication conveys tone and attitude, readiness and loyalty.

Mental activity on the part of the subject, whether intentional or unintentional, has a powerful effect on memory. Most of the mental activity in those studies was primarily 'fact-fict'. The missing dimension is the 'depth'. But what does 'depth' mean? Many years I thought that, because we ordinarily perceive language through acoustic and muscular media, language learning was therefore primarily an acoustic and muscular process.

If we speak about the contents of memory, most people will probably think first of sensory information. In the people's view there are exactly five 'senses': visual, auditory, olfactory, gustatory, and kinesthetic – in plain English, sight, hearing, smell, taste, and feel. This is indeed an oversimplification. One of those additional kinds of memory content is information about what is loosely called "emotion". Writers have sometimes provided lists of semantic features – features that are either present or absent for any given word – with that idea that definitions consist of combinations of those features. They suggest that the way word meanings relate to one another in the mind relies heavily on an undefined 'residuum of meaning'. They, further report that adults who have partially lost the power of speech are more likely to retain affective features than they are to retain meaningful and grammatical features.

In the classroom language, it may be useful to think of our students' goals', 'basic drives', 'purposes', 'needs', and 'motivations' in terms of two categories: academic motivations and life motivations.

Language teachers generally place high value on the 'communicative' use of language. True communication involves active interchange with someone, and has elements of drama, hope and challenge in it. There are a set of three characteristic academic motivations: to get the right answer, to keep the teacher happy, and to enhance one's standing in the class. Unfortunately, most students seem to have only a limited supply of these academic motivations.

Life motivations, on the other hand, are virtually inexhaustible. A very good question would be how to identify our students' particular combinations of existing 'life motivations', and how to harness those motivations for the work at hand.

There are also other needs, such as for getting up and moving around, or for satisfying curiosity, or for having fun, or for experiencing colors, sounds or textures. We know well that the natural perception of the student involves pleasure and appreciation of beauty. In order to remain involved with a picture, the student's interactions with the details must therefore involve such acts as appreciation and interesting details in the course subject.

Some purposes have to do with conveying mostly cognitive information: requesting an object or an action, commenting on an object or an action, answering or acknowledging. These sorts of categories sometimes appear in second language acquisition.

A very special kind of stored information has to do with language. Language is a means for both intake and output of information. It is the channel through which we receive much of the other information that we remember, but it is also one conspicuous vehicle through which the effects of that information are expressed and measured. Anyone who has learned a first language has already picked up a great deal of knowledge about language in general.

As we learn any language, we hold onto pieces of various sizes. Some are single words: come, round, ever. Others are meaningful parts of words: kindness has two parts; beneath is probably an indivisible unit for many speakers, while for others it consists of two parts: be as is before, and behind, and neath as in nether .Still other units of linguistic information – and these should not be overlooked – are the countless total utterances that have been met in connection with total contexts: He is my uncle. It's on Oak Street, etc. these longer stored pieces of language are sometimes called "routines." A final type of information has to do with what we call 'time'. Within this category are remoteness (How long ago did I experience this?), duration (How long did it last?), and frequency (How often have I met this feature or combination of features?). By combining answers to these questions, we are able to answer two more questions that are essential to learning. The first is 'Did these two (or more) features occur at the same time?' Answers to this question are essential to what is called 'episodic memory'. The second question is 'How consistently do these two (or more) features occur together?' This information is especially important for non-deliberate learning.

The items in memory differ in size and complexity: a face consists of complexion, features, and so forth; a sentence contains words, and words are represented by sounds or by some form of written character. From a very early age, children show a surprising ability to divide sentences, words, and syllables into successively smaller parts. In general, we can think of events that get recorded in memory at a microlevel, such as individual list items, or at a macrolevel, such as the entire instructional and experimental episode.

In the early years as language teacher drills were assigned too central a role and too large a share of the students' time, in our attempts to produce language mastery. We could think of a series of usual classroom activities that lie at successively 'deeper' levels: retelling a story; improvising variations in a memorized dialogue; writing an autobiographical statement based on a model. These allow varying amounts of fact-fict communication.

This meaning for 'depth' is then not entirely unlike the use of the same word in the phrase 'depth psychology'. It also suggests a more adequate interpretation of the often-repeated statement that 'foreign language students should 'use the language for communication'. If 'communication' means 'making a difference', then a single speech act may communicate on a number of different levels at once. Or the same utterance that on its 'fact-fict' surface is totally non communicative may carry important meanings on a deeper level. The fact that both speaker and hearers may be unaware of these meanings does not alter the truth of this statement.

One way of unmistakable communication takes place when the speaker gets hearers to commit the long muscles of their arms and legs in the way the speaker intended. The commitment guarantees a certain minimum depth of processing, which probably accounts for its powerful effects on memory. So, it has been demonstrated that stimuli carrying high priority or a strong emotional charge can disrupt memory for stimuli that are presented immediately before or after them. These are relatively mechanical effects, in which the stronger stimuli somehow prevent their neighbors from getting their proportionate share of time on the working issue. The arousal phenomena discussed above operate in a different and more general way to facilitate or to interfere with retention.

Communication also deals with the ability to convey information to another effectively and efficiently. Business managers with good verbal, non-verbal and written communication skills help facilitate the sharing of information between people within a company for its commercial benefit.
Being a good listener is one of the best ways to be a good communicator. Take the time to practice active listening. Active listening involves paying close attention to what the other person is saying, asking clarifying questions, and rephrasing what the person says to ensure understanding. Your body language, eye contact, hand gestures, and tone all color the message you are trying to convey. A relaxed, open stance, and a friendly tone will make you appear approachable, and will encourage others to speak openly with you.

It is important to be confident in your interactions with others. Confidence shows your coworkers that you believe in what you're saying and will follow through. Exuding confidence can be as simple as making eye contact or using a firm but friendly tone. A good communicator should enter any conversation with a flexible, open mind.

The ant suggestive barriers, then, are to be circumvented and not destroyed. When this has been reached, the learner reaches a state of acting infantile. In this state, the learner retains all previously acquired knowledge, but becomes more open, plastic, spontaneous, and creative.

Within the language teaching profession in recent years, there has been said and written much about the desirability of "communication" in the classroom. This emphasis may be evaluated in terms of 'depth'. It is easy enough to devise some kind of communication scale whereon the rote repetition of meaningless material is at the zero point; the giving of meaningful but prescribed responses to stimuli from teacher, tape, or notebook is slightly more 'communicative'; the selection of a situationally appropriate response from among a set of previously practiced responses is still more 'communicative'; and converting freely about matters of real and urgent interest is most 'communicative' of all. This is reminiscent of the fact-fict dimension discussed above.

Such a scale would, however, coincide only partially with the dimension of "depth". Much of the difference between the two would be found in the degree of attention given to the same nonconcious and/or nonrational needs that have been explored. These needs (for teachers as well as for students) may be subtle and submerged, but they are, for all that, no less potent.

As we understand the term 'to communicate' is to make a difference in some other person, whether in that person's immediate actions or in his or her long-term memory, or in both. Communication takes place at various degrees of depth, which is to say that the comprehension or production of language 'makes differences on many levels. These levels are reflected in memory performance.

On the highest level, language teachers may choose to make one or another set of assumptions about language, and about their students as learners. These assumptions are likely to be reflected not only in the details of classroom procedures, but also in the conclusions that the learners draw about language and about themselves.

A related high-level choice is between commitment to familiar procedures and power relationships, and the willingness to explore the untried, that is, between tradition and diversity. In our field, tradition and diversity are in constant tension with each other. If this tension is to lead to creativity rather than only to conflict, we need to make this choice with our eyes wide open. To the extent that such choices are based on observation and reasoning, they lead to predictions and to valuable discussions. But to the event that they are based on unrecognized intuitions whose origins lie in the half-forgotten past life and learning experiences of the person making them, they may give rise not to illuminating debate, but to heated controversy.

DISCIPLINE, DISCOURSE, AND DEVELOPMENT: RETHINKING ENGLISH INSTRUCTION FOR MILITARY CADETS

Alina Elena Oneț
Lecturer, PhD, "Nicolae Bălcescu", Land Forces Academy Sibiu

Abstract: English language instruction in military academies takes up a complex pedagogical space defined by intersecting aspects: the institutional need for discipline, the linguistic necessity of communicative flexibility, and the developmental trajectory of cadets as future officers. While contemporary approaches to English language teaching are based on autonomy, interaction, and learner agency, military education is rooted in hierarchical structures, rigid routines, and codified forms of communication. These differences give rise to a pedagogical paradox. The present paper proposes a comprehensive theoretical framework, the Discipline-Discourse-Development model, to describe how military culture shapes the conditions under which English learning happens and how these limitations can be reimagined as pedagogical resources rather than obstacles. Based on scholarship from applied linguistics, sociocultural theory, discourse analysis, military pedagogy, and psychology, the model showcases how disciplined environments create communicative possibilities and identity formation, ultimately influencing language acquisition.

Keywords: military English instruction; discourse; language pedagogy; discipline; communicative competence

1. Introduction

Military academies represent some of the most complex educational settings in the world. Their mission extends far beyond sharing disciplinary knowledge: they socialize cadets into a professional ethos, cultivate leadership qualities, and create modes of thinking aligned with military values. These goals intersect directly with language learning, especially English, which functions as the communicative backbone of multinational cooperation, NATO operations, military diplomacy, technological coordination, as well as peacekeeping missions.

English proficiency in military settings is more than an academic requirement; it constitutes a form of symbolic capital, shaping cadets' professional lives and enabling integration into international coalitions. According to Norton (2013, p. 17), language is not just a communicative tool but a means through which social identity is constructed and negotiated. Cadets thus encounter English as a professional necessity, a marker of competence, and a means of leadership development.

Nevertheless, teaching English in military contexts is not just a matter of applying mainstream pedagogical models to a uniformed environment. The classroom is part of a broader institutional culture characterized by hierarchy, ritual, discipline, and carefully regulated interactional norms. Foucault (1977, p. 138) argues that disciplinary institutions produce "meticulous rituals of power that produce obedient bodies," a description that perfectly depicts the military context. Cadets' language learning happens in a space where clarity, brevity, and precision are highly important, and where deviation from established norms may mean social or professional penalties.

On the other hand, Communicative Language Teaching (CLT) and post-communicative frameworks are based on learner autonomy, negotiation of meaning, risk-taking, and linguistic experimentation (Canale & Swain, 1980, p. 9; Lantolf and Thorne, 2006, p. 45). This creates a fundamental tension: cadets must master English while simultaneously adhering to institutional norms that may constrain exploratory use of language. Gee (2014, p. 7) emphasizes that participation in "Discourse communities" is crucial to language acquisition, as identity and communicative practice mutually construct each other. In military academies, these tightly bounded discourse communities define permissible forms of expression, shaping not only linguistic output but also the cadet's sense of self within professional and academic spheres.

The pedagogical paradox arises because discipline both facilitates and constrains learning. Structured routines, performance evaluations, and hierarchical clarity can provide scaffolding that supports focused practice and repetition. At the same time, fear of error, hierarchical inhibition, and limited peer interaction may reduce opportunities for creative engagement and communicative experimentation (Matthews, 2018, p. 61-68). Thus, the cadet navigates a dual identity: the disciplined, authoritative officer-in-training, and the exploratory, often vulnerable, language learner.

This paper addresses the paradox by proposing the Discipline-Discourse-Development model, a conceptual model that integrates military culture, linguistic practice, and identity development. By synthesizing insights from applied linguistics, discourse studies, and military pedagogy, this framework articulates how disciplinary structures can be harnessed to support language learning without compromising institutional norms. Given limited empirical access to military classrooms and cadets, the study employs a theoretical approach, consolidating scholarship to provide explanatory scaffolding for future research (Snyder, 2019, p. 335).

2. Methodology

The present study employs a conceptual methodology, which is appropriate in contexts where empirical research is constrained by access, security, or institutional limitations. Conceptual research provides a mechanism to synthesize diverse theoretical perspectives, generate explanatory frameworks, and propose relationships that may later be tested empirically (Horn, 2019, p. 460).

The methodology involved three iterative stages: 1. Thematic clustering: Key concepts surrounding discipline, discourse, and learner development were identified across multiple disciplines, including applied linguistics, sociocultural theory, and military pedagogy. The aim was to organize ideas into clusters reflecting their conceptual relationships and functional relevance; 2. Cross-disciplinary synthesis: Insights from different bodies of knowledge were compared, contrasted, and integrated. For example, Foucault's (1977) theories on institutional discipline were examined alongside Gee's (2014) discourse analysis frameworks and Norton's (2013) identity theories. Tensions between hierarchical control and communicative autonomy were highlighted; 3.Model construction: The final stage formalized these conceptual insights into the Discipline-Discourse-Development model, articulating how discipline shapes discourse, how discourse mediates development, and how development feeds back into disciplined engagement with language learning (Horn, 2019, p. 462-468).

Selection criteria for literature included: peer-reviewed journal articles, seminal books, and scholarship addressing military culture, educational theory, identity formation, and second language acquisition. Priority was given to sources providing robust theoretical insights applicable to hierarchical, regimented learning environments (Snyder, 2019, p. 338).

Limitations of this approach are inherent: conclusions remain theoretical, and the framework requires validation through empirical studies. However, conceptual research is critical as it enables explanatory scaffolding, allowing practitioners and scholars to design interventions and generate hypotheses even in restrictive contexts (Horn, 2019, p. 460-462).

3. The Discipline-Discourse-Development Model

The Discipline-Discourse-Development model conceptualizes the cyclical relationship between military discipline, communicative discourse, and cadet development. Discipline is not merely behavioral control; it encompasses spatial, temporal, and psychological regulation that shapes cadets' movements, speech, and cognitive patterns (Matthews, 2018, p. 52-56).

Discipline manifests in multiple dimensions:Temporal regulation: strict scheduling of classes, drills, and study periods facilitates spaced repetition and predictable learning opportunities; Spatial regulation: classrooms, barracks, and training grounds are designed to optimize attention, reduce distractions, and reinforce hierarchical awareness; Psychological regulation: performance evaluations, rank incentives, and extrinsic motivation shape cadet engagement and accountability.

These affordances support structured language practice, ensuring cadets regularly encounter English in both controlled and operational contexts (Matthews, 2018, p. 55). However, discipline also creates constraints: fear of making mistakes, restricted peer interaction, and rigid adherence to hierarchy may limit creative engagement with language. Cadets often suppress risk-taking behaviors, which can impede fluency and spontaneous use of English in less structured contexts (Matthews, 2018, p. 60-62). Military discourse is formal, concise, directive, and hierarchically mediated. Language is functional: briefings, reports, and operational commands require clarity, precision, and adherence to protocol. In contrast, ELT discourse encourages extended dialogue, negotiation of meaning, and creative linguistic experimentation (Canale and Swain, 1980, p. 12-18). The dual discourse burden emerges: cadets must learn English while maintaining a professional, militarized tone. This tension is evident when cadets participate in briefings: they must convey complex information accurately while also demonstrating communicative competence in English (Gee, 2014, p. 27-30).

Identity is central to the model. Cadets navigate conflicting roles: disciplined officer-in-training vs exploratory language learner. Hierarchical pressures may inhibit oral participation, while fear of errors may suppress risk-taking (Norton, 2013, p. 16). Positive alignment of identity and language learning occurs when English proficiency is explicitly linked to leadership, professional mobility, and operational readiness. Cadets then perceive language skills as an integral part of their military identity, reinforcing disciplined engagement with learning (Norton, 2013, p. 19).

The model proposed by this paper is cyclical:

- Discipline - Discourse: Institutional norms define acceptable communicative behavior.
- Discourse - Development: Permitted forms of talk shape opportunities for negotiation of meaning, autonomy, and fluency.
- Development - Discipline: Recognition of English proficiency as a professional asset increases disciplined engagement with learning (Lantolf & Thorne, 2006, p. 47).

4. Reconciling Discipline With Communicative Pedagogy

Contrary to conventional assumptions, military discipline does not need to contradict communicative language teaching. Instead, it can be harnessed as a scaffold to structure language learning while respecting operational norms. The key lies in designing pedagogical interventions that align with hierarchical routines, structured interaction, and cadet identity development (Matthews, 2018, p. 103).

One practical strategy involves creating fixed communication rituals, which provide predictable opportunities for speaking while maintaining order. Examples include: Daily briefings in English: Cadets report on exercises or assignments using concise, formal language; Command-response drills: Following structured protocols, cadets practice giving and responding to commands in English; Peer feedback rotations: Structured peer evaluation allows cadets to interact within controlled parameters, fostering collaboration without violating hierarchical norms.

These rituals provide a safe, predictable context for cadets to practice English, reducing anxiety associated with spontaneous communication and reinforcing the cyclical relationship between discipline, discourse, and development (Matthews, 2018, p. 105). To expand communicative flexibility, instructors can employ scenario-based simulations that mirror operational contexts: Tactical simulations: Cadets plan and execute mock operations, communicating in English while adhering to military procedures; Crisis-response role plays: Teams navigate unexpected challenges, requiring negotiation, problem-solving, and adaptive language use; Controlled debates on military ethics or strategy: Structured debates encourage argumentation skills, critical thinking, and expressive use of English; Scenario-based learning bridges academic and operational English, giving cadets authentic purposes for language use while respecting disciplinary boundaries (Horn, 2019, p. 466-468).

Cadets must navigate two roles simultaneously: disciplined officer-in-training and exploratory language learner. Identity-sensitive pedagogy helps balance these roles (Norton, 2013, p. 12). Key strategies include: Normalizing errors as professional growth: Emphasizing that mistakes are learning opportunities reduces fear and promotes experimentation; Linking English proficiency to leadership and operational readiness: Framing language skills as integral to professional identity encourages disciplined engagement; Meta-reflection on linguistic identity: Structured reflection activities allow cadets to examine how their military identity intersects with their language learner identity; These strategies reinforce the model: disciplined routines support discourse practice, which in turn facilitates development and professional identity integration (Matthews, 2018, p. 110-115).

A holistic approach requires alignment between English instruction and military curriculum objectives: Long-term language development pathways: English progression is linked to rank, professional milestones, and international assignments; Instructor training in military-focused ELT: Teachers receive specialized preparation to navigate hierarchical norms while promoting communicative competence; Integration with operational tasks: English is embedded in mission planning, technical briefings, and cross-national collaboration exercises.

By situating English learning within the cadet's professional trajectory, language education becomes a core competency rather than a peripheral academic requirement (Horn, 2019, p. 468).

5. Advantages of the Discipline-Discourse-Development Model

The Discipline-Discourse-Development model offers a theoretical framework for understanding the complex interplay between military culture and English instruction. Military discipline, often viewed as restrictive, can function as enabling structure. By providing predictable routines, clear performance expectations, and hierarchical clarity, it scaffolds English learning in ways that align with cadets' professional realities (Matthews, 2018, p. 118).

Discourse emerges as the mediator between discipline and development. Military communication norms define permissible linguistic behavior, shaping opportunities for negotiation of meaning, expressive practice, and autonomy. Carefully designed tasks, such as scenario-based simulations and structured debates, allow cadets to expand their communicative repertoire without violating hierarchical expectations.

Cadets' linguistic development is inseparable from identity construction. The dual identities of disciplined officer and language learner can generate tension, but they can also be synergistic. When English proficiency is linked to leadership, operational effectiveness, and career mobility, language learning becomes an integral aspect of military identity, increasing motivation and engagement (Norton, 2013, p. 19).

Military psychology emphasizes the role of resilience, motivation, and self-efficacy in performance (Matthews, 2018, p. 123). Structured language tasks, positive feedback, and scenario-based challenges not only improve communicative competence but also reinforce confidence and adaptive thinking. The model aligns with psychological principles by providing disciplined scaffolding, authentic communicative contexts, and identity-affirming experiences.

This paper contributes to both applied linguistics and military pedagogy by: 1. Demonstrating that discipline and communicative pedagogy are not mutually exclusive; 2. Providing a structured model to analyze how hierarchical norms influence language acquisition; 3. Highlighting the importance of identity-sensitive teaching in regimented learning environments.

The framework can inform future empirical studies examining participation patterns, linguistic output, and professional identity formation in military contexts (Snyder, 2019, p. 338).

6. Pedagogical Strategies for Effective English Instruction in Military Contexts

This section focuses on concrete pedagogical strategies and instructional frameworks that operationalize the Discipline-Discourse-Development model. While theoretical models describe how discipline, discourse, and development interact, the challenge remains: how can educators translate these insights into effective classroom and training practices?

Military education relies heavily on daily routines and regimented schedules. Language instructors can leverage this by embedding English learning into these routines: Morning briefings and roll calls in English: Cadets practice concise, formal reporting of tasks or observations, reinforcing both language and procedural fluency; Daily vocabulary rotations: Key operational terms, idioms, and technical language are systematically reviewed, using spaced repetition to enhance long-term retention (Matthews, 2018, p. 107); Scheduled peer teaching sessions: Cadets rotate roles as instructors for short, controlled tasks, reinforcing mastery and peer-to-peer discourse.

These interventions ensure that language practice aligns with the cadets' sense of military discipline, creating continuity between operational expectations and communicative development. Scenario-based learning allows cadets to practice English in authentic, military-like contexts: Tactical mission simulations: Cadets plan, brief, and execute mock operations entirely in English. These exercises mirror real-world NATO missions and peacekeeping scenarios; Crisis response drills: Cadets respond to simulated emergencies, requiring rapid communication, decision-making, and collaboration; Ethical dilemmas and debates: Structured discussions on military ethics, rules of engagement, or leadership challenges provide opportunities for extended discourse and reflective practice (Horn, 2019, p. 467).

This type of learning emphasizes action-oriented communication, helping cadets move beyond formulaic classroom exercises to real communicative competence.

Digital tools can expand opportunities for independent, flexible, and interactive language learning, complementing regimented military structures: Simulation software and virtual training environments: Platforms that replicate military operations allow cadets to practice operational English in immersive scenarios; Language apps for spaced repetition and self-assessment: Mobile applications support vocabulary retention, pronunciation, and listening skills; Online collaborative platforms: Secure digital spaces enable cadets to plan operations, exchange messages, and review reports in English, fostering asynchronous discourse (Lantolf & Thorne, 2006, p. 52).

Technology can extend language learning beyond the classroom, offering cadets controlled yet flexible opportunities to engage with English while respecting hierarchical norms.

Cadets' dual identity, as disciplined soldiers and emerging language learners, requires careful pedagogical consideration. Identity-aware strategies include: Error normalization and constructive feedback: Instructors explicitly frame mistakes as part of professional growth, reducing fear of judgment; Linking language to leadership outcomes: English proficiency is framed as essential for promotion, international collaboration, and operational effectiveness (Norton, 2013, p. 15); Reflective journals and metacognitive exercises: Cadets write or discuss in English about their learning experiences, aligning linguistic practice with self-perception as leaders-in-training.

Such approaches transform English learning from an abstract academic exercise into a tool for identity and career development. For maximal impact, English instruction should be integrated across the military curriculum rather than isolated as a language course: Incorporation into technical subjects: Operations planning, logistics, engineering, and strategy modules include English language components; Cross-disciplinary collaboration: Cadets collaborate on joint exercises with foreign-language units, fostering authentic interaction; Longitudinal language tracking: Cadets' English skills are monitored and progressively built throughout their training, creating continuity and professional relevance (Horn, 2019, p. 469).

Integrated instruction ensures that English is perceived as operationally essential, rather than an ancillary subject, reinforcing motivation and disciplined engagement.

Assessment strategies should reflect both linguistic and professional competencies: Performance-based assessment: Evaluates cadets' ability to use English in simulated operational contexts; Portfolio assessment: Cadets maintain a record of briefings, reports, and reflections, providing a longitudinal view of progress; Peer and instructor feedback loops: Structured feedback focuses on accuracy, clarity, and adherence to military discourse norms while encouraging risk-taking in expression (Matthews, 2018, p. 125).

Assessment becomes a tool for development, reinforcing discipline, refining discourse, and validating identity integration. Despite its promise, the implementation of these strategies presents challenges: Balancing operational constraints with pedagogical freedom: Cadets' tight schedules may limit instructional flexibility; Instructor expertise: Teachers must navigate military hierarchies while fostering communicative competence; Cultural differences: International collaborations require sensitivity to diverse communication norms. Acknowledging these challenges ensures realistic expectations and supports sustainable implementation of the model framework.

7. Institutional and Policy Implications for Military English Programs

This section examines how the broader institutional and policy context can support or hinder the implementation of the Discipline-Discourse-Development model. While pedagogical strategies are essential, systemic factors like curriculum design, institutional priorities, and policy frameworks, determine the feasibility, sustainability, and impact of English instruction in military academies.

Military academies operate under highly structured curricula, which often prioritize operational and technical knowledge over language instruction. To ensure that English instruction is effective, curricular integration is key: English modules should be embedded within core subjects, such as strategy, engineering, logistics, and international relations. This fosters authentic, context-driven language use (Horn, 2019, p. 468). Moreover, progressive scaffolding: Language tasks should increase in complexity alongside cadets' operational responsibilities. Early stages focus on basic reporting and command communication, while later stages emphasize briefings, negotiations, and collaborative exercises. Last but not least, cross-disciplinary coordination: English instruction should be coordinated with instructors of other subjects to ensure consistency and relevance. This reinforces cadets' perception of English as operationally essential, not peripheral. By aligning English instruction with institutional objectives, cadets experience a seamless integration of language, discipline, and professional development.

The success of English programs depends heavily on teacher preparedness:

- Military-specific ELT training: Teachers must understand operational norms, hierarchical communication patterns, and cadet psychology to effectively mediate the dual roles of instructor and military facilitator (Matthews, 2018, p. 117).
- Professional development in pedagogy and assessment: Continuous training in scenario-based learning, technology integration, and identity-sensitive teaching enhances instructor efficacy.
- Mentorship and feedback systems: Pairing less experienced instructors with veterans supports the adoption of model-aligned strategies while fostering professional community.

Instructor competence ensures that pedagogical innovation aligns with institutional realities, reinforcing discipline, discourse, and development in tandem.

Institutional policies significantly influence the scope, resources, and sustainability of English programs: Language as a core competency: Policies should recognize English proficiency as an essential officer skill, with direct implications for career advancement and operational deployment; Assessment and promotion frameworks: Incorporating English proficiency into promotion criteria creates motivation and reinforces disciplined engagement (Horn, 2019, p. 470); Resource allocation: Adequate funding for digital tools, simulation software, classroom materials, and instructor training ensures consistent program delivery. Policy support translates pedagogical intentions into practical, long-term outcomes, creating a culture where English learning is institutionally valued.

Military English instruction often intersects with international training standards, especially in NATO and coalition contexts:

- Alignment with NATO STANAG language requirements: Cadets must meet standardized benchmarks for operational communication.
- Cross-national exercises: Collaboration with foreign military units enhances exposure to diverse discourse communities, fostering authentic English use and intercultural competence.
- Benchmarking best practices: Comparing programs across institutions allows for adaptation of effective methodologies while respecting local disciplinary norms.

Such alignment ensures that language instruction is globally relevant, operationally meaningful, and professionally credible.

Institutional commitment requires systematic monitoring and evaluation:

- Performance metrics: Cadets' proficiency is assessed through practical exercises, portfolios, scenario-based tasks, and standardized testing.
- Program evaluation: Administrators periodically review curricula, teaching practices, and outcomes to identify strengths, gaps, and improvement opportunities (Snyder, 2019, p. 337).
- Feedback loops: Cadets and instructors contribute insights into program design, ensuring responsiveness and adaptability.

Continuous evaluation aligns institutional strategy with pedagogical goals, ensuring that English instruction remains dynamic, disciplined, and development-focused. Despite policy and institutional support, challenges persist:

- Operational pressures: Cadets' schedules are tightly packed with training and operational duties, limiting classroom time.
- Instructor shortages: Finding teachers skilled in both ELT and military pedagogy can be difficult.
- Cultural resistance: Hierarchical norms may initially resist flexible or learner-centered approaches.

Nonetheless, these challenges also present opportunities: clear policies, strategic resource allocation, and a culture of institutional commitment can transform potential barriers into structured support for the model's framework.

8. Conclusions

English instruction in military academies must be approached as a systemic, identity-informed endeavor. The Discipline-Discourse-Development model captures the cyclical interactions between:

- Discipline: hierarchical routines, institutional expectations, and structured learning contexts.
- Discourse: permissible forms of communication, operational and academic English use, and identity negotiation.
- Development: linguistic skill acquisition, professional identity integration, and learner motivation.

Rather than treating discipline as an obstacle, it can be leveraged as pedagogical scaffolding, supporting structured practice, scenario-based learning, and identity affirmation. Discourse acts as the mediator, translating institutional norms into opportunities for meaningful language engagement. Development encompasses both linguistic competence and the integration of English into professional identity.

This theoretical foundation encourages military educators to:

- Integrate English learning with operational and leadership objectives.
- Employ scenario-based, structured communicative tasks aligned with hierarchical norms.
- Address cadet dual identity, normalizing errors and promoting reflective practice.

Future research should focus on empirical validation, including longitudinal studies tracking English proficiency, identity development, and professional outcomes. Comparative studies across military institutions could further refine the model and assess cultural variability in language pedagogy.

Ultimately, rethinking English instruction in military academies as discipline-informed, discourse-mediated, and development-centered positions language learning as an essential component of professional military formation, bridging academic, operational, and identity dimensions.

THE LINGUISTIC DIMENSION OF TEMPORAL PERCEPTION: A COGNITIVE AND CULTURAL APPROACH

Lilia Trinca
Lecturer, PhD, "Alecu Russo" State University of Bălți, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: The article examines how language structures temporal perception by integrating cognitive, cultural and semiotic perspectives on time. It argues that temporal experience is not a neutral, universal given, but a conceptual construct emerging from the interaction between embodied experience, social practices and symbolic imaginaries. Drawing on cognitive linguistics (conceptual metaphor theory, image schemas, frame semantics), anthropology of time and the hypothesis of linguistic relativity, the study analyses how different languages project time onto spatial, modal and axiological dimensions (horizontal vs. vertical axes, realis vs. irrealis, sacred vs. profane). Particular attention is paid to spatial metaphors of time (e.g. TIME AS MOTION, TIME AS A JOURNEY, TIME AS A RESOURCE), to linear and cyclical models of temporality, and to cross-cultural variations in temporal orientation (future "in front" vs. "behind", vertical representations of past and future). The contrastive discussion of several linguistic and cultural areas shows that languages provide distinct "geometries" of time which influence the ordering, evaluation and memorisation of events. The article concludes that linguistic time cannot be reduced to objective chronology; rather, it functions as a cultural and social dimension through which communities negotiate identity, memory and horizons of expectation.

Keywords: linguistic time; temporal perception; cognitive metaphor; cultural models; spatialization of time, image schema

Problematica timpului a reprezentat dintotdeauna o provocare pentru reflecția filozofică, antropologică și lingvistică. În ultimele decenii, interesul pentru temporalitate s-a amplificat, odată cu apariția unor paradigme interdisciplinare, care integrează dimensiunile narative, sociale și cognitive ale experienței. În timp ce fizica definește timpul ca o dimensiune uniformă și continuă, științele umaniste consideră timpul un construct socio-cultural și lingvistic, înrădăcinat în experiența subiectivă și socială.

Analiza lingvistică a timpului a demonstrat că acesta nu poate fi redus la o simplă reflectare a realității fizice, ci constituie o categorie gramaticală și discursivă esențială în organizarea experienței. Émile Benveniste subliniază caracterul alocuțional al temporalității, distingând între «timpul istoric» și «timpul discursiv». Timpul discursiv este ancorat în «acum»-ul locutorului, care instituie prezentul enunțării, în timp ce trecutul și viitorul se definesc prin raportare la acest reper (Benveniste 2006: 67–73). Această distincție evidențiază dimensiunea subiectiv-enunțiativă a timpului lingvistic, ireductibilă la succesiunea cronologică obiectivă.

În aceeași ordine de idei, Eugen Coseriu în Introducere în lingvistică merge mai departe, subliniind că timpul gramatical este o construcție a limbii, care nu reflectă în mod direct timpul extralingvistic, ci îl interpretează prin categorii aspectuale, modale și deictice. În viziunea sa, opozițiile verbale (de ex. perfectiv vs. imperfectiv) nu sunt doar descrieri ale realității temporale, ci instrumente prin care comunitățile lingvistice creează modele culturale ale temporalității (Coseriu 1986: 114–117). În așa fel, analiza lingvistică demonstrează că opozițiile temporale într-o limbă nu sunt doar simple marcaje neutre ale timpului, ci configurează experiența subiectivă a vorbitorului, influențând percepția și atitudinea față de acțiuni și evenimente.

Timpul gramatical este, probabil, una dintre cele mai bine studiate probleme din lingvistică, constituind baza sistemului gramatical al limbii. Relevăm în continuare doar câteva exemple elocvente din limba română, care arată cum opozițiile temporale (și aspectuale) exprimă nuanțe subiective și discursive în diferite limbi.

Bunăoară, multe limbi se bazează pe opoziția binară viitor - non-viitor și trecut - non-trecut. În majoritatea limbilor indo-europene, principala opoziție este cea dintre trecut și non-trecut, unde non-trecutul cuprinde prezentul și viitorul. Acest lucru înseamnă că prezentul poate fi folosit pentru a exprima viitorul, de exemplu: rom. Trenul pleacă în două ore. La fel, în limba finlandeză (care nu este indo-europeană) și în limba germană, prezentul poate fi folosit oricând pentru a exprima viitorul, în timp ce în limba engleză această utilizare se aplică doar acțiunilor planificate (Present Continuous, folosit pentru planuri personale sau aranjamente deja stabilite. Cf. I'm meeting my friend tomorrow. (= Am planificat deja să mă întâlnesc cu prietenul meu mâine.).

În descrierea sistemelor verbale din anumite limbi, opoziția formală dintre viitor și non-viitor reflectă preponderent o distincție de tip modal (realis/irrealis), mai degrabă decât una strict temporală. Astfel, în Inuktitut (familia eschimo-aleutină), formele de viitor sunt subsumate domeniului irealului: toate evenimentele încă neîmplinite sunt marcate morfologic prin sufixe de viitor sau de modalitate, în timp ce formele nemarcate codifică valorile de non-viitor (prezent și trecut), ceea ce indică o organizare a sistemului verbal în funcție de statutul realizat vs. potențial al situațiilor descrise. În mod similar, pentru Dyirbal (familia Pama-Nyungan), Dixon arată că opoziția de timp surprinde, de fapt, contrastul dintre enunțuri realizate și nerealizate, marcarea viitorului fiind strâns corelată cu statutul ne irrealis realis al evenimentului, nu doar cu localizarea sa pe axa cronologică (a se vedea Dixon).

În acest context, aducem în discuție și categoria aspectului, care nu este prezentă în toate limbile, fapt ce generează adesea confuzii între specialiști cu privire la existența acestei categorii într-o limbă sau alta:

* perfectivul (совершенный вид) – exprimă acțiunea privită ca încheiată, finalizată;

* imperfectivul (несовершенный вид) – exprimă acțiunea în desfășurare, repetată sau obișnuită, fără a sublinia finalitatea. În limba rusă, de pildă, majoritatea verbelor se caracterizează prin opoziția aspectuală, manifestată prin două forme opuse: писать – написать (a scrie – a scrie și a termina de scris); читать – прочитать (a citi – a citi până la capăt); делать – сделать (a face – a face și a încheia); говорить – сказать (a vorbi/spune – a spune o dată, a rosti); покупать – купить (a cumpăra – a cumpăra efectiv, finalizat); смотреть – посмотреть (a privi – a privi/consulta pentru o vreme, a arunca o privire); открывать – открыть (a deschide – a deschide complet, finalizat); подписывать – подписать (a semna în mod repetat / a fi în proces de semnare – a semna și a finaliza actul); решать – решить (a decide, a rezolva în general – a lua o decizie / a rezolva definitiv); звонить – позвонить (a telefona – a da un telefon concret, finalizat) etc.

Cu categoria gramaticală a aspectului interacționează categoria modului de acțiune verbală (Aktionsart), care este definit ca un aspect lexical, nu gramatical, și presupune clase lexico-gramaticale de verbe unite prin caracterul comun al desfășurării acțiunii. De exemplu, verbele din rusă perfective заиграть, запеть, зашевелиться au semnificația unui început de acțiune (inceptiv), iar verbele погулять, поговорить, полежать – semnificația unui caracter limitativ. Pot exista și valori de rezultat, unicitate, discontinuitate, concomitență și altele.

Una dintre cele mai simple clasificări împarte verbele în funcție de modul de acțiune în telice (telic) și atelice (atelic). Această opoziție joacă un rol fundamental în analiza aspectuală, deoarece influențează modul în care o acțiune poate fi raportată la timp. De exemplu, în propoziții precum I was eating an apple when she called, verbul to eat (telic) apare într-un context progresiv și marchează acțiunea ca fiind „în desfășurare, nefinalizată", în timp ce I was sitting in the garden when she called exprimă o stare atelică, susceptibilă de durată nedeterminată.

Dacă în limbile indo-europene opozițiile de timp și aspect exprimă mai ales relații cronologice și aspectuale ale acțiunii, iar în limbile Dyirbal și Inuktitut viitorul aparține sferei irealului, în limba Hopi, după cum afirmă Whorf, nu există timpuri verbale în sensul european[1], alias opoziția nu mai este temporală, ci ontologică – între „manifest" și „nemanifest" –, ceea ce reflectă o concepție non-liniară asupra temporalității și o experiență a lumii structurată prin gradul de actualitate, nu prin succesiunea cronologică (Whorf 1956: 57-59).

Aceste viziuni confirmă că timpul gramatical nu este o categorie universală, ci o formă cultural-specifică de organizare a experienței. Limbile diferă nu numai prin mijloacele morfologice de exprimare, ci și prin modul conceptual de raportare la realitate și acțiune, variind între:

- sistemele cronologice (trecut/prezent/viitor – română, engleză);
- sistemele modale (realis/irrealis – Dyirbal, Inuktitut);
- sistemele ontologice-epistemice (manifest / nemanifest – Hopi).

Fundamental pentru înțelegerea eterogenității conceptui timp este aportul lui Wilhelm von Humboldt, care a susținut ideea că limbile sunt forme specifice, ce construiesc moduri distincte de a percepe și a organiza realitatea, inclusiv timpul. În opinia sa, fiecare limbă reprezintă o „viziune a lumii" (Weltansicht), care modelează percepția temporală distinctă a comunității sale. Astfel, diferențele structurale între limbi nu sunt variații superficiale, ci reflectă moduri diferite de conceptualizare a temporalității (cf. Humboldt 2008: 10–20).

Bunăoară, în sistemele de politețe japoneze și arabe, marcarea temporală nu poate fi separată de marcarea relațiilor sociale și a atitudinii vorbitorului, ceea ce susține interpretarea timpului lingvistic ca dimensiune culturală și pragmatică, nu doar gramaticală.

În japoneză, opoziția dintre registrul colocvial, forma politicoasă în -masu și sistemul onorific (keigo) funcționează ca un ansamblu de „dispozitive de recunoaștere a relației" (relation-acknowledging devices), prin care vorbitorul indexează statutul relativ, distanța socială și gradul de deferență față de interlocutor. Formele verbale nu marchează doar timpul (prezent/trecut sau aspectul), ci și poziționarea socială a participanților la interacțiune, astfel încât selecția între formele simple și cele politicoase/onorifice modulează percepția actului comunicativ și a „momentului" enunțării în raport cu normele de respect și armonie socială (wa). În enunțuri aparent neutre din punct de vedere temporal, însuși faptul că vorbitorul alege o formă onorifică sau umilă (sonkeigo / kenjōgo) introduce o dimensiune suplimentară de (auto)poziționare socială, care încadrează temporalitatea într-un cadru relațional și normativ specific culturii japoneze. (Shingo Tokimoto An EEG Analysis of Honorification in Japanese: Human Hierarchical Relationships Coded in Language - PMC)

În cultura și limba arabă, distincțiile de timp și aspect sunt strâns corelate cu modalitatea și cu gradul de certitudine sau potențialitate atribuit evenimentelor, ceea ce face ca timpul verbal să reflecte implicit și atitudinea vorbitorului față de realitatea sau condiționarea acțiunii. Utilizarea expresiilor precum „in shā' Allāh" („dacă va voi Dumnezeu") inserează în structura discursului o perspectivă asupra viitorului ca domeniu fundamental condiționat și incert, combinând deferența religioasă cu politețea și modestia pragmatică. Această ancorare a referinței temporale într-un orizont de voință divină și fatalitate cultural asumată influențează profund configurarea pragmatică a enunțurilor despre viitor, diminuând impresia unui control absolut al subiectului asupra evenimentelor și marcând discursiv respectul față de interlocutor și de contextul social. (Abu Rayhan 2023: 121).

Asemenea exemple ilustrează modul în care limbile nu se limitează la a „cronometra" evenimentele, ci organizează experiența temporală prin filtre culturale, modale și relaționale, în acord cu ipoteza relativității lingvistice formulate de Sapir și Whorf, potrivit căreia structurile gramaticale și lexicale influențează modul în care vorbitorii percep și conceptualizează realitatea. În acest sens, timpul lingvistic apare mai degrabă ca o construcție cultural-semiotică, articulată prin norme de politețe, ierarhii sociale și credințe religioase, decât ca simplă reflectare neutră a cronologiei obiective.

Antropologia culturală a arătat că timpul este modelat de sisteme calendaristice, ritmuri sociale și ritualuri, fiind indisolubil legat de organizarea vieții colective. În societățile agrare, calendarele lunisolare structurau succesiunea muncilor câmpului și a sărbătorilor, în timp ce, în Europa industrială, timpul mecanic și organizarea schimburilor de lucru au impus o uniformizare strictă a ritmurilor cotidiene. Ritualurile religioase – precum Paștele, Anul Nou sau marile sărbători hinduse – sacralizează timpul, îl separă de durata profană și îl transformă într-un reper simbolic al identității comunitare, în acord cu distincția dintre timp sacru și timp profan analizată de Eliade (Eliade 1959: 68–89).

Timpul funcționează, totodată, ca instrument al puterii: în Evul Mediu, Biserica reglementa ritmul zilei prin clopote și prin calendarul liturgic, iar în epoca modernă și contemporană regimurile totalitare au instituit calendare ideologice, redefinind simbolic începuturile, aniversările și comemorările colective. Astfel de observații susțin teza lui Gell, potrivit căreia timpul nu este doar un cadru neutru al acțiunii, ci o resursă socială distribuită, controlată și mobilizată în funcție de structurile de autoritate și de mecanismele memoriei colective (Gell 1992: 149–174).

Articularea dimensiunilor antropologice și culturale ale temporalității impune, în mod firesc, o deplasare a perspectivei spre modul în care limbajul însuși organizează și mediază experiența timpului. Dacă sistemele calendaristice, ritualurile și practicile sociale configurează „infrastructura" culturală a temporalității, lingvistica cognitivă permite descrierea mecanismelor prin care aceste structuri se internalizează la nivel conceptual și se reflectă în reprezentările mentale și în uzul limbii. În această etapă, analiza se concentrează asupra relației dintre codificarea lingvistică a timpului și procesele cognitive implicate în percepția și organizarea experienței temporale.

Din această perspectivă, percepția timpului nu poate fi redusă la o experiență pur subiectivă, ci este profund mediată de limbaj, care influențează procese cognitive și sociale complexe. Studii de neuropsihologie și științe cognitive arată că limbajul structurează reprezentările mentale și mecanismele implicate în estimarea duratei, ordonarea evenimentelor și anticiparea lor, prin interacțiunea dintre rețelele corticale (cortex prefrontal, cortex parietal) și structurile subcorticale responsabile de cronometrare și predicție (cerebel, ganglioni bazali). În această cheie, lucrări precum cele ale lui Lera Boroditsky evidențiază modul în care experiențele lingvistice și particularitățile limbii materne influențează felul în care indivizii codifică, segmentează și ordonează evenimentele temporale, confirmând ipoteza unei relații bidirecționale între limbaj și percepția timpului. (Boroditsky 2011: 123).

Pentru descrierea fină a acestor relații, lingvistica cognitivă recurge la concepte teoretice precum frame-ul, metafora conceptuală și schematizarea. Noțiunea de frame, introdusă de Fillmore, desemnează structuri de cunoaștere organizate care ancorează înțelesul lexical într-un scenariu conceptual mai larg, permițând interpretarea expresiilor temporale în contextul unor situații prototipice (de exemplu, călătoria sau activitatea economică) (Fillmore 1982: 111–137). Teoria metaforei conceptuale, formulată de Lakoff și Johnson, arată că limbile recurg sistematic la mapări între domenii experiențiale (de pildă, time is motion, time is a resource), iar aceste metafore nu sunt simple ornamente stilistice, ci mecanisme fundamentale de conceptualizare a temporalității (Lakoff & Johnson 1980: 55–61). În fine, în cadrul gramaticii cognitive, Langacker descrie schematizarea ca proces prin care structurile lingvistice abstractizează și regularizează experiența, oferind modele recurente pentru exprimarea relațiilor temporale (succesiune, durată, simultaneitate) (Langacker 1987: 57–73).

Integrarea acestor instrumente analitice permite trecerea de la o viziune pur descriptivă asupra timpului lingvistic la una explicativă, care corelează structurile gramaticale, conceptele cognitive și practicile culturale ale temporalității.

Articularea dimensiunilor antropologice și culturale ale temporalității poate fi nuanțată prin perspectiva lingvisticii cognitive, care arată cum limbile structurează experiența timpului prin intermediul unor tipare metaforice relativ stabile. În acest cadru, metaforele spațiale nu sunt simple resurse stilistice, ci dispozitive conceptuale, prin care vorbitorii organizează și interpretează succesiunea evenimentelor. Unul dintre cele mai studiate tipare este folosirea sistematică a spațiului pentru a conceptualiza timpul. În multe limbi occidentale, timpul este proiectat pe o axă orizontală, cu viitorul „în față" și trecutul „în spate", iar enunțuri curente din engleză ilustrează această organizare („to look forward to the future", „to leave the past behind"). Studiile experimentale au arătat că asemenea metafore nu doar reflectă, ci și modelează modul în care vorbitorii ordonează mental evenimentele, preferând reprezentări liniare, direcționate „înainte" către viitor.

Româna se aliniază, în linii mari, aceluiași model: expresii precum „a privi înainte spre viitor", „a lăsa trecutul în urmă", dar și proverbe de tipul „Vremea anevoie vine și fuge numaidecât" sau „Dacă nu ți se pleacă ție vremea, pleacă-te tu vremii" construiesc timpul ca entitate care se deplasează sau ca traseu parcurs de subiect, de regulă pe o linie orientată înainte. Această metaforă orizontală conferă trecerii timpului o formă intuitivă de mișcare direcțională, ancorată în experiența corporală a deplasării spre un scop. În plan simbolic-religios, tradiția creștină potențează această viziune prin imaginea unei istorii liniare, cu început, direcție și finalitate soteriologică, ceea ce contrastează cu reprezentările ciclice ale timpului din alte arii culturale și susține ideea de progres și devenire în istorie.

În termenii teoriei metaforei conceptuale, asemenea structuri se întemeiază pe „scheme imagistice" derivate din experiența senzomotorie, în special pe schema imagistică PATH[2] (calea), care codifică deplasarea de la un punct de plecare la un punct de sosire, în direcția privirii. Experiența corporală a mersului înainte oferă astfel o „schemă" cognitivă pentru metafore de tipul time as motion sau time as a journey, care organizează atât expresiile lexicale, cât și raționamentele despre trecut, prezent și viitor. În această perspectivă, reprezentarea lineară, front–back, a timpului poate fi înțeleasă ca rezultat al unei convergențe între constrângeri biologice (orientarea corpului în mișcare), convenții culturale (modele istorice și religioase ale temporalității) și mecanisme lingvistice de schematizare, care transformă experiența trăită în modele conceptuale recurente.

În completarea modelelor occidentale, în care timpul este proiectat aproape invariabil pe o axă orizontală (viitor „în față", trecut „în spate"), o serie de limbi și culturi oferă dovezi convingătoare că temporalitatea poate fi structurată metaforic și pe dimensiunea verticală. Aceste diferențe nu privesc doar lexicul, ci reflectă configurații culturale și senzomotorii distincte ale experienței timpului.

În chineza mandarină, o serie de expresii lexicale indică o proiecție a timpului pe axa verticală sus–jos. Termeni compuși precum shàng yuè („luna trecută", literal „luna de sus") și xià yuè („luna viitoare", literal „luna de jos") codifică reperele temporale lunare prin opoziția Aceste date confirmă că metaforele temporale se bazează pe ceea ce teoria metaforei conceptuale numește „scheme imagistice” – structuri pre-conceptuale derivate din experiența senzomotorie și organizate schematic în termeni precum sus–jos, înainte–înapoi, interior–exterior. Schema imagistică PATH (calea), definită printr-un punct de pornire, un punct de sosire și un traseu direcțional între ele, oferă un schelet cognitiv pentru metafore de tipul TIME IS MOTION sau TIME IS A JOURNEY, în care evenimentele sunt plasate de-a lungul unei traiectorii, iar vorbitorul se poziționează „în” sau „pe” această cale. În cazul proiecțiilor verticale, experiența corporală a verticalității (postura bipedă, diferența cap–trunchi, raportarea la repere naturale precum munții sau clădirile) alimentează metafore ale timpului ca ascensiune ori coborâre, prin care trecutul, prezentul și viitorul sunt distribuite în funcție de sus și jos, nu doar de înainte și înapoi.

Astfel, contrastul dintre reprezentările orizontale ale timpului, dominante în multe culturi occidentale, și reprezentările verticale, evidențiate în limbile est-asiatice arată că modalitățile de „cartografiere” metaforică a temporalității sunt situate cultural și corporal. Ele integrează simultan dimensiunea experiențială (corpul și mediul fizic), dimensiunea culturală (modele istorice, religioase și simbolice) și dimensiunea lingvistică (lexicul și structurile sintactice), confirmând ideea că timpul lingvistic este o construcție conceptuală emergentă, nu o simplă reflectare neutră a cronologiei obiective.

Continuând această linie de argumentație, spațializarea verticală a timpului apare deosebit de pregnant în cultura japoneză, unde axa sus - jos organizează atât expresii lingvistice, cât și simboluri culturale. În descrierea perioadelor istorice, japoneza recurge frecvent la verbe care evocă mișcarea ascendentă sau descendentă pe o axă temporală, astfel încât trecutul mai îndepărtat este conceptualizat ca „deasupra”, iar epocile ulterioare ca situate „mai jos”, mai aproape de prezent. Această distribuție metaforică a istoriei pe verticală permite articularea unei relații subtile între timp, tradiție și sacru: ascensiunea marchează apropierea de origini și de un nivel axiologic superior, în timp ce „coborârea” simbolizează devenirea, alterarea și trecerea temporală.

Dimensiunea simbolică a acestei orientări este întărită de rolul central al muntelui în imaginarul japonez. Analizele de inspirație culturală subliniază că muntele Fuji funcționează ca un veritabil axis mundi, condensând idei de continuitate, permanență și transcendență. Urcarea pe munte poate fi interpretată ca metaforă a unei ascensiuni spirituale sau temporale spre origine, în timp ce coborârea – prezentă și în narațiunile budiste despre coborârea unei figuri sacre din munte – poate fi citită ca deschidere a viitorului către lume, ca intrare a sacralului în istorie (cf. Sanjeeva 2024: 78-88). Astfel, verticalitatea nu este doar o opțiune de codificare lingvistică, ci și un principiu de ordonare simbolică a temporalității.

Într-o perspectivă comparativă, cercetări de tip cognitiv au sugerat că orientările verticale ale timpului în spațiul est-asiatic sunt corelate și cu repere geografice majore, precum marile fluvii sau masivele muntoase, care funcționează ca axe de orientare spațială și temporală pentru comunități. Pe acest fundal, explicațiile propuse de Vyvyan Evans pun accent pe corelația senzomotorie: corpul uman, deplasându-se înainte într-o poziție verticală, unifică direcția „în față” cu dimensiunea „deasupra”, ceea ce face ca metaforele „înainte/înapoi” și „sus/jos” să fie compatibile și ușor de proiectat asupra domeniului temporal (cf. Evans 2004: 235). În consecință, atât modelul orizontal occidental, cât și cel vertical japonez/chinez pot fi înțelese ca variații culturale ale unui set de constrângeri corporale și experiențiale, filtrate prin convenții simbolice și lingvistice specifice fiecărei comunități.

Articularea modelelor liniare și ciclice ale timpului sugerează că experiența temporală nu poate fi desprinsă de evenimentele concrete și de ritmurile naturale, care o configurează. În sistemele în care dominația ciclurilor naturii (succesiunea anotimpurilor, rotația agrară, ritualurile periodice) este evidentă, timpul este trăit și conceptualizat mai curând ca reluare ordonată a unor secvențe decât ca progres ireversibil, ceea ce apropie temporalitatea de structuri repetitive, sacralizate, ale vieții colective. În acest sens, modul de a „vedea" timpul depinde de felul în care comunitățile își integrează activitățile economice, religioase și simbolice în scenarii de revenire sau de înaintare, făcând imposibilă o separare netă între durata abstractă și evenimentele care o populează.

În consecință, înțelegerea timpului se dovedește indisolubil legată de contextul cultural, întrucât reprezentările temporalității se formează pe baza unor practici și experiențe situate – de la activități cotidiene și organizări sociale ale muncii până la credințe religioase și construcții ideologice. Amprentele istorice, religioase și sociale se imprimă atât în imaginarul colectiv, cât și în structurile lingvistice, generând, uneori chiar în interiorul aceleiași limbi, variații notabile de perspectivă asupra timpului: de la modele strict liniare („linie-timp") la modele circulare sau spiralate („ciclu-timp"), care încearcă să reconcilieze repetiția cu devenirea. Această diversitate arată că limbajul și cultura mediază permanent raportul dintre percepția biologică a ritmurilor (îmbătrânire, alternanță zi/noapte) și interpretările lor simbolice (istorie, progres, ciclicitate).

Studiile trans-culturale au evidențiat, de asemenea, că dimensiunea temporală nu este orientată uniform nici măcar la nivel metaforic. În timp ce în tradițiile occidentale dominante viitorul este proiectat „în față", iar trecutul „în spate", există comunități în care această axă este inversată: cercetările asupra limbilor și culturilor Aymara, Toba sau malgașă, precum și asupra unor reprezentări din Egiptul antic, arată că trecutul este conceptualizat „în față" – vizibil, cunoscut – iar viitorul „în spate" – invizibil, necunoscut (cf. Núñez & Sweetser 2006: 401). Faptul că aceleași coordonate spațiale pot susține orientări temporale fundamental diferite confirmă caracterul profund cultural al percepției timpului și susține ideea unei pluralități epistemologice a umanității: raportul cu temporalitatea nu este dictat univoc de biologie sau de „cronologia obiectivă", ci este construit și reconstruit prin limbaj, simboluri și practici sociale, în cadre culturale variate și, adesea, incompatibile între ele.

Concluzia care se desprinde din analiza de față este că timpul nu poate fi tratat ca o categorie neutră, uniformă, ci ca o construcție culturală și lingvistică, emergentă din interacțiunea dintre experiența corporală, practicile sociale și imaginarul simbolic. Modelările liniare și ciclice ale temporalității, diferențele de orientare metaforică (înainte/înapoi, sus/jos) și exemplele de inversare a axei trecut–viitor evidențiază faptul că limbile și culturile propun „geometrii" distincte ale timpului, fără ca vreuna să poată revendica statutul de normă universală. În această perspectivă, variabilitatea reprezentărilor temporale devine un indicator privilegiat al pluralității epistemologice umane și confirmă ideea că orice teorie a timpului, care ignoră dimensiunea sa cultural-lingvistică, rămâne inevitabil incompletă.

EXPLORING THE IMPACT OF MOTHER TONGUE PROXIMITY ON ROMANIAN AS A FOREIGN LANGUAGE ACQUISITION AT THE PREPARATORY YEAR OF ROMANIAN LANGUAGE FOR FOREIGN STUDENTS: A QUANTITATIVE ANALYSIS

Aurora - Tatiana Dina
Lecturer, PhD, National University of Science and Technology Politehnica Bucharest, Pitesti University Center

Abstract: This study investigates the influence of linguistic similarity between students' first languages (L1) and Romanian on the acquisition of Romanian as a second language (L2) at the Preparatory Year of Romanian Language for Foreign Students, at National University of Science and Technology Politehnica Bucharest, Pitesti Unversity Center. Through a quantitative approach, we examine the performance differences between learners with Romance L1 backgrounds and those from non-Romance linguistic backgrounds. Results indicate that Romance language speakers outperform their non-Romance counterparts, suggesting that language proximity plays a critical role in second language acquisition.

Keywords: linguistic proximity; Romanian as a Foreign Language (RFL); Second language acquisition (SLA); mother tongue influence; Preparatory Year students

1. Introduction

Second language acquisition (SLA) is a multifaceted process influenced by cognitive, social, and environmental factors. Among the most significant predictors of success in learning a new language is the linguistic similarity between the learner's first language (L1) and the target language (L2). The concept of linguistic distance—referring to the structural and lexical similarities between languages—has been shown to affect both the speed and the proficiency of language learning.

"Depending on the students' background, there were identified different types of errors (spelling, discourse coherence, vocabulary, morphology and syntax) and causes of error production (mother tongue, interference with English, students' level of understanding and acquisition of Romanian as a second language etc.)."(Gafu, 2012, p. 1626)

This paper investigates the impact of mother-tongue similarity on the acquisition of Romanian, a Romance language, by students whose L1s are either Romance or non-Romance languages.

Romanian, a member of the Romance language family, shares many features with languages such as Spanish, Italian, and French, but also exhibits unique Slavic influences. As a result, learners from Romance language backgrounds might experience different challenges compared to those from non-Romance backgrounds.

"Constantly changing, passing multiple transfers and interferences, the Romanian language and her study face an increased interest from citizens of other nationalities." (Drăgulescu, 2017, p. 139)

With the increasing number of international students enrolling in Romanian language courses, understanding these challenges can guide the development of more tailored educational strategies This study aims to quantify how linguistic proximity affects the acquisition of Romanian in formal academic settings.

2. Literature Review

Romanian, as a Romance language, shares a substantial amount of vocabulary, syntax, and grammatical structures with other Romance languages such as Spanish, French, and Italian. For example, cognates such as "familie" (family), "informație" (information), and "activitate" (activity) are similar across these languages, providing a significant advantage for Romance language speakers when learning Romanian. Additionally, the syntactic structures and grammatical rules governing verb conjugations, word order, and noun-adjective agreement in Romanian are similar to those found in other Romance languages, which can facilitate faster acquisition for speakers of these languages.

Also, Ionescu A. (2023) stated: "Language barriers – poor grammar and linguistic differences are a significant impediment to communication"(Ionescu, 2023, p 76)

In contrast, learners whose L1s belong to non-Romance language families, such as English, Arabic, Chinese, Turkish, or Russian, are less likely to benefit from such linguistic similarities. For instance, Romanian's grammatical gender (which assigns gender to nouns) and case system (used to mark syntactic functions of nouns) present challenges to learners whose L1s do not have these features. In English, for example, nouns are not gendered, and the language does not employ a case system in the same way as Romanian.

As Drăgulescu notices, one limitation "was the use of the phrase secondary language (L2) to designate a foreign language even if the speaker was bilingual or already knew two or more foreign languages, conveying the idea that, in the case of learning new languages, identical processes are taking place as in the case of first-language acquisition."(Drăgulescu, 2017, p 143)

Additionally, phonological features like nasal vowels and diphthongs in Romanian may be unfamiliar to learners whose L1s do not include such sounds, further complicating pronunciation and fluency, and according to Gafu (2012) , "Coming from various countries of the world, their cultural background is very different, this leading to various problems related to Romanian language acquisition" (Gafu, 2012, p 1626)

Research in the field of language transfer often distinguishes between positive and negative transfer. Positive transfer occurs when similarities between the L1 and L2 facilitate language learning, whereas negative "transfer arises when structural or lexical differences between the two languages lead to errors" (Ringbom, 2007). For example, learners whose L1 shares similar grammatical structures with their L2 may experience faster language acquisition due to the ability to transfer linguistic knowledge. Conversely, learners from more distant language families may face challenges as they attempt to transfer patterns that do not align with the target language. As Rosa Alonso Alonso (1997) notices "grammar or vocabulary errors students make because a word distinction, either lexical or grammatical, which is made in the L2 does not exist in their native language."(Alonso Alonso, 1997, p 8)

While there has been a substantial body of research focusing on language transfer in second language acquisition (SLA), much of the existing literature has focused on comparisons between languages like English and Spanish or French in general contexts, or comparisons of languages with Slavic influences. Chiswick and Miller (2005), for instance, found that learners whose L1s are more closely related to their L2 achieved higher proficiency in a shorter time frame, supporting the theory that linguistic proximity accelerates language acquisition. However, research specifically examining the acquisition of Romanian by learners from Romance versus non-Romance language backgrounds remains limited, particularly in academic settings.

The gap in empirical studies comparing the experiences of Romance and non-Romance speakers in acquiring Romanian as an L2 is notable. Most existing studies have concentrated on the broader field of SLA in languages such as Spanish, French, and Italian, leaving Romanian relatively under-researched in this regard. Studies that do examine Romanian tend to focus on general linguistic analysis or comparative studies with other Slavic languages rather than directly comparing Romance language learners with non-Romance language learners. This gap points to the need for focused research into how these two distinct linguistic groups navigate the Romanian language, especially in formal, academic contexts like the Preparatory Year for Romanian Language at university institutions.

Further empirical studies exploring this area could help refine teaching methodologies and improve educational strategies tailored to the specific challenges faced by Romance language speakers versus non-Romance language speakers. By recognizing these challenges early on, educators could adapt their approaches to provide targeted support for non-Romance language learners, perhaps focusing on aspects of Romanian that differ most significantly from their L1, such as its complex case system or gendered nouns. This focus on linguistic proximity could therefore provide insights not only into language learning outcomes but also into the development of more effective curricula and assessment techniques.

3. Methodology

Participants:

The study was conducted with a group of 80 international students enrolled in the Preparatory Year of Romanian Language for Foreign Students at the National University of Science and Technology Politehnica Bucharest, Pitești University Center. The participants, aged between 18 and 30 years, were undertaking intensive Romanian language training in preparation for subsequent academic studies in Romania. All students were assigned to language classes corresponding to the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR) levels A1 through B2.

Group Assignment

The participants were divided into two groups based on their first language:

- Group A (40 Romance L1 speakers): Spanish, Italian, French, Portuguese
- Group B (40 Non-Romance L1 speakers): English, Arabic, Chinese, Russian, Turkish, German, and other backgrounds

Data Collection Instruments:

The data collection tool was a standardized proficiency exam (see Annex1 and Annex 2), assessing all four language skills: reading, listening, writing, and speaking. The exam format included:

- Reading comprehension (25 points): Multiple-choice and short-answer questions based on short literary texts and newspaper articles.
- Listening comprehension (25 points): Audio-based questions focusing on everyday dialogues and announcements.
- Writing (25 points): Written tasks requiring descriptive essays and formal letters.
- Speaking (25 points): Instructor-led conversations assessing fluency, accuracy, and cultural knowledge.

Data Collection Procedure:

The proficiency exam was administered at the end of the second semester of the Preparatory Year, after approximately eight months of intensive instruction. Testing sessions were conducted in person, under standardized classroom conditions, and supervised by the course instructors to ensure reliability and fairness. Each student completed the reading, listening, and writing components in a single sitting lasting approximately 90 minutes, followed by an individual speaking interview of about 10–15 minutes. All test materials and prompts were identical across groups to maintain consistency. The exams were evaluated by two independent assessors, following pre-established scoring rubrics based on CEFR performance descriptors. Discrepancies in grading were resolved through discussion until a consensus score was reached.

Data Analysis:

After all tests were administered and scored, the resulting data were entered into a statistical software package (SPSS, Version 28) for analysis. Each participant's total proficiency score was computed as the sum of the four skill components: reading, listening, writing, and speaking (maximum total: 100 points). Descriptive statistics were first calculated to determine mean scores, standard deviations, and score ranges for each group. Subsequently, an independent-samples t-test was conducted to examine whether the differences in performance between the two groups were statistically significant. A p-value of less than 0.05 was adopted as the threshold for statistical significance. In addition, Cohen's d was computed to estimate the effect size, and 95% confidence intervals were generated to assess the precision and robustness of the observed mean difference.

4. Results

Descriptive Statistics

Group	Mean Score	Standard Deviation	Score Range
Group A (Romance)	86.3	5.2	75–95

As shown in Table 1, Group A, consisting of Romance language speakers, achieved a higher mean score (M = 86.3, SD = 5.2) and displayed less variability in performance compared to Group B (M = 78.1, SD = 7.8). The narrower score range and smaller standard deviation in Group A suggest a more homogeneous proficiency level, whereas the greater dispersion in Group B indicates more variability among non-Romance speakers.

Inferential Statistics:

An independent-samples t-test was performed to assess whether the difference in mean scores between the two groups was statistically significant. The analysis revealed a significant difference, $t(78) = 5.24$, $p < .001$, indicating that language proximity had a measurable effect on Romanian language proficiency.

To quantify the magnitude of this difference, we computed Cohen's d for effect size. The result was $d = 1.18$, which is considered a large effect size according to conventional benchmarks. This suggests that the difference between the groups is not only statistically significant but also practically meaningful.

Additionally, a 95% confidence interval for the mean difference between the two groups was calculated, yielding an interval of [5.58, 11.02]. This range further supports the robustness of the observed effect, suggesting that the true population mean difference between Romance and non-Romance speakers is likely to fall within this interval with 95% confidence.

Interpretation:

These results provide strong evidence that Romance language speakers perform significantly better than non-Romance speakers on the Romanian language proficiency exam. The large effect size (Cohen's d = 1.18) indicates that the difference in proficiency levels is not only statistically significant but also of substantial practical importance. The 95% confidence interval further substantiates the reliability of these findings.

These outcomes align with the hypothesis that linguistic proximity influences language learning success, as Romance languages share key grammatical and lexical features with Romanian, facilitating easier acquisition for Romance speakers. In contrast, non-Romance speakers, who are less likely to experience such transfer effects, exhibit a wider range of proficiency levels and generally lower mean scores.

5. Discussion and Pedagogical Implications

The findings of this study align with previous research on the impact of linguistic proximity in SLA. Romance language speakers demonstrated superior performance across all areas of language proficiency, particularly in reading, vocabulary, and speaking. This can be attributed to the shared lexical items and grammatical structures between Romance languages and Romanian, such as cognates (e.g., familie, informație, activitate).

Non-Romance speakers, on the other hand, faced greater challenges, particularly with Romanian's complex case system, word order in complex sentences, and pronunciation of nasal vowels and diphthongs, which do not exist in their native languages.

These findings suggest that learners from Romance language backgrounds benefit from faster acquisition paths, while non-Romance speakers may require additional support. Teachers can adapt their instructional strategies to accommodate these differences, providing Romance language speakers with more advanced learning opportunities and offering non-Romance learners targeted instruction on Romanian's grammatical structures.

6. Limitations and Suggestions for Future Research

This study did not account for individual learner variables such as motivation, prior language learning experience, or study habits, which could also influence language acquisition. Future research should explore these factors and follow students longitudinally to examine how performance evolves over time. Additionally, qualitative methods such as error analysis and interviews could provide deeper insights into the challenges faced by learners from non-Romance backgrounds.

7. Conclusion

This study provides empirical evidence that the linguistic proximity between a learner's first language and Romanian significantly affects language acquisition outcomes. Romance language speakers demonstrated superior performance compared to non-Romance speakers, confirming the role of linguistic distance in second language learning. Educational programs should consider these differences when designing curricula and diagnostic assessments to optimize learning outcomes.

ANNEX 1

Standardized Proficiency Exam Format

The proficiency exam designed to assess the four primary language skills—reading, listening, writing, and speaking—was used to measure the Romanian language acquisition of participants in this study. Each skill was evaluated through specific tasks that aimed to capture the full spectrum of language competency.

1. Reading Comprehension (25 points)

The reading comprehension section evaluated students' ability to understand written texts and extract key information. Participants were given a selection of short literary texts and newspaper articles, followed by a series of multiple-choice and short-answer questions. The questions were designed to assess their ability to identify main ideas, understand specific details, and interpret the meaning of vocabulary in context.

Sample task:

Text Excerpt:

"Romania is a country known for its rich cultural heritage, vibrant festivals, and scenic landscapes. From the Carpathian Mountains to the Danube River, Romania offers a diverse range of natural attractions. The capital, Bucharest, is a vibrant city that blends historical architecture with modern facilities."

Question 1:

What are two natural features mentioned in the text that attract tourists to Romania?

a) The Carpathian Mountains
b) The Black Sea
c) The Danube River
d) The Mediterranean Sea

Question 2:
Explain how Bucharest is described in the text.

2. Listening Comprehension (25 points)

This section assessed the students' ability to comprehend spoken Romanian through various audio recordings, such as daily conversations, announcements, and interviews. Students were required to listen to the audio files and answer multiple-choice and short-answer questions based on the content.

Sample task:
Audio Clip:
A conversation in a market between a buyer and seller discussing prices and products.

Transcript: A Conversation in a Market

Seller: Good day! How can I help you today?
Buyer: Good day! I would like to buy some potatoes and tomatoes.
Seller: Of course! Potatoes are 2 lei per kilogram, and tomatoes are 4 lei per kilogram. How much would you like?
Buyer: I'd like 3 kilograms of potatoes and 2 kilograms of tomatoes, please.
Seller: Perfect! Here you go. The potatoes are very good today, straight from the farm. The tomatoes are fresh, brought in this morning.
Buyer: Thank you! But, I also have a question: do you have apples?
Seller: Yes, we have apples! They are 5 lei per kilogram.
Buyer: Can you give me 1 kilogram of apples, please?
Seller: Sure, one kilogram of apples. Your total comes to 18 lei.
Buyer: Thank you very much!
Seller: You're welcome! Have a lovely day and good luck with your cooking!

Question 1:
What item is the buyer interested in?

a) Tomatoes
b) Cucumbers
c) Bread
d) Apples

Question 2:
What is the price of the apples mentioned in the conversation?

3. Writing (25 points)

The writing section evaluated the students' ability to produce clear, coherent written texts in Romanian. Participants were required to complete tasks such as descriptive essays and formal letters, which tested their ability to use appropriate vocabulary, grammar, and sentence structure in written form.

Sample task:
Task 1:

Write a 150-word email to the university admissions office requesting information about courses available for international students. Your email should include appropriate greetings, a polite tone, and a request for details about course offerings and registration deadlines.

Task 2:
Describe your favorite holiday and explain why it is significant to you. Write at least 150 words.

4. Speaking (25 points)

The speaking assessment focused on students' ability to communicate fluently and accurately in Romanian. This section consisted of an instructor-led conversation in which students were asked to describe various topics related to their personal experiences and cultural background. The aim was to assess their ability to articulate ideas, use correct verb forms, and demonstrate cultural awareness.

Task 1:

Describe your hometown, including its location, significant landmarks, and any cultural events that take place there.

Task 2:

The instructor will ask follow-up questions about your hobbies, family, and daily routine to further assess your ability to respond and engage in conversation.

Each section of the exam was scored on a scale of 0 to 25, with the total maximum score being 100 points. The exam was designed to provide a comprehensive evaluation of a student's language proficiency across all key skills necessary for effective communication in Romanian.

1. Înțelegerea textului citit (25 de puncte)

Secțiunea de înțelegere a textului citit a evaluat capacitatea studenților de a înțelege texte scrise și de a extrage informații esențiale. Participanților li s-au oferit selecții de texte literare scurte și articole de ziar, urmate de o serie de întrebări cu răspunsuri multiple și cu răspunsuri scurte. Întrebările au fost concepute pentru a evalua abilitatea lor de a identifica ideile principale, de a înțelege detalii specifice și de a interpreta semnificația vocabularului în context.

Exemplu de subiect:
Fragment din text:
"România este o țară cunoscută pentru patrimoniul său cultural bogat, festivalurile vibrante și peisajele pitorești. De la Munții Carpați până la Dunăre, România oferă o gamă diversificată de atracții naturale. Capitala, București, este un oraș aglomerat care combină arhitectura istorică cu facilități moderne."

Întrebarea 1:
Care sunt două trăsături naturale menționate în text care atrag turiști în România?

a) Munții Carpați
b) Marea Neagră
c) Fluviul Dunărea
d) Marea Mediterană

Întrebarea 2:
Cum este descris Bucureștiul în text?

2. Înțelegerea textului audio (25 de puncte)

Această secțiune a evaluat abilitatea studenților de a înțelege limba română vorbită prin diverse înregistrări audio, cum ar fi conversații zilnice, anunțuri și interviuri. Studenții au fost rugați să asculte fișierele audio și să răspundă la întrebări cu răspunsuri multiple și cu răspunsuri scurte, bazate pe conținutul audio.

Exemplu de subiect:
Clip audio:
O conversație într-o piață între un cumpărător și un vânzător care discută despre prețuri și produse.

Transcriere: O conversație în piață

Vânzătorul: Bună ziua! Cu ce vă pot ajuta astăzi?
Cumpărătorul: Bună ziua! Aș dori să cumpăr câțiva cartofi și niște roșii.
Vânzătorul: Desigur! Cartofii sunt 2 lei kilogramul, iar roșiile sunt 4 lei kilogramul. Ce cantitate doriți?
Cumpărătorul: Vreau 3 kilograme de cartofi și 2 kilograme de roșii, vă rog.
Vânzătorul: Perfect! Aici sunt. Cartofii sunt foarte buni azi, direct din fermă. Roșiile sunt proaspete, aduse de dimineață.
Cumpărătorul: Mulțumesc! Dar am și o întrebare: aveți și mere?
Vânzătorul: Da, avem mere! Sunt 5 lei pe kilogram.
Cumpărătorul: Îmi puteți da 1 kilogram de mere, vă rog?
Vânzătorul: Sigur, un kilogram de mere. În total 18 lei.
Cumpărătorul: Mulțumesc mult!
Vânzătorul: Cu plăcere! O zi frumoasă și să aveți spor la gătit!

Întrebarea 1:
La ce produs este interesat cumpărătorul?

a) Roșii
b) Castraveți
c) Pâine
d) Mere

Întrebarea 2:
Care este prețul merelor menționat în conversație?

3. Scriere (25 de puncte)

Secțiunea de scriere a evaluat capacitatea studenților de a produce texte clare și coerente în limba română. Participanții au fost solicitați să completeze sarcini precum eseuri descriptive și scrisori formale, care au testat abilitatea lor de a utiliza vocabularul adecvat, gramatica corectă și structura frazelor în scriere.

Exemplu de subiect:
Sarcina 1:
Scrie un e-mail de 150 de cuvinte către biroul de admitere al universității, cerând informații despre cursurile disponibile pentru studenți internaționali. E-mailul tău trebuie să includă saluturi adecvate, un ton politicos și o solicitare pentru detalii despre ofertele de cursuri și termenele de înscriere.

Sarcina 2:

Descrie sărbătoarea ta preferată și explică de ce este semnificativă pentru tine. Scrie cel puțin 150 de cuvinte.

4. Vorbire (25 de puncte)

Evaluarea vorbirii s-a concentrat pe capacitatea studenților de a comunica fluent și corect în limba română. Această secțiune a constatat într-o conversație ghidată de instructor, în care studenții au fost rugați să descrie diverse subiecte legate de experiențele lor personale și contextul cultural. Scopul a fost de a evalua abilitatea lor de a articula idei, de a folosi forme corecte de verb și de a demonstra conștientizare culturală.

Exemplu de subiect:

Sarcina 1:

Descrie-ți orașul natal, inclusiv locația acestuia, reperele semnificative și orice evenimente culturale care au loc acolo.

Sarcina 2:

Instructorul va pune întrebări suplimentare despre hobby-urile tale, familia ta și rutina zilnică pentru a evalua capacitatea ta de a răspunde și de a te angaja într-o conversație.

Fiecare secțiune a examenului a fost notată pe o scală de la 0 la 25, cu un scor maxim total de 100 de puncte. Examenul a fost conceput pentru a oferi o evaluare cuprinzătoare a competenței lingvistice a unui student în toate abilitățile esențiale necesare pentru o comunicare eficientă în limba română.

THE SIGN - A THEORY FOR CULTURAL LANDMARKS

Violeta Bercaru Oneata
PhD, "I. L. Caragiale" National College, Ploiești

Abstract: The study is aimed in finding an essential signature of certain cultural milestones across history by means of a semiotic grid capable to guide hermeneutical developments There is an introduction offering a display the content of which is focused on a change of perspective in terms of the classical linguistic Sign and a translocation of it into a semiotic cultural one, with an emphasize of how this trans location works for a new encompassing of those landmarks. The idea of transience and immanence is also a basic concept crossing three other chapters in a semiotic lineage as well as hermeneutical and philosophical ones. The theory is applied as studies of cases on historical items belonging to classical music and paintings.

Keywords: cultural semiotic, sign symbolic forms

Introduction

This project develops a tool support for certain cultural landmarks explanation, a coat of a Sign capable of providing a bird's eye view meaning of those items in the presence of the traditional linguistic frame the Significant with its pair the Signifié giving up its structural mission and opening a revival in a logic of an interpretation. This tool seems to be reliable in the pursuit of a possible interpretation of cultural facts setting the lens of a semiotic Sign on number of essential cultural milestones as well as on the Stylistic matrix (L.Blaga, 1937), seen itself as a significant key in a clearer understanding of cultural facts near other erudite, both semiotic and hermeneutic.

Having in mind the kinship in a difference of the traditional structural frame, the Sign, by submitting it to a translocation in a larger range of the anthropocentric cultural area, a question arises: is it foldable for the Significant to become the guidance of the object - the cultural fact this latter taken as a Signifié? And can we uncover the evidence of a clearer view, a bird's eye view of a cultural fact by placing it near the size of a monad of culture or near the size of the stylistic matrix, those latter being conveyed by this new formal frame of both a linguistic structural nature and of a larger semiotic one? Are the monads very compatible with stylistic matrix formation? What is a stylistic matrix? The heighted focus is, as a matter of fact, to involve the idea of immanence and transience in observing certain cultural items such as either stylistic matrix or monads with closed windows usingabovementionedntion tool.

We rely firstly on the conjecture previously mentioned: The getting out of the restrictive linguistic classical frame and embracing it into the dynamic process of a transfer towards a capacity to contour meaning of cultural insights is helpful in building a frame which is neither a linguistic one, nor pure philosophical item, but aimed as pragmatic, a Sign endowed with the energy to spread a new meaning on an object. Could this semiotic significance formed in this way handle a large span of a cultural signifié? Are there possible studies of cases oriented towards pragmatic encompassing? We deal with an area of forms that left their historical signature as insightfulness with different symbolization degrees. This semiotic significant with a loss of the initial linguistic structural value, exercised on the cultural landmarks as signifié is susceptible, in a probability, of re-working a traditional Sign, aimed to acquire a symbolization degree. And it is a matter of uncovering new evidence and continuity in deciphering some cultural meanings. It is about a formal frame for as a sense and sensible deciphering of some forms evolving as it could appear in the lineage of certain erudite authors.

Pierluigi Basso Fossali in Symbolisation et augmentation: la forme symbolique ã l'ère du numérique Pour une nouvelle herméneutique des formes symboliques speaks about a wide range of formal frames in deciphering the symbolic forms among which the re-entry process in respect of the symbolic forms history (2014 § 4) in which the founders of distinction could weaken the very fabric of an entry in a renewal. In the humanities the concept of re-entry was described by Niklas Luhmann, also. Anyhow in the dialectics of the received and projected, the two - Basso Fossali considers - operate some reversals in terms of hierarchy or in terms of significance. In this kind of crossing-over process in which an inquiring between expression and content takes place, strengthening /weakening after the re-entry of one another, a symbolic form as balance could appear. Re- entry could be therefore defined as distinctive foundation in a system containing already elements of that foundation, discontinuous through more or less accuracy and thus with indetermination of certain ultimate results. [1]It does appear a relation between re-entry and model for/model of (§ 19) as two semiotic pillars of the idea of interference in the ongoing process of the symbolic forms, as historical process.

But the author gets at heighted focus the idea rather of the structural couple formes du temps/ histoire en formes. (forms of the time/ history in forms) (§ 6) thus touching to a certain extent the psycho-analytical level, we say. Because here appears the idea of tuning some items bearing different stylistic aspects. More clearly the quality of being symbolic besides that of being iconic relates to the form capacity to weave connections between processes taken over and processes ready to regenerate, in a region however the interior of which no above mentioned realms can claim exclusive properties. This commonality of regions generates a sharing space where the values are built after a degree of pertinent participations (§6).

In terms of what the scholar Basso Fossali defines as productive hybrids between inherited and renewal generative for a symbolic circuit suitable in turn for a lineage = a diagram and a programming = containing the core of an analogy, this is a phenomenon in relation with a cross coming, articulated on the very modern principle of model for and model of intertwining. (§ 19) We remember, on the other side the concept of the symbolic circuit in respect of the figures (§ 10) The concept model for/model of was handled also by other researchers, too. It is about a sensible comprehension of a common shared distance between a consecrated verified instrumental contour of a sense (model for) and the large perspective this frame offers to a future general embodiment (model of). In this point the non-stability in those frames of the form unfolds itself as moving concept articulating the different faces of it by a potentiality to create differential processes of finalisations signifiantes (§ 21) (significant finals). En ce sens, il faut resister ã l'idée d'identifier la forme symbolique avec la vision d'un monde stabilisée (Weltaschauung) It is rather pivot of multiple articulations through mutual re-entries of model for into model of with different significant finals as compared with one consecrated form, it relies on the transience and not on a tough transforming principle, uncovering, on the other hand, a certain symbolizing intensity degree of it.

In this respect the construction of a larger comprehension and breath can appear in terms of Albert Béguin's related vision to these former. A.Béguin wrote in 1937 in his famous essay L'âme romantique et le rêve - Essais sur le romantisme allemand et la poésie française on influences and their capacity to favor the hatching of germs that in turn will give new forms. It is a history speaking about a present of the poetical language interwoven with a past one, a future in the past of the symbolic forms evolving. We consider the theory of re-entries, model for/model of, the non-total physical response of the past into renewal as a transience embodiment. We put into relation and gather the previous Basso Fossali's epitomes framed into a semiotic bunch foldable to answer the call of a cultural symbolic Significant (1) as frame for Signifié represented by a landmark of music in a study of case, foreshadowing a transience process as it follows :

An ascendant propensity towards the Romantic footprints is the post-Romantic J.Brahms. The well-known Concerto for Piano op.83 epitomizes a finis coronat opera of the Romantic form in a re-entry that could be defined as distinctive foundation in a system containing already elements of that foundation, = romantic, bearing commonalities of Chopin's traces in a bold bridge building however discontinuous through more or less accuracy and thus with indetermination of certain ultimate results. The Romantic elements become model for a post- romantic Concerto trans located as model of because bearing indetermination aspects as certain ultimate results rendered by the personal footprint as general breath of the sounds chains. It does appear a relation between re-entry and model for/model of (§ 19) as two semiotic pillars of the idea of interference in the ongoing process of the symbolic forms, as historical process.

Whereas pieces of Bella Bartok hardly withstand the hostile milieu of the epoch as overall climate, - difficult to escape - so that dissonances in struggle are the main pinpoint of the sounds deployment. The form spends lots of endeavors to find a liberty out of a necessity [2]finally achieved as a battle in a cage, only. The same is in Prokofiev's Piano Concerto nr.1 bearing the valence of a struggle like springing from a dismantled modern consciousness and its lost coherence, with bitter echoes in the artistic one. But every now and then when getting in touch with the non-avoidable modern crisis, the symbolic form of Brahms features a re-entry in the generous Romantic frames raining in richness of peculiar flows absorbed by the thirsty need of beauty with echoes coming from Chopin's White Ballets, equally. Comparing these latter with certain works of Bartok and majority of Prokofiev is to set face to face transience and immanence. For the time being one can draw the idea the semiotic cultural frame Significant applied to the cultural Signifié Brahms Concerto for Piano op.83 could be held as a [re- entry/ model for (romantic elements) with a result of a post romantic encompassing as model of) bearing indetermination aspects of the final results subsequently to transient processes of mutual sharing as neighborhood area for new forms hatching.

An achievement of a re - entry as Significant coating another cultural Signifié is also, in a well- known piece -the Phantasy op.25 after Bizet's Carmen by Pablo de Sarasate, - a model for/of -interminglement with its essentiality of symbols structuring the cardinal parts of the opera in a synthesis. Carl Orff achieves in Carmina Burana, a mix of Middle Age Cantatas oratories, elements found in a monastery manuscript, a model for a modern morphogenesis as model of evolving all together with storage of past traces, a formativeness as diagram in the depths of a capsule of time. A formativeness that places itself, on the other hand, on the edge of miscellaneous stylistic abyssal categories capable of unified in an inherited universal memory core, in this case an exquisite and highly original stylistic matrix formation, featuring a transient process. As compared with other works particularly the stormy experimental music enlarging its span throughout 20th Century sadly bearing the witness of no way out of a modern consciousness in decline, these latter melting the sonic rather than the symphonic into the sign of the absurd, Carmina Burana takes distance undertaking an overlapping of forms of a non-lost in time capsule of time.

On the other hand, in H. Focillon's terms, - La forme est toujours incarnation [3] in the sense of metamorphosis through a non-losing of a knot of vivid inherited pertinent plans belonging to both model for (instrumental matter) and to model of (exemplary matter), Basso Fossali pinpoints. He proves one of the cardinal items of Focillon's system - a form becoming crossing and taking over knot of pertinent plans engraved in the emergent ones up to a climax embodied in vividness, thus submitted to the time resistance test. In the case of Carmina Burana taken as a cultural Signifié we have therefore the Signifiant made of : instrumental matter model for, the vivid inherited pertinent plans = the Middle Age Cantatas oratoires in a transient process releasing a knot of past pertinent plan engraved in the emergent ones as model of or what we name as new cultural Signifié representing a modern re- entry, a new featuring of a meaning by a new semiotic Sign..

And if we take the example of another study of case taken as cultural Sugnifié in an immanence encoding but treating the same theme - the music of the waters - we draw Immanence 1 = Haendel's music of waters so well designed like after an exquisite pencil of the classical geometric fulminating gardens of palaces in so far that accomplishing like a seal of an epoch the idea the architects of Versailles had when drawing the project of their fountains/ and Immanence 2 = Debussy's crystal waves of waters almost totally entered in the sound deployments speaking about a break with any kind of a classic frame memory.

Vivaldi's masterpiece The Four Seasons, a cultural Signifié as climax of the nature celebration but in the interior of a still solid expression of the classical frame bears an immanent charge [Significant] if set face to face with Carmina Burana, we see a cultural Signifié as climax of the nature celebration, bearing the transient charge as Significant.

Focillon's principle of a liberty out of a necessity Significant 2/ S (2) - An Immanence encoded in the Monads with closed windows

The previous quotation strengthens itself in complementarity with another one of Focillon, the form evolving seen as: a game of metamorphosis entailing a perpetual necessity to find its liberty,[4] will be iconic for a profound cardinal insertion - identifying new symbolic forms construction through a kind of a total dismantling of ancient symbolic form tissues, a qualitative jump model embodied in this historical necessity status. Because the life of forms cannot articulate a total physical response to the encyclopedia of motifs, it nourishes itself from another access to knowledge and evolves towards a freedom, to encode a counter point of resistance, getting out of submission and launching in the world a set of contradictory items. Therefore historical inheritance and, on the other side, detachment in different intensity degree up to a total physical response of a renewal, is a testimony of the complexity a stylistic form points its signature in an epoch. At this point, we find ourselves in a new receptacle, opposite to a certain extent, as compared with the semiotic/ hermeneutical sequences forged by P.Basso Fossali or A. Béguin's hermeneutic comprehension, these latter generally subordinated to an overlapping phenomenon, conducive to an overall outlook.

What appears at first glance is the two philosophers do not take the form as historically well- defined but as inherited object -, whereas Focillon's pinpoints in the second quotation a phenomenon of a break epitomized as tension généalogique (1934 : 60)[5] - a process through which, we remember, the artist gives shape to matter launching vivid forces in a process of new forms hatching, There is a composite process entailing new matters crystallized in a refined evidence, and interference appears in both semiotic and hermeneutic terms in Basso Fossali and A.Béguin's sense and sensibility. The composition of the symbolic form is interference and becomes vivid creation in advancing throughout history, while it undertakes a step in diachronic all together with a discovery and signature of a contemplation of its archeology, But, on the other hand, Focillon's genealogic tension becomes a bridge builder towards a tough break between past and present energy of the form, in terms of a freedom out of a necessity as a climax. Genealogic tension and freedom out of a necessity in the vividness of the form evolving place themselves in a relation of complementarity. Between these scientists above analyzed visions one can observe a point counter-point that brings into account the idea of transience (previous theories by Basso Fossali) versus immanence, a genealogic tension conducive to a break.(encompassed in one of Focillon's theory)

The lifeblood of the becoming is transience and is delivered by the idea of interconnectivity that means overlapping, as a crystal-clear well-defined historical becoming. On the contrary, on the other side, it is a quintessential happening of a renewal as cultural experience, in Focillon's terms second quotation. His idea of the symbolic form changing as a perpetually necessity to perceive and find its liberty appears different and breaking in depths with the idea of transience.

And at the same time, for all of these thinkers it is the universal human need to nourish itself with beauty, the ever changing beauty in glimpses and sparks.

We continue our studies of cases in this second quotation of Focillon's terms in music, for example, finding that the form becomes the content itself in C. Debussy 's impressionist imprint as compared with the classical dodecaphonic well- defined frame, not only in terms of the tough delimitation between the inter-chain of a symphony parts, but in terms of a fluidity of the sounds chains, as a melting into their own flows. It is an example of a form tendency to find his liberty out of a necessity. The same process appears in impressionist painting - a melting process and transitivity of colors in the purity of the atmosphere shining with infinity of hues, from luminous waves to symmetrically foggy deployments, whereas in poetry a crown of euphonies embrace themselves in the realm of the Synesthesia and Correspondences. The form tendency to find its liberty out of a necessity is a Significant for this new impressionist Signifié based on a melting of tough contours in the splendor of their pure tonalities, or in the hues fade of colors.

It is, to a certain extent, an iconic image of impressionism in this quintessential liberty of a matter ready to find a getting out of the tough classical contour and an embodiment of identifying the color with the purity of the atmosphere, for example. Fade of well-defined lines, flows of colors inconstancy and transitive contours from one bunch of sounds to another with their entry into dissonances, peculiar for both evolving in painting and in music, are not only landmarks of the epoch, but the burst of an immanence seal of it.

As great amounts of clarity coming from mineral lights like, glimpsed into pure waves of terrestrial waters as they are flowing in Debussy's exquisite sonorities, reflex of gems made of solar luxury or of oceans of lights, they will make room to new well-defined forms of experimentalism, either later in German expressionism or Russian one, these two latter from far letting the world know a certain pressure of the coming triple crisis of the modernity. Debussy's with the peculiar refined kindness waters music or impression of the moon underlined by uncertainty of the nighty clouds moving, rather answers the call of taking shape in the neighborhood of the Romantic Lamartine's Ici gronde le fleuve aux vagues écumates/ Il s'élève et s'enfonce dans un lointain obscur / Lã le lac immobile étale ses eaux dormantes/ Où l'étoile du ciel s'élève dans l'azur// Debussy however didn't consider himself neither a Romantic nor an Impressionist, one can finally conclude he overtakes an impressive exquisite cutting edge forging of an own path, if we only take into consideration slightly correspondences between, for example, Clair de lune and L'après midi d'un Faune.

In terms of contemporary music the erasing of both solar magic and well- balanced embroidery of dodecaphonic sounds is the result of a plowing into the inspiring mystery complexity though with a return in a failure. It is almost near the aesthetics of the ugly, without finding the torch of revelation. If pre-modern music elaborated by impressionists finds a kind of form climax, a magnetic field into the same generative stems of musical phrases in waves - not parts or logical chained sequences as in dodecaphonic however - of fluidity, later on, in contemporary music there is a break up occurring, manifested in a strange stylistic form, completely out of ancient harmony, with total response to the call of liberation, a genealogic tension crystalizing in a liberation out of a necessity driven by the spiritual crisis, a bitter liberation in dis-harmony, strangeness of tragic dissonances, measure of the liberty in the interior of a cage of the absurd. Harmony dismantling becomes the iconic sign of both the fade of the classical gems, but is also measure of the above mentioned modern triple crisis- with a turbulent overwhelming painful echo in the contemporary musical trends, The flow of strange sounds illogically and willingly connected remembering the strangeness of the surrealist mix of absurd dream and reality, symbolize forms generated by a crisis. These forms appear as a result of an interminglement with surprising stunning sounds crystallized in noises, entailing a sudden plunging into a childish like horizon with an effect of non-harmonious stormy like musical phrases.- there are dissonances touching the climax of both tragic and absurd deployments in the music of composers as Schnitke or M. Weinberg. But they are secretaries of the epoch, with their peculiar violin placed in background making room to profound cello sorrow or brass, experimentalists of the experiment, more near the still well woven deployments in a synthesis, undertaken by modernists like G.Mahler, A.Bruckner or even by the Russian experimentalists rich in creativity, they are however far from experimental works belonging to K.Orf 's Carmina Burana or Bolero by Ravel.These latter flourish in a new way of expressing the harmony of life, though asymmetrically different as compared with the glorious youth of the dodecaphonic music.

The Stylistic Matrix – Signifiant 3/ S(3) for a Bunch of Stylistic Factors as Signifié

Bearing an arch-type category valence, the stylistic matrix, which is a cardinal item of Blaga's philosophical system, represents a seal that can impregnate art pieces, metaphysical visions, doctrines and scientific discoveries, bringing them together in a receptacle of an epoch or making possible the epochs to mirror themselves. It is a metaphysics of realities beyond the sensible world and a key for understanding the creative processes of thinking at a large flexible scale, being both tangible and also distinctive of Kant's or Spengler's, tangible as it continues and enriches the same thread, namely the thread of the categories, distinctive, because is held for measure of a much more larger and kaleidoscopic vision, based on the collective unconscious. We shed light, in this study, of featuring the well- known stylistic matrix as a Significant generous cloak gathering abyssal categories as Signifié all together taken as Sign uncovering new meanings throughout an epoch punch lined by certain shining landmarks in art and science. The stylistic matrix as concept of evolving throughout history is, in fact, the emergence of the creative generative sense of art and scientific embodiments. It is tangent to a certain extent with the soul of a culture in Spengler's terms. But it is, particularly, a receptacle of different domains correspondence based on a kind of emergence embracing the commonality of abyssal categories. The stylistic matrix shapes and reshapes the products of the rationality as an administrator, by its factors of essentiality, located in the outside of the linear history, the history in depths of the collective memory. The stylistic matrix appears as universal key for number of humans, peoples, even a part of mankind in a certain epoch, paradoxically discontinuous though undertaking interconnectivities.

The phenomenon is proved, in the philosopher's vision, by the stylistic steadfastness of some creations. It is about a stylistic unity, characterized by a common degree of purity against the grain of the psychological milieu, disrupted, uncertain, non-linear, vibrant and kaleidoscopic in which a unity appears (Blaga, 2011:143), by a unifying common factor however. The random projects of the consciousness would be out of a profound comprehension without the stable layer of this commonality of style established by its quintessential patterns, - which is not, as a matter of fact the gift, the talent, the latter remains a cosmological mystery in the philosopher's vision, - these patterns bear a hidden value in decision-making on the symbolic forms creation spread throughout art, metaphysics, science, culture. Once imprinted into the unconscious, it remains generally stable not answering the conscious call, an example being its continuity as a guiding seal against the grain of the normativity as cultural pressure, of the epoch milieu. Blaga takes in this respect the case or R. M. Rilke who overflew a poetical work much more foldable with a common stylistic matrix belonging to a medieval mystic, rather than to the bourgeois materialism - a climate at a climax during his life. The gift pushes the author, generally, to explore the realm of arch-types generative in turn of opening gates for some forms endowed with essentiality of symbols, a propensity of this attitude being common for number of poets seduced by the primordial logos discovery, by mystical and magic flows of utterances against the grain even, of the fashionable imposed modes of modern milieu. These were examples generative for a cultural Sign releasing the meaning of a semiotic Significant as stylistic matrix encompassing number of stylistic factors as universal cultural Signifié.

On the other hand an empirical scientific tool appears side by side as a stylistic factor achieving a commonality in artistic achievements during the second half of the 19th Century, represented in the idea of sensation primacy and that of intuition. Deconstruction of the tough frames specific in classical works and the replacement with fluidity contents issued from one another, the flood of colors reversed into broken contours, are also echoes of the transient consciousness estates empowered and driven by Bergson's revelatory intuition process - Blaga develops in the Cosmological trilogy (2015) We have seen fading the well-defined lines in painting, giving up of consecrated structures and fluidity of sounds in an overwhelming of broken boundaries, were dominated by the aurora of the first intuitive sensation. This kind of generation for symbolic forms are signs of the tough trend of unchaining stable contours, an intensive incarnation of a freedom out of a necessity, But sensation as constant tool of observing phenomena in Physics of the 19th Century is completed by inconstancy of sensation which is fugitive in both painting and impressionist music of the epoch, in a dialectics that Blaga considers a stylistic matrix formation based on the very common core of the idea of sensation as stylistic factor. On the other hand the still presence of portraits or of landscapes which are in a faint though classical mimesis, in more advanced periods of modernity theses maintained pertinent plans will fully disappear making room to only suggestions - an example : lines and angles of lines into abstract drawings, signifying not only the need of the form to touch a new liberty, bitter this time, poignant, abstract and thus engraving the seal of a split from mimesis and equally from the transcendent realm, encapsulated in the triple modernity crisis - of faith, of consciousness and of language - the modern cubism. The broken line in this lineage is a stylistic matrix, a Significant unifying number of stylistic factors as a Signifié of the abstract, a Sign bearing the meaning of the modern process known as the transcendent dismantling.

We have seen a first Receptacle of understanding delivered in terms of the sensation inconstancy as stylistic core for the cardinal stylistic features belonging to impressionist painting. And a second Receptacle of comprehension is delivered in terms of the sensation constancy as stylistic core for the cardinal stylistic category manifested in the Physics of the epoch characterized by exquisite accuracy, and for both realist and naturalist literary schools, equally, as Blaga pointed. The first Receptacle with its peculiar inconstancy of the sensation guiding the fluidity of a sensible artistic image enters in the same stylistic matrix with the second Receptacle with its lineage towards sensorial constancy that guides with microscopic accuracy the image of an epoch. Constancy of sensation as observation tool for precise empirical scientific findings emergent with the inconstancy of transient sensations - in paintings contours of colors losing themselves with joy and pleasure in the splendor of the silent and peaceful atmosphere - these are composite stylistic factors whose iconic generative core operates identification in the idea of sensation as guiding valence. It is the evidence of a stylistic matrix and, on the other hand, it cuts its path in the epoch as a liberty out of a necessity to give up traditional precise contours, frames, themes, an embodiment of an epoch cultural Sign.

As for the Romantics with their tendency to equally get out of the accuracy of the well balanced classical geography of forms and to design a flood of emotional contents into an ever unchained harmonious richness of sounds- they go shoulder by shoulder with the open hearted fascination of the Romantic poets in their nature worshiping, featuring a doublet of vivid forms, The sounds organize themselves in waves getting out of sequences or consecrated parts of symphonies crystalizing around the idea of an insight of emotions. Les Quatre Impromptus of F.Schubert clearly articulate the call of certain Romantic poems, there are musical lines of waters with their fluent messages sent and mirrored symbolically in the fluency of poetical euphonies as for instance, again, Lamartine's *Ici gronde le fleuve aux vagues écumantes……*The central core of this stylistic matrix, on the other hand, is the generative emotional profound layer shining and unifying music and poetry for the Romantic symbolic form existence in the world. The emotion is the very fabric of this stylistic matrix formation and an arch -type sub floor of creativity entailing a symbolic form blooming as artistic fact in a fact of a culture, by the unity two domains of the same epoch.. But not only, one can observe, also, emotional embroideries encapsulated in richness of musical waves of a Romantic composer, F.Schubert, alongside with the poetical correspondences were preserved to a certain extent in the stylistic matrix as a mirror of an impressionist propensity - liquid lunar crystals melt in complex flows peculiar for Debussy's waters music, or his Fireworks so sparkly glamorous, are significances of understanding them in both the grid of the form's tendency to reformulate itself in a liberty out of a its necessity, but also in a tendency of a time transforming without losing its Romantic plans of pertinence. The White Romantic Ballets Chopiniana, are clear cut in a Romantic immanence reminding the endless embroideries of fluid flows in the neighborhood of Schubert's. And the Ballet Giselle (music Adolphe Adam), with the theme of the exquisite inconstancy of existence in realms beyond, under a spell, seems to be a relative, a projection of some themes belonging to Keats Romantic masterpiece, Endymion, like love, betrayal, forgiveness growing in the atmosphere of white purity of an existence beyond under a spell. Many of these common stylistic factors of the works evoked and peculiar for the romantic epoch gather in the focus of a stylistic matrix formation – which is an emotional inward blooming in symbolic forms as deployments that had released their cultural signature across centuries.

One can conclude a semiotic/ hermeneutic construction was drawn as a theory, with some applications, in a probability.

THE COMPLETED TASK, A FACILITATOR OF LINGUISTIC ACQUISITION IN TANDEM LEARNING OF FRENCH L2 AND SPANISH L3: A SOCIOLINGUISTIC PERSPECTIVE

Maria Jianu
PhD, National University of Science and Technology, "Politehnica" Bucharest, University Center of Pitești

Abstract: This article investigates the instructional, cognitive and sociolinguistic functions of the completed task—conceived as the already solved, transparent and reusable learning model—in the tandem learning of French L2 and Spanish L3 in Romanian secondary education. Drawing on Task-Based Language Teaching (Ellis, 2003), Input Processing Theory (VanPatten, 2015), cross-linguistic similarity research (Ringbom, 2007), intercultural competence (Byram, 1997), and socio-affective motivation theory (Gardner, 1985), the study argues that completed tasks operate simultaneously as cognitive scaffolds, attitudinal anchors and sociolinguistic artefacts. Through classroom micro-studies and paradigmatic examples (grammar-in-context, comparative clitic structures, pragmatic registers, periphrastic constructions) the paper demonstrates how model-based tasks activate noticing, catalyze positive transfer between the two Romance languages, and promote sociocultural awareness. The completed task becomes therefore a persistent linguistic presence—a methodological device that stabilizes interlanguage patterns while fostering learner autonomy and intercultural competence.

Keywords: tandem learning; completed task; positive transfer; sociolinguistic competence; interlanguage.

1. Introducere

Predarea limbilor romanice ca limbi a treia (L3) într-un cadru liceal impune metode de lucru şi strategii de învăţare care să valorifice atât proximitatea tipologică a sistemelor, cât și nevoia de claritate educaţională a elevilor presupunând şi o anume tensiune, dar şi un beneficiu lingvistic.

În România, tandemul franceză–spaniolă ilustrează favorabil, în mare parte, această tensiune: similitudinea lexicală și morfosintactică oferă premise favorabile pentru transfer pozitiv, dar poate genera și interferențe. În acest context, sarcina de lucru îndeplinită (model oferit, produs didactic rezolvat) apare ca un instrument robust: ea oferă o evidență imediată a formei şi funcţiei, reduce sarcina cognitivă a elevului şi constituie un punct de orientare pentru comparaţii interlingvistice.

Articolul prezent propune o dezvoltare teoretică şi aplicativă a ideii de completed task, argumentează modul în care sarcina completă facilitează procesarea inputului, susține reciclarea structurată, stimulează noticing (observarea) și consolidează atitudini favorabile. În plus, se oferă un mini-studiu de clasă cu exemple FR (français)/ES (español) create pentru a ilustra impactul practic al sarcinii completate asupra competenței gramaticale, a transferului și a dimensiunii sociolingvistice.

2. Cadru teoretic: funcțiile pedagogice ale sarcinii completate

2.1. Task-Based Language Teaching (învăţarea prin sarcini de lucru) și valoarea exemplului rezolvat

Task-Based Language Teaching valorifică rezolvarea sarcinilor autentice ca motor principal al achiziției, întrucât expune elevul la utilizarea reală a limbii în contexte semnificative (Rod Ellis, 2003). În acest cadru, exemplul rezolvat oferă un model procedural care reduce incertitudinea și facilitează internalizarea etapelor lingvistice și cognitive necesare

Ellis (2003) arată că TBLT (Task-Based Language Teaching) favorizează învățarea atunci când sarcinile expun elevii la regularități detectabile şi la oportunități de reciclare structurată. Un model complet este modul util de a inventaria aceste regularități pentru practica ulterioară: oferă patternuri vizibile, reutilizabile, pe care elevul le poate analiza și reproduce fără a porni de la noţiuni teoretice abstracte.

2.2.Input processing și noticing

VanPatten (2015) subliniază prioritatea procesării semnificației în detrimentul formei. Totuşi, atunci când forma este însoțită de sens într-un exemplu clar (completed task), elevul devine capabil să „notice (să observe)" (Schmidt, 1990) caracteristici relevante și să le integreze în reprezentări operative. Richard Schmidt a formulat conceptul de noticing pentru a sublinia că achiziția reală a unei forme lingvistice nu se produce decât atunci când elevul observă în mod conștient apariția acelei forme în input, ideea fiind că simplele expuneri pasive la limbă nu sunt suficiente fără acest moment cognitiv de „sesizare" activă.

2.3.Transfer interlingvistic și similaritate tipologică

Transferul interlingvistic se referă la influențele pe care cunoștințele despre o limbă anterioară le exercită asupra achiziției unei limbi noi, atât la nivel lexical, cât și gramatical (Odlin,1989). În acest proces, similaritatea tipologică între limbi joacă un rol esențial, deoarece structurile apropiate favorizează recunoașterea pattern-urilor și accelerarea învățării (Ringbom, 2007). Astfel, elevii care posedă deja cunoştinţe într- o limbă romanică pot manifesta avantaje în învățarea altei limbi romanice, printr-o transferare pozitivă a schemelor existente (Jarvis & Pavlenko, 2008). Totuși, același fenomen poate genera și erori, mai ales atunci când asemănările sunt doar aparente, conducând la suprageneralizări. Prin urmare, analiza raportului dintre transfer și similaritate tipologică rămâne centrală pentru înțelegerea mecanismelor psiholingvistice ale multilingvismului.

Ringbom (2007) demonstrează că similitudinile între limbi ajută la transferul pozitiv, dar cu condiția ca elevul să dispună de repere explicite. Modelul completat oferă acele repere, permițând compararea sistematică Franceză–Spaniolă și observarea diferențelor de suprafață.

2.4.Dimensiunea socio-afectivă şi plus/minus afectarea învăţării

Gardner (1985) arată legătura strânsă dintre feedback-ul pozitiv, sentimentul de succes și motivația integrativă. O sarcină completată, vizibilă și verificabilă, oferă tocmai o astfel de probă imediată a reușitei, ceea ce sporește angajamentul și predispoziția elevului spre practica suplimentară. In realitatea practicii de la clasă se întâlneşte şi feed-back-ul negativ- modelul oferit reprezintă doar un şablon cognitiv, un model al profesorului care poate fi repetat în cât mai multe variaţii de nivel de limbă ţintit. Însă, cunoscută fiind între elevi atitudinea de tipul „ modelul îl citeşte profesorul", afectarea negativă în prezenţa modelului creşte, iar achiziţia poate fi întârziată sau ignorată. Elevul ştie ca profesorul ştie, iar modelul mai poate aştepta chiar până la un alt model rezolvat oferit.

3. Restructurarea cognitivă: cum construiește modelul completat o interlimbă stabilă

Sarcina rezolvată acționează ca scaffold cognitiv: ea oferă o schemă (template) pe care elevul o poate aplica în contexte variate. Prin repetare și variație controlată, elevul trece de la recunoaștere la producție, de la input la output, consolidând procesele de automatizare. DeKeyser (2007) și Swain (2005) subliniază importanța output-ului ghidat pentru restructurarea interlingvistică; completed task produce exact acel output dirijat, cu efecte asupra reorganizării morfosintactice.

În tandem, această reorganizare capătă o dimensiune comparativă: elevii dezvoltă un metasistem romanic, un set intern de reguli și analogii care funcționează între FRançais și ESpañol, reducând efortul cognitiv al învățării de noi forme. Aşadar, restructurarea cognitivă presupune reorganizarea continuă a reprezentărilor lingvistice, iar sarcina deja rezolvată poate oferi un model procedural complet asupra căruia elevul își stabilizează interlimba (Krashen, 1982). Observarea etapelor din soluția model favorizează identificarea relațiilor formă–sens și permite automatizarea treptată a schemelor gramaticale (Ellis, 2003). În același timp, modelul oferit reduce incertitudinea și mediază trecerea de la strategiile de „supraviețuire" lingvistică la structuri mai complexe și mai robuste (Michael H. Long, 2015). Pentru elevii de liceu, acest tip de ancorare vizuală și procedurală sprijină dezvoltarea unei interlimbi stabile, mai puțin expuse regresiilor. Astfel, sarcina rezolvată devine un instrument de reconfigurare cognitivă, nu doar un exemplu ilustrativ.

4. Sarcina completată ca artefact sociolingvistic: includerea contextului cultural Byram (1997) susține că competența interculturală se dezvoltă prin expunerea la practici și norme. Completed task devine artefactul în care forma gramaticală şi funcţia pragmatică sunt însoţite de elemente culturale: tradiții, evenimente urbane, registre, formule de adresare. Astfel, modelul nu doar clarifică forma, ci o leagă de un comportament social, ceea ce facilitează tranziția de la cunoaștere la utilizare.

Astfel, integrarea contextului cultural în momentul prezentării unei sarcini deja rezolvate contribuie la activarea cunoștințelor de fundal și la formarea unei perspective interculturale asupra limbii țintă (Byram, 1997, Clevedon). În acest sens, cultura funcționează ca un cadru interpretativ ce conferă semnificaţie structurilor lingvistice, facilitând procesul de noticing al elementelor nou apărute (Kramsch, 1993). De asemenea, exemplul rezolvat cu ancorare culturală poate stimula motivația și poate crea o legătură autentică între obiectivele sarcinii și experiențele elevilor (Widdowson, 2003). În plus, includerea aspectelor culturale reduce impresia artificială a exercițiilor pur formale, mutând accentul de pe repetare mecanică pe sensul comunicării. Astfel, predarea devine un proces holistic, în care înțelegerea limbii se dezvoltă simultan cu înțelegerea culturii.

5. Mini-studiu didactic: exemple FR/ES și analiza rezultatelor (set de sarcini model)

Odată cu studiul am aplicat un set de sarcini-model (inventate pentru scop ilustrativ) într-o clasă de liceu (grup-pilot 30 de elevi), pentru a observa efectul completed task asupra transferului și atitudinii. Următoarele exemple sunt reprezentative:

5.1.Exemple FR – gramatică contextualizată (Ellis, 2003)

Model (obligation culturelle): « En France, pour respecter les traditions familiales, il faut préparer un repas spécial pour Noël. »
Sarcină: Complète en t'appuyant sur le modèle.
Producții: « En Bretagne, pour la Chandeleur, il faut préparer des crêpes pour toute la famille.

» — elevii evidențiază forma il faut și o utilizează în contexte regionale, demonstrând generalizarea funcțională.
Model (narativ, passé composé vs imparfait):
« Quand j'étais petit, j'allais à Montmartre, mais un jour j'ai rencontré un peintre. »
Sarcină: Transformă propoziții după model. Elevii au produs 86% corect formule contrastive (imperfect vs passé composé).

5.2.Exemple ES – gramatică contextualizată (VanPatten, 2015)
Model (futuro perifrástico):
« Mañana voy a participar en la Feria del Libro de Madrid. »
Sarcină: Crea una frase similar. 82% elevi au replicat corect construcția ir a + infinitivo în contexte personale.
Model (ser/estar):
« Barcelona es multicultural, pero hoy está llena por las fiestas. »
Elevii au reprodus diferența semnificativă între proprietăți permanente/temporare ale verbelor ser și estar în 78% din încercări.

5.3. Exemple comparative FR–ES (transfer pozitiv; fundamentare: Ringbom, 2007)
Model clitici (COD-complement obiect direct/COI-complement obiect indirect):
FR: « Je le lui donne. » — ES: « Yo se lo doy. »
Sarcină: produceţi propoziții cu dublu clitic; elevii au înțeles necesitatea dublei pronominalizări COD+COI și au realizat corect 75% din exemple, notând particularitatea că în spaniolă pronumele le devine se în rolul de complement indirect.

5.4.Compoziție paradigmatică și variație regională (Byram, 1997)
FR (registre): Tu (informal) → Vouvoiement (formal):
« Tu veux venir ? » → « Souhaitez-vous venir ? »
ES (variație): « coger el autobús » (ES) ↔ « tomar el camión »
Sarcina a demonstrat capacitatea elevilor de a adapta limbajul la registre și norme regionale: 70% adaptări sunt funcționale.

6. Impact atitudinal și metacognitiv: observații și interpretări (Gardner, 1985)

Învățarea limbilor străine prin intermediul modelelor de lucru deja rezolvate poate genera un impact atitudinal vizibil, datorită sentimentului de siguranță pe care elevii îl resimt în fața unei sarcini cunoscute. Contactul cu o soluție finalizată reduce anxietatea lingvistică și sporește încrederea în propriile abilități, mai ales la vârsta liceului, când atitudinile pot fluctua considerabil (Krashen,1982). În plus, disponibilitatea unui astfel de model încurajează procesele metacognitive, deoarece elevii pot compara propriile strategii cu pașii demonstrați, reflectând asupra modului în care pot transfera aceste strategii la sarcini noi (Rod Ellis, 2003). De exemplu, elevul poate identifica secvențe lingvistice recurente și le poate integra în repertoriul său activ, ceea ce întărește autonomia învățării. În același timp, observarea modului în care sensul este construit în soluția-model îi ajută pe elevi să înțeleagă logica discursului, nu doar forma superficială. Acest tip de învățare poate stimula motivația, deoarece succesul aparent ușor de replicat determină o atitudine pozitivă față de disciplină. Mai mult, prezentarea unei sarcini deja îndeplinite deschide spațiul pentru noticing focalizat pe elemente critice, ceea ce duce la reglarea fină a interlimbii (Long, 2015). În consecință, elevul nu doar reproduce, ci interpretează și articulează propriile strategii de învățare. Astfel, impactul atitudinal favorabil se conjugă cu dezvoltarea unor mecanisme metacognitive avansate. În final, integrarea sistematică a sarcinilor rezolvate poate transforma învățarea lingvistică într-un proces reflexiv, orientat spre auto-reglare și progres continuu.

7. Observațiile de la clasă (instrument: chestionar pre/post + portofolii de sarcini) arată:

Percepția utilității: 90% dintre elevi raportează că modelele completate „fac limba accesibilă" (self-report).

Motivația: frecvența implicării autodidacte a crescut (elevii au urmărit materiale autentice după ce au reușit sarcini primite după un model).

Conștientizarea interlingvistică: 75% au declarat că înțeleg mai bine analogiile FR↔ES. Aceste fenomene corespund ipotezei că completed task funcționează ca probe de succes imediate, care alimentează ciclul motivațional descris de Gardner și favorizează practica ulterioară.

8. Discuție critică: limite, riscuri și recomandări metodologice

8.1.Limite și riscuri

Dependența de model: există riscul ca elevii să aplice modelul în mod mecanic, fără înțelegere. De aceea, este necesară alternanța cu sarcini de producție liberă.

Utilizarea modelelor de lucru deja rezolvate poate prezenta limite importante, deoarece elevii riscă să adopte o atitudine pasivă, focalizându-se pe reproducerea soluției fără a construi propriile strategii. Uneori, familiaritatea cu sarcina finalizată poate reduce implicarea cognitivă și încetini dezvoltarea creativității lingvistice (Krashen, 1982). De asemenea, concentrarea excesivă pe un model unic poate favoriza suprageneralizările și formarea unor automatisme rigide, dificil de ajustat ulterior (Ellis, 2003). În anumite contexte, elevii pot dezvolta o dependență didactică, așteptând permanent „soluția-etalon" înainte de a încerca o producție proprie. Mai mult, exemplul rezolvat poate masca ambiguitățile sau opțiunile alternative de formulare, reducând astfel flexibilitatea discursivă necesară comunicării reale (Long, 2015). În aceste situații, riscul este ca interlimba să se stabilizeze prematur pe structuri insuficient explorate. Pe termen lung, elevii ar putea întâmpina dificultăți în situații noi, în care modelul anterior nu este aplicabil. Prin urmare, profesorul trebuie să echilibreze prezentarea soluțiilor-model cu activități de explorare și producție autonomă.

8.2.Recomandări practice

Cicluri scurte de sarcini + reciclare: sarcini scurte, frecvente, cu feedback imediat.
Portofolii: colectiv de sarcini completate pentru monitorizare îndelungată.

Task design intercultural: include elemente culturale autentice, pentru a lega forma de practică socială.

Activități comparative: explicitarea transferului (maparea formelor) pentru a preveni erorile.

9. Concluzii

Argumentul central al acestui studiu este că sarcina de lucru îndeplinită — prezentată ca model complet, rezolvat și reproductibil — este un instrument metodic privilegiat pentru învățarea tandem franceză–spaniolă în liceu: ea stabilizează pattern-uri, reduce anxietatea, activează transferul pozitiv și ancorează forma în practici socioculturale reale. Completed task transformă limba dintr-un obiect curricular într-o prezență activă: limbajul devine „la îndemână" și util, iar elevii dezvoltă atât competență sociolingvistică, cât și autonomie metacognitivă.

Pe termen lung, încorporarea sistematică a sarcinilor completate în curriculum L3 poate contribui la formarea unui spațiu romanic interior la elev — o rețea de repere lingvistice și culturale interoperabile care facilitează învățarea succesivă și transferul pozitiv.

În ansamblu, analiza propusă conduce la conturarea unei poziții teoretice ferme: sarcina de lucru deja îndeplinită, prezentată elevilor ca model integral, rezolvat și potențial reproductibil, poate funcționa drept mecanism didactic privilegiat în învățarea tandem a limbilor franceză (L2) și spaniolă (L3) la nivel liceal. Acest tip de instrumentare a învățării nu se limitează la imitarea unui proces finalizat, ci reorientează atenția elevului către relația dintre formă, sens și context, permițând stabilizarea unor pattern-uri lingvistice care, în mod obișnuit, ar necesita expuneri repetate și îndelungate. În același timp, sarcina completată diminuează incertitudinea și reduce anxietatea lingvistică, oferind cursanților un cadru predictibil în care pot opera un transfer pozitiv între cele două limbi romanice, valorificând în mod direct similaritățile tipologice și repertoriile deja disponibile.

Mai mult, includerea sistematică a acestui tip de model conduce la activarea autonomiei metacognitive, elevii fiind încurajați să observe, să compare și să adapteze strategiile lingvistice exemplificate, ceea ce contribuie la formarea unei interlimbi mai stabile, susținute de procese de noticing și restructurare cognitivă. Prin ancorarea sarcinii în practici socioculturale reale, dimensiunea curriculară a limbii este resemnificată, iar limbajul tinde să fie perceput mai puțin ca obiect strict de învăţare și mai mult ca instrument social funcțional, capabil să genereze interacțiune, interpretare și negociere de sens.

În timp, integrarea configurată curricular a sarcinilor completate în predarea L3 poate contribui la formarea unui „spațiu romanic interior”, înțeles ca rețea de repere lingvistice și culturale convergente, susceptibile să susțină un proces continuu de transfer pozitiv, achiziție succesivă și consolidare identitar-lingvistică. În acest fel, învățarea tandem franceză–spaniolă devine nu doar o extensie a curriculumului, ci un cadru de dezvoltare plurilingvă structurată, cu efecte durabile asupra motivației, reprezentărilor lingvistice și competenței socioculturale a elevilor.

NON-LINGUISTIC DOMAINS: A STRESS-FREE PATHWAY TO FOREIGN LANGUAGE LEARNING

Maria Jianu

Abstract: Foreign language learning in secondary education is often hindered by anxiety, performance pressure, and fear of linguistic error. This article investigates how non-linguistic domains—such as literature, the arts, law, medicine, and history—can serve as stress-free environments that lower the affective filter and stimulate spontaneous communication in L2 French and L3 Spanish. Grounded in Krashen's affective filter hypothesis and Deci and Ryan's self-determination theory, the paper argues that interdisciplinary tasks create emotionally safe contexts in which language becomes a functional tool rather than an evaluated object. Five application-based units demonstrate how the same group of high school learners can acquire linguistic competence implicitly when the teacher introduces French and Spanish through non-threatening, domain-specific activities. The study highlights the study advantages of integrating cross-curricular learning strategies to enhance learner confidence, motivation, cultural awareness, and communicative fluency.

Keywords: non-linguistic domains; stress-free learning; simultaneous L2 and L3 learning; crosscurricular learning; cultural awareness

1. Introducere

Studiile în achiziția limbilor străine au evidenţiat rolul decisiv al factorilor emoționali în succesul sau eșecul învățării, dar şi o componentă sociolingvistică a învăţării pe domenii de interes, în cazurile la care facem referinţă fiind vorba chiar de domenii non-lingvistice. Anxietatea lingvistică, teama de ridicol, presiunea performanței și frica de evaluare ridică „filtrul afectiv" (Krashen, 1982), blocând accesul la procesarea inputului. În același timp, din perspectivă sociolingvistică, identitatea elevului se negociază la ore, iar limbile străine pot deveni spații cu risc social ridicat. Elevii se tem de imaginea lor, de statut, de comparația cu colegii. Aceste tensiuni se pot amplifica atunci când elevii studiază simultan limba franceză (L2) și limba spaniolă (L3)în regim opţional, la propunerea şcolii şi prin alegere consimţită de grupul de elevi, ocazionâdu-se uneori un spaţiu de învăţare în care diferențele de structură și ritm de învățare generează presiuni suplimentare.

Studiile arată că elevii se simt vulnerabili în contexte în care limba este obiectul evaluării, dar se relaxează atunci când limba devine un instrument pentru alt tip de activitate (Dörnyei, 1994). Domeniile non-lingvistice reprezintă o alegere metodică facută de profesor tocmai pentru a atenua stresul, deplasând atenția de pe elev și performanța sa către sarcină și conținutul non-lingvistic. Astfel, chiar dacă activitatea de învăţare se desfășoară în limba străină, elevii percep contextul ca fiind „mai sigur", uneori ca „familiar", ceea ce reduce momentele emoționale negative.

Prin urmare, integrarea domeniilor non-lingvistice în orele de L2 și L3 contribuie simultan la reducerea stresului, la reconstruirea identității pozitive de vorbitor și la normalizarea erorii ca parte a învățării. Aceste aspecte favorizează construirea unui atitudinal personalizat şi dozat în funcţie de o anume siguranţă în abordarea limbii-se abordează domeniul înainte de toate, ulterior (dar şi implicit) limba.

Există chiar şi o dimensiune afectivă/psihologică generată de domeniile non-lingvistice. Astfel, cercetările contemporane în psiholingvistică și pedagogia limbilor străine subliniază rolul fundamental al factorilor afectivi în procesul de învățare. Anxietatea, teama de greșeală și presiunea evaluării pot bloca accesul elevilor la achiziţia lingvistică, prin creşterea nivelului „filtrului afectiv” (Krashen, 1982,). Elevii de liceu care studiază simultan limba franceză (L2) și limba spaniolă (L3) pot deveni deosebit de vulnerabili, deoarece trebuie să gestioneze două sisteme lingvistice noi în același timp, adesea cu niveluri variabile de încredere și competență.

În ideea atenuării acestor reacţii din partea elevilor, readucem în atenţie nevoia de autodeterminare, iar în acest sens, teoria autodeterminării susține că motivația intrinsecă se dezvoltă atunci când elevii percep activitatea ca fiind relevantă, plăcută și conectată la interesele personale (Deci & Ryan, 1985). Domeniile non-lingvistice — literatură, arte, drept, medicină, istorie — oferă tocmai acest cadru. În astfel de contexte, limba devine un instrument necesar pentru realizarea sarcinii, nu obiectul direct al evaluării, ceea ce permite o producție lingvistică naturală, autentică și lipsită de presiune, un studiu orientat spre nevoi, nu spre ceva stresant, lipsit uneori de determinarea cuvenită pentru a se obţine rezultate ale învăţării.

În cele ce urmează sunt prezentate cinci unități aplicative, fiecare demonstrând modul în care activitățile non-lingvistice pot transforma radical experiența de învățare în L2 și L3 la liceu.

2. Unitatea 1: Beletristica – literatura ca spațiu expresiv și non-evaluativ

Cadru teoretic

Literatura stimulează imaginația, emoția și gândirea simbolică, facilitând starea de „flow” în învățare (Csikszentmihalyi, 1990). În acest cadru, atenția elevilor se îndreaptă către poveste și sens, nu către gramatică, ceea ce reduce anxietatea și favorizează exprimarea spontană. Poate mai mult ca oricare dintre domeniile expuse aici, literatura se apropie de registrul lingvistic, fără a sentenţia, din contră, prin a propune prezenţe literare de autori şi personaje şi prin a supune atenţiei personaje şi destine/acţiuni demne de a fi urmărite atent chiar şi prin intermediul comunicării acestora, cu ajutorul limbajului, fruct al exercitării funcţiei literare; astfel, uneori elevii ajung să manifeste interes direct pentru memorarea unor fragmente literare care scot în evidenţă un personaj sau altul, cuvinte în contexte lingvistice pe care şi le doresc vii, resurse la care pot apela oricând, reprezentative pentru un stil literar, un autor, un curent literar sau pur şi simplu pentru apropierea dintre ei şi un personaj sau o situaţie . Literatura îi ajută pe elevi să redea cât mai exact şi cât mai plăcut anumite momente din lucrările literare, sau chiar să imite un personaj cu accent pe atitudinile sale, pe limbaj, ceea ce denotă o evidenţă clară a reprezentărilor literare în viaţa lor şi ajută la construirea unui complex de atitudini ce vizează apropierea de limbă, de limbaj prin înlănţuirea funcţiilor acestuia în context literar reflectat în realitate.

Le Petit Prince de Antoine de Saint-Exupéry este o carte ce oferă un bun exerciţiu pentru redarea de fragmente de text în franceză, ocazie ca elevii să citească fragmente simplificate și să creeze o „planetă proprie”, descriind în franceză regulile, personajele și peisajele, favorizând învăţarea colaborativă, jocul de rol, dar mai ales semănând încredere şi siguranţă în exprimare, fără a dovedi stres şi preocupare pentru producerea limbii franceze, limba este doar reamintită şi reutilizată, se fixează astfel şi se redă în instanţe repetitive de comunicare ceea ce nu poate fi decât un real beneficiu.

Jurnalul literar reflexiv reprezintă o altă alegere metodologică prin care elevii, în prezenţa limbii, își pot propune să scrie reacții personale la un citat, fără corectare formală. Desigur, rolul profesorului se manifestă mai pronunţat în acest caz, cel puţin în etapa constatării emiterii limbii în scris, acesta neputând manifesta nepăsare la producerea limbii în manieră eronată, însă va interveni abia în urma efectuării jocului interpretativ al elevilor, propunând un model corect de limbă. Elevii vor manifesta cu siguranţă atitudini diversificate faţă de modelul oferit de profesor, limba rezultând mai puţin îngrijită, dar cu siguranţă mai puţin în concurenţă cu scopul învăţării pe care îl prilejuieşte jurnalul literar.

Aplicare în limba spaniolă (L3)

El Principito sau Cuentos de la selva sunt cărţi ce dau elevilor ocazia de a realiza o hartă vizuală a povestirii și de a o prezenta oral în spaniolă. Desigur, acum am putea constata manifestarea unei atitudini care impune întocmirea unui glosar de cuvinte cheie/cuvinte de bază (substantive, adjective, verbe la infinitiv)/conectori logici din texte, ceea ce ar ajuta la producerea mai rapidă a limbii, la etapizarea precisă a momentelor, la mai multă atenţie şi la autocorecţie. Jocul de rol este şi el favorizat, elevii răspunzând la întrebări, astfel intrând „în pielea personajelor" şi utilizând limbajul lor.

3. Unitatea 2: Arte vizuale – Limbaj spontan prin expresie creativă

Cadru teoretic

Artele vizuale activează procesarea multisenzorială și reduc controlul lingvistic conștient, creând un cadru emoțional relaxat pentru comunicare; (Arnheim, 1969). Tocmai de aceea, dacă ne gândim la lectura unei imagini, atunci nevoile de a observa imaginea sunt mai mari decât aceea de a vorbi despre ea; oricât de paradoxal ar suna, da, până şi interesul estetic pentru imagine va fi manifestat de elevi mai puternic decât necesitatea emiterii limbii, deoarece funcţia comunicării va fi manifestată abia după ce necesităţile esteticului o vor impune tocmai pentru a fixa impresii, opinii şi a le verbaliza sau impune cumva prin repetabilitatea limbii, dacă nu cumva am putea vorbi aici, în primă fază, chiar de o simulare a limbii sau de un limbaj mut.

Afişul artistic digital cu text scurt elaborat în în L2-nu necesită pregătire lingvistică anterioară, necesită mai degrabă resursare tematică artistică şi face apel la aplicaţii digitale care vor favoriza achiziţia limbii fără prea mare efort.

Un colaj în stilul Frida Kahlo sau Miró elaborat şi expus în limba spaniolă va pune în lumină date biografice importante şi va fixa pattern-uri lingvistice ce constituie resurse permanente la care elevii vor face apel pentru a-şi exprima pasiunea pentru o latură artistică sau pentru un artist şi opera/viaţa sa.

Activitatea de tipul „ pictură pe instrucțiuni", în care elevii desenează după comenzi simple în L3 va pune accent pe alegerile exclusiv neîngrădite ale elevilor, pe creativitate şi mai ales pe materii prime care vor constitui baza construirii activităţii, ceea ce va permite observarea unor atitudini care vor impune preocuparea pentru produsul final care va fi unul îngrijit până şi din punct de vedere lingvistic. Cu această ocazie, profesorul îşi va putea exercita rolul de coordonator, de colaborator, chiar rolul de coleg de echipă, ajutând, prin propriul model lingvistic adoptat, la instalarea liberei exprimări în limba ţintă şi la comunicarea orală între participanţii la activitate.

4. Unitatea 3 : Dreptul – Argumentare și comunicare funcțională

Cadrul teoretic şi practic de la clasă se poate constitui aici din simulările juridice și dezbaterile care permit elevilor să vorbească în roluri, ceea ce reduce anxietatea și facilitează producția verbală autentică (Heathcote, 1984).

Elaborarea unui colaj cu îndemnuri de preţuit de către tineri pe teme de mediu înconjurător şi ambient decupate din reviste editate în limba spaniolă care deja publică acest tip de conţinut stimulează lucrul în echipă şi impune şi o rigoare a limbii şi o adaptare în concret a acesteia cu scopul de a servi obiectivelor proiectului (lungimea mică-medie a textelor alese, grija pentru conformitatea cu exprimarea corectă pentru a transmite un mesaj direct şi specific).

O dezbatere de tipul „La ley de protección del medio ambiente", cu echipe pro/contra încurajează iniţiativa în discuţie şi grija pentru alegerile specifice de vocabular şi poate culmina cu propuneri de scenete despre drepturi și reguli în viața școlară desfăşurate în multiple sesiuni în mai multe ore de curs sau cu utilizarea de resurse digitale.

5. Unitatea 4 : Medicina – Limbaj procedural şi descriptiv

Cadrul teoretic şi practic este reprezentat de învățarea prin sarcini ce pun în evidenţă vocabularul tematic din medicină.

Aplicare în limba franceză (L2)

Mini-dialoguri cu teme intitulate: En pharmacie, Chez le docteur, Qu´est-ce qui me passe? vor încuraja jocul de rol şi vor mijloci exprimarea orală.

Aplicare în limba spaniolă (L3)

Atelierele practice cu titlul „En la consulta"pot genera dialoguri interactive de la simple la complexe şi în limba spaniolă, ocazie cu care se poate face apel şi la modele digitale expuse în clasă, pentru recunoaşterea limbii în situaţii concrete şi pentru a favoriza retenţia fără stres.

6. Unitatea 5: Istoria – Narațiune, perspectivă culturală și fluență spontană

Istoria dezvoltă competențe narative și stimulează gândirea interculturală (Seixas, 2017), diversitatea culturală şi identitatea naţională suscitând un interes deosebit pentru alegerile libere la nivelul vocabularului din partea elevilor, ceea ce cu siguranţă va facilita exprimarea lingvistică în prezenţa faptelor istorice relatate.

Reconstituirea unor momente istorice (Revoluția Franceză).

Jocul „Qui suis-je ? " cu personaje istorice francophone poate genera o participare lingvistică activă din partea elevilor care pot folosi nenumărate resurse digitale gratis, în scopul sublinierii faptelor istorice ale unor personaje marcante, deja celebre în lume şi deja prezentate adesea în limba franceză. (Marie de Roumanie) (youtube)

Proiect „Exploradores y civilizaciones".

Linie a timpului ilustrată, cu prezentări biografice (María de Rumanía) în L3. (youtube)

7. Recomandări pentru integrarea domeniilor non-lingvistice în predarea limbilor străine

7.1.Promovarea limbajului implicit

Activitățile trebuie concepute astfel încât limba să fie un instrument, nu obiect al evaluării (Krashen, 1982).

7.2.Alternanța controlată între L2 și L3

Sarcinile pot fi distribuite bilateral: discuții în L2, produs final în L3 și invers.

7.3.Valorificarea artelor vizuale

Materialele create de elevi susțin exprimarea liberă și reduc teama de greșeală, în plus, oferă exemple utile, de bună practică, repetabile, demne de încercat şi de asociat cu un glosar lingvistic.

Învățare prin limbaj legat de acțiune, nu de performanță permite organizarea de activități practice — gătit, bricolaj, grădinărit, construcții simple, experimente — oferă contexte extrem de naturale pentru limbajul funcțional. Ele sunt centrate pe acțiune, nu pe corectitudine, ceea ce înseamnă că elevii folosesc limba străină pentru a face ceva concret. Această relație directă între limbaj și activitate reduce presiunea și transformă comunicarea într-o necesitate practică. În atelierele practice, elevii folosesc limbajul pentru a cere instrumente, pentru a întreba „cum se face", pentru a explica un pas sau pentru a coordona grupul. Această comunicare este spontană, autentică și 100% contextualizată. Cercetările arată că limbajul învățat prin acțiune (task-based learning) este reținut mai ușor și utilizat mai fluent.

Activitățile practice mai au un avantaj: includ elevi cu tipuri de inteligență diferite, conform teoriei inteligențelor multiple. Elevii motrici, vizuali, tactili sau tehnici se pot afirma în aceste contexte, ceea ce le crește stima de sine și reduce temerile lingvistice.
Simulările medicale sau juridice creează de asemenea necesitate comunicativă.

7.4.Folosirea rolurilor pentru protecție emoțională

Jocurile de rol reduc presiunea identitară (Heathcote, 1984).

7.5.Învățare prin sarcini (TBL-task-based language teaching)

Simulările medicale sau juridice creează necesitate comunicativă.

7.6.Crearea unui climat securizant

Corectarea descriptivă, nu sancționatorie, sporește motivația intrinsecă (Deci & Ryan, 1985).

7.7.Promovarea colaborării

Lucrul în grupuri mici reduce anxietatea și încurajează participarea.

7.8.Evaluare alternativă orientată spre intervenţia construită cu mijloace lingvistice

Portofoliile și jurnalele reflexive permit exprimarea fără frică.

7.9.Adaptarea ritmului la profilul clasei

Activitățile trebuie calibrate pentru elevii cu niveluri diferite de încredere.

7.10. Utilizarea tehnologiei

Spațiul digital, folosit cu grijă, ca o recomandare, oferă resurse şi exemple nelimitate, protecție emoțională (când nu se încalcă limitele de timp şi normele de utilizare) și autonomie în timp.

8. Concluzii

Domeniile non-lingvistice reduc anxietatea, normalizează eroarea, stimulează identitatea pozitivă și cresc motivația intrinsecă. Integrarea lor în orele de L2 și L3 produce un mediu sigur, creativ și eficient pentru dezvoltarea competențelor comunicative autentice.

Domeniile non-lingvistice reprezintă un cadru educațional esențial pentru reducerea stresului în învăţare și facilitarea învățării implicite la liceu. Integrarea literaturii, artelor, dreptului, medicinei și istoriei în predarea limbii franceze (L2) și spaniole (L3) permite elevilor să folosească limbajul spontan, natural și funcțional. Activitățile interdisciplinare contribuie la dezvoltarea identității plurilingve, la creșterea motivației și la formarea competențelor comunicative autentice, în acord cu nevoile societății contemporane.

9. Recomandări

Recomandările pentru o bună încadrare şi aplicare adecvată a domeniilor non-lingvistice includ:

- încurajarea limbajului implicit,
- alternanța controlată L2/L3,
- integrarea artelor,
- utilizarea rolurilor,
- evaluarea alternativă,
- climatul emoțional securizant,
- activitățile colaborative,
- adaptarea ritmului la profilul clasei,
- folosirea tehnologiei.

ANALYSIS OF SPEECH ACTS IN ROMANIAN PERFUME ADVERTISING

Mălina-Ștefania Sbera
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: The utilization of perfume transcends the realm of aesthetics, because it assumes the form of symbolic communication, constituting a human act that reflects our values, emotions, and identity. In this context, advertising discourse for perfumes dispose of verbal and visual means to create an idealized world that is in accordance with consumers' needs and aspirations. The present study aims to identify the types of speech acts used strategically in Romanian advertising discourse for perfumes, and to emphasize their role in influencing consumer perceptions, attitudes, and behavior. The analytical framework of this study draws on the typology of illocutionary acts proposed by Searle (1976), which comprises five main categories: representative, directive, commissive, expressive, and declarative. Furthermore, the study examines indirect speech acts, which advertisers employ to establish a positive relationship with their target audience and capture the receivers' attention through different types of sentences that enhance the persuasive impact of the discourse.

1. Teoria actelor de vorbire

Teoria actelor de vorbire a constituit unul dintre fenomenele centrale abordate de cercetătorii din domeniul pragmaticii, contribuind la modificarea percepției asupra limbajului. Această teorie este considerată întocmai „creuzetul în care s-a dezvoltat pragmatica" (Costăchescu 2019: 445), întrucât oferă mijloacele prin care putem stabili funcția unui enunț, ținând cont atât de formă, cât și de context, cu scopul realizării unei comunicări reușite (Coposescu 2004: 31). Ideea fundamentală de la care pornește teoria actelor de vorbire are în vedere faptul că limbajul reprezintă o forma de acțiune sau chiar o acțiune în sine, depășindu-și statutul de mijloc prin care poate fi descrisă lumea. Limbajul funcționează, așadar, ca un instrument prin care acționăm asupra realității sociale: dăm ordine, facem promisiuni și complimente, ne cerem scuze, oficiem ceremonii etc. Prin urmare, relevanța teoriei actelor de vorbire se extinde asupra înțelegerii comunicării umane, care nu trebuie privită doar ca un transfer de informații între interlocutori, ci ca o acțiune sau ca un proces interactiv, prin care participanții se influențează reciproc prin intermediul limbajului (Collavin 2011: 373).

În centrul abordărilor filosofice asupra actelor de vorbire se află problematica legată de clasificarea propozițiilor drept adevărate sau false, care a scos în evidență limitele unei analize a sensului propozițional, bazată exclusiv pe condițiile de adevăr (Levinson 1983: 227). În acest context, pozitivismul logic a devenit în 1930 un curent influent care îi desemna filosofiei sarcina de a identifica, clarifica și corecta eventualele nonsensuri (Collavin 2011: 374). În cadrul acestei doctrine, o propoziție este considerată lipsită de sens, dacă nu poate fi verificată empiric, testată în privința adevărului sau falsității sale (Levinson 1983: 227). Lucrarea Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus, scrisă de Ludwig Wittgenstein (1922), a reprezentat o importantă sursă de inspirație pentru pozitivismul logic, întrucât propune o teorie reprezentaționalistă a limbajului. În a doua parte a activității sale, Wittgenstein (1958) și-a revizuit concepțiile anterioare și a încercat să cuprindă într-o nouă lucrare cercetări asupra unei teorii a limbajului ca acțiune, subliniind atât faptul că sensul unui cuvânt este dat de utilizarea sa în limbă, cât și importanța jocurilor de limbaj (engl. language-games) aflate în strânsă legătură cu înțelegerea unui enunț. Astfel, L. Wittgenstein (1958) anticipează conceptual clasificările actelor de vorbire formulate de J. L. Austin, J. R. Searle și de alți teoreticieni, prin importanța pe care o acordă diversității jocurilor de limbaj și caracterului activ al comunicării.

Teoria actelor de vorbire (Speech Acts Theorie) a fost formulată de John Langshaw Austin în 1939 și prezentată în cadrul conferințelor pe care le-a ținut la Universitatea Harvard, în 1995, și la Universitatea Berkeley, în 1958 (Alexandrescu 2005: 10). Notele acestor conferințe au fost publicate postum în 1962 sub titlul How to Do Things with Words (Alexandrescu 2005: 10). La baza teoriei actelor de vorbire se află două idei: prima susține că sensul unui enunț este diferit de semnificația pe care acesta o are în comunicare; cea de-a doua afirmă că enunțul reprezintă realizarea unui act, vorbitorii folosind cuvinte pentru a acționa și a influența (Collavin 2011: 373, DPAD 2023: 16), întrucât „a spune ceva este a face ceva" (Austin 2005: 32). Putem distinge două etape definitorii ale demersurilor inițiate de Austin în ceea ce privește formularea unei teorii a actelor de vorbire. Pentru început, Austin (2005: 26) constată faptul că unele enunțuri din limbajul comun nu sunt folosite cu scopul de a face o afirmație, deci nu pot fi considerate adevărate sau false. Pornind de la această observație, este introdusă distincția dintre enunțurile constatative (folosite pentru a formula afirmații/constatări sau pentru a relata un eveniment și care sunt catalogate drept adevărate sau false) și enunțurile performative (utilizate pentru a îndeplini o acțiune, pentru a performa acte de vorbire) (Austin 2005: 27). În urma cercetărilor, Austin abandonează această dihotomie inițială și formulează o teorie care are meritul de a cuprinde toate tipurile de enunțuri. Așadar, actul locuționar (rostirea unui enunț care are o anumită structură gramaticală și un conținut lexical propriu), actul ilocuționar (componenta funcțională sau performativă a enunțului care surprinde ceea ce vorbitorul intenționează să realizeze prin producerea actului locuționar) și actul perlocuționar (efectul pe care enunțul îl are asupra ascultătorului) sunt cele trei subtipuri care alcătuiesc actul de vorbire (Austin 2005: 95-106). Datorită cercetărilor revoluționare asupra limbajului comun și a modului de utilizare a acestuia, întreprinse de Austin, teoria actelor de vorbire este relevantă atât pentru analiza diverselor forme de comunicare lingvistică, cât și pentru înțelegerea comunicării umane în ansamblul ei (Collavin 2011: 373).

Dezvoltarea teoriei actelor de vorbire și sistematizarea ideilor lui Austin i se datorează lui John Searle. Autorul a abordat această teorie dintr-o „perspectivă psiho-fizică [...] potrivit căreia acțiunea lingvistică este considerată un act mental al vorbitorului, limba o extensie naturală a capacităților biologice ale individului, iar semnificația lingvistică o extensie a intenționalității prelingvistice, de natură biologică" (DAPD 2023: 17). De asemenea, filosoful american a dezvoltat condițiile de reușită propuse de Austin, a întocmit o nouă clasificare a actelor de vorbire și a insistat asupra aspectului acționalist prin introducerea principiului exprimabilității (Searle 1969). Din perspectiva autorului, actul ilocuționar trebuie înțeles ca o funcție ce presupune aplicarea forței ilocuționare asupra conținutului prepozițional: F (p), unde F este forța ilocuționară, marcată prin anumiți indicatori (ordinea cuvintelor, accentul, conturul intonațional, punctuația, modurile și timpurile verbale, verbele performative etc.), iar p conținutul propozițional (Searle 1969: 30-31). Pornind de la ipoteza conform căreia „a vorbi o limbă înseamnă a realiza acte conform unor reguli constitutive", Searle identifică un set de reguli, corespunzătoare condițiilor de reușită, cărora li se supun actele ilocuționare (1969: 52, t.n.)[1]. Prin cercetările sale, Searle și-a dorit „să construiască cu precădere o teorie acționalistă a limbajului, cu un pronunțat caracter ascriptivist" (Alexandrescu 2005: 16).

2. Clasificarea actelor de vorbire din perspectiva lui J. Searle

Filosoful american J. Searle (1976) se remarcă prin inițierea primului demers de clasificare a actelor ilocuționare pe baza unui sistem riguros și explicit de criterii. Clasificarea elaborată de Searle (1976) are în vedere tipurile de acte ilocuționare, diferențiate pe baza a douăsprezece dimensiuni, care corespund condițiilor de reușită formulate anterior de același autor în lucrarea intitulată Speech Acts: An Essay in the Philosophy of Language (1969). Primele trei dimensiuni sunt esențiale pentru clasificarea propusă de Searle (1976: 2-4): 1) scopul sau obiectivul actului ilocuționar (acest criteriu corespunde condiției esențiale și reprezintă o parte a forței ilocuționare); 2) direcția de adecvare dintre cuvinte și realitate (anumite acte, precum aserțiunile, descrierile și explicațiile includ, ca parte a scopului ilocuționar, alinierea cuvintelor la aspectele realității, în timp ce alte tipuri de acte, asemenea ordinelor, solicitărilor și promisiunilor presupun alinierea realității la cuvinte); 3) starea psihologică exprimată (corespunde condiției de sinceritate și include o serie de atitudini exprimate de actele ilocuționare, precum convingerea, intenția, dorința sau voința și plăcerea). Următoarele nouă dimensiuni sunt considerate suplimentare, având rol în diferențierea actelor ilocuționare care aparțin aceleiași clase (Schiffrin 1994: 58).

În etapa de stabilire a forței ilocuționare, putem întâmpina adesea dificultăți, atât din cauza prezenței unor indici polifuncționali, cât și din cauza realizării indirecte a unor acte de vorbire (Ionescu-Ruxăndoiu 2003: 28). Cu alte cuvinte, putem distinge între actele directe și indirecte pornind de la modul în care este exprimată forța ilocuționară. Autorii GALR (2023: 577) subliniază faptul că „Limbile dispun de structuri sintactice specializate (propoziții și fraze), care, alături de intonație [...], semnalează scopul comunicativ al vorbitorului". Potrivit lui Huang (2009: 1004-1005), se poate stabili o corespondență între actele de vorbire și cele trei tipuri principale de enunțuri care există în majoritatea limbilor: asertive, interogative și imperative. Aceste tipuri de enunțuri sunt corelate cu cele trei funcții comunicative generale sau forțe ilocuționare: afirmarea, solicitarea unor informații și cererea (Huang 2009: 1005). De asemenea, putem vorbi și despre enunțurile exclamative, prin intermediul cărora sunt performate în mod direct actele expresive care indică starea afectivă a locutorului (admirație, mirare, nemulțumire etc.) (GALR 2023: 582). Atunci când între tipul de propoziție și forța ilocuționară se stabilește o corespondență directă sau când forța ilocuționară este exprimată explicit printr-un verb performativ, putem considera că avem de-a face cu un act de vorbire direct (Huang 2009: 1005). Pe de altă parte, lipsa acestei corespondențe directe determină clasificarea actului de vorbire drept indirect, cum este în cazul folosirii unei propoziții interogative pentru a exprima o cerere (Huang 2009: 1005). Alegerea structurilor sintactice, prin care locutorul performează un act de vorbire este determinată de o serie de factori, cum ar fi contextul comunicativ, strategia discursivă utilizată de interlocutori și forța persuasivă a enunțului (GALR 2023: 577).

J. Searle (1979) propune o nouă abordare cu privire la interpretarea actelor ilocuționare indirecte, integrând în teoria actelor de vorbire o serie de concepte preluate de la filosoful britanic H. P. Grice, cum ar fi: modelul inferențial al comunicării și presupozițiile privind cooperarea lingvistică (Ruytenbeek 2021: 18). Având în vedere principiul cooperării, demersul inițiat de Searle subliniază faptul că sensul enunțării realizate de vorbitor și sensul enunțului pot fi divergente, cum este în cazul aluziilor, ironiilor și metaforelor (1979: 30). Există situații în care locutorul rostește un enunț cu intenția de a spune mai mult decât ceea ce a fost spus efectiv prin enunțare (Searle 1979: 30). De exemplu, prin rostirea întrebării „«Poți să-mi dai sarea?»”, poate fi obținut un efect specific actelor ilocuționare de solicitare, întrucât locutorul urmărește să îi inducă interlocutorului convingerea că i s-a adresat o cerere (Searle 1979: 30, t.n.)[2]. Analizând acest enunț, Searle ajunge la observația potrivit căreia sunt prezente două forțe ilocuționare, un act ilocuționar fiind realizat indirect prin intermediul altui act (Searle 1979: 31).

3. Actele de vorbire și analiza discursului

Termenul de discurs cunoaște numeroase accepțiuni, în funcție de domeniul în care este utilizat și de perspectiva teoretică adoptată. În general, lingviștii au definit acest concept din perspectiva dihotomiei saussuriene limbă-vorbire (langue-parole), pledând pentru constituirea unei lingvistici a vorbirii sau a lingvisticii discursului (Dragoș 2000: 52). De altfel, direcția structuralistă consideră că discursul este o manifestare concretă a limbii, fiind similar noțiunii de parole, „un act individual de voință și inteligență”, echivalat de cele mai multe ori cu enunțarea și performanța (Dragoș 2000: 52). Dintre numeroasele direcții de cercetare privind discursul, direcția psiho-sistematică și abordarea din perspectiva teoriei enunțării formulată de Émile Benveniste sunt frecvent menționate în studiile de specialitate.

Integrând principalele abordări teoretice, autoarea Elena Dragoș (2000: 54) ajunge la următoarea definiție a discursului: „manifestarea caracterului pragmatic al comunicării, [...] comunicarea în anumite condiții de producere sau [...] parole plus condițiile de producere, dezvăluind în resorturile sale intime caracterul acțional al vorbirii”. Prin urmare, reprezentând manifestarea concretă a unui act de vorbire într-un cadru contextual, discursul relevă intenția vorbitorului de a modela percepțiile și reacțiile celorlalți (Stoica 2015: 48).

Odată cu apariția noilor direcții de analiză în ceea ce privește actele de vorbire, van Dijk (1992: 238) introduce conceptul de macroacte de vorbire (engl. macro-speech acts). Conform definiției oferite de acest autor, actul de vorbire global sau macroactul de vorbire este performat prin producerea unui întreg discurs, rezultat din succesiuni de acte de vorbire, care, analizate în ansamblu, exprimă o forță ilocuționară unitară (van Dijk 1992: 238-243). V. Viehweger insistă asupra structurii ierarhice a actelor de vorbire dintr-un text: „analizele concrete arată că actele ilocuționare care constituie un text formează ierarhii ilocuționare împreună cu un act ilocuționar dominant susținut de acte ilocuționare subsidiare [...].” (1990: 49, t.n.)[3]. Pornind de la perspectiva lui van Dijk (1992), tipurile de discurs au fost clasificate pe baza funcțiilor comunicative și succesiunilor specifice de acte de vorbire ce contribuie atât la atingerea scopului acțional, cât și la organizarea globală a discursului (DPAD 2023: 20). În opinia lui Brinker (1985: 78), teoria actelor de vorbire oferă cadrul conceptual necesar pentru definirea noțiunii de funcție și pentru întreprinderea unei analize a raportului care se instituie între funcția și structura discursului. În ceea ce privește discursul publicitar, Cook (2006: 10-12) afirmă că nu există o definiție unanim acceptată, întrucât acesta integrează mai multe tipuri de discurs, cu scopul de a persuada receptorul. După cum observă Costin Popescu (2005: 31), publicitatea se remarcă prin dimensiunea sa persuasivă, care constă în atribuirea unor semnificații simbolice bunurilor și serviciilor pentru a influența comportamentul de achiziționare al receptorilor. Discursul publicitar pentru parfumuri utilizează o gamă largă de mijloace verbale, paraverbale și nonverbale pentru a contura o realitate idealizată, în centru căreia se află visul, luxul și condiția socială (Dâncu 2009: 169). Conform lui Costin Popescu (2021: 62), caracteristicile discursului persuasiv publicitar sunt „extrema concizie; limbaje diferite [...]; organizarea mesajelor pe mai multe etaje; retorică a limbajului”, la care se adaugă altele de natură ideologică. În cazul analizei tipului de discurs pe care îl avem în vedere, varietatea strategiilor discursive reflectă încercarea creatorilor de publicitate de a depăși limitările acestui gen în ceea ce privește transmiterea informațiilor de natură olfactivă. Cu alte cuvinte, publicitatea dedicată parfumurilor se remarcă prin sugestivitate și prin adecvarea mesajului la nevoile și aspirațiile unui grup țintă bine determinat. Luând în considerare scopul ilocuționar al macroactului de vorbire, reclamele pentru parfumuri pot fi apelative (încearcă să-l determine pe destinatarul-client să adopte o anumită atitudine față de produs sau să realizeze o anumită acțiune, influențând comportamentul de achiziționare, prin faptul că fac apel, de cele mai multe ori, la afectele cumpărătorului), comisive (își iau un angajament față de destinatarul-client), fatice (urmăresc stabilirea și a menținerea unei relații particulare cu destinatarul-client) și informative (transmit informații despre parfum) (Brinker 1985: 98-113, DPAD 2023: 20). Teoria actelor de vorbire oferă un cadru analitic potrivit pentru analiza discursului, enunțurile constituind unități funcționale care pot fi identificate și clasificate (Schiffrin 1994: 91).

[2] „«Can you reach the salt?»” (Searle 1979: 30).

4. Analiza actelor de vorbire în discursul publicitar de limbă română pentru parfumuri

Corpusul care se află la baza analizei actelor de vorbire prezente în discursul publicitar pentru parfumuri cuprinde filme publicitare de limbă română, preluate de pe diferite platforme (YouTube, Facebook etc.) și transcrise conform convențiilor stabilite de Luminița Hoarță Cărăușu, coordonator, în lucrarea Corpus de limbă română vorbită actuală nedialectală, Editura Universității „Alexandru Ioan Cuza”, Iași, 2013. Acest tip de publicitate este realizat în special prin intermediul rețelelor sociale, platformele menționate anterior prezentând numeroase avantaje față de televiziune, cum ar fi vizibilitatea în rândul publicului prezent online și transmiterea eficientă a reclamelor în funcție de activitatea personalizată a utilizatorilor (Chircă 2024). Totodată, ne vom raporta la clasificarea actelor ilocuționare propusă de J. R. Searle (1976), vom observa măsura în care sunt utilizate preferențial anumite clase de acte, precum și succesiunea acestora pentru a stabili funcția comunicativă a discursului.

Prin intermediul actelor de vorbire reprezentative (asertive), vorbitorul afirmă ceea ce consideră a fi adevărat sau fals (Yule 1996: 53). Această clasă se caracterizează prin direcția de adecvare dinspre cuvinte spre realitate (↓) și exprimă asupra conținutului propozițional atitudini, precum convingerea (B) (Searle 1976: 10, 1979: 12). Simbolul acestei categorii de acte este: „⊢ ↓ B(p)”, în care simbolul ⊢, folosit pentru aserțiune, a fost împrumutat de la Frege (Searle 1976: 10). În filmele publicitare pentru parfumuri, actele reprezentative au un rol esențial în construirea unui discurs credibil și persuasiv, în lipsa unor mijloace directe prin care destinatarul-client poate testa produsul. De cele mai multe ori, publicitarii apelează la acte reprezentative pentru a exprima o mărturie, o constatare sau o descriere care face trimitere la produs, după cum putem observa în următorul film publicitar:

(1) Far Away Beyond The Moon - Noua Aroma AVON. 31 august 2023. https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gWr_AOAY_9o (accesat la: 01.09.2023).

VOCE (feminină): <S de CÂND eram> copil↑ <R visam să devin> astroNAUT. + eram FAScinată de lumina stelelor și <S a lunii>. + <R știai> că luna este atât de puternică↑ ÎNCÂT <R poate să înflorească↑> chiar și flori prețioase:? + <R acest lucru m_a inspirat↑> să_mi descopăr ȘI EU puterea. + <L Far Away> Beyond The Moon + <F înfloREȘTE> lumina misterioasă a lunii↓ <R învăluită în note de Regina Nopții>! + <L Avon> + <F Crede> în puterea TA! + <R comandă online> pe avon punct ro sau prin reprezentantul TĂU.

Filmul publicitar se deschide cu o serie de acte reprezentative care alcătuiesc o secvență narativă, având rolul de a introduce tema discursului și de a prezenta informații referitoare la experiența protagonistei, redată prin intermediul vocii feminine de fundal (engl. voice-over). După cum afirmă Costin Popescu (2021: 280), publicitatea apelează la „simpla creare a unui context narativ care să pună în valoare produsul". Așadar, este creat un univers asociat în mod simbolic produsului, a cărui verosimilitate este asigurată prin utilizarea actelor ilocuționare din clasa reprezentativelor. La nivelul macroactului de vorbire, acestea contribuie la stabilirea unei relații particulare între produs și receptorul mesajului, influențând comportamentul de achiziționare prin implicarea afectelor în procesul de receptare. Enunțul „<R știai> că luna este atât de puternică↑ ÎNCÂT <R poate să înflorească↑> chiar și flori prețioase:?" este, în ceea ce privește structura, un enunț interogativ total, care solicită un răspuns de tipul da/nu. Ținând cont de structura globală a discursului publicitar, constatăm faptul că enunțul interogativ este folosit pentru a performa un act de vorbire de tip nonîntrebare, conform clasificării realizate de autorii GALR (2023: 288). Structura interogativă nu este utilizată pentru a solicitata o informație despre cunoștințele interlocutorului, ci pentru a face o aserțiune de tipul „Luna este atât de puternică încât poate să înflorească chiar și flori prețioase.". În GALR (2023: 589) este menționat faptul că „Structurile interogative [...] păstrează de la actul de vorbire prototipic de la care au deviat componenta «orientare a locutorului spre interlocutor», participând la un amalgam pragmatic.". Totodată, prin acest act ilocuționar, brandul se angajează față de conținutul propozițional care a fost exprimat. Afirmația referitoare la capacitățile lunii face trimitere atât la numele produsului, Far Away Beyond The Moon, cât și la componenta olfactivă centrală a parfumului, Regina Nopții, floare cunoscută pentru faptul că înflorește după apusul soarelui. Așadar, putem afirma faptul că actul ilocuționar reprezentativ, aflat în exemplul analizat sub forma unei întrebări retorice, este marcat afectiv, prin utilizarea adjectivelor și a conturului intonațional ascendent, și că are efect persuasiv, implicând interlocutorul. Cel de-al doilea act reprezentativ, „<R acest lucru m_a inspirat↑> să_mi descopăr ȘI EU puterea.", este performat prin intermediul unui enunț asertiv, care îl informează pe interlocutor cu privire la producerea unui eveniment anterior. Pe baza observațiilor lui Searle (1979), deja prezentate, cu privire la actele de vorbire indirecte, acest enunț poate avea un sens indirect, derivat din actul de vorbire primar. În acest caz, este performat un act de vorbire expresiv, prin care interlocutorul, respectând condiția de sinceritate, își exprimă starea afectivă față de conținutul propozițional al enunțului precedent și reluat în acest exemplu prin anafora rezumativă „acest lucru", realizată prin intermediul unei expresii nominale indexate (centrul, substantivul cu sens generic „lucru", este însoțit de determinant, adjectivul demonstrativ „acest") (GALR 2023: 1120). Actele ilocuționare analizate contribuie la construirea unui cadru cognitiv axat pe inducerea unor aspirații, menit să justifice performarea unor acte directive, precum: „Crede> în puterea TA! + <R comandă online> pe avon punct ro sau prin reprezentantul TĂU.".

Directivele constituie clase de acte ilocuționare, prin performarea cărora vorbitorul urmărește să-l determine pe receptor să întreprindă o acțiune (Yule 1996: 54). Se caracterizează prin direcția de orientare dinspre realitate spre cuvinte (↑) și exprimă dorința sau voința locutorului (W) (Searle 1976: 11). Simbolul acestei categorii de acte este: ! ↑ W (H face A), în care ! marchează solicitarea, H, interlocutorul/receptorul (engl. hearer) și A, conținutul propozițional, acțiunea viitoare care va fi realizată de receptor (Searle 1976: 11). Publicitatea de limbă română pentru parfumuri utilizează în mod frecvent acte directive pentru a încuraja un comportament specific, cum ar fi cel de achiziționarea a produsului, interacțiunea cu ambasadorii brandului sau cu platformele de unde pot fi comandate parfumurile. Reclama dedicată parfumului Her Story utilizează strategic actele directive pentru a construi un discurs persuasiv, valorificând, totodată, poveștile motivaționale ale unor femei care reușesc să își depășesc limitele (Simonei Halep, Melinda Goczi, Anca Tofan și Stela Bizdu).

Potrivit autoarei Olga Bălănescu (2009: 189), o reclamă de succes urmărește utilizarea unui personaj garant cunoscut, astfel încât să asigure credibilitate brandului, respectiv produsului, prin asociere. Cu toate că în filmul publicitar propus spre analiză, publicitarul se adresează publicului țintă prin intermediul unei voci de fundal, simpla apariție a celor patru ambasadoare care utilizează parfumul, dar mai ales a Simonei Halep, stabilește „un tip de interacțiune verbală personală" (Bălănescu 2009: 191). Așadar, efectul persuasiv al directivelor este amplificat prin componenta vizuală reprezentată de imaginea ambasadoarelor, a căror notorietate validează implicit comportamentul vizat de publicitar. Analizând filmul publicitar în ansamblu, observăm că destinatarul mesajului nu este invitat doar să cumpere un produs, ci să ia parte la campania Watch Me Now, prin intermediul căreia Avon își conturează o nouă identitate de brand și promovează poveștile de succes ale femeilor. Utilizând imaginea Simonei Halep și povestea care redă parcursul ei spre performanță, marca Avon practică co-branding-ul, asocierea „cu vedete celebre ale showbiz-ului, benefic ambelor părți" (Popescu 2021: 314). Prin sloganul „Watch Me Now", care apare pe ecran în finalul reclamei, este performat un act directiv sub forma unui enunț imperativ. În ceea ce privește structura, directivele performate în acest film publicitar sunt realizate prin enunțuri imperative care exprimă un ordin, o comandă sau un îndemn. Aceste imperative sunt directe, având în vedere modul de realizare a actelor directive, întrucât nu se realizează prin intermediul altor acte. Pe de altă parte, în filmul publicitar dedicat parfumurilor Attraction Game, constatăm prezența unor acte directive realizate în mod indirect, cu ajutorul mai multor tipuri de enunțuri.

VOCE (feminină): <L PLĂcerea↓> + <Î de ce> să ți-o refuzi? + în jocul atracției↑ + e mai <F INTENSĂ> ca oricând. +++ <F ce mai aștepți>? ++ este TIMPUL să intri↑ în joc. + <Î fă> prima mutare! ++ <F Attraction> Game. ++ <R primele noastre arome↑> create pentru <J a vă electriza> simțurile. +++ <R comandă online> pe avon punct ro sau prin reprezentantul TĂU!

În ceea ce privește structura, enunțurile interogative prezente în acest film publicitar sunt parțiale, întrucât conțin cuvintele interogative care au „rolul de a circumscrie semantic răspunsul așteptat" și sunt utilizate de locutor pentru a-i solicita interlocutorului un răspuns prin care „să dea o valoare variabilei din întrebare" (GALR 2023: 583-585). Dacă analizăm aceste enunțuri pe baza criteriului funcțional, vom observa faptul că sunt folosite ca acte de vorbire de tipul „nonîntrebare" (GALR 2023: 288), corespondența dintre tipul de enunț și actul de vorbire performat lipsind. Enunțul asertiv „este TIMPUL să intri↑ în joc." funcționează în cadrul unui act directiv, prin care publicitarul vrea să îl determine pe destinatar să întreprindă acțiunea sugerată, aceea de a participa la „jocul atracției", respectiv de a cumpăra parfumul, răspunzând astfel la apelul implicit al mesajului publicitar. Acest act este dublat de unul directiv, exprimat în mod direct: „<Î fă> prima mutare!". Searle (1979: 36) atrage atenția asupra faptului că principiul politeții se află la baza exprimării indirecte a actelor directive, structura lingvistică fiind modelată de intenția comunicativă și normale sociale ale interacțiunii verbale. Pentru Brown și Levinson (1987: 71), actele de vorbire indirecte constituie o strategie a politeții negative, prin care emițătorul transmite mesajul, fără ca imaginea de sine să-i fie amenințată, în timp ce receptorul are ocazia de a manifesta atenție și empatie, menținând astfel echilibrul relațional în interacțiunea comunicativă. În discursul publicitar, exprimarea indirectă a directivelor este utilizată strategic încă de la început, pentru a evita transmiterea unui mesaj intruziv. Receptorul nu este constrâns să realizeze acțiunea, publicitarul oferindu-i impresia că decizia îi aparține. Procesul decizional este ghidat prin utilizarea enunțurilor interogative în care conturul intonațional afectiv exprimă valori contextuale suplimentare, cu scopul de a stabili o legătură particulară cu destinatarul-client. Odată stabilită această relație, sunt introduse actele directive care sporesc efectul persuasiv al reclamei, fără a mai fi percepute drept amenințătoare.

Prin folosirea actelor comisive, vorbitorul își asumă angajamentul de a realiza o acțiune viitoare (Yule 1996: 54). Comisivele se caracterizează prin direcția de orientare dinspre realitate spre cuvinte (↑) și exprimă intenția locutorului (I) (Searle 1976: 11). Această clasă este reprezentată, cu ajutorul simbolurilor, astfel: C ↑ I (S face A), unde C marchează scopul ilocuționar, iar S, locutorul/emițătorul (engl. speaker) (Searle 1976: 11). Discursul publicitar reușește să câștige încrederea consumatorilor în condițiile în care sunt respectate promisiunile realizate direct sau indirect (O'Shaughnessy & O'Shaughnessy 2004: 6). Totodată, păstrarea credibilității este posibilă prin evitarea promisiunilor explicite și exagerate, care pot genera așteptări nerealiste, conducând la anularea efectului persuasiv (O'Shaughnessy & O'Shaughnessy 2004: 195). Publicitatea pentru parfumuri utilizează acte comisive pentru a garanta anumite beneficii în urma achiziționării produsului. În exemplul (3), este utilizat un enunț asertiv în cadrul unui act comisiv, exprimat indirect: „<R primele noastre arome↑> create pentru <J a vă electriza> simțurile.". Publicitarul nu descrie doar produsul, ci se angajează să ofere consumatorului un parfum exclusiv și o experiență senzorială memorabilă, care depășește dimensiunea olfactivă. Astfel, este sugerată existența unei conexiuni între parfum și dispoziția afectivă a consumatorului.

În exemplul următor, este folosit un act comisiv, realizat în mod direct, prin intermediul căruia îi este promisă consumatorului o experiență unică.

În cadrul macroactului de vorbire, promisiunea consolidează relația brandului cu publicul-țintă și anticipează performarea actului directiv, care oferă o alternativă în cazul neîncrederii manifestate de către receptor. Prin performarea acestor acte, destinatorul este invitat să aleagă parfumul care va deveni expresia personalității sale: „Pe piele, parfumul devine [...] caracteristica cea mai profundă a ființei noastre ascunse, misterioase, expresia sensibilității noastre." (de Feydeau 2022: 7).

Actele expresive sunt cele care exprimă o atitudine sau o stare psihologică a locutorului, provocată de un alocutor sau de o stare de fapt (Yule 1996: 53). În cazul expresivelor nu putem vorbi despre o direcție de orientare a relației dintre cuvinte și realitate, întrucât, atunci când emițătorul realizează un astfel de act, se presupune că adevărul propoziției este deja valabil (∅) (Searle 1976: 12-13). De asemenea, aceste acte acoperă o gama variată de stări psihologice (P) (Searle 1976: 13). Formula utilizată pentru această clasă este: E ∅ (P) (S/H + proprietate), în care E indică scopul ilocuționar, iar S (engl. speaker) și H (engl. hearer), statutul persoanei căreia îi este atribuită o proprietate de către conținutul propozițional (Searle 1976: 13). În exemplul (5) putem observa o serie de acte expresive indirecte, prin care publicitarul încearcă să modeleze realitatea, apelând la exprimarea unor sentimente, precum nostalgia, recunoștința, iubirea etc.

Actele de vorbire expresive exprimate în mod indirect iau forma unor enunțuri asertive („<L eram doar NOI> în acel weekend.”), interogative totale („<S îți mai amintești>?”) și interogative parțiale („<RS CUM am putea↑ să uităm> vreoDATĂ?”). Stările psihologice care reies din folosirea actelor expresive de către vocea de fundal feminină sunt provocate de testarea parfumurilor din colecția The Moment. Așadar, filmul publicitar pornește de la ideea potrivit căreia „parfumul extrage din amintiri intensitatea emoțiilor pe care le generează”, transformând experiența olfactivă într-un act de rememorare a trăirilor semnificative (de Feydeau 2022: 7).

5. Concluzii

Cercetarea realizată în cadrul acestui studiu a avut în vedere clasele de acte ilocuționare prezente în publicitatea de limbă română pentru parfumuri și stabilirea modului în care acestea contribuie la construirea unui discurs persuasiv. Utilizarea strategică a actelor de vorbire reprezentative, directive, comisive și expresive are drept scop atât stabilirea și menținerea unei relații particulare între brand și destinatarul-client, cât și influențarea comportamentului de achiziționare. După cum am putut constata, actele reprezentative sunt cele mai întâlnite în corpusul selectat, întrucât formează secvențe narative, plasând parfumul într-un context care să îl pună în evidență, sau secvențe descriptive care „ar trebui să-și ducă destinatarul la «mobilizare senzorială și perceptivă»: îi forțează contactul cu obiectul” (Popescu 2021: 234). Actele directive, comisive și expresive sunt exprimate adesea în mod indirect pentru a orienta comportamentul destinatarului-client spre o anumită acțiune, susținând totodată echilibrul relațional și creând o experiență interactivă și captivantă. Așadar, analiza întreprinsă susține ipoteza potrivit căreia publicitatea pentru parfumuri utilizează un tip de discurs persuasiv, în care se regăsesc acte de vorbire care transmit informații despre produs, direcționează comportamentul destinatarului și generează atitudini pozitive față de brand.

THE FOUNDATION AND NECESSITY OF COMMUNICATION ETHICS IN POSTMODERNITY

Camelia Zăgrean (Mihăilă)
PhD Student, Technical University of Cluj-Napoca

Abstract: Postmodern society brings cultural and technological transformations that change the meaning of communication and moral values, emphasizing relativism and fragmentation. Communication ethics becomes essential because it analyzes moral responsibilities in the communication process, which is different from morality and deontology. Communication, seen not only as the transmission of information but as intersubjective dialogue, participates in the construction of reality and the formation of morality. The media and digitalisation profoundly influence human behaviour, generating both manipulation and new opportunities for participation. Current social communication is marked by asymmetries, diversity of practices and the overlap between the private and public spheres. In a world dominated by hypercommunication and globalization, the challenge is to maintain authentic communication capable of sustaining meaning, responsibility, and trust.

În contextul complex și dinamic al societății contemporane, înțelegerea și aplicarea conceptelor de etică, comunicare și postmodernitate devin esențiale pentru analiza critică a relațiilor interumane și a discursurilor publice. Transformările sociale, culturale și tehnologice din epoca postmodernă au condus la o redefinire a valorilor tradiționale și la apariția unor noi forme de interacțiune, marcate adesea de ambiguitate, relativism și hiper-realitate. În acest cadru, conceptul de „etică a comunicării" primește o importanță tot mai mare, necesitând o delimitare clară față de etica generală și față de alte concepte înrudite, precum morala sau deontologia.

Etica reprezintă un domeniu al filosofiei care studiază principiile fundamentale ale comportamentului uman, evaluând ce este „bine" și „rău" într-un context universal, rațional. Acest concept se distinge de morală, care este mai mult un set de norme și valori impuse de o comunitate sau cultură specifică. Astfel, în timp ce etica se bazează pe raționamente teoretice și universale, morala este caracterizată printr-o aplicare concretă și variabilă în funcție de contextul social și istoric. De asemenea, deontologia, un subdomeniu al eticii, se ocupă cu normele și regulile profesionale care guvernează comportamentele într-un anumit domeniu, cum ar fi jurnalismul, medicina sau dreptul, axându-se pe obligațiile și responsabilitățile morale ale indivizilor față de profesia lor.

Comunicarea este procesul prin care indivizii și grupurile își transmit informații, intenții, valori și emoții. În cadrul postmodernității, acest proces devine din ce în ce mai fragmentat și relativist. Postmodernitatea, ca fenomen cultural și intelectual, subminează ideile de adevăr absolut și de realitate unitară, caracterizându-se prin pluralism, ambiguitate și diversitate de perspective. În acest context, comunicarea nu mai este văzută ca un mijloc de transmitere a unui adevăr universal, ci ca o practică de negociere a sensurilor, în care realitatea devine o construcție subiectivă și flexibilă. Caracteristicile esențiale ale comunicării postmoderne includ fragmentarea, care se referă la dispersia și ruptura discursurilor, relativismul, care subliniază variabilitatea și dependenta valorilor de context și hiper-realitatea, noțiune propusă de Jean Baudrillard, care sugerează faptul că societatea postmodernă creează simulacre ale realității ce devin mai „reale" decât realitatea însăși.

Etica comunicării reprezintă un subdomeniu al eticii care analizează responsabilitățile și obligațiile morale ale indivizilor și organizațiilor în cadrul procesului comunicativ. Spre deosebire de etica generală, care se aplică în toate domeniile activității umane, etica comunicării se axează pe probleme specifice legate de adevăr, transparență, manipulare, respectul pentru diversitatea opiniilor și protecția intimității informațiilor. În acest sens, etica comunicării se confruntă cu provocările aduse de evoluția tehnologică și de reconfigurarea relațiilor sociale în era digitală, unde limitele între spațiile publice și private sunt tot mai greu de trasat. De asemenea, etica comunicării în era postmodernă trebuie să țină cont de faptul că orice act de comunicare este influențat de factori culturali și politici, care pot modela atât conținutul mesajului, cât și percepția acestuia. Comunicarea are un rol decisiv în construcția realității deoarece ajunge să condiționeze condiția umană, iar dezbaterile legate de comunicarea etică implică clasificări legate de statutul pe care îl are etica și rolul în raport cu morala sau deontologia. Aspectul de care sunt preocupați filosofii actuali este relația dintre etică, morală și lege deoarece impun o anumită conduită. Deși etica și morala sunt acceptabile la nivel social, legea nu este obligatoriu să fie etică sau morală. Astfel, etica și morala vin în sprijinul legii pentru a o întări și a responsabiliza societatea.

Atât moralitatea, cât și comunicarea nu pot fi înțelese ca simple expresii ale individului izolat, ci ca manifestări ale subiectului colectiv, ale unei conștiințe interumane care se constituie istoric și cultural. Ele se nasc și se transformă în interiorul unor condiționări social-istorice, care pot, după împrejurări, să le potențeze sau să le diminueze semnificația și forța. Comunicarea nu reprezintă doar o premisă a moralității, ci principiul vital al acesteia, respirația liberă prin care morala se regenerează și se menține vie (Vidam, 1995, 120). Prin comunicare, omul iese din închiderea solitară a propriei conștiințe și pătrunde în orizontul intersubiectivității, unde sensul binelui devine o operă comună. Astfel, putem concepe moralitatea contemporană ca un proces dinamic articulat pe traiectul: comunicare, comuniune, încredere. Comunicarea deschide spațiul relației; comuniunea îl umple de semnificație împărtășită; iar încrederea devine expresia sa etică supremă, condiția oricărei conviețuiri autentice. În pragul secolului XXI, acest parcurs definește nervul central al moralității: o moralitate care nu mai poate fi concepută fără dimensiunea dialogică, fără deschiderea către celălalt și fără recunoașterea reciprocă drept fundament al eticului. Într-o lume traversată de tehnologii ale comunicării și de fluxuri informaționale impersonale, adevărata provocare nu mai constă în a comunica mai mult, ci în a restitui comunicării funcția ei morală, aceea de a întemeia încrederea și de a susține comuniunea umană.

Studiul eticii comunicării nu urmărește să repare lumea sau să o plaseze pe o cale dreaptă și îngustă, ci mai degrabă să înțeleagă ce consideră altul suficient de important pentru a-și propulsa angajamentele comunicative. Studiul eticii comunicării este o cheie conceptuală și morală pentru înțelegerea angajamentelor performative care ghidează inițiativele și instituțiile umane în cadrul condiției umane. Etica comunicării este departe de a fi nouă, dar studiul formal al acestui domeniu de cercetare este în principal un fenomen al secolului al XX-lea în domeniul comunicării. Importanța eticii comunicării începe cu cunoașterea practică a faptului că nu suntem de acord atât asupra lucrurilor importante, cât și asupra celor banale. În acest moment istoric, putem spune că nu putem cădea de acord asupra a ceea ce contează, prin urmare, importanța studiului eticii comunicării rezidă în centrul înțelegerii, începutul comunicării peste și cu ceea ce contează. Cu toate că comportamentul lipsit de etică este supus judecății opiniei publice, normele conviețuirii sociale nu sunt supuse incidenței juridice, deoarece pot fi aplicate doar dacă sunt corelate cu încălcarea legii.

Există o tensiune între ceea ce „este" și ceea ce „ar trebui" să fie, adică între real și ideal, deoarece sunt două variante: ceea ce face toată lumea și ce considerăm că ar trebui să facă, cum se consideră a fi etic poate să difere. Apare și posibilitatea de a supraestima înțelegerea naturii și a eficacității metodelor de comunicare în detrimentul preocupării utilizării etice a tehnicilor. Pentru a aborda problemele care apar în cadrul eticii comunicării și pentru a putea primi un caracter corespunzător, este necesar să fie stabilită o tipologie standard. Studiul eticii este împărțit în trei părți: metaetică, etica normativă și etică descriptivă. În ceea ce privește etica descriptivă se abordează comportamentul moral al grupurilor specifice și analizează modul în care funcționează procesul decizional etic, iar din punct de vedere al comunicării, aceasta oferă o imagine a eșecurilor și a succeselor în practica jurnalistică, localizează problemele cu care se confruntă mass-media. Metaetica cuprinde probleme legate de teoriile normative și examinează filosofic natura binelui și validitatea teoriilor etice. Etica normativă dorește să stabilească reguli clare, nu doar abstracte, în acest sens, această ramură a primit o atenție mai mare academică.

Viziunea asupra lumii este cea în jurul căreia se axează gândirea și experiența noastră, oferind sens conștiinței, de aceea noua generație etică trebuie să lase în urmă modelele unidimensionale prin încorporarea presupozițiilor. Relativismul reprezintă un alt punct esențial care a devenit inevitabil prin intermediul lui Nietzsche, pentru progresul eticii. Astfel, în contextul relativismului, judecățile despre bine și rău sunt considerate acceptate doar de criteriile interne ale adepților, fără a avea o validitate în altă parte. Spre deosebire de etnocentrism care judecă alte grupuri în funcție de propriile valori, relativismul le consideră doar diferite, însă dacă susținem că acțiunea morală depinde de normele unei societăți, acest fapt promovează conformismul și nu lasă loc de îmbunătățire. Deși capacitatea noastră are anumite limite, oamenii își modelează propria viziune asupra realității și dintr-o perspectivă realistă există între ființele umane înțelegeri comune determinate de statutul lor ca ființe lingvistice. Toate limbile umane servesc formării culturale, pe lângă funcția socială, iar acest lucru permite menținerea limitelor dintre normele morale și comportamentul propriu-zis.

Comunicarea este văzută ca un proces care permite circulația informației, iar în cadrul teoriei clasice a comunicării apare ca o simplă transmitere de mesaje: mesajul este formulat de către emițător și apoi este verificat la momentul recepționării de către receptor. Limbajul este un element comun care unește oamenii, după cum arată și sintagma latină „inter homines dicere" (Vidam, 2009, 132), prin care se subliniază caracterul social și relațional al limbajului. Filosofia limbajului permite o analiză complexă, depășind limitele lingvisticii, fiind o formă de reflecție critică care se ocupă cu aspecte pe care știința omite să le abordeze. În momentul în care se reușește o „decompartimentare" a rigidității granițelor dintre discipline, apare progresul gândirii, prin dimensiunea transcendentală se abordează o viziune mai profundă axată pe condițiile fundamentale ale gândirii și ale cunoașterii.

Francisc Jaques introduce o distincție care trece deasupra abordărilor funcționale sau tehnice ale comunicării, între comunicativitate și comunicabilitate. Primul termen este văzut ca un ansamblu al manifestărilor de comunicare indiferent de gradul de claritate, fiind o noțiune descriptivă, referitoare la ce se întâmplă în spațiul comunicării propriu-zise. Al doilea termen vizează posibilitatea comunicării autentice, care se axează pe capacitatea deținută de interlocutor de a participa la înțelegerea comună. Prin această distincție se produce o ruptură epistemologică prin delimitarea de teoriile comunicării de tip informatic, cum este cea a lui Shannon & Weaver și pune accent pe dimensiunea ontologică și hermeneutică a comunicării. Filosofia lui Jaques se apropie de gânditori precum Emmanuel Levinas, deoarece relația cu celălalt este esențială și constitutivă pentru subiect. Comunicarea este o formă de deschidere etică, nu este privită doar din punct de vedere al funcționalității, nu mai poate fi privită doar ca o simplă transmitere de informații. Acesta dorește o reconsiderare a întregii filosofii a comunicării, prin intermediul comunicabilității care implică: sensul, raționalitatea și limitele comunicării mediatice. Dacă raționalitatea a fost privită ca logică formală, acum este văzută ca o deschidere spre celălalt. Întoarcerea la o formă de comunicare primară, care este profund legată de prezență și corporalitate aduce o opoziție spre formele abstracte și distorsionate, cum este comunicarea mediatică. Deoarece Jaques desemnează comunicarea interpersonală ca o formă originară, celelalte forme apar ca distorsionate prin ignorarea unor elemente esențiale precum: reciprocitate, empatie și context. În comparație cu Habermas, pentru care acțiunea comunicativă are ca ideal comunicarea nedistorsionată, Jaques nu pare la fel de preocupat de cadrul socio-politic, ci mai axat pe dimensiunea ontologică a comunicabilității, apropiindu-se de o gândire transcendentală. Prin expresia „comunicarea interpersonală ne dezvăluie rădăcinile care se află la baza experienței și reflecției umane" se înțelege faptul că comunicarea este o condiție a umanității, prin ea poți să îți construiești experiența și raportarea la realitate, aceeași idee apare și în gândirea fenomenologică unde Hans-Georg Gadamer vede limbajul ca un mediu al înțelegerii (Gadamer, 2001, 206). Distincția dintre referențiale și autoreferențiale este necesară pentru a înțelege natura limbajului ca fiind și un spațiu de reflecție asupra propriei funcționări. Astfel, referențialele se raportează la realitatea externă, în timp ce autoreferențialele se referă la sine. Prin caracterul reflexiv al comunicării se diferențiază de alte forme cum ar fi cea din regnul animal. Lumea socială este un efect al comunicabilității interpersonale, construită prin interacțiune comunicativă. Judecățile pot fi privite ca moduri de exprimare a contradicției și a procesului de interpretare, fiind creată o punte între normele raționalității și fluiditatea dialogului real. De asemenea, K. Gödel arată că niciun sistem formal nu se poate susține complet pe sine, fiind necesară o meta-perspectivă. Din punct de vedere al naturii contradictorii a presei aceasta este una tipic modernă, derivată din logica iluministă a individului rațional confruntat cu masa socială. Ea amintește de gândirea lui Jürgen Habermas, care descrie presa ca loc al spațiului public burghez, o sferă unde indivizii raționali comunică pentru a ajunge la consens, dar care, odată cu comercializarea mass-media, devine un instrument de manipulare și de formare artificială a opiniei colective. Astfel, comportamentul uman este modelat de impactul senzorial și afectiv al mass-media, nu de reflecția critică asupra conținutului. Producerea și consumul informației trebuie ghidate nu doar de eficiență sau profit, ci de criterii morale precum: adevăr, respect. Mass-media a devenit un spațiu în care se formează conștiința și realitatea socială. Astfel, este importantă nu respingerea tehnicii, ci umanizarea ei printr-o raționalitate etică, adică o formă de înțelepciune aplicată la comunicare. Spre deosebire de Hegel, care propunea o totalitate a rațiunii care închide realul în gândire, Jacques refuză sistemul de tip închis și comunitatea ideală propusă de Karl-Otto Apel, propunând o deschidere transcendentală, ca principiu aprioric al limbajului. Relația constitutivă între subiecte se opune sensului kantian al unei subiectivități formale.

În trecut nu se făcea o distincție între dialog, dialogism și interlocuție, fiind considerate sinonime. Acestea sunt distincte din punct de vedere filosofic: dialogul poate fi formal, retoric sau aparent; în timp ce dialogismul cuprinde o pluralitate de voci fără să garanteze veritabilitatea; și interlocuția arată relația activă între vorbitori. Prin intermediul viziunilor pe care le-a oferit Ludwig Wittgenstein asupra limbajului, se oferă o direcție în ceea ce privește redescoperirea limbajului cu ajutorul autorilor postmoderni care prezintă relația dintre limbaj și structurile formative ale gândirii. Limba maternă joacă un rol important în pattern-urile cognitive ale vorbitorilor deoarece apare sintaxa subiectivă a persoanei. Limbajul permite transmiterea culturii de la o generație la alta, prin socializare. De asemenea, acele adevăruri universal valabile apar prin perpetuarea valorilor dominante plasate la nivelul mentalităților (Sandu, 2009, 27). Eliminarea transcendentului în gândirea postmodernă deschide calea către un nou tip de umanism, unul situat „dincolo de om", acolo unde gândirea existențialistă plasase idea de neant. Astfel, postmodernismul se disociază deviziunea ontologic centrată și propune o reconfigurare axiologică, orientată către o etică a diferenței. În timp ce Wittgenstein vede limbajul ca un ansamblu de jocuri, Vidam Teodor critică această poziție deoarece comunicabilitatea necesită ceva mai profund decât acele reguli sociale pe care le are un joc, fiind necesară o deschidere transcendentală între vorbitori. Validitatea unui joc de limbaj nu este dată doar de funcționalitate, ci și de reflexivitate și responsabilitate. În sensul lui Wittgenstein jocul de limbaj ține de caracterul istoric și contextual și nu poate fi unul universal, însă ceea ce este transcendental este interlocuția, Jaques arată că interlocuția este condiția de posibilitate a sensului, fiind analog cu funcția transcendentală la Kant. Optima înțelegere a

Etica are un substrat rațional și universal al moralității care se găsește în pragmatica comunicării, în ceea ce privește posibilitatea dialogului uman. Normele morale sunt justificate prin capacitatea de a rezista în cadrul unei comunități ideale de comunicare, în timp ce adevărata etică apare unde cei care participa la dialog își oferă recunoaștere și egalitate în raționamente. Însă, pentru a evita dizolvarea eticii în pluralism arbitrar, trebuie să fie fundamentată, nu doar aplicată. Dacă „întemeierea eticii comunicării, care s-a dezvoltat până acum se bazează pe presupoziții ideale" (Apel, 1980, 228), atunci această etică începe de la presupoziții normative care sunt considerate ideale, fiind realități neobservabile care ghidează comportamentul uman în sfera comunicării. Prin faptul că limbajul nu este doar un sistem de reguli, este și un instrument prin care are loc interacțiunea socială și morală, pragmatica discursului implică o componentă morală.

Acțiunea comunicativă este întemeiată, deoarece este condiționată de structurile sociale, nefiind un punct de plecare absolut. Se pune accent pe caracterul istoric și social al comunicării și se distanțează de absolutizarea limbajului ca fiind o sursă unică de realitate. Validitatea unui discurs nu este garantată doar teoretic, ci și social, deoarece trebuie să fie în concordanță cu valorile unei comunități. Pentru a demonstră că unele acțiuni sunt ghidate de valori comune, Habermas propune o diferențiere fundamentală între „muncă" și „interacțiune": prima reprezintă o activitate rațională orientată spre obiective exterioare, în timp ce a doua este o acțiune comunicativă orientată spre consens. Tensiunea dintre ideal și real în teoriile comunicării este evidențiată de întrebarea dacă este idealul rațiunii discursive cu adevărat posibil într-o lume care este marcată de inegalități și manipulare, deoarece și în modelul lui Habermas, rămâne neclar cine stabilește valorile după care se ghidează comunicarea și cine decide orientarea discursului. Jaques depășește limitarea modelelor lui Habermas deoarece integrează experiența intențională, datorită faptului că comunicarea este un act cu semnificație existențială și intersubiectivă.

Semnificația nu există pur și simplu, ea se construiește prin limbaj, în contextul comunicării reale dintre persoane, prin limbajele individuale, care permit ieșirea din subiectivismul strict și deschid noi orizonturi comune de înțelegere. În ceea ce privește interpretarea, ca act de descifrare a sensului, este considerată privilegiată doar dacă se ancorează în situația originară a semnificației. Din punct de vedere al relației dintre vorbitori, care este mai mult decât un simplu schimb de informații, ea conține următoarele aspecte: poziționarea cronotopică, implicarea ontologică și responsabilitatea etică (Vidam, 2009, 147). Astfel, în timp ce comunicativitatea este deja un înțeles comun, comunicabilitatea este căutarea a ceea ce încă nu este comun. Deși ființa umană este pusă într-o comunitate pe care nu o controlează, doar o formează într-o măsură. Comunicarea reprezintă un obiectiv central al filosofiei, de asemenea și etica comunicării, deoarece în absența unui cadru etic, comunicarea implică manipulare.

Comunicarea implică o tensiune productivă între general și particular, între sens și responsabilitate. Însă, dacă apare depărtarea de „eul" autentic, apare alienarea și blocarea comunicării reale. Gândirea nu este autosuficientă, deoarece sensul nu este descoperit în sine, ci este construit împreună, în cadrul relației. Astfel, două modele tradiționale de adevăr: inneismul și modelul de corespondență sunt înlocuite cu un model intersubiectiv și etic. Modele tradiționale susțineau că adevărul există deja în noi, în timp ce noul model arată că adevărul se construiește prin consens rațional. Precum se afirmă și în teoria acțiunii comunicative a lui Habermas, nu orice consens este adevăr, trebuie să fie implicate și condiții de raționalitate și etică a interlocuției. În comparație cu Karl Otto-Apel și Habermas, contribuțiile lui Jaques arată o viziune mai umană și mai existențială asupra comunicării, implicând: comunitatea interlocutorilor, acțiunea comunicativă, dialogismul și reciprocitatea. În ceea ce privește nesiguranța comunicării, această reprezintă autenticitatea vieții, contrar unei lumi robotizate.

Societatea contemporană este marcată de o proliferare semnificativă a dispozitivelor comunicaționale, care au cunoscut o evoluție continuă, atât în privința complexității tehnice, cât și a sofisticării strategiilor de utilizare. Această dezvoltare a determinat o confuzie frecventă, cel puțin în anumite medii intelectuale, între tehnicile comunicării moderne și cele specifice propagandei manipulative, alimentând percepția exagerată privind „puterea mass-media". Deși granițele conceptuale dintre influență, persuasiune, propagandă și manipulare rămân adesea difuze în cadrul proceselor de comunicare socială, această ambiguitate nu ar trebui să împiedice analiza riguroasă a noilor practici și politici comunicaționale. Acestea impun o reconsiderare a cadrelor teoretice utilizate în interpretarea funcționării sistemelor de comunicare. Evoluția continuă a mijloacelor de comunicare generează transformări subtile, dar persistente, în mecanismele de control social. Aceste transformări sunt adesea insesizabile, întrucât noile forme de dominație socială nu se manifestă explicit, ci se configurează printr-o diversitate de inițiative instituționale. Acestea nu presupun neapărat acceptarea pasivă a discursului emis, ci acționează ca factori catalizatori ai schimbării sociale, angajându-se într-un proces de interacțiune cu indivizii și grupurile sociale vizate. Deși, în majoritatea cazurilor, comunicarea socială rămâne asimetrică și inegală, ea nu este, prin natura sa, unilaterală. Introducerea tehnologiilor interactive, în special internetul, deschide posibilitatea unor forme de comunicare mai echilibrate care sunt bazate pe participare activă.

Comunicarea în câmpul social contemporan prezintă o serie de trăsături definitorii (Tran, Stănciugelu, 2003, 105), care reflectă complexitatea și dinamica actualelor procese comunicaționale. În primul rând, se remarcă asimetria relațiilor de comunicare, determinată de rolul tot mai pronunțat al dispozitivelor comunicaționale utilizate de majoritatea instituțiilor sociale. Acestea generează forme de „interacțiune parțială", în care subiecții nu participă pe picior de egalitate la schimbul comunicațional. În al doilea rând, se constată o diversificare a modalităților de exercitare a comunicării, care poate lua forma discursului argumentativ, a celui persuasiv sau a celui interactiv, în funcție de scopurile urmărite și de contexte.De asemenea, comunicarea socială este caracterizată de o fărâmițare spațială, în sensul că diferitele tipuri de comunicare tind să se juxtapună sau chiar să se suprapună, ceea ce generează ambiguități funcționale și simbolice în sfera publică. Un alt aspect esențial îl reprezintă participarea inegală a actorilor sociali, influențată de apartenența de clasă sau grup social, în special în ceea ce privește accesul la mass-media și la instrumentele de exercitare a controlului simbolic. Nu în ultimul rând, comunicarea socială actuală manifestă o tendință de întrepătrundere cu sfera profesională și cu cea privată, ceea ce indică un proces de reconfigurare a granițelor dintre aceste dimensiuni. În acest context, tehnologiile comunicaționale contribuie la articularea procesului de individualizare a practicilor sociale cu participarea activă la spațiul public, facilitând o formă de compatibilizare între autonomie individuală și implicare colectivă.

Digitalizarea este prezentă în majoritatea domeniilor vieții, iar aceasta influențează procesul decizional uman deoarece tehnologiile digitale au impact asupra comportamentului nostru, dar și asupra alegerilor pe care le facem. Acest lucru este mai vizibil în special pentru tehnologia persuasivă care dorește o modificare a comportamentului, în sensul că ceasurile inteligente indică nevoia de mai multă mișcare, bordurile mașinilor oferă detalii despre consumul de energie etc. În domeniul filosofiei, îngrijorarea apare în privința subminării autonomiei umane, fiind un subiect des întâlnit în abordarea deontologică a eticii tehnologiilor. Astfel, etica deontologică vizează corectitudinea acțiunilor morale, indiferent de consecințele care pot să apară. Deontologia kantiană se concentrează pe autonomie, astfel încât drepturile umane să fie respectate, deoarece etica deontologică are rădăcinile într-o înțelegere particulară a ceea ce înseamnă să fii om. Prin digitalizare, obiectele tehnologice se transformă din lucruri pasive în lucruri cu propria acțiune. Comunicarea socială este modelată într-un procentaj tot mai mare de mediul digital. Conform abordărilor lui Kant, raționalitatea este în centrul teoriei etice, astfel că legea morală devine un cadru rațional pentru evaluarea morală a acțiunilor efectuate de agenți care au liberul arbitru. Libertatea umană este o provocare care permite descoperirea de noi orizonturi pentru oameni, prin faptul că de multe ori ne confruntam cu nevoia de a decide care dintre acțiunile posibile ar trebui să alegem să le realizăm la un moment dat.

Indiferent de eticheta pe care o atribuim prezentului, modernitate târzie, postmodernitate sau epoca globalizării, trăsătura comună care le unește este expansiunea comunicării. Această idee plasează comunicarea în centrul tuturor proceselor umane: sociale, prin rețelele de interacțiune și social media; economice, prin circulația globală a informației și a capitalului; politice, prin construirea consensului prin discurs.Astfel, lumea actuală este definită de o hipercomunicare, o stare în care totul se traduce și se transmite prin semne, simboluri, mesaje și medieri digitale. Aurel Codoban vede globalizarea ca o formă de generalizare a comunicării deci aceasta nu poate fi separată de comunicare, pentru că fiecare act de globalizare presupune transmiterea unui mesaj (Frunză, 2011, 142). Dacă totul se rezumă la comunicare, există riscul ca sensul profund al comunicării să se piardă în favoarea comunicării superficiale. De aceea, globalizarea comunicării poate duce la uniformizarea culturilor; reducerea relațiilor umane la schimburi de informații; inflația mesajelor, care poate ascunde lipsa de conținut. În acest sens, Codoban avertizează indirect asupra ambivalenței comunicării moderne: ea unește lumea, dar o și fragmentează prin zgomotul excesiv al informației.

EXPRESSIVITY AND DYNAMISM THROUGH DERIVATIVES WITH AUGMENTATIVE SUFFIXES -OI, -OAIE IN THE ROMANIAN LANGUAGE

Elena-Daniela Strigoiu (Marinescu)
Phd Student, University of Craiova

Abstract: In this article, we aim to investigate the process of formation of augmentatives through derivation with the suffixes -oi, -oaie, while highlighting the semantic and stylistic functions that the newly formed words fulfill. The analysis is based on examples extracted from Romanian literary works, in order to understand the contribution of these forms to the expressivity and dynamism of the language. The examples also reflect the confusions that can be made with motional suffixes. Therefore, we explained the correlation of suffixal derivatives with morphological aspects, namely the marking of the gender of nouns. We also took into account the distinction at the stylistic level, through popular, regional forms, etc.

Keywords: augmentative; expressivity; dynamism, meaning; stylistic register

Augmentativele sunt cuvinte formate, de regulă, prin derivare cu sufixe, care indică o mărime excesivă a obiectului sau a însușirii. De cele mai multe ori, ele capătă și o valoare conotativă depreciativă, peiorativă (de dispreț, de ironie, de grosolănie).

În limba română, augmentativele se formează în special de la substantive și adjective şi reprezintă un fenomen interesant de derivare, prin care un cuvânt de bază capătă sensul „mai mare", „mai intens" sau „mai puternic" decât forma sa inițială. Ele se formează, de regulă, prin sufixe augmentative. Sufixele augmentative sunt afixele care modifică sensul cuvintelor de bază prin accentuarea sau creșterea caracteristicilor lor. augmentativ, -ă – „(gram.) augmentatif – care augmentează, care arată o sporire, o creştere, o mărire (a unor însuşiri, de obicei a proporţiilor unui lucru, ale unei fiinţe)" (DA, p. 365).

Cele mai frecvente sufixe augmentative[1] în limba română sunt: -oi/ -oaie[2], -an/ -ană; -andru; -ău; -ăraie[3]; -anie[4] etc.

Pentru cercetare am selectat un corpus format din 45 de cuvinte terminate în -oi/ -oaie, selectate din Dicţionar invers, apoi interpretate pe baza informaţiilor oferite de dicționarele generale ale limbii: DLR, DA, DM, MDA etc. şi de studii consacrate formării cuvintelor: FCLR, SMFC, etc.

Derivate cu sufixul augmentativ -oi, -oaie

Sufixul -oi, -oaie este, fără îndoială, cel mai productiv[5] și mai des întâlnit sufix augmentativ. -oi[6] (pentru masculin) „are valoare augmentativă" (Laura Vasiliu, Derivarea cu sufixe şi prefixe în Cartea cu învăţătură a diaconului Coresi din 1581, în SMFC I, p. 243) şi „este, probabil, de origine latină: se pare că iniţial a existat femininul -oaie < cf. lat. -onea (sau -onia), iar forma masculină -oi este refăcută după forma feminină" (FCLR sec. XVI-XVIII, p. 159). Acest sufix se poate atașa atât la substantive comune, cât și, mai rar, la nume proprii şi transmite o gamă variată de sensuri. Cercetătorii care au căutat să explice valorile (cea augmentativă fiind cel

[2] Sufixul poate forma și augmentative de la verbe (ex.: usturoi, de la a ustura), iar în combinație cu un sens peiorativ al bazei, se manifestă ca augmentativ-peiorativ (băboi, fătoi).
[3] cu sens augmentativ-peiorativ/colectiv
[4] împrumutat din slavă, adesea augmentativ-peiorativ
[5] „cel mai productiv este -oi, -oaie: băieţoi, căsoaie" (ELR, 75) ;

mai des întâlnită şi recunoscută) şi utilizarea/ utilitatea/ productivitatea sufixului -oi, -oaie, au semnalat că acesta ar putea avea (pe lângă descendenţa latină) şi rădăcini lanino-slave[7]. Pascu (unul dintre precursorii cercetării sufixelor în limba română) în Sufixele româneşti, Bucureşti, 1916[8], susţine că derivatele originare în -oi / -oaie, preluate odată cu sufixul, nu au fost păstrate în română, considerând că aceste forme s-au pierdut după ce sufixul s-a consolidat pe teren propriu[9], iar Rosetti în Istoria limbii române I, de la origini până la începutul secolului al XVII-lea precizează că „-o, -oaie nu continuă pe lat. -o, -onis. Se explică prin fem. -oaie < onea (sau -onia), derivat fem. în -ia a unei teme consonantice; dr. -oi e refăcut după forma feminină. Formează augmentative: buboi, derivate verbale n. de instrument: urzoi, n. de animale fem.: cerboaică, lupoaică (-oaie + suf. sl. -că), n. generice: bulgăroaică, n. fem. de meşteşugari: zarzavagioaică, n. pr. fem. derivate de la n. soţului: Rădoaia, n. de localităţi : Aricioaia (Vîlcea), Brăzoaia, Corboaia, Ghenoaia, n. de animale masc. derivate de la n. fem. ale animalului: mierloi, răţoi, adjective foste substantive n. de agent: greoi, vioi. În ar., derivă substantivele din verbe: muşconu „ţînţar" < muşcu „înţep" (în dr., substantivele au devenit adjective: lucroi „activ, căruia îi place să lucreze"), formează numele soţiei după al soţului: Năsoarie < Nasi şi substantive fem. derivate din forma masc.: picurăroane < picurar (cf. în dr., Banat: ungurooene etc.), megl. lupoană, ursoană (în megl., mai formează substantive: cucuşonă „păduche de găină", măndăloană „zăvor" şi augmentative: fitoană „fetişcană")[10]. Formal, aceste exemple sunt derivate cu acelaşi sufix, dar valoarea nu este augmentativă.

În Interferenţe lingvistice, studii şi cercetări, Domniţa Tomescu (citând Novi te ex nomine, Estudos filolóxicos ofrecidos ao Prof. Dieter Kremer, Santiago de Compostela, Fundación Pedro Barrié de la Maza, p. 197-203, 2004) explică etimlogia latină a acestui sufix, prin raportare la analizale fonetice şi dialectale realizate de lingvişti renumiţi (Densusiani, Rosetti, Petrovici)[11]. În încercarea de a argumenta influenţele slave (ale lui -oje) asupra sufixului -oi, se obsevă (după analiza atentă a lucrărilor susţinătorilor acestei etimologii) că, deşi poate fi recunoscut în unele anroponime sau patronime, sufixul îşi pierde valoarea augmentativă[12].

Astfel, limba română nu cunoaşte exemple de derivate moştenite pentru sufixele -easă, -etic, -ic(ă), -oiu" (Pascu, p.6)

Sufixul -oi se atașează la substantive masculine inanimate pentru a exprima: dimensiuni mari, masivitate, greutate, uneori și o nuanță peiorativă sau ironică.

Cu baza substantiv feminin:

Sufixul -oaie, mai puțin productiv decât -oi, dar foarte expresiv, se atașează la substantive (adesea inanimate) pentru a sugera: un obiect mare, voluminos, uneori și aspect neîngrijit sau disproporționat[13].

În limba română, augmentativele tind să masculinizeze forma, chiar dacă baza era feminină. În secolele XVI–XVIII (atestări în FCLR), aceste forme erau mai frecvente și mai variate, fiind folosite în limbaj popular, în cronici și în texte cu tentă stilistică.

Cu baza substantiv neutru sau substantiv feminin: săpoi s.n. „augmentativ al lui sapă” (DLR, 187); (DI, 433); (DL, 26); (DM, 740), „sapă mare” (MDA II, 774), sapă + suf. -oi; bărboi s.n. „barbă mare” (DA, 496); (MDA I, 184); (DI, 430); (DI, 430), barbă + -oi; buboi s.n. „bubă mare” (DI, 430); (MDA I, 251), bubă + suf. -oi; furcoi s.n. „augmentativul lui furcă” (DI, 431); (DA, 197), „furcă mare” (DL, 345); (DM, 323); (MDA I, 955), furcă + suf. -oi; lădoi s.n. „augmentativ al lui ladă” (DI, 431); (DLR, 311), „ladă mare” (DL, 729); (DM, 448); (MDA I, 1320), ladă + suf. -oi; pungoi s.n. „augmentativ al lui pungă” (DI, 431); (DLR, 1779); (DM, 680), „pungă mare” (MDA II, 600), pungă + suf. -oi; săbioi s.n. „augmentativ al lui sabie” (DI, 432); (DLR, 127); (DL, 19); (DM, 738), „sabie mare şi grea” (MDA II, 764), sabie + suf. -oi; moviloi s.n. „augmentativ al lui movilă” (DI, 432); (DLR, 925); (DM, 518), „movilă mare” (DL, 135); (MDA II, 67), movilă + suf. -oi; ţăpoi s.m. „augmentativ al lui ţap” (DLR, 29), ţap + suf. -oi; pietroi s.n. „augmentativ al lui piatră” (DI, 434); (DLR, 589); (DL, 418); (DM, 616), „piatră mare” (MDA II, 378), piatră + suf. -oi; lăcătoi s.n. „augmentativ al lui lacăt” (DI, 435); (DLR, 292); (DL, 728); (DM, 447), „lacăt mare” (MDA I, 1318), lacăt + suf. -oi; pitoi s.n. „augmentativ al lui pită” (DI, 435); (DLR, 664); (DL, 433); (DM, 621), „pitan”[15] (MDA II, 397), pită + suf. -oi; băltoi s.n. „augmentativul lui baltă” (DI, 435); (DA, 469), „baltă mare” (DM, 73); (MDA I, 181); (DI, 435), baltă + suf. -oi; meliţoi s.n. „meliţă mai mare” (DI, 435);

Unele cuvinte au fost moştenite sau împrumutate cu desinenţă de gen, dar ulterior au format celălalt gen prin sufixare cu sufix augmentativ, devenit moţional [33].

O altă categorie o constituie falsele augmentative (prin formă/ alcătuire, nu şi semantic); ele aparţin altor registre stilistice şi au, în mare parte, etimologie necunoscută.

Cuvinte care, deși au terminația identică sau similară cu sufixele augmentative, nu au un sens augmentativ real și nu provin prin derivare de la o formă de bază mai mică sau neutră. Ele sunt cuvinte de sine stătătoare, unde sufixul augmentativ și-a pierdut forța semantică sau nu a existat niciodată ca element modificator. „Neutralizarea sufixelor augmentative se produce când -oi sau -oaică formează un masculin sau un feminin inexistent ca în cintezoi, răţoi sau în cerboiacă, lupoaică”[34].

Concluzii

Relația dintre lexicologie (studiul vocabularului, al sensurilor cuvintelor) și morfologie (studiul formei și al structurii cuvintelor) devine evidentă în cazul derivatelor cu sufixe moționale ca -oi/-oaie. Aceste sufixe demonstrează modul în care derivarea acționează pentru a modifica sensul lexical al unui cuvânt, adăugând o nuanță semantică (afectivă, peiorativă sau augmentativă).

Lexicologia studiază cum se modifică sensul cuvântului de bază prin adăugarea sufixului. În cazul sufixelor moționale, sensul nu este doar de mărime, ci și de schimbare a genului.

Derivatele cu sufixele -oi/-oaie ilustrează perfect intersecția morfologiei cu lexicologia. Sufixul este un instrument de formare a cuvintelor. El are o formă specifică și se atașează conform unor reguli gramaticale (de exemplu, la un substantiv). Odată atașat, sufixul adaugă cuvântului o nouă semnificație, o nuanță de sens care nu se regăsește în cuvântul de bază. De la forma generică șarpe se ajunge la augmentativ șerpoi, substantiv masculin sau feminin şerpoaie.

Procesul morfologic de derivare generează o modificare la nivelul lexical, demonstrând că forma și sensul sunt inseparabile în studiul limbii. Forma morfologică este purtătoarea unei sarcini semantice.

Derivatele cu sufixele -oi/-oaie sunt un exemplu elocvent al legăturii dintre lexicologie și morfologie.

În registrul popular sau regional, augmentativele sunt frecvent folosite pentru a colora expresivitatea discursului. Augmentativele reprezintă un mijloc expresiv și dinamic al limbii române, reflectând nu doar caracteristici cantitative, ci și atitudinea vorbitorului. Ele îmbogățesc lexicul prin nuanțare și contribuie la plasticitatea limbajului cotidian și literar. Aceste forme apar atât în limbajul popular și regional cât și în limba literară, iar prezența lor într-o operă literară contribuie la crearea atmosferei, caracterizarea personajelor, tonului sau efectului estetic.

Sufixele -oi și -oaie sunt printre cele mai productive în limba română pentru formarea augmentativelor, fiind utilizate cu frecvență mai mare în registrul colocvial, popular sau regional[35]. Ele generează forme care exprimă mărirea fizică, greutatea, dimensiunea, dar și aprecieri ironice, peiorative sau pur expresive. Genul poate suferi schimbare în procesul derivării: un substantiv masculin poate deveni feminin la forma augmentativă.

SEMANTIC WAYS TO CREATE TERMS IN THE FIELD OF BOTANY

Daniela Suciu (Fodor)
PhD Student, UMFST „G. E. Palade" of Târgu Mureş

Abstract: The general objective of this study is to illustrate a productive mechanism for term formation in the field of botany—namely, the terminologisation. The terminologisation is a semantic process that involves the extension of meaning through the modification and addition of new conceptual features to words originating from the general lexicon. The methodological approach consists in comparing the primary meanings of the wordswith their second-degree specialized meanings in order to emphasise the denotative values of the terms. Thus, the word becomes semantically enriched, acquires the status of a specialized term within a technical terminology, and comes to designate a concept. Within scientific discourse, it acquires the status of a term, whereas in the common language it becomes a polysemantic word. The conclusion that can be derived is that the role of terminologisation is to address the deficit of terms by avoiding the use of some hermetic, scholarly terms that are difficult to understand and use.*

Repere teoretice

Constituirea unei terminologii a unui domeniu științific este un proces niciodată încheiat. Știința evoluează, iar modalitățile de numire a conceptului sunt diverse: împrumuturi, calcul, mijloace interne, metaforizare, terminologizare etc.

Terminologizarea constă în migrarea termenilor din lexicul comun în cel specializat. Teoriile moderne pledează pentru deschiderea granițelor dintre lexicul comun și lexicul specializat, din considerentul că majoritatea termenilor provin din limbajul comun. Ilustrăm cu exemple din domeniul botanicii. Numele populare ale plantelor sunt cunoscute de către toți vorbitorii: gura leului, floarea-soarelui, sunătoare, traista ciobanului, ciuboțica cucului. În aceste exemple, observăm cum termenii primari (gura, floarea, a suna, traista, ciuboțica) servesc drept bază pentru crearea de noi concepte.

Terminologizarea este un proces care se realizează la nivel semantic, presupunând extensie de sens, prin modificarea și adăugarea unor trăsături conceptuale noi, cuvintelor din lexicul general. În acest sens, se cooptează cuvinte din limba comună pentru a denumi un concept. Specializarea se realizează pe baza unei asemănări între realitatea desemnată de cuvânt și elementul recent descoperit. Astfel, cuvântul se îmbogățește din punct de vedere semantic, devine termen specializat în cadrul unei terminologii și desemnează un concept. În limbajul științific, dobândește statutul de termen, iar în limbajul comun devine cuvânt polisemantic. (A se compara vas din limbajul comun cu vas liberian din botanică, țesut din limbajul comun cu țesut conducător din botanică, plăcințele din limbajul comun cu plăcințele din botanică). Rolul important al contextului este precizat în mai multe studii care abordează fenomenul terminologizării. Acest aspect este ilustrat și de Vézina Robert în lucrarea La rédaction de définitions terminologiques[1]. Lingvistul consideră că este foarte important să indicăm domeniul din care termenul face parte, astfel încât să se poată evita foarte ușor confuzia[2]. Exemplificăm cu: țesut (botanică)-„ ansamblu de celule vegetale"[3]

țesut (în domeniul textil)-„faptul de a țese, meșteșugul țesătoriei”[5]

În lucrările de specialitate se precizează atât avantaje, cât și dezavantaje ale acestui mijloc controversat de creare a termenilor. Ileana Busuioc și Mădălina Cucu sunt de părere că terminologizarea este un mijloc de creație neologică[6], un procedeu avantajos de formare a termenilor, deoarece „se recurge la un fond de cuvinte deja existent, termenul este mai ușor de înțeles și memorat și șansele de difuzare mai mari”[7]. Termenii formați sunt mai ușor de integrat în limbajul specialiștilor, fiind cunoscuți din limbajul comun. Rolul terminologizării este de acoperire a deficitului de termeni, prin evitarea folosirii unor termeni ermetici, savanți, dificil de înțeles și de utillizat. Ilustrăm cu câteva exemple din botanică. Omul de știință folosește și termenul uzual sau popular din rațiuni didactice:

Termenul științific latinesc	Termenul uzual	Cuvânt
Coleus scutellarioides	urzicuță	urzică
Capsicum annuum	ardei ornamental	ardei
Hippeastrum	crin asiatic	crin
Crassula sp	iarbă grasă	iarbă
Tradescantia zebrina	telegraf	telegraf[8]

Véronica Cervero considera că extensia de sens reprezintă o supraîncărcare cu semnificații noi a vocabularului unei limbi[9], ilustrând dezavantajele acestui procedeu.

Un alt dezavantaj vizează ambiguitatea pe care o provoacă: „produs prin extensiunea unui sens inițial de cele mai multe ori printr-o metaforă, funcționarea lui este de multe ori expusă ambiguității, consecință inerentă polisemiei”[10]. Pentru H. Bejoint, terminologizarea este o creație de tip polisemantic[11], iar creșterea polisemiei este un fapt real, în pofida părerilor generale care pledează pentru monosemantismul termenului. Realitatea este că monosemantismul termenului este dat numai de context, în acest caz de botanică. În afara contextului, rămâne un termen polisemantic, așa cum este înregistrat în dicționare. După cum se observă în exemplul de la a, termenul vas apare în context specializat, iar în exemplele b și c, cuvântul vas are alte sensuri.

a. „Ferigile au organe vegetative adevărate și vase conducătoare. Tulpina este adesea rizom. Înmulțirea se face prin spori aflați pe fața inferioară a frunzelor. Din germinarea unui spor ia naștere o plantulă care poartă organele de reproducere”[12].
b. A cumpărat un vas de lemn.
c. A transportat marfa cu un vas.

Părerea majorității specialiștilor este că termenului nu i se oferă un caracter polisemantic, ci un sens specializat. De exemplu, termenul înmulțire are sens specializat în botanică, matematică, zoologie etc.

„producere de indivizi noi, plante”.-botanică
„operație aritmetică”-matematică
„reproducere”-în zoologie

Studiu de caz

Terminologizarea este un mod productiv de formare a termenilor în cadrul botanicii. Cuvinte din limbajul general sunt utilizate mai des în vocabularul specializat. În limbajul botanic, se conservă seme căror li se adaugă alte seme suplimentare pentru a dobândi o nouă semnificație prin extensiune de sens. Unitățile lexicale obținute sunt în general compuse sau derivate. Vom compara sensurile primare ale cuvintelor cu sensurile specializate de gradul doi pentru a evidenția valorile denotative ale termenilor. Exemplele sunt selectate din Dicționarul etnobotanic, din Dicționarul de fitonime și din cărțile de specialitate.

Termenii obținuți prin terminologizare conservă seme specifice cuvântului inițial, dar și adaugă seme suplimentare pentru a dobândi o nouă semnificație (măr-măr pădureț, măr acru, măr dulce, buruiană-buruiană de leac, buruiană sfântă).

Vom prezenta în lucrarea noastră câțiva dintre termenii formați prin procedeul terminologizării:

- buruiană de leac

Cuvântul „buruiană" este înregistrat în DEX cu sensul de „nume generic pentru diverse plante erbacee necultivate"[13].

1) Valori conceptuale

Cuvântul apare în sintagma terminologică „buruiană de leac" ce denumește în botanică o plantă medicinală.

2) Valori lingvistice

Sintagma s-a format prin procedeul compunerii prin subordonare dintr-un substantiv+prepoziție+substantiv. Semul diferențiator cu funcția sintactică de atribut substantival prepozițional „de leac" ilustrează scopul utilizării acestei plante: pentru vindecare (leac este un sinonim regional pentru medicament).

- ceapă sălbatică

Cuvântul ceapă (lat. caepa) face parte din lexicul general al limbii, are sensul primar de „plantă erbacee legumicolă, bienală, din familia liliaceelor, comestibilă, cu miros puternic, specific, cu tulpina aeriană dreaptă, cilindrică și verde și cu cea subterană în formă de bulb"[14]. Analizăm termenul din perspectiva a două valori:

1) valori conceptuale, specializate în domeniul Botanicii, așa cum se observă în exemplul: ceapă sălbatică, cu denumirea științifică de Anthericum ramosum[15].
2) valori lingvistice: structura ceapă sălbatică s-a format prin adăugarea unui adjectiv, iar cuvintele au suferit o modificare semantică prin compunere prin subordonare. Cuvântul din lexicul general ceapă apare în sintagma terminologică ceapă sălbatică ce denumește o plantă erbacee, perenă, mică, înrudită cu ceapa. Planta cunoaște o serie de denumiri populare: arpagic, ceapă perenă pitică, cepșoară, harpagică etc. Sensul specializat a căpătat și un important sem diferențiator: adjectivul sălbatic, acesta având rolul de a distinge termenul de cuvântul din lexicul comun. Consultând dicționarul de fitonime, identificăm și alte seme diferențiatoare pentru termenul ceapă. Acesta apare în zeci de ocurențe dintre care menționăm:

[15] Constantin Drăgulescu, Dicționar de fitonime românești, Editura Universității „Lucian Blaga" din Sibiu, 2018, p. 20.

Terminologizare-substantiv+adjectiv	Substantiv+substantiv
Ceapă albă	Ceapa câinelui
Ceapă galbenă	Ceapa cioarei
Ceapă pipirigă	Ceapă de câmp
Ceapă mânzată	Ceapă de mare
Ceapă ciorască	Ceapă de munte

- creţişoară

Cuvântul „creț” se folosește în lexicul comun cu sensul de „răsucit, cârlionțat, buclat, cutat, zbârcit, ridat”[16].

1) Valori conceptuale

Prin terminologizare, cuvântul derivat „creţişoară” devine termen care denumește o plantă (Alchemilla vulgaris) din familia rozaceelor, cu flori mici verzi, gălbui.

2) Valori lingvistice

De la adjectivul creț s-a obținut prin derivare cu sufix un substantiv „creţişoară” utilizat atât la numărul singular, cât și la plural.

- iarba fânului

Cuvântul „iarbă” se regăsește în lexicul comun și face referire la un „nume generic dat plantelor erbacee, anuale sau perene, cu părțile aeriene verzi, subțiri și mlădioase, folosite pentru hrana animalelor”[17].

1) Valori conceptuale:

Termenul „iarba fânului” apare cu sensul specializat de Anthoxanthum odoratum[18]. În Dicționarul lui Alexandru Borza identificăm și alte denumiri populare: „viţelar, iarbă mirositoare”[19]. În dicționarul lui Drăgulescu[20] lexemul iarba apare în peste 200 de formanți:

iarbă de albine	grasă	iarba albinei
de apă	grecească	iarba apelor
de balsam	înțepătoare	iarba bălții
de baltă	japoneză	iarba broaștelor
de bătătură	lipicioasă	iarba ciobanului
de cal	măruntă	iarba inimii
de inimă	moale	iarba împăratului
de leșin	neagră	iarba lui Dumnezeu
de molii	otrăvită	iarba măgarului

2) Valori lingvistice:

În aceste surse, apare în trei sintagme de tipul

a) substantiv+prepoziție+substantiv, compunere prin subordonare –semul diferențiator este substantivul în Acuzativ (iarbă de apă) care indică apartenența.
b) de tipul substantiv+ substantiv în cazul genitiv: semul diferențiator este substantivul (iarba apelor) care indică tot apartenența.
c) substantiv+adjectiv: semul diferențiator este adjectivul (iarbă măruntă) care indică o trăsătură a obiectului.

Astfel, semul diferențiator pune în evidență orizontul de cunoaștere al vorbitorului:
- iarbă de leșin-boala pe care planta o lecuiește;
- iarbă înțepătoare-aspectul;
- iarbă de țărm-habitatul;
- iarbă neagră-culoarea.

- floare

1) Valori conceptuale „parte a plantei care cuprinde organele de reproducere sexuată și care are de obicei o corolă frumoasă și variat colorată[21].
2) Valori lingvistice

Modelul floare+determinant are în jur de 150 de realizări denominative în dicționarul lui Drăgulescu[22], fiind unul dintre cele mai productive cuvinte. Floare este desemnarea generică pentru miile de plante al căror nume nu este cunoscut de către toți vorbitorii.

crestată	ca tabacul		de fân	calului
grasă	ca gheața		de hârtie	caprei
nebună	ca mătura		de săpun	clopotului

- lemn sfânt

Cuvântul lemn, potrivit DEX, desemnează „un țesut conducător al unor plante superioare alcătuit din trahee, parenchim și fibre cu lignină, folosit ca material de construcție, drept combustibil”[23].

1) Valori conceptuale

Termenul lemn sfânt este utilizat cu sensul specializat pentru planta Artemisia abrotanum[24], o plantă decorativă înrudită cu pelinul, cu numeroase beneficii.

2) Valori lingvistice

În botanică apare în compusul „lemn sfânt”. Semul diferențiator este adjectivul „sfânt”. În surse am identificat și alte seme diferențiatoare pentru termenul „lemn”: sufixul –uș lemnuș (derivare cu sufix) sau substantivul în genitiv în compusul (Lemnul Domnului, Lemnul lui Dumnezeu) ce denumesc aceeași plantă.

O observație care se impune este că pe cutiile de ceai apare denumirea Lemnul Domnului, nu denumirea științifică a plantei.

Concluzii

Spre deosebire de alte științe, botanica este deosebit de bine reprezentată de terminologizare care se face în baza elementelor comune, cunoscute de vorbitori. După cum s-a observat din exemplele oferite, numeroase sunt denumirile de plante formate cu ajutorul acestui procedeu. La baza unităților lexicale specializate se află un element motivațional (culoare, formă, funcție), înțelese mai ușor.

Terminologizarea devine, în acest context, o sursă esențială de termeni botanici. Terminologia apelează la lexicul limbii comune prin terminologizarea unităților lexicale existente deja. Sursele terminologizării în botanică sunt, în general, substantivele comune. Termenii astfel formați sunt mai ușor de reținut și de folosit. Terminologizarea este un procedeu „avantajos, deoarece se recurge la un fond de cuvinte deja existent, termenul este mai ușor de înțeles și memorat și șansele de difuzare mai mari”[25].

Abstract: In this study we examine the main theoretical concepts associated with the translation process, following the perspectives formulated by scholars such as Eugene Nida, Katharina Reiß or Lawrence Venuti, whose contributions have shaped the foundations of translation studies. Starting from the definitions of translation within these paradigms, the study analyzes how theoretical principles are applied to the specific context of advertising discourse, where adaptation, creativity, and meaning reconfiguration becomes essential. The research shows that advertising translation involves not only the linguistic transfer of the message but also the cultural adjustment of content according to the codes and expectations of the target audience, reaffirming the interdisciplinary nature of the translational act. Through this approach, the study highlights the complexity of translation as a process of negotiating meaning across distinct languages, cultures, and communicative environments.

Keywords: translation theory; advertising discourse; adaptation; cultural adjustment

1. Introducere

În ultimele decenii, traducerea publicitară a devenit un domeniu de interes major în cadrul traductologiei contemporane, pe fondul globalizării accelerate și al intensificării schimburilor culturale. Publicitatea, ca formă hibridă de comunicare ce combină funcții informative, persuasive și estetice, impune traducătorului un set complex de responsabilități care depășesc cu mult simpla transpunere lingvistică a unui mesaj. În acest sens, analiza traducerii publicitare nu poate fi realizată în afara unui cadru teoretic solid, care integrează atât dimensiunea lingvistică, cât și cea culturală, pragmatică și ideologică a actului de traducere.

Teoriile influente formulate de Eugene Nida, Katharina Reiß, Hans J. Vermeer, Christiane Nord sau Lawrence Venuti au remodelat profund înțelegerea traducerii, mutând accentul de la fidelitate formală la funcționalitate, de la echivalență la scop, de la transfer la negociere culturală. Traducerea publicitară devine, astfel, un teren privilegiat pentru aplicarea și testarea acestor paradigme, deoarece mesajele publicitare sunt sensibile la context, orientate spre efect și adaptate la așteptările publicului-țintă. Ele necesită soluții creative, decizii interpretative și competențe interculturale, confirmând natura interdisciplinară a traducerii.

Lucrarea de față își propune să analizeze modul în care principalele teorii traductologice ale secolului XX și începutului de secol XXI pot fi aplicate traducerii discursive din publicitate, cu accent pe contextul românesc. Studiul urmărește evoluția istorică a teoriilor traducerii, de la modelele lingvistice structuraliste la funcționalism, studiile culturale, abordările existențialiste și socio-traductive, investigând felul în care acestea pot fi aplicate în mod concret la adaptarea mesajelor publicitare internaționale. Prin această analiză, lucrarea evidențiază faptul că traducerea publicitară nu este un simplu exercițiu tehnic, ci un proces complex de negociere a sensului, în care traducătorul devine mediator cultural, strateg al sensului dar și creator al experienței de brand.

2. Metodologie

Metodologia acestui studiu se înscrie într-o abordare interdisciplinară, combinând analiza teoretică, cadrul conceptual al traductologiei moderne și studiul aplicat al traducerii publicitare în context românesc. Cercetarea pornește de la principiile fundamentale ale teoriei traducerii, așa cum au fost formulate de (Halliday et al., 1973), (Nida, 1964), (Catford, 1978), (Levý, 1967), (Reiß, 1971), (Vermeer & Reiß, 2010), (Nord, 2001), și (Venuti, 2008), utilizând metoda comparativ-analitică și interpretativ-funcțională. Analiza comparativă urmărește o linie cronologică a teoriilor, de al structuralism la funcționalism, de la existențialism la teoriile socio-cognitive moderne ale actului de traducere, prezentând cum aceste teorii își găsesc aplicarea în peisajul modern la traducerii mesajului publicitar în particular în spațiul românesc.

3. Cadrul teoretic: Fundamentele traductologiei

În contextul globalizării, când multe companii se bazează pe comunicarea publicitară într-o limbă de circulație internațională, traducerea mesajului publicitar se bucură de un interes intens. Traductologia, în particular, s-a desprins ca disciplină de sine stătătoare destul de târziu, undeva la confluența dintre lingvistică, filosofia limbajului, semiotică și studii culturale. Chiar dacă pare surprinzător, dar mult timp traducerea a fost privită mai degrabă ca o artă decât ca un domeniu care ar merita o teorie proprie. Și mai surprinzător, definițiile propuse de-a lungul timpului pentru ce înseamnă traducere se contrazic adesea. Ele se rotesc, mai mult sau mai puțin, în jurul ideii de sens (al textului și al discursului), și a felului în care acesta poate fi „echivalat" între limbi (un termen care nici el nu e lipsit de ambiguitate).

Istoric, evoluția concepțiilor despre traducere arată, treptat, o mutare a centrului de greutate: de la ideea de fidelitate absolută față de textul sursă, spre o înțelegere mai flexibilă, în care traducătorul și contextul receptor capătă o voce reală. Primele reflecții sistematice despre traducere încep din timpurile lui Cicero și Sfântul Ieronim (Venuti, 2018, pp. 19–23), care se certau, într-un fel, asupra aceleiași dileme pe care o întâlnim chiar și astăzi: să traduci cuvânt cu cuvânt (ad verbum) sau sensul general (ad sensum)?

Dilema încă există, doar reformulată sub forma mai tehnică a „echivalenței" (Venuti, 2018, pp. 126–133). În așa-numita etapă a lingvisticii structuralistă, autorii precum Halliday sau Catford pun accentul pe această echivalență lingvistică. Conform lui Halliday, în lucrarea "The linguistic sciences and language teaching" (Halliday et al., 1973), traducerea ar trebui înțeleasă nu ca o corespondență de tip „cuvânt cu cuvânt", ci mai curând ca un proces de stabilire a echivalențelor la nivel textual. Traducerea este văzută, astfel, ca o încercare de a recrea sensul întregului, nu al fiecărei bucăți în parte. În această logică, traducerea devine un act de înlocuire a materialului textual dintr-o limba sursă (SL) cu un conținut echivalent, dar nu identic, într-o limbă țintă (TL). Similar, J. C. Catford, în lucrarea "A Linguistic Theory of Translation: an essay in applied linguistics" (Catford, 1978), susține și el această paradigma structuralistă. Pentru el, traducerea e un set de corespondențe între limbaje. Totuși, o astfel de abordare, conform și diverșilor critici ai curentului, pare că ignoră dimensiunea pragmatică, socială, uneori chiar umană a traducerii.

Autori precum House, în lucrarea "Translation Quality Assessment: Liguistic Description versus Social Evaluation" (House, 2002), văd însă traducerea ca o reproducere, o replică a textului original într-o altă limbă, menită să păstreze funcțiile comunicative ale textului inițial. Termenul de „reproducere" poate părea mecanic, dar în contextul teoriei lui House, accentul cade pe intenția și structura textului, nu doar pe forma sa lingvistică. Widdowson, în "Teaching language as communication" (Widdowson, 2004), merge chiar mai departe și afirmă că traducerea ar trebui să fie în primul rând un act comunicativ, nu doar o operațiune la nivel de propoziție, lexic sau gramatică. Cu alte cuvinte, dacă mesajul „funcționează" în TL și produce un efect similar, traducerea poate fi considerată reușită. Chiar dacă, formal, ea se poate îndepărta de textul original. Această abordare, deși atrăgătoare, riscă totuși să ignore nuanțele stilistice care dau individualitate unui text. Cât despre Hatim și Munday, în "Translation: an advanced resource book for students" (Hatim & Munday, 2019), aceștia aduc o distincție utilă: traducerea poate fi privită atât ca proces, cât și ca produs. În viziunea lor, sfera traducerii include atât procesul de transformare a unui text sursă (ST) într-un text țintă (TT) într-un anumit context socio-cultural, cât și produsul concret al acestui proces, adică textul tradus propriu-zis, și chiar întreaga rețea de factori cognitivi, lingvistici, vizuali, culturali și ideologici care influențează atât produsul cât și procesul. Această perspectivă pare să integreze cel mai bine complexitatea reală a traducerii, nu doar ca transfer de sens, ci ca act interpretativ, unde traducătorul este simultan cititor, analist și autor secundar.

Un moment de cotitură în traductologie îi este datorat lui Eugene A. Nida, ale cărui volume, „Toward a Science of Translating", publicat în 1964 și revizuit în (Nida, 2003), sau „The Theory and Practice of Translation", publicat în 1969 cu C. Taber și revizuit în ediția (Nida & Taber, 1982), schimbă fundamental tonul discuției. Lucrarea lui pune bazele, într-un fel, etapei modelului informațional și a paradigmei moderne decizionale a traductologei, în care traducerea este văzută ca proces decizional inflientat de teoria informațională și de semiotică. E. Nida, în particular, argumentează că traducerea nu trebuie să urmeze forma cuvânt cu cuvânt, ci să urmărească efectul asupra cititorului: „O traducere bună este cea care produce asupra cititorului țintă un efect similar cu cel pe care textul original îl avea asupra cititorului inițial." (Nida & Taber, 1982, p. 159). Autorul nu mai caută o identitate formală strict între texte, ci caută un efect similar asupra publicului. El distinge între echivalența formală (care păstrează structura) și echivalența dinamică (care reproduce reacția). Echivalența formală caută să păstreze structura și formele lingvistice ale originalului (traducere mai literală), pe când echivalența dinamică caută să redea sensul și impactul comunicativ, chiar dacă structura se schimbă (traducere adaptată, naturală). Poate părea o subtilitate, dar acesta reprezintă un pas important de la o viziune pur lingvistică, spre una comunicativă, în care traducerea devine o formă de acțiune asupra cititorului.

Prin anii '70–'80, apar perspective chiar și mai nuanțate asupra paradigmei decizionale a traducerii. Peter Newmark, în "A Textbook of Translation", inițial publicată în 1988 și revizuită în (Newmark, 2008), vorbește despre traduceri „semantice", mai apropiate de original, și traduceri „comunicative", care urmăresc să sune firesc pentru publicul țintă. Pe altă linie, George Steiner, în „After Babel", publicată în 1975 și revizuită (Steiner, 1998), privește traducerea dintr-un unghi aproape filosofic. Pentru el, traducerea este un act de interpretare, o formă de „mișcare" între culturi sau o negociere a sensului. Nu este doar o transpunere, ci chiar o recreare. Această abordare poate părea mai degrabă poetică decât practică, dar ea a schimbat felul în este gândită traducerea: ca pe un act de înțelegere, nu doar de echivalare.

4. Teoriile Traductologiei în practică

Ne vom referi în cele ce urmează la astfel de teorii moderne ale traducerii. Jiří Levý publică initial în anul 1967 în vol. 2 al cărții "To Honor Roman Jakobson", revizuită ulterior în (To Honor Roman Jakobson, 2018), articolul "Translation as a Decision Process". Levý, în special prin acest articol, este considerat astăzi unul dintre fondatorii traductologiei moderne. El propune ideea traducerii ca proces decizional, ce implică o succesiune de alegeri pe care traducătorul le face pentru a atinge echilibrul între fidelitate și naturalețe. Traducătorul, în viziunea sa, este mai degrabă un strateg decât un simplu intermediar al sensurilor. El se confruntă cu o succesiune de alegeri, dintre care fiecare poate schimba subtil interpretarea textului. Traducătorul nu urmează o rețetă, ci navighează printre posibilități și intuiții, uneori ghidat de normele limbii, alteori de propria sensibilitate estetică.

Levý descrie procesul traducerii ca o succesiune de decizii guvernate de constrângeri contextuale, identificând trei momente esențiale: situația, instrucțiunea I și instrucțiunea II (Levý, 1967, pp. 117-119). „Situația" reprezintă momentul în care traducătorul se confruntă cu o problemă concretă – de pildă, un termen, o expresie sau o nuanță culturală care nu găsește un corespondent direct și satisfăcător în limba țintă. În această etapă, traducătorul trebuie să formuleze o decizie contextuală, evaluând atât constrângerile textuale, cât și așteptările publicului receptor (Levý, 1967, p. 119).

Să luăm un exemplu simplu: expresia engleză "comfort food". În română, traducerea literală „mâncare de confort" nu funcționează. Ea sună artificial, aproape mecanic. Aici apare „situația" lui Levý: traducătorul trebuie să decidă ce sens predomină: este vorba despre mâncare simplă, nostalgică, care aduce liniște sufletească? Sau despre mâncare grasă, reconfortantă, din zona gusturilor familiare?

Instrucțiunea I presupune, apoi, definirea clasei de alternative. În această fază, traducătorul explorează toate opțiunile posibile. El creează un „set de variante" pe care le poate testa în funcție de contextul cultural și stilistic. Continuând exemplul anterior, clasa de alternative pentru "comfort food" ar putea include:

- mâncare ca acasă
- mâncare de suflet
- gustul copilăriei
- preparate care te liniștesc

Fiecare opțiune pune accent pe o altă dimensiune a sensului: una evocă nostalgia, alta emoția, alta sentimentul de siguranță. Traducătorul le notează, le simte în contextul textului și, uneori, chiar le testează în voce.

În final, Instrucțiunea II conduce la selectarea variantei potrivite. Traducătorul face, acum, alegerea finală. Nu întotdeauna cea mai frumoasă expresie câștigă, ci cea care funcționează cel mai bine în context.

- Dacă traducerea apare într-o reclamă la o companie de livrări, „mâncare ca acasă" ar fi probabil cea mai naturală variantă, evocând o imagine caldă, familiară, simplă.
- Dar dacă apare într-un articol de gastronomie rafinată, „gustul copilăriei" poate fi mai potrivit pentru că evocă emoție, dar păstrează eleganța discursului culinar.

În ambele cazuri, traducătorul acționează ca un decident conștient, nu ca un intermediar mecanic. Alegerea este contextuală, pragmatică și, inevitabil, subiectivă.

Un alt exemplu ar putea fi traducerea expresiei engleze "Home is where the heart is." Traducătorul are mai multe opțiuni:

- Traducere literală: „Acasă este acolo unde este inima".
- Traducere adaptată: „Acasă e acolo unde ți-e inima".
- Adaptare a conceptului în traducere: „Oriunde ți-e inima, acolo e acasă".

Fiecare variantă funcționează într-un registru ușor diferit. Prima pare rigidă, aproape didactică. A doua sună natural în limba română. A treia, în final, adaugă o nuanță poetică și ar putea fi preferată într-un context publicitar sau literar. Aici, decizia traducătorului nu este doar lingvistică, ci strategică. El cântărește impactul emoțional, stilul dorit și așteptările cititorului. Pentru Levý, așadar, traducerea nu este un act de copiere, ci un proces rațional și creativ de selecție, un joc continuu între posibil și potrivit. Traducătorul oscilează între constrângerile lingvistice și intuiția estetică, între fidelitate și expresivitate. Și poate că tocmai aici stă farmecul meseriei: în felul în care fiecare decizie, aparent mică, dă formă unei lumi noi, familiare, dar niciodată identice cu originalul. Astfel, teoria lui Levý sugerează că traducerea este, în esență, un act de echilibru: o alegere informată, dar și instinctivă, între mai multe drumuri posibile. Traducătorul nu urmează un algoritm, ci navighează printre constrângeri și intuiții, ghidat de context și de propria experiență lingvistică.

Adevărata schimbare de paradigmă în privința teoriilor traductologiei vine însă din spațiul german, odată cu teoriile funcționaliste. Acestea se desprind clar de modelul strict lingvistic și privesc traducerea ca o acțiune orientată spre scop. Termenul folosit în germană este „zielgerichtete Handlung", care se traduce prin "acțiune direcționată spre un obiectiv" și apare în (Holz-Mänttäri, 1984). În această accepțiune, în loc să întrebe „cât de fidel este textul?", funcționaliștii întreabă „la ce servește traducerea aceasta?". Teoria lui Nida (E. A. Nida & Taber, 1982), în particular, a stat la baza dezvoltării modelelor funcționaliste și a teoriilor de adaptare creativă (a funcției textului în traducerea publicitară) sau recreare textuală (dacă vedem lucrurile din perspectiva reformulărilor creative în contexte literare).

Cea mai reprezentativă este poate lucrarea lui Katharina Reiß, "Möglichkeiten und Grenzen der Übersetzungskritik", apărută în 1971 și revizuită în (Reiß, 1986). Autoarea propune o clasificare pragmatică, în texte informative, expresive și apelative. Traducerea, spune ea, trebuie apoi adaptată funcției comunicative a textului, nu invers.

E o idee simplă, dar revoluționară în contextul epocii în care a fost propusă: nu toate textele trebuie traduse „la fel" (Reiß, 1971, pp. 110–115). O reclamă nu se traduce ca un poem, nici un manual tehnic ca un roman. Reiss consideră, astfel, traducerea un proces de producere a unui text în TL ce este echivalent funcțional cu textul din SL.

Totuși, Reiß nu idealizează acest proces. Mesajul nu ajunge niciodată în mod perfect „intact" în cultura de sosire. El este influențat, subtil sau vizibil, de personalitatea traducătorului, de ideile sale, de experiența de viață și de competențele sale culturale și lingvistice (Reiß, 1986, pp. 102-104). Traducătorul, chiar și atunci când aspiră la neutralitate, lasă inevitabil o amprentă în text.

În acest sens, Reiß identifică două tipuri principale de modificări posibile în timpul traducerii, modificări determinate de schimbarea funcției și modificări determinate de limitări structurale între limbi, ambele reprezentând parte integrantă a procesului traductiv (Reiß, 1971, pp. 116–122):

1. Schimbări neintenționate, ce apar, de obicei, din cauza diferențelor structurale dintre limbi sau a limitelor competenței traducătorului. De exemplu, o frază complexă din germană, încărcată de participii și subordonate, poate fi tradusă în română printr-o structură mai simplă, dar mai fluidă. Rezultatul nu este greșit, însă tonul și ritmul pot fi ușor modificate.
2. Schimbări intenționate, ce sunt decizii conștiente, menite să adapteze funcționalitatea textului sursă la noul context cultural. Dacă, de pildă, un text publicitar german folosește un apel la autoritate („construit de experți"), traducătorul român ar putea prefera o formulare mai afectivă („creat cu grijă pentru tine"), pentru că publicul român reacționează diferit la formele de persuasiune. În acest caz, scopul comunicativ rămâne același, adică convingerea publicului, dar mijloacele se schimbă strategic.

Pentru Reiß, adevărata echivalență nu se află în structura lingvistică, ci în funcția textului. Un text este tradus cu succes atunci când își păstrează intenția comunicativă și rolul pragmatic, chiar dacă forma este ajustată. Privind în ansamblu, majoritatea teoriilor discutate anterior, de la echivalența lexicală (a lui Nida, referită în Secțiunea anterioară) la echivalența funcțională (a lui Reiß), toate converg asupra aceleiași idei: traducerea nu este doar transfer de sens, ci un act de interpretare, o reconstrucție a semnificației în limitele unei alte culturi.

Câțiva ani mai târziu, Hans J. Vermeer, colaboratorul lui Katharina Reiß, duce ideea ei mai departe în „Grundlegung einer allgemeinen Translationstheorie", publicată în 1984 și revizuită în (Vermeer & Reiß, 2010). Teoria Skopos, adică teoria scopului, afirmă că strategia de traducere este determinată de intenția finală a textului tradus. Într-un fel, traducătorul devine arhitectul propriei sale acțiuni: el decide cum să construiască textul, în funcție de „de ce" și „pentru cine".

Tot în anii '80, Justa Holz-Mänttäri privește traducerea dintr-o perspectivă mai profesională, aproape sociologică. În lucrarea "Translatorisches Handeln" (Holz-Mänttäri, 1984), ea definește traducerea ca o activitate de comunicare complexă, integrată în instituții și organizații. Traducerea nu mai e doar text, ci și design de mesaj. E un produs funcțional al unei echipe în care traducătorul joacă rolul de expert în comunicare interlingvă.

Mai târziu, Christiane Nord, studentă și colaboratoare a lui Hans J. Vermeer, propune o versiune mai „umanizată" a funcționalismului. În „Translating as a Purposeful Activity", publicată în 1997 și revizuită în (Nord, 2001), ea a preluat teoria Skopos și a rafinat-o, adăugând-i noțiunea de „translation brief", adică un set de instrucțiuni practice care ghidează traducătorul în funcție de scopul textului, respectiv o abordare mai echilibrată între fidelitate și funcționalitate (Nord, 2001, pp. 32-34). Nord recunoaște importanța scopului, dar avertizează că textul original trebuie totuși respectat ca document istoric și cultural, nu doar ca pretext pentru adaptare. În plus, ea introduce conceptul de loialitate (Loyalität), o noțiune etică ce depășește simpla orientare către scop și impune traducătorului o responsabilitate simultană față de autor, text și public (Nord, 2001, pp. 125-130). Astfel, Nord propune o articulare nuanțată a funcționalismului: libertatea traducătorului este esențială, dar ea nu poate fi exercitată fără un respect coerent pentru intenția autorului și pentru statutul cultural al textului sursă.

Cele trei modele (Reiß, Vermeer și Nord) formează nucleul a ceea ce numim astăzi teoria funcționalistă a traducerii (sau Skopos Theory). Această perspectivă mută accentul de la fidelitatea față de textul sursă la funcția comunicativă și scopul textului tradus.

În publicitate, unde textul nu doar informează, ci influențează comportamente și emoții, această abordare devine esențială. Să luăm un exemplu, fictiv, de mesaj publicitar din industria parfumurilor de lux: „Whisper your power. Let the world feel your presence." Acesta este, în SL, un text scurt, poetic, cu un echilibru între delicatețe (whisper) și forță (power).

Considerând analiza funcțională a lui Reiß, acesta este un text operativ-expresiv, adresat publicului feminin, și având scopul de a inspira și a crea o emoție asociată cu rafinamentul și încrederea.

Peste, Vermeer stabilește scopul mesajului: evocarea unei puteri interioare feminine, un echilibru între eleganță și putere, având un ton aspirațional, chiar poate poetic, dar și accesibil. Așadar, o traducere literală precum „Șoptește-ți puterea. Lasă lumea să-ți simtă prezența" ar suna straniu, rigidă. Traducerea trebuie adaptată pentru a suna firesc și emoțional.

Adaptare loială, atribuită teoriei lui Nord, trebuie în final să păstreze intenția originală (puterea discretă a feminității), dar și să fie adaptată pentru limba și cultura română. Versiuni posibile rezultate ar fi:

- „Șoptește-ți puterea. Lasă lumea să-ți simtă prezența". Este o traducere literală, care păstrează forma, dar pierde naturalețea. „Șoptește-ți puterea", în particular, sună forțat.
- „Puterea ta nu are nevoie de glas". Este o adaptare liberă (cf. Vermeer și Nord), care păstrează ideea de discreție și forță, dar într-o formulare poetică firească.
- „Lasă lumea să simtă cine ești, fără cuvinte". Este o adaptare contextuală (cf. Reiß), o traducere cu caracter operativ, la care se adaugă ideea de loialitate a lui Nord. Traducerea păstrează tonul original, transmite emoția și sensul pragmatic. |
- „Fii vocea tăcută a puterii" este o re-creație expresivă (cf. teoriei Skopos, este un mesaj dominant). Traducere are acum o valoare artistică, perfectă pentru un slogan publicitar de lux.

Așadar, Reiß ne ajută să identificăm funcția textului (în acest caz, operativă și expresivă). Vermeer ne justifică libertatea traducătorului, că mesajul trebuie să producă același efect, nu să reproducă aceleași cuvinte. Iar Nord ne obligă la loialitate față de intenția comunicativă și identitatea brandului. Rezultatul final, „Fii vocea tăcută a puterii", echilibrează toate cele trei principii: este un mesaj operativ (Reiß) și inspiră convingere, urmează scopul publicitar (Vermeer), adică creează un efect aspirațional și nu unul literal, și în final respectă loialitatea față de sensul original (Nord), prin faptul că transmite forța subtilă a feminității fără distorsionare culturală.

Prin combinarea teoriilor lui Reiß, Vermeer și Nord, traducerea publicitară poate să devină un act de creație controlată, fidelă intenției, dar liberă în expresie. Traducătorul devine un strateg al sensului, cineva care adaptează emoții, nu doar mesaje.

În anii 1990, peisajul traducerii se complică, pentru că, în plus, traducerea începe să fie văzută nu doar ca o chestiune de limbaj, ci și de putere și cultură. Etapa aceasta din traductologiei se întâlnește sub numele de The Cultural Turn, termen definit de Susan Bassnett în "Constructing Cultures" (Bassnett, 1998). Autori precum Susan Bassnett și André Lefevere

În anii 2000 se face o trecere de la teoriile funcționalismului la cele existențialiste. Chair dacă nu putem defini o „școală existențialistă” formală, se constată că există un filon fenomenologic-existențial, centrat pe alienare și neînchiderea sensului în traducere, un accent mărit pe responsabilitate etică și faptul că traducerea este văzută ca o experiență a „celuilalt”.

Cercetători și teoreticieni, precum Lawrence Venuti în “The Translator's Invisibility: A History of Translation”, publicată în 1995 și revizuită în (Venuti, 2003), privesc traducerea ca pe un proces complex, care nu presupune doar transmiterea sensului în limba țintă, ci și păstrarea stilului și a tonului textului original. Cu alte cuvinte, textul tradus nu ar trebui să „sune” ca o traducere, ci să pară un text autentic, scris de la bun început în limba respectivă. El susține că traducătorii au două opțiuni majore. Pe de o parte, să „domesticească” textul, adică să-l adapteze cultural pentru ca publicul țintă să-l perceapă drept natural, aproape ca un text original în limba sa (Venuti, 2018, pp. 19-21). Pe de cealaltă parte, de a „înstrăina” textul, adică să păstreze elemente culturale, stilistice sau expresive din limba sursă, făcând vizibilă prezența culturii de origine (Venuti, 2018, pp. 21-24).

Venuti avertizează însă că „invizibilitatea traducătorului” (tendința industriei editoriale și comerciale de a dori texte perfect fluide, care par scrise direct în limba țintă) duce la o pierdere a diversității culturale și la o uniformizare stilistică (Venuti, 2018, pp. 1-5). Traducerea trebuie să fie un text în care prezența traducătorului devine, ideal, invizibilă. Această abordare deplasează accentul de la simpla corespondență lexicală, la o echivalență stilistică și tonală, mult mai dificil de obținut. Nu e vorba doar de ce se spune, ci de cum se spune. A reda nuanțele de ritm al frazei sau ironia subtilă a unui text original poate deveni o provocare considerabilă, mai ales când cultura țintă are alte repere estetice. Reproducerea ritmului frazei originale, surprinderea ironiei fine sau a unei ambiguități intenționate poate deveni un mic exercițiu de acrobație culturală. Cu atât mai mult cu cât publicul țintă vine dintr-un sistem estetic cu alte reflexe, alte tipare de umor și alte așteptări privind „naturalitatea” limbii.

În teorie, publicitatea globală caută coerență de brand (mesaj unitar), dar în practică, adaptarea culturală este crucială. Aici intervine teoria lui Venuti: traducătorul poate alege să „facă textul invizibil” pentru ca receptorul român să-l perceapă drept familiar, sau dimpotrivă, să păstreze un element străin, accentuând originea internațională a produsului.

Aplicarea teoriei lui Venuti în traducerea publicitară arată că „a traduce” nu înseamnă doar a găsi echivalențe lexicale, ci a decide cât de vizibilă vrei să fie vocea traducătorului și cultura sursă în textul final. Uneori, „invizibilitatea” aduce eficiență comercială; alteori, „vizibilitatea” oferă autenticitate și diferențiere culturală. În fond, traducătorul publicitar este un creator de echilibru între două lumi: una globală, care vrea uniformitate, și una locală, care cere rezonanță culturală. Venuti pledează pentru strategii de străinare (foreignization) (Venuti, 2018, p. 20), adică texte care păstrează ceva din alteritatea originalului, chiar dacă par mai puțin „fluente”. E o poziție controversată, dar și necesară, într-o epocă în care uniformizarea globală tinde să șteargă diferențele culturale.

Krause și Nord (Krause et al., 1992) dezvoltă și extind și ei teoria funcționalistă a lui Reiß și Vermeer, introducând conceptul de „translation brief”, adică un set clar de instrucțiuni despre scopul traducerii, publicul țintă și contextul de utilizare. Diverși autori vorbesc aici despre extinderea traducerii către studii culturale și identitare (ex., studii de gen în traductologie). Între timp, cercetători ca Anthony Pym (Pym, 1993), Mona Baker (Baker, 2005) sau Theo Hermans (Hermans, 2014) aduc traducerea în sfera sociologiei. Ei vorbesc despre rețele de traducători, despre fluxuri de putere, despre traducerea ca acțiune socială. Traducerea este văzută ca un proces social, nu doar textual.

Nu toată lumea e de acord cu aceste abordări, dar ele arată cât de mult s-a extins domeniul, de la gramatică la geopolitică. Privind înapoi, traseul teoriilor traducerii pare să urmeze un fir natural: de la reguli și fidelitate spre scop și context, iar apoi spre cultură și societate. Nu e o evoluție liniară, ci una sinuoasă, plină de suprapuneri și reveniri. Ceea ce părea „obiectiv" în anii '60, echivalența, devine relativ în anii '80, iar apoi cultural și politic în anii '90. În perioada echivalenței (anii '60–'70), a teoriilor lui Nida și etapa de fidelitate semantică, traducerea era văzută ca un transfer de sens între două coduri lingvistice. Accentul cădea pe echivalența dinamică în cazul lui Eugene Nida, adică pe ideea că receptorul textului tradus trebuie să simtă același efect ca publicul original.

Să considerăm următorul exemplu publicitar:

- Textul original în limba engleză: "The taste of America in every bite".
- Traducere literală (în stilul anilor '60): „Gustul Americii în fiecare mușcătură".

Deși fidelă, traducerea sună artificial în română. Termenul mușcătură, în particular, nu are valențe pozitive în discursul publicitar. Un traducător fidel ar fi fost constrâns de sensul literal, dar unul funcțional ar fi căutat echivalența de efect, nu de formă.

În perioada funcționalistă (a anilor '80–'90, sau ai teoriilor lui Reiss, Vermeer și Nord), accentul se mută de la ce spune textul la ce face textul. În această etapă, traducerea publicitară devine o formă de comunicare strategică, unde contează scopul (skopos) și publicul țintă.
Să considerăm următorul exemplu publicitar:

- Textul original: "Think different". (moto atribuit lui Apple, din anul 1997)
- O posibilă traducere literală ar fi: „Gândește diferit".
- Versiune funcționalistă adaptată însă este: „Gândește altfel".

Cuvântul "altfel" transmite aceeași atitudine de nonconformism, dar într-o formă naturală și idiomatică. Traducerea urmează logica lui Vermeer, acela că scopul e să inspire, nu să explice.

În perioada culturală (a anilor '90–2000, sau ai teoriilor lui Bassnett, Venuti, Lefevere), traducerea este privită ca act cultural și ideologic. Traducătorul nu mai este invizibil, ci o voce care participă la (re-)construcția mesajului în altă cultură. În publicitate, asta înseamnă adaptarea valorilor, emoțiilor și simbolurilor.

Să considerăm următorul exemplu publicitar:

- Textul original: "Because you're worth it" (slogan al mărcii L'Oréal)
- Traducere în limba română, adaptată cultural, ar fi: „Pentru că meriți"
- Traducere străinizată, cf. teoriilor lui Venuti, care menține ideea de auto-valorizare este: „Pentru că ești valoroasă" (sau "Fiindcă valorezi atât cât crezi tu")

Prima variantă a fost preferată în România, pentru că se integrează natural în discursul motivațional local (un exemplu tipic de domesticare în sensul lui Venuti). Prin prisma teoriei lui Venuti, varianta domestică are o fluență și o naturalețe ridicată, cu o expresie idiomatică, scurtă, ce sună natural pentru limba română. Cea străină, încă, sună ușor „altfel", cu o notă afectivă și poetică neobișnuită pentru reclame românești. În acest caz, varianta „Pentru că meriți" reprezintă o domesticare reușită. Expresia e concisă, sonoră, și rezonează cu valorile motivaționale și psihologice ale publicului român. Totuși, dacă un brand ar dori să-și sublinieze originea internațională sau o notă mai elitistă, o versiune ușor străinizată („Pentru că ești valoroasă") ar putea fi preferabilă.

În final, în perioada socio-pragmatică (a anilor 2000), traducerea nu mai e doar un act de comunicare sau de cultură, ci unul de construire a identității. Traducătorul trebuie, acum, să țină cont de discursurile sociale, de sensibilitățile ideologice și de brandingul emoțional.

Să considerăm următorul exemplu publicitar:

- Textul original: "Real beauty comes from within" (slogal al mărcii Dove)
- Traducere literală ar fi: „Adevărata frumusețe vine din interior".
- Versiune adaptată în varianta românească este: „Frumusețea reală începe cu tine".

Noua formulă reflectă discursul contemporan despre autenticitate și "empowerment", ca teme sociale actuale, nu doar estetice. Traducerea devine un act de aliniere culturală, în care sensul e negociat, nu transferat.

Evoluția teoriilor traducerii, de la Nida la Nord și apoi la Venuti, arată o mișcare constantă de la limbă spre cultură, de la cuvânt spre context, de la fidelitate spre funcție. În publicitate, această mișcare este mai vizibilă ca oriunde: traducerea literală cedează locul adaptării emoționale, fidelitatea formală este înlocuită de impact cultural, iar traducătorul devine co-autorul experienței de brand.

Un slogan precum "Open happiness" (Coca-Cola) ar fi tradus literal „Deschide fericirea", dar în spiritul teoriilor funcționaliste și culturale, varianta optimă pentru publicul român a devenit „Savurează bucuria". O traducere care nu doar informează, ci creează o stare afectivă, conform principiului lui Reiß (funcție operativă), Vermeer (scop), Nord (loialitate) și Venuti (adecvare culturală).

Astăzi, e greu să mai vorbim despre o singură teorie dominantă. Poate că asta e și frumusețea domeniului: traducerea a devenit o formă de dialog continuu între texte, culturi și interpretări. Sau, cum ar spune un traducător, o conversație care nu se termină niciodată cu adevărat.

5. Peisajul traductologiei românești și aplicarea teoriilor traducerii în publicitatea post-1990

În România, teoriile traductologice occidentale au pătruns gradual, dar au reușit în timp să se integreze solid în reflecția locală, fiind adaptate la specificul lingvistic și cultural autohton. Două lucrări fundamentale în acest proces sunt „Studii de traductologie" de Rodica Dimitriu (2002) și „Traducerea: o perspectivă lingvistică și comunicativă" de Irina Mavrodin (1982). Ambele autoare interpretează și recontextualizează conceptele funcționaliste ale anilor '70–'90 pentru mediul românesc.

Rodica Dimitriu argumentează în mod consecvent că traducerea trebuie evaluată nu exclusiv prin criteriul fidelității, ci prin adecvarea funcțională la contextul comunicativ și la publicul țintă, idee formulată explicit în analiza textului publicistic și argumentativ (Dimitriu, 2002, pp. 41-48). Dimitriu accentuează caracterul intercultural al traducerii și nevoia ca traducătorul să ajusteze mesajul, ritmul discursului și registrul lingvistic pentru a corespunde convențiilor culturii de sosire. Aceasta este o perspectivă perfect compatibilă cu funcționalismul lui Reiß și Vermeer.

La rândul său, Irina Mavrodin anticipează abordările comunicative ale traducerii, prezentând traducerea ca act de recreație lingvistică și proces de negociere între sensul original și mediul lingvistic al limbii țintă (Mavrodin, 1982, pp. 17–25). Deși lucrarea ei precede intrarea masivă a funcționalismului german în România, multe dintre observațiile sale, privind constrângerile culturale, flexibilitatea echivalenței și rolul traducătorului ca mediator, se aliniază natural cu teoriile apărute ulterior în Europa de Vest.

O perspectivă critică importantă este adusă de Magda Jeanrenaud, care, în articolul „Câteva reflecții cu privire la starea traductologiei românești" subliniază caracterul permeabil și interactiv al discursului traductologic românesc, precum și deschiderea sa spre tendințele internaționale (Jeanrenaud, 2015, pp. 96–100). Ea argumentează că tradiția românească nu preia mecanic modele externe, ci le filtrează și le reinterpretează în funcție de specificul literaturii și culturii locale.

Această direcție de reflecție a fost continuată de cercetători precum Mugurаș Constantinescu, care, în studii recente despre traducerea în contexte culturale hibride, examinează modul în care teoriile occidentale, de la funcționalism la abordările comunicativ-pragmatice, au fost internalizate în spațiul românesc (Constantinescu et al., 2021, pp. 55–62).

Ca specific în aplicarea teoriilor funcționaliste în traducerea publicitară românească, traducerea publicitară ca practică profesională apare mai pregnant după 1990, odată cu intrarea masivă a brandurilor internaționale pe piața locală. Traducerea devine în România un instrument comercial, nu doar un exercițiu literar-academic, fiind supusă din ce în ce mai mult principiilor comunicării de masă și marketingului.

Deși practicienii nu utilizează mereu terminologia funcționalistă, abordarea lor reflectă direct conceptele lui Katharina Reiß (funcțiile textuale), Hans J. Vermeer (Skopos) și Christiane Nord (loialitate). În traducerea sloganurilor, de exemplu, scopul comunicativ este determinat de strategia brandului și segmentul de piață, nu doar de forma textului original. Copywriterul-traducător trebuie să păstreze echilibrul între: 1) loialitatea față de companie (respectarea identității de brand), 2) loialitatea față de publicul român (adaptare culturală), și 3) funcționalitatea mesajului (eficiență persuasivă).

Un exemplu clasic este transformarea sloganului „I'm lovin' it" (al mărcii McDonald's) într-un mesaj adaptat cultural. „I'm lovin' it" a fost păstrat în engleză datorită recunoașterii internaționale, dar campaniile locale introduc frecvent variante contextualizate („Simplu și bun"), reflectând tensiunea dintre global și local. Alte branduri, precum eMAG, au utilizat traduceri adaptate („Online va fi bine!"), renunțând la literalitate în favoarea ritmului și a impactului cultural.

Un alt caz relevant este traducerea sloganului „Because you're worth it" (al mărcii L'Oréal), pe care l-am menționat și anterior, unde varianta românească „Pentru că meriți" aplică o adaptare funcțională, scurtând forma și ajustând registrul pentru a produce un impact emoțional similar cu cel din cultura sursă.

În publicitatea românească apar câteva trăsături specifice, relevate în literatura de specialitate:

1. Piața relativ mică, ceea ce determină bugete limitate și o marjă de experimentare redusă în traducere (Constantinescu et al., 2021).
2. Preferința pentru claritate și naturalețe în tradiția lingvistică românească, caracteristici observate și în analiza lui Dimitriu (2002, pp. 72–75).
3. Prezența puternică a umorului și a registrului colocvial, elemente care necesită adaptare creativă, nu traducere literală (Munteanu, 2006).
4. Sensibilități culturale legate de statut social, vizibile în reclamele locale orientate spre prestigiu sau aspirational branding (Jeanrenaud, 2015).

Umorul, în particular, este una dintre cele mai pregnante trăsături ale discursului publicitar românesc post-1990. Cercetătorii au observat că, în România, strategiile persuasive funcționează mai bine atunci când mesajul are o tentă ludică, familiară și colocvială, ceea ce impune traducătorului un grad crescut de adaptare culturală.

De exemplu, campaniile românești pentru bere folosesc adesea umor situațional cu specific local, greu de tradus literal, precum jocuri de cuvinte, replici construite pe ritmul și intonația limbii române, sau ironii care exploatează stereotipurile regionale (ex.: „Românii au spirit", al mărcii Timișoreana). O traducere literală a acestor campanii ar pierde complet efectul pragmatic. Traducătorul este obligat să folosească ceea ce Nord ar numi adaptare orientată spre Skopos, iar Reiß ar încadra ca „funcție apelativă" (Reiß, 1971/1986, pp. 73–75).

Mihail Munteanu, analizează în "Publicitate și retorică" (2016) structurile umoristice și arată că, în spațiul românesc, persuasiunea publicitară este eficientă atunci când mesajul creează „proximiate culturală" (pp. 152–158). Dimitriu (2002) arată că traducerea publicitară trebuie să urmărească impactul asupra receptorului, nu fidelitatea formală, ceea ce justifică adaptările creative (pp. 72–75).

Traducătorul român trebuie să reconstruiască umorul folosind convențiile culturii țintă, ceea ce face din traducerea publicitară un caz exemplar de echivalență dinamică (Nida, 1964, p. 159) și strategie funcționalistă orientată spre Skopos (Vermeer, 1984).

În același timp, publicitatea românească post-1990 are o relație puternică cu ideea de ascensiune socială, prestigiu și „a te descurca”, toate teme având rădăcini istorice, sociale și economice. Aceste elemente influențează modul în care se face traducerea materialelor publicitare internaționale.

De exemplu, în reclamele bancare apare adesea discursul aspirațional spre „viață mai bună”. Texte precum „Gândește înainte”, „Schimbarea începe cu tine”, sau „Mai mult decât banking” reflectă aspirația socială, dorința de progres individual, de ascensiune și statut. Traducerea acestor mesaje ține cont de tonul socio-cultural românesc, evitând rigiditatea engleză. Am amintit deja industria cosmetică, unde mesaje precum „Pentru că meriți” reprezintă adaptări funcționaliste care evită o literalitate artificială și încearcă să capteze dimensiunea afectivă, importantă pentru publicul român. Similar, sloganul ““Life is for sharing” al Telekom devine în versiunea românească adaptarea „Experienţe împreună” (2014).Și acesta denotă o adaptare culturală, varianta românească privilegiază emoția și accesibilitatea.

Irina Mavrodin (1982) arată că traducerea este întotdeauna „negociere între sens și mediu cultural” (pp. 17–25), ceea ce justifică adaptările sensibile la aspirațiile publicului. Magda Jeanrenaud (2015) observă, de asemenea, permeabilitatea discursului traductologic românesc și ancorează traducerea în „dinamica socio-culturală a receptorului” (pp. 98–100), element esențial în publicitate. Mugurași Constantinescu (2021) discută despre hibriditatea culturală și modul în care publicitatea românească internalizează modele occidentale, dar le ajustează emoțional și cultural (pp. 55–62).

Traducătorul publicitar român operează într-un teren sensibil, în care statutul, aspirația și valorile socio-culturale românești modelează deciziile traductive. Aceasta confirmă observațiile funcționaliste ale lui Nord privind „loialitatea față de public” (Nord, 1997, pp. 123–128) și necesitatea adaptării strategice a discursului.

În acest cadru, traducătorul nu asigură doar un „transfer de cuvinte”, ci devine un “strateg al sensului”, un mediator care îmbină intenția originală cu sensibilitatea publicului românesc. El operează în logica unei echivalențe funcționale, ajustând textul pentru a se integra în cultura țintă fără a trăda identitatea brandului.

Astfel, peisajul traductologiei românești, de la Dimitriu și Mavrodin la Jeanrenaud, Constantinescu și Dindelegan, se conturează ca o abordare matură, în care traducerea este înțeleasă ca un act cultural, pragmatic și estetic, nu doar ca procedeu lingvistic.

6. Concluzii

Analiza teoriilor traducerii și aplicarea lor în contextul discursului publicitar evidențiază faptul că traducerea nu poate fi redusă la un act de transfer lingvistic, ci reprezintă un proces profund interpretativ, ghidat de considerente culturale, funcționale și ideologice. Evoluția traductologiei, de la echivalența formală a anilor ’60, la funcționalismul german, la turnura culturală și până la abordările socio-pragmatice și existențialiste, arată o deplasare constantă a centrului de interes dinspre text spre context, dinspre formă spre efect, dinspre limbă spre cultură.

În traducerea publicitară, aceste transformări teoretice se reflectă în mod direct. Mesajul publicitar nu poate fi tradus fără a lua în considerare scopul comunicativ (Vermeer), funcția textului (Reiß), responsabilitatea etică față de autor și public (Nord) sau relația dintre domesticare și străinare (Venuti). Adaptarea devine o practică strategică, prin care traducătorul reconfigurează sensuri, repoziționează valori culturale și modelează modul în care este perceput un brand pe o piață locală. Astfel, traducerea publicitară implică atât creativitate, cât și loialitate, atât respect față de textul sursă, cât și sensibilitate față de publicul țintă.

Studiul arată că teoriile traductologiei nu trebuie înțelese ca modele exclusive, ci ca instrumente complementare care pot ghida deciziile traducătorului în contexte variate.

Traducerea publicitară beneficiază tocmai de această pluralitate teoretică, care permite o flexibilitate necesară într-un domeniu în permanentă evoluție. În România, integrarea treptată a teoriilor occidentale a contribuit la dezvoltarea unei practici traductive mature, adaptate particularităților culturale locale.

În concluzie, traducerea publicitară este un exemplu elocvent al interdisciplinarității traductologiei contemporane: un spațiu de intersecție între limbaj, cultură, identitate, strategie și creativitate. În acest domeniu, traducătorul devine un specialist care nu doar reinterpretează mesajul, ci îl recreează funcțional, emoțional și cultural. Această perspectivă confirmă faptul că traducerea este, mai mult ca oricând, un proces de negociere a sensului între lumi lingvistice și culturale distincte, dar interconectate.

LINGUISTIC PERSUASION IN ROMANIAN PERFUME ADVERTISING

Mălina-Ștefania Sbera
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: Advertising discourse guarantees the fulfillment of material and emotional expectations, drawing on the lifestyle and social status of the potential consumer. In this context, perfume is a luxury product with a distinguished language that manages to be the main subject of a persuasive and suggestive discourse. The aim of this study is the identification and analysis of a series of persuasive strategies used by advertisers to engage potential customers in discourse, such as interrogatives, imperatives, and deictics. Therefore, the analysis will focus on the persuasive strategies employed in perfume advertisements distributed via social media platforms, considering how they construct the illusion of personalized communication in order to present the perfume as a reflection of each consumer's personality.

Keywords*: advertising; discourse; persuasion; strategies; perfume.*

1. Discursul publicitar pentru parfumuri

În societatea de consum, discursul publicitar este considerat „un refugiu al comportamentelor mitice, simbolice și ritualice" (Frunză 2023: 24), care se remarcă prin omniprezență și prin strânsa legătură cu domeniul lingvistic și estetic. Valorificând aspirațiile și nevoile consumatorului, acest tip de discurs promite îndeplinirea exigențelor materiale și afective: „răspunde unei nevoi de implicare, cunoaștere și înnoire care formează un tot unitar ambiguu, mascat de dorință, de satisfacție și de plăcere imediată" (Frunză 2023: 31). În studiile de specialitate, se discută atât despre decalajul care se instituie între momentul emiterii și cel al receptării mesajului, cât și despre natura monologică a discursului publicitar, fiind vorba despre simularea unui schimb de replici, în care publicul este „tributar manevrelor persuasive ale agentului de publicitate" (Adam & Bonhomme 2012: 37, t.n.)[1]. Astfel, discursul publicitar creează impresia unei comunicări particulare, cu scopul de a transforma parfumul într-o oglindă a personalității fiecărui cumpărător. Potrivit lui Leech, publicitatea folosește un limbaj persuasiv, „încărcat" (engl. loaded language), întrucât „își propune să schimbe voința, opiniile sau atitudinile publicului său" (1966: 25, t.n.)[2]. Prin urmare, trăsăturile limbajului folosit de publicitari pot fi corelate cu următoarele patru principii pe care orice reclamă trebuie să le respecte: a) mesajul publicitar trebuie să capteze interesul destinatarului; b) atenția destinatarului trebuie să fie menținută prin diferite mijloace; c) mesajul trebuie redactat astfel încât să fie ușor de memorat; d) scopul final al discursului publicitar privește determinarea unei reacții din partea posibilului client, fie că este vorba despre achiziționarea produsului sau de manifestarea interesului (Leech 1966: 27).

Publicitatea dedicată parfumurilor promite dobândirea unei atitudini specifice unui anumit grup social, promovată prin intermediul ambasadorilor de brand, care conferă credibilitate parfumului, fără a-l substitui. Cu alte cuvinte, acest tip de discurs este construit în jurul ideii de exclusivitate, produsul, obiect cu o valoare simbolică amplificată voit, fiind prezentat drept o expresie a rafinamentului și a apartenenței la o categorie socială privilegiată (Julien 1997: 12). Creatorii de publicitate s-au confruntat dintotdeauna cu dificultatea de a transpune forma olfactivă a unui parfum, fie prin mijloace de ordin verbal, fie prin mijloace de ordin vizual. De cele mai multe ori nu se stabilește o corespondență exactă între mirosul parfumului și reprezentarea vizuală a acestuia, întrucât forma olfactivă devine perceptibilă numai în momentul utilizării produsului, acțiunea de a mirosi transformând emanația volatilă în senzație (Julien 1997: 21). Dificultatea stabilirii unui referent care să corespundă produsului demonstrează că publicitatea depășește statutul de act reprezentativ (Dâncu 2009: 170).

[2] „it aims to change the will, opinions, or attitudes of its audience" (Leech 1966: 25).

Având în vedere observația potrivit căreia parfumul „captează atenția, farmecă, completează și întărește personalitatea" (Davis & Meyer-Stabley 2017: 256), putem spune că publicitatea dedicată acestui produs este atât persuasivă, cât și sugestivă. Potrivit lui Bernard Cathelat (2005: 93), obiectivul publicității este „să sublinieze că există o nevoie de satisfăcut, apoi să demonstreze că produsul o poate satisface". Din acest punct de vedere, publicitatea pentru parfumuri este persuasivă, presupunând „crearea împreună a unei stări de identificare între sursă și receptor, ca urmare a utilizării simbolurilor" (Larson 2003: 26). Așadar, dacă un potențial consumator se identifică cu valorile pe care le adoptă un brand, cum ar fi Armani, putem spune că procesul de persuadare este parțial finalizat. Mai departe, clientul va urmări să aprecieze și în viața de zi cu zi valori precum independența și autenticitatea, întrucât interiorizează idealurile vehiculate de discursul publicitar. Pe de altă parte, tipul de publicitate pe care ne propunem să o analizăm se remarcă prin sugestivitate, provocându-i posibilului client „dorința de a-și înregistra informațiile sau de a cumpăra făcând apel la cutare nevoie, tendință sau aspirație profundă" (Cathelat 2005: 100).

2. Strategii persuasive în publicitatea de limbă română pentru parfumuri

În cadrul acestui articol vom discuta despre o serie de strategii persuasive utilizate de publicitar pentru a determina destinatarii-clienți să achiziționeze produsul dorit, în acest caz, parfumul. Persuasiunea lingvistică reprezintă, potrivit autoarei Anja Janoschka (2004: 132), totalitatea strategiilor utilizate într-un context specific de un emițător pentru a influența convingerile și comportamentul destinatarului prin intermediul limbajului. O parte dintre aceste strategii, precum folosirea interogației, a imperativului și a deicticelor, se remarcă prin forța lor persuasivă, care derivă din implicarea comunicativă a destinatarilor în discurs (Janoschka 2004: 132-144). În cele ce urmează, vom analiza strategiile persuasive, menționate anterior, în cadrul filmelor publicitare de limbă română pentru parfumuri, difuzate prin intermediul platformelor de socializare (YouTube, Instagram și TikTok) și transcrise conform convențiilor prezentate în Luminița Hoarță Cărăușu (coord.), Corpus de limbă română vorbită actuală nedialectală (2013).

Interogația se distinge de celelalte structuri lingvistice, prin capacitatea sa de a capta atenția, de a ghida publicul spre concluzia dorită, de a influența gândirea și de a exprima în mod indirect un ordin, fiind „instrumentul suprem al persuasiunii" (Hogan & Speakman 2008: 181). De asemenea, interogațiile se remarcă prin încărcătura lor afectivă, întrucât valorifică o serie de factori care trimit la nevoile și aspirațiile cumpărătorului, cum ar fi dorința de recunoaștere și apartenență la un anumit grup social (Hogan & Speakman 2008: 189). În ceea ce privește structura acestor enunțuri, autorii GALR (2023: 583) menționează trei tipuri de interogative, care se deosebesc „între ele prin comportamentul în cadrul cuplului întrebare-răspuns, organizarea sintactică, conturul intonațional, particularitățile trecerii din vorbire directă în vorbire indirectă": totale, parțiale și alternative. Dintre aceste tipuri, cele mai des întâlnite în discursul publicitar pentru parfumuri sunt enunțurile interogative totale și enunțurile interogative parțiale, după cum putem observa în filmul publicitar următor:

VOCE (AB): <F știu că parfumul↑> nu poate fi transmis↑ printr_un ecran↓ + dar <F haideți↑> să vă provoc simțurile↓ +++ dacă ar fi să ghiciți↑ + CE parfum credeți↑ că port↓ astăzi? + <RF are la bază trandafir absolut↓> + o esență catifelată↑ și rară↑ obținută din cele mai fine petale↓ +++ ȘTIAȚI↑ că + pentru doar un kilogram↑ de esență pură↑ sunt necesare <L unu virgulă două milioane de petale>? ++ notele dulci de căpșuni↑ îți aduc <R un STROP de bucurie↑> + în timp ce mirosul florilor de portocal↑ este + ca o dimineață senină de vară <R când soarele atinge pielea pentru prima dată> + <F fiecare STROP> din acest parfum↑ e o invitație la fericire↓ +++ Avon↑ Today Tomorrow Always Radiance↓ + <F e mirosul> unei grădini înflorite↑ <R unde trecutul și prezentul se împletesc> într_o poveste plină de emoții↓ + <F nu e DOAR un parfum> + e o stare de spirit.

Enunțul „dacă ar fi să ghiciți↑ + CE parfum credeți↑ că port↓ astăzi?" face parte din clasa interogativelor parțiale în ceea ce privește tipul de structură, având în vedere faptul că „se solicită un răspuns prin care alocutorului i se cere să dea o valoare variabilei din întrebare" (GALR 2023: 583). Totodată, remarcăm prezența unui cuvânt interogativ (adjectivul pronominal interogativ „CE"), care are scopul „de a circumscrie semantic răspunsul așteptat" (GALR 2023: 585). În contextul reclamei propuse spre analiză, această interogație le conferă ascultătorilor ocazia de a se implica în procesul de identificare a parfumului, fiindu-le recunoscute meritele pentru găsirea răspunsului, odată ajunși la concluzia dorită de publicitar: „Discursul interogativ publicitar incită publicul țintă, îi trezește curiozitatea", stabilind „premisele unei mai mari apropieri între publicitar și consumator prin mimarea actului conversațional" (Bălănescu 2009: 143). După cum remarcă K. Hogan și J. Speakman (2008: 186), această strategie este esențială, deoarece „trezește ecouri afective". Așadar, publicitarul nu așteaptă un răspuns din partea publicului, ci urmărește declanșarea unei reacții, care este menținută prin oferirea unei serii de indicii ce descriu parfumul TTA Radiance. Interogația „ȘTIAȚI↑ că + pentru doar un kilogram↑ de esență pură↑ sunt necesare <L unu virgulă două milioane de petale>?" este totală, receptorului fiindu-i solicitată oferirea unui răspuns scurt (GALR 2023: 583). În acest caz, „emfaza interogativă" afectează predicatul propoziției principale, răspunsul oferit de interlocutor exprimând acordul sau dezacordul cu enunțul în ansamblu (GALR 2023: 584). Cu toate acestea, scopul comunicativ nu constă în obținerea unui răspuns, ci vizează transmiterea unei informații care subliniază exclusivitatea ingredientului principal, trandafirul, captând în același timp atenția receptorului și exprimând valori contextuale suplimentare.

În studiile de specialitate este evidențiată „Forța persuasivă a imperativului" (Hoarță Cărăușu 2008: 397), întrucât acesta nu numai că exprimă o comandă, ci devine un mijloc prin care se poate crea o legătură între locutor și interlocutor, constituind nucleul interacțiunii (Serafim 2018). Exprimând interdicții sau propuneri care creează o realitate percepută ca obligatorie, imperativul contribuie la influențarea comportamentului și atitudinilor interlocutorului (Serafim 2018). Referitor la particularitățile discursului publicitar, François Brune (1996: 134) constată că indicativul a început să înlocuiască treptat imperativul, materialele publicitare îndemnând „spectatorul mai degrabă să imite un comportament decât să execute un ordin. [...] ceea ce se face ajunge pentru a desemna ceea ce trebuie să se facă.". Dacă ne raportăm la clasificarea actelor ilocuționare propusă de J. Searle (1979), putem observa utilizarea actelor de vorbire complexe, „în care un act ilocuționar direct, primar [...] se ascunde după unul indirect, secundar [...]. Actul primar este directiv, cel secundar constatativ" (Popescu 2021: 84). Cu toate acestea, în filmele publicitare dedicate parfumurilor sunt prezente enunțuri imperative, după cum putem vedea în exemplul următor:

Imperativele folosite în filmul publicitar (2) au formă negativă și funcționează în cadrul unor acte de vorbire directive, prin care publicitarul formulează o interdicție, dar nu pentru a fi respectată, ci pentru a-l determina pe consumator să o încalce și să adopte, în acest mod, comportamentul dorit. În acest context, este vorba despre folosirea unei strategii indirecte de influențare prin aplicarea psihologiei inverse: „Clienții sunt conștienți că în orice situație de vânzare, agentul de vânzări va face o prezentare pozitivă și agresivă. […] Făcând exact opusul, agentul de vânzări poate dezarma complet și distruge rezistența fin ajustată a clientului." (Pickens 2003: 87, t.n.)[3]. În consecință, achiziționarea parfumului este considerată de consumator o manifestarea a libertății de a alege, atitudine determinată de teama acestuia de a rata un produs exclusiv sau o experiență care poate fi benefică (Pickens 2003:88). Utilizarea interdicțiilor formulate prin intermediul imperativelor „+ <F nu_l cumpăra↑> dacă nu vrei↑ să fii ținută minte! + nu_l cumpăra↑ dacă: <R nu suporți↑ să fii întrebată ce porți>! + <F și nu_l cumpăra↑> dacă preferi să rămâi↑ în anonimat!" trimit la povestea legată de nașterea denumirii parfumului L'interdit: „Creat în 1954 pentru actrița Audrey Hepburn de către Hubert de Givenchy, despre acest parfum s-a vorbit mult în epocă, spunându-se că vedeta i-ar fi «interzis» lui Givenchy să comercializeze efluviul care i-a fost dedicat" (Davis & Meyer-Stabley 2017: 191). Cu toate că această interpretare s-a dovedit a fi eronată (Davis & Meyer-Stabley 2017: 191), creatorii de publicitate au continuat să o integreze în campaniile de marketing dedicate acestui parfum, considerat potrivit celor care au curajul de a ieși din tipare.

Utilizarea deicticelor reprezintă o altă modalitate de exprimare a subiectivității, o formă de adresare directă și, implicit, un mijloc de persuadare. Autorii GALR (2023: 1088) notează că „Prin deixis se desemnează ansamblul modalităților de exprimare care asigură ancorarea mesajului lingvistic (enunț) în situația de comunicare în care este produs. Orice enunț este actualizarea unei expresii propoziționale-tip (forma virtuală a unui mesaj) în circumstanțele comunicative determinate". În analiza publicității pentru parfumuri, este important să ținem cont de faptul că discursul este un eveniment complex sau o activitate complexă „care presupune participarea a cel puțin două personaje (virtuale sau concrete, individuale sau colective, aflate în corespondență sau nu)", angajate în procesul de receptare și decodare a mesajului (Stoica 2015: 48). Cardona și Berasarte (1979: 63) constată că deicticele sunt mărci ale implicării interlocutorului în discursul publicitar, întrucât, prin utilizarea lor, se stabilește o relație particulară între brand și destinatarul mesajului. În situația comunicării mediate de diverse mijloace, deicticele contribuie la crearea unui cadru temporal și spațial, în care publicitarul și destinatarul-client coexistă, discursul publicitar devenind un dialog aparent Referitor la primul tip de deixis, cel personal, acesta „codifică rolurile comunicative ale participanților la schimbul verbal, prin pronume și prin persoana verbală" (GALR 2023: 1097). Moeschler și Reboul (1999: 321) notează că „Semnificațiile lui eu și tu sînt [...] procedurale, iar procesul de atribuire a referenților care li se atașează constă în a aplica următoarele formule: a căuta persoana care vorbește, respectiv a căuta persoana căreia i se vorbește.". În filmul publicitar (3), este folosit pronumele de persoana întâi eu pentru a desemna utilizatorul parfumului Aqua di Giò și pentru a-l invita pe destinatar să adopte perspectiva locutorului, imaginându-se „ca referent al acestuia" (Popescu 2021: 91-92).

[3] „Customers are aware that in any sales situation, the closer will give positive, aggressive sales presentation. […] By doing the exact opposite, the closer can completely disarm and destroy the customer's finely tuned resistance." (Pickens 2003: 87).

VOCE (RG): ai simțit vreodată↑ fericirea <L absolută>? + genul ĂLA care_ți acaparează FIECARE celulă? + care fără să_ți dai seama îți <F inu:ndă> ochii și care te face să simți că tot ce trăiești↑ ACUM și AICI↑ e de ajuns? + Am auzit că↓ sentimentul ăsta e posibil <L doar atunci> când e împărtășit cu altcineva↓ + EU nu cred asta! + EU îl trăiesc↑ cu fiecare scufundare + cu fiecare strop↓ care_mi atinge pielea↓+ cu fiecare brat pe care_l întind↓ + <L unul↓ după altul> + <L suflare↓ după suflare> + <R până când↑> nu mai există timp sau spațiu + <R până când↑> corpul meu își pierde greutatea↑ iar eu devin <L o simplă> conștiință plutitoare↓ + bariera dintre apă și mine <R s_a spulberat↓> + suntem una↑ și ACEEAȘI energie↓ + aș vrea ca <R sentimentul ăsta să nu dispară NICIODATĂ>! + și NU o face! + NU atâta timp cât port Aqua di Giò + aroma lui puternică↑ intensă și misterioasă↑ mă transpune în același univers↓ în care LIMITELE↑ <L nu există> + iar acum↑ cu noua sticlă <L reîncărcabilă↑> ȘTIU <L că va fi mereu acolo↓> + la fel ca <F dragostea MEA↑ pentru apă>.

Corespondența care se instituie între imaginea ambasadorului și cea a produsului îl determină pe destinatar să perceapă parfumul drept expresie a stării emoționale transmise „de locutorul care spune eu atât de convins și de convingător" (Popescu 2021: 92): „EU nu cred asta! + EU îl trăiesc↑ [...] eu devin <L o simplă> conștiință plutitoare↓". Astfel, utilizarea strategică a deixisului personal cunoaște numeroase avantaje, precum captarea atenției receptorului prin prezentarea unei experiențe benefice și prin marcarea implicării locutorului față de afirmațiile sale (Popescu 2021: 92-93). Publicitatea de limbă română pentru parfumuri recurge rar la utilizarea formei pronominale de persoana întâi noi, indiferent dacă este vorba despre varianta „noi inclusiv (eu + tu ± alții)" sau „noi exclusiv (eu + alții)" (GALR 2023: 1097). Potrivit lui Greven (1982: 33), prin folosirea pronumelui noi, locutorul și interlocutorul/interlocutorii sunt incluși în același cadru de referință, împărtășind o viziune comună asupra parfumului, aspect care generează sentimentul de solidaritate. Cu toate acestea, parfumul a fost prezentat dintotdeauna drept un produs exclusiv, o expresie a personalității prin care „omul a putut să se definească pe sine în raport cu societatea, să-și construiască o anumită imagine despre sine, [...] să-și intensifice forța de iradiere socială" (de Feydeau 2022: 6-7), fapt pentru care utilizarea formei pronominale noi este evitată. Pornind de la acest aspect, observăm că nici forma pronominală de persoana a doua plural nu apare în reclamele dedicate parfumurilor.

Luând în considerare caracteristicile discursului publicitar, și în special structura monologată, evidentă prin prezența unui singur locutor care se adresează unor interlocutori, nerespectând principul alternanței replicilor, specific dialogului (Charaudeau & Maingueneau 2002: 391), sunt utilizate forme pronominale și verbale de persoana a doua. Rodica Zafiu

Din perspectiva autorilor GALR (2023: 1098), a doua categorie de deixis „codifică configurația spațială a contextului comunicării prin raportare la poziția interlocutorului”. În publicitatea pentru parfumuri sunt utilizate cu precădere adverbele de loc aici și acolo, care în limba vorbită „codifică lexical parametrul «distanță față de locutor», în principal la momentul locuției” (GALR 2023:1098). Pentru a identifica rolul deixisului spațial în discursul publicitar, vom aveam în vedere următorul exemplu:

(5) Sephora x Armani - My way. 29 mai 2023. https://youtu.be/wGjdTMkUzGM?si=2Mp5NiOGkFXRSD-p (accesat la: 05.06.2025).

VOCE (AE): m_am născut din dor↓ + <R din dorul mamei pentru tata> și invers + uneori↑ iubirea e mult dor + <RF am venit aici pentru a_mi găsi dorul> + am vopsit pereții↑ în albastrul deschis al valurilor cu care am crescut↓ + macii s_au uscat <R în vaza de cristal↑ pe care bunica mi_a dat_o> când am plecat↓ + și aproape că:↓ îmi iese și tarta aia bună↑ <R de_o făcea duminica↓> ++ cu toate astea:↑ + <S tot nu sunt acasă> + <J de ce nu aparțin>? + <RF de ce gândul că trebuie să rămân aici mă paralizează>? + și cum se face că↓ <R singurul lucru care-mi încetinește bătăile> inimii↑ + e ideea de <J necunoscut>? ++ într_un mod bizar↑ îmi e dor de locurile pe care încă nu le_am văzut↓ + de nisipul fierbinte și negru din Santorini↓ + <R de conversația pasională> pe care o s_o am cu un francez despre Brâncuși↓ + și de piețele aglomerate din Napoli↓ <R în care o să beau> ce:l mai bun espresso ++ în fiecare dintre locurile astea↓ o să găsesc o părticică din mine↓ + și cu cât <F fug mai tare> de tot ce mi_e cunoscut↑ + cu atât sunt mai mult ACAsă↓ ++ sunt tot ceea ce trăiesc↑ simt și respir↓ + e călătoria MEA <R și o creez în fiecare zi> învăluită↑ în My Way + un parfum al contrastelor↑ așa cum sunt <S și eu↓> + floral↑ <R dar în același timp> lemnos + feminin↑ dar puternic.

Deixisul spațial aici poate desemna fie un spațiu concret extins, dacă avem în vedere componenta vizuală a filmului publicitar care prezintă diferite locuri dintr-un oraș, fie un spațiu restrâns, cum ar fi camera ai cărei pereți au fost vopsiți în albastru deschis. Pe de altă parte, acest adverb indică un spațiu abstract, interiorizat, în care personajul feminin încearcă să se regăsească cu ajutorul lucrurilor familiare: culoarea valurilor, vaza pe care a primit-o de la bunica și tarta pe care o făcea în fiecare duminică. Astfel, aici devine o proiecție a dorului, care este acceptat odată cu achiziționarea parfumului destinat femeilor care vor să își croiască propriul drum: „sunt tot ceea ce trăiesc↑ simt și respir↓ + e călătoria MEA <R și o creez în fiecare zi> învăluită↑ în My Way”. Totodată, fiind vorba despre un sentiment universal, spațiul desemnat de adverbul aici este comun atât locutorului, cât și interlocutorului, aspect care conduce la crearea unei legături autentice între cei doi actanți ai comunicării, bazată pe împărtășirea acelorași emoții și nevoi. În exemplul (3), anterior prezentat, identificăm adverbul acolo, care desemnează în mod obișnuit un loc care nu se află în apropierea locutorului. Mai mult, în secvența „iar acum↑ cu noua sticlă <L reîncărcabilă↑> ȘTIU <L că va fi mereu acolo↓> + la fel ca <F dragostea MEA↑ pentru apă>.”, acolo semnifică prezența constantă în timp a parfumului, sugerând persistența acestuia și avantajele unei sticle de parfum reîncărcabile (engl. refillable), precum cele de natură economică.

În ceea ce privește deixisul temporal, acesta „constituie o formă de reprezentare temporală prin raportare la momentul în care are loc actul comunicativ” (DPAD 2023: 107). Momentul codificării și momentul receptării nu se suprapun în cazul filmelor publicitare și a publicității în general. În schimb, timpul decodificării și timpul emisiei coincid (GALR 2023: 1099), fapt care, raportându-ne la timpul codificării, generează un cadru temporal presupus, așa cum reiese din exemplul (3): „ai simțit vreodată↑ fericirea <L absolută>? + genul ĂLA care_ți acaparează FIECARE celulă? + care fără să_ți dai seama îți <F inu:ndă> ochii și care te face să simți că tot ce trăiești↑ ACUM și AICI↑ e de ajuns? [...] iar acum↑ cu noua sticlă <L reîncărcabilă↑> ȘTIU <L că va fi mereu acolo↓> + la fel ca <F dragostea MEA↑ pentru apă>.”. Publicitatea dedicată parfumurilor utilizează frecvent adverbul acum, element esențial „al axei deictice numită «eu – aici – acum»” (Costăchescu 2019: 176). În cadrul exemplului propus spre analiză, sintagma „ACUM și AICI” plasează receptorul, din punct de vedere mental și emoțional, în centrul experienței descrise, determinându-l să perceapă momentul prezent drept unic. Prin adoptarea acestei strategii, mesajul publicitar valorifică trăirile afective, prezentându-le într-o realitate imediată, accesibilă și posibilă în condițiile achiziționării parfumului. În acest caz, utilizarea adverbelor acum și aici este susceptibilă de a fi non-deictică, întrucât nu exprimă un timp și un loc precis, ci o stare psihologică. A doua utilizare a adverbului acum, în același exemplu, poate desemna o perioadă care coincide cu momentul codificării sau o perioadă mai lungă care cuprinde atât momentul codificării, cât și momentul decodificării. Totodată, în contextul filmului publicitar dedicat parfumului Aqua di Giò, acum semnifică actualitatea produsului prezentat în varianta reîncărcabilă, prin lansarea căruia brandul se aliniază noilor tendințe care privesc sustenabilitatea. Aspectele prezentate sunt susținute de observația Elenei Dumitrașcu (2019: 106), potrivit căreia acest tip de discurs „introduce procesul de persuasiune în axa timpului nelimitat” prin intermediul dicotomiei „referință-ofertă”, astfel încât calitatea parfumului devine în cele din urmă referențială, neschimbându-se în timp.

3. Concluzii

Discursul publicitar pentru parfumuri urmărește persuadarea destinatarilor-clienți prin utilizarea strategiilor lingvistice de integrare comunicativă a publicului. Astfel, sunt utilizate interogațiile, imperativele și deicticele pentru a invita sau provoca receptorul să participe la experiența propusă de publicitar, transformându-l dintr-un simplu observator într-un potențial consumator implicat în procesul de persuadare. Folosirea acestor strategii lingvistice facilitează cooperarea publicului și perceperea parfumului drept o expresie a personalității, depășind statutul de produs destinat vânzării.

THE IDEA OF MERITOCRATIC EDUCATION AS DEMOCRATIC RECONCILIATION

Tatiana Callo
Prof., PhD, "Ion Creangă" Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: This article highlights one of the most powerful and challenging aspects in the field of education – meritocracy. Being the sine qua non condition for producing qualitative results, meritology actively involves the reconfiguration of the mission of schools, with an orientation towards the qualities of success, here being included a series of phenomena addressed in the article: school meritology as a belief, as a necessary condition, as protection against favoritism, distributive justice, meritocratic distribution, utility, educational hierarchy. The article presents, by appealing to the specifics of meritocratic education, the design of the possibilities of overcoming obstacles in achieving successes in the socio-pedagogical plan, being located, sequentially, in an analytical arrangement at the level of schoolteachers.

Keywords*: meritocracy; meritocratic education; equal opportunities; meritocratic distribution; school excellence*

1. Meritocrație generală și școlară

Nimeni nu pune la îndoială faptul că, azi, meritocrația (sau meritologia) este o problemă centrală în educație, preocupată în mod special de identificarea, dezvoltarea și recompensarea meritului elevului, este un principiu normativ care direcționează distribuția oportunităților și beneficiilor pe baza competențelor, talentului și efortului, având, în fapt, o valoare de ideal educational [11, p.3; 6, p.112].

Meritocrația este o ideologie în care cei care muncesc mult sunt recompensați pentru abilitățile și eforturile lor. Din perspectivă sociologică, sistemul meritocratic consideră că oamenii de succes merită pe deplin acest lucru. În esență, meritocrația în educație presupune că fiecare elev, indiferent de mediu sau circumstanțe, ar trebui să aibă șanse egale de a reuși pe baza talentelor sale, a muncii asidue și a determinării personale. Acest concept se aliniază cu principiile democratice, punând accent pe corectitudine și egalitatea de șanse.

Credința în meritocrația școlară este deja înrădăcinată în instituțiile de învățământ în pofida unui număr mare de dovezi care arată că inegalitatea educațională rămâne o provocare considerabilă. De exemplu, după cum afirmă A.Batruch și coautorii, un studiu care combină un șir de evaluări internaționale la scară largă oferă dovezi solide că în țările Organizației pentru Cooperare și Dezvoltare Economică (OCDE) probabilitatea de a urma o instituție terțiară este de două ori mai mare, dacă cel puțin unul dintre părinți are o diplomă de liceu și de 4,5 ori mai mare, dacă părinții au obținut studii terțiare [1, p.621].

În ultimii ani excelența școlară a fost imperativul politicilor publice privind educația, în special în sistemele educaționale puternic axate pe calitate, competență și merit, precum și pe eficacitatea sistemului educațional. În Europa dezvoltarea competenței în sistemul educațional este prioritară, reglementată de interesele și nevoile pieței muncii și de metode de guvernare eficiente și performative. Accentul pus pe producerea de rezultate școlare a implicat reconfigurarea misiunii școlilor, astfel încât acestea au devenit progresiv mai dependente de performanța academică și de responsabilitatea elevilor (orientare meritocratică) și mai activ implicate în consolidarea democratizării în procesele școlare (orientare democratică). Pe măsură ce unele țări au luptat împotriva eșecului școlar și a abandonului școlar, „calitățile succesului" sunt intensificate, într-o clară apologie a cultului meritocrației [16; 12].

În centrul dezbaterii științifice se află, după părerea lui L.L.Toress, diferite abordări privind obiectivele sistemului public de învățământ:

(a) cele care urmăresc explorarea potențialităților unei instituții școlare axate pe valorile eficienței, excelenței și competenței;
(b) cele care pun sub semnul întrebării postulatele meritocratice care stimulează realizările academice;
(c) cele care apără o reconciliere între dimensiunile democratice și principiile meritocratice [Apud 16].

Deși există o suprapunere conceptuală semnificativă între convingerile care justifică sistemul și meritocrația generală și credința în meritocrația școlară, teoretic vorbind, ele nu sunt identice.

În primul rând, conceptual vorbind, cele două noțiuni se referă la două niveluri diferite de abstractizare. În timp ce convingerile generale de meritocrație implică credințe societale mai difuze (de exemplu, credințe despre lumea justă), care nu sunt atașate unor instituții specifice sau unor agenți specifici responsabili pentru protejarea meritocrației, credința în meritocrația școlară este o credință care este legată de o instituție specifică cu obiective instituționale clare.

În al doilea rând, meritocrația școlară este o condiție necesară, dar nu suficientă, pentru ca meritocrația generală să existe în societate; adică o țară poate avea școli meritocratice, de exemplu, dar nu o societate meritocratică. Într-adevăr, acesta este cazul în multe țări în care meritocrația școlară și încălcările meritocrației generale (de exemplu, corupție ridicată) sunt ambele mari (de exemplu, Maldive, Filipine, Uzbekistan sunt printre cele mai mobile 10 țări din lume din punct de vedere educațional, în ciuda nivelurilor lor ridicate de corupție) [1, p.622; 15, p.427].

Astfel, definiția meritului în sine este un fenomen fluid, care este construit social să reflecte valorile şi interesele celor cu puterea de a instituţionaliza anumite idealuri şi valori. Instituţiile de învăţământ evaluează şi certifică demonstrații individuale de aptitudini, cunoștințe și competențe, precum și relevanța și valoarea acestor performanțe, care este întotdeauna supusă schimbării valorilor culturale și interesului pieței.

2. Promovarea meritocrației școlare prin democratizare

Educația și competiția au fost întotdeauna principalele metode de adoptare a ordinii meritocratice. Idealurile meritocratice şi-au avut originea în valorile confuciene, care au fost instituite în civilizațiile chineze, precum dinastia Han. Idealurile meritocratice au fost, în cele din urmă, adoptate de gânditorii iluminişti europeni în eforturile de a reconstitui ordinea socială dincolo de limitele vechiului regim, iar aplicațiile mai actuale ale meritocrației în Europa și Statele Unite au fost utilizate în serviciile publice ca măsuri de protecție împotriva corupției și favoritismului [9].

Mai mulți cercetători s-au concentrat asupra unei dileme care prioritizează orientările democratice și meritocratice în școală. Deși configurația acestor orientări este rezultatul specificității contextelor naționale și al tradițiilor istorice și ideologice mai largi, devine posibilă identificarea anumitor trăsături comune care reglementează sistemele de învățământ. Presiunea crescândă pentru producerea de rezultate iese în evidență vizibil ca o idee dominantă în variatele studii privind subiectul, deși cu manifestări distincte în contexte sociale diferite [16].

În opinia lui Toress, care este una destul de întemeiată, școala trăiește azi în tensiunea dintre scopurile democratice și idealurile de merit și selectivitate. În acest context, școlile stabilesc instrumente de laudă publică pentru elevii care se remarcă din punct de vedere academic sau în alte dimensiuni, însă configurația lor și nici criteriile de selecție nu sunt omogene, ceea ce indică existența unor conceptualizări distincte ale excelenței și a unor marje de libertate pentru fiecare școală de a-și defini propriile criterii de success.

Poziția actuală a sistemelor de învățământ reflectă dubla lor misiune de a promova incluziunea și, în același timp, excelența. Această poziție își propune să ilustreze avantajele reconcilierii mandatelor democratice cu cele meritocratice [Apud 16].

De exemplu, implementarea valorilor democratice din Statele Unite a oferit oportunitatea unei „aristocrații naturale" a talentului, iar virtutea să înlocuiască alte sisteme de inegalitate bazate pe dreptul de naștere. Valorile meritocratice stau la baza ideologiei visului american care afirmă că:

(a) indivizii pot reuși pe baza autonomiei decizii și acțiuni lor;

(b) acest succes se bazează pe virtutea morală;

(c) șanse egale se aplică tuturor, indiferent de origine sau identitate socială.

Meritocrația este considerată în general a fi specifică sistemului social în cadrul căruia indivizii câștigă recompense în funcție de abilitățile și eforturile lor [Apud 9].

Acceptarea pe scară largă a valorilor meritocratice există indiferent de condiţiile reale de stratificare socială şi inegalitatea în distribuirea resurselor și a puterii. Mai degrabă, meritocrația este validată ca un sistem echitabil într-un domeniu ideal. Democrația și meritocrația, ca fenomene ideologice, dezvăluie, de asemenea, cum perspectivele modelează aranjamentele istorice și actuale ale puterii sociale.

Nivelul educațional și performanța sunt percepute ca factori cheie în determinarea meritului, presupunându-se că educația îmbunătățește șansele cuiva de a avea un loc de muncă remunerat și este deci cel mai transparent mijloc de mobilitate socială. Oferind fiecărui copil, încă de la început, șanse educaționale egale, instituțiile educaționale și sociale pot selecta mai echitabil pe cei care se califică cel mai bine pentru educație avansată și poziții de conducere [9].

În această ordine de idei, educația este adesea văzută drept marele egalizator – un mecanism care permite indivizilor să se ridice în societate pe baza talentului și efortului lor. În contextul educației, meritocrația sugerează că elevii ar trebui să fie capabili să obțină succes pe baza performanței academice, talentului și muncii lor grele. Sistemele educaționale care sunt de natură meritocratică urmăresc să ofere șanse egale tuturor elevilor, indiferent de mediul lor familial, clasa socială sau etnie.

Pentru mulți, educația servește ca mecanism principal pentru mobilitatea socială ascendentă. Prin educație, indivizii dobândesc abilitățile și calificările necesare pentru locuri de muncă mai bine plătite, statut social îmbunătățit și o calitate mai bună a vieții. Ideea că oricine, indiferent de origine, poate urca pe scara socială doar prin merit este adânc înrădăcinată în multe societăți. Într-un sistem meritocratic, educația ar trebui să identifice cei mai talentați indivizi și să le atribuie roluri în societate în funcție de abilitățile lor, nu de mediul lor social [8].

3. Educația meritocratică

În opinia lui T. Napoletano, specialist în domeniul meroitologiei, există două moduri, în linii mari, în care s-ar putea concepe educația meritocratică.

Într-o concepție standard, „îngustă", o abordare meritocratică a educației este una care distribuie anumite bunuri și oportunități educaționale în funcție de merit.

Într-o a doua concepție, „mai largă", educația meritocratică este un sistem educațional potrivit unui angajament față de meritocrație – unde „meritocrația" se referă la o anumită concepție a justiției distributive. De o importanță deosebită este faptul că, în timp ce meritocrația, ca perspectivă a justiției distributive, necesită un angajament față de principiile egalității de șanse, concepția îngustă meritocratică a educației nu necesită acest lucru. Însă în timp ce meritocrația (și, prin urmare, concepția largă a educației meritocratice) este constrânsă de o cerință de egalitate a șanselor, educația meritocratică în sens restrâns nu este. Recunoașterea relațiilor dintre meritocrație, educația meritocratică și egalitatea de șanse aruncă o lumină considerabilă asupra dezacordurilor din dezbaterea privind egalitatea de șanse în educație [11, p.3; 3, p.523; 5, p.183].

Educația meritocratică, așa cum o percepe Napoletano, distribuie bunurile meritocratice în conformitate cu ceea ce merită elevii. Credem că această viziune este mai fidelă concepției meritocratice standard despre educație și are, de asemenea, perspective mai bune de a face educația meritocratică compatibilă cu meritocrația, deoarece aceasta din urmă este cel mai bine justificată prin apelul la merit și nu la utilitate.

O atenție deosebită, în acest context, trebuie acordată obstacolelor în calea succesului în școală. Printre acestea sunt și cele enunțate în continuare [Apud 14; 7, p.429].

- Elevul poate fi dezavantajat dacă provine dintr-o familie mai puțin asigurată. Acești elevi se găsesc adesea la periferie, luptându-se nu doar cu provocările academice, ci și cu cele socio-economice
- Alt factor este cel al oportunităților limitate de a-și dezvolta abilitățile mentale și limbajul. Când luăm în considerare etapele timpurii de dezvoltare ale unui copil, devine evident cât de cruciale sunt stimulările lingvistice și cognitive. În mediile în care acestea sunt puține, copiii se confruntă cu barierele lingvistice și cu o lipsă de provocări cognitive.
- Educația nu înseamnă doar învățarea academică; este, de asemenea, despre navigarea peisajului cultural detaliat al școlilor. Pentru copiii care se confruntă cu un decalaj mare între valorile lor de acasă și cultura școlară, călătoria școlară devine dificilă. Sentimentele de alienare ar putea deveni o încercare zilnică, deoarece programa școlii le pare îndepărtată și fără legătură.
- De asemenea, dizabilitățile fizice și mintale pot amplifica sentimentul de izolare. Având în vedere că școlile nu au adesea infrastructura pentru a găzdui și a preda acestor elevi în mod eficient, călătoria educațională devine plină de bariere. Un copil care se confruntă cu probleme cronice de sănătate, tulburări emoționale sau provocări mentale, consideră că este o provocare exponențială să se concentreze pe mediul academic. Fără intervenții specializate și înțelegere din partea educatorilor și a colegilor, luptele lor ar putea rămâne invizibile, dar impactul asupra creșterii lor academice și emoționale este palpabil.
- Elevul poate fi dezavantajat dacă părinții lui sunt indiferenți sau ostili față de educație. Fundamentul educației unui copil stă adesea pe umerii părinților. Atunci când părinții, datorită propriilor experiențe sau convingeri, sunt indiferenți sau chiar ostili față de educație, aceasta transmite un mesaj demotivant. Acești copii ar putea să nu aibă structura de sprijin acasă, pe care o au mulți dintre colegii lor, ceea ce duce la o implicare academică redusă și un sentiment de izolare.
- Infrastructura unei școli, atât în ceea ce privește dotările fizice, cât și personalul didactic, joacă un rol semnificativ în educația unui copil. În școlile care nu dispun de resurse, elevii ar putea să nu aibă acces la materiale didactice actualizate, oportunități extracurriculare sau chiar facilități de bază.
- Un rol esențial îl joacă și conceptul său de sine, care este de așa natură încât elevul nu se consideră capabil de succes la școală. Când un copil, din nenumărate motive, interiorizează convingerea că nu este capabil de succes academic, aceasta devine o profeție care se împlinește. Ei s-ar putea retrage de la participarea activă, ar putea experimenta anxietate în timpul evaluărilor și ar putea chiar evita provocările academice.

Or, pentru a susține cu adevărat educația meritocratică, trebuie, mai întâi, să identificăm și să abordăm aceste bariere. Doar făcând acest lucru, putem spera la un sistem în care toată lumea, indiferent de trecutul sau provocările ei, are șanse egale de succes.

Pentru ca meritocrația să funcționeze în mod ideal, toți indivizii ar trebui să înceapă de la aceeași linie de plecare. Idealul meritocrației prevede o cursă corectă, în care fiecare participant stă umăr la umăr la linia de start. Cu toate acestea, realitățile evidențiate mai sus prezintă o imagine diferită. Mulți elevi din medii cu probleme economice încep cursa cu câțiva pași în urmă și aleargă pe o pistă denivelată, încărcată cu obstacole [14].

4. Angajamentul față de educația meritocratică

Angajamentul față de educația meritocratică nu este un angajament față de meritocrație în sine. După cum am văzut, meritocrația se referă la o anumită viziune asupra justiției distributive, conform căreia, în linii mari, anumite bunuri economice (locuri de muncă, venituri) ar trebui distribuite în conformitate cu meritele oamenilor. Cu toate acestea, justificările meritocrației ca o perspectivă asupra justiției distributive fac, de obicei, apel la merit și la valoarea intrinsecă a faptului că oamenii primesc ceea ce merită. Având în vedere că sistemul educațional este unul dintre principalele vehicule prin care ne dezvoltăm meritele, aceasta înseamnă că sistemul educațional dintr-o meritocrație trebuie să adere și la un principiu al egalității de șanse [11, p.5; 10, p.14; 13, p.397].

Înțelegerea legăturii dintre meritocrație și egalitatea de șanse, credem, ajută la clarificarea dezacordurilor cu privire la rolul și valoarea egalității de șanse în educație. Nucleul ideii educației meritocratice, la rândul său, este un angajament față de distribuția sau alocarea meritocratică a anumitor bunuri educaționale.

În felul acesta, principiul distribuției în educație bazată pe merit presupune că anumite bunuri instituționale ale educației ar trebui distribuite meritocratic. Acestea ar putea include admiterea la școli sau universități selective, finanțarea școlilor, oportunitățile de a participa la cursuri avansate, premii și așa mai departe, însă nu este menit să acopere bunuril intrinseci ale educației – dezvoltarea cunoștințelor și a abilităților.

Ca atare, există două moduri tipice în care un principiu meritocratic de distribuție ar putea fi justificat. În primul rând, poate fi justificat pur și simplu prin apelul la utilitate. Prin distribuirea meritocratică a locurilor de muncă și a veniturilor, de exemplu, stimulăm munca asiduă și productivitatea și, astfel, distribuirea meritocratică a bunurilor economice tinde să maximizeze utilitatea.

La fel și în contextul educației. Am putea crede că ar trebui să distribuim oportunitățile educaționale meritocratic, deoarece acest lucru îi va stimula pe elevi să muncească mult și să profite la maximum de educația lor. În plus, ne asigurăm că oportunitățile și resursele educaționale suplimentare ajung la cei care le vor utiliza cel mai bine. Speranța este că, pe termen lung, acest tip de abordare distributivă va fi cea mai eficientă și va maximiza utilitatea pe termen lung [Ibidem, p.8].

Aici însă trebuie să menționăm că, în contextul educației, este departe de a fi clar că oferirea de oportunități suplimentare sau cheltuirea de resurse suplimentare pentru cei mai merituoși va genera o utilitate generală mai mare decât, să zicem, creșterea „nivelului educațional", concentrându-se pe creșterea elevilor mai puțin merituoși. Chiar dacă se crede că este intuitiv evident că abordarea meritocratică poate fi justificată prin apelul la utilitate, trebuie recunoscut că excepțiile pot fi numeroase.

Școlile sunt adesea evaluate în funcție de calitatea și nivelurile de performanță pe care le ating elevii lor. Prin urmare, dacă un elev frecventează o școală foarte apreciată, iar altul merge la o școală cu o cotă mai mică, este probabil ca acești elevi să aibă experiențe de învățare diferite, indiferent de modul în care este similară inteligența lor naturală [4].

O alternativă la educația meritocratică ar fi compensarea talentelor mai mici cu o investiție mai mare a resurselor educaționale (cunoscut sub numele de principiul nevoii). Sau elevilor li se pot oferi aceleași oportunități educaționale, indiferent de abilitățile lor (cunoscut sub numele de principiul egalității), mai degrabă decât anumite oportunități oferite elevilor cu performanțe înalte [Ibidem]. Calea către meritocrația adevărată nu constă doar în celebrarea realizărilor academice, ci și în asigurarea faptului că fiecare copil, indiferent de originea lor, are șanse egale de a le atinge.

Evident, cea mai plauzibilă idee a educației meritocratice face apel la merit, dar există motive să credem că tipul de merit care justifică abordarea meritocratică a educației este distinct de tipul de merit care stă la baza concepției meritocratice a justiției distributive. În special, „meritul instituțional" este cel care ghidează abordarea meritocratică a educației, în timp ce meritul pre-instituțional sau „moral" justifică meritocrația ca justiție distributivă. Înțelegerea meritului educațional în acest fel este importantă pentru clarificarea relației dintre meritocrație ca justiție distributivă și constrângerile impuse sistemului educațional de către meritocrație [11, p.10].

Deși principiul de șanse egale, în sens strict, restricționează relația dintre merit și merite economice, implicațiile pentru sistemul educațional sunt considerabile. Evident, sistemul educațional este unul dintre cei mai importanți factori în dezvoltarea meritelor economice ale unei personae. Atâta timp cât și în măsura în care meritul educațional este transformat în merite economice, principiul respectiv va impune ca diferențele de statut socioeconomic să nu ducă la avantaje sau dezavantaje pentru elevii care își dezvoltă meritele.

Unele reacții negative la adresa educației meritocratice care urmăresc să modifice substanța meritului sunt cel mai bine înțelese nu ca respingeri ale meritocrației, ci ca apeluri la revizuirea obiectivelor instituțiilor de învățământ și, prin urmare, a concepțiilor rezultate despre merit. De exemplu, dacă ne gândim la sistemul educațional în primul rând în ceea ce privește rolul său în consolidarea și reproducerea economiei, atunci meritul va fi înțeles în ceea ce privește abilitățile care sunt cel mai bine valorificate în productivitatea economică. Acest lucru va fi cel mai clar vizibil la nivelul învățământului superior, unde studenții se pot pregăti direct pentru carierele lor. Meritul în învățământul secundar va fi conceput în mare măsură în ceea ce privește interfața sa cu învățământul terțiar și, prin urmare, indirect, prin rolul său în serviciul economiei [Ibidem].

Un angajament explicit față de meritocrație poate justifica un angajament față de oportunitățile educaționale. Problema fundamentală pentru un meritocrat nu este atât poziționalitatea educației în sine, cât, mai degrabă, faptul că absența oportunităților educaționale înseamnă că bunurile economice pe care cineva le obține datorită oportunităților educaționale mai mari sunt nemeritate. Cu toate acestea, justiția distributivă este o chestiune sau cel puțin parțial o chestiune de a obține ceea ce merită. Dacă unii primesc mai mult decât merită într-un context competitiv, este probabil ca alții să primească mai puțin decât merită, ceea ce este nedrept față de ei și constituie, de asemenea, o nedreptate distributivă [11, p.17]. Întrucât justiția liberală presupune o egalitate democratică (ceea ce impune ca cetățenii să fie în relații de egalitate unii cu alții), contează ca fiecare copil să aibă o educație suficient de bună pentru a-i permite să se raporteze unii la alții ca egali. Inegalitățile educaționale dincolo de acest punct sunt irelevante din punctul de vedere al justiției, la fel și explicațiile pentru aceste inegalități.

Așadar, sarcina oficială a școlilor este de a dezvolta cunoștințele și abilitățile elevilor, transmițând, în acest proces, de asemenea, credințe informale, norme și valori care modelează elevii și societatea. Probabil, una dintre cele mai de impact este credința în meritocrația școlară. Datorită acestei credințe trăim într-o „societate școlară" în care educația este una dintre sursele primare de stratificare socială și economică [1, p.634].

Credința în meritocrația școlară nu afectează doar elevii, ci afectează și societatea, în general, prin modelarea atitudinilor față de inegalitatea socială și economică. Mai exact, credința în meritocrația școlară nu presupune doar să credem că procesele din școli sunt corecte, ci și că diferențele în rezultatele vieții bazate pe ierarhia educațională sunt, de asemenea, corecte.

Studiile realizate de Batruch și coautorii oferă, de exemplu, o susținere consecventă pentru credința în meritocrația școlară și aduc dovezi corelaționale pentru faptul că nivelurile manipulate ale meritocrației școlare afectează cauzal aceste rezultate și oferă dovezi că efectul este generalizabil [1, p.632].

În ceea ce privește implicațiile societale, rezultatele studiilor sugerează că, prin consolidarea atitudinilor care susțin inegalitatea socială și a veniturilor, credința în meritocrația școlară ar putea avea un cost care depășește anii de școală ai elevilor. Această perspectivă este importantă din mai multe motive. În timp ce educația este adesea prezentată ca soluție la multe dintre problemele societății, partea mai puțin discutată și mai „ascunsă" a instituțiilor de învățământ este că una dintre funcțiile sale de bază este de a crea o ierarhie.

Un discurs meritocratic în școală este folosit în societate nu doar pentru a legitima ierarhia educațională, ci și pentru a sprijini menținerea inegalității sociale și economice în general. În al doilea rând, deși constatarea conform căreia credința în meritocrația școlară este întărită și perpetuată de profesori și personalul școlii, este, de asemenea, descurajantă, în același timp.

În vederea constatării opiniei cadrelor didactice privind educația meritocratică și, eventual, educația democratică, noi am aplicat un mini-test cu alegere din trei variante de răspuns la nivelul a 35 de profesori școlari (diferite discipline) la cursurile de formare continuă. Acesta prevedea următoarele:

1. Educația meritocratică, în esența sa, se bazează pe (a) competiție; (b) egalitate; (c) posibilități;
2. Educația democratică, în esența sa, se bazează pe (a) libertate; (b) oportunitate; (c) autonomie. Ca sarcină suplimentară au fost solicitați să argumenteze alegerea printr-un argument forte.

Rezultatele acestui studiu ilustrează că pedagogii conferă cea mai mare însemnătate, în primul caz*, posibilităților* elevilor (circa 52% din respondenți), adică asigurării materiale (a familiei, a școlii, a clasei) și înzestrării naturale a elevilor cu capacități de învățare. În al doilea caz, prioritate, în opinia respondenților, o are autonomia elevilor în propriul parcurs de învățare (circa 69 %).

Pentru circa 42 % din cadrele didactice școlare antrenate în sondaj educația meritocratică și educația democratică sunt corelative, dar și reductibile la procesul de învățare ca atare. Aceste educații reprezintă două ipostaze nonexclusive ale aceluiași discurs pedagogic: educația meritocratică este o degajare a educației democratice. Aceasta înseamnă, de fapt, că ea rezultă dintr-un proces social componentele căruia sunt configurate în vederea unei particularizări puternice a meritelor. Procesul general de transformare a educației democrtatice în una meritocratică este unul convergent, investitndu-l pe acesta cu valori esențiale, cum ar fi libertatea, egalitatea, alegerea.

Printre argumentele formulate de respondenți atestăm și următoarele idei: Elevul autonom se axează pe valori, el învață pentru a cunoaște; Autonomia elevilor se manifestă prin faptul că participă activ la lecție în baza siguranței pe care o au; Elevul autonom este responsabil, el știe să aleagă oportunitățile, să formulize soluții; Autonomia presupune evaluare proprie corectă și onestă, elevul știe să-și prioritizeze obiectivele etc.

Examinând argumentele cadrelor didactice, constatăm că aceștia mai puțin se axează pe discuția meritelor și meritocrației, acest fapt demonstrând o pregătire mai slabă a lor în ceea ce privește specificul, baza teoretică, direcțiile, premisele educației meritocratice. Într-adevăr, mecanismele educației meritocratice sunt mai puțin abordate și în studiile de pedagogie, desi acest domeniu este la ordinea zilei.

Din punct de vedere funcțional, meritocrația este esențială pentru a se asigura că cei mai calificați indivizi ocupă cele mai importante poziții în societate. În acest sens, educația este văzută ca un mecanism de ierarhizare a indivizilor în funcție de talentele și capacitățile lor. Cu cât nivelul educațional al unui individ este mai mare, cu atât este mai probabil ca acesta să își asigure un loc de muncă cu statut înalt și bine plătit. Acest lucru creează un sistem în care mobilitatea socială se bazează pe efortul și meritul personal, mai degrabă decât pe privilegiul moștenit sau pe clasa socială [Apud 8].

În timp ce ideea unei societăți meritocratice este atrăgătoare, provocările în realizarea acesteia în cadrul sistemelor de învățământ sunt numeroase. Realitatea este că mulți factori, inclusiv statutul socio-economic, mediul familial, accesul la resurse și părtinirile în testare, pot afecta succesul educațional al unui elev. Acești factori creează bariere în calea meritocrației adevărate, făcând dificil ca educația să funcționeze ca marele egalizator care promite să fie. Totuși, aceasta nu înseamnă că eforturile de promovare a meritocrației în educație ar trebui abandonate.

Concluzii

- Meritocrația ca ideologie și principiu normative în educație implică un efort susținut de aplicare a capacității, o determinare personală în procesul de egalizare a șanselor la educație;
- Reconcilierea democratică a meritologiei vizează axarea pe producerea de rezultate excelente ale elevilor în baza propriilor criterii de succes ale instituției educaționale, care are o dublă misiune: de a promova incluziunea și excelența;
- Meritologia, într-o accepțiune largă, este o perspectivă a justiției distributive care necesită un angajament față de egalitatea de șanse și un apel constant la merit, la faptul că elevii primesc ceea ce merită. apelul la utilitate justifică abordarea meritocratică.

MIND & MOTION: AI-DRIVEN FRONTIERS IN EDUCATION AND SPORTS

Oana-Maria Păstae
Assoc. Prof., PhD, „Constantin Brâncuşi" University of Târgu Jiu

Abstract: This article examines the transformative impact of Artificial Intelligence (AI) within education and sport; two domains fundamentally concerned with human learning and performance. As AI advances from theoretical concept to applied technology, it increasingly reshapes instructional practices, performance analysis, and decision-making processes. In education, AI enables personalized and adaptive learning, predictive student support, intelligent tutoring, and administrative automation, contributing to more inclusive and efficient learning environments. In sport, AI enhances biomechanical analysis, physiological monitoring, tactical modeling, and injury prediction, providing data-driven insights that refine training precision and elevate athletic performance. Through a review of current literature and case studies, this article highlights AI's capacity to augment rather than replace human expertise, offering new opportunities to optimize cognitive and physical development. At the same time, it critically addresses challenges related to ethics, data governance, algorithmic bias, transparency, and professional adaptation. The study concludes that AI, when implemented responsibly, serves as a powerful catalyst for innovation across education and sport, advancing human potential while requiring sustained oversight and thoughtful integration.

Keywords*: AI; mind; motion; sport; education*

1. Introduction

The global adoption of advanced technologies is reshaping both education and sport, transforming how teaching and learning occur in the classroom while simultaneously redefining how athletes train, how coaches design strategies, and how performance is analyzed and enhanced. Both domains share a central focus: optimizing human potential. Education aims to cultivate cognitive and social capacities, while sports refine physical performance, strategic ability, and resilience. Historically, both fields relied heavily on human expertise—teachers, coaches, mentors—whose experience shaped outcomes. Yet traditional approaches face challenges such as large learner variability, limited feedback cycles, resource constraints, and the difficulty of continuously monitoring and interpreting complex performance data.

AI offers potential solutions by augmenting human decision-making with machine intelligence capable of processing vast datasets, identifying hidden patterns, and delivering responsive insights. In education, AI-driven learning systems adapt instruction to individual needs, helping bridge achievement gaps and making learning more inclusive. In sports, AI tools extract meaningful performance indicators from biomechanical and physiological data that would otherwise be inaccessible in real time.

This article analyzes these dual transformations, examining how AI is reshaping learning environments and athletic training. Through case studies in each area, it illustrates not just technological capability but real-world implementation and outcomes and examines the ethical implications and operational challenges associated with AI integration, highlighting the complexities that educators and sports professionals must manage to ensure responsible adoption.

2. Literature review

Artificial intelligence is commonly categorized into four developmental types according to Fadel et al. (2024): Artificial Narrow Intelligence (ANI), Artificial Cognitive Intelligence (ACI), Artificial General Intelligence (AGI), and Artificial Superintelligence (ASI). ANI represents today's widely used systems—tools designed to excel at specific tasks such as translation, image recognition, or adaptive learning, but without broader understanding or autonomy. ACI extends these capabilities by incorporating more advanced cognitive functions such as reasoning, problem-solving, and contextual awareness, enabling systems to perform complex tasks with greater flexibility. AGI, a more theoretical stage, refers to AI with human-level intelligence capable of transferring knowledge across domains, learning autonomously, and demonstrating general adaptability. ASI describes a hypothetical form of intelligence that surpasses human cognitive abilities across all dimensions, including creativity, strategic reasoning, and emotional inference. Together, these four categories illustrate a developmental continuum that clarifies where current AI stands and what future advancements may entail.

Metalearning is generally defined as "learning how to learn"—the capacity to understand, regulate, and optimize one's own learning processes. In Fadel's framework, metalearning is a set of self-directed competencies that allow learners to monitor their thinking, reflect on strengths and weaknesses, set goals, adapt strategies, and evaluate outcomes. It involves awareness of what one is learning, how one is learning, and why particular strategies are effective or ineffective. Metalearning therefore integrates metacognition, motivation, and self-regulation, enabling learners to become more autonomous and adaptive in unfamiliar or complex situations. In AI-enhanced environments, metalearning becomes increasingly important, as students must interpret AI feedback, choose appropriate tools, and develop the judgment required to learn effectively alongside intelligent systems.

In their book, Artificial Intelligence in Higher Education: A Practical Guide, Churi, Joshi, Elhoseny, and Omrane (2022) highlight AI as a catalyst for transforming teaching, learning, and institutional operations across universities. They describe AI's roles along several key dimensions: personalized learning, where intelligent systems adapt instructional content, pacing, and feedback to individual learner profiles; predictive analytics, which help institutions identify at-risk students, optimize learning pathways, and improve retention; and intelligent tutoring systems that provide automated, real-time academic support outside classroom hours. The authors also emphasize AI's value in automating administrative processes, such as grading, scheduling, and academic advising, thereby allowing faculty to redirect time toward mentorship and high-impact pedagogical practices. Additionally, the book underscores AI's role in enhancing research capabilities, enabling data-driven inquiry, simulation, and advanced modeling. Throughout their analysis, the authors argue that AI's integration in higher education offers meaningful opportunities for improving quality, access, and efficiency—provided that ethical considerations, data privacy, and human oversight remain central to its implementation. Overall, AI's integration encourages a more flexible, responsive, and student-focused pedagogy that strengthens engagement and improves learning outcomes.

In the domain of sport, AI is increasingly viewed not merely as a data tool, but as a structurally transformative system with the potential to optimize training, strategy and injury prevention. Hammes, Hagg & Asteroth (2022) frame this transformation via the Sense-Model-Plan-Act loop, showing how AI systems move from sensing athlete behaviors to modeling them, planning optimized responses and acting through feedback mechanisms — yet emphasizing that human coaches must remain in the loop for trustworthy application.

Breakthroughs such as virtual assistants like Alexa and Siri and the landmark victory of AlphaGo over the world's top Go player illustrate the remarkable pace at which AI capabilities have evolved. Silver et al. (2016) demonstrate how the combination of deep learning and advanced search techniques can enable AI to achieve superhuman performance in highly complex tasks. In their work on AlphaGo, they introduce a hybrid system that uses deep neural networks to guide move selection and evaluate board positions, supported by reinforcement learning and Monte Carlo tree search. This integration allowed AlphaGo to outperform all existing Go programs and become the first AI system to defeat a professional human player on a full-sized Go board—an achievement previously believed to be years away. The study highlights the transformative potential of AI systems that merge learning from human expertise with self-improving reinforcement mechanisms, illustrating how AI can master domains characterized by vast decision spaces and strategic depth.

AI has significantly reshaped the sports domain, where machine learning technologies now support performance analysis, training optimization, and strategic decision-making. An early and influential example is the "Moneyball" era of the Oakland Athletics, which demonstrated how data-driven player evaluation could transform elite sports analytics (Lewis, 2004). Building on this foundation, AI applications have expanded to include automated training plan generation that tailors workloads to individual athletes (Skerik et al., 2018) and rehabilitation support systems capable of predicting injury risk and monitoring performance in team sports (Claudino et al., 2019). Beyond athlete development and coaching, AI further enhances sports broadcasting, spectator engagement, and even betting services, illustrating its broad impact across the global sports ecosystem (Martinez-Arastey, 2021).

3. AI in Education: The Rise of Intelligent Learning Systems

AI is increasingly reshaping education by enabling learning systems that are more personalized, scalable, and efficient than traditional instructional models. Rather than relying on uniform teaching methods, AI-driven platforms adapt to individual learner needs by continuously analyzing performance data and adjusting content difficulty, pacing, and feedback. Adaptive learning algorithms support targeted interventions that would be difficult to implement consistently in large classrooms, while predictive analytics help institutions identify at-risk students by examining patterns in attendance, engagement, and assessment results. These insights allow for timely, data-informed support that can improve student retention and achievement. Additionally, Intelligent Tutoring Systems simulate aspects of one-to-one tutoring by guiding learners through problem-solving processes, offering tailored prompts, and monitoring skill mastery. It further enhances educational efficiency through automated grading, academic planning recommendations, and accessibility tools such as real-time captioning and multilingual translation.

3.1.Case Studies: AI Transforming Learning Environments

These case studies illustrate how AI can support learners at scale, enhance instructional quality, and expand equitable access to meaningful learning opportunities across varied educational settings.

At the higher-education level, Arizona State University partnered with IBM Watson to develop Sunny, an AI-powered chatbot designed to handle routine student inquiries such as registration issues and financial aid questions. Integrated into ASU's digital infrastructure and available around the clock, the system reduced human support workload by more than 60%, improved student satisfaction, and strengthened retention by guiding learners through administrative and academic obstacles in real time.

Globally, UNESCO's collaboration with Century Tech has brought adaptive, AI-driven learning to refugee communities across Africa and the Middle East, where instability and teacher shortages threaten educational continuity. Century Tech's platform adjusts instruction according to learners' literacy levels, language backgrounds, and progress, with pilot studies demonstrating meaningful gains in literacy and numeracy despite minimal teacher involvement.

In K–12 environments, the U.S.-based MATHia platform from Carnegie Learning offers another compelling example: this AI tutoring system analyzes students' problem-solving behaviors, provides individualized feedback, and adapts instruction dynamically. A U.S. Department of Education randomized controlled trial found that students using MATHia achieved double the algebra learning gains of peers using traditional textbooks, with struggling learners improving standardized math scores by 30–50% and teachers reporting greater instructional efficiency.

Additional evidence comes from India's Byju's Learning App, where AI-driven personalization tailors explanations, practice sets, and pacing to each learner; studies show improved engagement and significant gains in mathematics and science achievement, particularly among students with inconsistent access to in-person instruction.

A recent and influential example of AI in foreign language education comes from the integration of GPT-based conversational agents into English as a Foreign Language (EFL) programs worldwide. Since 2023, several universities—including institutions in Japan, South Korea, and the UAE—have adopted GPT-4–powered language tutors to provide immersive conversational practice, automated writing feedback, and real-time grammar correction. A controlled study by Zhang et al. (2023) demonstrated that students using GPT-based AI tutors significantly improved their speaking fluency, lexical range, and confidence compared to students receiving only traditional instruction.

Latest research highlights growing concern among language teacher educators regarding the impact of generative AI on initial language teacher education (ILTE). Moorhouse and Kohnke (2024) found that since the arrival of tools like ChatGPT—capable of generating human-like text, audio, images, and other content—teacher educators expect significant changes to ILTE curriculum design, instructional practices, and assessment models. Based on interviews with English language teacher educators across Hong Kong's government-funded universities, the study reveals that while educators acknowledge the disruptive potential of generative AI, many feel underprepared and lack the necessary confidence and technological competence to address its implications effectively. The authors argue that supporting teacher educators through targeted training and further research is essential to ensure ILTE evolves appropriately in response to rapidly developing AI technologies.

4. AI in Sport: Enhancing Performance and Precision

AI is transforming athletic performance by providing levels of analysis and precision far beyond what traditional coaching methods can offer. Whereas coaches have historically relied on observation, intuition, and experience, AI introduces data-rich, objective insights that illuminate the complex interplay of biomechanics, physiology, strategy, and psychology involved in elite performance. Advanced motion-capture systems using computer vision now analyze an athlete's technique without the need for markers, capturing joint angles, movement efficiency, and asymmetries in real time to support skill refinement and injury prevention. Wearable technologies equipped with AI further monitor physiological indicators such as heart-rate variability, sleep patterns, exertion levels, and recovery profiles, enabling individualized training recommendations that optimize workload and reduce the risk of burnout.

In team sports, AI-based tactical analysis interprets game footage to detect patterns, anticipate opponents' strategies, and evaluate formations, offering strategic insights that enhance decision-making under pressure. It also contributes to athlete safety through injury-prediction models that integrate biomechanical, physiological, and historical data, allowing practitioners to make proactive adjustments to training. Additionally, AI-driven cognitive training tools help athletes strengthen visual attention, decision speed, and mental resilience—capacities that are critical in high-tempo, precision-dependent sports. Together, these innovations shift sports practice from intuition-driven approaches toward evidence-based, data-informed training environments designed to maximize performance and precision.

4.1.Case Studies: AI in Action Across Sports

AI has become a central driver of innovation across multiple sports, enabling teams and athletes to make data-driven decisions that optimize performance, improve efficiency, and reduce injury risk. In professional soccer, Manchester City's use of the Second Spectrum analytics platform illustrates the growing reliance on AI for tactical intelligence. By tracking player positioning, passing patterns, and spatial dynamics throughout matches, the system identifies optimal plays, exposes defensive vulnerabilities in opponents, and simulates game scenarios. These insights have contributed to enhanced passing efficiency, smarter player rotation, and consistently high ball-possession rates—key elements of the club's sustained success in the Premier League.

In basketball, AI-powered biometric optimization tools are now widely adopted across the NBA. Teams such as the Golden State Warriors and the Toronto Raptors use Catapult GPS wearables and the Noah Shooting System to monitor athletes' biomechanics and workload. Metrics including shooting arc, fatigue levels, sprint intensity, and deceleration are analyzed to refine training loads, prevent overuse injuries, and increase shot accuracy. These technologies have been linked to reductions in soft-tissue injuries, improved recovery processes, and greater consistency in shooting performance.

In soccer, the framework developed by PlayeRank demonstrates how machine learning can evaluate individual player performance and style from large match-event data. Pappalardo et al. (2018) applied this system to four seasons of professional soccer event logs, showing that the algorithm could not only outperform existing methods for player ranking, but also extract meaningful role-and-style based insights about players and teams. This illustrates how AI moves beyond simply tracking raw statistics to modelling nuanced aspects of decision-making, tactical behavior and individual contribution in team sports.

AI is increasingly being integrated into coaching techniques (Jud & Thalmann, 2025) and talent identification (McAuley et al., 2024) in sports, revolutionizing traditional approaches with data-driven insights (Chmait & Westerbeek, 2021), improved performance analysis (Araújo et al., 2021) and enhanced decision-making capabilities (Janssen et al., 2023). AI's role in coaching focuses on providing deeper insights into athletes' performance, developing personalized training programs and enabling real-time feedback. Some key AI techniques in coaching include performance analysis (Araújo et al., 2021; Yang & Chang, 2023), predictive analytics (Sharma et al., 2022), virtual reality (Witte et al., 2022) and augmented reality (Lee et al., 2023), and natural language processing (NLP) for feedback (Boughattas et al., 2022).

5. Challenges and Considerations in Using AI in Education and Sports

Although AI offers significant value in both education and sport, its adoption introduces several challenges that require careful consideration. Ethical and privacy issues are central to the use of AI in sports, especially when it relies on sensitive information like athletes' health data, performance metrics and biometric identifiers (Stahl & Wright, 2018). Although such data can greatly enhance training and athletic development, it also carries substantial risks, including unauthorized access, improper use and potential discrimination (Petersen et al., 2025). Integrating GenAI into education requires careful attention to its ethical dimensions, including digital equity, algorithmic bias and the protection of student data. Effective GenAI governance should involve clear institutional policies that define how, when and for what purposes these technologies may be used within educational settings (Singh, 2024).

Overreliance on AI may erode human judgment, reducing the relational, motivational, and ethical guidance provided by teachers, coaches, and mentors. Implementation barriers further complicate adoption, as advanced AI tools demand substantial financial investment, digital infrastructure, and technical expertise that many institutions or sports organizations lack. The opacity of "black-box" algorithms presents another challenge, limiting educators' and coaches' ability to interpret system decisions and undermining trust.

Finally, successful integration requires cultural and professional adaptation, since educators may fear replacement and coaches may distrust automated recommendations. Addressing these interconnected concerns is crucial to ensuring that AI is implemented responsibly, ethically, and sustainably across learning and athletic environments.

6. Conclusion

This study explored how artificial intelligence is transforming two domains central to human development—education and sport. The literature and case studies showed that AI is not only enhancing current practices but fundamentally reshaping how learning and performance are assessed and improved. In education, AI enables personalized learning, early identification of struggling students, intelligent tutoring, and automated administrative support, creating more adaptive and efficient learning environments. In sport, AI enhances performance through biomechanical analysis, physiological monitoring, tactical modeling, and injury prediction, providing data-driven insights that lead to smarter training and safer performance. Across both fields, AI marks a shift from intuition-based methods to data-informed environments that help learners, athletes, educators, and coaches reach higher levels of precision and effectiveness.

Despite its benefits, integrating AI into education and sport brings important challenges, including data privacy, algorithmic bias, transparency, unequal access, and changing professional roles. These issues highlight the need for careful governance and strong human oversight. AI is most effective not when it replaces educators or coaches, but when it enhances their expertise while preserving the relational and ethical aspects of teaching and training.

AI stands as a powerful ally in advancing human potential across cognitive, physical, and strategic domains. Its continued development will likely deepen personalization, refine performance analytics, and expand opportunities for learners and athletes alike. Moving forward, interdisciplinary collaboration, rigorous research, and ethical safeguards will be essential to ensure that AI's progress is aligned with human values and contributes meaningfully to more effective, equitable, and empowered educational and sporting experiences.

METHODOLOGICAL AND EXPERIENTIAL APPROACHES OF THE PRIMARY EDUCATION TEACHER IN ORGANIZING INDIVIDUALIZED TEACHING

Florin Cheia
Assoc. Prof., PhD, University of Craiova

Abstract: In the context of the diversity of students in primary education, implementing differentiation and individualized learning strategies is essential.This article explores the methological and experential approaches styles and individual interests, teachers can adapt teaching methods to maximize engagement and performance. The use technology and constructive feedback complements these strategies, contributing to the creation of an inclusive and stimulating educational environment.

Keywords: primary education; differentiation; individualization; teaching strategies.

Lucrarea urmărește analiza demersurilor metodologice și experiențiale utilizate de profesorii din învățământul primar în organizarea instruirii individualizate, în cadrul unui studiu realizat pe un grup de elevi și situații educaționale relevante pentru acest tip de intervenție pedagogică.
Învățământul primar reprezintă o etapă crucială în dezvoltarea copiilor, fiind esențială pentru formarea abilităților și cunoștințelor de bază. Diversitatea elevilor din această perioadă impune necesitatea implementării strategiilor de diferențiere și individualizare a învățării. Aceste abordări permit profesorilor să răspundă nevoilor specifice ale fiecărui elev, asigurând un mediu educațional inclusiv și stimulant.

2. Conținut de bază

Organizarea instruirii individualizate se bazează pe adaptarea procesului educațional la nevoile, ritmul și interesul fiecărui elev. Această metodă presupune utilizarea unor strategii didactice flexibile, resurse personalizate și evaluări specifice pentru a facilita învățarea eficientă și implicarea activă a elevilor. Iată principalele componente ale instruirii individualizate:

3. Principii fundamentale ale instruirii individualizate

P1. Adaptarea ritmului de învățare. Elevii care nu întâmpină dificultăți de învățare pot progresa rapid către noi teme, în timp ce acei elevi care întâmpină dificultăți pot lucra mai lent pentru a aprofunda conceptele.

P1. Accent pe nevoile individuale. Fiecare elev beneficiază de sarcini și suport personalizat ceea ce permite o învățare eficientă, indiferent de nivelul lor inițial.

P2. Utilizarea materialelor interactive. Resurse precum manualele digitale, media interactivă sau jocurile educative sunt esențiale pentru învățarea autonomă.

4. Strategii didactice pentru instruirea individualizată

S1. Setarea obiectivelor specifice și realiste. Profesorii stabilesc obiective clare pentru fiecare elev, ajustând planurile de învățare în funcție de progresul acestuia.

S2. Crearea oportunităților bazate pe interesele elevilor. Elevii sunt mai motivați atunci când materialele didactice reflectă interesele lor personale, cum ar fi utilizarea statisticilor sportive pentru matematică sau explorarea temelor preferate în lectură.

S3. Playlisturi educaționale personalizate. Profesorii pot crea liste de activități din care elevii să aleagă, oferindu-le flexibilitate în modul de abordare a temelor.

Concluzii: Strategii didactice pentru instruirea individualizată

a. Centrate pe elev: Strategiile didactice individualizate pun accentul pe nevoile, interesele, stilurile de învățare și ritmul propriu al fiecărui elev, ceea ce conduce la o implicare mai activă și o învățare mai eficientă.

b. Flexibilitate și adaptabilitate: Profesorii trebuie să adopte metode flexibile, care să permită ajustarea conținutului, a obiectivelor și a evaluării în funcție de profilul elevului. Nu există o soluție unică, ci mai degrabă o paletă de metode care se combină în funcție de context.
c. Evaluarea continuă: Evaluarea formativă și diagnostică este esențială pentru identificarea nevoilor individuale și ajustarea permanentă a strategiilor didactice. Feedback-ul personalizat susține progresul și motivația elevilor.
d. Diversificarea metodelor de predare: Utilizarea variată a metodelor (învățare prin proiecte, învățare asistată de tehnologie, învățare colaborativă sau independentă) permite abordarea diferențiată a conținuturilor și încurajează autonomia elevului.
e. Rolul activ al profesorului: Cadrele didactice devin ghizi în procesul educațional, facilitând învățarea prin organizarea unor experiențe relevante și personalizate, nu doar transmițători de informație.
f. Importanța resurselor și a tehnologiei: Tehnologia educațională oferă instrumente eficiente pentru susținerea individualizării, prin conținuturi interactive, platforme adaptive și resurse variate accesibile fiecărui elev.

Rolul tehnologiei în instruirea individualizată

Tehnologia joacă un rol crucial în facilitarea instruirii personalizate:

R.1 Monitorizarea progresului: platformele digitale permit urmărirea performantelor elevilor în timp real, oferind feedback imediat.

R.2 Învățarea adaptativă: sistemele educaționale bazate pe tehnologie ajustează conținutul și nivelul de dificultate în funcție de nevoile fiecărui elev.

R.3 Simulări virtuale și activități interactive: acestea oferă experiențe de învățare captivante și permit elevilor să exploreze concepte complexe într-un mod accesibil.

În era digitală, tehnologia a devenit un pilon esențial în procesul educațional, oferind oportunități fără precedent pentru adaptarea învățării la nevoile individuale ale elevilor. Instruirea personalizată, care vizează ajustarea conținutului, ritmului și metodelor de predare în funcție de particularitățile fiecărui cursant, este facilitată în mod direct de progresele tehnologice.

Platformele educaționale online, aplicațiile de învățare și sistemele de management al învățării (LMS) permit profesorilor să monitorizeze progresul elevilor în timp real, să identifice punctele slabe și să ofere feedback imediat. Inteligența artificială și algoritmii de învățare automată analizează datele generate de elevi și sugerează resurse personalizate, exerciții suplimentare sau chiar trasee alternative de învățare.

În plus, tehnologia face posibilă diversificarea metodelor de predare: videouri interactive, simulări virtuale, realitate augmentată și jocuri educaționale contribuie la creșterea motivației și implicării elevilor. Astfel, fiecare cursant poate învăța într-un mod care îi este confortabil și eficient, indiferent de stilul său cognitiv.

De asemenea, accesul la resurse digitale de oriunde și oricând reduce barierele geografice sau temporale, ceea ce înseamnă că elevii pot învăța în ritmul propriu, fără presiunea impusă de structura tradițională a lecțiilor.

În concluzie, tehnologia nu doar că facilitează instruirea personalizată, ci o transformă într-o realitate accesibilă. Prin integrarea inteligentă a instrumentelor digitale, procesul educațional devine mai incluziv, adaptabil și eficient.

Evaluarea progresului

Evaluările sunt esențiale pentru a determina nivelul de însușire al conceptelor.

1. Evaluările frecvente. Testele de evaluare la finalul fiecărei unități ajută la identificarea lacunelor și la ajustarea planurilor de învățare.
2. Feedback constructiv. Profesorii oferă feedback detaliat pentru a sprijini îmbunătățirea continuă a performanțelor elevilor.

Întrebări generale:

a. Cum poate fi adaptată evaluarea pentru a reflecta progresul individual al fiecărui elev?
b. Ce tipuri de instrumente de evaluare sunt cele mai eficiente în contextul instruirii individualizate?
c. Cum poate fi folosit feedback-ul pentru a sprijini dezvoltarea elevului în procesul individualizat de învățare?
d. Care este rolul autoevaluării și al evaluării între colegi în urmărirea progresului personalizat?
e. Cum pot fi valorificate datele obținute din evaluare pentru a ajusta strategiile didactice individualizate?

Întrebări aplicate:

a. Ce indicatori arată că un elev progresează în ritmul propriu și nu este doar menținut la un standard general?
b. În ce mod poate tehnologia sprijini evaluarea continuă în instruirea individualizată?
c. Cum pot fi implicați părinții în monitorizarea progresului individual al elevului?
d. Care sunt provocările întâmpinate de profesori în evaluarea diferențiată și cum pot fi depășite?
e. Cum se poate asigura obiectivitatea evaluării într-un sistem care pune accent pe individualizare?

Exemple practice

În practică, instruirea individualizată poate include:

1. Lecții bazate pe proiecte care implică cercetarea independentă.
2. Activități de grup care combină colaborarea cu sarcinile individuale.
3. Utilizarea tutorilor sau mentorilor(învățători, profesori) pentru sprijin suplimentar.

Cercetare:

Impactul instruirii individualizate

Pentru a evalua eficiența acestei metode s-a realizat un studiu în Școala Gimnazială „Constantin Negreanu" din Drobeta-Turnu Severin.

Au fost implicați 80 de elevi din clasele primare. Cercetarea a urmărit progresul academic al elevilor care au beneficiat de metode personalizate față de cei care au urmat metode tradiționale.

Tabel 1. Compararea progresului academic între metodele tradiționale și cele individualizate

Metoda	Număr de elevi	Număr elevi	Procente	Performanță inițială	Performanță finală	Satisfacție elevi
Metode tradiționale	100	40	100 %	60 %	70 %	65 %
Instruire individualizată	100	40	100%	62 %	85 %	85 %

Elevii care au beneficiat de instruire individualizată au demonstrat o creștere semnificativ mai mare atât în performanțele academice , cât și în satisfacția generală față de procesul educațional. Instruirea individualizată asigurară succesul tuturor elevilor, adaptând procesul educațional la nevoile lor unice. Prin integrarea tehnologiei, utilizarea strategiilor flexibile și evaluările frecvente, profesorii pot crea un mediu educațional incluziv și stimulant.

Strategii de diferențiere și individualizare

a. Identificarea nevoilor specifice

Profesorii ar trebui să identifice nevoile specifice ale fiecărui elev, inclusiv nivelul de cunoștințe, stilul de învățare și interesele individuale. Această abordare permite adaptarea metodelor de predare pentru a maximiza implicarea și performanțele elevilor.

Utilizarea metodelor variate de predare, cum ar fi învățarea prin descoperire, învățarea prin cooperare și învățarea bazată pe proiecte, ajută la acoperirea diferitelor stiluri de învățare ale elevilor. Aceste metode stimulează creativitatea și dezvoltă abilitățile de comunicare și colaborare.

b. Tehnologie și feedback constructiv

Integrarea tehnologiei în procesul de învățare permite elevilor să acceseze resurse suplimentare și să învețe în ritmul lor propriu. Feedback-ul constructiv oferit de profesori este esențial pentru îmbunătățirea continuă a performanțelor elevilor. În contextul educației contemporane, tehnologia reprezintă un sprijin indispensabil pentru organizarea și implementarea instruirii individualizate. Prin intermediul resurselor digitale interactive, al platformelor educaționale și al aplicațiilor de evaluare, profesorul poate adapta ritmul, conținutul și nivelul de dificultate în funcție de particularitățile fiecărui elev.Instrumente precum Kahoot, Wordwall, LearningApps, Nearpod, Quizizz sau Google Classroom permit monitorizarea progresului individual și oferirea unui feedback imediat, personalizat. Astfel, elevul primește nu doar o notă, ci și informații clare despre ceea ce a făcut bine și ce trebuie îmbunătățit, ceea ce contribuie la dezvoltarea autonomiei și la autoreglarea învățării.Feedbackul constructiv are o valoare formativă majoră: el trebuie să fie specific, clar, motivant și orientat spre progres, nu doar spre evaluare. Într-un demers metodologic modern, profesorul folosește tehnologia pentru a:

- furniza feedback în timp real (prin platforme digitale);
- urmări evoluția fiecărui elev și a portofoliului personal de învățare;
- crea contexte de autoevaluare și reflecție (ex. chestionare online, rubrici vizuale, diagrame de progres);
- stimula colaborarea și învățarea prin joc, contribuind la crearea unui climat de învățare pozitiv și incluziv.

Integrarea tehnologiei în procesul educațional nu trebuie să substituie relația profesor–elev, ci să o îmbogățească. Profesorul devine ghid, facilitator și partener în procesul de descoperire, oferind un feedback empatic și personalizat, care încurajează efortul și perseverența, nu doar performanța.

Prin combinarea eficientă a instrumentelor digitale cu strategii de feedback constructiv, instruirea individualizată devine mai eficientă, mai motivantă și mai adaptată nevoilor reale ale copiilor din învățământul primar.

Proiectarea didactică personalizată

Conform Ghidului de implementare a curriculumului pentru învățământul primar, proiectarea didactică personalizată exprimă dreptul cadrului didactic de a lua decizii asupra modalităților optime pentru asigurarea calității procesului educațional la clasă. Aceasta implică proiectarea de lungă durată și scurtă durată, inclusiv proiecte zilnice și anuale, care să asigure parcursuri școlare individualizate în funcție de condiții și cerințe concrete.

Proiectarea didactică personalizată reprezintă procesul prin care cadrul didactic elaborează și adaptează activitățile de învățare în funcție de particularitățile individuale, ritmul și stilul de învățare al fiecărui elev. În contextul învățământului primar, acest demers are o importanță deosebită, întrucât perioada copilăriei mici este marcată de diferențe semnificative de dezvoltare cognitivă, emoțională și socială.Profesorul devine, astfel, un designer al învățării, care planifică nu doar conținuturi, ci și experiențe educaționale adaptate nevoilor diverse ale elevilor. Proiectarea personalizată se bazează pe o cunoaștere profundă a fiecărui copil – interese, aptitudini, dificultăți de învățare – și presupune o flexibilitate metodologică constantă.

Elementele esențiale ale unei proiectări didactice personalizate includ:

E1. Stabilirea obiectivelor diferențiate, raportate la potențialul fiecărui elev;

E2. Selectarea conținuturilor în funcție de nivelul elevului, de relevanța pentru viața reală și pentru contextul socio-cultural;

E3. Diversificarea strategiilor de predare, pentru a răspunde diferitelor stiluri de învățare (vizual, auditiv, kinestezic);

E4. Adaptarea evaluării, prin instrumente variate (observația sistematică, portofoliul, fișe individualizate, autoevaluarea elevului);

E5. Integrarea resurselor digitale care oferă posibilitatea de învățare personalizată și feedback imediat.

Proiectarea didactică personalizată contribuie la creșterea motivației pentru învățare, la formarea autonomiei elevului și la dezvoltarea competențelor-cheie, prin activități care respectă ritmul propriu al fiecăruia. În acest sens, profesorul nu este doar un transmițător de cunoștințe, ci un facilitator al dezvoltării individuale, care modelează parcursul educațional al fiecărui copil în funcție de potențialul său unic.

În concluzie, proiectarea didactică personalizată este fundamentul unei educații incluzive și centrate pe elev, susținând principiul echității și al șanselor egale de reușită pentru toți copiii, indiferent de ritmul sau stilul lor de învățare.

Proiectarea didactică personalizată se concretizează în planurile de învățare, care traduc nevoile, ritmul și potențialul fiecărui elev în obiective, activități și strategii adaptate nivelului său de dezvoltare

Planuri individualizate de învățare

Planul individualizat de învățare (P.I.I.) reprezintă un instrument pedagogic complex, elaborat de cadrul didactic pentru a răspunde nevoilor educaționale specifice ale fiecărui elev. El are la bază principiul educației centrate pe elev, conform căruia procesul de învățare trebuie adaptat particularităților de vârstă, ritmului propriu de învățare, intereselor și stilurilor cognitive ale copiilor.

În învățământul primar, planul individualizat de învățare este esențial pentru susținerea progresului fiecărui elev, fie că este vorba despre un copil cu dificultăți de învățare, fie despre unul cu performanțe deosebite. Elaborarea acestuia presupune o colaborare permanentă între profesor, elev și familie, iar uneori și cu alte persoane-resursă (consilier școlar, profesor de sprijin).

Etapele realizării unui plan individualizat de învățare:

1. Identificarea nevoilor de învățare – pe baza rezultatelor evaluărilor inițiale, a observațiilor sistematice și a dialogului cu elevul și părinții.
2. Stabilirea obiectivelor specifice – realiste, clare și măsurabile, orientate spre progres, nu spre performanță comparativă.
3. Selectarea conținuturilor și activităților – adaptate nivelului de dezvoltare al elevului, dar și centrate pe interesele acestuia.
4. Alegerea strategiilor și metodelor de lucru – diferențiate, interactive, care să încurajeze autonomia (jocuri de învățare, sarcini practice, resurse digitale).
5. Stabilirea modalităților de evaluare – prin instrumente flexibile (fișe de progres, portofoliu personal, autoevaluare, rubrici de apreciere).
6. Monitorizarea și ajustarea periodică – profesorul revizuiește P.I.I. în funcție de evoluția elevului și de rezultatele obținute.

Rolul planului individualizat de învățare:

R1. Susține progresul personal și învățarea semnificativă;

R2. Oferă profesorului un cadru clar pentru diferențierea activităților;

R3. Încurajează autoevaluarea și responsabilizarea elevului față de propriul parcurs educațional;

R4. Contribuie la crearea unui climat de acceptare și valorizare a diversității în clasă;

R5. Permite colaborarea între școală și familie, prin implicarea părinților în sprijinirea obiectivelor de învățare.

Planul individualizat de învățare și tehnologia educațională. Tehnologia modernă facilitează implementarea planurilor individualizate prin:

- platforme educaționale (Google Classroom, Kahoot, Wordwall, Nearpod) ce permit urmărirea progresului individual;
- aplicații de evaluare digitală cu feedback imediat;
- instrumente vizuale (grafice, diagrame de progres, portofolii digitale) care motivează elevul și îl ajută să conștientizeze propriile reușite.

Planurile individualizate de învățare nu sunt doar documente formale, ci instrumente vii de lucru, care reflectă filosofia educației incluzive și a învățării diferențiate. Prin intermediul lor, profesorul din învățământul primar devine facilitator al progresului personal, ghidând fiecare elev către descoperirea propriului potențial și cultivând încrederea în sine, autonomia și dorința de a învăța continuu.

Cercetare și rezultate

Pentru a evalua eficient strategiile de individualizare, am realizat o cercetare în Școala Gimnazială „Constantin Negreanu" Drobeta-Turnu Severin, la învățământul primar, implicând 100 de elevi și 5 profesori.

Cercetarea a urmărit să identifice impactul metodelor de predare individualizate asupra performanțelor școlare și a satisfacției elevilor.

Tabelul 2. Impactul metodelor de predare individualizate asupra performanțelor școlare și a satisfacției elevilor

Metodă de predare	Număr de elevi	Număr de elevi	Procente	Performanță inițială	Performanță finală	Satisfacție inițială	Satisfacție finală
Învățare prin descoperire	100	30	100 %	70%	85%	60%	80%
Învățare prin cooperare	100	25	100 %	65%	80%	55%	75%
Învățare bazată pe proiecte	100	20	100 %	75%	90%	70%	85%
Învățare clasică	100	25	100 %	60%	70%	50	60%

Rezultatele arată o creștere semnificativă a performanțelor și satisfacției elevilor care au beneficiat de metodele de predare individualizate.

Concluzii

Implementarea strategiilor de diferențiere și individualizare a învățării în învățământul primar este crucială pentru asigurarea succesului tuturor elevilor. Prin utilizarea metodelor variate de predare, integrarea tehnologiei și oferirea feedback-ului constructiv, profesorii pot crea un mediu educațional stimulant și inclusiv, care să încurajeze dezvoltarea personală și academică a elevilor.

Speech Therapist, Special school for children with hearing impairments and late deafness in Chișinău

Abstract: The article addresses the issue of research into language and communication development in students with hearing impairments. Theoretical research has allowed us to conclude that the possibilities for empowering children with hearing impairments have increased, but the issue of early, individualized, differentiated intervention tailored to the child's needs remains relevant. The observational experiment identified that students with hearing impairments show significant delays in language development, both in terms of receptive and expressive components. A speech therapy intervention model based on the principle of individualization and differentiation was developed and tested.

Actualitatea cercetării

În contextul evoluției societății contemporane spre un model educațional incluziv și adaptiv, problematica dezvoltării limbajului la elevii cu deficiență de auz capătă o relevanță deosebită. Comunicarea verbală rămâne principalul vehicul al integrării sociale, cognitive și afective, iar absența sau întârzierea acesteia determină consecințe majore asupra întregii structuri de personalitate a copilului. Din această perspectivă, intervenția logopedică nu mai poate fi privită doar ca un act reparatoriu, ci devine o strategie fundamentală de compensare, adaptare și optimizare a funcțiilor de comunicare. În prezent, avansul tehnologic în domeniul protezării auditive și al implanturilor cohleare a extins considerabil potențialul de abilitare a limbajului oral la copiii cu hipoacuzie. Cu toate acestea, simpla corectare sau amplificare a auzului nu garantează dezvoltarea spontană a limbajului. Este necesară o intervenție logopedică timpurie, sistematică și diferențiată, adaptată particularităților individuale și tipului de deficiență auditivă. Accentul se mută astfel de la simplele tehnici de corectare fonetică la programe complexe de stimulare cognitiv-lingvistică, de dezvoltare a conștiinței fonologice și a competențelor pragmatice. Actualitatea temei este susținută și de exigențele politicilor educaționale europene și internaționale, care promovează educația pentru toți și accesul echitabil la învățare. Din această perspectivă, logopedul nu mai este doar un terapeut al vorbirii, ci devine un arhitect al comunicării funcționale, lucrând în echipe multidisciplinare și colaborând activ cu profesorii, familia și specialiștii în tehnologii asistive. Prin urmare, tema cercetării nu doar că răspunde unei nevoi stringente de optimizare a intervenției educaționale pentru elevii cu deficiență de auz, dar propune și un cadru de explorare științifică necesar adaptării logopediei la noile paradigme ale educației incluzive și ale terapiei asistate de tehnologie.

Cu probleme psihopedagogice a copiilor cu deficiențe de auz s-a ocupat un șir de cercetători: M.D.Anca [1], C. Bodorin [2], M. Ciolac [3], M. Popa [4], A. Rozarea [5]. Însă problema dezvoltării limbajului la copiii cu deficienței de auz ramâne în umbra. Aceasta se explică prin influența mai multori factori: reformarea permanentă a sistemului educational cu ignorarea aplicării unor metode clasice, schimbările socio-economice la nivel international, impactul informatizării socieății, schimbarea valorilor moral-spirituale în societate inclusiv în familie, lipsa specialiștilor calificați.

Scopul cercetării constă în elaborarea și validarea experimentală a unui program logopedic de dezvoltare a limbajului și a competențelor de comunicare la elevii cu deficiență de auz bazat pe cercetarea limbajului și comunicării la acești copii.

Obiectivele cercetării:

- analiza literaturii de specialitate pe problema de cercetare;
- selectarea metodelor și tehnicilor de cercetare;
- aplicarea tehnicilor de evaluare;
- elaborarea și implementarea programului logopedic;
- analiza rezultatelor experimentale;
- formularea concluziilor și recomandărilor.

Descrierea subiecților: Cercetarea a fost efectuată în cadrul Școlii Speciale nr.12 pentru copii hipoacuzici și surditate tardivă din municipiul Chișinău pe un eșantion de 10 elevi cu deficiență de auz (surditate neurosenzorială bilaterală formă profundă) cu grad de dizabilitate accentuat și sever cu vârste cuprinse între 10-11 ani.

Experimentul de constatare

Scopul: evaluarea particularităților dezvoltării limbajului și comunicării la copiii cu deficiențe de auz.

Obiective:

1) Identificarea eșantionului;
2) Selectarea tehnicilor de evaluare;
3) Elaborarea modelului de evaluare a limbajului și comunicării la copiii cu deficiențe de auz;
4) Aplicarea modelului elaborat;
5) Analiza și interpretarea a datelor;
6) Concluzii la experimentul de constatatare.

Ipoteza cercetării

Presupunem că există particularități individual – tipologice la copiii cu deficiențe de auz privind dezvoltarea limbajului și a comunicării și depinde de terapia specializată și participarea familiei.

Elaborarea modelului de evaluarea psihopedagogică a constituit din câteva tehnici de evaluare: 1) Proba pentru cunoașterea vârstei psihologice a limbajului după ,,A. Descoeudress,, 2) Evaluarea dezvoltării lexicului după Г.А. Волкова и Л.П. Носкова; 3) Evalurea dezvoltării abilităților de comunicare după Е. О. Смирнова, В.М. Холмогорова.

Analiza și interpretarea rezultatelor.

Prezentăm rezultatele obținute la Proba pentru cunoașterea vârstei psihologice a limbajului după “A. Descoeudress”. Rezultatele cercetării prezentăm în tabelul 1.

Tabelul 1: Compararea rezultatelor a vârstei cronologice cu vârsta psihologică a limbajului după „Alice Descoeudress”

N.P	Proba I	Proba II	Proba III	Proba IV	Proba V	Proba VI	Proba VII	Vârsta psihologică a limbajului	Vârsta cronologică
B.M	8	8	5	6	8	9	8	6 ani	10 ani
C.A	7	7	4	3	5	7	7	5 ani	11 ani
G.D	9	5	3	3	4	5	5	5 ani	10 ani
M.I	6	7	4	4	4	4	4	5 ani	10 ani

Ș.K	7	7	4	3	5	6	6	5 ani	11 ani
N.M	8	7	5	5	7	10	9	6,1 ani	11 ani

Conform rezultatelor obținute în tabelul 1, se constată o discrepanță între vârsta psihologică a limbajului și vârsta cronologică, ceea ce indică o întârziere în dezvoltarea limbajului față de nivelul așteptat pentru vârsta reală a copilului.

Pe baza rezultatelor obținute, am analizat dezvoltarea limbajului prin prisma componenței lexicale, utilizând tehnica „Evaluarea dezvoltării lexicului” după Г.А. Волкова și Л.П. Носкова. Rezultatele cercetării prezentăm pe blocuri. În blocul a fost realizată evaluarea nivelului dezvoltării vocabularului pasiv. Datele prezentăm în tabelul 2.

Conform rezultatelor obținute în tabelul 2 din 10 copiii 7 au manifestat nivelul inferior (70%) și 3 copii mediu (30%).

În continuare prezentăm rezultatele conform blocului II, dezvoltarea vocabularului activ. Rezultatele obținute prezentăm în figura 1.

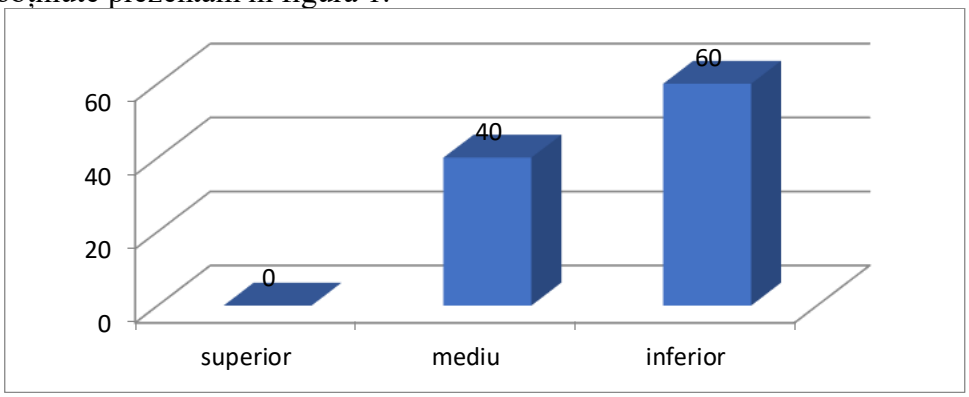

Fig.1. Compararea rezultatelor privind cercetarea vocabularului activ la copii examinați Datele obținute în figura 1. au constatat că din 10 copiii 4 copii (40%) au manifestat nivelul mediu și inferior 6 copii (60%).

În continuare prezentăm rezultate obținute privind dezvoltarea lexicului. Rezultate obținute prezentăm în figura 2.

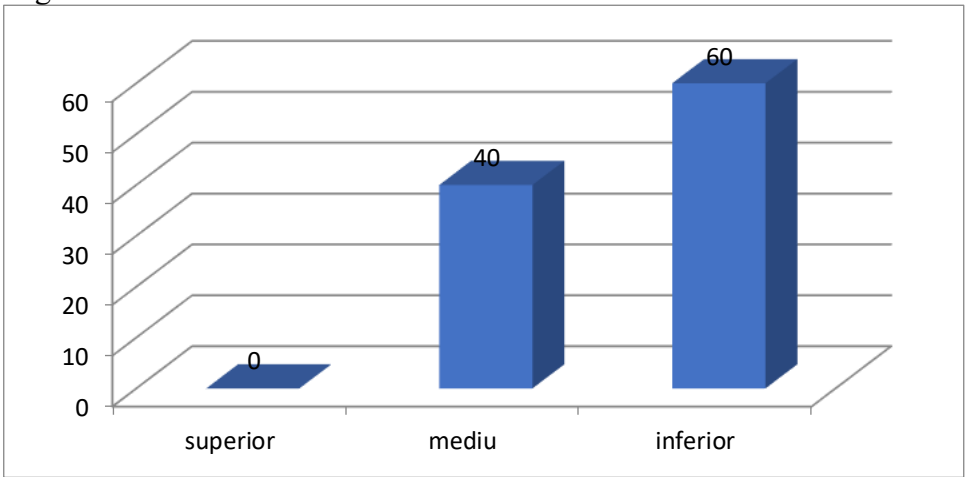

Fig.2. Compararea rezultatelor privind dezvoltărea lexicului la copiii cu deficiențe de auz

Analiza datelor obținute in Figura 2 în urma aplicării probei a evidențiat că nivelul mediu de dezvoltare a limbajului a fost atins de doar patru copii (40 %). Aceștia prezentau un vocabular activ redus, iar în limbajul lor nu s-au regăsit adjective. De asemenea, au fost observate agramatisme și dificultăți în utilizarea corectă a îmbinărilor de cuvinte. La șase copii (60 %) s-a înregistrat un nivel inferior de dezvoltare a limbajului. Aceștia nu au reușit să denumească majoritatea cuvintelor propuse, vocabularul lor activ fiind foarte sărac. Au folosit cuvintele în mod incorect, fără a respecta semnificația acestora. Totodată, s-au remarcat tulburări de pronunție, utilizarea incorectă a îmbinărilor de cuvinte și prezența frecventă a agramatismelor. Înțelegerea semnificației cuvintelor s-a dovedit a fi deficitară. Toate aceste aspecte ne conduc la concluzia că vocabularul activ al elevilor cu deficiențe de auz este considerabil limitat. Limbajul receptiv (impresiv) predomină asupra celui expresiv, iar copiii întâmpină dificultăți în înțelegerea sensului cuvintelor cu care interacționează în mod constant în mediul înconjurător. În concluzie, analizând particularitățile vocabularului la elevii cu deficiențe de auz, se poate afirma că acesta se situează, în general, la un nivel inferior de dezvoltare comparativ cu normele tipice de vârstă.

În continuare, vom prezenta rezultatele referitoare la dezvoltarea comunicării la elevi cu deficiențe de auz. Studiul a fost realizat prin aplicarea tehnicii „Evaluarea dezvoltării abilităților de comunicare” elaborată de Е. О. Смирнова și В. М. Холмогорова. Scopul tehnicii: evaluarea conținutul comunicării cu semenii săi cu deficiențe de auz.

Primul parametru analizat în cadrul cercetării a fost manifestarea inițiativei în comunicare. Rezultatele obținute sunt prezentate în tabelul 3.

Tabelul 3: Compararea rezultatelor referitor la dezvoltarea inițiativei după „Evalurea dezvoltării abilităților de comunicare după E. O. Смирнова, B.M. Холмогорова”

Nr.	N.P.	Activitatea nereglementată	Activitatea reglementată

7	P.D	inferior	Inferior
8	R.D.	mediu	Inferior
9	Ș.K	mediu	Inferior
10	N.M	mediu	Mediu

Analiza datelor arată că, în ceea ce privește activitatea nereglementată, majoritatea elevilor cu deficiențe de auz (6 din 10) manifestă un nivel mediu de inițiativă în comunicare, iar doar 4 copii se situează la un nivel inferior. În activitățile reglementate, situația este și mai pronunțată: doar 2 copii au demonstrat un nivel mediu, în timp ce 8 copii au manifestat un nivel inferior. Aceste rezultate indică dificultăți semnificative în exprimarea liberă și în inițierea interacțiunilor, mai ales în contexte structurate, unde este necesară respectarea regulilor și asumarea unor sarcini.

În continuare următorul parametru care a fost studiat în această tehnică este sensibilitatea. Rezultatele cercetării prezentăm în tabelul 4.

Tabelul 4: Compararea rezultatelor referitor la dezvoltarea sensibilității după „Evalurea dezvoltării abilităților de comunicare după E. O. Смирнова, B.M. Холмогорова”

10	N.M	superior	Mediu

Rezultatele cercetării prezentate în tabelul 3 reflectă nivelul de dezvoltare a sensibilității la elevii cu deficiențe de auz, în două contexte diferite: activitate nereglementată (liberă) și activitate reglementată (organizat-structurată).

În ceea ce privește activitatea nereglementată, 2 copii au manifestat un nivel superior de sensibilitate, 4 copii s-au situat la un nivel mediu, 4 copii au prezentat un nivel inferior.

În cadrul activității reglementate, niciun copil nu a atins nivelul superior, 6 copii au obținut un nivel mediu, 4 copii au rămas la un nivel inferior.

Se observă că activitatea nereglementată favorizează exprimarea sensibilității la o parte dintre copii, doi dintre aceștia atingând chiar nivelul superior, în timp ce în activitățile reglementate nu s-au înregistrat astfel de rezultate. Acest fapt poate sugera că presiunea cadrului structurat sau necesitatea respectării unor reguli limitează spontaneitatea și exprimarea emoțională a copiilor cu deficiențe de auz. De asemenea, o proporție semnificativă a copiilor se situează la niveluri medii și inferioare, ceea ce indică dificultăți în recunoașterea și exprimarea propriilor emoții, dar și în receptarea stărilor emoționale ale celor din jur. Această tendință evidențiază nevoia de intervenție educațională și emoțională, care să sprijine dezvoltarea empatiei și a sensibilității sociale în rândul copiilor cu deficiențe de auz.

În continuare prezentăm date privind particularitățile dezvoltării limbajului receptiv. Rezultatele prezentăm în tabelul 5.

Tabelul 5: Rezultate comparative privind dezvoltarea limbajului receptiv la copiii examinați

7	P.D	inferior	inferior
8	R.D.	mediu	inferior
9	Ș.K	mediu	inferior
10	N.M	mediu	mediu

Datele prezentate în tabelul 5 reflectă nivelul dezvoltării limbajului receptiv la elevi cu deficiențe de auz, în contexte de activitate nereglementată și reglementată. În activitatea nereglementată, 5 copii au demonstrat un nivel mediu de dezvoltare a limbajului receptiv, iar 5 copii s-au situat la nivel inferior. În activitatea reglementată, doar 3 copii au menținut un nivel mediu, în timp ce 7 copii au înregistrat un nivel inferior, indicând dificultăți sporite într-un cadru structurat. Majoritatea copiilor evaluați prezintă un nivel redus de dezvoltare a limbajului receptiv, mai ales în situațiile organizate, unde cerințele de înțelegere și răspuns sunt mai clare și mai structurate. Această tendință evidențiază necesitatea unor intervenții specifice și adaptate, care să sprijine dezvoltarea capacităților de înțelegere a mesajului verbal în diferite contexte educaționale.

În continuare prezentăm rezultatele privind aplicarea surselor verbale. Rezultatele cercetării prezentăm în tabelul 6.

Tabelul 6: Rezultatele comparative privind aplicarea surselor verbale la copiii examinați

Nr.	N.P.	Activitatea nereglementată	Activitatea reglementată

7	P.D	Inferior	inferior
8	R.D.	Inferior	inferior
9	Ș.K	Mediu	inferior
10	N.M	Mediu	mediu

Rezultatele din Tabelul 6 evidențiază nivelul de utilizare a surselor verbale (cuvinte, expresii, propoziții) de către copiii evaluați, în contexte de activitate nereglementată și reglementată. În activitatea nereglementată, 4 copii au atins un nivel mediu de utilizare a surselor verbale, iar ceilalți 6 s-au situat la un nivel inferior. În activitatea reglementată, doar 2 copii au menținut un nivel mediu, în timp ce 8 copii au avut rezultate inferioare. Datele arată că majoritatea copiilor întâmpină dificultăți în utilizarea adecvată a surselor verbale. Această tendință evidențiază o dezvoltare limitată a limbajului expresiv și o dependență crescută de contexte libere pentru a se exprima verbal. Copii folosesc alte mijloace de comunicare, cum ar fi limbajul dactil și limbajul mimico-gestual și foarte rar verbal. Nivel superior nu a demonstrat nici un copil.

Datele despre aplicarea surselor de comunicare non verbale (expresiv-mimice) prezentăm în tabelul 7.

Tabelul 7: Rezultate comparative privind folosirea surselor expresiv- mimice la copiii examinați

7	P.D	mediu	mediu
8	R.D.	superior	mediu
9	Ș.K	superior	superior
10	N.M	superior	superior

Datele din tabelul 7 arată că majoritatea copiilor examinați folosesc în mod activ sursele nonverbale de comunicare, în special în activitățile nereglementate: în activitatea nereglementată, 5 copii au demonstrat un nivel superior de utilizare a mijloacelor expresiv-mimice, 3 s-au situat la nivel mediu, iar 2 – la nivel inferior. În activitatea reglementată, majoritatea copiilor (6) s-au încadrat la nivel mediu, 3 la nivel superior, iar doar 1 copil a rămas la nivel inferior. Copiii cu deficiențe de auz folosesc mai eficient comunicarea nonverbală în contexte libere, ceea ce confirmă importanța expresivității mimico-gestuale în interacțiunile lor. Comunicarea expresiv-mimică reprezintă o resursă valoroasă, mai ales când limbajul verbal este limitat.

În urma realizării experimentului de constatare au fost trasate următoarele: elevii cu deficiență de auz prezintă întârzieri semnificative în dezvoltarea limbajului, atât sub aspectul componentelor receptive cât și al celor expresive. Evaluarea vârstei psihologice a limbajului, realizată prin tehnica „Alice Descoeudress", a evidențiat discrepanțe considerabile între vârsta cronologică și cea psiholingvistică, situată cu 4–6 ani sub nivelul așteptat. Această întârziere indică un decalaj în formarea structurilor lingvistice fundamentale și în dobândirea lexicului de bază. Rezultatele obținute prin evaluarea vocabularului, atât pasiv, cât și activ (conform metodologiei Волкова și Носкова), arată că 60% dintre copiii incluși în studiu se încadrează la un nivel inferior de dezvoltare lexicală, caracterizat printr-un vocabular limitat, dificultăți în denumirea obiectelor comune, confuzii semantice, frecvență ridicată a agramatismelor și o înțelegere slabă a semnificației cuvintelor. Doar 40% dintre elevi au atins un nivel mediu, iar niciunul nu s-a încadrat la un nivel superior. De asemenea, în ceea ce privește dezvoltarea abilităților de comunicare, rezultatele arată deficiențe clare în exprimarea inițiativei și în receptivitatea față de interlocutori. Majoritatea elevilor manifestă dificultăți accentuate în contextul activităților reglementate, ceea ce denotă o capacitate scăzută de adaptare în situații structurate de interacțiune verbală sau socială. Comunicarea este deseori realizată cu ajutorul sursele nonverbale (mimică, gesturi, acțiuni cu obiecte), iar sursele verbale (limbaj oral, scris sau dactil) sunt utilizate incomplet sau incorect. Absența unui suport educațional și logopedic sistematic contribuie la menținerea unui decalaj accentuat între nivelul lingvistic al copiilor cu deficiență de auz și cel al copiilor tipici. Pentru a reduce acest decalaj și a stimula dezvoltarea armonioasă a limbajului și a comunicării, este necesară implementarea unor programe individualizate de intervenție logopedică, adaptate nevoilor fiecărui copil, precum și consolidarea cooperării dintre specialiști, cadre didactice și părinți.

Elaborarea programului formativ.

Scopul: Dezvoltarea limbajului și comunicării la copii cu deficiențe de auz

Obiective:

1. Elaborarea programului formativ;
2. Aplicarea programului formativ.

Ipoteza experimentului formativ: presupunem că elaborarea programului formativ va spori dezvoltarea limbajului și comunicării la preșcolarii cu deficiențe de auz.

Adaptări ale mediului pentru sprijinirea elevilor cu deficiență de auz

- Amenajăm sala de clasă astfel încât toți elevii să aibă vizibilitate bună: alegem cu grijă locul în bancă, ne asigurăm că sala este bine iluminată, iar tabla este curată, evitând astfel suprasolicitarea vizuală.
- Înainte de a vă adresa unui elev cu deficiență de auz, captați-i atenția și poziționați-vă în câmpul său vizual.
- Puteți atrage atenția printr-o atingere ușoară pe umăr sau braț ori printr-o bătaie ușoară din picior (dacă podeaua transmite vibrații).
- Mențineți contactul vizual, stând jos, la nivelul elevilor, la o distanță optimă de aproximativ 1–1,5 metri.
- Asigurați-vă că fața vă este bine luminată, neacoperită de obiecte sau mâini.
- Când vorbiți, întoarceți-vă spre copii și evitați să vorbiți în timp ce scrieți la tablă.
- Nu stați cu spatele la surse puternice de lumină (ex: fereastra), pentru a nu crea umbre care pot îngreuna lectura de pe buze.
- Mișcările ample sau frecvente pot distrage atenția – păstrați o postură cât mai stabilă.
- Sprijiniți mesajul verbal cu informații scrise, afișate la tablă ori în materiale vizuale.
- Vorbiți clar, într-un ritm natural, evitând exagerările sau vorbitul prea rar ori prea repede; nu este necesar să strigați.
- Folosiți gesturi simple și expresii faciale naturale pentru a însoți comunicarea verbală, dar fără teatralizare excesivă.
- Reduceți zgomotele de fond și evitați sunetele parazite (cum ar fi „mmm”, „aaa”, tușitul frecvent).
- Formulați propoziții scurte și clare – mesajele prea lungi pot fi dificil de înțeles.
- Mențineți coerența în comunicare: nu schimbați brusc subiectul, poziția sau activitatea în timp ce vorbiți.
- Încurajați elevii prin feedback pozitiv și încurajări precum: „Bravo!”, „Foarte bine, ai reușit!”.

Recomandări pentru logopezi în activitate cu copii cu deficiență de auz

- Organizarea spațiului logopedic: Asigurați un spațiu de lucru liniștit, cu iluminare bună și minim de stimuli vizuali. Poziționați copilul astfel încât să aibă contact vizual permanent cu terapeutul.
- Poziționarea în cabinet: Stați la nivelul copilului, la o distanță de aproximativ 1–1,5 metri, față în față. Evitați să vă plimbați în timpul exercițiilor, pentru a menține contactul vizual și a facilita lectura de pe buze.
- Captarea atenției: Înainte de a începe un exercițiu sau o activitate, asigurați-vă că aveți atenția copilului. Puteți atinge ușor brațul copilului sau creați un semnal clar și constant care să indice începutul unei interacțiuni.
- Expresivitate și comunicare non-verbală: Folosiți gesturi simple, expresii faciale clare și naturale pentru a sprijini înțelegerea mesajului verbal. Acestea sunt esențiale în dezvoltarea comunicării.
- Articulare clară și ritm adaptat: Vorbiți clar, într-un ritm natural, evitând vorbitul exagerat sau lent. Nu este nevoie să ridicați vocea, ci să accentuați articularea fără distorsiuni.
- Sprijin vizual: Utilizați materiale vizuale (imagini, pictograme, obiecte reale) și dublați verbalul cu suport scris. Exercițiile trebuie să fie însoțite de exemple vizuale și activități concrete.
- Structura și coerența activităților: Oferiți mesaje scurte, clare și structurate. Evitați schimbările bruște de activitate sau temă. Mențineți o rutină recognoscibilă în timpul ședințelor.
- Reducerea factorilor perturbatori: Evitați zgomotele bruște, vibrațiile sau sunetele de fundal care pot distrage copilul. Mențineți o atmosferă calmă și predictibilă.
- Adaptarea exercițiilor: Exercițiile logopedice trebuie să fie adaptate nevoilor auditive ale copilului. Folosiți oglinzi pentru a sprijini autocontrolul articulator și sprijiniți citirea labială atunci când este necesar.

Adaptări psihopedagogice:

- Propunerea de sarcini individualizate, diferențiate în funcție de nivelul de înțelegere și ritmul fiecărui copil;
- Activități care implică: sublinierea, încercuirea, evidențierea, bifarea, desenarea sau asocierea elementelor esențiale;
- Utilizarea unor instrucțiuni clare, scurte și adaptate, care pot fi repetate sau reformulate pentru o mai bună înțelegere;
- Prezentarea instrucțiunilor în pași succesivi, sub forma unui algoritm simplu;
- Fragmentarea sarcinilor complexe în pași mai mici și mai ușor de gestionat;
- Lecturi asistate de materiale vizuale precum imagini, tabele, diagrame sau pictograme, care să sprijine înțelegerea textului;
- Utilizarea indicatorilor gestuali sau vizuali pentru ghidarea atenției și înțelegerii;
- Furnizarea de rezumate, scheme logice sau planuri ale lecției sau textului analizat;
- Exersarea unor tehnici de organizare vizuală a conținutului: întrebări-reper, cuvinte-cheie, liste de verificare, modele vizuale, imagini, hărți conceptuale, grafice etc.

Adaptări privind evaluarea:

- Elaborarea de teste adaptate nevoilor individuale ale elevului;
- Alocarea unui timp suplimentar pentru rezolvarea probelor;
- Reamintirea clară a cerințelor și condițiilor pentru realizarea sarcinii de evaluare;
- Oferirea posibilității de a răspunde oral sau în scris, în funcție de nevoile și potențialul elevului.

Conținutul programului formativ:

Lucrul cu „Vocabularul”.

Obiectiv general: dezvoltarea vocabularului la elevii cu deficiență de auz printr-o abordare multisenzorială.

Etapele activității: introducerea cuvântului, învățarea semnului mimico-gestual, dactilografia cuvântului, exerciții de labiolectură, exerciții de percepție auditivă, consolidarea cunoștințelor, evaluarea); Lucrul cu „Calendarul Naturii”.

Obiectiv general: dezvoltarea abilităților de comunicare și înțelegere a conceptelor de timp la elevii cu deficiență de auz, prin utilizarea „Calendarului Naturii”.

Etapele activității: introducerea activității, identificarea zilei și datei, asocierea zilei cu activitățile zilnice, învățarea semnelor mimico-gestuale, recunoașterea fenomenelor naturale, concluzionarea activității, evaluare și recomandări.

Dezvoltarea percepției auditive.

Obiectiv general: dezvoltarea percepției auditive și a vocabularului la elevii cu deficiență de auz prin recunoașterea și asocierea sunetelor emise.

Etapele activității: introducerea activității, ascultarea sunetelor, asocierea sunetului cu imaginea, concluzionarea activității, evaluare și recomandări.

Alcătuirea propozițiilor.

Obiectiv general: dezvoltarea abilității de a construi propoziții corecte și coerente la elevii cu deficiență de auz, prin utilizarea unui vocabular familiar și a unor structuri gramaticale simple.

Etapele activității: introducerea activității, explicarea structurii propoziției, activitatea practică, concluzionarea activității, evaluare.

„Joc de rol”

Obiectiv general: Dezvoltarea abilităților de comunicare la elevii cu deficiență de auz, prin utilizarea vocabularului exersat, limbajului semnelor, mimică și gesturi.

Desfășurarea jocului

- Crearea unor scenarii simple (ex: „la magazin”, „la școală”) în care elevii să folosească materialul verbal exersat, semnele învățate.
- Încurajarea elevilor să comunice între ei folosind diverse mijloace de comunicare.

Verificarea eficacității programului elaborat.

Verificarea programului elaborat am realizat prin aplicarea tehnicii Evaluarea dezvoltării lexicului după Г.А. Волкова и Л.П. Носкова la copii cu deficiențe de auz. Rezultatele evaluării prezentăm în tabelul 8.

Tabelul 8: Compararea rezultatelor dintre grup experimental și cel de control privind dezvoltarea vocabularului pasiv conform blocului I la copiii cu deficiență auditivă

În baza tabelului 8, putem realiza o analiză comparativă a rezultatelor obținute de către grupul experimental și cel de control în ceea ce privește dezvoltarea vocabularului pasiv (blocul I) la copiii cu deficiență auditivă. Se observă o diferență pozitivă în favoarea grupului experimental, ceea ce indică un progres mai evident în dezvoltarea vocabularului pasiv pentru acest grup. Rezultatele sugerează că intervențiile aplicate în cadrul grupului experimental au avut un impact pozitiv asupra dezvoltării vocabularului pasiv. Această concluzie este susținută atât de creșterea mediei punctajelor, cât și de distribuția mai favorabilă a nivelurilor de performanță.

În continuare prezentăm rezultate comparative dintre grup experimental și date din experimentul de constatare în tabelul 9.

Pe baza Tabelului 9, se poate realiza o analiză comparativă între rezultatele grupului experimental și ale experimentului de constatare privind dezvoltarea vocabularului pasiv – blocul I la copiii cu deficiență auditivă. Rezultatele evidențiază faptul că, deși la nivelul punctajelor individuale au existat fluctuații (atât creșteri, cât și scăderi), în ansamblu, intervenția aplicată în cadrul grupului experimental a avut un efect pozitiv asupra dezvoltării vocabularului pasiv la copiii cu deficiență auditivă. Acest lucru este susținut de scăderea numărului de copii încadrați la nivelul inferior și creșterea ponderii celor la nivelul mediu, ceea ce sugerează o îmbunătățire generală a performanței lingvistice în urma ARL-ului.

Concluzii:

Problema dezvoltării limbajului la copiii cu deficiență de auz permanent se află în centru atenției specialiștilor de niște ani. Necătând că există posibilitățile mai vaste în domeniul abilitării copiilor cu deficiențe de auz ori cum este nevoie de o intervenție logopedică timpurie, sistematică și diferențiată, adaptată particularităților individuale și tipului de deficiență auditivă. Cercetarea teoretică ne-a permis să constatăm puține lucrări în domeniu cercetării limbajului și comunicării la copiii cu deficienței de auz.

În urma realizării experimentului constatativ am identificat că: elevii cu deficiență de auz prezintă întârzieri semnificative în dezvoltarea limbajului, atât sub aspectul componentelor receptive cât și al celor expresive; rezultatele obținute prin evaluarea vocabularului, atât pasiv, cât și activ, arată că majoritatea copiilor incluși în studiu se încadrează la un nivel inferior de dezvoltare lexicală, caracterizat printr-un vocabular limitat, dificultăți în denumirea obiectelor comune, confuzii semantice, frecvență ridicată a agramatismelor și o înțelegere slabă a semnificației cuvintelor. dezvoltarea abilităților de comunicare, rezultatele arată deficiențe clare în exprimarea inițiativei și în receptivitatea față de interlocutori. Majoritatea elevilor manifestă dificultăți accentuate în contextul activităților reglementate, ceea ce denotă o capacitate scăzută de adaptare în situații structurate de interacțiune verbală sau socială. Comunicarea este deseori realizată cu ajutorul sursele nonverbale (mimică, gesturi, acțiuni cu obiecte), iar sursele verbale (limbaj oral, scris sau dactil) sunt utilizate incomplet sau incorect.

În urmă desfășurării experimentului formativ am abordat aspectele teoretice și aplicative ale intervenției logopedice la copiii cu deficiență de auz, punând un accent deosebit pe elaborarea și testarea unui program formativ destinat dezvoltării limbajului și comunicării. Scopul general al intervenției – îmbunătățirea competențelor lingvistice și comunicative – a fost operaționalizat printr-un set coerent de obiective specifice și activități structurale, care au integrat metode multisenzoriale, adaptări psihopedagogice și tehnici vizuale, gestuale și auditive.
Ipotezele cercetării au fost confirmate.

IMPROVING STUDENTS' NOTE-TAKING SKILLS WITH THE CORNELL METHOD

Andreea Iliescu
Senior Lecturer, PhD, University of Craiova

Abstract*: The paper is aimed at underlining how relevant students' note-taking skills are to their academic progress. In view of this, introducing students to the Cornell note-taking method translates into a meaningful effort to raise their awareness of the cognitive benefits that both handwriting and an effective information encoding system can produce. Also, the paper emphasizes that the efficacy of the Cornell method is built on the 5Rs: record, reduce, recite, reflect, and review information.

1. Premises

We firmly believe that note-taking skills are pivotal to students' academic progress. A successful note-taking method most certainly engages students in the presentation of whatever topic, enabling them to not merely jot down new information in a rather linear fashion, but to also actively listen to a host of explanations, quick on determining what truly fits the note-taking area as main ideas and, by contrast, what should be omitted as mere details.

Furthermore, in our view, the central role that students' note-taking skills play within the academic setting should be reinforced by sustained efforts to raise their awareness in regard to it. To this purpose, we think that it is particularly beneficial to students to keep cultivating the habit of notetaking, especially by handwriting. Additionally, if coupled with a well-devised method like the Cornell system, students' academic performance is likely to improve rapidly.

In reference to the Cornell note-taking method, we also maintain that it is aimed at facilitating students' thorough understanding of their lecture/reading resources by shifting the focus from a passive note-taking manner to an active, alert process of taking notes while also actively listening to the material and critically thinking of it. Along the same lines, the method in question requires students to stay focused throughout their entire lecture so that they can pick out the main ideas, the facts, dates, names, examples, formulas with short sentences and abbreviations, thereby making dense information understandable at a glance.

2. The Structure of the Cornell Note-Taking Method

The structured approach of the Cornell method traces its intellectual lineage to Cornell University in the 1950s, where it was pioneered by education professor, Walter Pauk.

Students are to be instructed that the Cornell format is very specific, but straightforward. It uses a page layout that they can create by using these three steps: a) they can use a full-sized piece of paper and allow plenty of space, so that their notes don't become fragmented and disorderly; b) they will divide the page into two portions by drawing a line down the page, roughly 6 cm from the left margin. This is the cue column, where they'll add prompts to highlight important parts of their notes. On the right of the page is the note-taking column, where they write their notes or comments; c) around 5 cm from the bottom of the page, they have to draw a horizontal line; this creates their summary section, where they recap their notes.[1]

3. The Cornell Note Template in Business English Classes

How does the Cornell note-taking method/system (CNTS) fit into a business English class? To our mind, instructing students how to use CNTS during business English classes may improve their comprehension skills, particularly in terms of texts. It's widely acknowledged the fact that the CNTS increases academic efficacy of both lecture materials and reading topics. In the same vein, we hold the view that the CNTS may lend business English studies a more structured perspective, while also redefining students' premises for deep comprehension.

Besides, we think that, if business English students choose to integrate the CNTS template into their study kit, they will definitely make a deliberate effort to recognize continuity and relationships between topics.

The foundational structure of the system lies in its three essential sections: 1) main notes area (the input) - the largest, right-hand section, dedicated to recording the lecture content; 2) cue column /recall section (the catalyst) - the narrow, left-hand section used for processing the recorded material into retrieval prompts; 3) summary section (the output) - the bottom margin reserved for synthesizing the entire page's content.

This format provides the perfect opportunity for following through with the 5 Rs of note- taking: a) 'record - during the lecture' students should 'record as many meaningful facts and ideas' as they can 'in the Note-Taking Area'; b) 'reduce - as soon as possible after the lecture', business English students should 'summarize these facts and ideas concisely in the Cue Column. Summarizing clarifies meanings and relationships, reinforces continuity, and strengthens memory'; c) 'recite' - students are instructed to 'cover the Note-Taking Area and, using only' their 'Cue Column to talk over the facts and ideas of the lecture as fully as' they 'can in' their 'own words.' d) 'reflect'- students should also 'draw out opinions from' their 'notes and use them as a starting point for' their 'own reflections on the course and how they relate to' their 'other courses. Reflection will help prevent ideas from being inert and soon forgotten.' e) 'review' - students should 'spend at least 10 minutes every week in quick review of all' their 'notes, and' they 'will retain most of what' they 'have learned.'[2]

4. The 5 Rs of Notetaking

The structured layout, when utilized correctly, is documented to result in students achieving up to 23% higher test scores. This significant performance increase confirms that the prescribed structure and procedural mechanism (the 5 Rs) inherently transform passive reception of material into an active learning task. This transformation, shifting the learner from being a receiver of information to an active processor is necessary for effective knowledge consolidation.

The efficacy of the Cornell method is derived not from its static format, but from the dynamic procedural cycle known as the 5 Rs. This process aligns directly with principles of self-regulated learning, moving the student through stages of encoding, abstraction, retrieval, integration, and systematic review.

The 5 Rs' Step	Timing	Primary Cognitive Function	Educational Benefit (Retention)
1.Record	During Lecture/Reading	Attention, Encoding, Selection	Capturing initial facts and ideas
2.Reduce	Immediately after Class	Summarization, Abstraction, Prioritization	Creating concise recall cues (e.g., questions/keywords)
3. Recite	Soon after Reduction	Retrieval Practice, Self-Testing	Solidifying memory pathways and active recall
4. Reflect	Within One Week	Association, Connection-Making, Synthesis	Integrating new material with existing schema
5. Review	Scheduled Repetition	Spaced Retrieval, Overlearning	Combating the 'expiration date' of knowledge

R1: recording (the encoding phase). The initial step focuses on capturing information efficiently. Consequently, students should record as many meaningful facts and ideas as possible in the Note-Taking Area during the lecture, or when reading. Additionally, instructional emphasis is to be placed on using short, concise sentences alongside abbreviations and symbols to maximize both the speed and efficiency of data recording. All this leads to the bulk of the content being encoded before students moving into deeper processing.

R2: reducing (the abstraction phase). Reduction implies summarizing all recorded information in students' own words. This step should be taken soon after class in order to maintain the accuracy of information and to work short-term memory, too. Beyond a shadow of a doubt, the essential cognitive action here is distillation: students are instructed to avoid transcription and instead give prevalence to simplification, keeping the summary as simple as possible. The output of the reduction phase is the concise jotting of cues - keywords, vocabulary, and primary questions- into the cue column. Research shows that, if a student struggles significantly to reduce the information, this represents an immediate diagnostic indicator that the material was not fully comprehended during the recording phase.

R3: reciting (the retrieval practice phase). The reciting stage directly addresses the testing effect, scientifically proved to strengthen memory traces more effectively than passive re-reading. In short, the action translates into the student's covering the main notes area and using the cues in the cue column to self-test. Along the same lines, by generating and answering questions using the prepared prompts, students actively engage in retrieval practice, thereby solidifying memory pathways.

R4: reflecting (the schema integration phase). Reflection is the step that moves learning into higher-order cognitive area. This process involves deliberately associating the knowledge acquired recently with the already existing structures. In a nutshell, reflection stands for efforts to integrate the new material into students' long-term memory schema. Equally, this deliberate effort to acknowledge continuity and relationship between topics transforms disparate facts into cohesive, interconnected understanding, a critical marker of deep learning.

R5: reviewing (the spaced repetition phase). The final step addresses the transient nature of memory, recognizing that students are likely to forget information without reinforcement. By the same token, this action requires systematically reviewing the notes for an allotted amount of time, from 15 to 20 minutes, on a scheduled basis.

We outline that students can retain more information, increase understanding, and improve their overall study skills by choosing to follow the 5 Rs.

5. Benefits of Using the Cornell Note Method

It's widely acknowledged that 'the Cornell note-taking system offers several benefits over just taking random notes during class:

a) enhanced organization and clarity - the Cornell system's structured format organizes' students' 'notes in a clear, easy-to-follow manner. With information divided into main notes, cues, and summaries', business English students 'can easily locate key concepts and details.

b) Improved focus and efficiency - by encouraging' students 'to jot down key points and questions in the cue column, the system ensures' business English students 'focus on the most important aspects of the material. This approach can save time and increase efficiency, as it keeps' them 'from getting bogged down in less relevant details.

c) Effective revision and memory retention - the summary section at the bottom of each page serves as a quick recap of the main ideas. This not only reinforces' students' understanding 'but also aids in retaining the information long-term.

d) Adaptability to different learning styles- the Cornell system is flexible and can be adapted to suit various learning preferences.

e) Facilitates active learning - unlike passive notetaking, the Cornell method involves active participation in the learning process. By writing cues and summaries,' students 'are not just recording information but processing and synthesizing it.'[3]

6. Conclusion

We are of the opinion that the Cornell note-taking method is the way-forward for both students new to handwriting their notes and for those willing to further develop their note-taking skills. Additionally, the Cornell note-taking method has over time proved to be of great help to students by equally making them able to practise their active listening skills, thus taking in more information, and by ensuring that students' preparation for their exams is also incrementally simplified thanks to the addition of the Cornell notes template to their primary study kit.

The Cornell note-taking method is therefore devised to ensure that students may undergo a shift from passive listeners, with a linear note-taking approach to active listeners, cognitively engaged in the process of distilling new information, coherently piecing together the backbone of any lecture/reading material and tracing its driving forces in order to further mould them into a long lasting knowledge scaffolding, while also fleshing them out to cement the necessary cohesion between distinct topics.

DIGITAL PEDAGOGY IN CONTEMPORARY EDUCATION: OPPORTUNITIES, CHALLENGES, AND STRATEGIC SOLUTIONS

Claudia Florina Pop
Lecturer, PhD, University of Oradea

Abstract: Digital pedagogy—the integration of pedagogical principles with digital tools and environments—offers substantial opportunities to improve access, personalize learning, and diversify instructional strategies, but it also carries risks related to equity, teacher readiness, and ethical use. This article reviews recent frameworks and policy analyses, synthesizes empirical findings on blended and digitally enhanced instruction, and reports a short exploratory survey of middle-school (gymnasium) teachers (N = 15) about their experiences, needs, and perceived solutions. Findings indicate that while teachers value the affordances of blended learning and adaptive technologies for engagement and differentiation, persistent barriers include limited professional development, infrastructure gaps, workload concerns, and ethical uncertainties (data privacy, bias).

The article concludes with practical, research-based recommendations for school leaders and policymakers: invest in sustained teacher professional development integrating pedagogical design (not only tools); prioritize equitable access and infrastructure; adopt transparent data and AI governance; and promote collaborative teacher networks that exchange evidence-informed digital lesson designs.

Keywords: digital pedagogy; blended learning; teacher professional development; educational equity; edtech governance

The rapid expansion of digital technologies in education during and after the COVID-19 pandemic transformed conversations about what counts as effective teaching and learning.

Policymakers, researchers, and practitioners ask not whether to use technology, but how to integrate it pedagogically—so that tools serve learning goals rather than driving them. Two recent comparative reports emphasize that technology can both improve learning quality and exacerbate inequities if adopted without clear pedagogical purpose or without attention to access and teacher support. (Ratiu, M.; Pele, A.V.; Bradea, A.; Pop, C.F., 2023)

The aim of this paper is threefold: (1) to synthesize contemporary frameworks and empirical findings on digital pedagogy and solutions for schools; (2) to present a short exploratory study of middle-school teachers' experiences and needs; and (3) to propose practical, evidence-aligned recommendations for educational stakeholders.

Digital pedagogy is not merely adding devices to classrooms; it is the deliberate design of learning processes that integrate digital affordances (e.g., interactivity, multimodal representation, adaptive practice, collaboration tools) with sound instructional principles. (Huang, R., Adarkwah, M., & Xu, L.,2024). Recent scholarship has proposed integrated frameworks that center learners, sustainability, and inclusion—moving beyond technology-first models toward pedagogy-led designs. For instance, the DP4SET (Digital Pedagogy for Sustainable Educational Transformation) framework highlights learner-centred design, alignment with the science of learning, and socio-ethical considerations as core elements. (UNESCO, 2023)

Global monitoring and policy documents stress two broad opportunity areas for digital pedagogy: improving instructional quality through personalization and practice opportunities, and increasing engagement by varying representations and collaboration modes. However, these same documents warn that technology is not a panacea and that effectiveness depends heavily on context, teacher competencies, and equitable access. (Pop, C.F., 2020)

A growing empirical literature on blended learning, adaptive systems, and digitally augmented instruction suggests several recurring findings:

- Blended learning often yields better student satisfaction and, in many cases, improved learning outcomes compared to fully online instruction—provided that teachers are prepared to design effective blends of synchronous, asynchronous, and face-to-face activities.

- Teacher professional development (PD) that targets digital pedagogical design, not just tool training, correlates with higher teacher self-efficacy and better classroom integration. Recent studies recommend long-term, practice-centered PD with collaborative learning among teachers.
- Policy and system readiness—including infrastructure, procurement, and governance—remain decisive. OECD analyses show that countries with coordinated digital education strategies and investment in teacher competencies are better able to gain learning benefits from technology.

These findings imply that solutions should pair technological investments with pedagogical redesign, teacher capacity building, and clear governance structures (privacy, equity, procurement). To ground the discussion, we conducted a small exploratory survey and brief follow-up interviews with a convenience sample of 15 middle-school teachers (gymnasium level, romanian school) between November and December 2025. Participants were recruited from three urban and suburban schools; subject areas included mathematics, languages, sciences, and social studies. The instrument combined a 10-item online questionnaire (Likert and multiple choice) and short semi-structured telephone interviews with 8 volunteers to deepen responses.

Survey domains: current digital tool use; perceived benefits; barriers to effective digital pedagogy; professional development experiences; top priorities for school leadership. Results are descriptive and exploratory; the sample is small and not representative, so findings should be interpreted cautiously as indicative rather than definitive.

Participant profile: N = 15; experience ranged from 3 to 28 years (mean ≈ 12 years). All participants reported using at least one learning management system (LMS) or digital platform (e.g., Google Classroom, Microsoft Teams) for assignment distribution and feedback.

Key quantitative findings (rounded):

- 87% (13/15) agreed or strongly agreed that digital tools increased student engagement.
- 73% (11/15) felt digital resources helped differentiate instruction for diverse learners.
- 60% (9/15) reported low to moderate confidence designing blended lesson sequences.
- 80% (12/15) identified lack of sustained PD as a primary barrier.
- 67% (10/15) reported infrastructure issues (intermittent connectivity, outdated devices) as recurring problems.
- 53% (8/15) expressed concerns about data privacy or ethical issues when using third-party apps.

Qualitative insights (from interviews):

- Teachers valued ready-to-use, pedagogically aligned digital resources (interactive simulations for science; formative quizzes with instant feedback for math). However, many said that one-off workshops on tools were insufficient; they preferred practice-based PD where they co-design lessons and receive coaching during implementation.
- Several teachers highlighted assessment challenges when combining online formative tasks with in-person summative assessments, noting a need for clear rubrics and alignment.
- Participants asked for school-level time allocation (planning time) to adapt and test digital lesson designs, and for communities of practice to share templates and experiences.

These results echo larger studies pointing to teacher PD and infrastructure as persistent barriers even where teachers recognize pedagogical benefits. The small study's findings align with the broader literature: teachers value the pedagogical affordances of digital tools but need systemic supports to translate potential into practice. Based on the literature and the exploratory data, practical solutions fall into four interrelated areas:

(1) Effective PD should focus on designing learning experiences that integrate digital affordances (e.g., adaptive practise, multimedia explanations, peer collaboration) with learning objectives. Best practices include iterative cycles (design-implement-reflect), coaching, and teacher collaboration. Policies should fund multi-session, practice-based programs rather than one-off tool demonstrations.

(2) Equipment and connectivity remain foundational. Investment policies must prioritize equitable access (devices for learners in need, robust school networks) and plan for sustainable device lifecycles and technical support. Global monitoring reports warn that technology without attention to equity can amplify disparities.
(3) Schools and districts should adopt clear policies for student data, third-party app procurement, and ethical AI use. Transparency about how learner data are used and mechanisms for parental consent and data minimization are essential. Emerging literature on AI in education emphasizes both potential benefits (adaptive feedback, time savings) and significant risks (bias, opacity).
(4) Digital pedagogy works best when digital activities are explicitly tied to curriculum standards and assessment practices. Teachers in the exploratory study noted the difficulty of aligning online formative activities with in-class summative assessments; design templates and shared rubrics can help bridge this gap.

Analyzing the data from our research, we can make several recommendations:

For school leaders:

1. Invest in sustained, practice-based PD that focuses on pedagogical design (not just tools). Facilitate peer coaching and lesson study for digital lesson design.
2. Allocate protected planning time for teachers to adapt and test digital lessons; create communities of practice to share resources and templates. (Study finding)

For policymakers and district administrators:

1. Prioritize equitable infrastructure funding and long-term maintenance plans. Ensure procurement emphasizes pedagogical suitability and data protection.
2. Create guidelines for ethical AI use in education (transparency, bias audits, human oversight).

For teacher educators and PD providers:

1. Design PD that embeds instructional design, classroom rehearsal, and reflective cycles; include co-planning and classroom coaching components.

This article's short study is exploratory with a small convenience sample (N = 15) and is not generalizable. Future research should use larger, stratified samples to examine how teacher readiness, subject area, and school context moderate the impact of digital pedagogies on student learning. Experimental or quasi-experimental designs could more rigorously evaluate specific blended models and PD programs. Finally, longitudinal studies are needed to assess sustainability and long-term effects on equity and learning outcomes

Conclusions

Digital pedagogy offers meaningful opportunities to personalize learning pathways, increase student engagement, and expand teachers' instructional repertoires through the use of interactive, adaptive, and collaborative digital tools. (Shi, Y.R.,2025). When thoughtfully integrated, digital technologies can support differentiated instruction, formative assessment, and active learning, thereby addressing diverse learner needs more effectively than traditional, one-size-fits-all approaches. However, realizing these pedagogical benefits requires more than access to digital tools alone. It depends on intentional instructional design grounded in learning theory, sustained and practice-oriented teacher professional development, equitable and reliable technological infrastructure, and clear governance frameworks that ensure ethical and responsible use of data and emerging technologies—particularly as artificial intelligence tools become increasingly prevalent in educational contexts (Ratiu, M., Pele, A. V., Bradea, A. &Pop, C. F., 2024).

The short exploratory study conducted with gymnasium teachers reinforces these conclusions, showing that educators are generally open and receptive to integrating digital approaches into their teaching practices. Teachers recognize the potential of digital pedagogy to enhance motivation, facilitate feedback, and support learner autonomy. Nevertheless, the findings also highlight that without systemic supports—such as ongoing pedagogical training, time for collaborative planning, technical assistance, and clear institutional guidelines—digital innovation remains fragmented and difficult to sustain. (Tan, S.C.,2024)

In this context, educational policies and school leadership play a crucial role. Strategic leadership that prioritizes continuous teacher learning, promotes equity in access and participation, and establishes transparent governance mechanisms will be decisive in transforming the promise of digital pedagogy into consistent, high-quality educational gains for all learners.

TEACHING TECHNICAL ENGLISH WRITING USING VISUAL DATA REPRESENTATION

Carmen Antonaru
Lecturer, PhD, Transylvania University of Braşov

Abstract: The present paper emphasizes the importance of improving the ability to interpret and communicate data presented visually by using graphs, diagrams and pie charts to improve university students 'technical and analytical English skills, to master the proper vocabulary and techniques. These competences are essential for writing laboratory reports, workplace documents, and supporting academic and professional competency. The paper proposes a structured approach to teaching visual-to-text interpretation and describing essential data.*

Keywords: technical vocabulary; visual data interpretation; technical skills*

1. Introduction

Visual data representation has become highly essential in technical communication. This paper underlines the role of integration the diagram, graph, and pie chart in teaching technical English writing. For English as a Foreign Language (EFL) and English as a Second Language (ESL) learners, the competency to interpret and analyze graphs in English is a fundamental part of communication in engineering. Graph interpretation is a critical skill due to the difficulty of transforming visual information into coherent written discourse. In technical fields such as engineering, students should know how to interpret and accurately describe statistical graphs, diagrams and pie charts to provide concise representations of complex data. Their interpretation requires both linguistic and cognitive skills which help students to improve their critical thinking, analytical reasoning and problem-solving.

2. Research questions:

Based on this purpose, this study tries to answer the following research questions:

- What is the role of visual interpretation information?
- What linguistic features should students use to interpret different types of graphs?
- What grammar structures must students respect when interpreting and describing statistical diagrams?

To respond to these research questions, it is highly important to understand that:

- The role that plays using visual materials the in academic writing which determines the students 'competences in achieving professional success.
- To understand the key features to highlight primary trends properly.
- To properly use the specific grammatical structures in analysing and describing graphs

3. Literature review

Recent studies suggest that it is important to develop all students' ability to construct, comprehend, and utilize adequate data visualizations, which comprises an important type of literacy called data visualization literacy [DVL] (Börner et al., 2016, 2019; Donohoe & Costello, 2020; Lee et al., 2017; Unwin, 2020). Data visualization is a branch of data science that focuses on using visual representations such as graphs, charts or diagrams to represent data. (Chang, H.-Y., Chang, Y.-J., & Tsai, M.-J. (2024). The analytical approach made the students think critically about the information, which is a valuable skill across academic disciplines and in the workplace (Tylor & Francis, 2021). For English language learners, developing the ability to interpret this language is crucial, as it often intersects with academic and professional tasks where data is presented visually (Davis, 2018). A visualization approach increase communication, increase critical thinking and provides analytical approach to various problems (T. Divyaasri & Dr. M. S. Zakir Hussain). Their research highlights the positive effect that the use of visualization in teaching and learning process has in developing the critical thinking of students and their overall performance.

4. The Role of Graph Interpretation

Graphs are not only visual representations of data, but also a form of language that communicates information through shapes and numbers. Each type of graph and chart serves a distinct purpose and requires using different descriptive strategies. For instance, bar charts often emphasize comparisons between categories, while line graphs tend to illustrate changes over time. Whereas tables provide information in columns and rows, figures can present information in many ways. A line drawing presents a photographic view of a topic. Bar charts and line graphs help readers make comparisons. These are especially valuable in instructions, which help a user perform a task because sometimes, looking at a graph can seem quite intimidating. Introducing visuals seems uncomplicated, but it can present challenges because it tests students' grammar and vocabulary.

5. Common types of graphs and charts:

Bar Chart: This visual representation compares numbers that are given for different categories. The length of the bars offers a direct visual way to analyze the relationships between the values presented. The task focusses on comparing the chart data.

Line Graph: it is a line graph that presents information connected by lines, often describes changes across a specific period. The main difference between a line graph and a chart comparison is that there is no dynamic in the latter, students simply should match numbers that stand for city population, prices, market shares, against each other.

Pie Chart: shows how a whole is divided into various segments, making them ideal for illustrating proportions. Analyzing pie charts helps students understand the relative sizes of different components.

Table: Tables present lists of numbers or text in columns and can be used to synthesize the given This format is essential when we need to present specific figures in a structured manner.

Flowchart: is a process description that involves describing sequence of stages in a process, illustrates steps and relationships between different elements. This task focusses on students' ability to group smaller stages and describe how they go one after another.

6. Essential Variables and Features

To understand the key features, it is compulsory to highlight primary trends: increasing, decreasing, stability, stressing the differences over a period, then notice relevant data by showing high and low points, compare rates of change and finally show correlations between variables. Once the students have set the main trends, then they can group them. The students do not have to share their vision for the trends and directions they take.

6.1.Introduction

In introduction, students should paraphrase the asked question and never copy word for word from the question. This can be done by using synonyms and ensuring that this section sounds natural. What the graph, pie chart, table or diagram illustrate at a first glance is advisable to complete the introduction as a general trend or an overview.

6.2.The Overview

Usually, an overview forms the second paragraph of the essay. In this one, students would have to write down the main features. Also, they must discover available comparisons and talk about general trends occurring in the given data.

6.3.The First Body Paragraph

In the first body paragraph, students will have to give detailed information and explain the given data. They must focus more on language instead of facts. Making relevant comparisons is always useful. In this paragraph students explain what the visuals are, what the topic. It might be a general trend in the data, or an interesting overall pattern:

"According to the darker segments of the chart,"…
"From the information given on the upper pie chart,"…
"Looking at the data related to"…,….
"If we look at the three largest shares shown on the chart,"…

6.4.The Second Body Paragraph

In paragraph 2, they need to describe the main information contained in the visuals and should select the most relevant information. In this paragraph, students will provide a summary of the visuals without going into too many details by describing the main information contained in the visuals. They should select the most striking pattern. This second body paragraph will contain explanation of the remaining features. It will be the same as the first body paragraph, but with different information:

"The illustration given includes statistics on the amount of four different types of"…
"There are more differences than similarities between the amount of… and how much"…
"The chart at the top of the page gives statistics on the fraction of… that…, while that at the bottom illustrate data related to.."
"The diagram given shows comparisons of statistics related to the numbers
"The pie chart on the left shows the ratio of…, while the righthand one gives data on the share of…

In the body paragraph the main features of the graph are reported (never all the variables), by comparing the given information:

"It will be presented the similarities between the different segments, before turning to the differences".
"It will be summarized the data related to European countries, then focus on nations in the other parts of the world.

The conclusion part is optional. It can be written a general statement with significant observation or just paraphrase the introduction and add generalizing statement that refers to the graph:

"Finally, the infographic informs us that."

7. Language Skills for Describing Graphs

When analyzing graphs, students should focus on specific vocabulary and grammar structures to interpret data effectively. Clarity in technical writing is mandatory. Successful technical writing should help the reader understand the text; Good technical writing is concise. It is a tool for the readers to carry out whatever job they are doing. In contrast to traditional essays, effective technical writing uses short words and short sentences. Concise achieved graphics can be a major part of communication in the workplace. When students master the vocabulary and techniques for describing graphs, pie charts and diagrams in English, they can translate complex information into accessible insights. The clarity of interpretation depends on logical progression from generalization to specific insights, using transitional phrases (connectors), supporting grammatical patterns and a varied academic vocabulary including specialized terminology.

7.1.Essential Terminology for Visual Data Interpretation

For describing and analyzing graphs, students should use targeted vocabulary and grammar instruction. Graph interpretation requires specific vocabulary terms like "rise", "decrease", "stabilize", fluctuate", "diminish", peak" and steady" are essential for analyzing graphs. Teachers should provide students with sentence frames which can be effective strategy for supporting them in describing graphs. Sentence frames give students a structured way to form their thoughts. Here are some frames that teachers can introduce:

In Introduction/describing general trends:

"The diagram/ picture/ flow chart depicts/ illustrates/ describes the process
"The graphs show an increase/decrease in data over a period.".

While Describing the Process:
First/ Firstly, Second/ Secondly, Third/Thirdly
Next/ After that/ Then, following that/Followed by, Subsequently/ Subsequent to that, Finally/ Lastly...

To denote what a step involves / the repetition of a process or the end of a step:
"After this step/ stage/ process..".
"The cycle/ process then repeats itself".
"Once this stage/ step is completed.."..
"The phase/ step/ stage involved."..

Highlighting Specific Data Points
Stating (vague and exact) proportions/ percentages/ sizes of segments: "about/ approximately/ around/ more or less/ roughly a half of the chart is taken up by"… "just under/ nearly/ almost/ slightly lower than/ a little less than a third of the total consists of"… "a huge percentage/ proportion/ share/ fraction/ amount/ number (of…)"

Phrases for describing similarities between pie charts and segments
"The two pie charts are (extremely/ very/ fairly) similar" "This segment is (exactly/ just/ almost/ nearly/ two thirds/ half/ a quarter) as large as"… "that pie chart, the proportions in the other include"…

Phrases for describing differences between pie charts and segments
"While the top chart…, the bottom one…
"The segments connected to electronic goods…, whereas those connected to furnishings...
"The most obvious/ main/ biggest difference between the right-hand pie chart and the one on the left is that…Language for describing changes to pie charts

Describing positions of the pie charts
"The upper pie chart/ The top chart…
"The lower pie chart/ The bottom chart…

Making comparisons:
"Data is higher/ shows a more significant increase in"

Expressing Cause and Effect
"Casual structures allow students to explain the reasons behind the data" . .
"This type of structure enables students to add context to their analysis"
"Sales increased significantly due to seasonal demand"
"The rise in data can be attributed"

Increase/Decrease:
these terms indicate a rise or fall in values: rise, grow, climb, decline *i*ncrease / rise / grow / went up/ double / multiply / climb / exceed / decrease / drop / fall / decline / depreciate.

Fluctuation:
oscillate/ vary / fluctuate.

Peak/Trough: peak/ trough / suddenly / sharply / dramatically / steeply / sudden

Stable/ Constant:
stable (stabilized) / level (levelled) off / remain constant/ steady/ consistent gently / gradually / slightly / steadily / a little.

7.2.Grammar structures for Graph interpretation

In addition to vocabulary, specific grammatical structures are essential for analyzing and describing graphs. Grammatical structures such as comparatives, superlatives and passive voice ensure students to accurately present data, express precise and clear description, increasing their fluency and confidence.

Comparative and Superlative Structures

Comparative and superlative are needed to compare data points. By practicing these structures, students improve their ability to add precision and depth to their descriptions of data.
"Developing countries are more reliant on alternative energy production than developed countries". "Solar power accounts for far less of the total energy production than gas or coal does". "Hydropower is not as efficient as wind power." "The Middle East produces twice as much oil as Europe". "Western countries consume three times more oil than the Middle East".

Articles

In given graphs, pie charts, line graphs, table refer to different countries and nationalities. One of the biggest problems with this is the use of definite article with country names. Almost all country names do not require the article "the". The countries like France, England, Britain, Vietnam, Canada, India are not used with "the". There are also some exceptions. Countries that are made up of a group of states of islands use "the", such as the Philippines and US. Any country that uses the words "states" or "united" or "republic" also use "the", for example the UK, The US, the Republic of China. The definite article "the" is used when referring to nationalities as a group of people: the British, the Americans, the English.

Passive Voice for Objective Descriptions

The passive voice can be beneficial when describing changes in data objectively. Using the passive voice helps students present data in an impersonal and analytical tone, which is often proper in academic and professional context (Willis, 2016).

"Rain is collected as it falls on the roof tops of house. This water then passes through the drains and is eventually transferred to a water filter".

English Tenses Used in Describing Graphs:
The proper tense depends on the timeframe shown in the visual data:

Present Simple for describing statistical data or general trends
"The number of people visiting the British Museum stands at 100.000"

Past Simple for historical data:
In 2016, the number of sales stood at 2 million

Present Perfect Simple for changes over time leading up to the present
"The maps show that in 1973, the city located in the East was small. Currently, it has expanded to"

Future Tenses for data showing future predictions:

It is predicted/ estimated/ projected/ forecasted/ expected/ anticipated that ..... will .....
Is /are predicted/ estimated/ projected/ forecasted/ expected/ anticipated to .....
"The number of sales is forecast to reach a peak of 10 million by 2040". "By 2050, this number is predicted to hit 20,000.

8. Conclusion

Teaching graph interpretation improves students' critical thinking, analytical abilities, and linguistic skill-building and fosters their academic and professional success where data interpretation plays a crucial part of effective communication. Mastering the fundamental elements of visual data such as targeted vocabulary and grammar structures boosts their fluency, accuracy and confidence. Building their foundation skills in describing and analyzing graphs helps students formulate precise and meaningful descriptions, drawing exact conclusions. To gain ability in visual data interpretation, to build confidence and proficiency in English, teachers need to motivate students by giving them opportunities to strengthen their skills that demand both linguistic and analytical abilities through regular and consistent practice and provide them constructive feedback. Adapting future lessons focusing on approaches that resonate most with students, providing targeted support, varying teaching methods and fostering a motivational environment will empower students to achieve mastery in visual data interpretation.

CULTIVATING REFLECTIVE STUDENTS : IMPLEMENTING A SELF-AWARENESS PROJECT TO DEVELOP MEDICAL STDENTS' SKILLS

Laura Ioana Leon
Lecturer, PhD, "Grigore T. Popa" University of Medicine and Pharmacy, Iași

Abstract: One of the key skills in Medicine today is the ability of healthcare professionals to recognize their own emotions, their biases and their professional development, abilities that are associated with the idea of being self-aware. Foreign language classes for medical students are an excellent context to develop this important skill. Foreign language classes may combine all those tools that would lead medical students to understand more about their strengths and weaknesses, a major step forward in becoming self-aware. Developing good communication skills, understanding the role of application forms as part of their academic writing training, and also integrating Medical Humanities in their education are likely to develop medical students' self-awareness which will enable them to deepen their reflective capacity while strengthening their competences required for patient-centered care. This paper is going to present some effective ways in which some classroom activities and projects designed for medical students can help them reach the above-mentioned goals.

Keywords: medical education; medical students; communication skills in healthcare settings; self-awareness project; foreign language teaching.

Today, medical training requires students to navigate complex emotions in order to find out their professional identity and ultimately their role within the healthcare system. Medical humanities and reflective writing have been regarded for some time now as tools to support these aims by helping students process clinical experiences, understand diverse narratives, and recognize personal biases. Similarly, classes on developing communication skills application form writing (e.g., the CV, the letter of application or personal statements) provide opportunities to examine inner motivations and behavioral tendencies. In other words, these have become opportunities to develop the above-mentioned skills, but they also allow students to understand more about themselves, i.e. to become more self-aware. Many recent studies have emphasized this very idea: "Many of us in medical education acknowledge that educating excellent future physicians requires more than assimilation of facts. How to best imbue more intangible skills such as compassion, empathy, resiliency, and self-reflection is still a matter for much debate However, exposure to and engagement with courses outside of science has been recognized to have beneficial impacts on students. The umbrella term of the medical humanities has broad appeal and is often considered a means to augment the pre-clinical curriculum with non-scientific content" (Cerceo 2023). Moreover, future doctors engaging in reflective writing have been considered to develop, besides leadership skills, opportunities to better understand both the patient and their own selves: "Engaging in reflective writing is another creative form that encourages physicians to move beyond a clinical mindset to see themselves and their patients on a more personal level" (Ellis 2019). During the last few years, especially after the pandemic, the need to develop these skills has become increasingly important. Therefore, foreign language classes took this opportunity to develop such activities during class, that would focus on integrating the professional dimension of self-awareness through various pedagogical approaches. Medical humanities promote introspection and empathy, while communication skills training contextualizes self-awareness in interpersonal encounters. Eventually writing activities can help students become aware of their professional identity formation. Together, these activities offer a comprehensive framework that can be adapted to diverse curricular contexts.

Effective communication is the foundation pf high-quality care, influencing the whole doctor-patient relationship, diagnosis accuracy, and the patient's compliance with the treatment.

Communication skills need to be taught, and they should always be at the core of medical training: "Individuals with better communication skills are demonstrated to have high self-awareness and higher confidence level among themselves" (Siraj 2013). Therefore, foreign language teachers should integrate in their classes such activities that would enable students develop their self-awareness by means of some carefully thought strategies and assessment methods that will promote both communicative proficiency and a more thorough understanding of human interaction and insight. As we teach our students how to communicate, especially in a foreign language, i.e. to become aware of any cultural barriers that may impede the communication process, it makes it easier for us to raise awareness towards any of their biases or lack of understanding. No wonder that any book on communication skills today emphasizes this idea that the best communicators we have today are those individuals who get to know themselves very well. Moreover, in order to understand the whole concept of diversity and become more tolerant, one has to know their own culture very well. Knowing all these things, foreign language teachers could design their lectures and practical activities in such a way that students will be able to develop their abilities to become better listeners, to be more empathetic, and to get rid of all their biases. The outcome of all these is to become more self-aware, as this is the only way they can practice the above-mentioned skills. Self-awareness operates in such a way that it allows them to see how their perception of the world, their moral values and emotional reactions have an impact upon the medical encounter. When communication training activates self-awareness, students better understand their interpersonal strengths and limitations, enabling purposeful improvement.

Communication is not only about verbal exchange, it comes with other components as well. Nonverbal communication is very important as it allows the healthcare professionals to understand that besides noticing all nonverbal signs sent by the patient, they also send some information based on their nonverbal behaviour, therefore they should never neglect this aspect. Their verbal communication should always match their nonverbal signs, otherwise the communication process could fail. Likewise, paralanguage needs to be controlled in an effective manner, especially when doctors may perform their activities in a different cultural background. Last but not least, as this component of the communication process is probably the most complex one (it can be studied separately, but it is also present in all the others), cultural awareness requires self-awareness as if a doctor does not know their own cultural context is unlikely to understand the patient in his / her own cultural background. In other words, all these competencies require self-awareness and a doctor's full presence in the communication process. This is more above the actual active listening as it requires a whole understanding of the context in which the communication process takes place, along with the ability to see the patient as a separate individuality within his / her own cultural context. Thus, students should know that each stage of the consultation comes with its challenges, and, if they are not prepared to approach them correctly, the communication process may suffer. First and foremost, students should know that they should never make any assumptions. When helping patients to understand the information, it is important to understand their cultural frame of reference, but at the same time not to make assumptions based on cultural stereotypes. Activities in class should display all these cultural barriers along with others that may illustrate the most important challenges they may face while they are discussing with the patient. Knowing how to ask the appropriate questions is still a matter of being aware. As you may come from a culture where it is not a problem to inquire about one's marital status by referring to this as being married to someone. In more diverse contexts, however, such a question may become offensive, as it shows the speaker's standard of reference as being only that of just being married to someone. Therefore, they should know that the proper way to check whether someone has a partner is simply to ask, "Do you have a partner?". Explanations should be always given using words that a patient would understand, avoiding medical jargon that may be even interpreted as displaying superiority towards the patient. Moreover, a doctor should always check at the end of each stage of the consultation the patient's level of understanding of everything that has been said.

When you are part of the mainstream culture, it is easy to be blind to the fact that you have any cultural baggage at all and to think that culture is something that only other people have. to think that culture is something that only other people have. The next step is to measure how different those other cultures are from what you regard as "normal". A similar point could be made about sexuality. If you are part of the mainstream heterosexual culture, it is easy to be blind to the fact that you also have a sexuality. Without reflecting on it, you might unconsciously measure anyone else's sexuality in relation to your own ideas of what's normal, without appreciating that we are all carrying around our own baggage about sex and sexuality, just as we are all carrying our own cultural baggage. Another area where the medical profession has a poor record is in dealing with the needs of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender patients. Frequently doctors assume that their patients are heterosexual, making subsequent disclosure of their sexuality. Until the doctor knows a person's sexual identity, it is better to use gender-neutral and sensitive language such as "Do you have a partner?", "Are you currently in a relationship?" and "Do you need to discuss contraception?" rather than "Are you married?", "What type of contraception are you using?". Doctors should provide patients with information at their own pace with encouraging statements: "I'm happy to discuss any concerns you have".

In order to be culturally aware a doctor should understand how the idea of politeness functions in that culture. What is considered to be polite in one culture may not be considered so in another culture. Therefore students, as learners of English as a foreign language, should be familiarized with such situations during the ESP courses and seminars. An activity that would help students to realize such details would be that in which they were involved in various types of activities such as describing how they would deal with different situations in their own culture / language (interrupting colleagues politely, working with different colleagues, asking a colleague on the ward for help, apologizing for being late, asking permission from someone you don't know to use the equipment, offering help to a colleague they see in trouble / busy). From a linguistic point of view, being polite in the English language may function a little bit different from the Romanian language. Deciding how to approach different people for help or to offer help in another language can be tricky. Therefore, it is generally more polite to ask permission to do something rather than to just do what you want to do. You may think: "I want to make a phone call!", but you will have to say: "Is it ok if I make a phone call?". When you need help, it is generally more polite to ask for help than to demand it. You may think: "I need help lifting this!", but you will have to say: "Would you mind helping me lift this?". When you can see that someone needs help, it is generally considered more polite to make your offer as a question rather than a statement. You may think: "I can help you with that!", but you will have to say: "Would you like some help with that?". Lifestyle changes can often mean breaking habits developed over a lifetime, so making these changes can be very difficult for the patient. Moreover, when individual habits are part of a larger cultural framework, change is likely to be even more difficult. It is more important, therefore, to establish the role that cultural factors may play in preventing a patient from following advice on lifestyle. When working with children, it is important to be aware that different cultures have different expectations of what "good" behavior is for children. In some cultures, mothers expect children to be more independent and exploratory, while some other cultures reward more obedient children.

Thus, communication skills are an important part in medical students' training. Some pedagogical approaches that may allow them to practice communication would be to simulate, in class, a doctor-patient interaction and even video record such activities as this may enable them to discuss things and evaluate the effectiveness of their interactions. When learners watch themselves communicating, they often recognize unconscious habits, i.e. interrupting too often, lack of eye contact, that may not be that obvious in real time interactions. At the end of such activities, instructors' feedback is very important as it allows reflection and opportunities to improve these shortcomings. Indeed, one of the key skills involved in such training is developing the medical students' ability to reflect. According to Sara Heydari and Amin Beigzadeh, this will also help them cope better with the most difficult cases they are going to have in their future careers: "The aim of Medical Education is to assist students in becoming proficient professionals by helping them to gain the knowledge and skills, as well as the essential attributes of being a medical professional. It is one of the tasks of medical schools to prepare the novice into a proficient medical doctor by inculcating a professional identity in the long run. A vital part of developing as a medical professional [...] is the ability of medical students to reflect. Medical students as future doctors need to reflect in order to function professionally when faced with complex cases" (Heydari 2024).

Another territory that should not be neglected when it comes to developing the same self-awareness skills, besides teaching good communication skills, is that chapter belonging to Academic Writing, i.e. application forms. Application forms, no matter how rigid in format they may be, are in fact a great opportunity for medical students (and not only) to cultivate their self-awareness. This mainly comes from what application forms require from students, when they are faced with the necessity to fill them in (when they may apply for various programs or scholarships at other institutions). They may serve as a deliberate mechanism for cultivating self-awareness when embedded thoughtfully within medical education. Teaching medical students to analyze, draft, and revise application forms can cultivate deeper self-understanding, enhancing their reflective capacity, and supporting their personal and professional development. All application forms (the CV, the letter of application or persona statement) require the students to write about themselves, about their education and experience, that is they are forced to reflect on their past, in order to formulate coherent ideas that would make them eligible candidates for what they are applying. Thus, application writing requires students to articulate past decisions, experiences, and learning moments. They also often challenge students to consider their motivations, failures, biases, and goals, enabling them to take time to reflect on all these. A personal statement, probably the most sophisticated application form, is, as its name suggests, an essay that becomes very personal, describing your motivation based on whatever you have gathered, in terms of professional competence, in order to achieve your goal. The order in which such application forms are taught to the student is also significant – usually this takes the form of teaching about the CV first, then about the letter of application (which joins the CV, adding details about the information enclosed in the CV) and eventually the personal statement. This is a meaningful journey as it helps students gather more information, managing it more effectively. A personal statement is about the person who writes it, about their abilities, passions, and therefore it has to be authentic. Any specialist in the field, who would give advice to prospective candidates on how they should write their personal statement, would say that the most important thing is to be as authentic as possible. To reach this level of authenticity one has to know themselves very well.

Application writing requires students to construct a coherent narrative about who they are and to put all these skills in relation to the idea of becoming clinicians. Filling in these application forms allows students to explore aspects of themselves that otherwise would have been left unexplored. Students may get a clear understanding of their future profession, with everything it implies responsibilities, duties and skills that are necessary to be acquired. Moreover, when working with personal statements, this exercise could also take a cultural turn as, from the Romanian perspective, this is a very challenging application form which still does not have an exact correspondence in the Romanian system. Writing a personal statement requires them to think in perspective about their future profession. While foreign candidates may get, prior to their admission, to work shadow professionals carrying out their jobs, in the Romanian context, students learn about their profession as they engage in their courses, discovering progressively what it takes to become a medical doctor. Thus, preparing to write a personal statement makes them think about all the future perspective and plans, reflecting on what best fits them. In class they may get to see how it should be done from three perspectives: an admission tutor, a student, and some academics who all talk about what is important to have in view when writing such an application form. Teaching medical students how to write application forms offers a powerful method for developing self-awareness and professional identity. By integrating structured reflection, narrative skills, feedback mechanisms, and checking personal narratives, foreign language teachers can transform a traditionally stressful requirement into a meaningful educational tool.

Embedding self-awareness activities within medical humanities, communication skills modules, and academic writing courses may help the development of reflective, compassionate, and communicatively competent future doctors. Foreign language teachers have to make sure they find the appropriate activities that would help students to achieve these goals. Ultimately, it is not only about developing self-awareness in our students. Citing Carr and others, in a very recent study, Rebecca L. Volpe mentions at least six major focus areas of Health Humanities education: knowledge acquisition, mastering skills (i.e. observation and reflection), relational ones, including perspective taking, personal growth and activism, wellness and self-care and critical evaluation (Volpe 2025). Thus, such activities will come to be seen as some valid opportunities for medical educators to develop the reflective capacity and professional formation among medical students.

PSYCHO-PEDAGOGICAL COUNSELING – ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT AND MANAGEMENT OF THE PROFESSIONAL AND PERSONAL CAREER

Ramona-Ștefana Petrovan
Lecturer, PhD, "1 December 1918" University of Alba Iulia
Răzvan-Vasile Todoran
Professor - School counselor, MA, C.J.R.A.E. Alba

Abstract: The article aims to highlight the role of psychopedagogical counseling as an essential element in the development and management of professional and personal careers, in a context marked by rapid changes in the labor market and social pressure for performance and adaptability. Starting from the international models of career development (Super, Savickas) and from the contributions of specialized literature from the Romanian space (Dumitru, Axinte, Bersan & Dumitru, Jigău), the cognitive, affective and value dimensions involved in the process of designing the professional path and harmonizing it with personal life are analyzed. Psychopedagogical counseling is approached as a complex approach to accompany the individual in building a coherent vocational identity, in developing the skills of self-reflection, decision-making and managing career transitions. In terms of application, the article emphasizes the specifics of counseling practices in the Romanian educational system, the need for equitable services for young people from disadvantaged backgrounds and the importance of collaboration between school, family, community and the economic environment. Finally, some benchmarks are synthesized for an integrated model of psycho-pedagogical counseling centered on the person and his life story, a model that capitalizes on both established theoretical frameworks and the local realities of the Romanian educational system, with a view to a conscious and responsible career planning throughout life.*

I. Consilierea psihopedagogică între dezvoltarea personală și managementul carierei

Consilierea psihopedagogică poate fi înțeleasă ca puntea prin care tinerii, elevi și studenți, sunt sprijiniți să-și articuleze, dincolo de opțiunile imediate, o viziune de viață și carieră care reflectă cine sunt, ce-și doresc și ce pot deveni. În contextul dinamic al pieței muncii contemporane, marcat de schimbări rapide, competiții intense și nevoia constantă de adaptabilitate, consilierea nu mai este un simplu instrument de orientare profesională, ea devine un demers complex de dezvoltare personală, de auto-cunoaștere și de planificare strategică a parcursului de viață.

Conform unor autori autohtoni, consilierea pentru carieră este definită ca un proces de "compatibilizare maximă" între resursele și aspirațiile individului și oferta reală a sistemului educațional și a pieței muncii[1]. Această definiție relevă rolul activ al persoanei, nu ca beneficiar pasiv al unor oportunități care i se oferă, ci ca "manager" al propriei cariere. Prin consiliere, elevul sau studentul învață să se cunoască, aptitudinile, interesele, valorile sale, și să ia decizii conștiente, nu determinate exclusiv de factori externi sau presiuni sociale.

Mai mult, funcția consilierii de carieră depășește simpla informare: ea îndeplinește simultan o funcție investigativă (diagnosticarea intereselor, aptitudinilor, valorilor personale), una informativă (oferirea de informații relevante despre opțiuni educaționale, profesii, piața muncii) și una formativ-educativă (dezvoltarea abilităților de decizie, planificare, autoreglare, anticipare a schimbărilor). Astfel, consilierea devine un proces gradual, de construire a identității vocaționale, nu un act episodic de repartizare profesională.

Acest model este susținut prin practica actuală a instituțiilor de învățământ superior din România. De pildă, Universitatea din București oferă, prin Departamentul de Consiliere și Orientare pentru

Carieră, servicii de consiliere psihologică, orientare vocațională, evaluare aptitudinală și informare privind opțiunile de studiu și de carieră. Aceasta evidențiază recunoașterea oficială a importanței consilierii ca parte integrantă a parcursului educațional și profesional. În plus, cadrul legal recent, Legea învățământului superior nr. 199/2023, prevede funcționarea centrelor de consiliere și orientare în carieră în instituțiile de învățământ superior, ca structuri dedicate sprijinirii studenților în tranziția de la educație la muncă[2].

Rolul consilierului psihopedagogic este, astfel, unul de mediator: el traduce "limbajul" statisticilor despre piața muncii, cerințele competențelor, tendințele economice, într-un limbaj accesibil individului; îl ajută să reflecteze la ce fel de viață vrea să ducă, nu doar la ce job să obțină. Întrebări precum "Ce înseamnă pentru mine o carieră reușită?", "Ce stil de viață îmi doresc?", "Cum îmi pot valorifica aptitudinile și valorile personale?" devin fundamentul pentru decizii asumate, coerente cu sine, nu dictate de modă sau de presiuni externe.

În același timp, consilierea oferă instrumente pentru dezvoltarea competențelor transversale — autoevaluare, planificare, adaptabilitate, reziliență — esențiale într-o lume în schimbare. Tinerii învață să nu construiască doar un traseu profesional, ci o hartă de viață, capabilă să suporte tranziții, schimbări de direcție, evoluții neprevăzute. În acest sens, consilierea psihopedagogică nu este un lux, ci o necesitate: contribuie la formarea unei generații capabile să își gestioneze cariera cu conștiință, responsabilitate și autonomie.

Prin urmare, consilierea psihopedagogică — așa cum se realizează astăzi în universități și — în perspectivă — ar trebui să devină prezentă pe tot parcursul parcursului educațional — oferă tinerilor șansa de a-și construi o identitate vocațională integrată, de a planifica un traseu realist și de a naviga conștient în complexitatea lumii sociale și profesionale.

Pentru ca acest demers să devină eficient: instituțiile trebuie să creeze structuri stabile de consiliere, consilierii să fie bine pregătiți, iar tinerii să aibă acces real și continuu la aceste servicii — nu doar în momente punctuale, ci ca parte a educației permanente și a dezvoltării personale.

II. Fundamente teoretice internaționale: de la Super la paradigma life-design Înțelegerea dezvoltării carierei ca proces complex, dinamic și profund influențat de experiențele de viață se datorează, în mare parte, contribuțiilor unor teoreticieni internaționali care au redefinit modul în care privim orientarea vocațională. Printre aceștia, Donald Super și Mark Savickas ocupă locuri centrale, propunând modele explicative care au transformat consilierea într-un demers centrat pe persoană, pe evoluția acesteia și pe sensul pe care îl atribuie propriului parcurs profesional[3].

Teoria life-span, life-space formulată de Donald Super pleacă de la premisa că dezvoltarea carierei se desfășoară de-a lungul întregii vieți — fiind influențată atât de maturizarea psihologică, cât și de multiplele roluri sociale pe care individul le asumă[4]. Potrivit acestui model, persoana traversează etape distincte: perioada de creștere, în care se formează primele reprezentări despre muncă; etapa de explorare, în care tânărul experimentează roluri și interese; apoi consolidarea, menținerea și, în final, declinul, însoțit de reorientări adaptive.

Un element crucial în teoria lui Super este conceptul de auto-concept — imaginea pe care individul o are despre sine și pe care încearcă să o actualizeze prin alegerile profesionale. Cariera devine, astfel, „o expresie a modului în care persoana se percepe și se dezvoltă". Consilierea psihopedagogică preia această perspectivă, oferind tinerilor un cadru în care își pot explora identitatea, valorile și aspirațiile, sprijinind formarea unei direcții coerente și adaptabile.

În continuarea viziunii lui Super, Mark Savickas dezvoltă paradigma life-design — un model constructivist-narativ care plasează individul în centrul propriei evoluții și pune accent pe sensul pe care acesta îl atribuie experiențelor sale[5]. Dacă modelele tradiționale ale carierei accentuau potrivirea între persoană și profesie, paradigma life-design invită individul să realizeze o construcție activă a vieții sale, în funcție de evoluția contextelor, de traumele sau succesele personale și de narațiunile identitare pe care le formulează.

În acest model, consilierea devine un spațiu narativ, în care tânărul este încurajat să-și povestească experiențele semnificative, să identifice teme recurente — modele preferate, roluri-cheie, valori dominante — pentru a construi un scenariu de viață coerent. Consilierul facilitează reflectarea, pune întrebări care stimulează conștientizarea și îl ajută pe client să transforme aceste teme într-un proiect autentic de carieră[6].

Această abordare este deosebit de relevantă într-o lume în care traseele profesionale sunt tot mai discontinue, iar individul trebuie să se reinventeze în fața schimbărilor rapide. Consilierea nu se mai limitează la „alegerea unei profesii", ci îl ajută pe tânăr să gestioneze incertitudinea, să devină rezilient și să își proiecteze activ viața.

Mai multe studii recente au confirmat eficiența intervențiilor de tip life-design în rândul adolescenților și studenților. Cercetări realizate la University of Pretoria au arătat că astfel de intervenții cresc adaptabilitatea în carieră, dezvoltă sentimentul de auto-eficacitate și claritatea identității profesionale, inclusiv în comunități cu resurse limitate[7].

Aceste rezultate sunt importante pentru consilierea psihopedagogică, deoarece arată că tinerii pot dobândi competențe esențiale pentru gestionarea schimbării — precum curiozitatea față de opțiuni noi, capacitatea de a anticipa viitorul, controlul deciziilor și încrederea în propriile forțe.

O analiză de sinteză publicată în Frontiers in Psychology subliniază, de asemenea, diversitatea instrumentelor life-design: interviul narativ de carieră, exercițiile de reconstrucție a poveștii de viață, consilierea în grup, portofoliile reflexive[8]. Autorii arată că eficiența acestor intervenții depinde în mare măsură de adaptarea lor la specificul cultural și instituțional, evidențiind importanța flexibilității în practica de consiliere.

În universități, teoriile life-design sunt integrate adesea în programe de orientare profesională și dezvoltare personală. Studiul realizat de Carvalho, Mourão și Freitas arată că intervențiile de consiliere online sau de grup, inspirate din Career Construction Theory, îmbunătățesc percepția angajabilității, clarifică obiectivele profesionale și cresc implicarea studenților în proiectarea carierei[9].

Acest lucru confirmă faptul că abordările moderne ale carierei, centrate pe narativitate și construcție identitară, sunt utile nu doar adolescenților aflați în explorare, ci și tinerilor adulți aflați în tranziția către piața muncii.

Integrarea teoriilor lui Super și Savickas în consilierea psihopedagogică permite trecerea de la o viziune mecanică, orientată spre alegerea unei profesii fixe, la o perspectivă holistică, în care cariera este parte a proiectului de viață.

Consilierea devine astfel:

- un spațiu de explorare și autocunoaștere,
- un cadru narativ de construcție identitară,
- un proces de dezvoltare a adaptabilității,
- un suport pentru luarea deciziilor în contextul realităților socio-economice.

Această articulare între teoriile internaționale și practica educațională locală contribuie la formarea unor tineri autonomi, capabili să își proiecteze cariera în mod flexibil și autentic, în acord cu propriile valori și cu dinamica societății.

- Consilierea psihopedagogică – nucleu al dezvoltării integrate a carierei profesionale și personale Consilierea psihopedagogică a devenit, în ultimele decenii, un element esențial în formarea unei cariere echilibrate, fiind spațiul în care individul își poate integra dimensiunile personale și profesionale într-o viziune coerentă asupra propriei deveniri. În paradigma actuală, dezvoltarea personală și construcția carierei nu mai sunt considerate procese separate, ci două dimensiuni interdependente ale aceluiași parcurs existențial. Conform paradigmei life-design, formulată de Savickas și colaboratorii, individul își „proiectează" cariera prin sensurile pe care le acordă experiențelor trăite, prin modul în care interpretează schimbarea și prin capacitatea de a construi o poveste de viață care îl reprezintă[10].

Această viziune este compatibilă cu modelul lui Donald Super, pentru care cariera reprezintă expresia dinamică a auto-conceptului, aflat într-o permanentă transformare[11]. Super argumentează că fiecare individ își dezvoltă cariera în relație cu identitatea sa, iar consilierea devine un spațiu de însoțire, de reflecție și de clarificare a valorilor. Consilierul psihopedagogic are, astfel, rolul de a sprijini persoana în procesul de înțelegere a propriei evoluții și de asumare a deciziilor profesionale în acord cu resursele sale interne.

În acest cadru, consilierea psihopedagogică nu se rezumă la furnizarea de informații despre profesii sau la administrarea unor teste vocaționale, ci devine o experiență relațională care facilitează integrarea dimensiunilor identitare și emoționale. Persoana este încurajată să-și analizeze trecutul, să-și recunoască valorile, să-și observe tiparele decizionale și să-și formuleze aspirații realiste. Consilierea contribuie la formarea unei identități vocaționale stabile, capabile să susțină adaptarea la schimbările inevitabile ale mediului profesional.

Această abordare este susținută și de cercetările internaționale recente. Studii realizate la University of Pretoria arată că intervențiile bazate pe narațiune și sens conduc la creșterea încrederii în sine și a clarității decizionale la adolescenți, mai ales în medii vulnerabile[12]. Rezultate similare au fost obținute de Jude, Maree și Jordaan, care evidențiază faptul că tinerii participanți la programe de consiliere life-design dezvoltă competențe sporite de explorare vocațională și o mai bună auto-reglare emoțională[13].

La nivel universitar, consilierea psihopedagogică este tot mai mult integrată în strategiile instituționale de sprijin pentru studenți. Programele analizate de Carvalho, Mourão și Freitas demonstrează că intervențiile de consiliere — fie individuale, fie de grup — pot contribui semnificativ la creșterea angajabilității și la dezvoltarea competențelor necesare gestionării tranzițiilor profesionale[14]. Studenții dobândesc nu doar informații despre piața muncii, ci și abilități de reflecție, adaptabilitate, gestionare a stresului și luare a deciziilor.

Aceste rezultate confirmă ideea că formarea profesională nu poate fi separată de maturizarea emoțională și personală. O carieră reușită nu depinde exclusiv de cunoștințe sau diploma obținută, ci și de capacitatea persoanei de a-și înțelege propriile nevoi, de a tolera incertitudinea, de a dezvolta reziliență și de a transforma experiențele în oportunități de creștere.

În spațiul românesc, autori precum Lemeni și Miclea evidențiază aceeași idee: dezvoltarea carierei este inseparabilă de dezvoltarea personală[15]. Ei arată că elevii și studenții iau decizii profesionale mai bune atunci când dispun de competențe transversale precum autoevaluarea, flexibilitatea, gestionarea stresului și motivația intrinsecă. În lipsa acestor abilități, cariera riscă să devină un traseu impus din exterior, lipsit de semnificație personală.

De aceea, consilierea psihopedagogică își asumă o funcție esențială: aceea de a crea un spațiu educațional sigur, în care persoana să poată experimenta, greși, reflecta și reconstrui legătura cu sine și cu viitorul său. Consilierea devine o resursă de echilibru într-o societate caracterizată de mobilitate profesională, incertitudine și presiune pentru performanță.

Într-un context global marcat de digitalizare accelerată, globalizare și schimbări economice frecvente, carierele sunt tot mai flexibile și mai puțin previzibile. În aceste condiții, consilierea psihopedagogică oferă persoanei un fir de continuitate între ceea ce este, ceea ce devine și ceea ce aspiră să fie. Ea sprijină formarea unei identități vocaționale durabile, care poate evolua odată cu realitățile profesionale, fără a-și pierde coerența internă.

Astfel, consilierea nu doar sprijină alegerea unei profesii, ci facilitează construirea unui mod de a trăi și de a munci în acord cu propriile valori, resurse și aspirații. În esență, consilierea psihopedagogică devine un proces de acompaniere a persoanei în propria transformare — una care implică introspecție, creativitate, responsabilitate și deschidere către schimbare.

- Competențe ale consilierului și modele de intervenție integrate

Consilierul psihopedagogic care lucrează în domeniul dezvoltării și managementului carierei ocupă un rol strategic în formarea tinerilor, deoarece interacțiunea dintre elev sau student și consilier poate influența decisiv modul în care aceștia se raportează la propriul viitor profesional. Acest rol complex presupune nu doar expertiză teoretică, ci și o finețe relațională care să permită consilierului să înțeleagă contextul personal și emoțional al fiecărui individ. Astfel, consilierul are nevoie de o formare multidimensională, care să îmbine cunoștințele din psihologie, științele educației și sociologia muncii cu abilități de comunicare, ascultare activă și intervenție[16]. În plus, înțelegerea dinamicii pieței muncii, a competențelor transversale cerute și a tendințelor contemporane în angajabilitate devine indispensabilă[17].

Literatura internațională privind consilierea de tip life-design scoate în evidență câteva direcții metodologice esențiale pentru activitatea consilierului modern. Prima dintre acestea este integrarea dimensiunii narative, întrucât povestea de viață a individului constituie cadrul în care se construiește identitatea vocațională. Interviurile narative de carieră, tehnicile de tip life-line și analiza metaforelor personale permit persoanei să identifice teme stabile ale propriei biografii, să înțeleagă sensul experiențelor avute și să își definească orizontul de așteptări[18]. Narativitatea nu este doar o tehnică, ci un instrument profund de clarificare a identității profesionale.

Al doilea principiu îl reprezintă dezvoltarea adaptabilității în carieră, o competență-cheie în contextul actual. Adaptabilitatea include resurse precum preocuparea pentru viitor, capacitatea de a exercita control asupra propriilor decizii, curiozitatea față de oportunități și încrederea în propriile forțe[19]. Intervențiile educaționale bazate pe exerciții experiențiale, proiecte de explorare vocațională sau activități reflexive contribuie la consolidarea acestor dimensiuni. Wehmeyer și colaboratorii arată că formarea adaptabilității poate reduce indecizia vocațională și crește reziliența în fața schimbărilor profesionale[20].

Un al treilea principiu metodologic este utilizarea intervențiilor de grup și a formatelor online, care s-au dovedit eficiente în mediul universitar contemporan. Programele structurate în sesiuni succesive permit aprofundarea treptată a temelor de carieră, schimbul de experiență între participanți și dezvoltarea unui sentiment de apartenență la un grup care împărtășește preocupări similare. Studiile lui Carvalho, Mourão și Freitas[21] și ale lui Cardoso et al.[22] arată că intervențiile de grup cresc nivelul de clarificare a obiectivelor profesionale și consolidează adaptabilitatea și motivația intrinsecă. Formatele online, la rândul lor, le permit consilierilor să ajungă la un număr mai mare de studenți, oferind flexibilitate și accesibilitate.

În context românesc, aceste modele internaționale pot fi integrate într-un cadru coerent de consiliere psihopedagogică desfășurat în școli și universități. Un astfel de cadru ar include: module de informare despre trasee educaționale și profesii, ateliere formative pentru dezvoltarea competențelor de decizie și autoreglare, intervenții narative pentru explorarea identității profesionale și activități comunitare, precum mentoratul, voluntariatul sau practica profesională, pentru a facilita contactul direct cu mediul real de muncă. Prin combinarea acestor elemente, consilierea poate deveni un proces cuprinzător, care sprijină atât maturizarea personală, cât și orientarea profesională.

Importanța acestor intervenții este susținută de cercetări recente realizate în contexte educaționale cu resurse limitate. Studiile lui Jude, Maree și Jordaan și ale lui Ruiters și Maree arată că programele moderate ca intensitate, dar bine structurate, cresc curiozitatea față de profesii, întăresc sentimentul de auto-eficacitate și reduc anxietatea decizională la elevii care întâmpină dificultăți în formarea unei identități vocaționale[23]. Aceste rezultate sugerează că investiția în formarea consilierilor și în consolidarea centrelor de consiliere nu este doar o opțiune instituțională, ci o condiție necesară pentru reducerea inegalităților de șanse și pentru promovarea unei culturi a învățării pe tot parcursul vieții.

În esență, consilierul psihopedagogic contemporan trebuie să fie un profesionist multidisciplinar, capabil să îmbine cunoașterea științifică cu sensibilitatea umană, analiza riguroasă cu creativitatea și informația cu empatia. Prin utilizarea unor modele de intervenție integrate și adaptate contextului, consilierul poate deveni un partener real în dezvoltarea tinerilor, ajutându-i să își proiecteze viitorul într-o manieră autentică, conștientă și responsabilă.

Privind ansamblul ideilor discutate, devine evident că orientarea în carieră nu este un simplu moment de alegere, ci un drum care se construiește treptat, în ritmul fiecărei persoane. Consilierea psihopedagogică are forța de a transforma incertitudinea în claritate, frica în curaj și întrebarea „Ce voi fi?” în „Cine devin prin ceea ce fac?”. Ea nu oferă răspunsuri gata făcute, ci creează spațiul necesar pentru ca fiecare tânăr să le descopere pe ale sale.

Într-o societate în care schimbarea este rapidă, iar profesiile se transformă de la o generație la alta, adevărata resursă pe care o poate cultiva educația este omenescul: capacitatea de a reflecta, de a simți, de a greși, de a încerca din nou și de a da sens fiecărui pas. Cariera nu se rezumă la un loc de muncă, ci este povestea întregii noastre vieți profesionale și personale, cu ezitări și reușite, cu reinventări și începuturi noi.

Consilierul nu este un ghid care impune direcții, ci un însoțitor de drum. El ascultă, întreabă, provoacă și sprijină, ajutând persoana să vadă mai clar ceea ce, uneori, este deja acolo: potențial, creativitate, dorința de a deveni mai mult decât este astăzi. În acest sens, consilierea nu închide, ci deschide: ferestre spre vocație, spre sens, spre responsabilitatea de a fi propriul arhitect al viitorului.

Poate că nu există un final rigid atunci când vorbim despre dezvoltarea carierei. Există, mai degrabă, continuitate. Pași mici, proiecte noi, întrebări care se nasc din altele, oameni care ne influențează și momente în care descoperim că drumul este mai valoros decât destinația. Consilierea psihopedagogică devine, astfel, parte din această poveste a devenirii — o lumină care nu indică un singur traseu, ci oferă claritate pentru a-l alege pe cel care ne reprezintă cel mai bine.

În loc de concluzie, poate rămâne această idee: cariera nu ni se dă, ci se construiește. Iar consilierea psihopedagogică este locul în care învățăm să construim cu sens, cu echilibru și cu încredere în noi înșine.

Abstract: The article aims to analyze, from an integrated perspective, the main methodologies, methods, techniques and strategies used in psycho-pedagogical counseling and assistance in the school environment. Starting from conceptual delimitations and from the theoretical models established in the national and international literature, the particularities of psycho-pedagogical counseling as a complex approach to optimize student development, support for the family and support for teachers are highlighted. The evaluation and intervention methods (interview, observation, self-knowledge and personal development techniques, group activities) are presented comparatively, as well as the strategies for designing school counseling programs, with a focus on inter-institutional collaboration and a student-centered approach. In addition, recent directions are discussed, such as the use of technology in counseling and the integration of socio-emotional skills into the curriculum. The analysis capitalizes on both Romanian guidelines and reference works, as well as international contributions in the field of counseling and psychotherapy, in order to outline a culture of educational care and shared responsibility between school, family and community.*

1. Fundamente teoretico-metodologice ale consilierii și asistenței psihopedagogice

Consilierea psihopedagogică reprezintă, în contextul educațional contemporan, un domeniu de interferență între psihologie, științele educației și asistența socială, orientat către sprijinirea dezvoltării armonioase a copilului și optimizarea adaptării sale școlare și socio-emoționale. În literatura de specialitate din România, consilierea psihopedagogică este definită ca un ansamblu structurat de activități de orientare, intervenție, suport emoțional și formare de competențe personale, realizate în strânsă colaborare cu familia și cadrele didactice[1]. Dumitru subliniază că aceasta nu are un rol pur remediativ, ci și unul fundamental preventiv, vizând anticiparea dificultăților și dezvoltarea resurselor elevului[2]. În același sens, Băban accentuează caracterul formativ al consilierii, care contribuie la construcția identității personale, la capacitatea de autoreglare și la dezvoltarea unor competențe de viață independentă[3].

Din punct de vedere metodologic, consilierea psihopedagogică presupune un demers complex, integrativ, care valorifică modele teoretice și practici validate științific. Interdisciplinaritatea ei se regăsește atât în abordările conceptuale, cât și în instrumentele aplicate în evaluare și intervenție. Ea împrumută elemente din psihologia dezvoltării, psihologia educației, psihologia personalității, teoria comunicării, dar și din asistența socială, în special în ceea ce privește colaborarea cu familia și analiza contextelor de risc[4].

Modelele teoretice utilizate frecvent în practica psihopedagogică sunt variate, reflectând pluralitatea paradigmelor educaționale și psihologice. Printre acestea, modelele cognitiv-comportamentale, centrate pe identificarea și restructurarea tiparelor de gândire disfuncționale, sunt apreciate pentru caracterul lor aplicativ și pentru eficiența demonstrată în intervențiile de scurtă durată. Corey consideră că aplicarea tehnicilor cognitiv-comportamentale în școală facilitează dezvoltarea autoreglării și creșterea competențelor elevilor de a gestiona stresul și situațiile problematice[5].

Abordarea umanist-experiențială, fundamentată pe lucrările lui Rogers, pune în centru relația consilier–elev, considerând-o principalul vector al schimbării. În consilierea psihopedagogică, această abordare este relevantă pentru crearea unui climat de acceptare necondiționată și siguranță emoțională, elemente esențiale pentru explorarea experiențelor trăite de elev.

De asemenea, modelele narative și sistemice au câștigat teren în ultimii ani, datorită orientării lor către contextualizare și înțelegerea elevului în rețelele relaționale din care face parte — familie, școală, comunitate. Nelson-Jones insistă asupra integrării perspectivelor sistemice și a tehnicilor centrate pe abilități de viață, argumentând că acestea contribuie la dezvoltarea unei autonomii personale solide și la prevenirea vulnerabilităților psihosociale[6].

Consilierea psihopedagogică nu se desfășoară exclusiv în zona practicilor profesionale individuale, ci este reglementată prin norme, coduri deontologice și ghiduri special elaborate pentru activitatea din unitățile de învățământ. La nivelul sistemului educațional românesc, activitatea consilierilor școlari este ghidată de documente precum Ghidul de bune practici pentru psihologii școlari, realizat în cadrul rețelei centrelor județene, care oferă standarde profesionale, recomandări metodologice și modele de intervenție validate în practică. Acest ghid pune un accent deosebit pe respectarea confidențialității, colaborarea cu factorii educaționali relevanți și adaptarea intervenției la particularitățile elevului și ale grupului[7].

Ghidul didactic pentru profesorul consilier școlar reprezintă un alt reper major, întrucât oferă o structurare detaliată a etapelor de evaluare, proiectare a programelor de intervenție, derulare a activităților și monitorizare a progresului elevilor. Acesta subliniază necesitatea utilizării unei metodologii flexibile, centrate pe nevoile elevului și orientate către promovarea sănătății mentale, a abilităților sociale și a climatului educațional pozitiv[8].

La nivel internațional, standardele stabilite de organisme profesionale precum American School Counselor Association (ASCA) sau British Association for Counselling and Psychotherapy (BACP) promovează un set unitar de principii etice — între care respectul pentru demnitatea elevului, evaluarea continuă a intervenției, colaborarea multidisciplinară și formarea profesională continuă[9]. Aceste principii au căpătat un ecou important și în practica românească, contribuind la ridicarea nivelului de profesionalizare a domeniului.

Școala este privită, în literatura de specialitate, ca un cadru privilegiat pentru desfășurarea consilierii psihopedagogice, datorită accesului direct la elevi, observației naturale a comportamentelor și posibilității de intervenție integrată în mediul lor de învățare. Dumitru subliniază că școala reprezintă primul context social extins în care elevul învață să se raporteze la ceilalți, să colaboreze, să concureze și să își construiască o imagine despre sine, ceea ce transformă consilierea într-un instrument de formare fundamental[10].

Prin urmare, consilierea psihopedagogică devine un element cheie în integrarea elevilor în comunitățile școlare, în prevenirea abandonului școlar, în reducerea comportamentelor de risc și în promovarea unor relații constructive între elevi, profesori și părinți.

II. Metode de evaluare și intervenție în consilierea psihopedagogică

Metodologia consilierii psihopedagogice se operaționalizează printr-un ansamblu de metode calitative și cantitative, alese strategic în funcție de natura situației, de obiectivele consilierii și de particularitățile elevului. Etapa de evaluare reprezintă fundamentul intervenției ulterioare și presupune colectarea sistematică de date pentru înțelegerea problematicii, contextului și resurselor elevului. În literatura românească, evaluarea este considerată o etapă esențială pentru construirea unei imagini complexe a persoanei, evitându-se concluziile pripite sau interpretările unilaterale[11].

Interviul de consiliere este metoda centrală utilizată în această etapă. El poate fi structurat, semistructurat sau liber, în funcție de scopul evaluării și de experiența consilierului. Interviul permite explorarea emoțiilor, gândurilor, dificultăților și motivațiilor elevului, oferind, în același timp, oportunitatea construirii unei relații profesionale bazate pe încredere. Observația sistematică în mediul școlar completează datele obținute din interviu, permițând consilierului să surprindă comportamente relevante în sala de clasă, în pauze, în situații de grup sau în interacțiune cu profesorii. Totodată, analiza produselor activității școlare (teme, portofoliu, proiecte, activități creative) oferă indicii asupra nivelului de motivație, responsabilitate, stilurilor de învățare și patternurilor de adaptare școlară[12].

La acestea se adaugă instrumentele psihologice standardizate, precum chestionare, scale de evaluare socio-emoțională, probe proiective sau instrumente pentru evaluarea anxietății, depresiei, abilităților sociale ori climatului școlar. Utilizarea acestor instrumente oferă un plus de obiectivitate evaluării și permite monitorizarea progresului prin măsurători repetate[13]. În literatura internațională se insistă asupra importanței evaluării multidimensionale, integrate, care combină datele obținute direct de la elev cu cele din partea profesorilor, părinților și colegilor[14].

În etapa de intervenție, literatura de specialitate promovează metode active, experiențiale, care favorizează participarea elevilor și aplicarea conținuturilor la situațiile reale de viață. Printre aceste metode se numără discuția dirijată, jocul de rol, dezbaterea, studiul de caz, brainstormingul, tehnicile de rezolvare de probleme și exercițiile de conștientizare emoțională. Aceste metode sunt descrise detaliat în ghiduri, programe universitare și lucrări pedagogice, fiind considerate instrumente eficiente pentru dezvoltarea abilităților sociale și emoționale, pentru stimularea gândirii critice și pentru exersarea comportamentelor adaptative[15].

Jocul de rol, de exemplu, permite elevului să exploreze alternative comportamentale într-un mediu sigur, să învețe tehnici de comunicare asertivă și să dezvolte empatie, prin asumarea temporară a diferitelor poziții într-o situație interpersonală. Studiul de caz facilitează trecerea de la teorie la aplicabilitate, ajutând elevii să analizeze situații reale sau simulate, să identifice emoții, motive, consecințe și posibile soluții. Brainstormingul stimulează creativitatea, cooperarea și flexibilitatea cognitivă, aspecte esențiale în dezvoltarea socio-emoțională.

Literatura internațională accentuează faptul că metodele participative nu sunt doar tehnici utilizate punctual, ci fac parte dintr-o filozofie educațională orientată către implicarea activă a elevului, autonomia personală și responsabilitatea pentru propriul parcurs de învățare[16].

Unul dintre modelele internaționale influente în structura intervenției psihopedagogice este lifeskills counselling, dezvoltat de Richard Nelson-Jones. Acest model are la bază ideea că scopul consilierii este acela de a forma competențe concrete de viață, utile în gestionarea emoțiilor, relațiilor, situațiilor de stres și luării deciziilor. Modelul este structurat în trei etape – relating, understanding, changing – fiecare având roluri clare în evoluția procesului de consiliere[17].

În etapa de relating, consilierul se concentrează pe construirea unei relații sigure, empatice, nonjudicative, în care elevul se simte ascultat și valorificat. Etapa de understanding presupune clarificarea problematicii, analizarea cogniților și emoțiilor asociate și identificarea patternurilor comportamentale. În etapa de changing, se urmărește implementarea și exersarea unor strategii noi, adaptative, prin tehnici cognitive, comportamentale și experiențiale.

În context psihopedagogic, modelul este adaptat pentru lucrul cu grupuri de elevi, pentru activități în clasă și pentru programe preventive. Prin caracterul său structurat, ușor de implementat și flexibil, modelul este utilizat frecvent în programe de dezvoltare personală, educație emoțională sau prevenție a comportamentelor de risc.

Un principiu metodologic fundamental, prezent atât în lucrările românești, cât și în cele internaționale, este acela al coerenței dintre evaluare și intervenție. Strategiile și tehnicile alese trebuie să reflecte clar problemele identificate în evaluare și obiectivele formulate în planul de intervenție. Douglas și Myers notează că evaluarea continuă, realizată pe tot parcursul procesului de consiliere, permite ajustarea intervenției și crește eficiența demersului[18].

Abordările internaționale insistă asupra integrării intervenției în contextul școlar, prin colaborare cu profesorii și părinții, utilizarea datelor educaționale (abandon, absențe, performanțe), precum și prin monitorizarea progresului socio-emoțional al elevului. Acest demers participativ și colaborativ contribuie la crearea unui cadru educațional incluziv, în care consilierea este privită ca parte integrantă a procesului de dezvoltare a elevului.

III. Tehnici specifice în consilierea și asistența psihopedagogică

Tehnicile utilizate în consilierea și asistența psihopedagogică reprezintă instrumente fundamentale prin care consilierul facilitează procesul de dezvoltare personală, adaptare școlară și optimizare socio-emoțională a elevilor. Literatura de specialitate delimitează mai multe categorii de tehnici, fiecare având roluri distincte în cadrul intervențiilor individuale sau de grup. În principal, acestea includ tehnici de autocunoaștere, tehnici de dezvoltare personală și socio-emoțională, tehnici de sprijin în luarea deciziilor și tehnici de gestionare a situațiilor de criză[19].

Tehnicile de autocunoaștere urmăresc explorarea identității personale, a resurselor interne și a factorilor care influențează comportamentul elevului. În ghidurile destinate consilierilor școlari sunt descrise numeroase metode proiective, precum harta calităților personale, linia vieții, scara reușitelor, colajele tematice sau desenul liber[20]. Aceste instrumente contribuie la conștientizarea punctelor forte, a vulnerabilităților și a modului în care elevul se percepe pe sine în raport cu mediul școlar și social.

Metaforele și povestirile terapeutice reprezintă tehnici suplimentare, cu o eficiență deosebită în lucrul cu copiii și adolescenții. Ele facilitează exprimarea simbolică a emoțiilor și permit abordarea indirectă a dificultăților, reducând rezistența și favorizând autoexplorarea. Literatura internațională confirmă utilitatea acestor tehnici în dezvoltarea insightului și în restructurarea percepțiilor disfuncționale[21].

O altă metodă frecvent utilizată este jurnalul reflexiv, prin care elevii sunt încurajați să își exprime gândurile, emoțiile și experiențele într-un mod structurat. Jurnalul contribuie la creșterea capacității de autoreflecție, la gestionarea stresului și la identificarea tiparelor emoționale recurente. Pe termen lung, această tehnică facilitează autonomia în procesul de dezvoltare personală.

Tehnicile cognitiv-comportamentale ocupă un loc central în consilierea psihopedagogică, dat fiind caracterul lor aplicativ și eficiența demonstrată în numeroase studii clinice și educaționale. În lucrările sale, Corey subliniază valoarea acestui set de tehnici în restructurarea credințelor iraționale, reducerea anxietății, consolidarea încrederii în sine și dezvoltarea unor strategii sănătoase de rezolvare a problemelor[22].

Printre tehnicile cel mai des utilizate în context educațional se numără:

- identificarea distorsiunilor cognitive (catastrofare, etichetare globală, gândire „totul sau nimic”);
- restructurarea cognitivă, prin care elevii învață să formuleze alternative realiste și constructive la gândurile inițiale;
- auto-monitorizarea, ce presupune înregistrarea comportamentelor sau emoțiilor pentru a observa tiparele;

[20] CJRAE ARAD, op.cit.
[22] Ibidem.

- antrenarea abilităților de rezolvare de probleme, prin pași precum definirea problemei, generarea de soluții, evaluarea lor și aplicarea variantei optime.

Aceste tehnici sunt adaptate limbajului și stadiului de dezvoltare al elevilor, fiind simplificate prin materiale vizuale, exerciții ludice sau scenarii specifice vârstei.

În ultimul deceniu, accentul în consilierea școlară s-a mutat tot mai mult către dezvoltarea competenței emoționale, considerată un predictor fundamental al bunăstării psihologice și al succesului școlar. Tehnici precum identificarea și numirea emoțiilor, exprimarea adecvată a stărilor afective, antrenarea empatiei, comunicarea asertivă sau managementul furiei sunt incluse în mod constant în programele de intervenție psihopedagogică.

Studiile internaționale arată că programele de consiliere orientate spre inteligența emoțională contribuie semnificativ la reducerea comportamentelor de risc, la îmbunătățirea climatului școlar și la întărirea relațiilor între elevi și profesori[23]. De asemenea, lucrările OECD (2023) confirmă faptul că elevii cu niveluri ridicate ale abilităților socio-emoționale manifestă reziliență crescută, cooperare, autoreglare și rezultate școlare mai bune[24].

Tehnicile utilizate în dezvoltarea socio-emoțională includ activități individuale, lucrul în grupuri mici sau sesiuni cu clasa, în care elevii exersează scenarii sociale, situații de conflict sau modalități constructive de exprimare a nevoilor. În plus, abordările experiențiale, precum teatrul forum, jocurile de cooperare și activitățile de mindfulness, completează setul tradițional de tehnici, contribuind la creșterea atenției și a conștientizării emoționale.

Intervenția în situații de criză – fie că este vorba despre pierdere, violență, anxietate severă, bullying sau traumă – necesită tehnici specializate, validate științific, și un protocol clar. În astfel de momente, consilierul utilizează tehnici de ascultare activă, stabilizare emoțională, normalizare a reacțiilor, precum și metode de evaluare rapidă a riscului. Manualele internaționale subliniază importanța intervenției imediate, a siguranței elevului și a colaborării cu familia și autoritățile competente[25].

Aceste tehnici au un caracter suportiv, focalizat pe reducerea anxietății și pe recâștigarea sentimentului de control. După etapa acută, se pot utiliza tehnici cognitive, narative sau experiențiale pentru integrarea evenimentului și reconstruirea echilibrului emoțional.

IV. Strategii integrate de consiliere și asistență psihopedagogică în școală Consilierea psihopedagogică în mediul școlar depășește nivelul metodelor și tehnicilor utilizate punctual, incluzând o serie de strategii integrate care conectează intervențiile individuale, activitățile de grup și acțiunile derulate la nivelul întregii comunități educaționale. Aceste strategii se fundamentează pe principiul colaborării și pe ideea că dezvoltarea elevului este un proces complex, influențat de relațiile dintre școală, familie și comunitate. Documentele de bune practici elaborate de centrele județene de resurse educaționale subliniază faptul că un demers eficient presupune cooperarea constantă dintre consilierii școlari, diriginți, profesori, părinți și specialiști din domenii conexe – psihologie, asistență socială, protecția copilului, consiliere vocațională[26].

Aceste documente subliniază necesitatea utilizării unor strategii educaționale centrate pe elev, precum învățarea experiențială, abordările colaborative, proiectele integrative sau activitățile de dezvoltare socio-emoțională. Prin structurarea clară a programelor, consilierii pot asigura continuitatea intervenției, monitorizarea progresului și coerența demersurilor realizate la nivelul clasei și al școlii.

Strategiile integrate de consiliere nu pot funcționa în absența unui cadru de colaborare stabil și bine definit între profesioniști. Literatura de specialitate insistă asupra faptului că intervențiile eficiente sunt cele realizate în echipe multidisciplinare, în care consilierul psihopedagogic lucrează alături de profesori, cadre medicale, psihologi clinicieni, asistenți sociali și membri ai familiei[27]. Interdisciplinaritatea are rolul de a asigura o abordare globală a elevului, ținând cont nu doar de comportamentele observate în sala de clasă, ci și de contextul familial, socio-economic și cultural.

De asemenea, colaborarea cu părinții este considerată un factor predictor al succesului intervențiilor. Implicarea familiei în programele de consiliere – prin întâlniri periodice, ateliere, feedback și sprijin în aplicarea comportamentelor învățate – contribuie la menținerea schimbărilor pe termen lung[28].

La nivel internațional, se manifestă o tendință puternică de integrare a consilierii în viziunea școlii incluzive, în care fiecare elev beneficiază de sprijin pentru a-și atinge potențialul, indiferent de dificultăți, diferențe culturale sau dizabilități. Corey (2017) afirmă că strategiile de consiliere incluzivă presupun adaptarea metodelor la diversitatea elevilor, utilizarea unor intervenții preventive și promovarea unui climat școlar pozitiv, în care colaborarea și respectul reciproc sunt valori fundamentale[29].

În același timp, Nelson-Jones (2013) subliniază importanța consilierii orientate spre abilități de viață (lifeskills counselling), considerând că formarea competențelor emoționale, relaționale și decizionale reprezintă baza unei sănătăți mintale pozitive[30]. În perspectiva acestui curent, consilierea nu este doar o intervenție remediativă, ci un proces educațional continuu, integrat în misiunea școlii.

Datele din rapoartele OECD confirmă faptul că programele centrate pe dezvoltarea socio-emoțională contribuie la reducerea anxietății, îmbunătățirea rezilienței și creșterea performanțelor academice, ceea ce justifică integrarea consilierii într-un cadru instituțional orientat spre bunăstare[31].

Transformările accelerate din educație au impus utilizarea instrumentelor digitale ca parte a strategiilor moderne de consiliere. Platforme online pentru monitorizare emoțională, aplicații pentru managementul stresului, sesiuni de consiliere la distanță și resurse educaționale digitale sunt tot mai des utilizate pentru a extinde accesul elevilor la sprijin specializat.

Nelson-Jones și Corey evidențiază faptul că mediile digitale pot facilita procesul de consiliere dacă sunt utilizate cu discernământ, oferind elevilor flexibilitate, acces rapid la resurse și posibilitatea exprimării într-un cadru perceput ca mai puțin amenințător[32]. În același timp, utilizarea tehnologiei necesită respectarea normelor etice, protejarea datelor personale și menținerea calității comunicării terapeutice[33].

În multe școli internaționale, consilierii implementează platforme de screening socio-emoțional, programe digitale de intervenție cognitiv-comportamentală sau aplicații de mindfulness, integrând tehnologia în strategii de prevenție și intervenție.

În loc de concluzii: spre o cultură a grijii în educație

În esența sa profundă, consilierea și asistența psihopedagogică depășesc cu mult inventarul de metode, tehnici și proceduri care o compun la nivel operațional. Ele se întemeiază pe o anumită etică a relației, pe un mod de a privi ființa umană aflată în devenire și pe disponibilitatea consilierului de a întâmpina fiecare elev cu respect, curiozitate autentică și grijă. Dincolo de rigorile teoretice și instrumentale, ceea ce rămâne esențial este calitatea prezenței umane: capacitatea consilierului de a crea spații sigure, afective și cognitive, în care elevii să poată rosti fără teamă întrebări, îndoieli, neputințe și aspirații.

Școala devine, astfel, mai mult decât un loc al învățării formale; devine un cadru al întâlnirii cu sine și cu ceilalți, un spațiu în care vulnerabilitatea se transformă în resursă de creștere, iar diferența este acceptată ca valoare, nu ca obstacol. Într-o lume educațională marcată de schimbări rapide, incertitudini sociale și presiuni tot mai mari asupra copiilor și adolescenților, rolul consilierului psihopedagogic capătă o importanță vitală. El devine un liant între copil, familie și comunitate, un mediator al sensurilor și un facilitator al echilibrului interior.

A investi în formarea consilierilor, în consolidarea serviciilor de consiliere școlară și în dezvoltarea unei culturi instituționale a colaborării înseamnă a investi în viitorul fiecărui copil. Înseamnă a-i oferi cadrul necesar pentru a crește în siguranță, cu încredere în sine și cu sentimentul profund că nu este singur în procesul propriei deveniri. O cultură a grijii în educație nu este doar un ideal pedagogic, ci o responsabilitate comună – un angajament de a construi școli în care fiecare elev este văzut, auzit și susținut să devină cea mai bună versiune a sa.

Abstract: Starting a career is an intensely emotional stage, marked by vulnerability, uncertainty, and the need to manage complex interactions with students, colleagues, parents and institutional structures. This study explores the role of institutional mentoring in facilitating the emotional adaptation of new teachers, based on the premise that the development of emotional culture and the quality of the mentoring relationship are determining factors for effective professional integration. The research highlights that the professional integration process of novice teachers is strongly influenced by the level of emotional culture, and that the start of a career is a vulnerable stage, marked by intense emotional demands and adaptation difficulties. The analysis of the results obtained by applying the Test for assessing the level of emotional culture (Cojocaru-Borozan, 2009) showed that most novice teachers are at the average level of emotional culture, which indicates the existence of functional affective resources, but still insufficiently consolidated to support an optimal emotional adaptation in the absence of structured external support. These findings emphasize the need for the intervention of institutional mentoring, able to facilitate the process of emotional regulation, fortify affective resources and support professional integration in the first stages of the teaching career.*

Integrarea profesională a cadrelor didactice debutante

Profesia didactică este, în esența ei, una dintre cele mai complexe și mai solicitante profesii socio-umane, deoarece implică gestionarea simultană a proceselor de predare – învățare și evaluare, a relațiilor interpersonale și a dimensiunilor emoționale care însoțesc interacțiunea educațională. Exigențele constante ale activității didactice, dinamica diversă a clasei, responsabilitatea formării elevilor și nevoia de adaptare continuă la schimbările curriculare, tehnologice și sociale transformă această profesie într-un domeniu în care flexibilitatea, stabilitatea emoțională și competența pedagogică devin indispensabile. În acest context, inserția profesională a cadrului didactic debutant constituie o etapă sensibilă a carierei didactice, decisivă, un interval critic, deoarece presupune intrarea în mediul educațional real și implicit confruntarea directă cu schimbarea, cu provocările și propriile vulnerabilități specifice începutului de carieră, precum cele emoționale, pedagogice, organizaționale. Prin urmare, tranziția de la statutul de student, de formabil, la cel de profesionist responsabil de gestionarea mediului educațional este influențată în mod decisiv, pe de o parte de capacitatea debutantului de a gestiona solicitările profesiei, de a-și autoregla emoțiile, de a gestiona incertitudinea și de a dezvolta strategii adaptative în fața situațiilor imprevizibile din mediul școlar, iar pe de altă parte de existența unor mecanisme de sprijin, care să susțină adaptarea blândă din perspectivă emoțională, să contribuie la formarea și consolidarea identității profesionale, la dezvoltarea competențelor necesare exercitării eficiente a profesiei didactice și să faciliteze integrarea coerentă în cultura organizațională a școlii.

Literatura de specialitate națională și internațională (Șerbănescu, L., Bocoș, M.-D., Ioja, I. 2020; Goleman, D., 2018) analizează procesul de inserție profesională a cadrelor didactice debutante și conchide asupra faptului că integrarea profesională trebuie monitorizată permanent și sprijinită prin instrumente instituționale coerente, care să le permită debutanților să facă față într-un mod adecvat solicitărilor emoționale, didactice și organizaționale caracteristice etapelor inițiale ale carierei. Cercetătorii au analizat diferite aspecte ale inserției profesionale, ale etapei de trecere de la formarea inițială la formarea continuă și au evidențiat necesitatea existenței unor forme instituționalizate de mentorat, feedback formativ și ghidaj reflexiv, care să faciliteze adaptarea treptată la cultura școlii și formarea de relații sănătoase, dezvoltarea competențelor didactice și consolidarea identității profesionale. În practica de susținere a debutanților mentoratul se configurează ca o strategie esențială, având un dublu rol: dezvoltarea competențelor didactice și facilitarea adaptării emoționale într-o profesie profund marcată de interacțiuni umane și solicitări afective. Relația de mentorat contribuie la diminuarea impactului cauzat de șocul realității (decalaj semnificativ între așteptările formate în programele de pregătire inițială și complexitatea practică a activității de la clasă), la consolidarea mecanismelor de autoreglare emoțională, la conturarea identității profesionale a cadrului didactic debutant, facilitând o integrare coerentă și durabilă în cultura organizațională a școlii. Relația de mentorat facilitează nu doar învățarea tehnică, ci și acomodarea afectivă, reducerea anxietății profesionale și formarea rezilienței, funcționând ca un catalizator al procesului de integrare profesională și al construirii identității didactice.

Sistemul educațional contemporan traversează o perioadă marcată de transformări rapide și de provocări complexe, care redefinesc continuu rolul și responsabilitățile cadrului didactic. Profesorului îi revine sarcina de a gestiona nu doar cerințele tradiționale ale instruirii, ci și noile presiuni generate de schimbările sociale, tehnologice și curriculare. Ritmul accelerat al acestor transformări amplifică dificultățile prezentului și adaugă un grad ridicat de incertitudine cu privire la viitor, ceea ce face ca profesia didactică să devină tot mai solicitantă. În acest context, cadrele didactice au nevoie, pe lângă o pregătire academică solidă, de un nivel ridicat al inteligenței emoționale, de stabilitate afectivă și de capacitate de autoreglare emoțională, pentru a menține echilibrul personal și profesional într-un climat emoțional adesea complex și imprevizibil. Procesele afective sunt omniprezente în viața individului și interacționează permanent cu procesele cognitive, volitive și motivaționale, contribuind la echilibrul general al personalității. P. Popescu - Neveanu (1978, p.29) descrie afectivitatea ca fiind „proprietatea subiectului de a resimți emoții și sentimente” subliniind caracterul său fundamental în organizarea vieții psihice. Într-o perspectivă complementară, M. Golu (2007, p.30) arată că afectivitatea constituie o componentă indispensabilă a sistemului psihic uman, îndeplinind funcții informațional-reflectorii și reglatoare, prin care individul se raportează atât la propriul Eu, cât și la mediul înconjurător: ”afectivitatea este o componentă esenţială şi indispensabilă la fel de necesară şi logic determinată ca şi oricare altă componentă – cognitivă, motivaţională, volitivă etc. În această calitate, ea trebuie să posede atributele generale ale psihicului – de a fi o modalitate specifică de relaţionare cu lumea şi cu propriul Eu, de a avea o valoare informaţional-reflectorie, respectiv de a semnaliza şi semnifica ceva, de a îndeplini un rol reglator specific, mai mult sau mai puţin evident”. Astfel, autorul consideră că afectivitatea având drept componente fundamentale emoţiile şi sentimentele, „joacă un rol esenţial în relaţionarea omului cu lumea, cu ceilalţi oameni”.

În acord cu numeroși cercetători, emoțiile influențează în mod decisiv viața socială, structurând relațiile interpersonale și determinând climatul psihosocial al grupului. Ele reprezintă o sursă esențială de informații adaptative, facilitând înțelegerea mediului social și contribuind la trăiri pozitive, precum bucuria, coeziunea sau sentimentul de apartenență (Aktar, S., 2018; Baciu, S., Shapiro, S., 2020; Brillon, M., 2010; Cosnier, J., 2002; Zlate, M., 1996). Omului îi este impus să se adapteze permanent la nou, la timpuri noi, la contexte provocatoare, dovedind capacitate de adaptare. Cercetătorii în domeniu au reliefat faptul că nu există situație socială sau influență comunicațională care să nu fie filtrate și evaluate afectiv și implicit să genereze răspunsuri și stări emoționale. Într-o eră caracterizată de incertitudine și transformări accelerate, cadrul didactic este nevoit să își construiască propria direcție profesională într-un mediu lipsit de repere stabile și de ghidaje predefinite pentru provocările actuale. Adaptarea la realitățile educaționale ale mileniului III presupune nu doar flexibilitate cognitivă și deschidere spre digitalizare, ci și capacitatea de a gestiona un mediu profesional turbulent, în care schimbarea este constantă. Reușita profesorului modern se întemeiază pe abilitatea sa de a confrunta dificultățile, de a răspunde creator situațiilor noi și de a deveni propriul său ghid, asumând totodată responsabilitatea ghidării elevilor și a colegilor debutanți. Activitatea didactică a profesorului depășește, astfel, registrul tradițional al vocației și talentului, implicând un proces riguros de formare continuă care include achiziția de cunoștințe teoretice, dezvoltarea de abilități, competențe și atitudini profesionale, precum și asumarea unor roluri multiple.

Această complexitate definește profesionalismul didactic actual, ancorat simultan în competență pedagogică, echilibru emoțional și capacitate adaptativă.

Contextul profesional actual solicită fiecărui cadru didactic, și cu atât mai mult debutanților, o permanentă ajustare la schimbare, o gestionare echilibrată a solicitărilor și o capacitate refăcută de rezistență emoțională. Nu este vorba exclusiv despre acumularea de cunoștințe noi, ci despre un proces profund de interpretare a mesajelor transmise de propriile emoții și de emoțiile celorlalți, înțelegând modul în care acestea influențează deciziile, comportamentele și relațiile profesionale. În activitatea zilnică, profesorul este expus unui flux constant de emoții generate de interacțiunile umane, iar succesul sau eșecul profesional depinde în bună măsură de abilitatea de a evalua și gestiona adecvat aceste experiențe afective. În numeroase situații, dificultățile profesionale nu derivă din lipsa competențelor didactice, ci din incapacitatea de a identifica și gestiona sursele emoționale ale problemelor. Cercetătoarea Geetu Bharwaney (2020) subliniază că „nu e suficient să fii inteligent, competent și isteț. Pentru a-ți atinge potențialul maxim ai nevoie de adaptare și reziliență emoțională", evidențiind rolul major al emoțiilor în orientarea acțiunilor și în menținerea performanței profesionale. Potrivit acesteia, emoțiile „influențează ce facem și cum facem, ne motivează să abordăm prioritățile vieții și contribuie decisiv la succes, productivitate și eficacitate personală". Tot ea afirmă că, „oriunde există emoții, este necesară reziliența emoțională ca fundament al adaptabilității și agilității umane", considerând reziliența o strategie complexă de autoreglare și de optimizare a relațiilor interpersonale.

În acest cadru profesional încărcat emoțional, debutanții sunt categoria cea mai vulnerabilă, iar nevoia lor de sprijin depășește dezvoltarea competențelor tehnice ale profesiei. Ei au nevoie de acompaniere în gestionarea presiunilor emoționale, a incertitudinii și a sentimentelor de inadecvare specifice începutului de carieră. Prin urmare, mentoratul instituțional, ca formă organizată de suport socio-emoțional și profesional, devine o condiție esențială pentru adaptarea lor eficientă. Mentorul, prin experiență și disponibilitate empatică, facilitează înțelegerea și gestionarea emoțiilor, modelează comportamente reziliente și contribuie la consolidarea identității profesionale, transformând procesul debutului într-o tranziție sustenabilă și echilibrată. Exercitarea profesiei didactice presupune formarea și manifestarea unui ansamblu de competențe de bază, care derivă din diversitatea rolurilor pe care cadrul didactic le îndeplinește în școală. Practica educațională relevă complexitatea acestor roluri și arată că un profesor performant trebuie să dispună de trei categorii majore de competențe. Prima categorie o constituie competența profesională didactică, definită prin capacitatea de a stabili conexiuni funcționale între cunoașterea teoretică și aplicarea ei în contexte de învățare. În calitate de arhitect al procesului educațional, profesorul realizează selecția și structurarea informațiilor, le adaptează nivelului de dezvoltare al elevilor și le integrează în experiențe de învățare relevante. Acest rol presupune gândire pedagogică flexibilă, discernământ profesional și capacitatea de a proiecta situații didactice coerente. A doua categorie este competența psiho-socială și managerială, fundamentată pe responsabilitatea profesională și etica socială a profesiei didactice. Profesorul modern trebuie să fie capabil să construiască și să mențină relații de colaborare cu toți actorii implicați în procesul instructiv–educativ: colegi, conducere, specialiști, comunitate. Aceste competențe includ și abilități organizaționale: gestionarea eficientă a resurselor, coordonarea activităților individuale și de grup, asumarea deciziilor și diversificarea sarcinilor în acord cu standardele profesionale și cu principiile deontologiei didactice. A treia categorie este competența relațională, orientată spre dezvoltarea unor raporturi constructive cu beneficiarii educației – elevi, părinți și membri ai comunității. Profesorul este chemat să armonizeze rolurile profesionale cu propriile trăsături de personalitate și să adopte o conduită activă în facilitarea învățării. Aceasta presupune accesibilizarea conținuturilor, moderarea dialogului pedagogic, ghidarea elevilor și oferirea unor alternative de acțiune, în scopul dezvoltării autonome a acestora.

În mod firesc, cadrul didactic nu lucrează cu „clienți" individuali, ci cu grupuri eterogene de elevi, a căror evoluție este strâns influențată de familii și de comunitatea locală. În acest context, profesorul asumă treptat rolul de consilier educațional: observă cu sensibilitate comportamentul elevilor, intervine prin sfaturi relevante, ghidează procesele socio-emoționale din clasă și contribuie la coeziunea grupului. În practică, eficiența profesorului este adesea apreciată prin abilitățile sale de gestionare a clasei, de valorificare a autonomiei profesionale și de menținere a unui climat educațional echilibrat (Cosmovici, A., 1998). Noul rol al cadrului didactic, acela de consilier și mediator al relațiilor educaționale, solicită în mod direct dezvoltarea unui nivel ridicat de inteligență emoțională. Înțelegerea propriilor trăiri, capacitatea de autoreglare emoțională și empatia devin condiții esențiale pentru gestionarea situațiilor școlare complexe și pentru susținerea elevilor. În lipsa acestor competențe, profesorul riscă să fie copleșit de presiunile emoționale ale activității didactice. În acest cadru, mentoratul instituțional capătă o valoare strategică, întrucât îi sprijină pe debutanți în formarea acestor competențe complexe, facilitând trecerea de la înțelegerea teoretică a rolului didactic la aplicarea lui în contexte reale. Mentorul devine model de comportament profesional și emoțional, oferind debutantului repere de reglare afectivă, tehnici de gestionare a relațiilor și suport pentru consolidarea identității profesionale.

Școala contemporană rămâne, în multe situații, focalizată predominant pe excelența cognitivă, neglijând adesea barierele emoționale care se formează în urma interacțiunilor dintre actorii educaționali – elevi, profesori, manageri, părinți și comunitate. Emoțiile generate de aceste interacțiuni influențează în mod direct tiparele de adaptare sau inadaptare, facilitând sau, dimpotrivă, blocând integrarea în cultura organizațională a școlii. Studiile arată că dificultățile debutanților în adaptarea la mediul școlar sunt adesea consecința unei formări inițiale puternic teoretizate, care nu include suficient experiențe de practică reflexivă și nu pregătește noii profesori pentru complexitatea reală a vieții emoționale și relaționale din școală (Iordan, I., 2017). În aceeași direcție, Emil Păun (1999) subliniază că climatul organizațional școlar include „ansamblul stărilor emoționale”, iar instituția de învățământ funcționează ca un veritabil spațiu al psihologiei colective, unde afectele individuale și cele de grup se intercondiționează. Prin urmare, integrarea profesională a cadrelor didactice nu poate fi privită exclusiv din perspectiva acumulării de competențe academice, ci trebuie înțeleasă și ca proces de adaptare emoțională la dinamica umană specifică mediului școlar. Confruntat zilnic cu sarcini complexe în plan personal, familial, social și profesional, cadrul didactic – cu atât mai mult profesorul debutant – este chemat să gestioneze tensiuni emoționale diverse și să identifice un echilibru între responsabilități multiple. Aceste provocări au în comun dimensiunea afectivă, iar modul în care profesorul își interpretează și reglează emoțiile devine decisiv pentru reușita integrării.

O abordare inteligentă din punct de vedere emoțional, care să includă autocunoaștere, autoreglare, empatie și gestionarea relațiilor, reprezintă cheia adaptării eficiente la oameni, situații și cerințe noi. În consecință, integrarea socio-profesională trebuie privită ca un proces complex, de asimilare treptată a valorilor, normelor și comportamentelor instituției, dar și de armonizare a personalității noului angajat cu dinamica grupului profesional. Pentru ca această integrare să fie rapidă și sustenabilă, noul cadru didactic are nevoie atât de informații referitoare la structura organizării școlare, cât și de sprijin explicit în înțelegerea relațiilor interpersonale și a aspectelor emoționale ale profesiei. Integrarea nu presupune doar acordarea unui suport inițial, ci și o observare continuă pe parcursul unei perioade extinse de după angajare, astfel încât să poată fi identificate interesele, atitudinile, aspirațiile, ritmul de evoluție și reacțiile la contextul profesional. În acest proces, finalitatea integrării o constituie dezvoltarea unui sentiment autentic de apartenență la instituție, urmată de interiorizarea viziunii, valorilor și misiunii acesteia. Pentru realizarea acestui obiectiv, școlile au responsabilitatea de a cultiva o veritabilă cultură emoțională instituțională – o cultură în care emoțiile sunt înțelese, recunoscute, validate și valorificate ca resurse ale învățării și dezvoltării profesionale. Managerii instituției, împreună cu mentorii desemnați, trebuie să identifice și să implementeze strategii de adaptare socio-emoțională care să sprijine debutanții în procesul integrării. Prin mentorat instituțional – conceput ca practică sistemică, nu ca inițiativă individuală – debutanții primesc ghidaj afectiv, profesional și relațional, sunt încurajați să reflecteze asupra propriilor emoții și comportamente și sunt susținuți în construirea unei identități profesionale stabile și reziliente.

Astfel, dezvoltarea culturii emoționale a școlii și valorificarea mentoratului instituțional se conturează ca două direcții complementare, indispensabile pentru adaptarea, echilibrul și performanța cadrelor didactice debutante într-un mediu educațional tot mai complex și imprevizibil. Înțelegerea rolului emoțiilor în integrarea profesională a cadrelor didactice devine esențială în contextul actual, în care practica educațională nu mai poate fi redusă la dimensiunea cognitivă sau la acumularea de cunoștințe teoretice. Adaptarea eficientă, continuitatea carierei și formarea identității profesionale depind în mare măsură de modul în care profesorii își gestionează emoțiile și le valorifică în interacțiunile sociale și profesionale. Această perspectivă deschide discuția asupra conceptului de cultură emoțională și asupra impactului său decisiv în procesul integrării socio-profesionale a debutanților.

Societatea contemporană este marcată de o dinamică accelerată a transformărilor în toate dimensiunile sale – tehnologice, sociale, culturale și profesionale. Această realitate impune individului o capacitate sporită de adaptare la schimbare, iar mediul profesional, în special cel educațional, devine un spațiu în care stabilitatea emoțională este constant pusă la încercare. În acest context, latura afectivă a personalității nu se reduce la simple emoții de moment, ci se structurează într-un veritabil profil emoțional care influențează modul în care persoana reacționează, se integrează și evoluează în rolul profesional. Adaptarea și acomodarea profesorului – facilă sau dificilă – în procesul integrării profesionale sunt profund influențate de cultura emoțională a cadrelor didactice, un construct teoretic care reflectă modul în care emoțiile sunt înțelese, exprimate și gestionate în mediul educațional. În accepțiunea cercetătoarei Maia Cojocaru-Borozan (2014), „cultura emoțională constituie o entitate complexă, integrată organic în structura personalității, determinată socioprofesional, care pune în evidență comportamente socialmente învățate, exprimate în competențe emoționale". Această definire conferă culturii emoționale statutul de dimensiune fundamentală în formarea identității profesorului și în realizarea adaptării emoționale în contexte educaționale încărcate afectiv.

Pornind de la aceste premise, cultura emoțională poate fi considerată coordonata centrală care orientează integrarea profesională a cadrelor didactice. Ea permite o reacție flexibilă în situații solicitante, echilibrează relația dintre cognitiv și afectiv și contribuie la menținerea stabilității emoționale în situații de presiune, incertitudine sau conflict. Adaptarea profesorului la cerințele profesiei implică, astfel, o sinteză între competențele cognitive și cele emoționale – sinteză în care inteligența emoțională devine un liant indispensabil.

Cercetători consacrați ai domeniului afectivității (Zagaievschi, C., 2013, Goleman, D., 2018; Mayer, J. – D., 2016, Segal, J., 1997) au evidențiat prin studii solide faptul că inteligența academică, centrată pe cunoștințe și competențe teoretice, contribuie doar parțial la integrarea profesională și la succesul în carieră. Aceștia argumentează că eficiența profesională este influențată în proporție mult mai mare de componenta emoțională, de capacitatea individului de a-și recunoaște emoțiile, de a le gestiona și de a le utiliza în interacțiunile sociale. Concentrarea exclusivă pe raționalitate, în detrimentul dimensiunii emoționale, poate genera dezechilibre intrapersonale și interpersonale, conducând la apariția unor dificultăți de adaptare, comunicare sau performanță. În schimb, dezvoltarea unei culturi emoționale solide mobilizează întreg potențialul uman al cadrului didactic, favorizând progresul intelectual, afectiv, relațional și profesional. Capacitatea de a recunoaște, interpreta și controla emoțiile reprezintă un predictor esențial al performanțelor la locul de muncă și al calității interacțiunilor umane. Studiile menționaților cercetători arată că un nivel ridicat al inteligenței emoționale conduce la rezultate superioare în activitatea practică, la relații profesionale sănătoase și la o integrare mai rapidă și mai stabilă în mediul educațional.

Analiza relației dintre emoție și adaptare realizată de Richard Lazarus (2011) evidențiază efectele imediate și de durată pe care experiențele emoționale le produc asupra individului. Autorul plasează în centrul studiului proceselor emoționale relația dintre individ și mediul înconjurător, considerând că unitatea fundamentală a acestei relații este „întâlnirea adaptativă" (adaptational encounter) sau episodul adaptativ. În unele situații, astfel de episoade vizează interese imediate, concrete și limitate în timp, în timp ce în altele se leagă de probleme existențiale majore, care se desfășoară pe perioade îndelungate sau chiar pe parcursul întregii vieți.

Cultura emoțională, analizată în profunzime de Maia Cojocaru-Borozan (2014), este recunoscută pentru contribuția sa decisivă la creșterea nivelului de adaptare socio-psihologică în etapa integrării profesionale. Cercetările investigate ne fac să admitem faptul că formarea inițială a cadrelor didactice, axată în principal pe aspectele teoretice, susțin parțial inserția pe direcția profesională, fiind oportun să afirmăm faptul că, în cazul cadrelor didactice debutante, cultura emoțională ar trebui să se afle într-o relație de complementaritate cu cultura profesională încă de la începutul carierei, pentru ca integrarea în mediul școlar să se realizeze rapid, eficient și într-un cadru de echilibru emoțional. Această simbioză poate fi susținută, în mod esențial, de relația de mentorat instituțional, care oferă debutanților atât repere profesionale, cât și suport în înțelegerea și valorificarea propriilor experiențe emoționale. Mentorul facilitează interpretarea corectă a trăirilor, gestionează alături de debutant provocările emoționale specifice debutului și sprijină consolidarea identității profesionale prin valorizarea nevoilor afective. Astfel, cultura emoțională, consolidată prin sprijinul mentoratului, devine un pilon fundamental al integrării profesionale și al dezvoltării rezilienței emoționale în contextul complex al mediului educațional, susținând în mod firesc ipoteza conform căreia un nivel înalt al culturii emoționale, însoțit de o relație de mentorat eficientă, determină o adaptare emoțională superioară a cadrelor didactice debutante în etapa integrării profesionale.

Lotul de subiecți antrenați pentru evaluarea și determinarea nivelului de cultură emoțională al cadrelor didactice a fost investigat utilizând Testul pentru aprecierea nivelului de cultură emoțională (Cojocaru-Borozan, M., 2014). Acest instrument, construit pe baza unui cadru teoretic solid și validat în studii anterioare, permite analiza structurilor emoționale care stau la baza comportamentelor adaptative ale profesorilor. Testul urmărește identificarea competențelor emoționale manifestate, a trăsăturilor afective dominante și a modului în care acestea se reflectă în interacțiunile profesionale ale cadrelor didactice. În selecția acestui test am urmărit atât validarea științifică de care instrumentul beneficiază, cât și posibilitatea de a corela rezultatele sale cu cercetările din domeniul mentoratului. În acest sens, Testul pentru aprecierea nivelului de cultură emoțională oferă un cadru conceptual solid pentru evaluarea competențelor emoționale ale cadrelor didactice și permite o analiză integrată a modului în care acestea se reflectă în adaptarea socio-emoțională din perioada debutului profesional. Utilizarea acestui instrument facilitează identificarea resurselor afective personale, precum și a zonelor vulnerabile care pot beneficia direct de sprijinul mentoratului instituțional. Prin corelarea scorurilor obținute la test cu datele privind calitatea relației de mentorat, devine posibilă investigarea ipotezei conform căreia dezvoltarea culturii emoționale și eficiența sprijinului oferit de mentor contribuie în mod semnificativ la adaptarea emoțională a cadrelor didactice debutante. Astfel, selecția testului se justifică atât prin valoarea sa diagnostică, cât și prin utilitatea sa în fundamentarea unei analize complexe a procesului de integrare profesională în mediul școlar.

Analiza rezultatelor obținute pentru lotul de 55 cadre didactice indică următoarea distribuție procentuală pe niveluri:

- Nivel scăzut: 1 cadru didactic → 1,8%. Apare izolat, specific debutanților cu vechime foarte mică sau experiență emoțională insuficientă. Debutul profesional poate genera emoții intense, iar cadrul didactic aflat la acest nivel poate întâmpina dificultăți în gestionarea situațiilor solicitante, în menținerea calmului și în autoreglare. Literatura de specialitate confirmă că persoanele din această zonă au nevoie de intervenții personalizate, sprijin emoțional imediat și expunere graduală la situații complexe. Un program de mentorat bine structurat poate preveni multiplicarea dificultăților emoționale și poate transforma vulnerabilul într-un profesor stabil emoțional.
- Nivel mediu: 25 cadre didactice → 45,5%. Reprezintă categoria dominantă în lot. Profesorii din această zonă prezintă resurse emoționale funcționale, dar inegale. Profesorii aflați la nivel mediu manifestă o variabilitate emoțională ridicată: pot gestiona situațiile obișnuite, dar se destabilizează în contexte noi, conflictuale sau ambigue. Aceștia sunt cei care beneficiază cel mai mult de sprijinul mentorului, fiind într-o fază optimă de dezvoltare, în care intervenția mentorului are impact maximum. Literatura de specialitate consultată arată că profesorii cu nivel mediu evoluează semnificativ atunci când primesc feedback reflexiv, când sunt sprijiniți în interpretarea propriilor emoții, când li se oferă modele de reacție echilibrată. În absența mentoratului, mulți rămân blocați în această zonă, neatingând potențialul „peste mediu”.
- Nivel peste mediu: 24 cadre didactice → 43,6%. Indice al unei maturități emoționale consolidate. Acești profesori au dezvoltat o bună capacitate de autoreglare și adaptare, ceea ce confirmă rolul experienței profesionale și al formărilor continue. Acești profesori se constituie în motorul emoțional al școlii. Cadrele didactice din acest nivel sunt „stabilizate emoțional”, cu mecanisme de autoreglare funcționale și eficiente. Ei fac față situațiilor de criză, solicitărilor complexe și diverselor presiuni instituționale. Reprezintă baza ideală pentru constituirea unui corp de mentori instruiți, deoarece posedă deja un capital emoțional solid și disponibilitatea de a susține colegii. Prezența lor în proporție aproape egală cu nivelul mediu este benefică pentru climatul școlii: creează un efect de modelare pozitivă.
- Nivel ridicat: 5 cadre didactice → 9%. Profesorii cu cea mai avansată cultură emoțională, pe care îi putem numi „nucleul emoțional de excelență” al organizației. Manifestează reziliență consolidată, echilibru emoțional în situații limită, empatie autentică și stabilitate afectivă. Sunt frecvent resursă pentru alții, posedând capacitate ridicată de a regla emoțiile celorlalți. Sunt cei mai potriviți pentru a deveni mentori experți, având atât maturitate emoțională, cât și experiență profesională. În contextul unor politici educaționale moderne, cadrele didactice din acest nivel pot fi implicate în: programe de mentorat, formarea continuă, activități de coaching, grupuri de învățare profesională.

La unul dintre poli se află persoanele cu un nivel scăzut al culturii emoționale, neadaptative, iar la celălalt pol se află persoanele cu un nivel ridicat al culturii emoționale, stabile emoțional, ușor adaptabile. Demersul investigativ realizat, evidențiază faptul că majoritatea cadrelor didactice din lotul analizat s-au situat între cei doi poli, spre centru. Distribuția pe niveluri indică o piramidă emoțională stabilă, cu majoritatea cadrelor didactice situate între nivel mediu și peste mediu. Această configurație este ideală pentru implementarea unui program eficient de mentorat, întrucât există atât profesori cu disponibilitate mare de dezvoltare (45,5% nivel mediu), cât și un nucleu puternic de mentori potențiali (43,6% peste mediu + 9,0% nivel ridicat). Cadrele didactice aflate la început de carieră se regăsesc aproape în totalitate în zona nivelului mediu de cultură emoțională, fapt ce confirmă vulnerabilitatea emoțională asociată perioadei de debut și întărește necesitatea unui sprijin sistematic prin mentorat instituțional. Deși debutanții dispun de resurse emoționale de bază, acestea necesită consolidare pentru a asigura o adaptare emoțională optimă și o integrare profesională stabilă. Nivelul scăzut (1,8%) apare ca un fenomen izolat, asociat debutanților cu experiență emoțională insuficientă, ceea ce indică în mod explicit vulnerabilitatea debutului de carieră și necesitatea unei intervenții timpurii prin mentorat. În același timp, proporția ridicată a cadrelor didactice cu nivel peste mediu (43,6%) și ridicat (9,0%) indică existența unui nucleu profesional matur, cu competențe emoționale consolidate, care poate deveni un factor-cheie în sprijinirea adaptării debutanților. Prin exercitarea rolului de mentor, aceste cadre didactice experimentate pot facilita procesul de reglare emoțională, pot modela comportamente adaptative și pot contribui la construirea unei culturi emoționale sănătoase în instituție, esențială pentru integrarea și dezvoltarea socio-profesională a profesorilor aflați la început de drum.

În ansamblu, distribuția rezultatelor confirmă ipoteza cercetării potrivit căreia nivelul culturii emoționale influențează semnificativ adaptarea profesională, iar mentoratul instituțional reprezintă mecanismul-cheie prin care vulnerabilitățile emoționale ale debutanților pot fi diminuate, iar potențialul emoțional al profesorilor experimentați poate fi valorificat în beneficiul comunității școlare. Astfel, cultura emoțională și mentoratul se conturează ca doi piloni complementari ai integrării profesionale reușite, susținând dezvoltarea rezilienței emoționale și a identității didactice într-un mediu educațional marcat de solicitări crescute și dinamici afective complexe.

Aplicarea acestui instrument a permis conturarea unui profil emoțional detaliat al participanților, evidențiind atât resursele afective personale, cât și vulnerabilitățile care pot îngreuna adaptarea la responsabilitățile profesionale. Rezultatele au arătat că nivelurile diferite ale culturii emoționale influențează modul în care cadrele didactice gestionează situațiile provocatoare din mediul școlar, confirmând faptul că integrarea profesională nu este un proces exclusiv tehnic, ci profund emoțional. În acest context, evaluarea culturii emoționale a devenit suportul necesar pentru corelarea ulterioară cu indicatorii adaptării emoționale și cu dimensiunile calității relației de mentorat. Astfel, analiza nu doar a competențelor emoționale, ci și a limitelor acestora a evidențiat nevoia unui sprijin structurat, personalizat și continuu, sprijin pe care mentoratul instituțional îl poate oferi în mod eficient debutanților. Instrumentul a scos în relief faptul că, pentru cadrele didactice aflate la început de carieră, cultura emoțională nu poate fi consolidată exclusiv prin formare inițială, ci necesită acompaniere în contexte reale de practică. În această perspectivă, mentoratul devine un element indispensabil al integrării profesionale, deoarece facilitează dezvoltarea competențelor emoționale, modelează strategii de autoreglare și susține debutanții în gestionarea provocărilor socio-emoționale specifice primilor ani de activitate. Prin urmare, aplicarea testului a demonstrat în mod argumentat că mentoratul nu este un supliment opțional, ci o nevoie structurală în procesul adaptării emoționale, justificând rolul său esențial în verificarea ipotezei centrale a cercetării.

Esența unui sistem educațional de succes o constituie profesorii, întrucât aceștia reprezintă pilonul transformator al procesului de învățare, având capacitatea să inspire, să adapteze curriculum-ul la nevoile individuale și să cultive nu doar intelectul, ci și caracterul elevilor. Profesorii au nevoie de resurse și programe de formare și îndrumare care să-i pregătească pentru integrarea tehnologiei, gestionarea diversității în clasă și aplicarea metodelor active de predare, în esență creşterea calităţii şi eficienţei procesului educaţional. Analizând cercetările din domeniu, dascălii se reconfigurează din simpli transmițători de informații, în arhitecți ai curiozității, mediatori ai tehnologiei și modelatori de valori. Ei stau la intersecția dintre inovație și tradiție, transformând teorii abstracte în lecții de viață și echipând elevii cu instrumente pentru a naviga într-o lume în continuă schimbare.

Demersul nostru investigativ a condus spre ideea că rolul profesorului se redefinește: i se solicită să cultive nu doar cunoștințe, ci capacitatea de a învăța continuu, de a se adapta și de a reacționa creativ la necunoscut. Paradigma nouă presupune resurse (de infrastructură, pentru formarea profesorilor), dar și schimbarea mentalităților (renunțarea la standardele rigide în favoarea flexibilității). Ne-am alăturat opiniei cercetătoarei din Republica Moldova, Viorica Goraș–Postică (2020), care exprimată clar ideea de ”revizuire” a rolurilor profesorului: ”rolul de facilitator al procesului educațional și de consilier avizat ia locul celui de transmițător de cunoștințe” și se consolidează rolul de comunicator, ”îndrumător persuasiv”, consilier, ghid, ”agent motivator”, ”profesionist reflexiv” pentru actorii educaționali. Cercetătoarea propune o axă valorică a consilierii prin care mentoratul capătă atât un rol preventiv, prin gestionarea emoțiilor și stresului, cât și un rol progresiv, prin îmbogățirea autoreflecției și a sensului profesional. Bazată pe analiza de surse teoretice relevante, autoarea demonstrează că, în contextul schimbărilor din societate și nevoii de formare a unui tip adaptat de profesor, școala trebuie să valorifice rolul de facilitator, de mentor al cadrului didactic. În acest context, mentorii capătă abilități de susținere emoțională și spirituală, nu doar de ordine tehnico-profesională.

În contextul actual al școlii supuse unui proces accelerat de transformare, adaptare și conectare la realitățile sociale, economice și tehnologice, activitatea de mentorat nu mai poate fi redusă la o simplă îndrumare tehnică sau un transfer de experiență. Ea se conturează ca o formă complexă de formare profesională diferențiată și contextualizată, în care mentorul devine partener reflexiv, sprijin adaptativ și facilitator al dezvoltării personale și profesionale a cadrelor didactice aflate la început de drum, reunind toate cele trei tipuri de sprijin necesare: cel emoțional, prin validarea trăirilor, reducerea anxietății debutului, diminuarea izolării profesionale și încurajarea autonomiei, cel profesional, prin îndrumare metodologică, exemplificare de bune practici și construirea unui parcurs de învățare personalizat, și cel instituțional, prin sprijin în înțelegerea culturii organizaționale, a regulilor formale și a dinamicilor informale ale colectivului școlar.

Abordarea complexă a educației face din mentor nu doar un formator, ci un catalizator al integrării și un vector al profesionalizării, o verigă esențială în lanțul profesionalizării carierei didactice, accelerând procesul de adaptare și favorizând asumarea identității profesionale, cu impact atât asupra debutantului, cât și asupra culturii organizaționale a școlii.

Mentoratul devine un mecanism esențial pentru dezvoltarea culturii emoționale a debutanților, întrucât facilitează înțelegerea și gestionarea variabilelor afective care influențează adaptarea profesională. Relația de mentorat oferă cadrul sigur în care profesorii aflați la început de carieră își pot recunoaște vulnerabilitățile emoționale, pot învăța strategii de reglare afectivă și pot transforma experiențele emoționale dificile în resurse de dezvoltare. Prin feedback continuu, sprijin empatic și modelare comportamentală, mentorul contribuie la consolidarea culturii emoționale nu doar la nivel individual, ci și la nivel instituțional, influențând climatul relațional al școlii și susținând formarea unei comunități profesionale reziliente și colaborative. În acest fel, mentoratul devine liantul dintre adaptarea emoțională, învățarea profesională și integrarea durabilă în cultura organizațională a școlii.

Abstract: The article analyzes the key concepts of the negotiation process in the context of educational leadership, highlighting negotiation as an essential competence for educational leaders. The functions of negotiation – such as harmonization of interests and decision-making – are presented, along with its main characteristics: interactivity, interdependence of the parties and the goal of consensus.

It also describes the stages of the negotiation process (preparation, dialogue, agreement formulation and implementation), as well as its structural components: the actors involved, interests, the object of negotiation and the strategies applied. The article emphasizes the importance of an ethical and strategic approach to negotiation, which contributes to the effectiveness of educational leadership and the development of a collaborative organizational climate.

În contextul transformărilor profunde ale sistemului educațional contemporan, instituțiile de educație timpurie sunt tot mai frecvent puse în fața unor provocări complexe ce presupun luarea unor decizii echilibrate, implicarea diverselor categorii de actori educaționali și medierea intereselor divergente. În acest sens, negocierea educațională devine o competență esențială a managerului din educația timpurie, contribuind semnificativ la menținerea unui climat organizațional sănătos, la gestionarea conflictelor și la dezvoltarea parteneriatelor educaționale eficiente. Aceste responsabilități impun dezvoltarea unor competențe manageriale complexe, dintre care competența de negociere ocupă un loc central, fiind esențială pentru luarea deciziilor, medierea conflictelor și comunicarea eficientă cu toți actorii implicați în procesul educațional.

Studiile de specialitate indică faptul că această competență este insuficient valorificată în activitatea managerială curentă, din cauza lipsei unei formări sistematice și practice în domeniul negocierii. Astfel, cercetarea de față își propune să evidențieze necesitatea formării competenței de negociere la managerii instituțiilor de educație timpurie și să contribuie la conturarea unor repere teoretice și practice în acest sens.

Actualitatea subiectului cercetat este susținut și de discrepanțele existente între mediul rural și cel urban în ceea ce privește accesul la formare profesională continuă, resursele disponibile, nivelul de implicare comunitară și dinamica echipelor educaționale; reflectă realitățile și provocările cu care se confruntă astăzi managerii din domeniul educațional. Într-un context marcat de schimbări sociale, diversitate culturală și reforme curriculare, conducerea eficientă a grădinițelor presupune nu doar competențe administrative, ci și abilități de comunicare, mediere și negociere. Managerii trebuie să găsească soluții echilibrate în relația cu cadrele didactice, părinții, autoritățile locale și alți parteneri educaționali, pentru a asigura un climat organizațional sănătos și orientat spre dezvoltarea copilului. Astfel, negocierea educațională devine o competență esențială pentru prevenirea conflictelor, consolidarea colaborării și implementarea unor decizii strategice care să răspundă nevoilor reale ale instituției și comunității. În mediul urban, managerii beneficiază mai frecvent de oportunități de dezvoltare profesională, acces la formatori specializați și rețele de sprijin interinstituționale. În schimb, în mediul rural, managerii sunt adesea nevoiți să își asume un număr mai mare de roluri administrative și educaționale, în condiții de resurse limitate și colaborare redusă, ceea ce accentuează nevoia de dezvoltare a competenței de negociere ca instrument de adaptare și eficientizare managerială. Într-un context marcat de schimbări sociale, diversitate culturală și reforme curriculare, conducerea eficientă a grădinițelor presupune nu doar competențe administrative, ci și abilități de comunicare, mediere și negociere. Managerii trebuie să găsească soluții echilibrate în relația cu cadrele didactice, părinții, autoritățile locale și alți parteneri educaționali, pentru a asigura un climat organizațional sănătos și orientat spre dezvoltarea copilului. Astfel, negocierea educațională devine o competență esențială pentru prevenirea conflictelor, consolidarea colaborării și implementarea unor decizii strategice care să răspundă nevoilor reale ale instituției și comunității.

Pe fondul acestor realități, subiectul cercetării devine deosebit de actual, întrucât urmărește să ofere soluții concrete pentru consolidarea unei abilități esențiale în leadershipul educațional, contribuind astfel la profesionalizarea managementului în educația timpurie, indiferent de mediul de proveniență al instituției.

În pofida recunoașterii importanței negocierii în actul managerial educațional, numeroși manageri din instituțiile de educație timpurie întâmpină dificultăți în aplicarea unor strategii eficiente de negociere. Această situație este determinată, pe de o parte, de o formare profesională insuficient orientată spre dezvoltarea competențelor de negociere și, pe de altă parte, de lipsa unor instrumente practice adaptate specificului educațional.

Negocierea educațională își are rădăcinile în teoria generală a negocierii, însă prezintă particularități evidente datorită mediului specific în care se desfășoară – instituțiile de învățământ și interacțiunile complexe dintre actori educaționali (manageri, cadre didactice, părinți, comunitate, autorități). În acest sens, Cojocaru V. și Goraș-Postică V. subliniază că negocierea educațională reprezintă o subcategorie a negocierii generale, adaptată obiectivelor și dinamicii sistemului de învățământ. Ea presupune un proces de comunicare și interacțiune între două sau mai multe părți care, având interese comune și divergente, urmăresc obținerea unui acord reciproc avantajos în probleme legate de educație [apud 1,2].

Din perspectiva managementului educațional, Astifenei-Mafteuța R. consideră negocierea o competență fundamentală a liderilor din domeniu, deoarece facilitează rezolvarea conflictelor, stimulează luarea deciziilor participative și sprijină construirea unor relații de cooperare între actorii implicați [3]. La rândul său, M. Malița oferă o definiție sugestivă a negocierilor, considerându-le „procese competitive desfășurate în cadrul unor convorbiri pașnice de către două sau mai multe părți ce acceptă să urmărească realizarea în mod optim și sigur a unor obiective, fixate în cuprinsul unei soluții explicite agreate în comun” [4, p. 46].

Deci, negocierea educațională se conturează ca o dimensiune indispensabilă a managementului instituțiilor de educație timpurie, având rolul de a armoniza interesele divergente și de a crea premise pentru cooperare și dezvoltare instituțională. Deși își are fundamentul în teoria generală a negocierii, specificul domeniului educațional îi conferă trăsături particulare, care solicită managerilor nu doar cunoștințe teoretice, ci și competențe practice adaptate contextului școlar. Astfel, negocierea devine o pârghie esențială în exercitarea unui leadership eficient, contribuind la prevenirea și soluționarea conflictelor, la consolidarea relațiilor parteneriale și la promovarea unui climat educațional favorabil dezvoltării copilului.

În cele ce urmează prezentăm în figura 1.1. caracteristicile negocierii educaționale.

Figura 1.1. Caracteristicile negocierii educaționale

Negocierea educațională implică o gamă variată de actori cu interese specifice și adesea complexe:

- Obiective multiple și uneori contradictorii: Scopurile negocierilor educaționale pot varia de la rezolvarea unor probleme disciplinare minore până la stabilirea unor politici educaționale la nivel instituțional sau parteneriate cu comunitatea. Aceste obiective pot fi uneori dificil de aliniat.
- Importanța relațiilor pe termen lung: În contextul educațional, menținerea unor relații pozitive și de încredere între părți este adesea mai importantă decât obținerea unui avantaj imediat. Negocierile trebuie să țină cont de impactul pe termen lung asupra colaborării și climatului educațional.
- Dimensiunea etică și valorică semnificativă: Deciziile luate prin negociere în educație au un impact direct asupra dezvoltării copiilor și asupra valorilor promovate de instituție. Considerațiile etice și respectarea principiilor educaționale sunt esențiale.
- Necesitatea de a echilibra interesele individuale cu cele colective: Negociatorii educaționali trebuie să găsească soluții care să răspundă nevoilor individuale ale copiilor, cadrelor didactice sau părinților, fără a compromite obiectivele și funcționarea eficientă a instituției în ansamblu.
- Un proces adesea informal și continuu: Spre deosebire de negocierile formale din mediul de afaceri, multe negocieri educaționale au loc în mod informal, în cadrul interacțiunilor zilnice, și sunt parte a unui proces continuu de ajustare și colaborare.
- Rolul central al comunicării empatice și al ascultării active: Înțelegerea perspectivei celeilalte părți, manifestarea empatiei și ascultarea atentă a nevoilor și preocupărilor sunt cruciale pentru succesul negocierilor educaționale.
- Potențialul de a genera soluții creative și inovatoare: Negocierea colaborativă în educație poate duce la identificarea unor soluții care depășesc compromisurile simple și care pot îmbunătăți semnificativ procesul de învățare și mediul educațional.

Potrivit lui Matei Georgescu, negocierea îndeplinește o serie de funcții esențiale, care, adaptate domeniului educațional, devin instrumente valoroase pentru un management eficient:

- funcția de comunicare – negocierea creează un cadru de dialog deschis și constructiv, permițând schimbul de informații între manageri, cadre didactice, părinți și alți parteneri educaționali;
- funcția de reglare a conflictelor – prin negociere, tensiunile și divergențele apărute în instituțiile educaționale pot fi gestionate și transformate în soluții benefice pentru toate părțile;
- funcția decizională – negocierea sprijină adoptarea unor hotărâri participative, bazate pe argumente și consens, ceea ce sporește gradul de implicare și responsabilizare a actorilor educaționali;
- funcția relațională – negocierile favorizează dezvoltarea unor relații de colaborare și încredere între diferitele părți implicate în procesul educațional;
- funcția integrativă – prin armonizarea intereselor individuale și colective, negocierea contribuie la crearea unui climat organizațional stabil și orientat spre performanță.

Astfel, negocierea educațională nu are doar rolul de aplanare a conflictelor, ci și pe acela de a construi punți de comunicare și de a stimula coeziunea instituțională.

Procesul de negociere se desfășoară gradual, parcurgând mai multe etape interdependente:

Pregătirea negocierii – include identificarea problemei, stabilirea obiectivelor, analiza intereselor părților și alegerea strategiilor de negociere adecvate. În această fază se realizează documentarea și planificarea, elemente esențiale pentru succesul procesului.

Deschiderea negocierii – presupune stabilirea unui climat favorabil dialogului, prezentarea pozițiilor inițiale și clarificarea punctelor de interes comun sau divergent. Este etapa în care se creează cadrul de încredere reciprocă.

Derularea negocierii propriu-zise – părțile implicate își prezintă argumentele, formulează propuneri și contra-propuneri, explorează alternative și caută soluții acceptabile pentru toți actorii. Această etapă reflectă dinamica și complexitatea interacțiunii educaționale.

Încheierea negocierii – se finalizează cu adoptarea unui acord explicit, scris sau verbal, care consfințește înțelegerea realizată. Acordul trebuie să fie clar, realist și aplicabil în contextul educațional.

Implementarea și evaluarea acordului – după negociere, urmează punerea în practică a deciziilor și monitorizarea rezultatelor, pentru a verifica eficiența soluțiilor convenite și pentru a ajusta aspectele care necesită îmbunătățiri.

Funcțiile și etapele negocierii demonstrează că acest proces nu este unul spontan, ci presupune o planificare atentă, o comunicare eficientă și o gândire strategică. În instituțiile de educație timpurie, negocierea devine o competență de leadership indispensabilă, care contribuie la dezvoltarea unui climat educațional democratic și orientat spre colaborare.În contextul specific al leadershipului educațional, competența de negociere capătă o importanță crucială, influențând în mod semnificativ funcționarea eficientă și armonioasă a instituției de învățământ.

Negocierea educațională se bazează pe un set de principii fundamentale care îi asigură eficiența și relevanța în contextul instituțiilor de educație timpurie. Aceste principii ghidează comportamentul managerilor și al celorlalți actori implicați, contribuind la desfășurarea unui proces corect, transparent și constructiv.

Principiul cooperării – părțile implicate trebuie să manifeste disponibilitate pentru colaborare și deschidere către identificarea unor soluții reciproc avantajoase. Cooperarea reduce tensiunile și sporește încrederea între participanți.

Principiul respectului reciproc – negocierea presupune recunoașterea și valorizarea punctelor de vedere diferite, indiferent de statutul sau rolul fiecărui actor educațional. Respectul reciproc constituie fundamentul unui dialog autentic.

Principiul echității și al corectitudinii – soluțiile adoptate trebuie să fie echitabile și să răspundă, pe cât posibil, intereselor legitime ale tuturor părților implicate.

Principiul transparenței – procesul de negociere trebuie să fie clar, bazat pe informații reale și corecte, pentru a evita suspiciunile și neînțelegerile.

Principiul flexibilității – succesul negocierii depinde de capacitatea participanților de a se adapta la situații noi, de a formula alternative și de a accepta compromisuri rezonabile.

Principiul orientării spre consens – obiectivul final al negocierii nu este impunerea unei singure poziții, ci identificarea unei soluții comune, acceptate și asumate de toate părțile.

Principiul responsabilității – fiecare parte implicată trebuie să își asume consecințele acordurilor stabilite, respectând termenele și obligațiile convenite.

Respectarea acestor principii asigură nu doar eficiența negocierii educaționale, ci și menținerea unui climat organizațional bazat pe cooperare, respect și încredere. Pentru managerii instituțiilor de educație timpurie, aplicarea acestor principii devine o condiție esențială a unui leadership eficient și democratic, capabil să integreze interese diverse în beneficiul copilului și al comunității educaționale.

Astfel, acest process:

- Facilitează coeziunea echipei și cooperarea între membrii instituției educaționale:
  - ✓ Într-o instituție educațională, liderul interacționează constant cu o echipă diversă formată din cadrele didactice, personal administrativ, consilieri, etc. Fiecare membru aduce cu sine perspective, experiențe și nevoi individuale.
  - ✓ Competența de negociere permite liderului să medieze diferențele de opinie, să alinieze obiectivele individuale cu cele ale instituției și să creeze un sentiment de apartenență și scop comun.
  - ✓ Prin dialog și ascultare activă, liderul poate înțelege preocupările fiecărui membru și poate negocia soluții care să satisfacă, într-o măsură rezonabilă, interesele tuturor. Acest proces contribuie la construirea unei atmosfere de încredere și respect reciproc, esențială pentru o colaborare eficientă.

- ✓ Atunci când membrii echipei simt că vocea lor este auzită și că interesele lor sunt luate în considerare, sunt mai predispuși să coopereze, să se susțină reciproc și să lucreze împreună pentru atingerea obiectivelor educaționale. Negocierea devine astfel un instrument de construire a unei culturi organizaționale pozitive și productive.
- ✓ Contribuie la luarea deciziilor participative, bazate pe consultare și echilibru între interese:
- ✓ Leadershipul educațional modern promovează luarea deciziilor în mod participativ, implicând membrii comunității educaționale în procesul decizional. Aceasta nu doar că îmbunătățește calitatea deciziilor, aducând perspective diverse, dar și crește gradul de acceptare și implementare a acestora.
- ✓ Competența de negociere este esențială în facilitarea acestui proces. Liderul trebuie să fie capabil să organizeze consultări eficiente, să modereze discuțiile, să identifice punctele comune și diferențele de opinie și să negocieze soluții care să integreze diversele perspective.
- ✓ Prin negociere, se pot identifica compromisuri acceptabile pentru toate părțile implicate, asigurându-se un echilibru între interesele individuale, de grup și cele ale instituției în ansamblu. Deciziile luate în acest mod au o legitimitate mai mare și sunt mai susceptibile de a fi implementate cu succes.
- ✓ Un lider competent în negociere nu impune decizii unilaterale, ci creează un spațiu de dialog constructiv în care fiecare voce contează, iar deciziile finale reflectă un consens sau un compromis bine fundamentat. [apud 1, p. 52].

- Previne și gestionează conflictele interpersonale sau organizaționale:
  - ✓ În orice organizație, inclusiv în cele educaționale, pot apărea conflicte din diverse motive: diferențe de opinii, alocarea resurselor, interpretări diferite ale regulamentelor, etc. Un lider eficient trebuie să fie capabil să prevină escaladarea acestor conflicte și să le gestioneze atunci când apar.
  - ✓ Competența de negociere oferă liderului instrumentele necesare pentru a aborda conflictele într-un mod constructiv. Prin dialog deschis, identificarea intereselor fundamentale ale părților implicate și explorarea de soluții alternative, liderul poate facilita ajungerea la acorduri care să satisfacă nevoile ambelor părți.
  - ✓ Negocierea în contextul conflictelor nu înseamnă neapărat ca una dintre părți să câștige și cealaltă să piardă, ci mai degrabă găsirea unei soluții "win-win" sau cel puțin a unui compromis acceptabil care să restabilească armonia și să permită continuarea colaborării.
  - ✓ Un lider competent în negociere poate transforma un conflict potențial distructiv într-o oportunitate de învățare și de consolidare a relațiilor, demonstrând capacitatea de a media, de a facilita comunicarea și de a găsi soluții creative.
  - Optimizează relațiile cu părinții și partenerii comunitari, prin stabilirea unor acorduri clare și sustenabile:
  - ✓ Instituțiile educaționale nu funcționează în izolare, ci interacționează constant cu părinții preșcolarilor și cu diverși parteneri din comunitate (autorități locale, organizații non-guvernamentale, companii etc.). Relațiile pozitive cu acești actori sunt esențiale pentru succesul instituției.
  - ✓ Competența de negociere permite liderului să stabilească acorduri clare și reciproc avantajoase cu acești parteneri. Fie că este vorba de stabilirea unor reguli de colaborare cu părinții, de obținerea de resurse suplimentare de la partenerii comunitari sau de implementarea unor proiecte comune, negocierea este crucială.
  - ✓ Prin negociere, liderul poate înțelege nevoile și așteptările părinților și ale partenerilor, poate comunica clar obiectivele și posibilitățile instituției și poate ajunge la acorduri care să creeze beneficii reciproce pe termen lung.
  - ✓ Acordurile negociate în mod transparent și echitabil au o probabilitate mai mare de a fi respectate și de a conduce la relații sustenabile, bazate pe încredere și colaborare.
  - Consolidează autoritatea liderului, fără impunerea autoritară, ci prin dialog și compromis constructiv:

- ✓ În leadershipul educațional eficient, autoritatea nu se bazează pe impunere sau control strict, ci pe respect, încredere și capacitatea de a influența pozitiv. Competența de negociere contribuie semnificativ la construirea acestui tip de autoritate.
- ✓ Un lider care demonstrează capacitatea de a asculta, de a înțelege diverse perspective și de a negocia soluții acceptabile pentru toți câștigă respectul și încrederea echipei, a părinților și a partenerilor.
- ✓ Prin dialog și compromis constructiv, liderul arată că valorizează opiniile celorlalți și că este dispus să găsească soluții care să ia în considerare diversele interese. Această abordare consolidează autoritatea liderului prin influență și colaborare, nu prin forță sau dictat.
- ✓ Atunci când deciziile sunt luate prin negociere și consultare, membrii comunității educaționale se simt mai implicați și mai dispuși să susțină implementarea acestora, ceea ce consolidează poziția liderului ca un facilitator și un mediator eficient.

Într-o instituție de educație timpurie, unde interacțiunile sunt frecvente, sensibile și încărcate emoțional, liderul educațional trebuie să acționeze ca mediator și negociator, capabil să armonizeze diferențele și să creeze un climat pozitiv pentru învățare și dezvoltare profesională.

Așadar, competența de negociere nu reprezintă doar o abilitate auxiliară în conducerea educațională, ci un element definitoriu al leadershipului transformativ, care susține inovarea, incluziunea și dezvoltarea durabilă a instituției.

Totodată, competența de negociere nu este doar o abilitate managerială generică, ci o componentă fundamentală a leadershipului educațional eficient. Ea influențează pozitiv climatul organizațional, procesul decizional, gestionarea conflictelor, relațiile cu părțile interesate și, în ultimă instanță, succesul instituției de învățământ în atingerea obiectivelor sale educaționale. Un lider educațional competent în negociere este un constructor de consens, un mediator abil și un promotor al colaborării și respectului în cadrul comunității educaționale.

În plus, această competență contribuie la crearea unui mediu în care vocile tuturor actorilor implicați sunt ascultate și valorificate. Negocierea eficientă reduce rezistența la schimbare și facilitează implementarea strategiilor inovatoare în educație. Printr-o comunicare deschisă și empatică, liderul reușește să genereze încredere și să mobilizeze echipa în direcția unui scop comun.

Competența de negociere reprezintă o abilitate complexă și multidimensională, care presupune integrarea mai multor categorii de resurse personale și profesionale. Din perspectiva educațională și managerială, aceasta nu poate fi redusă la un simplu set de tehnici, ci trebuie abordată ca o competență integrativă, formată din componente interdependente: cognitive, emoționale, sociale și strategice prezentate în figura 1.2.

Componenta cognitivă se referă la abilitățile intelectuale ale managerului de a utiliza cunoștințele și raționamentele logice pentru a ghida procesul de negociere. Acesta include cunoașterea principiilor de bază ale negocierii: managerul trebuie să înțeleagă tipologiile de negociere (colaborativă, competitivă, etc.), etapele negocierii și să fie familiarizat cu tactici specifice care să fie aplicate în funcție de context; *capacitatea de analiză și interpretare a contextului: un manager competent analizează cu atenție interesele și pozițiile părților implicate, identificând nu doar ceea ce se cere, ci și nevoile fundamentale ale fiecărei părți pentru a construi un acord sustenabil; *gândirea critică: managerul trebuie să aibă abilitatea de a anticipa consecințele fiecărei decizii, cântărind cu atenție impactul pe termen scurt și lung, și de a evalua posibilele riscuri și beneficii; flexibilitatea cognitivă: în fața unui context schimbător sau a unor poziții de negociere dificile, managerul trebuie să fie capabil să își schimbe abordarea rapid și eficient pentru a se adapta noilor circumstanțe, fără a pierde din vedere obiectivele; limbaj profesional și clar: pentru a asigura o comunicare eficientă, managerul trebuie să folosească un limbaj clar, precis și rezonabil, exprimându-și punctul de vedere într-o manieră care să prevină confuzia și să ajute la soluționarea disputelor.

Abilități Strategice
Se concentrează pe planificarea și implementarea tacticilor pentru a atinge rezultate de negociere dorite.
Abilități Cognitive
Implică procesele de gândire analitică și rezolvare a problemelor necesare pentru a înțelege și a aplica conceptele de negociere.
Competența de Negociere
Abilități Sociale
Implică interacțiuni interumane și construirea de relații pentru a facilita o comunicare eficientă și colaborare.
Abilități Emoționale
Se referă la gestionarea și înțelegerea emoțiilor pentru a construi relații și a menține o stare de spirit echilibrată în timpul negocierilor.

Figura 1.2. Componentele competenței de negociere

Aceste abilități cognitive sunt fundamentale pentru a lua decizii bine fundamentate și pentru a naviga cu succes prin complexitatea proceselor de negociere, având în vedere multiplele interese și puncte de vedere care pot apărea.

În absența acestei componente, negocierea riscă să devină un proces superficial, bazat pe improvizație sau autoritate, și nu pe argumente bine fundamentate.

Componenta emoțională se referă la capacitatea managerului de a-și gestiona propriile emoții și de a răspunde adecvat emoțiilor celorlalți în timpul procesului de negociere. Aceasta include a*utocontrolul emoțional:* abilitatea de a rămâne calm și rațional chiar și în fața unor situații tensionate, evitând reacțiile impulsive care pot duce la escaladarea conflictelor; empatia: capacitatea de a înțelege și de a răspunde în mod adecvat la sentimentele și nevoile celorlalți, creând astfel o atmosferă de înțelegere și respect reciproc; inteligența emoțională ce include autocunoașterea, autoreglarea și abilitatea de a construi relații pozitive, elemente esențiale pentru gestionarea cu succes a interacțiunilor într-un mediu educațional cât și rezistența la stre: negocierea poate fi un proces solicitant din punct de vedere emoțional, iar managerul trebuie să facă față presiunii și să rămână concentrat pe obiectivele de lungă durată, chiar și în fața dificultăților imediate.

Managerii care au o bună gestionare emoțională reușesc să mențină un climat de încredere, respect și deschidere în timpul negocierii.

Componenta socială se referă la modul în care managerul interacționează și colaborează eficient cu ceilalți membri ai comunității educaționale – cadre didactice, părinți, autorități sau parteneri externi. Aceasta include comunicarea interpersonală eficientă: presupune folosirea ascultării active pentru a înțelege pozițiile celorlalți, precum și exprimarea clară, asertivă și empatică a propriilor idei, fără a genera conflicte; construirea relațiilor de colaborare: managerul trebuie să creeze și să întrețină un climat de încredere, sprijin reciproc și muncă în echipă, esențial în obținerea acordurilor și soluțiilor comune; diplomație și tact: exprimarea ideilor, mai ales în situații delicate sau tensionate, trebuie făcută cu echilibru, respect și sensibilitate, pentru a evita blocajele și a stimula deschiderea la dialog; credibilitate personală și profesională: un manager cu o reputație solidă, integritate și comportament consecvent va fi perceput ca un partener de încredere, ceea ce crește semnificativ eficiența procesului de negociere și relaționarea pozitivă: succesul negocierii este influențat de capacitatea de a menține relații constructive și parteneriate durabile, bazate pe respect și obiective comune.

Negocierea eficientă depinde în mare măsură de capacitatea managerului de a interacționa pozitiv cu ceilalți și de a menține o relație de parteneriat autentic.

Componenta strategică reflectă dimensiunea planificată, orientată spre rezultate a procesului de negociere; caracterul planificat, orientat spre rezultate și adaptativ al procesului de negociere, în special în conducerea instituțiilor educaționale. Această dimensiune este crucială pentru ca un manager să transforme negocierea într-un instrument eficient de leadership și dezvoltare organizațională. Ea presupune stabilirea clară a obiectivelor negocierii. Un proces de negociere eficient începe întotdeauna cu definirea obiectivelor specifice, măsurabile și realiste. Managerul trebuie să răspundă la întrebări precum: Ce doresc să obțin? Care este interesul instituției mele? Ce concesii pot face și ce aspecte sunt negociabile sau nenegociabile?

În educație, aceste obiective integrează: alocarea resurselor (financiare, materiale, umane); stabilirea unui program educațional comun cu parteneri externi; reglementarea sarcinilor între membri ai echipei; rezolvarea unui conflict între personal și părinți.

Claritatea obiectivelor în acest sens permite nu doar o negociere direcționată, ci și creșterea șanselor de succes.

Formularea unor opțiuni și scenarii alternative, în funcție de reacțiile părților. Un lider educațional eficient nu intră într-o negociere cu o singură soluție, ci pregătește scenarii alternative (plan A, B, C etc.), anticipând posibile reacții, obiecții sau compromisuri din partea celorlalți actori.

Această pregătire presupune: analiza intereselor fiecărei părți implicate; identificarea punctelor comune și a diferențelor majore; formularea de concesii strategice, menite să faciliteze un acord fără pierderi esențiale.

Astfel, negocierea devine un proces flexibil, adaptat contextului și dinamicii interlocutorilor, nu o confruntare rigidă între poziții opuse.

Selectarea conștientă a strategiilor și tacticilor potrivite: cooperare, compromis, confruntare, evitare etc. Negocierea educațională poate fi abordată prin strategii variate, în funcție de obiective, de natura relației și de climatul organizațional. Cele mai utilizate strategii includ [4, p. 37]:

- cooperarea (win-win): ambele părți colaborează pentru a găsi o soluție benefică reciproc;
- compromisul: fiecare parte cedează parțial pentru a ajunge la un consens;
- confruntarea (win-lose): una dintre părți insistă asupra propriilor interese, chiar în detrimentul celeilalte;
- evitarea: negocierea este amânată sau evitată atunci când conflictul este minor sau momentul nu este oportun.

Managerul trebuie să aleagă conștient strategia potrivită contextului și să aplice tactici adaptate – cum ar fi ascultarea activă, reformularea, pauzele strategice, ofertele de tip „dacă-atunci” etc.

Capacitatea de a evalua eficiența procesului și de a învăța din experiență pentru îmbunătățiri viitoare. O componentă esențială, adesea neglijată, este reflecția post-negociere. Aceasta implică analiza rezultatelor în raport cu obiectivele stabilite; identificarea punctelor forte și a erorilor de strategie; colectarea feedbackului de la ceilalți participanți; formularea lecțiilor învățate și integrarea acestora în negocierile viitoare.

Managerul educațional care reflectă asupra procesului dezvoltă experiență și rafinament strategic, devenind mai eficient și mai sigur în gestionarea relațiilor interinstituționale și interne.

Un manager educațional strategic este cel care abordează negocierea nu doar ca pe o interacțiune spontană, ci ca pe o activitate cu obiective clare, resurse mobilizate și rezultate planificate. Componenta strategică transformă negocierea dintr-un simplu schimb de puncte de vedere într-un proces planificat, bine gestionat și orientat spre soluții durabile. În leadershipul educațional, această dimensiune este indispensabilă, mai ales în medii complexe, unde echilibrul între interese și decizii rapide este esențial pentru funcționarea eficientă a instituției.

Prin urmare, negocierea educațională se conturează ca o dimensiune indispensabilă a managementului în instituțiile de educație timpurie. Ea nu se limitează la soluționarea conflictelor, ci se constituie într-o veritabilă competență de leadership, capabilă să contribuie la consolidarea unui climat organizațional sănătos, la stimularea colaborării și la asigurarea calității actului educațional. Actualitatea subiectului rezidă în necesitatea ca managerii să fie pregătiți nu doar teoretic, ci și practic pentru a utiliza negocierea ca instrument strategic în conducerea instituțiilor preșcolare.

TEACHING CRITICAL THINKING THROUGH CHILDREN'S LITERATURE: A CASE STUDY OF ROALD DAHL'S MATILDA

Abstract: In this paper we try to examine the pedagogical potential of Roald Dahl's Matilda as a literary resource for fostering critical thinking skills in primary and lower secondary education. Through a qualitative case-study approach, the analysis explores how narrative elements such as character development, moral conflict, and the representation of intellectual agency create opportunities for learners to engage in reflective reasoning and evaluative judgment. The study highlights how Matilda's interactions with authority, her pursuit of knowledge, and her strategic problem solving can be integrated into instructional practices that encourage questioning, inference making, and evidence-based argumentation. By situating the text within contemporary educational frameworks on critical literacy and cognitive development, the article demonstrates that children's literature serves as an effective medium for cultivating analytical competencies and promoting learner autonomy in classroom contexts.

Children's literature represents a significant space for developing critical and reflective thinking in educational settings. Roald Dahl's Matilda (1988) provides a narrative in which intellectual empowerment, moral agency, and resistance to injustice intersect to create meaningful opportunities for didactic interpretation. Contemporary scholarship emphasises that "children's narrative fiction offers a discursive arena in which pupils may practise questioning assumptions and evaluating authority" (Henderson, 2017, p. 42). The aim of this article is to demonstrate how Matilda can be integrated into classroom practice as a resource for cultivating critical thinking skills.

Matilda centres on a precocious young girl whose intellectual curiosity stands in sharp contrast to the ignorance and neglect of her parents, Mr and Mrs Wormwood. Despite their hostility towards reading and learning, Matilda independently develops advanced literacy skills, frequenting the local library and engaging with a wide range of texts. When she begins school, she encounters Miss Trunchbull, a tyrannical headmistress whose abusive exercise of authority shapes much of the novel's conflict. In contrast, Miss Honey, Matilda's compassionate teacher, recognises the child's extraordinary abilities and becomes a symbol of supportive, ethical pedagogy. Critics have noted that "Dahl juxtaposes oppressive and nurturing models of adulthood to illuminate the moral stakes of education" (Collins, 2020, p. 88).

One of the central themes of the novel is the interrogation of unjust authority. Matilda repeatedly confronts adults who misuse power, revealing the importance of moral reasoning in evaluating institutional structures. As Keating argues, "Matilda's subversive acts are not arbitrary rebellions but reasoned responses to systematic injustice" (Keating, 2019, p. 53). In the classroom, such moments can prompt discussions about legitimate and illegitimate authority, enabling pupils to practise evaluative judgement.

The novel also foregrounds the transformative potential of reading. Books provide Matilda with both emotional refuge and cognitive development, supporting her ability to question, infer, and interpret. According to Morrison, "the novel frames literacy as a tool of empowerment that equips children with strategies for navigating complex moral and social dilemmas" (Morrison, 2018, p. 27). This theme aligns closely with contemporary pedagogical aims that emphasise metacognition and self-directed learning.

Matilda's interventions on behalf of others, particularly Miss Honey, illustrate the connection between intelligence and ethical responsibility. Her actions raise questions about justice, solidarity, and the moral dimensions of critical thought. Scholars like Barton have suggested that "Dahl's narrative invites young readers to consider how intellect must be guided by compassion and an awareness of social inequities" (Barton, 2021, p. 64). Such reflections can be employed in the classroom to encourage moral reasoning alongside cognitive analysis.

Dahl also challenges traditional assumptions about childhood, gender, and knowledge. Matilda, a young girl, embodies the role of the intellectual protagonist, defying expectations that often limit female representation in children's fiction. As Langford observes, "Matilda disrupts gendered narratives of ability and agency by placing a young girl at the centre of intellectual and moral authority" (Langford, 2016, p. 112). These elements facilitate discussions about bias, representation, and social norms.

Matilda is portrayed as inquisitive, rational, and morally grounded. Her telekinetic ability symbolises an extension of her intellectual power, reinforcing the metaphor that knowledge enables transformation. Matilda's mind becomes "a vehicle through which Dahl explores the potential of critical cognition" (Ellis, 2019, p. 40).

The Wormwoods serve as satirical figures who represent anti-intellectualism and moral irresponsibility. Their disdain for reading provides a foil to Matilda's educational values, highlighting the consequences of neglect and ignorance.

Miss Trunchbull embodies authoritarianism in its most exaggerated form. Her behaviour illustrates how unchecked power can lead to cruelty and injustice. This creates rich opportunities for classroom debates about authority and ethical leadership.

Miss Honey functions as the ethical counterpoint to Miss Trunchbull. She models empathy, patience, and educational integrity. Critics note that "Miss Honey's approach reflects a pedagogy rooted in care and respect, offering pupils an alternative vision of what authority can be" (Dawson, 2018, p. 51).

Drawing on the themes and character dynamics outlined above, educators can employ Matilda to develop critical thinking through:

1. Questioning and Evaluating Authority - analyse scenes where Matilda confronts unjust authority and assess the reasoning behind her choices.
2. Making Inferences and Using Evidence - identify textual evidence supporting interpretations of characters' actions, promoting inferential thinking.
3. Constructing Arguments and Counterarguments - debates such as "Is Miss Trunchbull solely responsible for the school's toxic environment?" encourage the practice of reasoned argumentation.
4. Reflective and Metacognitive Activities - reading journals allow pupils to reflect on the ethical decisions within the narrative and relate them to their own experiences.
5. Exploring Social and Moral Themes - discussions centred on justice, empathy, and equality enable pupils to place the narrative within broader social contexts.

The novel Matilda can be effectively used to develop critical thinking skills in young pupils by encouraging them to analyse characters, situations, and moral choices presented in the narrative. Through the stark contrast between oppressive and supportive adult figures, pupils learn to question behaviours, intentions, and forms of authority rather than accept them uncritically. When discussing characters such as Miss Trunchbull, Mr and Mrs Wormwood, and Miss Honey, pupils are invited to consider what makes an authority figure legitimate, ethical, or unjust, and to justify their reasoning using textual evidence.

The novel also provides rich opportunities for pupils to practise inference and interpretation. Matilda's actions, motivations, and emotional responses can be examined to help pupils understand implicit information and make predictions about character behaviour. Teachers can prompt pupils to identify clues in the text, draw conclusions about relationships between characters, and reflect on the consequences of particular decisions. This process strengthens their ability to use reasoning and evidence to support interpretations.

In addition, Matilda fosters moral and ethical reflection. Pupils can explore why Matilda chooses to intervene on behalf of Miss Honey, how she evaluates right and wrong, and what values guide her decisions. Through these discussions, pupils begin to connect cognitive reasoning with empathy, fairness, and social responsibility. They learn that critical thinking involves not only analysis but also ethical judgement.

The narrative further encourages pupils to reflect on the role of knowledge and literacy in personal development. By examining Matilda's love of reading and her self-directed learning, pupils can discuss how information, curiosity, and independent thought empower individuals. This reflection helps them develop metacognitive awareness, prompting them to consider their own learning habits and the value of questioning what they read or hear.

Finally, the novel's subversion of stereotypes, particularly regarding gender and childhood, allows pupils to identify biases and challenge preconceived notions. Analysing how Matilda defies expectations encourages them to question societal norms and recognise that critical thinking involves examining assumptions that are often taken for granted.

Building on these considerations, it becomes essential to translate the novel's conceptual potential into concrete classroom practice. To support pupils in actively applying critical thinking skills, we propose a detailed learning activity centred on the analysis of selected images from Matilda, using both brainstorming and problem-posing techniques. This activity is designed to help pupils articulate prior knowledge, generate hypotheses, question assumptions, and engage in guided discussion. By examining a visual scene related to the story, pupils will be encouraged to observe details, infer intentions, evaluate behaviours, and reflect on moral or social implications.

The teacher will facilitate the process by prompting pupils to share ideas freely during the initial brainstorming phase, followed by structured problematisation in which they consider alternative interpretations, identify underlying issues, and justify their reasoning.

Possible questions:

1. What is the first thing you notice in the picture? Why?
2. How do the characters seem to feel? What clues in the image tell you this?
3. What do you think is happening in this moment?
4. Which elements of the picture stand out as important?
5. If you could give a title to this image, what would it be?
6. What words come to your mind when you look at Miss Trunchbull? What words come to your mind when you look at Matilda?
7. What do you think each character might be thinking right now?

These questions invite pupils to question assumptions, analyse situations of power, and consider ethical dilemmas. They guide children to think deeply and justify their answers.

1. Why do you think Miss Trunchbull is pointing her finger at Matilda? Could there be different reasons?
2. Is Miss Trunchbull using her power in a fair or unfair way? How can you tell?
3. How do you think Matilda feels in this situation? What would you do if you were in her place?
4. What problem do you think Matilda is facing here? How might she solve it?
5. Do you think Miss Trunchbull is acting like a good leader or a bad leader? Why?
6. What could Matilda say or do to stand up for herself without being disrespectful?
7. If you were a friend of Matilda, what advice would you give her right now?
8. How should adults behave towards children? Does this image show good behaviour? Why or why not?
9. What consequences might appear after this moment if no one intervenes?
10. What would happen if Miss Honey were present? How would the situation change?

This combination of visual analysis and dialogic inquiry provides a practical means of fostering critical engagement with the themes of the novel, preparing pupils for the in-depth image analysis that will follow.

Roald Dahl's Matilda offers fertile ground for developing critical thinking within educational settings. Its themes of power, literacy, and moral agency align closely with contemporary pedagogical frameworks that emphasise reflective and evaluative reasoning. Through carefully designed instructional strategies, the novel can support pupils in cultivating the analytical and ethical competencies necessary for responsible and independent thought.

When pupils engage with Matilda's story, they are invited not only to follow the narrative but also to interrogate the behaviours, motivations, and decisions of the characters. This process nurtures the ability to question authority, identify injustice, and consider multiple perspectives—skills that lie at the heart of critical thinking. The contrast between oppressive authority (represented by Miss Trunchbull) and ethical, nurturing leadership (embodied by Miss Honey) provides a clear pathway for pupils to reflect on the morality of actions and the consequences of power dynamics. Such reflections allow them to connect literary experiences with real-life social and ethical dilemmas, thus strengthening their capacity for independent judgement.

From my perspective, one of the most valuable aspects of using Matilda in the classroom is its accessibility. Pupils respond easily to its humour, vivid characters, and emotional depth. This engagement becomes a bridge toward deeper cognitive work. By encouraging pupils to analyse the text, question the motivations of characters, and discuss alternative solutions to the problems presented, teachers cultivate not only comprehension but also intellectual autonomy. In this way, Matilda becomes more than a story; it becomes a pedagogical tool through which children learn to think more carefully, more courageously, and more responsibly.

In conclusion, Dahl's novel remains an essential resource for educators who seek to nurture thoughtful, reflective learners capable of challenging assumptions and forming well-reasoned viewpoints. As the philosopher John Dewey reminds us, "Education is not the learning of facts, but the training of the mind to think."

FANTASY AS A PEDAGOGICAL TOOL. GUIDING YOUNG CHILDREN'S BEHAVIOUR THROUGH THE LESSONS OF CHARLIE AND THE CHOCOLATE FACTORY

Abstract: This article explores the pedagogical potential of Roald Dahl's Charlie and the Chocolate Factory as a tool for guiding young children's behaviour in early childhood education. By drawing on the imaginative and morally charged episodes of the narrative, the study illustrates how fantasy can be employed to foster prosocial attitudes, emotional understanding, and self-regulation in kindergarten settings. The contrasting behaviours of the child charactersranging from greed and impatience to kindness and humilityoffer clear opportunities for teachers to initiate discussions about consequences, empathy, and positive choices. Through an analysis of key scenes and character traits, the article demonstrates that fantasy literature provides a safe and engaging framework through which young children can explore ethical dilemmas, reflect on their own actions, and internalise foundational social values. The findings suggest that integrating imaginative storytelling into early years pedagogy enriches both cognitive and moral development, supporting children in becoming thoughtful and responsible members of the classroom community.

Keywords: Imaginative Pedagogy; Character Education; Early Childhood Education; Fantasy Literature; Moral Development

Fantasy literature has long occupied a central place in early childhood reading due to its imaginative richness and its capacity to catalyse moral reflection. Roald Dahl's Charlie and the Chocolate Factory (1964) continuesto be one of the most celebrated fantasy narratives for young children, combining playful humour with ethically charged scenarios that can be used productively in kindergarten settings. Scholars have argued that "fantasy offers a symbolic landscape through which children may explore behavioural norms, ethical dilemmas, and cause–effect relationships in a safe and engaging manner" (Henderson, 2018, p. 44). Building on this premise, the present article examines how Dahl's novel can function as a pedagogical tool for guiding young children's behaviour, modelling prosocial attitudes, and encouraging an early interest in reading.

Fantasy literature is distinguished by its imaginative settings, magical elements, and heightened moral contrasts. These characteristics make it especially suitable for young learners, who respond intuitively to exaggerated characters and clear consequences. Critics note that "young children interpret fantasy not as escapism but as a cognitive rehearsal space in which they can test reactions, emotions, and values" (Moore, 2019, p. 29). In this sense, fantasy supports early moral reasoning by presenting symbolic versions of real-world behaviours. Its distance from everyday life provides emotional safety, while its vibrant imagery and humour maintain engagement. This dual function makes fantasy an ideal vehicle for teaching foundational behavioural principles such as empathy, patience, cooperation, and self-regulation.

*Charlie and the Chocolate Factory*follows the impoverished but kind-hearted Charlie Bucket, who wins a golden ticket granting him access to Willy Wonka's magical chocolate factory. Alongside him are four other children—Augustus Gloop, Veruca Salt, Violet Beauregarde, and Mike Teavee—each representing exaggerated negative traits such as greed, entitlement, impulsiveness, and obsessive screen use. As the tour progresses, each child faces the consequences of their own behaviour, while Charlie remains humble, grateful, and respectful. Literary scholars have emphasised that "Dahl structures the narrative around moral contrast: vice is punished, virtue is rewarded, and children can easily infer the link between choices and outcomes" (Barton, 2020, p. 63). This clarity is fundamental to its pedagogical value for early childhood.

Dahl's novel is firmly situated within the fantasy tradition. The chocolate factory itself functions as a fantastical microcosm, a self-contained world governed by rules that exaggerate those of everyday life. The Oompa-Loompas serve as moral commentators, offering rhythmic, playful reflections on each child's downfall. Scholars suggest that "Dahl's fantastical spaces operate as ethical laboratories in which children learn that improbable events may carry profoundly real messages" (Langford, 2017, p. 91). The magical inventions—everlasting gobstoppers, teleporting chocolate bars, expanding blueberries—create memorable images that help children connect abstract values to concrete symbols. Through such imaginative devices, fantasy becomes both enjoyable and instructive, reinforcing behavioural lessons without moralising overtly.

The novel provides an exceptional platform for introducing moral concepts to kindergarten pupils. For instance, Augustus Gloop's gluttony demonstrates the dangers of excess and lack of self-control. Veruca Salt's entitlement illustrates the negative effects of selfishness and disrespect. Violet's obsession with being the best highlights impulsive competitiveness, while Mike Teavee's fixation on television warns against passive consumption. According to educational research, "children understand moral lessons more deeply when they observe characters receiving immediate and logical consequences" (Ellis, 2021, p. 55). In contrast, Charlie's modesty and kindness show pupils that patience, gratitude, and honesty lead to positive outcomes. These contrasts allow teachers to initiate rich discussions about emotions, choices, and social behaviour.

In early childhood education, behaviour guidance must be gentle, consistent, and rooted in relatable examples.Young children do not yet possess the cognitive maturity to understand abstract rules or delayed consequences; instead, they respond best to clear, immediate, and concrete illustrations of appropriate behaviour. Gentle guidance helps maintain a sense of emotional safety, allowing children to explore boundaries without fear of punishment or shame. Consistency reinforces expectations and provides the stability children need to internalise behavioural norms. When educators use examples that are relatable and meaningful, children are able to connect guidance to their own experiences and begin to develop an internal sense of right and wrong.

Such an approach aligns with contemporary developmental research suggesting that young children learn most effectively through modelling and repetition. As Jennings observes, "behavioural learning in early childhood is shaped not by instruction alone but by the child's ability to observe, imitate, and emotionally resonate with trusted adults" (Jennings, 2019, p. 41). When teachers respond calmly and predictably, they model the self-regulation they hope to cultivate in their pupils. This creates a classroom environment in which children feel valued and understood, increasing their motivation to cooperate and participate in shared routines.

Relatable examples play a particularly significant role in shaping behaviour at this developmental stage. Instead of presenting abstract rules such as "be respectful," teachers can use specific, context-based illustrations—helping a friend pick up toys, waiting patiently for a turn, or speaking kindly when frustrated. These concrete situations allow children to see what good behaviour looks like in practice, rather than interpreting vague moral principles. According to Crombie, "children internalise behavioural norms more effectively when expectations are embedded in familiar narratives and daily interactions" (Crombie, 2020, p. 56). Fantasy literature, with its memorable characters and vivid scenarios, offers an additional layer of relevance by transforming ethical lessons into engaging, story-driven moments.

Stories like Charlie and the Chocolate Factory are especially effective because they amplify behavioural lessons through colourful exaggeration and immediate consequences. The narrative allows teachers to discuss behaviour in a non-confrontational manner: rather than pointing out a child's misstep directly, they can ask, "What happened to Violet when she didn't listen?" or "How could Veruca have behaved differently?" This creates emotional distance, reducing defensiveness while still promoting self-reflection. As Morrison argues, "indirect behavioural instruction through narrative reduces resistance and enhances children's willingness to consider alternative choices" (Morrison, 2018, p. 22). In this way, gentle and consistent guidance—supported by fantasy literature—helps young learners understand behavioural expectations with clarity, compassion, and enjoyment.

Fantasy narratives, including Dahl's, allow teachers to address behavioural expectations without directly criticising pupils. Instead, teachers can refer to characters— "What do you think happened to Augustus because he didn't listen?"—which creates emotional distance and reduces defensiveness. As one educational theorist argues, "fantasy stories help children reflect on behaviour indirectly, enabling them to recognise their own actions in symbolic form" (Morrison, 2016, p. 38). This method supports emotional regulation and encourages children to articulate their own moral interpretations.

One of the most significant long-term benefits of using Dahl's novel is its potential to cultivate an early love for reading. Fantasy narratives appeal strongly to children's imaginations, increasing motivation to engage with books. When children encounter humorous characters and playful language, reading becomes an enjoyable and meaningful experience. Researchers state that "reading pleasure in early childhood predicts sustained literacy engagement and improved academic outcomes" (Collins, 2019, p. 102).

By presenting Charlie and the Chocolate Factory through interactive storytelling, dramatisation, or picture-based discussions, teachers can nurture positive reading habits that extend beyond the classroom.

Introducing Charlie and the Chocolate Factory into early childhood or primary education offers a rich opportunity to blend imagination with meaningful learning. The fantastical world created by Roald Dahl naturally appeals to young children, capturing their curiosity while providing clear examples of behaviour, consequences, and moral choices. Through creative, sensory, and discussion-based activities, teachers can transform the story into a dynamic learning experience that supports language development, emotional growth, social skills, and early literacy. The following activities illustrate how elements of the novel can be adapted to suit the developmental needs of young learners, encouraging both engagement and thoughtful reflection.

Activity: Golden Ticket Hunt.
Objective: Develop curiosity, engagement, and basic literacy.
Method: Play-based learning, discovery learning.
Children search the classroom for hidden "golden tickets", then decode simple words or letters printed on them to gain entry to a reading corner themed as Wonka's factory.
Activity: Build Your Own Chocolate Factory
Objective: Encourage creativity, collaboration, and expressive language.
Method: Group work, project-based learning.
Pupils work in small groups to construct their own imaginary factory using craft materials, then describe each room and its magical function.
Activity: Character Feelings Circle
Objective: Identify emotions, practise empathy, and develop emotional vocabulary.
Method: Circle time discussion, role-play.
Children discuss how characters feel in certain moments (Charlie, Augustus, Veruca), then act out those feelings with facial expressions and gestures.
Activity: Taste Exploration (Healthy Choices Edition)
Objective: Understanding food choices and sensory awareness.

Method: Sensory exploration, guided discussion.
Using safe fruits or healthy sweets, pupils compare tastes and discuss self-control, linking to Augustus Gloop's behaviour.
Activity: Veruca Says "I Want…" Game
Objective: Reinforce polite communication and manage impulsive behaviour.
Method: Drama, rule-based play.
Children role-play being Veruca Salt but must transform demands into polite requests ("I want it now!" → "May I have this, please?").
Activity: Invention Lab
Objective: Develop imagination and problem-solving.
Method: Brainstorming, drawing.
Pupils design their own magical sweets and explain what they do, encouraging descriptive language and creative thinking.
Activity: Oompa-Loompa Moral Songs
Objective: Practise rhythm, sequencing, and understanding consequences.
Method: Music, choral speaking.
Children create simple rhymes or chants about good behaviour, inspired by the Oompa-Loompa songs.
Activity: Book Tasting Café
Objective: Promote a love of reading and book exploration.
Method: Rotating stations, guided choice.The teacher sets up "tasting tables" with different picture books by Dahl. Pupils sample each book for a few minutes and share what they liked.
Activity: My Good Choice / Bad Choice Cards
Objective: Reflect on behaviour and decision-making.
Method: Visual aids, discussion.
Children sort illustrated cards into "good choices" and "bad choices," linking them to the behaviour of children in the story.
Activity: Wonka's Problem-Solving Corner
Objective: Develop reasoning and teamwork.
Method: Problem-based learning.

Pupils are given simple dilemmas inspired by the story— "What should Charlie do if…?"— and work together to propose kind, safe, or fair solutions.

Fantasy narratives also provide structured opportunities for social–emotional development. Pupils can discuss how characters feel at different stages, how they might respond differently, and how kindness can improve relationships. For instance, Charlie's empathy towards his family encourages pupils to consider the needs of others. Classroom conversations based on such scenes help children identify emotions, practise perspective-taking, and develop collaborative communication skills. As one researcher notes, "the emotional clarity of fantasy literature helps children articulate their feelings and learn to respond with empathy" (Dawson, 2018, p. 47).

Fantasy narratives offer a unique emotional distance that helps young children explore sensitive topics without feeling personally exposed. When pupils observe exaggerated conflicts or struggles through fictional characters, they are more willing to comment on them openly and honestly. This detachment allows them to engage with issues such as anger, jealousy, fear, or disappointment in a safe, symbolic manner. Scholars argue that "symbolic distancing in fantasy reduces emotional pressure, making it easier for young learners to verbalise complex feelings" (Harris, 2019, p. 52). Through this process, children gradually become more comfortable discussing real-life emotional experiences.

In addition, fantasy stories often rely on clear moral contrasts, which help children recognise the links between behaviour and consequence. For example, the instant outcomes faced by Veruca Salt or Violet Beauregarde highlight the consequences of selfishness and impulsive choices. Such exaggerated cause–effect patterns act as a scaffold for early moral reasoning, making abstract ideas more accessible. According to one educational theorist, "the heightened moral visibility in fantasy stories provides a cognitive framework for children learning to evaluate actions and motives" (Mitchell, 2021, p. 33). In classroom discourse, teachers can prompt pupils to compare these fictional situations with moments from their own lives.

Fantasy also encourages children to develop resilience by engaging with moments of uncertainty or challenge in a controlled environment. Charlie's perseverance in the face of poverty and disappointment models adaptive coping strategies that resonate with young learners. When discussing these scenes, children practise naming challenges, imagining supportive solutions, and recognising strengths within themselves and others. Research suggests that "narrative resilience-building occurs when children identify with characters who face difficulties and overcome them through patience or kindness" (Rowley, 2020, p. 76). These reflective dialogues allow pupils not only to understand the story but also to connect its emotional lessons to their own developing identities.
Finally, fantasy provides fertile ground for cooperative learning. When pupils work together to interpret a character's motivation or predict the outcome of a scene, they must listen, negotiate meaning, and respect differing viewpoints. Such collaborative reasoning strengthens communication skills and nurtures peer relationships. Dahl's narrative, with its mix of humorous mishaps and touching moments, naturally invites shared laughter, curiosity, and empathy—elements that support group cohesion. As Thompson notes, "shared engagement in imaginative narratives fosters a social climate in which empathy and cooperation emerge organically" (Thompson, 2017, p. 21). In this way, fantasy literature becomes not only a tool for emotional insight but also a catalyst for building a supportive classroom community.

Roald Dahl's *Charlie and the Chocolate Factory*combine imaginative delight with clear moral structure, making it an invaluable tool for early childhood education. Its fantastical elements captivate children's interest, while its narrative pattern highlights essential behavioural lessons in a form young learners can understand and enjoy. When used thoughtfully, the novel supports children in developing prosocial attitudes, reflective thinking, and a genuine enthusiasm for reading. In this regard, fantasy literature contributes meaningfully to the holistic education of young learners, preparing them to navigate both the imaginative and the real world with curiosity and care. As the educator Margaret Hale reminds us, "The purpose of early education is not to control the child, but to teach the child to choose well."

CULTURAL DIPLOMACY IN THE DIGITAL AGE: THE ROLE OF ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE IN INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

Andreea-Alexandra Dincă
PhD, „Lucian Blaga" University of Sibiu

Abstract: Traditionally, cultural diplomacy relied on exchanges of art, education, and cultural programs to foster mutual understanding between nations. In the digital era, enhanced by artificial intelligence (AI) technologies, these interactions have been redefined, enabling global access to cultural content, promoting international collaboration, and creating dynamic platforms for engagement. AI facilitates the cataloging, personalization, and dissemination of cultural resources while supporting interdisciplinary initiatives that connect cultural institutions, academic research, and technological innovation. Furthermore, AI provides tools to combat cultural misinformation, detect distorted narratives, and safeguard the integrity of cultural heritage. Despite these opportunities, integrating AI into cultural diplomacy presents significant challenges, including algorithmic bias, ethical dilemmas concerning cultural sovereignty, and digital inequalities that may disadvantage countries with limited technological capacity. This article explores emerging trends and practical applications of AI in cultural diplomacy and proposes strategies for developing ethical frameworks, ensuring transparent algorithmic governance, and promoting inclusive digital literacy. These measures aim to guarantee that AI-driven cultural diplomacy remains equitable, diverse, and effective in fostering cross-cultural understanding and international cooperation in the twenty-first century.

Potrivit lui Milton Cummings, diplomația culturală desemnează procesul prin care națiunile schimbă idei, informații, manifestări artistice și alte elemente culturale, cu scopul de a facilita înțelegerea reciprocă între popoare.

Apariția tehnologiilor de inteligență artificială schimbă radical modalitățile prin care cultura este produsă, mediată și consumată. În același timp, presiunile globalizării și dinamica geopolitică intensifică nevoia unor instrumente diplomatice adaptate erei digitale.

Integrarea inteligenței artificiale în diplomația culturală nu reprezintă doar o inovare tehnologică, ci o reconfigurare structurală a domeniului: atât conținutul cultural, cât și canalele diplomatice sunt influențate de procese algoritmice, automatizare și analiza avansată a datelor.

Diplomația culturală în era tehnologică

În mod tradițional, diplomația culturală se baza pe schimburi educaționale, evenimente artistice, institute culturale sau programe lingvistice. Progresul tehnologic din ultimii ani a mutat o parte semnificativă a acestor interacțiuni în mediul digital, generând noi mecanisme de proiecție culturală.

Teoriile contemporane ale „soft power"-ului (Nye, 2004) sugerează că influența unui stat se bazează pe capacitatea sa de a modela preferințele altor actori prin cultură, valori și politici. Inteligența artificială amplifică această capacitate, dar o și complică, deoarece algoritmii devin mediatori între cultură și public, configurând vizibilitatea, interpretarea și semnificația mesajelor culturale.

Astfel,diplomația culturală digitală devine un vector esențial al proiecției internaționale în secolul XXI.

Exemple naționale și internaționale de diplomație culturală digitalizată prin platforme online

De exemplu, institute precum Goethe-Institut, British Council sau Institutul Francez au dezvoltat platforme digitale dedicate promovării culturii, limbii și industriilor creative.

Institutul Goethe (Germania) reprezintă un model european de integrare a tehnologiei digitale în strategia de diplomație culturală. Acesta a dezvoltat platforme digitale culturale precum Digital Concert Hall și Goethe-Institut Digital, care oferă acces global la concerte, expoziții, cursuri de limbă și programe culturale în format online.

Platformele Goethe permit publicului internațional să acceseze conținut cultural german fără limitări geografice, creând noi forme de interacțiune cu cultura Germaniei. În acest fel, institutul nu doar disemineză cultura germană, ci o poziționează activ în mediul digital global, extinzând influența soft power-ului german.

Obiective diplomatice sunt reprezentate de : accesul la educație-cursuri de limbă germană și materiale didactice digitale, promovând competențele interculturale și legături cu societatea civilă internațională, difuzare culturală: concerte, spectacole și expoziții online care fac cultura germană accesibilă unui public global, colaborare internațională: proiecte culturale comune cu parteneri internaționali, festivaluri online și programe de schimb artistic.

Impactul acestor platforme conduce la : creșterea vizibilității culturii germane la nivel global, consolidarea imaginii Germaniei ca națiune inovatoare , orientată spre educație și cultură, și facilitarea cooperării interculturale prin medii digitale interactive.

Provocările țin de : necesitatea actualizării constante a conținutului digital pentru a menține atractivitatea, competiția cu alte platforme culturale internaționale și adaptarea strategiilor digitale la diversele nevoi și obiceiuri ale publicului internațional.

British Council reprezintă unul dintre cele mai consistente exemple de instituție care a adaptat diplomația culturală la era digitală.

Prin programul „Culture Connects”, organizația promovează cultura britanică la nivel global, integrând instrumente digitale, analize de date și inițiative interactive care conectează artiști, comunități și publicuri internaționale.

Programul „Culture Connects” urmărește să creeze punți culturale între Marea Britanie și alte țări prin:

- Promovarea artei și culturii britanice: expoziții virtuale, spectacole de teatru online, muzică și proiecte de arte vizuale, accesibile unui public global;
- Sprijinirea schimburilor artistice internaționale: conectarea artiștilor britanici cu omologi din alte țări, facilitând colaborări și proiecte comune;
- Utilizarea analiticii digitale: evaluarea impactului cultural și identificarea audiențelor-cheie pentru a personaliza conținutul și a crește eficiența programelor;
- Accesibilizarea educației culturale: workshop-uri, cursuri online și resurse digitale pentru dezvoltarea competențelor creative.

Impactul programului„Culture Connects”: crește vizibilitatea culturii britanice în mediul digital global, promovează colaborarea interculturală și facilitează accesul la cultură în contexte în care mobilitatea fizică este limitată (exemplu- pandemii, restricții geopolitice).

Provocările țin de : adaptarea conținutului la diversitatea culturală și lingvistică a audiențelor, menținerea relevanței în fața altor platforme digitale culturale internaționale și măsurarea impactului real al inițiativelor digitale asupra percepției culturale și diplomatice.

Institutul Francez –a creat platforma„IFdigital”, un ecosistem dedicat promovării industriilor culturale și creative franceze în mediul online. Platforma include artă digitală, patrimoniu virtual și storytelling interactiv, contribuind la extinderea influenței culturale franceze.

Franța reprezintă unul dintre liderii europeni în ceea ce privește integrarea tehnologiilor digitale în diplomația culturală. Prin intermediul Institutului Francez (Institut Français), statul francez a dezvoltat platforma „IFdigital”, un instrument strategic care promovează industriile culturale și creative franceze în mediul internațional și care reflectă adaptarea diplomației culturale la noile dinamici ale ecosistemelor digitale.

„IFdigital” are mai multe funcții centrale:

- proiecția globală a industriilor creative franceze, incluzând artele vizuale digitale, cinemaul, designul, realitatea virtuală și jocurile video;
- conectarea creatorilor francezi cu instituții, festivaluri și parteneri străini, facilitând colaborări transnaționale;
- arhivarea și prezentarea unor proiecte digitale inovatoare, care poziționează Franța ca pionier în domeniul artelor tehnologice;
- crearea unei platforme de referință pentru cultură digitală, accesibilă atât profesioniștilor culturali, cât și publicului general.

Prin această platformă, Institutul Francez urmărește redefinirea modului în care cultura franceză este percepută, distribuită și experimentată la nivel global.

Elementul central al strategiei „IFdigital” este acela de a promova artele digitale ca formă contemporană de expresie culturală franceză. Platforma include: proiecte de artă generativă,instalații imersive VR/AR, prototipuri de storytelling interactiv.

Această orientare permite Franței să își afirme leadershipul nu doar în cultură, ci și în inovare tehnologică, consolidându-și poziția în diplomația culturală globală.

Prin acest tip de cooperare, Franța dezvoltă punți diplomatice bazate pe creativitate și transfer de cunoștințe, transformând platforma într-un instrument de soft power tehnologic-cultural.

Platforma oferă acces gratuit la diverse proiecte și resurse digitale, ceea ce:

- democratizează accesul global la cultura franceză
- permite publicurilor internaționale să exploreze creații culturale inovatoare
- sprijină interacțiunea interculturală în medii virtuale.

În loc să limiteze cultura la spațiile fizice ale institutelor culturale, Franța o extinde în spațiile digitale globale.

Beneficiile asupra diplomației culturale franceze sunt:modernizarea imaginii Franței ca națiune creativă și tehnologic avansată și extinderea vizibilității culturii franceze în zone geografice greu accesibile prin metode tradiționale.

Provocările constau în: competiția cu mari ecosisteme culturale digitale (SUA, Coreea de Sud, Japonia); necesitatea actualizării continue a platformei pentru a rămâne relevantă tehnologic; asigurarea echilibrului între tradiția culturală franceză și inovația digitală.

Coreea de Sud și exportul cultural algoritmic: K-pop și K-culture ca instrumente de diplomație culturală digitală Coreea de Sud reprezintă unul dintre cele mai elocvente exemple contemporane de diplomație culturală adaptată erei digitale. Modelul sud-coreean de promovare culturală, cunoscut generic sub numele de Hallyu sau Korean Wave, utilizează intens tehnologiile emergente, inclusiv algoritmi de recomandare, analitică de date și inteligență artificială, pentru a disemina la scară globală produse culturale precum K-pop, K-dramas, filmul coreean, gastronomia și moda. Algoritmii IA sunt utilizați ca vectori ai vizibilității culturale.

Platforme precum YouTube, TikTok, Spotify sau Netflix joacă un rol esențial în globalizarea culturii sud-coreene. Algoritmii acestor platforme au rolul de a : amplifica vizibilitatea videoclipurilor K-pop în funcție de engagement ; personaliza recomandările pe baza comportamentului utilizatorilor; facilita accesul non-coreenilor la conținut nou, chiar fără interes cultural preexistent și de a crea comunități globale bazate pe consumul mediatic repetitiv.

Această sinergie între cultură și tehnologia algoritmică a devenit un instrument cheie al diplomației culturale sud-coreene.

Industria K-pop este construită în mod strategic pentru mediul digital. Agențiile sud-coreene: produc conținut optimizat pentru algoritmi (videoclipuri scurte, materiale în format vertical, remixuri, teasere repetitive), folosesc analiza datelor pentru a anticipa preferințele publicului global și integrează IA în analiza feedback-ului fanilor, în selecția pieselor și chiar în compunerea muzicală.

Astfel, cultura sud-coreeană nu este doar promovată pe platforme digitale, ci creată special pentru acestea, ceea ce îi conferă o adaptabilitate superioară în ecosistemul digital global.
Guvernul sud-coreean și Ministerul Culturii susțin activ ecosistemul Hallyu prin: finanțarea industriei creative, parteneriate public-private cu agențiile de entertainment, politici culturale orientate spre export,programe de cercetare în IA pentru industriile culturale.

Diplomația culturală devine astfel un proces integrat între stat, industrie și tehnologie, consolidând soft power-ul Coreei de Sud.

Modelul sud-coreean demonstrează eficiența algoritmilor ca multiplicatori ai influenței culturale.

Japonia – patrimoniu cultural în realitate virtuală ca instrument de diplomație culturală digitală.

Proiecte precum digitizarea în VR a templelor, muzeelor și arhivelor culturale („Cultural Japan") facilitează accesul global la patrimoniul nipon și reprezintă o extindere digitală a diplomației culturale tradiționale.

Japonia este un actor semnificativ în domeniul digitalizării patrimoniului cultural, utilizând tehnologiile de realitate virtuală (VR), realitate augmentată (AR) și modele 3D pentru a-și promova istoria, tradițiile și identitatea culturală pe plan internațional. Această orientare tehnologică consolidează diplomația culturală japoneză, facilitând accesul global la experiențe imersive și contribuind la menținerea influenței culturale a țării în era digitală.

Proiecte precum „Virtual Kyoto", „Digital Museum of Japanese Cultural Heritage" sau inițiativele conduse de universități și organizații culturale japoneze au dezvoltat modele 3D detaliate ale templelor, orașelor istorice, sanctuarelor shintoiste și grădinilor tradiționale, permit: vizitarea patrimoniului la distanță, în mod accesibil pentru publicuri internaționale; conservarea digitală a monumentelor vulnerabile la dezastre naturale; utilizarea educațională a patrimoniului în contexte academice internaționale.

Prin aceste instrumente, Japonia nu promovează doar cultura, ci și un model de conservare avansată, consolidându-și reputația în domeniul tehnologiei.

Ministerul Culturii din Japonia și organizațiile afiliate colaborează cu companii de tehnologie pentru a crea experiențe culturale imersive, precum: tururi virtuale ale Templului Kiyomizu-dera sau ale Castelului Himeji ; vizite interactive în Muzeul Național Tokyo, reconstituiri VR ale festivalurilor tradiționale; simulări istorice în care utilizatorii pot interacționa cu artefacte sau personaje din trecut.

Aceste inițiative au un impact diplomatic semnificativ, oferind acces universal la cultura japoneză, chiar și în absența mobilității fizice.

Japonia valorifică VR și AR și pentru patrimoniul intangibil: demonstrații VR de ceremonie a ceaiului; experiențe digitale de teatru Nō și Kabuki ; ateliere virtuale de meșteșuguri tradiționale (origami, ikebana, ceramică).

Aceste experiențe permit difuzarea unor practici culturale greu de accesat în mod tradițional, generând o nouă formă de diplomație culturală imersivă.

Muzeele și universitățile din Japonia colaborează cu instituții din Europa, America de Nord și Asia pentru proiecte comune de digitalizare. De exemplu, partenariatele cu UNESCO contribuie la crearea unor modele VR ale siturilor protejate, facilitând cercetarea interdisciplinară și dialogul cultural global.

Această cooperare internațională oferă Japoniei o poziție centrală în rețelele globale de patrimoniu digital și inovare culturală.

Beneficiile diplomatice constau în creșterea accesibilității culturii japoneze pentru publicul global, extinderea turismului cultural prin experiențe virtuale , consolidarea brandului cultural japonez ca inovator și tehnologic avansat.

Provocările constau în dependența de infrastructură tehnologică avansată, costurile ridicate pentru digitizare și întreținerea arhivelor VR și riscul superficializării experiențelor culturale imersive.

Diplomația culturală în România

Institutul Cultural Român (ICR) reprezintă principalul instrument al diplomației culturale românești și a început să valorifice intens mediul digital pentru promovarea culturii naționale pe plan internațional. Prin programele sale digitale, ICR își propune să mențină vizibilitatea României în spațiul global, să faciliteze accesul publicului internațional la patrimoniul cultural românesc și să susțină schimburile artistice în contextul digitalizării accelerate.

Institutul Cultural Român a dezvoltat o serie de inițiative și platforme pentru promovarea culturii românești:

- Festivaluri și evenimente culturale online: TIFF online, festivaluri de literatură și muzică, ateliere și expoziții virtuale;
- Expoziții și patrimoniu digital: galerii virtuale și colecții digitale care permit accesul internațional la opere de artă și documente istorice;
- Promovarea artiștilor români prin canale digitale: social media, platforme video și site-uri oficiale ICR, oferind vizibilitate globală creațiilor contemporane;
- Cursuri și programe educative online: inițiative de formare și programe lingvistice care sprijină învățarea limbii române și dezvoltarea competențelor interculturale.

Prin aceste programe digitale, ICR reconfigurează diplomația culturală tradițională, transferând o parte semnificativă a interacțiunilor culturale în mediul online.

Avantajele includ: acces global la cultura română, depășind barierele geografice și logistice; Crearea de comunități internaționale de artiști și public, facilitând colaborarea și schimburile interculturale.

Consolidarea soft power-ului românesc prin prezența continuă și activă în spațiul digital.

Beneficiile constau în: extinderea vizibilității culturii românești la nivel internațional; promovarea patrimoniului și creativității românești în context global și facilitarea dialogului intercultural și a colaborării cu instituții culturale internaționale.

Provocările constau în:disparități digitale între instituțiile culturale mari și mici; limitări financiare și tehnologice pentru dezvoltarea unor programe digitale avansate și necesitatea instruirii profesionale pentru diplomați și specialiști culturali în domeniul digital.

România și-a adaptat diplomația culturală la mediul digital printr-o serie de inițiative inovatoare care facilitează accesul internațional la patrimoniul și creația culturală națională.

Biblioteci și muzee românești contribuie la ”Europeana”, cea mai mare platformă digitală europeană, punând la dispoziția publicului global mii de documente, fotografii, manuscrise și artefacte.

În paralel, instituții precum Muzeul Național de Artă al României sau Muzeul Țăranului Român oferă tururi virtuale și expoziții online, completate de resurse multimedia interactive.

Inițiativele precum „România Creativă” sprijină industriile culturale și creative în mediul digital, promovând domenii precum designul, filmul, animația sau patrimoniul digital.

De asemenea, festivaluri și evenimente culturale majore - TIFF, Festivalul Național de Teatru, Noaptea Muzeelor — au adoptat formate hibride, incluzând proiecții online, ateliere virtuale și transmisiuni live, consolidând astfel prezența culturală a României la nivel global și transformând mediul digital într-un instrument strategic de diplomație culturală.

Inteligența artificială ca instrument în diplomația culturală

Platformele digitale folosesc IA pentru a recomanda conținut cultural - filme, muzică, literatură - către audiențe internaționale. Această personalizare permite statelor să își adapteze strategiile culturale la profilul publicului țintă, crescând eficiența diplomației culturale.

Analiza sentimentului, monitorizarea discursurilor online și detectarea tendințelor culturale globale permit diplomaților să înțeleagă percepția externă asupra culturii lor și să răspundă într-un mod strategic. IA devine astfel un instrument de „early warning” cultural.

Modelele lingvistice sofisticate reduc barierele interculturale, facilitând diseminarea conținutului cultural și dialogul între instituțiile culturale. Aceasta contribuie la extinderea accesului la patrimoniu și la diversificarea publicurilor.

IA generează noi forme de expresie artistică (muzică, vizual, literatură), ridicând întrebări privind autenticitatea și statutul cultural. Totuși, aceste forme pot fi utilizate în programe culturale internaționale pentru a stimula colaborarea interculturală.

Reconfigurarea cooperării internaționale prin IA

Inteligența artificială (IA) transformă profund diplomația culturală, oferind instrumente noi pentru cooperarea internațională, schimburile educaționale și protecția patrimoniului cultural.

Spre deosebire de diplomația culturală tradițională, care se baza pe interacțiuni fizice și programe fixe, integrarea IA permite crearea unor structuri dinamice, scalabile și interconectate, în care cultura și tehnologia se susțin reciproc pentru atingerea obiectivelor strategice.

Statele și organizațiile internaționale dezvoltă tot mai frecvent infrastructuri culturale digitale comune, inclusiv arhive virtuale, platforme educaționale și programe artistice online.

IA joacă un rol central în aceste inițiative prin catalogarea automată a colecțiilor, optimizarea accesibilității și personalizarea experiențelor culturale.

De exemplu, algoritmii de recomandare permit publicului internațional să descopere artefacte, opere de artă sau resurse educaționale în funcție de preferințele și istoricul de navigare, sporind astfel circulația cunoașterii și vizibilitatea patrimoniului cultural.

În plus, IA facilitează interoperabilitatea între diverse instituții: muzee, biblioteci și centre culturale pot integra colecțiile lor într-un ecosistem digital comun, care nu doar stochează informația, ci o și conectează semnificativ între spații culturale și discipline diferite.

Acest tip de parteneriat tehnologic-cultural contribuie la crearea unor rețele globale de colaborare, în care schimbul de resurse și experiențe nu mai este limitat de bariere geografice sau financiare.

IA nu este doar un instrument de administrare și distribuție a conținutului cultural, ci și un catalizator al cooperării interdisciplinare între institute culturale, universități și centre de cercetare.

Prin analiza datelor și simulările predictive, IA poate identifica modele în preferințele publicului, trenduri emergente în industriile creative sau zone geografice subreprezentate în schimburile culturale. Aceste informații permit elaborarea de politici culturale mai eficiente și programe de colaborare care combină expertiza tehnologică și creativă.

Convergența tehnologic-culturală generează noi forme de diplomație: cultura devine un vector pentru dialogul despre inovație și tehnologie, iar tehnologia devine un vector pentru diseminarea culturii. Un exemplu relevant este folosirea IA pentru crearea de expoziții virtuale interactive, tururi imersive sau aplicații educaționale care explică contextul istoric și artistic al operelor culturale.

Aceste forme hibride de interacțiune permit publicului global să participe activ la experiențe culturale și să stabilească conexiuni interculturale fără precedent.

O altă dimensiune esențială a IA în diplomația culturală este protecția integrității informației și a patrimoniului cultural. Într-o lume în care narațiunile distorsionate, stereotipurile și campaniile de propagandă culturală sunt tot mai frecvente, instrumentele bazate pe IA devin indispensabile.

Tehnologiile de verificare automată a conținutului, recunoaștere a imaginilor și detectare a deepfake-urilor permit instituțiilor culturale să identifice și să corecteze rapid informațiile false care afectează imaginea unei țări sau autenticitatea patrimoniului său.

Acest tip de intervenție digitală are un dublu rol: pe de o parte, protejează imaginea și reputația culturală a statelor, iar pe de altă parte, educă publicul internațional privind criteriile de evaluare a veridicității conținutului cultural. În acest sens, IA devine un instrument strategic de diplomație culturală defensivă, completând formele tradiționale de promovare culturală și contribuind la stabilitatea dialogului intercultural.

Provocări și riscuri ale integrării IA în diplomația culturală

Adoptarea inteligenței artificiale în domeniul culturii aduce multiple oportunități, dar și provocări semnificative care pot influența modul în care cultura este reprezentată și percepută la nivel internațional.

Un prim risc major este algoritmizarea culturii, proces prin care IA determină, prin modelele sale de recomandare și filtrare, ce elemente culturale devin vizibile și ce elemente rămân marginalizate. Această selectivitate poate conduce la o uniformizare culturală, în care diversitatea și complexitatea patrimoniului global sunt diminuate, iar preferințele algoritmice preiau rolul de criteriu principal de expunere a culturii. În acest context, anumite practici, tradiții sau expresii artistice riscă să fie neglijate, favorizând formate și stiluri deja dominante pe platformele digitale.

Un al doilea aspect critic ține de problemele etice și suveranitatea culturală. Utilizarea IA implică decizii automate privind promovarea, clasificarea și distribuția conținutului cultural, ceea ce ridică întrebări despre proprietatea intelectuală, controlul asupra narațiunii culturale și autonomia instituțiilor implicate. În absența unui cadru clar de reglementare, algoritmii pot amplifica perspective dominante sau influențe externe, afectând capacitatea statelor și organizațiilor culturale de a-și defini identitatea și mesajele proprii.

În plus, există riscul inegalităților digitale la nivel global. Țările cu resurse tehnologice limitate sau infrastructură digitală deficitară pot fi marginalizate în competiția pentru vizibilitate culturală.

Aceasta accentuează asimetriile existente în relațiile internaționale și poate transforma diplomația culturală digitală într-un instrument exclusivist, dominat de statele și organizațiile cu capacitate tehnologică superioară.

În acest context, adoptarea IA necesită politici strategice care să asigure echitatea accesului, diversitatea reprezentării și protecția autonomiei culturale.

În concluzie, provocările generate de algoritmizare, probleme etice și inegalități digitale impun o abordare atent reglementată și responsabilă a IA în diplomația culturală, pentru a maximiza beneficiile acesteia fără a compromite diversitatea și integritatea patrimoniului cultural global.

Direcții de dezvoltare și recomandări

Pe măsură ce inteligența artificială devine un instrument central în gestionarea și promovarea patrimoniului cultural, este esențială conturarea unor strategii care să echilibreze inovarea tehnologică cu responsabilitatea socială și culturală.

O primă direcție prioritară este stimularea standardelor internaționale privind etica digitală, care să includă principii de respect pentru diversitatea culturală, protecția datelor și transparența deciziilor algoritmice. Aceste cadre etice ar putea fi dezvoltate prin cooperare interguvernamentală și organisme internaționale, pentru a preveni folosirea IA în moduri care ar putea distorsiona sau marginaliza expresiile culturale.

O a doua direcție se referă la transparența și auditabilitatea platformelor culturale digitale. Instituțiile culturale și organizațiile internaționale ar trebui să dezvolte infrastructuri în care algoritmii sunt documentați, evaluabili și configurabili, astfel încât deciziile automate să fie verificabile și adaptabile la nevoile publicului și obiectivele diplomatice. Această abordare permite prevenirea reproducerii unor biasuri și creșterea încrederii utilizatorilor în conținutul cultural digital.

Integrarea IA în domeniul cultural implică expertiză tehnologică, cunoștințe artistice și capacități diplomatice.

Colaborarea între ministere de externe, institute culturale, companii tehnologice și mediul academic poate facilita dezvoltarea de proiecte inovatoare, precum arhive digitale comune, platforme interactive transnaționale sau programe educaționale care combină cultura cu tehnologia.

În fine, susținerea alfabetizării digitale și a competențelor culturale digitale este esențială pentru echitatea accesului. Educația digitală nu trebuie să se limiteze la utilizarea instrumentelor, ci să includă înțelegerea modului în care IA modelează reprezentarea culturală și impactul acesteia asupra percepțiilor internaționale. Prin astfel de programe, publicurile globale pot interacționa activ și critic cu cultura digitală, iar instituțiile culturale pot asigura o participare mai largă și mai inclusivă.

Prin urmare, direcțiile propuse combină etica, transparența, colaborarea și educația, conturând un cadru strategic care să permită utilizarea IA în diplomația culturală în mod responsabil, echitabil și inovator, maximizând impactul pozitiv asupra cooperării internaționale și promovării patrimoniului cultural global.

Integrarea inteligenței artificiale în diplomația culturală nu reprezintă doar o adaptare tehnologică, ci o reconfigurare profundă a modului în care cultura circulă și generează influență globală. IA facilitează crearea de platforme culturale dinamice, parteneriate internaționale inovatoare și forme hibride de interacțiune între public și patrimoniu, transformând cultura într-un vector activ de cooperare și soft power.

Totuși, această revoluție digitală vine cu provocări semnificative: algoritmizarea riscă să uniformizeze expresiile culturale, disparitățile tehnologice pot accentua inegalitățile internaționale, iar problemele etice și de suveranitate culturală impun o regândire atentă a politicilor instituțiilor.

Viitorul diplomației culturale depinde de echilibrul între inovație și responsabilitate, între accesibilitate globală și protecția autonomiei culturale.

Prin cadre etice solide, transparență algoritmică și colaborare interdisciplinară, IA poate deveni un instrument de dialog intercultural mai profund și mai incluziv, capabil să transforme nu doar modul în care prezentăm cultura, ci și felul în care construim conexiuni între societăți.

Astfel, cultura și tehnologia nu sunt doar complementare, ci converg pentru a crea o diplomație culturală a viitorului, în care inovația digitală devine un catalizator al înțelegerii globale și al cooperării internaționale.

THE CONCEPT OF INTEGRATED ACTIVITY IN EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION: HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT, THEORETICAL PREMISES AND INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVES

Silvia Trocmaer
PhD, "Ion Creangă: State Pedagogical University of Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: The article explores the concept of integrated activity in early childhood education, following the historical evolution of the terms "integrated activity" and "early childhood education" and examining their theoretical grounding in classical and contemporary pedagogy. The study analyses the way in which integrated activity is conceptualized and operationalized in the early childhood education systems of the Republic of Moldova, Romania, China, Japan, India, England and selected school districts in the United States. Based on comparative analysis, the paper proposes a derived conceptual term – holistic-integrative early learning practice – which can serve as a theoretical and managerial framework for doctoral research on the management of integrated activities in preschool education.*

Keywords: early childhood education; integrated activity; holistic development; educational management; international comparison.*

Vorbind despre contextul actual cu referire la reformele în educație și cu transcendere în convingerile europene și globale în ceea ce privesc politicile pentru educație timpurie, termenul de activitate integrată reprezintă un indicator al esenței modernității în Curriculum și al calității procesului educațional care are ca loc de desfășurare sala de grupă a grădiniței. Devenind insuficientă abordarea fragmentată a conținuturilor, care odinioară cunoșteau organizare pe domenii și discipline văzute și tratate în mod izolat, copilul preșcolar capătă astăzi figura holistică care se află într-un permanent proces de dezvoltare îmbinând în același timp și în aceeași măsură planurile cognitiv, socio-emoțional, motric, estetic și comunicativ[2],[3].

În România și în Republica Moldova noile Curriculum-uri tratează în mod explicit principiile integrării ca fundamente în educația timpurie, iar cercetările realizate recent, în special ale doamnei Lilia Cebanu evidențiază rolul deținut de activitățile integrate în managementul dezvoltării holistice a copilului [1],[6],[7]. Privind la nivel internațional sistemele de educație timpurii din China, Japonia, India, Anglia și din alte districte ale Statelor Unite, vin și aduc în prim plan o varietate de modele de integrare care, deși abordează și sunt ancorate în tradiții culturale diferite întâlnesc aceeași idee centrală concretizată în faptul că un copil învață mai profund atunci când experiențele sale sunt organizate în mod unitar și semnificativ [11],[12],[13],[14],[15].

În acest articol propun într-o manieră integratoare, critic-reflexivă un traseu de-a lungul istoriei, al termenilor, activitate Integrată și educație timpurie, menit să evidențieze premisele teoretice majore ale conceptelor, să compare felul în care ele s-au reflectat în sistemele educaționale la care fac referire și să propună un termen derivat, practica holistic-integrativă în educația timpurie. Încercând un traseu istoric al conceptelor în educație și activitate integrată propun câteva premise clasice europene. Cu ceva timp înainte alăturarea de tip termen "activitate integrată" își capătă utilitatea explicită în literatura pedagogică, ideea de integrare a derivat din lucrările unor mari pedagogi europeni care priveau educația copilului ca pe un proces unitar în care dimensiune ale ființei se dezvoltă în mod simultan. Pestalozzi susținea că educația autentică se bazează pe o armonie a " inimii minții și mâinii" acest lucru devenind posibil doar prin îmbinarea trăirilor afective cu dezvoltarea gândirii și cu o acțiune practică. Triada prezentată în termeni moderni nu este altceva decât forma incipientă de abordare integrată a educației la nivel preșcolar.

Fröbel, considerat a fi cel care a întemeiat grădinițele, în viziunea sa jocul este activitatea globală prin care copilul reușește o explorare a lumii, își exprimă sentimentele și emoțiile și reușește exersarea limbajului și coordonarea motrică, toate acestea fiind posibile într-un cadru unitar [3]. În ideile sale, o descompunere a procesului educativ în lecții rigide contravine naturii copilăriei care este dominată de curiozitate, spontaneitate și o nevoie permanentă de a integra senzorial, cognitiv și afectiv experiențele dobândite.

Herbart a adus o contribuție importantă în înțelegerea integrării, deși el este asociat cu pedagogia sistematică dar prin teoria appercepției se dă sens integrării. În viziunea sa, orice informație/cunoaștere nouă este "appercepută" , adică asimilarea și organizarea ei se realizează în legătură cu structurile anterioare ale conștiinței. Din punctul său de vedere, actul învățării devine însăși natura sa un proces integrativ în care noile asimilări trebuie legate de ceea ce copilul știe, simte și trăiește deja, pentru a deveni semnificative.

Încercând o transcendere de la pedagogia reformei la paradigmele holistice contemporane pedagogia reformistă din secolele XIX-XX prezintă idei importante în direcția integrării.
Decroly este cel care vine cu ideea "centrelor de interes" în care conținuturile cunosc organizare în jurul unor teme de viață de o deosebită importanță pentru copil. Astfel, observația, experimentarea, activitatea practică dar și experimentarea verbală nu apar separate și devin subsisteme ale acestui context tematic, premisă ce reprezintă activitățile integrate moderne[4] .

Montessori propune un alt model în care mediul este cel care devine pregătit ca să ofere copilului posibilități de învățare multisenzorială și autoreglată. Materialele de tip Montessori urmăresc în mod coordonat dezvoltarea motrică a gândirii logice, a limbajului și a autonomiei, astfel încât granițele care sunt considerate ca fiind rigide între discipline sunt depășite în favoarea unei experiențe globale centrate pe copil [5].

Dewey este cel care aduce în discuție unitatea experienței. Pentru el atât școala cât și grădinița sunt comunități democratice în miniatură în care copilul este prezent pentru a învăța, participând la activități sociale care sunt reale, prin rezolvarea de probleme și realizarea de proiecte practice. În astfel de contexte cunoașterea, limbajul, cooperarea și reflexivitatea nu pot fi despărțite fapt care legitimează din punct de vedere filosofic și pedagogic activitatea integrată.

Așadar cu mult înainte de a fi un simplu termen tehnic în curriculumul pentru educație timpurie, activitatea integrată cunoaște un parcurs istoric strâns legat de modificările profunde ale conceptelor pedagogice trecând de la modelele enciclopedice și disciplinare la paradigme cu centrare pe copil, pe experiență și pe dezvoltarea holistică.

Fac aport la premise teoretice ale activității integrate în educația timpurie și îmi îndrept atenția către premisele psihologice în ceea ce privește dezvoltarea ca proces global.

Noua ideologie psihologică consideră activitatea de integrare ca un produs al noului. În viziunea sa, Piaget , a descris dezvoltarea copilului ca un proces cu mai multe stadii în care structurile ce definesc cogniția devin mai complexe prin asimilare și acomodare. Aceste modificări nu sunt realizate într-un vid ci sunt în strânsă legătură cu dezvoltarea limbajului, cu maturitatea motrică, cu evoluția afectivă, copilul nu "gândește" separat de modul în care acționează și simte [2]. Tocmai acest lucru ne face să concluzionăm faptul că activitățile trebuiesc concepute astfel încât să solicite în mod concomitent gândirea, limbajul, mișcarea și emoțiile într-un context integrator.

Vygotski își aduce aportul prin teoria socio-constructivistă aducând argumente ce susțin ideea conform căreia dezvoltarea psihică se realizează în interacțiune cu ceilalți și în cadrul activităților social mediate. În concepția sa, zona proximei dezvoltări arată că procesul maxim apare doar atunci când un copil participă la activități puțin peste nivelul său actual, cu sprijinul adultului sau al colegilor mai competenți [10],[16]. În această perspectivă activitatea integrată reprezintă un mediu privilegiat deoarece are posibilitatea de a oferi situații complexe în care copilul va trebui să acopere, să comunice, să explice, să exploreze, să manipuleze obiecte și în același timp să reflecteze asupra propriilor sale acțiuni.

Leontiev, este cel care aduce ideea conform căreia dezvoltarea psihică este inseparabilă de activitatea obiectuală și de motivația care o susține. Astfel privind structura activității, observăm că este formată din motive, scopuri, acțiuni și operații care sunt fundamentate în mod unitar[17]. Găsindu-i aplicativitate în educația timpurie, concepția lui ne sugerează faptul că învățarea autentică nu poate fi redusă la exerciții izolate și trebuie să o conectăm la activități care dețin un sens pentru copil, în care jocul, explorarea, comunicarea și cooperarea reușesc să se îmbine. Și aici activitatea integrată este tocmai o formă superioară de organizare ai experienței de învățare în strânsă legătură cu modul natural de funcționare a psihicului copilului.

Făcând transcendere în planul pedagogic în a doua jumătate a secolului XX apar concepte cheie care asigură susținerea din punct de vedere teoretic a integrării concretizate: interdisciplinaritate și transdisciplinaritate. Interdisciplinaritatea face referință la articularea conținuturilor care provin indisciplinei în jurul unor teme sau probleme comune în timp ce transdisciplinaritatea are capacitatea de a depăși granițele disciplinelor în favoarea unei abordări în care centrarea cade pe fenomene complexe ale realității și pe experiența globală a individului [5].

Axându-ne pe educația timpurie, direcțiile se concretizează prin introducerea unor teme săptămânale sau lunare, folosirea unor proiecte integrate prin organizarea mediului pe centre de interes și recunoașterea prin punere în valoare a jocului ca activitate centrală ce deține capacitatea a integra multiple dimensiuni ale dezvoltării copilului [3],[4],[8].

În afirmațiile sale, Potolea susține ideea conform căreia un curriculum modern nu ignoră caracterul integrativ al învățării, dar în același timp și necesitatea de a oferi copilului contextualizare și coerență, acest lucru presupunând trecerea de logica disciplinară rigidă în favoarea unei logici a experienței de viață a copilului [5].

Cucoș precum și alți pedagogi români pune accentul pe ideea că educația timpurie are neapărată nevoie de un caracter global, în direcția că dezvoltarea competențelor specifice diferitelor arii curriculare nu poate fi realizată prin activități izolate ci doar prin scenarii educaționale complexe în care copilul este pus să observe, să experimenteze, să creeze și să comunice în același timp [2],[8]. În Republica Moldova curriculumul pentru educație timpurie din 2018 prezintă în mod explicit integrarea ca și principiu fundamental în organizarea procesului educațional. Domeniile de dezvoltare concretizate în socio-emoțional, cognitiv, limbaj și comunicare, fizic, estetic și creativ, nu sunt considerate segmente separate ci sunt tratate ca și dimensiuni care relaționează prin activități integrate și proiecte tematice [6]. Acest lucru derivă în mod direct din premisele teoretice care sunt prezentate dar și de scopul urmărit și anume acela de a ajunge și a asigura o dezvoltare holistică a copilului.

Urmărind perspectiva culturală și filozofică internațională, în afara spațiului european termenul și conceptul integrare au ca bază tradițiile culturale și specifice diverselor țări. În China filozofia dezvoltată de Confucius își are accentul pe asigurarea unei armonii între dimensiunea morală, intelectuală și emoțională a unei persoane. Astfel educația vizează procesul de armonizare nu de specializare precoce, acest principiu regăsindu-se în modul în care curriculumul pentru educație timpurie combină activitățile care asigură învățarea cu acele activități care asigură dezvoltarea socio-emoțională și formarea caracterului [11],[18],[19].

Dacă aruncăm o privire în Japonia, educația timpurie pune în centru conceptul de sogo katsudo - concretizat în activitate globală sau integrată care propune ideea ca un copil să se dezvolte prin experiențe în care corpul, emoțiile și mintea acționează împreună. Jocul, activitățile practice, experiențele estetice și relațiile interpersonale devin elemente ale unei singure structuri educaționale [12],[20].

În India educația este inspirată de ideologia lui Tagore și Gandhi. Cei doi susțin viziunea holistică asupra omului iar educația intelectuală nu se separă de ce morală, artistică sau spirituală. Documente recente cum ar fi National Education Policy (NEP 2020), au menirea de a continua această orientare în același timp introducând conceptul de integrated foundational learning, care propune învățarea multisenzorială, contextualizată cultural și comunitar[13] .

Anglia și multe state din SUA, cunosc integrarea sub denumiri precum whole child approach sau integrated early learning . Termenii prezentați pun în evidență responsabilitatea sistemului educațional care nu susțin doar performanțele cognitive ci urmăresc asigurarea bunăstării emoționale,a sănătății și a incluziunii sociale a copilului [14],[15]. Toate acestea conduc către ideea că activitatea integrată nu este simpla opțiune de ordin metodologic și răspunsul la viziunea globală asupra dezvoltării umane.

Educația timpurie din Republica Moldova pune în discuție conceptul de activitate integrată ca proces de dezvoltare graduală de la primele încercări metodice ce țin de perioada sovietică până la concretizarea actuală în Curriculum pentru educație timpurie din 2018. Documentele actuale surprind integrarea proces identificat atât la nivelul conținuturilor cât și la nivelul strategiilor de organizare a experiențelor de învățare ale copiilor[6]. Găsim astfel activitatea Integrată în proiectele tematice în organizarea mediului educațional în evaluarea holistică a progresului copilului cum am spune în structura unei zile de grădiniță.

Lilia Cebanu are o contribuție deosebită în clarificări de ordin conceptual și metodologic cu privire la activitățile integrate precum și scoaterea în evidență a laturilor și dimensiunilor lor manageriale. Doamna Cebanu precizează că eficiența activităților integrate este asigurată de un set de condiții dintre care relatăm concepția pedagogică a cadrului didactic, organizarea mediului educațional, planificarea tematică care să fie riguroasă, utilizarea unor metode activ participative și asigurarea unei evaluări care să puncteze progresul copilului în termeni de competențe globale, ci nu de acumulări informaționale [1],[7].

Contextul educațional plasează activitatea integrată ca formă de organizare a procesului didactic dar și modalitate de management în dezvoltarea copilului în sensul că asigură o urmărire coerentă a obiectivelor de dezvoltare pe multiple planuri într-un cadru unitar. În tratarea unei teme care vizează managementul activităților integrate în dezvoltarea holistică a preșcolarilor perspectiva devine esențială legând nivelul curricular și metodologic de cel managerial.

România dă deschidere conceptului de activitate integrată și îl consolidează în contextul unor reforme curriculare începând cu anul 2000. Curriculumul ce vizează educația timpurie prezentat in versiuni succesive își are aportul prin introducerea unor structuri precum temele anuale de studiu, temele săptămânale, proiectele tematice, ce organizarea mediului pe centre de interes toate urmărind același obiectiv și anume susținerea unei abordări globale a dezvoltării copilului[8],[9].

Pedagogi precum Oprea și Cucoș au concretizat în argumentările lor faptul că o didactică preșcolară în învățământul românesc nu își primă eficiența dacă vizează doar limitarea la activități izolate pe discipline cum ar fi limbajul, știința, arta, ci dimpotrivă trebuie să asigură scenarii educaționale integrate în care aceeași situație de învățare poate activa abilități lingvistice de gândire logică competențe sociale și atitudini valorice [2],[4].

Atât în învățământul din România cât și în cel din Republica Moldova activitatea integrată devine un concept pivot care este așezat la intersecția dintre psihologia dezvoltării copilului, teoria curriculară și managementul educațional. Aparentele diferențe decurg tocmai din particularități conceptuale și din formulări ale documentelor oficiale orientarea de fond fiind convergentă.

Privind din altă perspectivă, China se ghidează în educația timpurie după modelele confuciene dând o deosebită importanță armoniei și echilibrului, iar politicile educaționale moderne au ca obiectiv principal o aliniere la standarde internaționale. Studiile lui Li ne prezintă faptul că în grădinițele chinezești curriculumul devine structurat pe domenii integrate, iar activitățile tematice combină explorarea științifică elementară, dezvoltarea limbajului, activitățile artistice și exercițiile de cooperare [11]. În viziunile lor copilul este încurajat să învețe oferindu-i contexte care reușesc uniunea în mod simbolic a lumii naturii cu spațiul social și cu universul valorilor culturale.

Ghidându-ne după cercetările recente putem observa faptul că colțurile de activitate au o deosebită importanță deoarece aici materialele și resursele sunt așezate în maniera în care pot oferi copiilor posibilitatea de a alege activități care să le permită să integreze jocul simbolic, manipularea obiectelor, dizolvarea problemelor și conversația [18],[19]. Dacă suntem atenți la aceste lucruri spunem că activitatea Integrată devine un răspuns concret la principiul dezvoltării armonioase care plasează copilul în centrul unui univers educativ în care dimensiunile cognitive, morale și afective se susțin reciproc.

În Japonia însă tradiția din educație pune accent deosebit pe comunitate, un loc principal oferind respectului pentru natură și vizând cultivarea unei atitudini de responsabilitate față de ceilalți. În această țară grădinițele nu sunt doar spații în care se asigură instruirea și educația ci sunt considerate medii de viață comunitare în miniatură. Tobin este cel care a reușit să realizeze studii comparative asupra grădinițelor din Japonia. În aceste studii a descris activități în care jocul liber, participarea la activitățile practice cum ar fi curățenia, îngrijirea plantelor, manifestările artistice și ritualurile zilnice au format un ansamblu integrat concretizat în jurul valorilor colective [12],[20].

Tipul de activități globale concretizat în conceptul de sogo katsudo ne prezintă activitate în care nu se pot distinge clar granițe între învățarea limbajului, educația morală s-au dezvoltarea motrică deoarece ele apar simultan experiența copilului. În Japonia un rol primordial îl deține formarea caracterului și învățarea convietuirii, pe câtă vreme obiectivele cognitive explicite joacă un rol secundar această opțiune fiind o formă de integrare profundă a componentelor Educației.

În India însă tradiția educațională leagă spiritualitatea, arta, munca manuală și viața comunitară. Tagore și Gandhi propun modele în care accentul cade pe educația în natură, pe creativitate și autoformare prefigurând o pedagogie holistică. Documentele internaționale care au ca obiectiv analizarea reformei NEP 2020 prezintă faptul că politica lor educațională actuală păstrează această orientare și acest sens promovând curriculum integrat în educația timpurie[13].

Grădinițele precum și centrele în care se desfășoară o educație timpurie în India au pus accentul pe o învățare multisenzorială utilizând activități în care sunt combinate cântecul, dansul, poveștile, jocurile de rol și simplele experiențe practice strâns legate de viața cotidiană. În această țară copiii sunt permanent stimulați să utilizeze concomitent limbajul, mișcarea, expresivitatea corporală și gândirea, iar conținuturile curriculare se subordonează perfect realității comunității locale. Așadar putem afirma faptul că activitatea integrată în India cunoaște o dimensiune culturală și comunitară pronunțată.

În Anglia, cadrul EYFS Early Years Foundation Stage a realizat un set de arii ale dezvoltării care vizează o abordare integrată , a dezvoltării personale, sociale, a comunicării și limbajului, a dezvoltării fizice, a alfabetizării, a matematicii, a înțelegerii lumii și a dezvoltării artistice și expresive [14]. Documentele realizate în mod oficial au ca drept recomandare organizarea mediului și a activităților astfel încât copiii să dispună de posibilitatea de a explora simultan mai multe arii în contexte de joc și investigație.

Realizând inspecțiile Ofsted se dă valoare abordării lor integrate , centrate pe copil în care profesorul realizează construcții, fire narative ale activității de învățare având ca punct de pornire interesele reale ale copiilor. Așadar proiectele legate de natură oferă posibilitatea includerii în același timp a enumerației, vocabularului specific, desenului și picturii, discuțiilor despre reguli și relații sociale, acest lucru corespunzând în totalitate conceptului de activitate integrată.

Deși sistemul educațional din SUA este foarte divers, multe state și distincte au dezvoltat standarde pentru educația timpurie care încurajează abordarea integrată și orientarea spre "whole child" adică spre un copil care este văzut ca un întreg [15]. Documentele oficiale care țin de Departamentele de Educație din SUA ale unor state precum California și Massachusetts pun în evidență o necesitate de a corela dezvoltarea cognitivă timpurie, în special în domeniul alfabetizării și al matematicii, cu dezvoltarea socio-emoțională, cu starea de sănătate și cu incluziunea copiilor care provin din medii defavorizate. Dacă ar fi să transpunem în practică acest lucru, am afirma că activitățile integrate sunt activitățile în care componenta STEM elementară reprezentată de înțelegere a mediului înconjurător, a relațiilor spațiale, a noțiunilor de cantitate, este combinată cu povestirea, dialogul, jocul de rol și activitățile artistice. Districtele care au o tradiție în educație pentru incluziune, precum New York, fac uz de activități integrate pentru a răspunde diversității lingvistice și culturale a copiilor, oferind contexte în care toți se poată participa activ indiferent de nivelul inițial de competență.

Urmărind drumul de a lungul istoriei pe care l-a urmat conceptul de la premisele psihologice și pedagogice, iar pe de altă parte de la modelele internaționale care au fost analizate, concretizând, susținem necesitatea unei formulări conceptuale care să fie suficient încât să cuprindă pentru a descrie ceea ce se întâmplă în realitate în grădinițe moderne și în același timp suficient de precisă pentru a fundamenta modelul managerial.

Așadar făcând uz de cele menționate mai sus, termenul de practică holistic-integrativă în educația timpurie devine un ansamblu de opțiuni curriculare metodologice și manageriale prin care domeniile de dezvoltare ale copilului precum și experiențele de învățare și mediul educațional însoțite de strategiile de evaluare sunt înlănțuite într-un mod coerent, continuu contextual, orientate fiind către dezvoltarea integrală a preșcolarului.

Vizând partea structurală, această practică ar avea ca punct de plecare propunerea unei planificări care nu va putea porni de la o listă de conținuturi dispersate ci de la obiective realizate și elaborate în mod global care să vizeze dezvoltarea și care se concretizează în teme și proiecte integrate. Urmărind cele propuse, mediul educațional răspunde cerințelor dacă va fi organizat astfel încât să poată oferi copiilor ocazia de a realiza activități care implică în mod simultan explorarea, comunicarea, cooperarea și creația. Urmărind și partea evaluativă, aceasta va cunoaște orientare către un progres holistic, punând accent pe observarea sistematică a comportamentelor în contexte naturale de activitate nerealizând o simplă verificare punctuală a unor achiziții specifice.

Privind din perspectiva managerului practica holistic integrativă face apel la un tip de leadership pedagogic în care managerul și educatorul colaborează pentru realizarea unei culturi organizaționale a integrării. Construcție propune elaborarea unor planificări tematice comune, schimb de bune practici între educatori, implicarea părinților în proiectele integrate, utilizarea resurselor comunității și monitorizarea permanentă a impactului pe care îl au aceste activități în vederea asigurării unei dezvoltări globale la copii [1],[7]. Ideea prezentată funcționează ca un nucleu conceptual al unui model managerial propus ce permite o articulare de tip coerentă dimensiunilor teoretice, metodologice și practice cercetarea propusă.

Noțiunea de activitate Integrată cunoaște o traiectorie istorică complexă având ca punct de plecare instituțiile clasice ale pedagogiei europene, trecând prin reformele secolelor XIX-XX ajungând până la modelele curriculare contemporane din diverse spații culturale. În diversele contexte vizate ideea este aceeași, copilul are nevoie de o dezvoltare globală iar eficiența educației trebuie să fie asigurată în vederea răspunderii la această cerință căreia experiențele de învățare trebuie să fie organizate într-o manieră integrată. Premisele psihologice și cele pedagogice conduc în direcția unui model de educație timpurie care să treacă peste granițele fragmentelor disciplinare în favoarea unor privilegieri situaționale complexe, multisenzoriale, centrate pe copii. Sistemele educaționale care au un divizor educația timpurie din Republica Moldova, România precum și cele din China, Japonia, India, Anglia și diverse districte din Statele Unite ale Americii au pus la dispoziție exemple concrete de activități integrate care mențin sâmburele dat de particularitățile culturale, dar unite prin ideea dezvoltării holistice.

Acest cadru conceptual asigură realizarea practicii holistic-integrativă în educația timpurie care va fi o contribuție teoretică de un real folos permițând realizarea unui model managerial care să asigure valorificarea activităților integrate ca instrumente de ordin principal în dezvoltarea globală a copilului și modernizarea procesului educațional din grădinițe.

THE ONTOLOGY OF STRATEGIC LEARNING AS A REVERBERATION OF EMERGING LEARNING TYPES

Doina-Mădălina Gulie-Badea
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: This study examines the ontology of strategic learning within the context of emerging learning modalities developed by contemporary students. In an era defined by digitalization and learner-centered educational paradigms, learning strategies function as dynamic, continuously evolving processes shaped by students' autonomy, reflexivity, and individual experiences. New forms of learning—digital, collaborative, experiential, and self-regulated—reconfigure the ways in which learners select, adapt, and implement effective strategies. The study argues for conceptualizing strategic learning as an adaptive and flexible process, deeply embedded in the identity and cognitive functioning of the modern learner.

Keywords: strategic learning; ontology; digital learning; collaborative learning; metacognition; autonomy; strategic learner.

Introducere

Schimbările profunde care caracterizează societatea contemporană, dinamizată de revoluția digitală, de accelerarea fluxurilor informaționale și de nevoia permanentă de adaptare, determină o reconsiderare radicală a modului în care este conceput actul învățării. Elevul se află astăzi într-un context educațional în care simpla acumulare de cunoștințe nu mai garantează performanța cognitivă sau reușita socială. În acest cadru, accentul se mută de la ce se învață la cum se învață — de la învățarea mecanică la învățarea strategică, proces complex ce implică autoreglare, conștientizare și intenționalitate.

Conceptul de învățare strategică își are rădăcinile în psihologia cognitivă și în teoriile metacogniției formulate de Flavell (1970, 1987), Brown (1987) și Schraw & Dennison (1994), extinzându-se ulterior în sfera educației (Tardif, 1992; Monereo, 2007) și a managementului strategic (Pietersen, 2002; Siren, 2014). În accepțiunea sa actuală, învățarea strategică presupune capacitatea individului de a planifica, monitoriza și evalua propriul proces de învățare, aplicând strategii flexibile în funcție de contextul cognitiv și social. Ea se manifestă astfel ca o formă superioară de învățare reflexivă, ancorată în metacogniție și în capacitatea de autoreglare.

Abordarea ontologică a învățării strategice introduce o perspectivă filosofico-pedagogică nouă, centrată pe modul de a fi al subiectului care învață. Nu mai este vorba doar de performanța învățării, ci de identitatea epistemică a elevului — de felul în care acesta se constituie ca „agent cognitiv" capabil să își construiască, să își reconstruiască și să își orienteze experiențele de cunoaștere. După cum afirmă Tardif (1992), „a învăța strategic înseamnă a ști să gândești despre propria gândire", iar această autoreflexivitate devine fundamentul unei pedagogii a sensului, a conștienței și a responsabilității cognitive.[Tardif J. (1992)-Pour un enseignement stratégique, p.52.]. În paralel, noile paradigme educaționale promovează o diversificare a formelor de învățare: învățarea colaborativă, autodirijată, experiențială, digitală sau bazată pe proiecte (Schleicher, 2018; Hattie & Donoghue, 2016). Toate aceste tipuri converg spre dezvoltarea unui profil al „elevului strategic" – capabil să-și regleze acțiunile, să transfere cunoștințele între contexte și să opereze cu metacunoștințe. Astfel, învățarea strategică devine o reverberație a noilor tipuri de învățare, un răspuns adaptativ al sistemului educațional la provocările epocii cunoașterii.

Scopul prezentului studiu este de a analiza ontologia învățării strategice în contextul transformărilor educaționale actuale, prin raportare la teoriile metacogniției și la noile modele de învățare ale elevilor. Studiul propune o lectură integrativă a conceptului, articulată pe trei niveluri:

- nivelul epistemologic, care descrie fundamentele teoretice ale învățării strategice;
- nivelul metacognitiv, care evidențiază mecanismele autoreglării și conștiinței de sine în învățare;

- nivelul ontologic, care surprinde dimensiunea identitară și axiologică a elevului în procesul de formare.

Prin această perspectivă, lucrarea își propune să ofere un cadru conceptual coerent pentru înțelegerea învățării strategice ca formă de existență cognitivă și etică a subiectului educațional. În același timp, ea invită la o reflecție asupra modului în care școala contemporană poate cultiva un modus vivendi strategic, în care învățarea devine nu doar un mijloc de adaptare, ci o expresie a devenirii personale.

1. Fundamente teoretice ale învățării strategice

- ✓ Geneza conceptului de învățare strategică. Conceptul de învățare strategică a apărut la confluența dintre psihologia cognitivă, teoria învățării și științele educației, fiind o consecință firească a trecerii de la modelele comportamentiste la cele constructiviste și metacognitive ale învățării. În anii ’70–’80, cercetările lui John Flavell (1970, 1987) au deschis drumul spre înțelegerea proceselor de autoreflecție și monitorizare cognitivă, introducând termenul de metacogniție — „cunoașterea despre propria cunoaștere”. Această perspectivă a permis reinterpretarea învățării nu doar ca acumulare de informații, ci ca proces autoreglat, bazat pe conștientizarea propriilor strategii cognitive.

Ulterior, autori precum Ann Brown (1987) și Barry Zimmerman (1995, 2002) au dezvoltat conceptul de învățare autoreglată, descriind-o drept un proces ciclic de planificare, monitorizare și evaluare a propriului act de învățare. În această perspectivă, elevul devine un subiect activ care își controlează intenționat resursele cognitive, afective și motivaționale. În mod implicit, învățarea strategică s-a conturat ca o *formă superioară de învățare autoreglată, care depășește simpla utilizare a strategiilor cognitive și implică o gândire despre utilizarea strategiilor (Schraw & Dennison, 1994).

În anii ’90, contribuțiile lui Tardif (1992) și Monereo (1997, 2007) au adus conceptului o fundamentare pedagogică solidă. Tardif definea învățarea strategică drept capacitatea de a selecta, combina și adapta procedee cognitive și metacognitive în funcție de sarcina de învățare și de contextul social. În viziunea sa, strategiile nu sunt simple instrumente mentale, ci expresii ale unei conștiințe reflexive care se dezvoltă prin exercițiu și experiență. Monereo (2007) a accentuat dimensiunea contextuală și socială a procesului, subliniind că a învăța strategic înseamnă „a învăța să gândești despre cum înveți împreună cu ceilalți”, punând accent pe interacțiune și colaborare.

În spațiul managementului și al învățării organizaționale, autori precum Pietersen (2002, 2012, 2014), Eisenhardt & Martin (2000) și Doz & Kosonen (2010) au extins conceptul spre ideea de strategie adaptativă, subliniind că învățarea eficientă depinde de flexibilitatea decizională și de capacitatea de a reconfigura modele mentale în raport cu schimbarea mediului. Transpusă în educație, această idee presupune că elevul strategic este capabil să-și modifice strategiile de învățare atunci când contextul se schimbă — o trăsătură esențială pentru învățarea în era digitală.

Din perspectivă epistemologică, Hart (1993) și Blain (1993) au introdus dimensiunea ontologică a învățării, argumentând că procesul de învățare nu este doar o activitate cognitivă, ci un mod de a fi în lume. În viziunea lor, a învăța strategic înseamnă a te constitui ca subiect conștient de propriile limite, intenții și sensuri cognitive. Această dimensiune ontologică s-a regăsit ulterior și în teoriile educației reflexive (Barnet, 2018; Vianin, 2009), care consideră învățarea un proces de (auto)construcție identitară.

Prin urmare, geneza conceptului de învățare strategică reflectă o evoluție epistemologică amplă: de la comportamentismul care punea accent pe răspunsuri observabile, la cognitivismul care analiza mecanismele interne ale gândirii, și, în final, la constructivismul metacognitiv, care explică învățarea ca proces autoreflexiv și adaptativ.

Această transformare teoretică marchează trecerea de la paradigma transmisivă a educației la una reflexiv-strategică, în care elevul devine actor principal al propriei formări, capabil să-și structureze cunoașterea și să o integreze într-o viziune coerentă despre sine și lume.

- ✓ Ontologia învățării strategice: o abordare filosofico-pedagogică

În pedagogia contemporană, conceptul de ontologie a învățării presupune o schimbare de accent: de la studiul mecanismelor cognitive ale învățării la analiza modului de a fi al subiectului în procesul *învățării. Această perspectivă ontologică, fundamentată pe filosofia existențială și fenomenologică, plasează învățarea într-o dimensiune a devenirii personale — a transformării conștiente a sinelui prin cunoaștere. A învăța strategic nu mai înseamnă doar a aplica tehnici eficiente de studiu, ci a asuma o poziție reflexivă față de propriul proces cognitiv, a fi în mod intenționat angajat într-un act de autodepășire.

După Hart (1993), putem deduce că învățarea strategică reprezintă o formă de existență cognitivă prin care individul devine autorul propriei înțelegeri.

Din această perspectivă, ontologia învățării strategice nu se reduce la analiza funcțiilor mentale, ci descrie structura internă a conștiinței învățătorului — felul în care acesta se percepe ca agent al propriei transformări. În același sens, Blain (1993) consideră că subiectul care învață strategic trăiește o dublă experiență: aceea de „a cunoaște lumea" și, simultan, de „a se cunoaște pe sine ca ființă cognitivă".

Această perspectivă ontologică se regăsește și în teoriile educației reflexive care argumentează că învățarea autentică nu poate fi separată de identitatea epistemică a subiectului. Elevul strategic este un subiect reflexiv, capabil să-și interogheze convingerile, să-și ajusteze strategiile și să confere sens propriilor experiențe de cunoaștere. În această viziune, procesul de învățare devine un proces de auto-ontologizare, în care cunoașterea și existența se întrepătrund.

Din perspectivă pedagogică, Vianin (2009) dezvoltă conceptul de agent al învățării, sugerând că învățarea strategică presupune asumarea unui rol activ și responsabil în propriul traseu educațional. Elevul nu este un simplu receptacul al informației, ci un constructor al propriei structuri cognitive și axiologice. Prin autoreglare, reflecție și meta-analiză, el își formează un modus vivendi strategic — o atitudine existențială de deschidere și explorare a lumii.

Dimensiunea axiologică a ontologiei învățării strategice este esențială. A învăța strategic implică nu doar un set de proceduri mentale, ci și un sistem de valori cognitive: curiozitatea, autonomia, perseverența, gândirea critică și dorința de autoperfecționare. După cum arată Burgelman (2002) și Pietersen (2014), strategiile eficiente nu pot exista în afara unui cadru de sens — ele sunt expresii ale valorilor și motivațiilor care ghidează activitatea cognitivă. În educație, acest fapt se traduce prin nevoia de a forma elevi care nu doar știu să gândească, ci știu de ce gândesc și în ce scop.

Prin urmare, ontologia învățării strategice poate fi înțeleasă ca o triplă dimensiune:

1. Dimensiunea cognitivă, care privește mecanismele interne de procesare, planificare și monitorizare a învățării;
2. Dimensiunea reflexiv-metacognitivă, care vizează conștiința procesului de învățare și capacitatea de autoreglare;
3. Dimensiunea axiologică, care fundamentează sensul, intenționalitatea și valorile actului de a învăța.

Această trinitate ontologică transformă învățarea strategică într-o experiență de *auto-construcție a subiectului cognitiv, în care actul de a învăța devine o formă de a fi. Elevul strategic nu doar dobândește competențe, ci își modelează o identitate epistemică flexibilă, reflexivă și adaptativă, pregătită pentru provocările cunoașterii contemporane.

În concluzie, abordarea ontologică a învățării strategice evidențiază faptul că educația nu este doar un proces de transmitere a informației, ci o reverberație a existenței conștiente. A învăța strategic înseamnă, în esență, a te transforma prin cunoaștere — a deveni autorul propriei înțelegeri și arhitectul propriei formări.

2. Metacogniția ca fundament al învățării strategice

✓ Definirea metacogniției și relația sa cu învățarea

Conceptul de metacogniție a fost introdus de John Flavell (1970, 1987) pentru a descrie „cunoașterea despre propria cunoaștere", adică acel nivel superior de conștiință prin care individul reflectează asupra propriilor procese cognitive. Metacogniția implică două dimensiuni principale: conștiința metacognitivă – cunoașterea despre propriile procese mentale (ce știu, cum știu, de ce știu) și c*ontrolul metacognitiv* – capacitatea de a planifica, monitoriza și evalua procesul de învățare.

În acest sens, Flavell consideră că metacogniția este esențială pentru dezvoltarea unei gândiri autonome și reflexive, deoarece îl transformă pe individ dintr-un simplu „consumator" de informație într-un autor al propriului proces de cunoaștere.

Ulterior, Ann Brown (1987) a extins definiția metacogniției, integrând-o în conceptul de învățare autoreglată, în care elevul își stabilește obiective, alege strategii, monitorizează progresul și își evaluează performanțele. Zimmerman (1995, 2002) a detaliat acest proces în modelul său ciclic al autoreglării, care cuprinde trei faze interdependente:

- planificarea (stabilirea scopurilor și selecția strategiilor adecvate);
- executarea și monitorizarea (observarea și ajustarea performanței în timp real);
- reflecția și evaluarea (analiza rezultatelor și a eficienței strategiilor).

Astfel, metacogniția și autoreglarea constituie împreună fundamentul învățării strategice, întrucât permit trecerea de la un comportament de învățare reactiv la unul proactiv.

Așadar, metacogniția reprezintă fundamentul intern al învățării strategice: ea oferă infrastructura conștiinței cognitive care face posibilă planificarea și reglarea conștientă a învățării. Elevul metacognitiv devine, prin excelență, un elev strategic – reflexiv, autonom și responsabil în raport cu propriul proces de formare.

✓ Învățarea strategică și metacogniția în învățarea eficientă

În cadrul practicilor educaționale actuale, dezvoltarea metacogniției nu mai este percepută ca o abilitate suplimentară, ci ca o *componentă structurală a învățării eficiente. Studiile empirice (Boulware-Gooden et al., 2007; De Boer, Donker & Kostons, 2018) arată că elevii care utilizează strategii metacognitive – cum ar fi planificarea studiului, controlul atenției și autoevaluarea – manifestă o performanță semnificativ superioară celor care învață pasiv.

Vianin (2009) descrie elevul metacognitiv ca un actor epistemic, capabil să reflecteze asupra propriilor procese mentale, să își identifice dificultățile și să găsească soluții strategice. Acest profil coincide cu cel al elevului strategic, care își asumă responsabilitatea pentru propria învățare și dezvoltare.

În contextul educației digitale, metacogniția capătă noi valențe. Studiile lui Lan, Chang și Ma (2014) arată că mediile de învățare online solicită un grad sporit de autoreglare și monitorizare, întrucât elevii trebuie să-și gestioneze timpul, atenția și motivația în mod autonom. În acest sens, învățarea strategică devine o competență de supraviețuire cognitivă în era informației.

Într-o perspectivă integrativă, relația dintre metacogniție și învățarea strategică poate fi sintetizată prin următorul principiu: Metacogniția oferă conștiința procesului de învățare, iar învățarea strategică operaționalizează această conștiință în acțiune.

Astfel, metacogniția constituie substratul ontologic al învățării strategice, întrucât face posibilă existența unui subiect reflexiv care își orientează intenționalși axiologic activitatea de învățare. Elevul metacognitiv devine un „elev strategic" nu doar prin aplicarea unor tehnici, ci prin capacitatea de a conferi sens propriului proces cognitiv.

În educația contemporană, promovarea metacogniției echivalează, prin urmare, cu promovarea unei ontologii reflexive a învățării — o formă de cultură cognitivă în care a învăța înseamnă a te cunoaște, a te autoregla și a te reconstrui continuu în raport cu lumea și cu sinele.

3. Noile tipuri de învățare a elevilor

✓ Evoluția paradigmelor educaționale și diversificarea strategiilor de învățare

În ultimele decenii, educația contemporană a trecut printr-o transformare semnificativă, de la un model tradițional centrat pe transmiterea de cunoștințe către un model centrat pe competențe, autonomie și reflexivitate. Această schimbare este alimentată de cerințele sociale și tehnologice ale secolului XXI, care impun elevilor dezvoltarea unor abilități de *gândire critică, rezolvare a problemelor și autoreglare a învățării.

Noile tipuri de învățare se caracterizează prin:

Învățarea autonomă – elevul își asumă responsabilitatea pentru propria formare, dezvoltând capacități de planificare, monitorizare și autoevaluare; Elevul autonom este și elev strategic, deoarece metacogniția devine instrumentul său de organizare a învățării, iar fiecare acțiune este gândită în funcție de scopurile personale și de criteriile de performanță.

Învățarea colaborativă – învățarea se realizează în contexte de cooperare, în care dialogul și schimbul de perspective stimulează gândirea critică și capacitatea de argumentare;

Învățarea reflexivă – elevul este invitat să își analizeze procesele cognitive și emoționale, să identifice dificultățile și să ajusteze strategiile de învățare;

Învățarea digitală – utilizarea mediilor și instrumentelor tehnologice devine un catalizator pentru explorare, simulare și dezvoltarea competențelor digitale.

Aceste tipuri de învățare se corelează direct cu dezvoltarea învățării strategice, întrucât toate implică activarea metacogniției și planificarea conștientă a procesului de învățare (OECD, 2019; Bransford et al., 2000).

✓ Sinteza noilor tipuri de învățare

Noile tipuri de învățare — autonomă, colaborativă, reflexivă și digitală — nu reprezintă doar metode, ci structuri epistemice care determină modul în care elevul percepe și acționează în raport cu cunoașterea. Ele creează o ontologie a învățării, în care individul devine un subiect strategic, capabil să genereze sens și să regleze activitatea cognitivă și emoțională.

În acest context, învățarea strategică devine puntea între metacogniție și aplicarea practică a noilor tipuri de învățare, oferind cadrul în care elevul devine reflexiv, autonom și creativ.

Ontologia învățării strategice reprezintă punctul de convergență între metacogniție și noile tipuri de învățare. Ea subliniază că succesul educațional nu mai depinde doar de acumularea de informații, ci de *capacitatea elevului de a planifica, reglementa, evalua și adapta activitatea de învățare.

Astfel, învățarea strategică se dovedește a fi un reper ontologic al educației moderne, reflectând nevoia ca școala să formeze nu doar cunoștințe, ci subiecte autonome, reflexive și creative, capabile să învețe pe tot parcursul vieții.

4. Aplicații practice ale învățării strategice

Acest paragraf urmărește:

1. Ilustrarea modului în care ontologia învățării strategice se concretizează în practică.
2. Demonstrarea eficienței noilor tipuri de învățare (autonomă, colaborativă, reflexivă, digitală) în dezvoltarea competențelor elevilor.
3. Oferirea de modele aplicabile în școli, care să sprijine profesorii în implementarea strategiei de învățare. Aceste modele pot fi adaptate pentru orice disciplină, dar sunt foarte eficiente la limba engleză sau alte materii care necesită aplicarea practică a cunoștințelor.

Tabelul 1. Ontologia învățării strategice și noile tipuri de învățare

Nr.	Aspect studiat	Exemplu aplicativ în clasă	Desfășurare / scenariu	Tipuri de învățare activate	Competențe dezvoltate
1.	Ilustrarea ontologiei învățării strategice	Activitate de brainstorming și planificare a unui proiect despre cultura unei țări anglofone	Profesorul explică obiectivul proiectului, elevii stabilesc pașii, își aleg echipe și își împart responsabilitățile	Strategică, planificată	Gândire critică, planificare, organizare
2.	Demonstrarea eficienței noilor tipuri de învățare	Elevii creează prezentări digitale despre tradiții și obiceiuri	Elevii lucrează în grupuri, folosesc resurse digitale și aplicații interactive; fiecare grup prezintă și primește feedback	Colaborativă, digitală, reflexivă	Comunicare, competențe digitale, autoreglare, cooperare
3.	Model aplicabil: învățare autonomă	Jurnal de învățare pentru autoevaluare	La sfârșitul lecției, fiecare elev notează ce a învățat, ce strategii au funcționat și ce va îmbunătăți data viitoare	Autonomă, reflexivă	Auto-monitorizare, responsabilitate, strategie personală
4.	Model aplicabil: învățare colaborativă ghidată	Exerciții în perechi sau grupuri mici	Profesorul oferă sarcini complexe și monitorizează grupurile, intervenind cu întrebări și sugestii	Colaborativă	Lucru în echipă, comunicare, rezolvare de probleme
5.	Model aplicabil: flipped classroom	Pregătire acasă, activitate practică în clasă	Elevii urmăresc un videoclip despre cultura unei țări anglofone acasă; în clasă discută, creează postere și jocuri de rol	Autonomă, strategică, colaborativă	Înțelegere aprofundată, aplicare, creativitate
6.	Model aplicabil: integrarea digitală	Crearea unui blog sau prezentare online	Elevii publică informații despre țara studiată, primesc comentarii și feedback de la colegi	Digitală, colaborativă	Competențe digitale, responsabilitate, exprimare creativă
7.	Model aplicabil: proiect interdisciplinar	Proiect combinând engleză, istorie și muzică	Elevii aleg un aspect cultural (de exemplu, festivaluri), cercetează informații și creează o prezentare multimedia	Strategică, colaborativă	Interdisciplinaritate, gândire critică, planificare

Acest tabel sintetizează ontologia învățării strategice în practică și demonstrează cum noile tipuri de învățare (autonomă, colaborativă, reflexivă, digitală) se aplică efectiv în clasă, oferind modele concrete pe care profesorii le pot prelua imediat.

Tabelul 2. Demonstrarea eficienței noilor tipuri de învățare

Tip de învățare	Activitate practică	Modul de desfășurare	Rezultate observabile / competențe dezvoltate
Autonomă	Fiecare elev realizează un mini-proiect despre un aspect cultural al unei țări anglofone (ex.: muzică, gastronomie, sărbători)	Elevii își aleg tema, caută informații, redactează textul și pregătesc prezentarea, fără intervenția constantă a profesorului	Dezvoltarea abilităților de cercetare, organizare și responsabilitate; creșterea încrederii în propria capacitate de a învăța
Colaborativă	Proiect în echipe: „My English-Speaking Country”	Grupuri de 3-4 elevi împart sarcinile (cercetare, redactare, prezentare) și se ajută reciproc, discutând soluții și corectând greșeli	Îmbunătățirea competențelor sociale, comunicative și de lucru în echipă; creșterea implicării și motivării
Reflexivă / Metacognitivă	Elevii completează un jurnal de reflecție după finalizarea proiectului	Elevii răspund la întrebări precum: „Ce strategie a funcționat cel mai bine?”, „Ce aș face diferit data viitoare?”	Dezvoltarea conștientizării propriului proces de învățare și a capacității de autoreglare
Digitală	Folosirea platformelor online pentru cercetare și prezentare (ex.: Google Slides, Kahoot, videoclipuri YouTube educative)	Elevii caută informații pe internet, creează prezentări digitale și le împărtășesc colegilor în clasă	Creșterea competențelor digitale și a capacității de integrare a tehnologiei în învățare; stimularea învățării interactive

Tabelul 3. Modele de învățare active aplicabile în școli

Nr.	Model aplicabil	Descriere	Exemplu concret
1.	Modelul „Think-Pair-Share	Elevii gândesc individual o întrebare sau o problemă, apoi discută în perechi și împărtășesc cu întreaga clasă.	La ora de limba engleză, profesorul întreabă: „Care este diferența dintre Present Perfect și Past Simple?" Elevii discută în perechi și apoi fiecare grup prezintă concluzia.
2.	Învățarea prin proiecte (Project-Based Learning)	Elevii lucrează pe proiecte complexe care integrează mai multe competențe și care necesită planificare, cercetare și prezentare.	Elevii clasei a VII-a realizează un proiect „My English-Speaking Country", cercetând cultura, tradițiile și obiceiurile unei țări anglofone, apoi prezintă proiectul printr-un poster și o scurtă prezentare orală.
3.	Modelul „Flipped Classroom"	Predarea se mută acasă prin materiale video sau resurse online, iar timpul la școală este folosit pentru exerciții practice și discuții.	Profesorul oferă videoclipuri despre gramatică și vocabular acasă. La școală, elevii lucrează în grupuri pentru exerciții practice, jocuri de rol sau dialoguri.
4.	Învățarea colaborativă (Collaborative Learning)	Elevii lucrează împreună pentru a rezolva sarcini, dezvoltând atât competențe cognitive, cât și sociale.	În ora de științe sau limba engleză, grupuri de 4 elevi redactează o povestire sau explică un experiment, fiecare având un rol: cercetător, scriitor, prezentator, corector.
5.	Modelul „Metacognitive Reflection"	Elevii reflectă asupra propriului proces de învățare și își stabilesc strategii pentru a progresa.	După o lecție de gramatică sau vocabular, elevii notează ce a fost ușor, ce a fost dificil și ce strategie vor folosi data viitoare pentru a reține informația mai bine.
6.	Gamificarea învățării	Introducerea de elemente de joc pentru a stimula implicarea și motivația elevilor.	Profesorul organizează un concurs „Grammar Quiz" cu puncte și premii simbolice. Elevii lucrează în echipe și aplică strategiile de învățare în timp real.

- ✓ Metodologia aplicativă

Pentru realizarea studiilor de caz s-au utilizat:

- Observații directe în clase de gimnaziu;
- Chestionare și interviuri cu elevii pentru evaluarea percepției asupra strategiilor de învățare;
- Jurnale reflexive completate de elevi pentru analiza metacogniției;
- Analiza produselor de învățare (proiecte, prezentări, sarcini digitale).

Acest mix metodologic permite evaluarea procesului și a rezultatelor învățării strategice dintr-o perspectivă holistică.

Aplicații practice

Învățarea autonomă:

- ✓ Elevii primesc un proiect interdisciplinar (ex. „Cultural identity in my English-speaking community") și trebuie să își planifice singuri pașii, să selecteze surse, să organizeze informația și să realizeze prezentarea finală.
- ✓ Profesorul oferă ghidare minimală și instrumente de planificare (checklist-uri, diagrame Gantt, aplicații digitale).

Rezultate:

- ✓ Creșterea responsabilității individuale;
- ✓ Dezvoltarea metacogniției prin auto-monitorizare;
- ✓ Elevii devin conștienți de propriile puncte forte și limitări.

Învățarea colaborativă:

- ✓ Grupuri de elevi lucrează la o problemă complexă (ex. proiect STEM sau analiza unei opere literare).

- ✓ Se aplică roluri strategice (coordonator, documentator, evaluator) și feedback-ul reciproc este structurat.

Rezultate:

- ✓ Dezvoltarea abilităților sociale și metacognitive;
- ✓ Elevii învață să negocieze, să împartă responsabilități și să reflecteze asupra strategiilor folosite;
- ✓ Creșterea performanței prin co-construcția cunoștințelor.

Învățarea reflexivă:

- ✓ La finalul unei unități didactice, elevii completează jurnale reflexive, răspunzând la întrebări precum: „Ce am învățat? Cum am învățat? Ce a funcționat și ce nu?”
- ✓ Se folosește maparea gândirii și hărți conceptuale pentru a vizualiza procesul de învățare.

Rezultate:

- Elevii înțeleg modul în care strategiile lor influențează rezultatele;
- Se dezvoltă gândirea critică și capacitatea de autoreglare;
- Profesorul poate adapta metodele în funcție de profilul fiecărui elev.

Învățarea digitală:

- Utilizarea platformelor online (ex. Google Classroom, Kahoot, Padlet) pentru colaborare, testare și feed-back instantaneu.
- Elevii își pot urmări progresul și pot adapta strategiile în timp real.

Rezultate:

- Acces facil la resurse diverse;
- Dezvoltarea competențelor digitale și metacognitive;
- Flexibilitate în abordarea diferitelor stiluri de învățare.

Concluzii

1. Integrarea strategiilor de învățare. Studiul arată că elevii care folosesc învățarea strategică dezvoltă abilități metacognitive și autonomie în procesul de învățare, ceea ce duce la performanțe mai bune și la o mai mare implicare în activitățile școlare.
2. *Adaptabilitatea la noi tipuri de învățare. În contextul gimnazial, strategiile de învățare personalizate și interactive (ex. colaborative, prin proiecte, digitale) răspund mai bine nevoilor diverse ale elevilor, favorizând consolidarea cunoștințelor și gândirea critică.
3. Impactul asupra motivației și atitudinii. Aplicarea metodelor strategice crește motivația intrinsecă a elevilor și le dezvoltă atitudinea pozitivă față de învățare, reducând anxietatea legată de evaluări și activități complexe.

Noile tipuri de învățare influențează profund dezvoltarea competențelor strategice ale elevilor, generând un mod de lucru mai autonom, flexibil și orientat spre reflecție. Colaborarea, mediile digitale, proiectele integrate și explorarea activă nu mai reprezintă doar metode izolate, ci forme de învățare care modelează modul în care elevii gândesc și își construiesc strategiile personale. Prin participare în grup, utilizarea resurselor online, realizarea proiectelor și descoperirea autonomă a informațiilor, elevii ajung să își planifice mai eficient activitatea, să își monitorizeze progresul și să își evalueze rezultatele în mod critic. Astfel, învățarea strategică apare ca o consecință firească a acestor experiențe educaționale moderne, reflectând reverberația directă a noilor modalități de a învăța asupra profilului elevului contemporan. Toate aceste tipuri de învățare converg în sensul consolidării învățării strategice, unde fiecare elev își planifică activitatea, își monitorizează progresul și își evaluează rezultatele, reflectând clar impactul noilor forme de învățare asupra competențelor strategice moderne.

APPROACHES AND METHODOLOGICAL STRATEGIES FOR TEACHING FABLES IN PRIMARY EDUCATION

Nicoleta Cristina Țigău
PhD Student, "Valahia" University of Târgoviște

Abstract: Teaching the fable in primary education requires a balanced integration of literary understanding, moral interpretation, and formative pedagogical strategies. The fable, as a concise narrative with strong ethical value, offers young learners' opportunities to develop reading comprehension, critical thinking, and the ability to identify characters, actions, and implicit messages. Effective instructional approaches combine storytelling, dramatization, dialogue, and guided questioning, enabling pupils to explore both the literary structure and the moral dimensions of the text. Methodical techniques such as comparative reading, visualization activities, and creative reinterpretations support active learning and facilitate deeper understanding. Through these methods, learners engage with literary language, practice inferential reasoning, and develop socio-emotional competencies by reflecting on the values embedded in the narrative. A coherent didactic framework thus enhances both the aesthetic appreciation of the fable and its educational potential, contributing to the holistic development of primary school pupils.

Keywords: Fable; Didactic strategies; Literary comprehension; Moral reasoning; Storytelling

The fable is a narrative literary genre with a pronounced educational function, conveying a moral lesson through a brief, often symbolic story. Characters are frequently animals, personified objects, or emblematic human figures that embody specific positive or negative traits. The moral, placed either explicitly at the end or implicitly suggested, offers pupils a rule of conduct that can be applied in real-life situations.

Fables explore fundamental aspects of human nature, illustrating both virtues and flaws through symbolic situations. Among the most common themes are the tension between justice and injustice, the contrast between wisdom and naivety, the opposition between diligence and laziness, and the conflict between pride and modesty. In this way, the genre becomes a privileged space for reflecting on ethical dilemmas, social inequalities and personal responsibility.

From the perspective of the message conveyed, fables systematically expose and sanction human weaknesses such as envy, naivety, boastfulness, vanity, selfishness, greed and moral corruption, as well as the vices of dominant social classes. The satirical dimension is particularly visible in works that focus on social relations, power abuse and hypocrisy, where animal characters or objects function as transparent allegories for human types and behaviours. In his aesthetic system, Mihail Dragomirescu considers the fable "the most significant of the consolidated forms" and proposes a tripartite classification:

- ideological fables, in which the moral and the idea dominate (e.g., Aesop, Lessing);
- literary fables, where stylistic refinement and artistic form are emphasized (e.g., Phaedrus, Florian, Caragiale);
- masterpiece fables, where the central interest lies in the poetic and narrative value of the event itself, beyond explicit didacticism (Tudorică, 1981).

Over time, similar subjects and narrative patterns have been taken over and reinterpreted by different fabulists. What distinguishes one version from another is the style, the narrative voice and the ideological or moral nuance. Classical motifs such as cunning versus naivety, greed, arrogance, parvenitism or betrayal are revisited across cultures and periods, each author adapting them to the social and historical context of his time.

In Romanian literature, fables by authors such as Grigore Alexandrescu, C. V. Carp, G. Sion, George Ranetti, Alexandru Donici, Tudor Arghezi, George Topârceanu and I. L. Caragiale illustrate a wide thematic register—from everyday moral faults to complex social and political criticism. Many texts expose the false friendship of opportunists, ingratitude toward benefactors, social climbing and the tendency of some characters to deny their origins once they gain power or status. Other fables bring into focus the opposition between work and laziness, or the illusions and frustrations associated with attempts to surpass one's own condition without real effort or self-knowledge.

A distinct category is formed by fables with a pronounced political and social dimension. In these cases, animal or symbolic characters represent social classes, institutions or political actors. The texts expose the persistence of injustice and tyranny, even when political regimes or leaders seem to change, suggesting the continuity of interests and power structures. Demagogy, understood as a strategy of manipulating the masses through flattering discourses, false promises and simulated egalitarianism, becomes a recurrent theme: those in power proclaim equality and justice in words, while, in practice, they maintain or even deepen social hierarchies.

Some fables also reflect disputes of ideas or aesthetic polemics between authors, using animal characters as masks for real intellectual figures. Irony and satire highlight the tension between genuine artistic or moral value and superficial pretence, as well as the conflicts generated by envy and rivalry.

From a didactic point of view, the diversity of themes and situations in fables offers teachers rich material for developing pupils' moral judgement, critical thinking and capacity for argumentation. The allegorical structure of the texts allows for guided discussions about behaviour, choices and consequences, without directly targeting pupils' own experiences in a moralizing manner. At the same time, the recurrence of certain patterns across different authors—classical and modern, Romanian and foreign—facilitates comparative approaches, helping pupils recognize universality in human flaws and values, while also becoming aware of specific cultural and historical contexts.

The fable, through its narrative concision, symbolic characters and explicit or implicit morals, occupies a central place in literary and moral education at the primary level. Its thematic richness and satirical force make it a particularly effective tool for shaping ethical attitudes, socio-emotional competencies and a reflective relationship with reality, especially when it is approached through appropriate methodological and didactic strategies.

The study of fables contributes to the development of multiple key competencies through diverse activities that stimulate critical thinking, creativity, and collaboration. Through fables, all eight key competencies can be developed, depending on the teacher's creativity and the selected corpus of texts. The following section outlines each key competency and the ways in which the fable can be effectively used during Romanian language classes. At the end of the subsection, a series of classroom activities based on the study of fables will be proposed, applicable to primary school levels.

Thus, key competencies may be developed through the fable as follows: communication in the Mother Tongue – Fables enhance text comprehension as well as oral and written expression. Through reading, analysis, and text production, pupils enrich their vocabulary and improve sentence structure.

Social and Civic Competences – Fables offer moral lessons that strengthen ethical awareness, empathy, and civic responsibility. Pupils learn to distinguish between positive and negative behaviours and to apply these lessons in everyday life.

Learning to Learn – By interpreting fables, pupils are encouraged to ask questions, analyse situations, and draw conclusions. They develop autonomy in learning, becoming able to make connections between the information studied.

Cultural Awareness and Expression – As part of universal cultural heritage, fables help pupils discover literary traditions and appreciate cultural diversity. Through dramatization and illustration, pupils develop artistic expression.

Entrepreneurial Competences – Through the study of fables, pupils learn decision-making, initiative, and responsibility. Fable characters often illustrate lessons on effort, perseverance, and the consequences of one's actions.

Digital Competences – The study of fables can be modernised through the use of digital resources (interactive presentations, animations, educational apps). Pupils may create presentations or record audio-video interpretations of fables.

The study of fables in primary school is essential for developing key competencies, offering pupils an interactive and enjoyable way of learning. Through text analysis, the interpretation of moral messages, and creative activities, children improve not only their linguistic abilities but also their critical thinking, sense of responsibility, and creativity.

To highlight the role of the fable in developing essential competencies such as communication in Romanian, critical thinking, creativity, and collaboration, a range of activities has been designed to encourage pupils to analyse texts, express opinions, and apply moral lessons in real-life situations.
Suggested Classroom Activities Based on the Study of Fables

Activity 1: Retelling the Fable Through Images
Pupils receive images representing key scenes from a well-known fable and must arrange them logically before retelling the story.
Objective: Developing narrative skills and the ability to sequence events logically.
Methods: Storytelling, observation, guided conversation.
Tools: Picture cards, worksheets.
Grade level: I–II.

Activity 2: Fable Dramatization
Pupils work in groups and are assigned roles to perform a short play based on a studied fable.
Objective: Enhancing oral expressiveness and teamwork.
Methods: Role-play, discovery learning.
Tools: Masks, simple costumes, basic props.
Grade level: II–IV.

Activity 3: Identifying the Moral
After reading a fable, pupils identify the moral and provide real-life examples where it applies.
Objective: Developing critical thinking and applying moral lessons to everyday situations.
Methods: Textual analysis, guided discussion.
Tools: Reading worksheets.
Grade level: III–IV.

Activity 4: Writing an Original Fable
Pupils create their own fable, following the specific structure (narrative + moral).
Objective: Developing creative writing skills.
Methods: Drafting, brainstorming.
Tools: Notebooks, charts with examples.
Grade level: III–IV.

Activity 5: Matching Characters and Traits
Pupils match characters from fables with their typical moral traits.
Objective: Understanding character traits and characterization.
Methods: Didactic game, pair work.
Tools: Cards with characters and traits.
Grade level: I–II.

Activity 6: Comparing Two Fables
Pupils read two fables and identify similarities and differences between them.
Objective: Developing comparative analysis skills.
Methods: Comparative reading, group discussions.
Tools: Comparison charts, texts.
Grade level: III–IV.

Activity 7: Creating an Alternative Ending
Pupils modify the ending of a fable to offer a different perspective on the moral.

Objective: Stimulating creativity and critical thinking.
Methods: Creative writing, debate.
Tools: Worksheets, notebooks.
Grade level: III–IV.

Activity 8: Creating a Comic Strip
Pupils illustrate the key scenes of a fable and create a comic strip with dialogue.
Objective: Developing visual expression and narrative understanding.
Methods: Illustration, graphic storytelling.
Tools: Paper, coloured pencils.
Grade level: II–IV.

Through such activities, pupils not only improve their linguistic and analytical skills but also learn valuable life lessons in an interactive and engaging way.

According to the National Curriculum for primary education, the study of fables supports the attainment of specific educational objectives that are fundamental for shaping a well-rounded learner, capable of understanding and appreciating literature. These objectives refer not only to the comprehension of literary texts but also to the development of critical thinking and ethical values.

A key objective of studying fables is the development of communication skills and the ability to understand literary texts. The National Curriculum requires pupils to read and comprehend fables from both Romanian and world literature, identifying central themes, character traits, and the moral of the story. Classroom activities centred on fables help pupils analyse the structure of a short narrative text and appreciate the importance of each detail in constructing its message. Through such activities, pupils are encouraged to express in their own words the lessons learned from the text and to participate actively in discussions, supporting their opinions with examples. These practices contribute to vocabulary enrichment and to the development of clear and coherent communication.

Another major objective is the development of critical thinking. The National Curriculum emphasises the importance of an education that fosters reflection on human behaviour and social values. Fables are ideal texts for stimulating critical thinking, as they present conflicts and situations that allow pupils to analyse characters' actions and connect them to their consequences. Pupils are encouraged to reflect on the virtues and vices illustrated in the fables, to identify relationships between characters with opposing traits, and to formulate opinions about correct or incorrect behaviours. In this way, pupils learn to critically evaluate actions and to appreciate the importance of moral choices in real life.

A further educational objective related to the study of fables is the development of analytical and interpretative skills. According to the National Curriculum, pupils should be able to identify and analyse the structural elements of a fable: narrator, characters, conflict and its resolution, as well as the moral message. Fables provide opportunities for pupils to distinguish between positive and negative characters and to understand how their behaviour influences the course of events. Analysing fables supports the development of pupils' ability to interpret the text's implicit meanings and extract valuable lessons about life and morality.

Another important objective is the formation and consolidation of ethical and moral values. Fables serve as an effective tool for transmitting lessons about virtue and vice—such as fairness, diligence, honesty, but also greed, laziness, or deceit. The moral of the fable is essential in this regard, as each story conveys a lesson about how people should behave in a civilised society. Pupils learn about the importance of moral choices and how their actions can impact themselves and others. This contributes to the development of responsible behaviour and the cultivation of a balanced and ethical character.

Thus, the study of fables, in accordance with the educational objectives of the National Curriculum for primary education, is fundamental to the intellectual and moral development of pupils. Fables not only support linguistic and cognitive growth but also contribute to ethical education, encouraging critical thinking and understanding of society's fundamental values. In this way, fables become a valuable instructional tool, offering pupils important life lessons that will guide their choices and attitudes throughout their personal development.

Teaching the fable in primary education requires a methodological approach adapted to pupils' age and cognitive development. One such approach is interactive pedagogy, which places the pupil at the centre of the instructional process and promotes active participation, collaboration, and discovery-based learning.

Interactive pedagogy can be defined as "the set of instructional methods and techniques that valorise interaction among pupils and between pupils and the teacher, with the goal of jointly constructing knowledge" (Cristea, 2000, p. 187). Thus, the teacher's role shifts from that of a simple transmitter of information to that of a facilitator of learning, responsible for creating stimulating and challenging educational contexts.

In the teaching of fables, interactive pedagogy is essential for achieving not only cognitive objectives (understanding the text and its message), but also affective and attitudinal ones, such as developing critical thinking, empathy, and expressive abilities.

The characteristics of the fable in primary education are relevant for selecting interactive methods. The fable is a short literary form, featuring allegorical characters, often animals, that highlight human flaws and convey a clear moral. This simple and engaging structure facilitates pupils' involvement in exploratory and creative reinterpretation activities (Ștefan, 2003, p. 92).

Discovery learning is a method that involves guiding pupils toward independently identifying information and drawing conclusions. Discovery may be full or partial; in the case of the fable, it can be applied, for instance, to identifying the moral through guided questions (Cerghit, 2006, p. 118). The particular value of this method lies in its ability to develop analytical and synthesis skills.

Dramatization is defined as an active method through which pupils stage situations from the literary text, using verbal, physical, and emotional expressiveness (Stan, 2010, p. 143). In teaching fables, dramatization facilitates the understanding of roles and moral messages in an affective, engaging, and memorable manner.

Debate is an interactive method based on expressing and arguing personal viewpoints. In the teaching of fables, debate may be initiated from characters' attitudes or from the moral of the text (Iucu, 2008, p. 154). The distinctive value of debate lies in developing critical spirit and argumentative ability.

The jigsaw method involves dividing the class into small groups, each responsible for one part of the text or theme and subsequently combining the information to construct the overall meaning (Johnson & Johnson, 1999, p. 56). This method fosters cooperation, individual responsibility, and positive interdependence.

The concept map is a graphical representation of key ideas and the relationships between them (Novak & Gowin, 1984, p. 45). In the case of fables, concept maps help visualize the sequence of events, character traits, and the extraction of the moral.

Implementing interactive pedagogy requires combining these methods and adapting them to the level of the class. For example, after reading the fable The Crow and the Fox, the teacher may begin with a guided discussion to identify the moral, then organise a dramatization of key scenes, and conclude by having pupils work in groups to create concept maps illustrating the message conveyed.

Teaching the fable in primary education is a didactic process that can be carried out using both traditional and modern methods. Each approach has distinct characteristics, and combining them can enrich pupils' educational experience by stimulating imagination, critical thinking, and understanding of the moral messages contained in fables. This section analyses the differences between traditional and modern methods and provides concrete examples of activities for each.

In the traditional teaching approach, the teacher is the central figure in the educational process, while pupils adopt a passive role in which they are expected to memorise and reproduce information. Traditional methods rely on a structured and linear learning framework, where pupils learn primarily through listening, reading, and repetition.

Examples of traditional activities:

- Reading the fable: The teacher reads the fable aloud, and pupils are expected to listen attentively and grasp its moral meaning.
- Summarising the fable: After the reading, pupils are asked to express orally or in writing the essential elements of the story, indicating the characters and the moral.
- Dictation and transcription exercises: Pupils write the fable from dictation, practising writing skills, spelling, and reading comprehension.
- Comprehension questions: The teacher asks questions such as "What did character X learn?" or "What message does the fable convey?", thus stimulating memory and direct interpretation of the text.

Characteristics of the traditional method:

- Emphasis on memorisation and passive learning techniques.
- Knowledge is transmitted unidirectionally (from teacher to pupil).
- Activities are relatively static, and the pupil plays a passive role in the learning process.
- Limited variety of didactic activities, which may result in boredom and decreased motivation.

In contrast, modern teaching methods are characterised by increased interactivity, active and collaborative learning, and the use of digital resources. These methods require active involvement from pupils, while the teacher acts as a facilitator who guides the learning process.

Examples of modern activities

- Role-playing: Pupils are divided into groups and assigned roles of characters from the fable. They construct their own lines and express the thoughts of the characters in the context of the story.
- Debates: After reading a fable, pupils can be organised into groups to discuss whether the characters' behaviours were appropriate.
- Creating alternative versions of fables: Pupils can be encouraged to write or design their own versions of fables by changing characters or the moral.
- Using digital resources: Teachers may use online educational platforms or interactive applications to help pupils analyse the fable. Pupils can create mind maps or infographics about the characters using tools such as MindMeister or Canva.

Characteristics of the modern method:

- Pupils are actively engaged in the learning process.
- Critical thinking, collaboration, and creativity are promoted.
- A wide variety of activities helps maintain pupils' interest.
- Modern technologies facilitate learning through innovative and interactive methods.
- The pupil has an active role and learns through discovery, direct experience, and collaboration.

Thus, the teaching of fables in primary education can greatly benefit from a balanced combination of traditional and modern methods. Traditional approaches, through their clarity and well-structured format, provide a solid foundation for literary learning, focusing on memorisation, attentive listening, and text comprehension. These methods are particularly useful for pupils who require a more structured learning environment and for those at the early stages of their educational development.

Conversely, modern methods bring dynamism to instructional activities by promoting active pupil engagement, the development of critical thinking, and creativity. The use of digital technologies and interactive activities makes lessons more appealing and more relevant to contemporary learners, responding to their need for collaborative and experiential forms of learning.

The combination of these methods can contribute to the creation of a balanced learning environment that supports the development of all pupils' abilities, resulting in a more comprehensive and context-adapted educational process. In this regard, the teaching of fables in primary education should not be limited to conventional approaches but should also embrace innovative methods that make learning more dynamic, enjoyable, and meaningful for pupils.

Therefore, teachers should remain open to integrating these approaches, creating an educational framework that promotes not only the theoretical understanding of fables but also the formation of essential life skills such as critical thinking, problem-solving, and collaboration among pupils.

On a personal level, I consider the teaching of fables to be a privileged moment within the instructional educational process a space where the pupil can recognise themselves, reflect, and grow not only as a reader but also as a future citizen. Despite their antiquity, fables remain texts of enduring value, adaptable to the contemporary needs of education. It is the teacher's responsibility to revalorise them through modern approaches and to transform them into a genuine vehicle for moral development.

Looking ahead, several extended research directions may be considered, such as the impact of fables on pupils' emotional intelligence, the correlation between reading fables and the development of empathy, the creation of interactive digital packages for teaching fables, or comparative studies between teaching methods used in urban and rural educational environments. Furthermore, longitudinal research could be undertaken to analyse the long-term effects of morally driven literature on pupils' behaviour.

THE LANCASTRIAN SYSTEM IN WALLACHIA

Mihaela Gheorghe
PhD, County Library „Dinicu Golescu", Argeş

Abstract: At the end of the activity at Saint Sava in Bucharest, a new teaching method was put into practice, represented by monitorial education. It was introduced by Dimitrie Vilie, during the leadership of Vardalah and taken over after the model of G. Cleobul from Iaşi. In Bucharest, mutual education was harshly criticized by the Church. One opponent was even Metropolitan Grigore, who saw in it a serious attack on the faith. The mutual or Lancasterian method, also known by many other names: mutual or monitorial education, allilodidactic, was based on the principle of helping students. Older students, at a more advanced stage of education, allowed the transmission of knowledge to younger students, under the strict supervision of the teacher.

Școala a fost privită ca un instrument cultural ce a funcționat la început pe lângă biserici și mânăstiri[1]. Biserica a constituit mult timp un focar de cultură cu asumarea unei responsabilități uriașe în formarea, instruirea și educarea generațiilor.

La sfârșitul secolului al XVII-lea și începutul secolului al XVIII-lea s-au pus bazele învățământului superior în Țările Române, prin intermediul celor două școli domnești de la Sfântul Sava din București și cea de la biserica Trei Ierarhi din Iași.

Comparativ cu Transilvania unde învățământul primar își avea rădăcinile înfipte în istorie încă de la începutul secolului al XIV-lea, iar cel secundar în secolul al XVI-lea ca produs al reformei religioase, unde de asemenea putem vorbi de existența învățământului superior din perioada 1520-1530, Țara Românească a avut un debut cultural mai lent.

Instalarea domnilor fanarioți a reprezentat, pe de o parte, accentuarea procesului de orientalizare a spațiului românesc, iar pe de altă parte a determinat dezvoltarea învățământului în limbile greacă, slavonă, română și creșterea numărului școlilor publice și private. De-a lungul istoriei, nu putem vorbi de o școală slavonă sau grecească pe teritoriul Țării Românești, ci de o școală românească de expresie slavonă sau grecească[2]. Acestea au reprezentat etape esenţiale în istoria învățământului românesc.

Conținutul educației în epoca medievală era alcătuit din „cele șapte arte liberale*", trivium* (gramatica, retorica, filosofia religioasă (dialectica) și quadrivium (aritmetica, geometria, astronomia și muzica)[3]. Se preda și teologia.

Dialectica pregătea elevii pentru viitoarele dispute pe teme religioase și dogmele creștine. Astronomia se baza pe însușirea cunoștințelor legate de calculul pentru stabilirea datei sărbătorilor pascale și alte preziceri după stele[4].

Învățământul medieval a rămas zugrăvit prin acea imagine în care erau prezentați profesorul, așezat pe un scaun, de cele mai multe ori cu o vargă în mână, înconjurat de elevii săi, pe lavițe cu cărțile în mâini sau pe genunchi. Lecțiile se predau atât individual cât și simultan. Când elevii erau mai numeroși și cu niveluri de cunoștințe diferite, era adoptată metoda împărțirii lor pe grupe.

Metoda de predare în școlile din Țara Românească cea mai des întâlnită și practicată în Evul Mediu, era cea a memorării pe de rost. Argumentul folosit a fost dat de latura revelată a învățăturii creștine, intangibilă și superioară. Metodele pedagogice folosite aveau la bază dialogul dintre elevi, dispute constructive pentru dezlegarea antitezelor propuse prin silogisme și entimeme, utilizarea paradigmelor retorice, analize gramaticale de etimologie și sintaxă, prin studierea Sintaxei lui Alexandru Mavrocordat și Gramatica lui Lascaris, dar „fără semnificațiile și abstracțiile de acolo", toate în limba greacă de obște[5] .

Recomandările pedagogice constau în: evitarea predării cunoștințelor metafizice elevilor ce nu au reușit să parcurgă materia de la cursul de fizică, iar aceasta să fie predată împreună cu cursul despre naștere și pieire. Cursurile erau structurate de la nivelul mai ușor spre cel mai greu; predarea se făcea în limba cunoscută de elevi, cu un înțeles facil, folosind un vocabular simplu. Temele scrise erau verificate și corectate de profesori.

Elementele pedagogice primare românești au urmat aceeași direcție cu cele din pedagogiile medievale europene la începutul lor, o serie de recomandări cu caracter pedagogic din înțelepciunea populară, ale filosofilor, datoriile părinților față de copii.

În general, pedagogia românească practicată în secolele XVI-XVII era formată din sfaturi și principii de viață. Acestea erau predate într-o formă extrem de apropiată de învățătura creștină. Nu a fost reprezentată prin gânditori, sisteme pedagogice așa cum se întâmplase în Apus, unde erau cunoscute operele pedagogilor: Comenius, Locke, Fenelon[6].

Centrul preocupărilor educative era reprezentat de formarea și dezvoltarea omului creștin, bunului ortodox și mai presus, util Bisericii. Școlile primare (întâlnite pe lângă mânăstiri și biserici) au avut ca scop transmiterea cunoștințelor de caligrafie, psaltichie, muzică, pictură bisericească, arta de a lega cărțile și alte activități necesare vieții monahale. Educația predată se reducea la cunoștințe religioase, de scris, cunoștințe de muzică și educație religioasă. Învățământul începea cu predarea buchiilor, se trecea gradual la Ceaslov și Octoih (cartea pentru cântări bisericești). Era predată citirea pe slove a Octoihului. Etapa următoare era destinată citirii Psaltirii, Evangheliilor și Apostolului. Se făceau exerciții de cronologie și citirea fragmentelor mai însemnate din Biblie. Învățau câte trei catisme din Psaltirea proorocului David[7] (Psaltirea cuprindea 20 de catisme). Aritmetică nu învățau cu acel dascăl decât după învățarea întregii Psaltiri. În istoriografie, astfel de profesori au fost numiți, dascăli de copii[8]. Elevii lor proveneau din sânul familiilor de țărani și de orășeni „aduși cu sila din toate părțile"[9]. Modul în care scriau elevii în cadrul școlilor elementare era rudimentar. Scriau exact cum se pronunța cuvântul, credeau că trebuie să fie menținută reproducerea fidelă a cuvintelor exprimate. Foloseau cât mai puține buchii, uneori utilizau suprascrierea, pentru a face economie de timp sau hârtie[10]. În școlile de slovenie metodele folosite erau dificile și greoaie. Pentru a învăța citirea buchiilor, dascălul scria pe o foaie buchiile, iar elevii erau nevoiți să le învețe, să le pronunțe, fără a le scrie. După o lună trebuiau să le recite. Următoarea lecție, „slovenirea" consta în legarea sunetelor după o metodă foarte grea. Studiul continua cu legarea a două consoane cu o vocală și în sfârșit a două vocale cu o consoană[11]. Întreaga activitate se desfășura într-un interval de șase luni.

Învățarea literelor se făcea după metoda onomatologică, adică se utiliza denumirea în limba greacă (alfa, gama, delta, etc.)[12] sau în slavonă (az, buche, vede, glagoli).Aceste metode erau utilizate în special pentru perioada de inițiere în tainele alfabetului. Astfel, literele erau învățate în greacă și română, iar de la litere se făcea trecerea treptat către citirea pe silabe.

Pentru învățarea cuvintelor și propozițiilor a fost întrebuințată metoda psihagogică (scrierea suprapusă a sinonimelor sau omonimelor, pe care elevii le memorau. Scopul utilizării acesteia era de a îmbogăți vocabularul elevilor. Iacob Stamate a fost unul dintre profesorii academiei, care s-a pronunțat împotriva metodelor psihagogică și cea de memorizare mecanică și propunea să se pornească de la predarea elementelor cunoscute spre cele necunoscute, de la simplu spre complex[13].

Paralel au fost folosite și alte metode didactice[14]:

1. metoda monolectică, adică traducerea cu ajutorul unui singur cuvânt;
2. metoda reportatio și resumptio: elaborarea compunerilor în proză sau versuri;
3. metoda Montaigu bazată pe dialoguri și dezbateri între elevi pe diverse teme.
4. lecții prin care erau predate gnome sau sentințe: metoda consta în interpretarea unei sentințe, apoi fiecare elev era ajutat în noua explicare, continuată prin metoda psihagogică.
5. metoda memorării prin care elevii erau îndemnați să învețe pe de rost rugăciuni, poezii, gnome, sentințe, explicații, imnuri, psalmi, definiții, etc.
6. lecții de lectură a textelor cu analiză și comentarii.
7. prelegerile dedicate elevilor cu o pregătire anterioară, deoarece se rezuma la reproducerea ad litteram[15].
8. copiere de texte, conjugări, dictări, traduceri, compuneri, scrisori cu sau fără model.

Pedagogia practicată în Țara Româneaască a fost influențată de mai mulți factori. Primul ar fi cel de ordin geografic ce a permis pătrunderea unor influențe și pedagogii. Din sud au venit influențele bizantine, din nord și est cele polone, din vest cele italiene și mai târziu, al sfârșitul secolului al XVIII-lea, cele franceze. Totuși, aceste condiții i-au permis afirmarea unei independențe culturale și pedagogice.

În literatura de specialitate, pedagogia Evului Mediu românesc a fost împărțită în mai multe faze: prima, faza preștiințifică, ce a corespuns secolelor al XVI-lea și al XVII-lea; a urmat etapa pedagogiei sistematice însoțită de o etapă intermediară. Tranziția de la etapa preștiințifică la cea sistematică s-a făcut în baza acestei etape cu caracter tranzitoriu, cu două elemente constitutive: publicarea manualelor școlare și organizarea școlilor. Această etapă a corespuns secolului al XVIII-lea[16].

Țara Românească nu a beneficiat de reforme școlare semnificative în perioada anterioară celei de-a doua jumătăți a secolului al XVIII-lea, așa cum s-a întâmplat cu spațiul transilvănean. Transilvania, aflată sub dominația habsburgică a beneficiat de o serie de măsuri și legiuri în domeniul școlar: Ratio Educattionis, Norma Regia (1781) și altele ce reglementau desfășurarea activității școlare din toate punctele de vedere[17]. Valahia a preluat doar o parte din aceste legiuri, așa cum am observat, unele principii din programul Ratio Educattionis bazat pe coerență, logică, ordine și moderație[18]. Aceast procedeu didactic era format din cele două metode pedagogice: tabelare și literale. Principiul care a guvernat era următorul: dascălul forma clase de elevi cu aceeași vârstă și scria pe tablă litera de început a cuvintelor. Elevii aveau obligația de a continua cuvântul prin descoperirea literelor lipsă. Metoda tabelară era similară celei literale, singura diferență consta în scrierea pe tablă a cuvintelor întregi nu doar a literelor, pe care elevii erau nevoiți să le memoreze[19]. Perioada fanariotă a adus câteva schimbări majore în domeniul didactic. Erau condamnate metodele aplicate de dascălii greci în școli, majoritatea cursurilor aveau ca obiect de studiu gramatica, lăsând spațiu insuficient predării cunoștințelor științifice. Au fost prezentate câteva principii pedagogice pe care dascălii erau îndemnați să le urmeze în munca de la catedră:

1. Elevii să fie întâmpinați cu răbdare, cu scopul de a îndepărta lenevirea școlarilor la învățătura cea bună;
2. Metoda de predare să înceapă de la cele știute spre cele neștiute, de la cunoștințe ușor de asimilat la cele mai dificile. Recomandările erau date spre a se limita intenția de a învăța mecanic, o reproducere a canoanelor, citirea fără a înțelege ceea ce învățau. Se recomandau următoarele metode didactice: după predarea cunoștințelor elementare de gramatică, elevului i se prezentau mitul lui Esop, arta dialogului, și alte cunoștințe ușoare și folositoare acestora.

Matimile (lecțiile) erau predate astfel încât, a doua zi, elevul să fie capabil a tălmăci amănunțit lecția;

3. A fost stabilită perioada vacanțelor, căci deprinderea acumulată era uitată pe perioada acestora, prin nelucrare. De aceea, era recomandată o perioadă optimă de 30 zile într-un an, în timpul verii, exceptând duminicile și zilele praznicelor împărătești de peste an, când elevii erau liberi;
4. A fost reglementată și pedeapsa. Pentru fapte de o importanță minoră, stabilirea și aplicarea pedepsei revenea dascălului. Pentru fapte grave, dascălul făcea cunoscut cazul epitropilor[20]. Pedeapsa cu bătaia era destul de des întâlnită. Dascălul se plimba printre elevi cu o vargă mare în mână. Orele de curs se desfășurau după un program bine fixat: dascălul se oprea în fața fiecărui elev, pe unii îi asculta, altora le corecta scrisul, fie arunca câte o literă deasupra cu scopul de a fi slova mai bogată. Elevii cunoșteau consecințele în cazul nepregătirii lecțiilor. Pedepsele erau destul de aspre: fie folosirea nuielei, fie profesorul își scotea imineul din picior (pantofi de modă turcească cu vârful ascuțit) și îi lovea[21];
5. Superstiția și ignoranța domneau între principiile pedagogice.

Cercetând pedagogia practicată în unele state europene am observat că, metodele și principiile pedagogice au fost aplicate într-un mod similar și în Țările Române. Pedagogul, Jan Amos Comenius (1592-1670), originar din Suedia a introdus pentru prima dată în istoria educației și a învățământului o programă școlară, a creat un sistem de învățământ bazat pe discipline, principiul de bază fiind corelat cu posibilitățile intelectuale și vârsta elevilor[22]. El a introdus sistemul vacantelor, începutul anului școlar la 1 septembrie, identificarea celor patru momente în desfășurarea orelor: pregătirea copiilor pentru a înțelege noutatea; prezentarea și analiza elementelor noi; memorarea cunoștințelor; realizarea unor exerciții aplicative cu demonstrarea ipotezelor. Considerat un adevărat Pestalozzi al evului mediu[23], celebrul suedez a împărtășit experiența sa și în Transilvania în cei patru ani de vizită.

Cu privire la învățământul superior, cea mai utilizată metodă didactică de predare a a fost cunoscută sub denumirea de expositio per modum quaetionis[24]. Se începea cu o propoziție din textul aristotelic, pe marginea căreia dascălul punea una sau mai multe întrebări. Textul respectiv reprezenta nucleul temei ce urma să fie dezbătută. Profesorul prezenta diverse opinii și controverse ale filosofilor și comentatorilor aristotelicieni. În aceste condiții, cursul devenea enciclopedic, o adevărată introducere în problematica filosofiei în general. Principiul folosit era cel al despărțirii filosofiei de teologie. Orele de curs s-au transformat în dezbateri deschise pe marginea unui subiect și a întrebărilor ridicate de profesor. Separarea totală de teologia creștină l-a despărțit pe Corydaleu și adepții săi de scolastica predată anterior și de neoscolastica învățământului iezuit[25].

Din a doua jumătate a secolului al XVIII-lea, fiecare profesor își elabora propriile manuale, de aceea desele înlocuiri ale dascălilor erau primite cu greutate de elevi. Conform opiniei lui Erbiceanu[26], manualele folosite în București erau aproape identice cu manualele utilizate la Iași, în Turcia și Orient.

La finalul activității de la Sfântul Sava din București a fost pusă în practică o nouă metodă de predare, reprezentată de învățământul monitorial. A fost introdusă de Dimitrie Vilie, în timpul conducerii lui Vardalah[27]și preluat după modelul lui G. Cleobul de la Iași[28]. Primul document semnat de profesorul Vilie, Tabelele pedagogice după metodul alilodidactic ale lui Cleobul, tipărit la Paris la 1819[29] conținea elementele esențiale noii metode. Această colecție formată din 73 de tabele de învățătură, avea la bază metoda mutuală și presupunea o anumită organizare a sălii de clasă.

La București, învățământul mutual a fost aspru criticat de Biserică. Un opozant a fost chiar mitropolitul Grigore, care vedea în el o gravă atingere adusă credinței[30]. Metoda mutuală sau lancasteriană, cunoscută și sub numeroase alte denumiri: învățământ mutual sau monitorial, alilodidactic, a avut la bază principiul într-ajutorării elevilor. Elevii mai mari, într-un stadiu mai înaintat de învățătură permiteau transmiterea cunoștințelor către elevii mai mici, sub stricta supraveghere a profesorului.

Sălile de curs erau de formă dreptunghiulară, împărțită în două părți. În mijlocul sălii, la intrare era așezată catedra învățătorului. În fața ușii, lângă peretele opus, soba. În stânga catedrei erau așezate cele 12 bănci, din care prima era banca de nisip folosită la scrierea literelor. Băncile erau așezate astfel încât permiteau loc suficient la perete. La unul din capetele băncii, mai înalt, era amplasat pupitrul monitorului de bancă. Rolul acestuia era de a monitoriza și supraveghea elevii aflați în banca pe care o avea în grijă. Învățământul lancasterian presupunea o instrucție eliberată de dogme, raționalistă, a impus ideea organizării adecvate sălilor de clasă, a făcut trecerea de la învățământul medieval la școala modernă.

Piesele caracteristice într-o școală de tip lancasterian erau semicercurile. Acestea erau prinse în pereții celei de-a doua jumătăți de clasă. Aceste semicercuri erau din fier cu balamale, prinse la o distanță de un metru de la podea. Numărul semicercurilor era cel puțin egal cu numărul băncilor. În jurul acestora se adunau elevii, iar monitorul intra în acest semicerc și cu o vargă în mână, arăta elevilor textele de pe tablele lancastrice. Tablele se fixau în ramele unei planșete de lemn și de tinichea pe pereți, în dreptul fiecărui semicerc. Dimensiunile obișnuite ale acestor planșete și al tabelelor era de 48 cm înălțime și 32 cm lățime[31]. Tipărite pe o singură față, cu litere mari, ușor de citit, constituiau materialul cel mai important.

În secolul al XVI-lea învățământul a avut un puternic accent mistic-religios. Secolul al XVIII-lea a adus o schimbare, învățătura religioasă fiind supusă îndoielii, filosofia ocupând un loc însemnat în sânul educației. Principiul scolastic de a pune de acord filosofia cu religia și-a consolidat poziția și în Țara Românească. Acum, au circulat și citit lucrările, Hristoitia sau Școala moralului, Pareneticele lui Agapet, Învățăturile lui Vasile Macedoneanul sau Cartea românească de învățătură[32]. După conținut, erau considerate lucrări pedagogice, prezentând reguli de conduită în societate, maxime privitoare la atitudinea religioasă, politică și morală a domnitorului și poporului.

Noțiunile pedagogice care se aplicau în școlile din acest secol erau sub forma științelor sau epistimurilor: „o școală fără epistimuri, este ca o casă fără ferestri”[33]. Recomandările profesorilor făceau referire la practicarea unui învățământ adaptat copiilor, evitarea predării mecanice și a învățării

PRAGMATIC SIGNS OF SCHOOL COMPETENCE

Adriana Sgaibă
PhD Sudent, "Ion Creangă" State Pedagogical University from Chișinău

Abstract: The article highlights the openings offered by pragmatics to school competence, here being included the orientation towards the practice of meaningful action of the student, to the formation of him "fit for action", engaged in an efficient practice, with noticeable practical effects. The pragmatic method is approached interpretively, which involves the attempt to capitalize on each opinion according to its practical consequences. Awareness of the implications and requirements of competence generates great changes at the level of social interactions. Approaching contemporary society, as a knowledge society, brings to the forefront changes in vision regarding the formation and development of competences, as a subject of increasingly active public interest. Competence from a pragmatic perspective is a need that both students and social systems have, it is an important need, a very strong intrinsic motivator, a generator of all the student's efforts to perform.

Keywords: pragmatic; competence; practical action; practical consequences; results; concrete thinking, situation

- Esența pragmaticului

În concepția educației la zi tot mai insistent se vorbește despre formarea practică sau pragmatică a elevilor, care să fie pregătiți pentru realitatea ce îi înconjoară. În ideea acestor orientări, miezul pragmatismului este dat de credinţa că este adevărat nu doar ceea ce concordă cu realitatea obiectivă, ci și ceea ce se dovedeşte a fi avantajos [2; 6; 12]. În pragmatism, ideile nu sunt din start adevărate, ci devin astfel în cursul acţiunii, în măsura în care „dau randament". Însăşi gândirea este valoroasă pentru un pragmatist numai dacă deţine o funcţie pragmatică, adică aceea de a elabora reguli, instrumente pentru acţiune, care desemnează un instrumentalism, ca o teorie privind natura gândirii, a logicii şi a dobândirii de cunoştinţe, conform căreia ideile şi judecăţile trebuie privite ca instrumente ce funcţionează în situaţii trăite şi determină consecinţe pentru viitor [14].

Metoda pragmatică, la rândul său, înseamnă a încerca să interpreteze fiecare opinie în funcţie de consecinţele sale practice. Problema se pune în felul următor: dacă o anumită opinie este adevărată, şi nu alta, care este diferenţa ce ar rezulta de aici în mod practic. Dacă nici o diferenţă practică nu ar putea fi depistată, se va considera că ambele alternative sunt acceptate în acelaşi timp şi că orice discuţie ulterioară ar fi inutilă. Pentru ca o controversă să fie serioasă, trebuie să se poată indica precis care consecinţă practică îi este în mod necesar alăturată astfel încât să fie considerată singura adevărată. Metoda pragmatică reprezintă, prin urmare, o atitudine, o orientare. Şi această orientare, această atitudine, constă în întoarcerea privirilor noastre de la tot ce reprezintă lucru prim, principiu prim, categorie, necesitate presupusă, spre lucrurile ultime, spre rezultate, consecinţe, fapte. Pragmatistul se ataşează strâns de fapte, de realitatea concretă; studiază atent adevărul, după cazuri particulare pe care apoi le generalizează. Pragmatistul vrea să demonstreze detaliat anume de ce trebuie să-i purtăm respect adevărului [Apud 15, p.38-39].

După cum afirmă F.G. Popescu, atitudinea pe care o reprezintă pragmatismul este de mult timp cunoscută, căci este atitudinea empiriştilor. Dar, în concepția cercetătorului, aceasta reprezintă o formă mult mai radicală ce ridică mai puține probleme decât formele utilizate până în prezent de empirism. Pragmatismul întoarce spatele și se detaşează de abstracţie, de tot ceea ce face gândirea neadecvată – soluţii verbale, raţionamente aprioric greşite, sisteme închise – de tot ceea ce este un aşa-zis absolut sau are o origine falsă, pentru a se îndrepta spre gândirea concretă şi adecvată, spre fapte, spre acţiunea eficace [15, p.41].

În felul acesta, pragmatismul semnifică reacţia împotriva dogmei, împotriva teoriilor artificiale, împotriva falsului, pe care îl vedem ca adevăr. El este o teorie de cercetare, care permite a înainta, a ne mișca înainte.

După cum a afirmat cercetătorul Papini, pragmatismul ocupă în mijlocul teoriilor poziţia unui coridor, într-un hotel. „Numeroase camere dau în coridor. În prima întâlnim un om elaborând un tratat despre ateism; în cea de alături, o persoană rugându-se în genunchi pentru a dobândi credinţă şi curaj; în a treia, un chimist; în următoarea, un filosof redactându-şi sistemul de metafizică idealistă; în acelaşi timp, în a cincea cameră, un individ încearcă să demonstreze imposibilitatea metafizicii. Totuşi, fiecare din aceşti oameni folosesc coridorul; toţi trebuie să-l utilizeze pentru a reintra în cameră, apoi pentru a ieşi" [Apud 15, p.43].

Aşadar, „pragmatic" înseamnă conform acţiunii, în serviciul practicii, orientat spre conexiunea disponibilităţilor personale şi a consecinţelor acţiunii. Însă aceasta nu trebuie, în opinia lui A.Boboc, să conducă la confuzia între „pragmatic" şi „practic": „pragma" (gr.: acţiune) şi „prattein" (gr.: practiktikâs, referitor la acţiune) se deosebesc şi prin faptul că „practic" se leagă şi de „praxis" („practică", spre deosebire de „teorie"), tinzând mai mult către acţiunea comportamentală, etică. În acest sens, „praxeologic" presupune teoria acţiunii eficiente.

Într-o abordare istorică, „pragmatic" redă grecescul „prâgmatikds", ceea ce s-ar descrie prin „versat" (priceput, încercat) în afaceri (în îndeletniciri practice) şi ar însemna: 1) apt pentru acţiune, servind practicii, practic, angajat practic; 2) servind bunăstării publice, folosului general. Interesantă în acest excurs istoric nu este atât sinonimia lui „pragma" cu „praxis", ci faptul că „pragma" trimite la „câmpul semnificatului: acţiune, efectuare, activitate, faptă", dar şi „la un câmp semnificat de stări de fapt şi lucruri", ceea ce în esenţă s-a păstrat şi la preluarea celor doi termeni în limbile europene, însă „acest proces de încorporare este legat cu unele transformări de semnificaţie" [3].

Conceptul de „pragmatic" devine el însuşi un semn pentru diferitele feluri de întrebuinţare a semnelor, punând laolaltă domeniile logicului, empiricului, normativului, acţionalului etc. [Apud 3].

Aşa cum s-a precizat, în centrul acestor preocupări se află „gândirea pragmatică" care se concentrează pe acțiuni practice și rezultate concrete, punând accentul pe utilitate și eficiență, adesea renunțând la idealuri complexe în favoarea celor mai ușor de realizat: accent pe acțiune, flexibilitate, utilitate, eficiență.

În felul acesta, constatăm un șir de semne de bază ale pragmaticului, care sunt expuse în tabelul de mai jos.

- Noțiunea de competență în educație

Dezvoltarea şi recunoaşterea cunoştinţelor, abilităţilor şi competenţelor cetăţenilor sunt esenţiale pentru dezvoltarea individuală, competitivitate, ocuparea forţei de muncă şi pentru coeziunea socială în comunitate. Asemenea dezvoltare şi recunoaştere ar trebui să faciliteze mobilitatea transnaţională a lucrătorilor şi a celor care studiază şi să contribuie la îndeplinirea cerinţelor privind cererea şi oferta pe piaţa europeană a muncii. Accesul şi participarea la învăţarea de-a lungul vieții pentru toţi, inclusiv pentru persoanele dezavantajate, şi utilizarea calificărilor ar trebui, prin urmare, promovate și îmbunătăţite la nivel naţional şi comunitar [9, p.13].

Etimologic pot fi desprinse unele înțelesuri. Rădăcina dublă din latină a termenului com (împreună) + peto (cerere, căutare, dorință, atac) ne poate orienta către următoarele semnificații: dorință comună, căutare, cercetare în comun, o cerere, revendicare pentru a atinge o țintă sau căutarea împlinirii unor nevoi. Cuvântul latin generic, competo poate însemna criză, potrivire sau chiar atac. Nevoia determină o criză, potrivirea cere o armonizare a mijloacelor, gruparea cu alții care au aceeași nevoie, iar atacul presupune o pricepere, de la strategie până la îndeplinirea efectivă a sarcinilor fiecărui membru al grupului [16, p.32].

Privită dinspre persoană, rădăcina latină a termenului, „competentia" tradus prin „în stare" – poate însemna capabil să facă anumite lucruri, care are în sine posibilitatea de a se achita cu succes de anumite sarcini. Dar acest termen, luat strict, poate însemna și prezent în ceea ce face, în situație, nu în altă parte, ci cu totul în ceea ce se întâmplă în locul și la momentul respectiv [Ibidem, p.37].
Noțiunea de competenţă este situată în centrul politicilor publice i educaționale actuale [13; 10; 8; 5]. În educaţie și în formarea profesională competenţele stau la baza curricula, a calificărilor sau a standardelor profesionale. În învăţământ decupajul tradiţional pe materii școlare tinde să fie completat de competenţe-cheie și standarde, care definesc un anumit nivel de instruire și educaţie. Această acceptare totală a noțiunii, popularitatea deosebită a „competence-based polities" a fost însoţită de răspândirea sa nelimitată, în detrimentul clarităţii conceptuale [1, p. 19].

După cum constată în cunoștință de cauză I. Vlașin, faptul că educația a ajuns să pună în centrul ei competența este un lucru foarte important, cu deschideri nemaiîntâlnite până acum. Șansa ei de a fi cu adevărat plăcută și folositoare vine din faptul că fiecare om își dorește să fie competent. Cel ce se ocupă de educație trebuie să împace societatea în ansamblu, adică să îi ofere tineri capabili, dar, în același timp, să respecte unicitatea ființei umane, să nu o deformeze. Omul care iese de pe băncile școlilor trebuie să trăiască, să se integreze bine în societate și să poată desfășura o activitate utilă, care să îi asigure cele necesare traiului. Ca să trăiască bine trebuie să știe să își gestioneze eforturile, energia, timpul, prioritățile, să își păstreze sănătatea, să interacționeze constructiv, dacă se poate chiar în mai multe limbi [Apud 16, p.19].

Prezența competenței nu este un moft, ci o condiție fără de care implicarea în viața unui întreg supraindividual nu este satisfăcătoare, de aceea și nevoia personală de competență este ridicată, cu deosebire acolo unde performanța contează. Pornind de la semnificația competenței de „putere de a face împreună lucrurile pentru satisfacerea nevoilor comune", putem interpreta competența ca pe mijlocul și arta de a gestiona bine puterea avută împreună. Primul act al puterii comune este delegarea responsabilităților, iar actul ce închide cercul este evaluarea competenței părților de a face posibilă realizarea activităților care susțin viața întregului [Ibidem, p.33].

Noțiunea de competență este valorificată în Europa prin anii 1980 datorită procesului de integrare europeană și necesității stabilirii unui numitor comun pentru exprimarea și recunoașterea rezultatelor învățării. Competența a devenit conceptul-cheie în Cadrul European al Calificărilor (EQF). Acest fapt a marcat trecerea de la enciclopedismul cunoașterii, mai greu de atins în condițiile de azi, la o cultură a acțiunii contextualizate, care presupune aplicarea optimă a unor tehnici și strategii adecvate [Apud 17, p. 11].

Pe plan pedagogic, abordarea prin competențe accentuează în mod evident latura pragmatică a învățării, utilitatea efectelor învățării pentru elev și pentru societate. În felul acesta, se face văzută legătura strânsă dintre aspectul pragmatic și competența ca atare.

F. Voiculescu, în lucrarea sa, în care analizează amănunțit specificul competenței, se adresează unor definiri ale cercetătorilor, pentru a ajunge la o definiție proprie a competenței. De exemplu, Ph. Perrenoud percepe competența ca acțiune. O competență este o capacitate de acțiune într-o clasă de situații comparabile. Ea permite stăpânirea globală a unei categorii de situații complexe, prin mobilizarea unor resurse diverse. Conform lui J.Tardif, competența corespunde unei capacitți complexe de acțiune care se sprijină pe mobilizarea și utilizarea eficace a unei varietăți de resurse. C.Deloy propune următoarea definiție: competența este un ansamblu integrat de cunoștințe, deprinderi și atitudini care permite subiectului, în fața unei categorii de situații, de a se adapta, de a rezolva probleme și de a realiza proiecte. În accepțiunea lui G.Le Boterf, acțiunea este reperul decisive pentru definirea unei competențe. J.Aubret și P.Gilbert menționeaă patru trăsături comune ale noțiunii de competență: 1. Referința la sarcini, la activități umane sau la probleme de rezolvat în circumstanțe identificabile; 2. Eficacitatea așteptată; 3. Caracterul structurat al proceselor de mobilizare a cunoștințelor, deprinderilor și atitudinilor comportamentale care asigură eficacitatetea; 4. Posibilitatea de a face predicții asupra acestei eficacități [17, p. 15-16].

Din asamblarea acestor definiții, Voiculescu propune următoarea definiție: competența este o caracteristică individuală sau colectivă atașată posibilității de a mobiliza și de a pune în acțiune de manieră eficace într-un context dat un ansamblu de cunoștințe, de capacități și de atitudini comportamentale [Ibidem, p. 17].

Competența deschide calea spre starea de excepție, în abordare kantiană, aici precizând faptul că precum există scăderi naturale ale facultăţii de cunoaştere, tot astfel există şi excese ale acesteia, ce apar ca talente sau daruri naturale. Talentul facultăţii de cunoaştere nu este influenţat în mod covârşitor de instruire, zestrea naturală trebuind să fie îndeajuns de putemică spre a o compensa. Varietăţile sale sunt: agerimea productivă, sagacitatea, originalitatea în gândire. Agerimea este capacitatea de a asocia după legile imaginaţiei reprezentări eterogene, dar care se pot pune în valoare în mod reciproc. Ea este o facultate a intelectului, care ulterior necesită şi sprijinul facultăţii de judecare. Sagacitatea sau darul investigaţiei constă dintr-o judecată anterioară determinată din sine asupra posibilităţii de aflare a adevărului. În acest scop, sunt antrenate ipoteze, se aplică reguli, se urmăresc principii, se procedează prin analogie [11, p.25].

- Caracteristici ale competenței școlare

În opinia lui Barbaroș, care abordează problematica competențelor școlare, aceasta:

- ✓ presupune o activitate a elevului, deci trebuie să existe un context;
- ✓ reprezintă un output (rezultat) care pune în evidenţă ceea ce poate face un elev, ca efect al unui proces anterior de învăţare și formare;
- ✓ implică definirea unor standarde sau niveluri de performanţă, care măsoară și acreditează efortul anterior de învăţare și formare;
- ✓ reprezintă potenţialul exprimat sau măsura a ceea ce un elev poate realiza la un moment dat [1, p. 20].

Din această enumerare se poate deduce faptul că o competenţă este un indicator al capacităţii actuale, dar și un predictor al evoluţiei ulterioare, al șanselor de reușită într-un domeniu de activitate.

Am afirmat mai sus că noţiunea de competenţă este legată de un șir de alte noţiuni: cunoștinţe, abilitate, acţiune, comportament, performanţă, profesie, rol, sarcină, context, situaţie, calificare, pricepere, capacitate, reflecţie și altele, cu care competenţa are caracteristici comune. Semnificaţiei competenței îi corespund două noțiuni diferite în limba engleză: competency și competence. Dicţionarul limbii engleze oferă următoarele semnificaţii pentru termenii competency și competence: – competency (substantiv): a) stare sau calitate de a fi calificat la un nivel adecvat sau superior acestuia; abilitate; b) un sistem de aptitudini, cunoștinţe și abilităţi (skills); – competence (substantiv): calitatea de a avea o pregătire fizică și intelectuală adecvată sau superioară acestei. Prima noţiune (competence) reprezintă baza statică a competenţei (ceea ce face posibilă competenţa – potenţialul persoanei), iar cea de-a doua (competency) – partea dinamică a competenţei (ceea ce se construiește la realizarea potenţialului). În limba română ambele substantive se traduc drept „competenţă” [1, p. 20].

Din cele expuse anterior, rezultă că o competenţă poate fi observată doar în acţiuni concrete, aplicate de elevi în situaţii concrete. Competenţa elevului este capacitatea acestuia de a cunoaşte profund o problemă şi în baza acesteia de a avea dreptul de a se pronunţa într-o chestiune. Competenţa este capacitatea care presupune succesul în exercitarea unei funcţii sau realizarea unei sarcini, presupune abilitatea obţinută graţie asimilării cunoştinţelor pertinente şi a experienţei care consistă în rezolvarea unor probleme specifice. Elementele comune prin care se descrie o competenţă sunt: situaţia care trebuie rezolvată; actorul (elevul) care trebuie să acţioneze pentru a rezolva această situaţie; ansamblul de resurse (cunoştinţe, inteligenţă emoţională, capacităţi, aptitudini, motivaţii, atitudini, valori), pe care elevul trebuie să le mobilizeze pentru a rezolva situaţia [7, p. 46].

Competenţa are următoarele caracteristici:

- ✓ competenţa este complexă: ea integrează cunoştinţele, strategiile, abilităţile, atitudinile într-un proces bazat pe manifestări; competenţa constă în mobilizarea ciclică şi repetată, în contexte din ce în ce mai complexe;
- ✓ competenţa este relativă: spre deosebire de un obiectiv care poate fi atins, competenţa nu va fi niciodată atinsă; ea se dezvoltă pe parcurs, trecând de la un nivel inferior spre unul superior;
- ✓ competenţa este potenţială: competenţa poate fi proiectată şi evaluată, posibilitatea mobilizării sale determinând diferite performanţe în viitor, în contexte diferite ale contextului educaţional;
- ✓ competenţa este raportată la o situaţie: competenţa se manifestă esenţial prin capacitatea de a administra cu eficienţă o situaţie sau prin modificarea situaţiei în care această competenţă este utilizată;

- ✓ competenţa este transferabilă: competenţa nu poate să se reducă la un proiect, la un rezultat sau la o performanţă reproductibile; ea presupune că elevul este capabil a reutiliza procesele adaptându-le deliberat la un nou context;
- ✓ competenţa este conştientă; competenţa este conştientă şi asociată necesităţilor şi intenţiilor [Apud 7, p. 48].

Dacă ne adresăm ideilor lui I.Vlașin privind competența, atunci trebuie să precizăm că autorul afirmă că competența se poate dezvolta în tot ceea ce face omul, de la muncă la hobby, de la activitățile cele mai serioase la distracție, de la demersul personal la colaborarea cea mai bună. Din perspectiva competenței poate nu este relevantă atât metoda, calea pe care se face un lucru, ci variabilele controlate (gestionate) și responsabilitatea manifestată de-a lungul activității elevului. Din acest motiv, dezvoltarea competenței se poate face prin creșterea nivelului de conștientizare a situației și a implicațiilor alegerilor legate de modul de participare la ea și nu printr-o reproducere a unor scheme de lucru prestabilite [Vlașin, p.22; 24].

Sintetizând ideile expuse pe parcurs, am elaborat tabelul semnelor pragmatice ale competenței școlare, expus mai jos, din care reiese evident corelația dintre aceste două noțiuni fundamentale în activitatea de învățare a elevilor.

Tabelul semnelor pragmatice ale competenței

Semne pragmatice	Semne ale competenței
conform acțiunii	presupune o activitate, o nevoie de acțiune
în serviciul practicii; angajat practic; acțiuni practice	acreditare a efortului depus în învățare referitor la acțiune; apt pentru acțiune	se manifestă doar în acțiuni concrete orientat spre conexiunea disponibilităților personale și a consecințelor acțiunii	deschide calea spre starea de excelență: agerimea, productivitatea, sagacitatea, originalitatea
acțiune cu rezultat avantajos; randament	presupune un rezultat: ceea ce poate face un elev ideile sunt instrumente ce funcționează în situații concrete	răspuns exigențelor individuale sau sociale consecințe practice ale acțiunii	efect al unui proces anterior de învățare și formare atașare de fapte, de realitatea concretă	potențialul exprimat la un moment dat în situații concrete utilitate și eficiență	implică standarde sau niveluri de performanță

În aceste configurații, competența devine o realitate complexă, care se referă nu la ceea ce credem că știm și ne propunem, ci la ceea ce efectiv suntem capabili să facem. Un aspect important este referirea la centrarea pe latura pragmatică a vieții, competența neoferind altceva decât un fel de mecanisme adaptive ce permit rezolvarea cu succes a unor situații sau a unor familii de situații.

Abordarea centrată pe competență nu este orientată spre situații neobișnuite, ci spre abordarea diferită, specifică, nu stereotipă, a situațiilor curente. Un elev competent nu are o participare de tip stimul-răspuns complex, pornind de la o preocupare de a rezolva o situație, ci una bazată pe grijă, care evaluează dintr-o perspectivă complexă situația și intervine ținând cont de caracteristicile ei.

Un elev care se folosește din plin de aceste trei căi: acțiunea – ca slujire a unui ideal ce transcende propria ființă, contemplarea – prin descoperirea comuniunii profunde, valorizarea afectivă– ca o chemare spre ceva mai bun, nu poate rata împlinirea sa deplină. Dezvoltarea competenței ar putea fi socotită calea „soft" spre valorificarea existenței, pentru transformarea timpului în regăsirea de sine a ființei, a potențialului înalt pe care îl are și trăirea unei vieți în deplin acord cu propria natură [Apud 16, p.146].

Este important faptul că o competența nu poate fi impusă sau învățată ca o tehnică. Privind mai de departe, și folosind alte cuvinte, competența nu se poate impune, ea se asumă, se caută de către elev. Ca să fie competent elevul trebuie să vrea acest lucru de dragul competenței ca atare, restul se adaugă ca bonusuri, afirmă I.Vlașin. Astfel, competența, identificată ca participare de calitate, poate fi socotită nu doar metodă de lucru, nu doar rezultat, ci o prezență activă, îmbunătățită, de calitate. Un rezultat pare a fi câștigat pentru totdeauna, prezența este însă condiționată de implicarea în participare. Când este căutată, competența devine un mijloc, când este observată prezența, participarea, poate fi socotită un rezultat. Dar în esență, ea este o participare de calitate la un sistem individual [16, p.372].

- Concluzii

✓ Concentrarea asupra semnelor pragmatice ale competenței școlare deschide o serie de opțiuni în ceea ce privește posibilele rute de parcurs. Punctul de plecare, în acest sens, este acțiunea practică a elevului, esențială și pentru gândire, și pentru reprezentare, și pentru rezultatul scontat.

AUGMENTED REALITY IN PRIMARY EDUCATION – A LINK BETWEEN CULTURAL IDENTITY AND GLOBALIZATION

Dumitru Ciprian Sgaibă
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: In the context of globalization, primary education plays a crucial role in shaping cultural identity and developing intercultural competencies. Augmented reality (AR) facilitates this process by providing interactive experiences that blend elements of local cultural heritage with global perspectives. The use of AR in education enables students to explore their own traditions and international cultural diversity, fostering critical thinking and empathy. Additionally, technology enhances motivation for learning, improving access to information in an engaging manner. However, its integration involves challenges such as teacher training and ensuring technological infrastructure. AR thus serves as a bridge between cultural identity and globalization, strengthening both students' cultural roots and their openness to diversity.

Keywords*: augmented reality; cultural identity; primary education; globalization; interactive learning.*

Într-o epocă marcată de interconexiune și schimbări socio-culturale accelerate, educația primară devine un domeniu esențial pentru dezvoltarea identității culturale și a competențelor necesare integrării în societatea globalizată. Pe fondul acestor transformări, tehnologia digitală capătă un rol tot mai pregnant în procesul educațional, oferind noi modalități de predare și învățare care facilitează accesul la informație și dezvoltă gândirea critică a elevilor. În acest context, realitatea augmentată (RA) se impune ca o soluție inovatoare care permite nu doar accesul interactiv la cunoștințe, ci și ancorarea acestora în contexte culturale și sociale autentice [1, p.355].

Integrarea realității augmentate în învățământul primar poate contribui semnificativ la stimularea învățării active și participative, asigurând o mai bună înțelegere a valorilor culturale locale și a interdependențelor globale. Acest tip de tehnologie oferă posibilitatea creării unor medii educaționale în care elevii pot interacționa atât cu patrimoniul cultural al comunității din care provin, cât și cu elemente culturale internaționale, promovând astfel o viziune integrativă asupra diversității culturale [2, p.56].

- Realitatea augmentată – delimitări conceptuale

Realitatea augmentată este definită ca o tehnologie care îmbină elemente ale lumii reale cu componente digitale, creând un mediu interactiv hibrid. Aceasta presupune suprapunerea de imagini, sunete și animații digitale peste realitatea fizică, permițând utilizatorilor să exploreze și să interacționeze simultan cu cele două dimensiuni [3, p.1321]. Spre deosebire de realitatea virtuală, care generează un univers complet digitalizat și separat de realitatea fizică, realitatea augmentată oferă un cadru mixt de învățare în care utilizatorii pot analiza, manipula și experimenta în timp real informații contextualizate.

În ceea ce privește aplicabilitatea sa în educația primară, realitatea augmentată creează oportunități inovatoare de explorare a unor teme culturale și istorice prin intermediul unor reprezentări vizuale imersive. De exemplu, utilizarea aplicațiilor bazate pe RA permite elevilor să examineze în detaliu artefacte arheologice, să participe virtual la evenimente istorice sau să exploreze diverse aspecte ale patrimoniului cultural fără a fi constrânși de limitările fizice impuse de manualele tradiționale [6, p.736].

- Identitatea culturală în educația primară

Identitatea culturală reprezintă un pilon fundamental în procesul de formare a fiecărui individ, având un impact profund asupra dezvoltării personale și sociale. În educația primară, promovarea identității culturale este esențială pentru consolidarea sentimentului de apartenență la o comunitate și pentru înțelegerea valorilor, tradițiilor și obiceiurilor care definesc un anumit spațiu cultural. În acest sens, școala joacă un rol primordial în transmiterea elementelor specifice patrimoniului național, asigurând elevilor un cadru adecvat pentru explorarea și interiorizarea acestora [4, p.73].

Dincolo de transmiterea cunoștințelor despre istorie, artă și tradiții, educația culturală contribuie la formarea unei gândiri critice și reflexive asupra propriei identități. Elevii sunt încurajați să își exprime opiniile, să își pună întrebări despre trecut și să își dezvolte capacitatea de a face conexiuni între diferite elemente culturale. În plus, integrarea unor metode interactive, cum ar fi utilizarea realității augmentate, poate face procesul de învățare mai captivant și mai accesibil. Prin vizualizarea în timp real a unor artefacte culturale sau prin explorarea virtuală a unor monumente istorice, elevii pot experimenta un mod de învățare dinamic și inovator, care favorizează atât înțelegerea conceptelor abstracte, cât și consolidarea identității culturale [5, p.88].

- Globalizarea și deschiderea către diversitate

Într-o lume aflată într-un continuu proces de schimbare și interconectare, educația trebuie să răspundă provocărilor globalizării prin dezvoltarea unor competențe interculturale solide. Elevii din prezent nu mai sunt expuși doar la influențele culturale ale propriei comunități, ci interacționează constant cu elemente din diverse culturi, fie prin intermediul mediului digital, fie prin contact direct cu persoane din alte țări și medii culturale. Astfel, școala trebuie să își asume responsabilitatea de a pregăti elevii pentru o lume diversă, în care respectul pentru diferențele culturale și capacitatea de a naviga între multiple perspective devin abilități esențiale [8, p.112].

Realitatea augmentată poate facilita acest proces prin crearea unor experiențe interactive care permit elevilor să exploreze culturi diferite într-un mod accesibil și atractiv. Spre exemplu, prin utilizarea unor aplicații educaționale, elevii pot descoperi obiceiuri și tradiții din alte părți ale lumii, pot explora vizual monumente istorice semnificative și pot interacționa cu elemente culturale într-un mod nemediat de text sau imagini statice [11, p.281]. Această abordare interactivă poate contribui la dezvoltarea empatiei culturale și la o mai bună înțelegere a diversității globale, oferindu-le elevilor instrumentele necesare pentru a deveni cetățeni activi și implicați într-o societate multiculturală.

- Realitatea augmentată – liant între local și global

O caracteristică distinctivă a realității augmentate este capacitatea sa de a integra elemente locale de patrimoniu cultural în contexte educaționale cu relevanță globală. Acest lucru permite elevilor să înțeleagă modul în care tradițiile și valorile propriei comunități se înscriu într-un cadru mai larg, conectând aspecte ale culturii locale cu fenomene și evenimente istorice internaționale [7, p.119].
Prin intermediul realității augmentate, elevii pot, de exemplu, să analizeze comparativ arhitectura tradițională din regiunea lor și stilurile arhitecturale internaționale, descoperind influențele reciproce și interdependențele culturale. De asemenea, pot vizualiza în detaliu artefacte și simboluri din diverse colțuri ale lumii, ceea ce le permite să își formeze o înțelegere mai profundă a complexității culturale și a modului în care identitatea fiecărei națiuni se înscrie într-un context global [9, p.93].

Integrarea acestui tip de tehnologie în procesul educațional nu doar că facilitează accesul la informații complexe într-un mod interactiv, dar contribuie și la dezvoltarea unei atitudini deschise față de diversitate. Elevii învață să aprecieze și să respecte diferențele culturale, înțelegând în același timp că propria identitate culturală nu este un element izolat, ci face parte dintr-un peisaj global vast și interconectat.

- Beneficii și provocări ale utilizării realității augmentate în educație

Adoptarea realității augmentate în educația primară aduce multiple beneficii, începând cu creșterea motivației elevilor și îmbunătățirea procesului de învățare. Studiile arată că utilizarea tehnologiei interactive stimulează curiozitatea și implicarea activă a elevilor, oferindu-le un mediu educațional mai atractiv și mai adaptat stilului lor de învățare [10, p.119]. De asemenea, realitatea augmentată permite o înțelegere mai profundă a conceptelor abstracte, deoarece elevii pot experimenta și explora vizual informațiile, în loc să le perceapă doar prin lectură sau explicații teoretice.

Un alt avantaj major al realității augmentate este dezvoltarea competențelor digitale, care sunt esențiale în societatea actuală. Prin utilizarea unor aplicații și platforme bazate pe RA, elevii nu doar că își îmbunătățesc cunoștințele despre subiectele predate, dar învață și să utilizeze tehnologia într-un mod eficient și creativ [6, p.736].

Cu toate acestea, există și provocări asociate implementării realității augmentate în educație. Una dintre cele mai mari dificultăți este pregătirea cadrelor didactice pentru utilizarea acestei tehnologii într-un mod eficient. Formarea profesorilor trebuie să includă nu doar aspectele tehnice, ci și metode pedagogice inovatoare care să valorifice pe deplin potențialul acestei tehnologii. În plus, integrarea realității augmentate necesită infrastructură adecvată, ceea ce poate reprezenta o provocare pentru școlile cu resurse limitate [10, p.119].

O altă preocupare este riscul de supra-simplificare a conținutului cultural. În timp ce tehnologia poate face învățarea mai atractivă, este esențial ca aceasta să fie utilizată în complement cu metodele educaționale tradiționale, pentru a asigura o înțelegere profundă și critică a subiectelor abordate [11, p.281].

- Concluzii

✓ Realitatea augmentată (RA) reprezintă o oportunitate semnificativă pentru inovarea educației primare, facilitând o învățare interactivă și adaptată nevoilor actuale ale elevilor.

✓ Prin vizualizare și interacțiune, RA sprijină înțelegerea unor concepte complexe, contribuind la formarea identității culturale și la explorarea diversității globale.

✓ Pentru a aduce valoare reală în procesul de învățare, utilizarea RA trebuie să fie strategică, combinată cu activități reflexive și discuții critice.

Este esențial ca această tehnologie să fie utilizată nu doar ca un suport vizual, ci ca un mediu educațional interactiv care stimulează gândirea critică și creativitatea elevilor, oferindu-le posibilitatea de a explora și de a construi propriile cunoștințe.Implementată corect, RA poate deveni un instrument esențial în educația viitorului, sprijinind dezvoltarea unor elevi capabili să își înțeleagă identitatea culturală și să interacționeze armonios cu diversitatea globală.

THE LITERARY DISCOURSE AS A TOOL FOR THE CULTURAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL INCLUSION OF CHILDREN WITH INTELLECTUAL DISABILITIES

Cristina-Adriana Drulă-Avrămiuc
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: The paper explores the psychological and educational dimensions of literary discourse in the process of including children with intellectual disabilities, highlighting the role of literature as a formative, aesthetic, and therapeutic instrument. Literature has become a symbolic medium for expression and communication, offering opportunities for cognitive, emotional, and social development. The role of narrative texts, cultural dialogue, and linguistic expression in forming a positive identity and facilitating intercultural interactions is analyzed. Through adapted literary activities, psychological barriers are reduced, and self-esteem, empathy, and communication skills among children with special educational needs are strengthened. Literature, in the psychopedagogical context, becomes a bridge between inner worlds and external realities, facilitating learning through emotion and discovery. The positive impact of reading on the personal development of children with intellectual disabilities confirms the need to integrate the cultural and aesthetic dimensions into inclusive education. The study also highlights the contribution of teachers and psychopedagogues in adapting literary texts to the individual needs of students, emphasizing the importance of interdisciplinary collaboration between education, psychology, and culture. Thus, literature is not only an art of language, but also a means of communication and integration into the community, offering children with special needs a voice and an identity.

Keywords: inclusion; literary discourse; intellectual disability; interculturality; emotional development.

Introducere

Educația incluzivă are ca fundament ideea că fiecare copil poate învăța și se poate dezvolta dacă primește sprijinul adecvat și dacă mediul educațional este organizat flexibil, centrat pe nevoi și pe ritmuri de învățare diferite [8, 2014, p. 22]. Pentru copiii cu retard mintal, accesul la conținuturi culturale și literare este adesea limitat din cauza prejudecăților sau a supraaccentuării laturii funcționale a intervențiilor educative. Totuși, numeroși autori arată că tocmai experiențele estetice și simbolice sunt cele care stimulează motivația pentru învățare și întăresc imaginea de sine [15, 1961, p. 49; 9, 2011, p. 156].

Literatura, prin natura ei, pune copilul în situația de a interacționa cu personaje, situații-problemă, cadre culturale și norme morale diferite. Acestea devin suport pentru dezvoltarea empatiei și pentru exersarea rolurilor sociale, ceea ce este esențial pentru elevii cu dificultăți de înțelegere a regulilor sociale [18, 1997, p. 72]. Mai mult, textul literar poate fi fragmentat, adaptat, dramatizat sau însoțit de suport vizual-auditiv, ceea ce îl face accesibil chiar și copiilor cu niveluri reduse de alfabetizare.

În același timp, conferințele și demersurile academice care pun laolaltă „literatură, discurs și dialog multicultural" oferă cadrul ideal pentru a arăta că literatura nu este rezervată doar elevilor cu performanțe înalte, ci poate deveni o tehnică de incluziune și pentru cei cu dizabilități intelectuale, dacă este abordată prin metode active, ludice și expresive [13, 2005, p. 87]. Introducerea de față își propune, așadar, să justifice alegerea literaturii ca instrument psihologic și educațional în lucrul cu elevii cu retard mintal și să pregătească terenul pentru analiza dimensiunilor psihologice, interculturale și expresive ale discursului literar.

Dimensiunea psihologică a discursului literar

Din perspectivă psihologică, literatura funcționează ca un spațiu de proiecție și de siguranță afectivă. Copilul poate trăi, prin identificare cu personajele, emoții pe care în viața reală nu le poate exprima sau controla. Acest mecanism a fost descris de numeroși autori ai psihologiei dezvoltării, care au subliniat că narativul ajută la organizarea experiențelor de viață în scheme coerente [5, 1990, p. 118; 14, 1972, p. 44].

Pentru copilul cu retard mintal, aceste structuri narative sunt și mai importante, pentru că ele oferă repere stabile, repetitive și predictibile, ce reduc anxietatea și încurajează participarea. Povestea are început, desfășurare și încheiere, iar această logică a succesiunii îl ajută pe elev să înțeleagă mai bine raportul cauză–efect și să transfere acest mod de gândire și în situații cotidiene [7, 1968, p. 102].

Lectura ghidată, însoțită de întrebări simple („Cum se simte personajul?", „De ce plânge?", „Ce ai face tu?") devine o intervenție psihopedagogică de tip socio-emoțional, pentru că dezvoltă empatia și recunoașterea emoțiilor la alții [2, 1986, p. 78]. Aceste competențe sunt esențiale în includerea socială, întrucât lipsa abilităților de percepție emoțională este adesea cauza respingerii colegiale.

Un alt câștig psihologic al literaturii este formarea rezilienței. Personajele care depășesc obstacole devin modele simbolice pentru copilul cu dizabilitate, arătându-i că eșecul nu este definitiv și că există soluții. Literatura pentru copii abundă în astfel de scenarii de reușită, care pot fi explicitate și dramatizate la clasă [16, 2011, p. 124]. În acest sens, discursul literar nu este doar descriptiv, ci și prescriptiv: sugerează moduri sănătoase de a răspunde la frustrare și respingere.

Nu în ultimul rând, textul literar poate fi folosit pentru reglarea comportamentelor problematice. Prin selectarea unor povești despre prietenie, acceptare, cooperare sau respect, cadrul didactic transmite mesaje valorice fără a moraliza direct, ci prin exemplu narativ – strategie mult mai bine acceptată de copii [12, 2002, p. 142].

Literatură și interculturalitate – perspective educaționale

Dimensiunea interculturală a literaturii este deosebit de relevantă într-un context școlar în care copiii provin din medii familiale, economice și culturale diverse. Introducerea în curriculum a poveștilor, legendelor sau textelor moderne din alte spații culturale îi ajută pe elevi să observe că emoțiile fundamentale – frica, bucuria, dorința de apartenență – sunt comune tuturor oamenilor, chiar dacă se manifestă diferit [1, 2009, p. 54].

Pentru copilul cu retard mintal, această constatare este importantă deoarece reduce sentimentul de izolare și de „altfel decât ceilalți". Dacă poveștile africane, asiatice sau europene prezintă copii care se tem, se bucură sau învață cu dificultate, elevul poate înțelege că dificultatea nu îl descalifică și că diferența nu este un criteriu de excludere [11, 2019, p. 127].

Literatura poate fi folosită și pentru activități de tip „harta lumii povestite", în care elevii – inclusiv cei cu CES – descoperă că diverse culturi pun accent pe valori precum ospitalitate, familie, respectul pentru vârstnici, iar aceste valori pot fi apoi transferate în regulile clasei. Astfel, climatul educațional devine mai suportiv și mai puțin sancționator [8, 2014, p. 89].

Un alt avantaj al perspectivei interculturale este că oferă profesorului ocazia să vorbească despre stereotipuri și prejudecăți prin intermediul literaturii, nu prin discurs abstract. Un text în care un personaj marginalizat este acceptat de comunitate poate declanșa discuții despre acceptarea copiilor cu dizabilități, fără ca aceștia să se simtă vizați direct [3, 1979, p. 32].

În fine, literatura are capacitatea de a crea punți între școală și familie. Poveștile citite la clasă pot fi reluate acasă, pot fi dramatizate la serbări sau pot deveni proiecte culturale ale școlii („Săptămâna poveștilor lumii"), ceea ce întărește parteneriatul educațional și sprijinul social pentru copilul cu retard mintal [13, 2005, p. 93].

Rolul limbajului și al expresivității în incluziune

Limbajul este principala cale de acces la cultură și la relațiile interumane. În cazul copiilor cu retard mintal, întârzierile de limbaj pot bloca participarea la dialog și pot crea impresia falsă de neînțelegere sau dezinteres. Literatura, însă, oferă un tip de limbaj încărcat afectiv, repetitiv și ritmat (poezii, dialoguri scurte, formule de basm) care este mult mai ușor de interiorizat [18, 1997, p. 45].

Lectura expresivă practicată de cadrul didactic – cu intonație, pauze, schimbări de voce pentru personaje – devine un model de comunicare pe care copilul îl poate imita. Prin repetarea replicilor, el își lărgește vocabularul și își exersează articularea [5, 1990, p. 121]. Pentru elevii cu dificultăți de fluență, dialogurile din povești pot fi rescrise în variante scurte și jucate în perechi, ceea ce crește încrederea în sine.

Expresivitatea nu este doar verbală, ci și nonverbală. Povestea poate fi spusă cu gesturi, cu imagini, cu marionete sau cu suport digital, iar copilul poate răspunde la fel – prin desen, mimă sau sunete. Toate acestea reprezintă forme legitime de comunicare în educația incluzivă și trebuie valorizate [15, 1961, p. 85].

În plus, literatura permite dezvoltarea vocabularului emoțional („sunt trist”, „sunt mândru”, „mi-e teamă”), vocabular esențial pentru reglarea comportamentelor. Copilul care poate numi emoția are șanse mai mari să o controleze. De aceea, se recomandă selectarea de texte cu încărcătură afectivă clară și discuții ghidate după lectură [12, 2002, p. 145].

Nu în ultimul rând, lucrul cu textul literar pregătește participarea copilului la discursul social și cultural mai larg. Prin exerciții de povestire, de reformulare și de prezentare în fața colegilor, elevul cu CES învață să vorbească în public, să asculte și să respecte regulile dialogului – competențe-cheie pentru integrarea ulterioară [17, 2017, p. 64].

Activități literar-educative cu valențe psihologice

Pentru ca literatura să devină cu adevărat un instrument de incluziune, activitățile trebuie proiectate gradual și diferențiat. O primă categorie o constituie activitățile de receptare: ascultarea unei povești scurte cu suport de imagini, completarea unei fișe cu personaje, identificarea emoțiilor din text. Acestea dezvoltă atenția, memoria auditivă și capacitatea de asociere vizuală [10, 2016, p. 134].

O a doua categorie o reprezintă activitățile de exprimare: dramatizări după povești, jocuri de rol („eu sunt personajul X”), continuarea poveștii începute de învățător, realizarea de dialoguri între personaje din culturi diferite. Aceste activități consolidează competențele de comunicare și dau copilului rol activ în învățare [2, 1986, p. 64].

A treia categorie este cea creativ-reflexivă: rescrierea unui final de poveste pentru a fi mai incluziv, alegerea personajului preferat și argumentarea alegerii, crearea unei „cărți a clasei” cu povești din diverse culturi. Astfel de activități oferă elevului sentimentul de autor și de apartenență, iar produsul final poate fi prezentat părinților sau altor clase, întărind motivația [5, 1990, p. 130].

Activitățile literare pot fi integrate și în consilierea de grup. Citirea unei povestiri terapeutice despre frică, furie sau respingere poate deschide discuții sensibile fără a expune direct elevii. În acest fel, literatura devine o formă discretă de intervenție psihologică în clasă [16, 2011, p. 124].

Nu în ultimul rând, este utilă colaborarea cu biblioteca școlii sau cu instituții culturale locale (teatru de păpuși, casă de cultură), pentru ca elevii cu retard mintal să beneficieze de experiențe literare autentice. Participarea la un spectacol sau la o lectură publică îi ajută să se simtă parte a comunității culturale și crește acceptarea lor socială [8, 2014, p. 122].

Concluzii

Analiza realizată demonstrează că discursul literar poate fi valorificat cu succes în educația incluzivă a copiilor cu retard mintal, cu condiția să fie bine adaptat și mediat de cadrul didactic. Literatura nu este doar un conținut de predat, ci un mediu de dezvoltare emoțională, socială și interculturală. Prin povești, copilul învață să simtă cu celălalt, să accepte diferența și să-și exprime propria identitate. Pentru școala contemporană, care își propune să fie un spațiu al dialogului și al diversității, literatura rămâne una dintre cele mai eficiente și umane căi de incluziune [8, 2014, p. 122].

MULTICULTURAL DIALOGUE IN THE INCLUSION OF CHILDREN WITH INTELLECTUAL DIDABILITIES

Cristina-Adriana Drulă-Avrămiuc
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: This article examines multicultural dialogue as a core mechanism of inclusive schooling with respect to the specific learning and participation needs of children with intellectual disabilities (also termed mental retardation in legacy literature). Grounded in intercultural and inclusive education paradigms, we review theoretical foundations (socio-constructivist, ecological, and critical), outline the main dimensions of dialogue (cognitive, affective-relational, axiological, and pragmatic), and explain how dialogue systematically reduces barriers to learning and participation . We propose a four-pillar operational framework: culturally responsive and accessible curricula, linguistic and cultural mediation, simplified dialogic pedagogies, and school–family–community partnerships. We describe classroom practices tailored to the cognitive profiles of students with mild to moderate intellectual disabilities, emphasizing clarity, positive redundancy, and multimodal supports (e.g., cultural coexistence contracts, tolerance maps, visual-supported routines, and socio-emotional scenarios). A five-step intervention and evaluation model is presented (cultural screening, co-design with families, micro-step curricular planning, formative monitoring, participatory evaluation), together with indicators capturing the growth of multicultural dialogue (psychological safety, comprehensibility, reciprocity, family engagement, shared cultural capital). The article contributes by:(1)integrating multicultural dialogue with specific curricular and therapeutic adaptations;(2) offering a replicable classroom protocol; and (3) proposing a professional competency profile aligned with DigCompEdu and inclusive standards. Expected outcomes include improved participation, school well-being, and functional performance, along with reduced stereotypes, intercultural conflict, and stigma .*

Introducere

În ultimele două decenii, școala incluzivă a devenit cadrul normativ și axiologic în care se proiectează politicile educaționale și practicile de clasă, iar diversitatea culturală reprezintă norma, nu excepția [6, 2014, p.32]. În acest context, dialogul multicultural nu este un „adițional", ci infrastructura relațională și cognitivă prin care copiii cu retard mintal (RM) acced la înțelegere, semnificație și participare [2, 2019, p.41]. Dialogul – ca practică deliberată de ascultare, negociere de sens și co-construcție a cunoștințelor – devine atât instrument pedagogic, cât și condiție psihologică a bunăstării și a echității [5, 2001, p.67]. Deși literatura documentează numeroase strategii interculturale, puține lucrări operează o integrare explicită între dialogul multicultural și adaptările necesare profilului cognitiv și socio-emoțional al elevilor cu RM. Articolul de față adresează această lacună propunând un model coerent ce îmbină accesibilizarea culturală a curriculumului, medierea cultural-lingvistică, pedagogiile dialogice simplificate și parteneriatul cu familia, întemeiat pe perspective psihologice și socioculturale [1, 2020, p.54].

Scopul este dublu: (1) să oferim un cadru conceptual clar pentru definirea dialogului multicultural în raport cu incluziunea elevilor cu RM; (2) să propunem un protocol operațional, replicabil la nivel de clasă, însoțit de instrumente de evaluare formativă și indicatori ai reușitei [40, 2017, P.12].În același timp,discuțiile contemporane despre incluziune subliniază necesitatea depășirii abordărilor strict compensatorii și trecerea către practici educaționale care valorifică diversitatea culturală ca resursă de învățare și de dezvoltare personală pentru elevii cu retard mintal [25, 2011, p.22].Studiile recente arată că procesele de înțelegere,reprezentare cognitivă și explorare socială sunt profund influențate de modul în care elevii sunt expuși la interacțiuni intercultural structurate și la context de comunicare în care sensul este construit împreună [41, 2015, p.48].

De asemenea, cercetările din psihologia educației indică faptul că dezvoltarea limbajului, a gândirii sociale și a abilităților de autoreglare este accelerată atunci când elevii cu RM participă la activități dialogice ghidate, adaptate nivelului lor cognitiv și susținute de instrumente vizuale, modele narative și rutine previzibile [20, 1978, p.86; 21, 1996, p.44].

În acest cadru, dialogul multicultural nu reprezintă doar o strategie didactică, ci o condiție de acces la cunoaștere: el structurează interacțiunile, reduce ambiguitatea situațiilor de învățare și sprijină construirea reprezentărilor mentale stabile, atât de importante pentru elevii cu dificultăți intelectuale[22,2019,p.33].Totodată, în contextul societăților pluriculturale, abordările educaționale incluzive sunt solicitate să răspundă nevoilor complexe ale tuturor elevilor, iar dialogul multicultural devine un spațiu în care se negociază identități, valori și perspective, contribuind la un climat școlar sigur și echitabil[13,2020,p.18] . Pentru elevii cu RM, aceste contexte facilitează dezvoltarea sentimentului de apartenență, reducerea izolării sociale și creșterea autoeficacității — indicatori centrați de UNESCO ca fiind esențiali pentru bunăstarea școlară [23, 2021, P.27].

Prin urmare, nevoia unui cadru operațional care să adapteze dialogul multicultural la particularitățile cognitive ale elevilor cu retard mintal este stringentă. Lucrarea de față răspunde acestei necesități printr-o sinteză coerentă a dimensiunilor conceptuale, pedagogice și culturale, propunând un model aplicabil în practică și ușor de utilizat de către cadrele didactice, mediatori școlari și specialiști în educație incluzivă [24, 2011, p.61].

1. Cadru conceptual: dialog multicultural, interculturalitate și incluziune Dialogul multicultural desemnează ansamblul de practici comunicative prin care sunt recunoscute, valorizate și negociate diferitele perspective culturale ale elevilor, familiilor și cadrelor didactice, în scopul construirii unui sens comun al învățării și conviețuirii. Spre deosebire de simplele „activități tematice" despre cultură, dialogul presupune reciprocitate, simetrie pragmatică și distribuirea puterii discursive: fiecare voce este audibilă, comprehensibilă și cu efect asupra deciziilor de clasă [13, 2016, p.45]. În paradigma incluzivă, dialogul multicultural este orientat către reducerea barierelor de învățare și participare identificate în Index for Inclusion – bariere de limbaj, de așteptări, de relaționare, de curriculum, de evaluare [24, 2011, p.58. Pentru elevii cu RM, aceste bariere se multiplică atunci când mesajele culturale sunt abstracte, când ritmul interacțiunii este rapid sau când repertoriile expresive sunt limitate [40, 2014.p.91]. De aici, cerința unor strategii dialogice accesibilizate: simplificarea semantică fără simplificare culturală, redundanță pozitivă, suporturi vizuale și gestuale [26, 2009, p.143], secvențiere în micro-pași, ancorare în experiențe cotidiene și codare multimodală a sensului. Interculturalitatea operațională presupune trecerea de la „predarea despre celălalt" la „învățarea cu celălalt", în logica co-construcției: narative partajate, proiecte de investigație comunitară, consilii ale clasei, cercuri de discuție cu reguli clare de turn-taking și cu role suportive (mediator lingvistic, partener de sprijin, observator al sentimentelor) [27, 2010, p.66].

Ecologia dialogului are patru dimensiuni:

a. cognitivă – comprehensibilitatea și scaffolding-ul; [20, 1978, p.86]
b. afectiv-relațională – siguranța psihologică, empatia, valorizarea identității [28, 1983, p.52].
c. axiologică – normele echității[29,1986,p.23];
d. pragmatică – rutine, instrumente, timp, spațiu, materiale [4, 1996.p.41; 30, 2009,p.28].

Un aspect important în acest cadru îl constituie rolul limbajului ca vehicul al identității și al sensului cultural. Limbajul este mediu de afirmare și recunoaștere socială, iar absența reprezentării culturale poate conduce la sentimentul de marginalizare [31, 1963, p.14]. În contextul incluziunii, dialogul multicultural nu presupune doar acceptarea diferenței, ci și redistribuirea legitimității discursive în favoarea tuturor participanților. Elevii cu retard mintal beneficiază de formatul dialogic deoarece acesta permite ritm lent, clarificare progresivă și susținerea sensului prin mijloace nonverbal [32, 2014, p.89].

2. Fundamente psihopedagogice pentru elevii cu retard mintal (dizabilitate intelectuală)

Particularitățile cognitive (atenție fluctuantă, viteză redusă de procesare, funcții executive vulnerabile, dificultăți de generalizare) și cele socio-emoționale (reglare emoțională, autostimă fragilă, anxietate socială) reclamă adaptări specifice ale dialogului multicultural [7, 2016, p.94].Principiul „ușor de înțeles" (easy-to-read) devine criteriu de calitate pentru orice mesaj didactic cu încărcătură culturală: propoziții scurte, vocabular concret, imagini relevante, exemple din viața cotidiană, repetare variată și verificare frecventă a înțelegerii[33,2009,p.5] . Teoriile socioculturale accentuează zona proximei dezvoltări și rolul adultului/egalului ca mediator – rol ce poate fi jucat și de colegi din alte culturi, valorizând capitalul cultural al fiecăruia[21,1996,p.103.Din perspectivă ecologică, dialogul se configurează pe mai multe niveluri (microsistem – clasă, mesosistem – familie/servicii, exosistem – comunitate), iar coerența între niveluri este esențială: un mesaj incluziv la clasă poate fi anulat de discursuri stigmatizante în comunitate[4,1996,p.4] . În plan evaluativ, accentul cade pe funcționalitate: se măsoară comprehensibilitatea mesajelor, participarea la schimburi dialogice, calitatea relațiilor, nu doar performanțele academic standardizate [34 et al, 2010, p.92].

Un alt principiu esențial constă în realizarea conexiunii dintre învățare și emoție. Elevii cu retard mintal pot manifesta reticență în cadrul interacțiunilor sociale din cauza experiențelor anterioare de eșec sau stigmatizare [35, 2010, p.231]. Dialogul multicultural oferă spațiu pentru afirmarea identității, iar această recunoaștere emoțională crește motivația și deschide accesul către cooperare și participare autentică [36, 1997, p.87].

3. Fundament teoretic privind dialogul multicultural în educația incluzivă

Dialogul multicultural reprezintă unul dintre pilonii fundamentali ai școlii incluzive contemporane, având un rol decisiv în facilitarea participării, adaptării și formării unei identități pozitive la copiii cu dizabilități intelectuale. Progresele recente din educația incluzivă arată că interacțiunea multiculturală este nu doar un element contextual, ci un mecanism pedagogic esențial, care contribuie la reducerea barierelor cognitive, atitudinale și sociale [13, 2016, p.72].

În literatura de specialitate, educația multiculturală este prezentată ca un cadru complex, susținut de dimensiuni precum: recunoașterea diversității culturale, valorizarea identităților multiple, dezvoltarea competențelor comunicative interculturale și construirea unei culturi școlare bazate pe respect și colaborare [16, 2010, p.44]. Aceste elemente sunt indispensabile în lucrul cu elevii cu retard mintal care beneficiază semnificativ de rutine predictibile, mediere lingvistică, sprijin visual, interacțiuni multisenzoriale și modele de comunicare simplificate [32, 2014, p.89].

Studii recente realizate în România pun în evidență importanța dialogului multicultural ca factor de facilitare a incluziunii copiilor cu CES, inclusiv al celor cu dizabilitate intelectuală. Răduț-Taciu (2016) arată faptul că abordarea multiculturală reduce tensiunile de grup și contribuie la formarea unui climat de clasă suportiv și crește nivelul de acceptare în rândul elevilor tipici [17, 2016, p.113]. În același sens, Vlăsceanu (2011) subliniază faptul că școala incluzivă nu poate funcționa fără practici educaționale de valorizare a diversității, deoarece ele creează condiții reale pentru participare și acces echitabil la curriculum [18, 2011, p.57].

Conform perspectivelor socio-constructiviste, participarea elevilor cu retard mintal la activități de dialog multicultural contribuie la dezvoltarea capacităților cognitive și socio-emoționale prin mecanisme precum: învățarea prin imitație, construirea sensului și dezvoltarea limbajului funcțional și exersarea competențelor sociale. Copiii cu dizabilitate intelectuală au nevoie de contexte structurate, dar bogate cultural, în care pot experimenta interacțiuni simple, repetate, multisenzoriale, capabile să consolideze atât comunicarea, cât și încrederea în sine [21, 1996, p.103].

Geneva Gay (2010) accentuează că predarea cultural-responsivă este esențială pentru elevii vulnerabili și presupune adaptarea limbajului, a materialelor și a strategiilor didactice, ceea ce este fundamental în educația copiilor cu retard mintal și permite fiecărui elev să participle active [16, 2010, p.88]. În activitățile multiculturale dedicate copiilor cu retard mintal, acest tip de predare include: folosirea de povești vizuale, joc de rol intercultural, rutine de salut în diverse limbi, mini – expoziții cultural și hărți vizuale ale diversității [11, 2020, p.29].

La nivel internațional, UNESCO (2020) evidențiază faptul că școlile care implementează strategiile de dialog multicultural în rândul elevilor cu dizabilități cresc rata de participare, prezența școlară și implicarea familiei [11, 2020, P.31].Implicarea familiei, în special în cazul copiilor cu întârziere intelectuală ,este considerată un factor critic , deoarece părinții pot facilita prezentarea tradițiilor cultural proprii într-un mod adaptat nivelului de înțelegere al copilului [37, 2013, p.17].

În plan aplicativ,dialogul multicultural devine o strategie de incluziune atunci când:

- Sunt utilizate rutine de comunicare adaptate (imagini , pictograme , gesturi) [38, 2013, p.67];
- Sunt prezentate elemente culturale prin metode vizuale și senzoriale;
- Sunt organizate activități simple, repetitive, în care copilul cu dizabilitate să poată participa;
- Este promovată cooperarea între elevii tipici și cei cu CES;
- Se creează contexte care valorizează identitățile multiple din clasă.

Prin combinarea acestor elemente,școala dezvoltă o cultură a acceptării,în care diversitatea devine resursă pedagogică,iar copilul cu retard mintal își dezvoltă abilități esențiale pentru funcționarea socială, cum ar fi: comunicarea funcțională,gestionarea emoțiilor, colaborarea și respectul pentru diferențe [10, 2011, p.83].

Astfel, dialogul multicultural nu reprezintă doar o componentă a politicilor educaționale moderne, ci un instrument direct de dezvoltare a competențelor socio – culturale și de participare școlară pentru elevii cu dizabilitate intelectuală, contribuind la un climat incluziv și echitabil[34,2010,p.92].

4. Practici de dialog multicultural la clasă: curriculum, limbaj, scenarii

Implementarea dialogului multicultural pentru elevii cu RM presupune proiectarea unor micro-rutine stabile, previzibile și vizibile (orare vizuale, panouri ale cuvintelor-pod, pictograme pentru emoții), combinate cu activități bogate cultural: povești biografice, ateliere culinare, muzici și ritmuri, jocuri de rol despre sărbători și obiceiuri [16, 2010, p.121]. Curriculumul se îmbogățește cu sarcini deschise, dar secvențiate, care cer comparații între practici culturale, identificarea asemănărilor/diferențelor și negocierea unor reguli comune („contractul de convietuire culturală") [13, 2016, p.95].Limbajul didactic este simplificat strategic: fiecare concept nou e introdus prin exemplu concret, imagine, gest, apoi generalizat; profesorul utilizează feedback descriptiv scurt și verificări de înțelegere („arată", „spune în cuvintele tale"), în perechi sau grupuri heterogene [32, 2014, p.89].„Harta toleranței" este un instrument centrat pe spațiu: elevii plasează pe o hartă a clasei/comunității situații de cooperare reușită și situații de tensiune, apoi discută în pași ghidați cauze, emoții și soluții[38,2013,p.73]. Pentru elevii cu RM se adaugă pictograme de emoții, bare de intensitate și fraze-schelet.

Evaluarea formativă urmărește indicatori ai dialogului:

1. comprehensibilitate (număr de parafraze corecte),
2. reciprocitate (număr de replici care leagă ideile altuia) [2019, 78, p.86],
3. siguranță psihologică (auto-raportări simple, scale cu fețe) [28, 1983, p.52],
4. implicare familială (prezență la activități, mesaje schimbate) [37, 2013, p.17],
5. capital cultural partajat (artefacte aduse/explicate) [11, 2020, P.29].

De asemenea, este recomandată utilizarea atelierelor narative ghidate, unde elevii reconstruiesc experiențe culturale în format multimodal (gest, desen, obiect, imagine). Acest tip de activitate facilitează co-construcția sensului și reduce presiunea limbajului verbal, permițând elevilor cu dificultăți de exprimare să participe activ la schimbul de idei [26, 2009, p.143].

5. Parteneriat școală–familie–comunitate și rolul mediatorilor

Dialogul multicultural este sustenabil dacă se extinde dincolo de clasă. Mediatorii școlari și culturali (inclusiv elevi-mentori și părinți-resursă) facilitează traducerea sensurilor, explicarea regulilor și negocierea diferențelor de norme[42,2005,p.37].Întâlnirile de co-design cu familia (scurte, frecvente, cu materiale easy-to-read) aliniază așteptările și propun micro-obiective funcționale (de ex., „salută prin două formule acceptate în cultura X și în cultura Y, folosind suport vizual") [33, 2009, p.5]. ONG-urile, bibliotecile, muzeele și centrele culturale pot găzdui „ateliere ale orașului" – contexte naturale pentru exersarea dialogului în sarcini cu sens. Școala instituie politici antidiscriminare explicite și mecanisme de raportare sigură, iar cadrele didactice beneficiază de formare continuă pe mediere culturală, limbaj simplificat și evaluare centrată pe participare [10, 2011, p.83]. Pentru comunitățile cu tensiuni istorice, se recomandă tehnici de justiție restaurativă adaptate cognitiv (cercuri ale reparației cu suport vizual, roluri clare, timp de procesare extins) [16, 2010, p.144].

Indicatorii de progres include:

1. încrederea familială în școală;
2. participarea la evenimente;
3. scăderea incidentelor de microagresiune;
4. creșterea interacțiunilor positive observabile.

Este important ca profesorii să recunoască influența cadrului cultural asupra percepțiilor despre dizabilitate.

Dialogul nu urmărește uniformizarea valorilor, ci găsirea unui teren comun al respectului și cooperării [13, 2008, p.59]. Implicarea mediatorilor reduce posibilele bariere legate de neînțelegeri culturale și crește încrederea părinților în instituția școlară [37, 2013, p.19].

Pe lângă aceste aspecte, parteneriatul școală–familie–comunitate devine pe deplin funcțional doar atunci când este construit pe principii de reciprocitate, transparență și co-responsabilitate.Implicarea constantă a mediatorilor culturali și a factorilor comunitari contribuie la creearea unor punți stabile între familiile copiilor cu retard mintal și instituția școlară,reducând anxietățile, neînțelegerile și barierele comunica'ionale[37,2013,p.22].În plus,relația dintre școală și familie are nevoie de rutine predictibile: întâlniri scurte și dese, feedback vizual, mini-jurnale culturale și activități de co-creare în care părinții devin participanți activi. Astfel de activități cresc nivelul de încredere și reduc distanța psihologică dintre familie și școală un aspect crucial pentru copiii cu nevoi special [17, 2016, p.115].

Totodată, comunitatea joacă un rol major în extinderea oportunităților educaționale: instituții culturale, ONG-uri, biblioteci, centre de artă și ateliere interculturale facilitează expunerea elevilor la experiențe autentice, stimulând curiozitatea și flexibilitatea cognitive [11, 2020, p.31].

În cadrul acestora ,dialogul multicultural este exersat prin jocuri de rol,povești tradiționale,simboluri cultural și activități multisenzoriale, care îi ajută pe elevii cu retard mintal să își formeze repere culturale stabile[16,2010,p.102].Pentru a asigura eficiența parteneriatului, se recomandă includerea unor mecanisme clare de monitorizare: fișe de progres intercultural, observarea participării sociale, dialoguri reflexive cu familia și indicatori vizibili ai schimbărilor de comportament (autonomie sporită, scăderea rezistenței la sarcini noi, participare voluntară la activități commune)[13,2016,p.84].În același timp,formarea mediatorilor școlari trebuie să includă dimensiuni precum: gestionarea conflictelor culturale, utilizarea limbajului ușor de înțeles, adaptări pentru copiii cu deficite de procesare, tehnici de vizualizare a comunicării și abordări ale restaurării relaționale. Un mediator bine pregătit reduce semnificativ barierele legate de percepții, etichete și prejudecăți, facilitând comunicarea armonioasă între toți actorii implicați [10, 2011, p.96].

Parteneriatul educațional integrat devine astfel o colaborare reală, în care școala și comunitatea funcționează ca spații complementare de învățare, iar copiii cu retard mintal sunt sprijiniți să participe, să se exprime și să fie valorizați în mod egal. Această abordare consolidează incluziunea și transformă mediul educațional într-un ecosistem flexibil, prietenos și receptiv la diversitate [6, 2014, p.91].

6. Model de intervenție și evaluare pentru dialogul multicultural în RM

Propunem un model în cinci pași:

1. Screening cultural și de comunicare (chestionar scurt pentru familie, mini-interviu cu elevul, fișă de observație asupra repertoriilor expresive) [4, 1996, p.41]
2. Co-design cu familia și mediatorul (stabilirea regulilor comune și a obiectivelor măsurabile, alegerea artefactelor culturale relevante) [37, 2013, p.17]
3. Proiectare didactică în micro-pași (obiective SMART, suport vizual, scenarii dialogice, roluri, timp de procesare) – necesară pentru copiii cu dificultăți de comprehensiune [7, 2016, p.94]
4. Implementarea dialogului în contexte natural (jocuri de rol, rutine, povești culturale, cercuri de discuție cu reguli clare, activități de investigație comunitară) [13, 2008, p.59;
5. Evaluare multimodală (feedback visual, scale emoționale, auto- raportări simple, conversații ghidate), conform recomandărilor pentru accesibilizarea evaluării la elevii cu dizabilitate intelectuală [34, 2010, p.92]. Instrumentele: scale cu fețe pentru bunăstare, liste de verificare a comprehensibilității, rubrici pentru reciprocitate și ascultare activă, jurnale foto.

Validitatea se asigură prin triangulare (profesor-părinte-elev), iar etica intervenției vizează consimțământ informat ușor de înțeles, confidențialitate și evitarea exhibării identităților culturale ale copiilor [11, 2020, p.36] .

Modelul este compatibil cu DigCompEdu (engagement profesional, resurse digitale accesibile, evaluare) [39, 2017, p.12] și poate fi integrat în Planurile Educaționale Individualizate (PEI), însoțit de proceduri clare de adaptare curricular și de sprijin therapeutic interdisciplinar [19, 2014, p.61].

Flexibilitatea este un criteriu fundamental: modelul de intervenție trebuie adaptat individual, în funcție de nivelul de dezvoltare și stilul de comunicare al fiecărui elev. Evaluarea progresului nu este liniară, ci evoluție în pași mici, vizibili, care consolidează sentimentul de competență și autonomie [34, 2010, p.92].

Dialogul multicultural, atunci când este proiectat intenționat și accesibilizat cognitiv, devine motorul incluziunii reale pentru elevii cu retard mintal. El operează simultan la nivelul sensului (clarifică și conectează cunoștințele) [21, 1996, p.103], la nivelul relațiilor (creează siguranță psihologică și apartenență) [28, 1983, p.52] și la nivelul valorilor (instituie echitatea ca normă practică) [29, 1986, p.23].

Cadrul propus – cu patru piloni și un model în cinci pași – oferă un traseu replicabil pentru profesori și școli; succesul depinde de coerența ecosistemică (clasă – familie – comunitate), [4, 1996, p.41] și de o evaluare formativă continuă, care urmărește indicatori ai dialogului, nu doar scoruri academic [34, 2010, p.92]. Prioritățile viitoare includ: consolidarea formării cadrelor didactice în mediere culturală și limbaj ușor de înțeles [6, 2014, p.91]; dezvoltarea de resurse digitale accesibile compatibile cu DigiCompEdu [11, 2020, P.36]; extinderea parteneriatelor cu comunitățile culturale; cercetări intervenționale cu măsurători robuste ale bunăstării și participării [30, 2009, p.28]. Dincolo de rezultate, dialogul multicultural reumanizează școala: pune vocea copiilor și a familiilor în centrul deciziilor, cultivă responsabilitatea colectivă și transformă diferența într-o resursă de învățare [13, 2016, p.72].

În ansamblu, dialogul multicultural devine un instrument transformativ atunci când este integrat sistematic în practica școlară și calibrat la particularitățile cognitive ale copiilor cu retard mintal. El nu reprezintă doar un demers educațional, ci o intervenție complexă care modelează climatul socio-emoțional al clasei încurajează empatia și reduce stereotipurile, oferind fiecărui elev șansa de a se exprima într-un spațiu sigur și previzibil [10, 2011, p.83].

Prin activități structurate pe limbaj accesibil, rutine vizuale și situații de învățare colaborative, dialogul multicultural contribuie la dezvoltarea sentimentului de competență, facilitează învățarea semnificativă și consolidează abilitatea copiilor de a-și valorifica identitatea în relația cu ceilalți [banks, 2008, p.59]. Multiculturalitatea, astfel mediată, devine nu doar un conținut curricular ci și un cadru de viață care normalizează diferențele și le transform în resurse educaționale [16, 2010, p.102].

Rezultatele demonstrate în literatură și în practica educațională arată că elevii cu retard mintal răspund pozitiv la structuri de comunicare simplificate, la modele de cooperare și la activități bazate pe poveste, simboluri culturale și expresivitate [24, 2011, p.77].

În acest context, dialogul multicultural facilitează internalizarea valorilor prosociale, reduce izolarea socială și stimulează participarea activă în comunitate.

Un aspect esențial îl reprezintă colaborarea dintre familie, profesor și comunitate. Atunci când toți actorii educaționali împărtășesc aceleași valori și mesaje cultural, copilul beneficiază de un cadru predictibil, coerent și stabil ceea ce îi sporește capacitatea de adaptare și încrederea în sine [37, 2013, p.19]. De aceea, implementarea dialogului multicultural nu poate să rămână un demers punctual, ci trebuie susținut prin politici școlare clare, formarea continuă a cadrelor didactice și acces la resurse adaptate (ghiduri vizuale, material digitale accesibile, scenarii cultural – educative) [11,2 020, P.36]. Pe termen lung, dialogul multicultural practicat consecvent devine un pilon al educației incluzive: umanizează relațiile, susține participarea elevilor vulnerabili, ancorează procesul educațional în valori democratice și contribuie la dezvoltarea unei comunități școlare solidare și responsabile [10, 2011, p.110]. Diferențele nu mai sunt percepute ca limite, ci devin oportunități de învățare reciprocă și dezvoltare personal , iar elevii cu retard mintal dobândesc vizibilitate, demnitate și voce în spațiul educational [6 ,2014, p.91].

CENTRALITY APPROACH IN BUILDING STUDENT AUTONOMY

Vasilica-Cristina Călescu
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă ", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova, Teacher, "Spiru Haret" National College, Târgu Jiu

Abstract: This article aims to analyze how the centrality of the student in the educational process contributes to the formation of his/her autonomy. It starts from the premise that student autonomy is not a passive result of training, but an active process, which involves responsibility, involvement and self-reflection. The student-centered approach favors the development of self-management skills, decision-making and self-regulated learning, being supported by both modern pedagogical perspectives and recent research in educational sciences.

Keywords: student centrality; autonomy; self-regulated learning; active pedagogy; personalized training; constructivism.

1. Centralitatea ca fenomen reactualizat

În pedagogia contemporană, conceptul de centralitate a elevului exprimă o mutație semnificativă în planul didacticii: de la o educație transmisivă, exterioară și impusă, spre una participativă, reflexivă și auto-dirijată. Această viziune se împletește profund cu formarea autonomiei elevului, văzută ca o condiție esențială pentru succesul învățării pe tot parcursul vieții. După cum afirmă Philippe Meirieu, „a pune elevul în centru nu înseamnă a-l lăsa de capul lui, ci a-l însoți în propria devenire" [10]. Autonomia nu este echivalentă cu libertatea nelimitată, ci cu capacitatea de a alege responsabil, pe baza cunoașterii și reflecției critice.

Abordarea centrată pe elev presupune reconsiderarea tuturor componentelor procesului didactic: curriculum, strategii de predare, evaluare și relația profesor-elev. Elevul nu mai este un simplu receptor de informații, ci devine actor al propriei formări. Această viziune este susținută de paradigma constructivistă, care afirmă că „învățarea este un proces activ de construire a cunoașterii, nu de absorbție pasivă" [12, 15]. Profesorul are rol de facilitator, ghid și de mediere a sensului.

Potrivit lui Xavier Roegiers , „elevul autonom este acela care poate învăța singur, cu alții și de la alții, în contexte variate, gestionându-și propriile resurse cognitive și emoționale"[14, p.23]. Această formă de autonomie nu se dezvoltă spontan, ci trebuie cultivată sistematic, printr-un climat educațional favorabil, prin provocări cognitive și prin valorizarea efortului personal.

Conceptul de centralitate reprezintă o noțiune transversală, care își găsește relevanța și aplicabilitatea în multiple domenii ale cunoașterii, de la filosofia existenței la logica argumentării și până la practica educațională. În esență, centralitatea exprimă ideea unei concentrații axiologice sau funcționale în jurul unui element-cheie, ce devine reperul organizator al întregului sistem.

1.1.Centralitatea în sens filosofic

Din perspectivă filozofică, centralitatea este asociată cu întrebarea fundamentală: „Ce este esențial într-o relație de cunoaștere, existență sau acțiune?". În tradiția umanistă, omul este considerat centrul lumii, măsura tuturor lucrurilor, conform celebrului adagiu al lui Protagoras. Ulterior, gândirea modernă și postmodernă a problematizat această „centralitate umană", punând accent pe pluralismul perspectivelor și descentralizarea sensurilor. Totuși, în contextul educațional, moștenirea umanistă rămâne relevantă: elevul este privit ca subiect cu demnitate, libertate și potențial, iar actul educației se organizează în jurul nevoilor și dezvoltării sale integrale. „A pune elevul în centru înseamnă a-l recunoaște ca scop al educației, nu ca mijloc al unui sistem" [5, p.47]. Aceasta presupune că procesul de învățare nu se limitează la transmiterea de cunoștințe, ci vizează formarea unui individ capabil să-și gestioneze propria dezvoltare, să gândească critic și să participe activ în societate. În acest sens, profesorul devine co-participant, adaptând metodele și resursele educaționale la ritmul și nevoile fiecărui elev. O astfel de abordare nu doar că respectă valorile umaniste, dar contribuie și la crearea unui mediu de învățare incluziv, motivant și flexibil, în care autonomia și responsabilitatea elevului sunt promovate în mod constant.

1.2.Centralitatea în sens logic

În plan logic, centralitatea are semnificația unei ierarhii argumentative. Într-un sistem de judecăți sau de raționamente, se caută întotdeauna premisa centrală, adică ideea în jurul căreia se organizează alte enunțuri. În educație, acest model se regăsește în construirea conținuturilor curriculare sau a proiectelor didactice, unde elevul este luat drept punct de referință: nevoile, interesele și stilurile lui de învățare orientează întregul proces de predare-învățare. În acest sens, c*entralitatea* implică o coerență sistemică, o raportare constantă la un nucleu de semnificație. Elevul nu este doar „un punct în sistem", ci devine principiul ordonator al actului educativ.

1.3.Centralitatea în sens pedagogic

În pedagogie, centralitatea este un principiu metodologic și axiologic. A vorbi despre „centralitatea elevului" înseamnă a susține o viziune educațională centrată pe subiectul învățării, în opoziție cu modelele tradiționale în care accentul era pus pe conținut sau pe autoritatea profesorului. Această abordare a fost conceptualizată în pedagogia contemporană prin expresii precum:

- „învățare centrată pe elev" (student-centered learning),
- „predare diferențiată",
- „învățare personalizată",
- „pedagogie a autonomiei".

Astfel, centralitatea elevului nu este o simplă metaforă, ci o strategie didactică ce presupune reconceptualizarea obiectivelor, metodelor, rolurilor și relațiilor educaționale. După cum notează Philippe Perrenoud, „centrând învățarea pe elev, nu negăm rolul profesorului, ci îl transformăm: din emițător de conținut devine mediator al sensului"[11, p.102].

1.4.Dimensiuni complementare ale centralității

Pentru a înțelege mai bine acest fenomen, putem distinge următoarele dimensiuni ale centralității:

Dimensiune	Descriere
Ontologică	Elevul este recunoscut ca ființă cu valoare în sine
Epistemologică	Cunoașterea se construiește în jurul experienței proprii
Practică	Activitățile de învățare pornesc de la și se întorc spre elev
Etică	Respectarea demnității și libertății de decizie a elevului
Didactică	Curriculumul și metodele sunt adaptate profilului elevului

Centralitatea este un concept cu valențe multiple, ce traversează fundamentele educației. În pedagogia modernă, centralitatea elevului devine nu doar un ideal, ci o necesitate practică, susținută de teoriile învățării, de principiile democrației educaționale și de exigențele unei societăți bazate pe cunoaștere.

2. Impactul abordării centrate pe elev asupra procesului de învățare

Centrul de greutate al educației contemporane s-a deplasat semnificativ de la simpla transmitere a cunoștințelor spre formarea de competențe, dezvoltarea gândirii critice și cultivarea autonomiei în învățare. În această transformare, centrării pe elev i se recunoaște un rol esențial: este atât un principiu pedagogic, cât și un indicator al calității actului educațional.

2.1.De la predare la învățare centrată pe elev

În paradigma tradițională, învățarea era centrată pe conținuturi și pe profesor ca sursă principală de autoritate și cunoaștere. Modelul transmisiv presupunea un flux liniar: profesorul transmite – elevul recepționează. În schimb, în paradigma actuală, învățarea devine activă, constructivă și personalizată. Conform lui David Ausubel, „cea mai importantă influență asupra învățării este ceea ce elevul deja știe – aflați acest lucru și predați în consecință" [1, p.56]. Această idee subliniază rolul fundamental al cunoașterii prealabile a elevului în procesul de predare.

În centrul învățării se află acum:

- experiențele personale ale elevului,
- interesele și motivațiile lui,
- capacitatea de autoreglare,
- interacțiunea socială și colaborativă.

2.2.Funcțiile centrării în procesul de învățare

Centrând procesul educativ pe elev, sistemul de învățământ își reconfigurează nu doar metodele, ci și finalitățile. Funcțiile principale ale acestei centrări sunt:

- Motivațională – elevul se simte valorizat, recunoscut, responsabilizat;
- Cognitivă – învățarea se bazează pe activarea gândirii critice și reflexive;
- Axiologică – sunt promovate valori precum responsabilitatea, libertatea de alegere, demnitatea;
- Formativă – elevul nu doar învață, ci învață cum să învețe (metacogniție);
- Adaptivă – conținuturile și strategiile sunt adaptate la nevoile reale ale elevului.

După cum afirmă Radu Popa, „centrul educației trebuie să fie elevul autonom, capabil să-și construiască propria devenire prin reflecție, efort și sprijin pedagogic inteligent”[13, p.78].

2.3.Relația profesor-elev în învățarea centrată

Într-un mediu educațional centrat pe elev, rolul profesorului se transformă din „transmițător de informații” în facilitator, mentor și designer de experiențe de învățare. Profesorul creează condițiile pentru ca elevul:

- să exploreze activ cunoașterea,
- să formuleze întrebări,
- să rezolve probleme autentice,
- să colaboreze și să reflecteze critic asupra propriei învățări.

Acest model favorizează dezvoltarea competențelor-cheie pentru viață, printre care: învățarea autonomă, comunicarea eficientă, creativitatea, colaborarea și gândirea sistemică.

2.4.Exemple de aplicare a centrării în învățare

Exemplul 1: Portofoliul educațional. Elevii își documentează propriul parcurs de învățare, reflectând asupra progresului, punctelor tari și ariilor de îmbunătățire. Astfel, învățarea devine conștientă și autoreglată.

Exemplul 2: Învățarea bazată pe proiecte (PBL). Proiectele centrate pe interesele elevilor stimulează gândirea critică, cooperarea și aplicarea cunoștințelor în contexte reale. Profesorul oferă sprijin, dar lasă spațiu deciziilor elevului.

Exemplul 3: Contractul pedagogic. Prin stabilirea unor acorduri clare privind obiectivele, metodele și evaluarea, se consolidează implicarea elevului în propriul proces de învățare, crescând responsabilitatea și autonomia.

2.5.Impactul centrării asupra rezultatelor învățării

Studiile arată că elevii implicați activ în procesul de învățare:

- rețin mai bine informația,
- transferă cunoștințele în situații noi,
- dezvoltă o atitudine pozitivă față de școală și învățare,
- își formează o identitate academică solidă.

Aceste rezultate validează abordarea centrată pe elev ca fiind nu doar eficientă din punct de vedere pedagogic, ci și umanistă, echitabilă și durabilă. Centrul învățării nu este o noțiune fixă, ci una dinamică: elevul este adus în centrul procesului educativ nu pentru a primi totul de-a gata, ci pentru a deveni agent activ al propriei formări. Prin această schimbare de paradigmă, educația devine un proces de construire împreună – între profesor și elev, între individualitate și colectivitate, între rațiune și valori.

3. Specificul autonomiei elevului

Autonomia elevului este o componentă esențială a educației moderne, fiind strâns legată de conceptul de învățare centrată pe elev. Ea presupune capacitatea elevului de a-și gestiona propriul proces de învățare, de a lua decizii, de a-și stabili obiective, dar și de a-și asuma responsabilitatea pentru rezultatele obținute. Autonomia nu este un dat natural, ci o competență complexă care se formează treptat prin interacțiune educațională și sprijin pedagogic.

3.1.Definirea conceptului de autonomie a elevului

În literatura de specialitate, autonomia este înțeleasă ca o capacitate de autoconducere și autoreglare în plan cognitiv, afectiv și comportamental. Potrivit lui Philippe Meirieu, autonomia elevului nu înseamnă „a face ce vrea", ci „a învăța să vrei ceea ce are sens și valoare în context educațional și social" [9, p.64].

Astfel, autonomia presupune:

- Inițiativă personală – elevul pornește acțiuni de învățare din proprie inițiativă;
- Responsabilitate – își asumă consecințele alegerilor sale;
- Reflecție critică – analizează rațional acțiunile și deciziile proprii;
- Autoreglare – își monitorizează și ajustează efortul în funcție de scopuri;
- Capacitate decizională – își stabilește obiective relevante și realiste.

3.2.Dimensiuni ale autonomiei elevului

Autonomia elevului poate fi analizată pe mai multe planuri:

Dimensiune	Descriere
Cognitivă	Capacitatea de a selecta strategii de învățare, de a reflecta asupra înțelegerii și de a autoregla procesul de asimilare a cunoștințelor.
Afectiv-motivațională	Implică încrederea în sine, motivația intrinsecă, gestionarea emoțiilor în situații de învățare.
Comportamentală	Se referă la organizarea activităților proprii, gestionarea timpului, perseverență și autodisciplină.
Socială	Capacitatea de a coopera cu alții, de a cere ajutor, de a acționa în mod responsabil în contexte colective.

3.3.Dezvoltarea autonomiei – un proces pedagogic progresiv

Autonomia nu este un obiectiv atins dintr-o dată, ci se dezvoltă treptat, printr-un proces de însoțire pedagogică. Elevul învață să fie autonom prin practică, prin eșecuri gestionate constructiv și prin ghidaj educațional inteligent. După cum afirmă Jerome Bruner, „scopul final al educației este acela de a crea persoane capabile să învețe singure" [2]. Această viziune implică un parteneriat între profesor și elev, în care profesorul acționează ca facilitator, model și susținător al procesului de autoformare. Strategiile pentru dezvoltarea autonomiei elevului vizează atât asumarea responsabilității, cât și implicarea activă în procesul de învățare. Contractul educațional clarifică drepturile și responsabilitățile elevului și ale profesorului, creând cadrul pentru implicare și responsabilitate. Portofoliul reflexiv permite elevului să-și urmărească progresul, să analizeze realizările și să reflecte asupra propriilor puncte forte și aspecte de îmbunătățit. Prin autoevaluare și coevaluare, elevul își dezvoltă capacitatea de a evalua propriile performanțe și de a oferi feedback colegilor, stimulând gândirea critică și responsabilitatea. Planul de învățare individualizat personalizează procesul de învățare în funcție de nevoile, ritmul și interesele fiecărui elev, încurajând inițiativa și autonomia. De asemenea, sarcinile de tip proiect oferă oportunitatea de a gestiona etapele și resursele unei activități complexe, stimulând planificarea, creativitatea și cooperarea. În fine, feedbackul formativ și autoreflexiv sprijină elevul în identificarea progreselor și a dificultăților, încurajând ajustarea strategiilor proprii și asumarea deciziilor educaționale

3.4.Autonomia și cultura clasei

Dezvoltarea autonomiei nu se poate realiza izolat, ci presupune o cultură organizațională a clasei bazată pe încredere, respect reciproc, deschidere și co-responsabilitate. Elevii trebuie să se simtă văzuți, auziți și validați, iar greșelile trebuie tratate ca oportunități de învățare, nu ca eșecuri definitive.

Într-o clasă care favorizează autonomia:

- se evită controlul rigid și excesiv;
- se încurajează întrebările și explorarea;
- se valorifică diferențele de ritm și stil de învățare;
- se oferă spațiu pentru alegere și decizie.

3.5.Obstacole în dezvoltarea autonomiei

Chiar dacă autonomia este un ideal pedagogic, în practică apar numeroase obstacole:

- presiunea performanțelor standardizate;
- supraîncărcarea curriculară;
- lipsa de formare a cadrelor didactice pentru a sprijini autonomia;
- rezistența la schimbare a unor profesori sau elevi;
- climatul autoritar și competitiv.

Depășirea acestor obstacole necesită o restructurare sistemică, dar și o reconsiderare a raportului profesor-elev în cheie democratică și umanistă. Autonomia elevului nu este un lux al educației moderne, ci o necesitate într-o societate bazată pe schimbare rapidă, învățare continuă și responsabilitate individuală. A susține autonomia înseamnă a investi în potențialul elevului de a deveni autorul propriei vieți, capabil să aleagă, să decidă și să acționeze cu sens într-o lume complexă.

4. Mecanisme, tehnici, tehnologii de centrare în învățare

Centrul de interes în educația contemporană s-a mutat de la conținutul transmis spre modul în care elevul învață, accentuând importanța adaptării procesului educațional la nevoile, interesele, ritmurile și stilurile de învățare ale acestuia. Pentru realizarea efectivă a acestei viziuni sunt necesare mecanisme, tehnici și tehnologii specifice, care să sprijine și să faciliteze învățarea centrată pe elev.

4.1.Mecanisme pedagogice ale centratării în învățare

Mecanismele pedagogice sunt procese didactice interne care susțin personalizarea învățării și dezvoltarea autonomiei elevului. Ele sunt orientate spre:

- activarea cunoștințelor anterioare ale elevului;
- individualizarea sarcinilor în funcție de nivelul și stilul cognitiv;
- motivarea internă prin apel la curiozitate, scop personal și sens;
- autoevaluare și autoreglare în procesul de învățare.

Un mecanism-cheie este autoreglarea învățării(„învățare autoreglată”), definită de Zimmerman ca „procesul prin care elevii își dirijează gândirea, motivația și comportamentul către atingerea obiectivelor de învățare” [16, p.112]. Alt mecanism important este feedforward-ul, adică oferirea de sugestii pentru îmbunătățirea ulterioară, mai degrabă decât evaluarea trecutului. Aceasta creează un cadru constructiv, motivant și predictiv.

4.2.Tehnici de centrare în învățare

Tehnicile didactice concrete aplicate în sprijinul centrării pe elev sunt extrem de variate și flexibile. Iată câteva dintre cele mai relevante:

a) Tehnia explorării

Elevul este ghidat să ajungă la concluzii prin explorare, investigație și raționament propriu. Această tehnică sporește motivația intrinsecă și promovează gândirea critică. Această abordare sporește motivația intrinsecă, deoarece elevul devine activ implicat în procesul de învățare, simțind satisfacție atunci când descoperă informații sau soluții prin propriile eforturi. În plus, metoda promovează gândirea critică, capacitatea de analiză și abilitatea de a formula și testa ipoteze. Elevul învață să facă conexiuni între concepte, să pună întrebări pertinente și să dezvolte strategii de rezolvare a problemelor. Prin stimularea curiozității și a inițiativei, învățarea prin descoperire contribuie la dezvoltarea autonomiei și responsabilității în procesul educațional, pregătind elevul să învețe nu doar pentru note, ci pentru aplicarea cunoștințelor în contexte reale.

b) Tehnica intenționării

Elevii investighează o problemă reală, creând produse semnificative. Este o tehnică ce integrează conținuturi multiple și favorizează colaborarea, creativitatea și autonomia. Această tehnică integrează conținuturi din discipline diferite și stimulează colaborarea, deoarece elevii trebuie să lucreze în echipă, să împartă responsabilități și să comunice eficient. În același timp, PBL dezvoltă creativitatea și gândirea critică, deoarece elevii sunt provocați să identifice soluții originale și să rezolve probleme complexe. Prin implicarea în proiecte autentice, elevii își asumă responsabilitatea pentru propria învățare, își organizează resursele și își dezvoltă autonomia, învățând să planifice, să monitorizeze și să evalueze progresul lor și al echipei. Mai mult, această metodă creează legături între teoria învățată și aplicarea practică, pregătind elevii pentru situații reale și pentru luarea deciziilor în contexte diverse.

c) Contractul pedagogic

Reprezintă o înțelegere clară și negociată între profesor și elev privind obiectivele, ritmul, metodele și criteriile de evaluare. Aceasta promovează responsabilitatea și implicarea elevului. Prin stabilirea acestor elemente în mod transparent, elevul devine conștient de responsabilitățile sale și de așteptările care îi sunt adresate. Această abordare stimulează implicarea activă în învățare, dezvoltă autonomia și capacitatea de autoreglare, deoarece elevul participă la luarea deciziilor privind parcursul său educațional. În plus, contractul pedagogic favorizează comunicarea și cooperarea între profesor și elev, creând un cadru de învățare bazat pe respect reciproc, claritate și responsabilitate împărtășită.

d) Autoevaluarea și coevaluarea

Implicarea elevilor în procesele de reflecție asupra propriului progres, dar și asupra activităților colegilor, conduce la conștientizarea și reglarea propriului demers de învățare. Prin autoevaluare și coevaluare, elevii își dezvoltă gândirea critică, capacitatea de analiză și abilitatea de a identifica punctele forte și aspectele care necesită îmbunătățire. Aceste practici încurajează responsabilitatea și autonomia, deoarece elevul învață să ia decizii informate privind strategiile de învățare și să-și ajusteze comportamentele și eforturile în funcție de obiectivele stabilite. În plus, feedbackul primit de la colegi și propria reflecție stimulează motivația intrinsecă și dezvoltarea competențelor sociale și colaborative.

e) Tehnica dosarelor

O colecție de produse de învățare care reflectă evoluția, efortul și stilul individual al elevului, însoțită de reflecții personale. Acesta permite elevului să urmărească progresul său, să conștientizeze realizările și dificultățile întâmpinate și să identifice strategii de îmbunătățire. În același timp, portofoliul stimulează autonomia și responsabilitatea, deoarece elevul devine activ implicat în documentarea și evaluarea propriei învățări, încurajând reflecția critică și planificarea pașilor următori în procesul educațional.

f) Hărțile conceptuale

Reprezentări grafice ale cunoștințelor ce favorizează organizarea logică și vizuală a informației, dezvoltând astfel metacogniția. Prin realizarea și utilizarea acestor hărți, elevii își dezvoltă metacogniția, adică abilitatea de a-și monitoriza și regla propriul proces de învățare. Hărțile conceptuale sprijină claritatea gândirii, facilitează retenția informațiilor și permit elevilor să conecteze noile cunoștințe cu experiențele și cunoștințele anterioare, consolidând astfel învățarea activă și reflexivă.

4.3.Tehnologii educaționale pentru învățare centrată

Tehnologiile digitale permit adaptarea, diversificarea și eficientizarea procesului educațional. Utilizarea acestora trebuie să fie instrumentală, nu decorativă, având ca scop:

- accesibilizarea conținuturilor,
- personalizarea învățării,

- oferirea de feedback rapid și automatizat,
- stimularea participării active.

Instrumente și platforme relevante:

- Google Classroom / Microsoft Teams – pentru organizarea și distribuirea sarcinilor individualizate;
- Kahoot, Quizizz, Mentimeter – pentru evaluare interactivă și autoreglare prin feedback instant;
- Edpuzzle, Nearpod – pentru învățare activă pe bază de video, cu întrebări integrate și urmărirea progresului;
- Learning Management Systems (LMS) – oferă posibilitatea de creare a unor parcursuri de învățare personalizate și adaptative.

Conform cercetărilor recente (OECD, 2020), utilizarea inteligentă a tehnologiei contribuie la creșterea implicării elevilor, a motivației și a autonomiei, atunci când este integrată pedagogic, nu doar tehnic.

4.4.Rolul profesorului în aplicarea mecanismelor și tehnologiilor

Profesorul este orchestratorul procesului de centrare, asigurând coerența, sensul și adecvarea instrumentelor la specificul fiecărui elev. Acesta:

- creează contexte autentice de învățare;
- adaptează metodele la nevoile individuale;
- oferă sprijin diferențiat și feedback personalizat;
- cultivă o relație empatică și deschisă cu elevii;
- utilizează tehnologia în scopuri formative, nu doar informative.

După cum afirmă Radu Popa, „profesorul modern este un designer de situații de învățare centrate pe elev, nu un simplu furnizor de cunoștințe”[13, p.85]. Mecanismele, tehnicile și tehnologiile de centrare în învățare transformă profund arhitectura procesului educațional. Prin ele, elevul devine actor activ, reflexiv și responsabil al propriei formări. Pentru a funcționa optim, aceste instrumente trebuie însă integrate coerent, în cadrul unui demers pedagogic conștient și orientat spre dezvoltarea autonomiei.

Transformările recente din educație pun accent tot mai mult pe repoziționarea elevului în centrul procesului de predare-învățare. Această reconfigurare are implicații semnificative asupra dezvoltării autonomiei elevului, considerată una dintre competențele esențiale ale secolului XXI. Într-o lume dinamică, în care adaptabilitatea, responsabilitatea și capacitatea de autoînvățare sunt esențiale, centrarea pe elev nu mai este doar o opțiune pedagogică, ci o necesitate.

5.1.Autonomia elevului – reper central al educației centrate pe elev

În paradigma educațională actuală, autonomia este definită ca „abilitatea elevului de a-și direcționa învățarea prin planificare, monitorizare și evaluare proprie, în scopul dezvoltării personale și academice” [8, p.73]. Această autonomie implică responsabilitate, inițiativă și capacitatea de a face alegeri în cadrul învățării. Centrul de greutate al educației se deplasează astfel de la „ceea ce predă profesorul” la „ce și cum învață elevul” [4]. Elevul devine un agent activ, iar cadrul didactic, un facilitator al procesului educațional. După cum afirmă Philippe Perrenoud, „nu se poate vorbi despre un demers centrat pe elev fără o încurajare a autonomiei lui, fără un climat în care acesta poate să decidă, să greșească și să reflecteze” [11, p.95].

5.2.Efecte cognitive și metacognitive

Un efect direct al învățării centrate pe elev este stimularea gândirii critice și dezvoltarea metacogniției. Elevii devin conștienți de propriile procese mentale și învață să-și regleze strategiile de învățare. „Capacitatea de autoreglare este o condiție a învățării autentice și a autonomiei. Elevii trebuie ajutați să învețe cum să învețe” [16]. Activitățile de autoevaluare, portofoliile de învățare, învățarea prin descoperire sau prin proiect sunt instrumente pedagogice care susțin dezvoltarea acestor abilități.

a. Efecte afective și motivaționale

Într-un mediu în care elevul este valorizat, ascultat și implicat, motivația intrinsecă crește. Studiile arată că „atunci când elevii simt că dețin control asupra propriei învățări, nivelul de implicare și satisfacție este semnificativ mai mare” [3]. Această motivație se traduce prin creșterea angajamentului față de sarcinile școlare, perseverență și dorința de autoîmbunătățire. Elevul autonom este motivat din interior, nu doar de recompense sau sancțiuni externe.

b. Efecte comportamentale și sociale

Autonomia susținută prin metode centrate pe elev favorizează apariția unor comportamente responsabile. Elevii învață să colaboreze, să-și exprime opiniile și să accepte diferențele. După cum arată John Dewey, „democrația în educație începe atunci când elevii sunt tratați ca parteneri reali ai actului didactic” [6, p. 89]. De asemenea, învățarea colaborativă și activitățile de grup stimulează dezvoltarea competențelor sociale, esențiale pentru o autonomie funcțională într-un context comunitar.

c. Limite și provocări

Centrul de greutate deplasat spre elev poate ridica și provocări. Unii elevi nu sunt pregătiți să își asume responsabilitatea pentru propria învățare, mai ales dacă vin din contexte educaționale tradiționale, unde rolul profesorului era autoritar. În plus, „autonomia nu este dată, ci construită treptat, printr-un proces pedagogic susținut și diferențiat” [7, p. 112]. Aici intervine rolul esențial al profesorului ca ghid și mentor, care echilibrează libertatea cu structura, oferind sprijin progresiv și adaptat.

Centrând educația pe elev, nu doar că adaptăm procesul de învățare la nevoile și potențialul fiecărui individ, ci și cultivăm autonomia, ca trăsătură fundamentală a învățării de durată. Elevii autonomi sunt mai motivați, mai implicați, mai responsabili și mai pregătiți să facă față provocărilor unei lumi în continuă schimbare. Educația centrată pe elev nu este un ideal, ci o direcție concretă spre o școală a viitorului.

Concluzii

- Centralitatea elevului în procesul educațional impune o reconfigurare continuă a relației dintre profesor și elev, bazată pe parteneriat și implicare activă.
- Formarea autonomiei necesită o redimensionare a practicilor didactice, care să susțină responsabilitatea, autoevaluarea și capacitatea elevului de a lua decizii.
- Finalitățile învățării trebuie permanent reevaluate, pentru a răspunde cerințelor societății contemporane și nevoilor individuale ale elevilor.
- Echilibrul între sprijin și libertate constituie o condiție esențială în dezvoltarea autonomiei, evitând atât dependența excesivă de profesor, cât și riscul de dezorientare al elevului.
- Autonomia elevului nu este doar un ideal pedagogic, ci o *necesitate practică, indispensabilă pentru construirea unei generații capabile să învețe pe tot parcursul vieții, să decidă și să acționeze cu discernământ.

TRANS-CURRICULAR PEDAGOGY AND THE USE OF DIGITAL EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE TEACHING FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Veronica Ion
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă ", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: In recent years, vocational education in Romania has undergone a profound process of curricular and structural reconfiguration, driven by the need to align education with the dynamic demands of the labor market and the ongoing socio-technological transformations. In this context, the study of foreign languages—particularly English—has gained increasing importance for the development of professional competences and for the integration of future graduates into a globalized economic environment.*

Although the role of English in vocational training is acknowledged in European and national strategic documents, educational practice in vocational schools often reveals a significant gap between students' theoretical knowledge of the language and its applicability in real work situations. Students in the field of automotive mechanics, for example, may reproduce grammatical structures or basic vocabulary, yet they encounter difficulties when using English in interactive, profession-specific contexts such as interpreting technical sheets, understanding repair manuals, or communicating within multicultural teams.

In an era shaped by digitalization and globalization, the training of students in vocational education must go beyond the boundaries of a strictly disciplinary curriculum and promote connections between linguistic, technological, and cultural domains. This article aims to highlight how trans-curricular pedagogy, supported by digital educational resources, can enhance the teaching and learning of English in vocational education, providing both a theoretical and practical framework for modernizing educational practices and for developing students' integrated competences.

În contextul actual al educației europene, caracterizat de transformări rapide în domeniul tehnologic, economic și cultural, învățământul profesional capătă o importanță strategică în formarea resursei umane capabile să răspundă cerințelor tot mai complexe ale pieței muncii. În acest cadru, limba engleză nu mai este percepută doar ca o disciplină de studiu, ci ca o competență profesională transversală, indispensabilă pentru mobilitatea, adaptabilitatea și integrarea tinerilor într-un mediu economic globalizat.

Deși rolul limbii engleze este consacrat în documentele curriculare și în politicile educaționale naționale și europene, realitatea școlilor profesionale din România evidențiază o serie de provocări specifice: nivel scăzut al motivației elevilor, interes limitat pentru activitățile teoretice, absența manualelor adaptate profilului profesional și dificultăți în aplicarea practică a competențelor lingvistice. Astfel, se impune o redefinire a modului de predare-învățare a limbii engleze în acest tip de învățământ, prin corelarea conținuturilor lingvistice cu particularitățile domeniilor de formare, cum ar fi mecanica auto, electricitatea, turismul sau construcțiile.

În plus, integrarea resurselor educaționale deschise (RED) și a tehnologiilor educaționale moderne poate sprijini procesul de învățare activă, oferind elevilor contexte autentice de comunicare și aplicații concrete ale limbii engleze în domeniul profesional. Astfel, utilizarea mediilor digitale, a platformelor interactive și a resurselor multimedia transformă ora de engleză dintr-un exercițiu formal într-un proces experiențial și motivațional.

Totodată, rolul profesorului de limba engleză în școlile profesionale devine unul complex, depășind simpla transmitere a cunoștințelor lingvistice. Acesta acționează ca mediator între limbaj și practică, între cultura comunicării și universul tehnologic, între teoria limbii și aplicațiile sale profesionale. Prin abordări interdisciplinare și transcurriculare, profesorul creează punți între domenii, transformând învățarea limbii engleze într-un proces util, contextualizat și ancorat în nevoile reale ale elevilor.

Articolul de față își propune să evidențieze statutul și rolul limbii engleze în școlile profesionale, punând accent pe importanța dezvoltării competențelor de comunicare aplicate, a adaptării curriculare și a utilizării instrumentelor digitale moderne. Totodată, în acest articol vom vorbi și despre lucrarea de cercetare „Eficientizarea schimbării paradigmei de predare-învățare a limbii engleze în învățământul professional" care aduce în discuție dimensiunea transcurriculară a predării limbilor străine, în contextul formării profesionale, ca soluție pentru creșterea relevanței educației și pentru susținerea unei învățări durabile și semnificative.

Astfel, cercetarea a avut ca obiectiv principal proiectarea și validarea unui model pedagogic inovator, bazat pe integrarea resurselor educaționale deschise (RED) și pe o abordare transcurriculară a conținuturilor. Acest demers a urmărit să transforme învățarea limbii engleze dintr-un exercițiu formal într-un proces funcțional, relevant pentru profilul profesional al elevilor.

Prin integrarea limbii engleze în activități applicate, din domeniul mecanic auto – precum studiul manualelor tehnice, simularea diagnosticelor auto sau redactarea instrucțiunilor de reparații, ne-am propus să venim în ajutorul cadrelor didactice din aria curriculară Limbă și comunicare cu un model pedagogic inovator, bazat pe integrarea resurselor educaționale descjise (RED) și pe o abordare transcurriculară a conținuturilor. Acest demers a urmărit să transforme învățarea limbii engleze dintr-un exercițiu formal într-un proces funcțional, relevant pentru profilul profesional al elevilor demonstrând că achizițiile lingvistice pot fi dezvoltate într-un mod contextualizat, contribuind concomitent la formarea competențelor digitale și profesionale. În același timp, utilizarea resurselor educaționale deschise (platforme interactive, hipertexte, aplicații de evaluare online) facilitează învățarea colaborativă și crește motivația elevilor prin conectarea conținuturilor lingvistice la domeniul lor de interes.

Însă, analiza sistemului educațional românesc relevă faptul că elevii înscriși în învățământul profesional se confruntă cu dificultăți semnificative în ceea ce privește competențele de comunicare în limba engleză, competențe indispensabile pentru participarea la mobilități europene, ex: proiecte Erasmus+ VET, pentru accesul la resurse internaționale de formare și, în general, pentru integrarea pe piața muncii. Deși programele școlare prevăd studierea limbii engleze ca disciplină obligatorie, acestea sunt adesea preluate, fără adaptare, din curricula învățământului liceal teoretic sau tehnologic, fără a reflecta specificul și nevoile concrete ale elevilor din școlile profesionale.

Această discrepanță a fost confirmată și prin cercetarea noastră realizată în cadrul tezei de doctorat, unde s-a constatat că majoritatea elevilor incluși în eșantion prezintă niveluri reduse de competență lingvistică, în special în ceea ce privește exprimarea orală și înțelegerea mesajului în contexte profesionale. Elevii demonstrează o motivație intrinsecă scăzută pentru învățarea limbii engleze, percepând disciplina ca pe un domeniu abstract, lipsit de relevanță pentru viitoarea lor meserie.

Astfel, necesitatea cercetării a fost fundamentată pe ideea creării unui *cadru pedagogic inovator, c*are să integreze limba engleză în activitățile specifice domeniului profesional — în cazul de față, mecanic auto — și să transforme procesul de învățare într-o experiență funcțională și semnificativă. Modelul propus în cadrul tezei s-a bazat pe conceptul de transcurricularitate, înțeleasă ca o modalitate de conectare a competențelor lingvistice cu cele profesionale, prin utilizarea resurselor educaționale deschise (RED), adaptate la profilul elevilor.

În mod concret, s-a urmărit integrarea conținuturilor de limbă engleză în sarcini practice, specifice domeniului mecanic auto, precum: citirea și interpretarea fișelor tehnice, redactarea de instrucțiuni de întreținere, simularea dialogurilor dintr-un service auto sau rezolvarea problemelor de diagnostic auto, folosind vocabularul de specialitate în limba engleză. Aceste activități au fost susținute prin platforme educaționale digitale (Wordwall, Quizizz, Magic School, Wand education, eXeLearning, Eduboom, http://mecanici21.ro) [7], care au permis personalizarea învățării și feedback-ul imediat.

Un alt argument pentru necesitatea acestei cercetări este lipsa resurselor educaționale adecvate învățământului profesional. Manualele existente sunt concepute pentru licee teoretice și nu conțin texte, exerciții sau situații de comunicare adaptate profilului profesional. Profesorii sunt nevoiți să creeze sau să adapteze constant materialele didactice, fapt care conduce la un grad ridicat de subiectivitate și la o lipsă de coerență metodologică la nivel național.

De asemenea, analiza contextului european (în special a documentelor cadru ale Comisiei Europene și UNESCO privind educația VET) evidențiază nevoia integrării competențelor lingvistice și digitale în formarea profesională, ca parte a competențelor cheie pentru învățarea pe tot parcursul vieții. În acest sens, proiectarea unor resurse digitale contextualizate și adaptate la domeniul de formare reprezintă nu doar o soluție inovatoare, ci și o aliniere la tendințele educaționale europene.

Prin urmare, cercetarea prezentată în teza de doctorat și promovată în articolul de față răspunde unei duble nevoi:

- nevoia de modernizare a procesului de predare-învățare a limbii engleze prin utilizarea mediilor digitale și a strategiilor transcurriculare;
- nevoia de corelare a educației lingvistice cu formarea profesională aplicată, în vederea dezvoltării competențelor de comunicare, a motivației și a angajabilității elevilor.

Astfel, contextul cercetării reflectă un moment de tranziție în pedagogia învățământului profesional, în care competențele tehnice nu mai pot fi disociate de cele lingvistice și digitale, iar profesorul devine un mediator între limbajul tehnologic și cel comunicativ, între teorie și practică, între cuvânt și mecanism.

Scopul general al cercetării a fost eficientizarea procesului de predare-învățare a limbii engleze în învățământul profesional tehnologic prin valorificarea potențialului oferit de resursele educaționale digitale și prin aplicarea unei abordări transcurriculare care să coreleze conținuturile lingvistice cu specificul domeniului mecanic auto. Cercetarea a urmărit să demonstreze că utilizarea mediilor digitale interactive și integrarea limbii engleze în activități cu relevanță practică pot contribui la dezvoltarea competențelor lingvistice, profesionale și digitale ale elevilor, crescând totodată motivația pentru învățare și gradul de implicare activă în actul educațional.

Prin urmare, considerăm că studiul s-a înscris în paradigma pedagogiilor moderne centrate pe elev, axate pe învățarea experiențială, colaborativă și contextualizată, în care profesorul are rolul de mediator între domenii – lingvistic, tehnologic și digital – facilitând transferul de competențe între acestea.

Designul cercetării: Cercetarea a fost concepută ca un experiment pedagogic de tip mixt (cantitativ-calitativ), desfășurat pe parcursul a doi ani școlari, având drept scop validarea modelului pedagogic inovator EngRED+ — un model integrator care valorifică resursele educaționale deschise (RED) și hipertextele în procesul de predare-învățare a limbii engleze la elevii din învățământul profesional.

Demersul științific s-a bazat pe principiile pedagogiei constructiviste, ale învățării contextuale și ale transcurricularității, urmărind crearea unui cadru de formare care să coreleze competențele lingvistice cu cele profesionale și digitale. În acest sens, cercetarea a combinat metode de investigare empirică (observație, chestionar, interviu, testare) cu metode de analiză statistică și interpretativă (analiză descriptivă, comparativă și inferențială).

Eșantionul a fost alcătuit din 236 de elevi înscriși în școli profesionale și licee tehnologice din județul Buzău, din domeniul mecanic auto. Grupurile participante au fost selectate astfel încât să nu existe diferențe semnificative de vârstă, mediu de proveniență sau nivel inițial de competență lingvistică.

Cercetarea a inclus:

- grupul experimental – elevii de la Liceul Tehnologic Vernești (LTV), unde s-a aplicat modelul EngRED+, bazat pe utilizarea resurselor educaționale digitale și a abordării transcurriculare;
- grupul de control – elevii de la Liceul Tehnologic "Sf. Muc.Sava" Berca (LTB) și Liceul Tehnologic "GrigoreC. Moisil" (LTM), unde s-au utilizat metode tradiționale de predare a limbii engleze, conform programei standard.

Distribuția eșantionului a fost echilibrată în funcție de criterii precum gen, vârstă (15–17 ani), nivel de competență inițială (A1–A2, conform CEFR) și performanțe școlare generale.

Cercetarea s-a desfășurat în trei etape principale: în prima etapă de constatare (inițială), evaluarea nivelului de competență lingvistică și digitală a elevilor prin teste inițiale (scris, ascultare, vorbire), chestionare de motivație și interviuri exploratorii aplicate profesorilor. În a doua etapă, cea formativă (intervențională), s-a aplicat modelul pedagogic EngRED+ în grupele experimentale, prin activități integrate (ateliere digitale, sarcini transcurriculare, lecții cu hipertexte modale și platforme interactive). Apoi, a treia etapă, cea finală (de evaluare și validare) în care a avut loc testarea finală a competențelor, compararea rezultatelor între grupul experimental și cel de control, analiza statistică a progresului și interpretarea calitativă a feedbackului elevilor și profesorilor.

Analiza datelor a fost realizată cu ajutorul metodelor statistice și descriptive, utilizând programe de prelucrare precum SPSS și Excel. Au fost calculate indicatori de progres (diferența mediei grupurilor experimental/control), corelații între variabile (nivel de competență lingvistică – motivație – participare activă) și variații procentuale ale performanței. De asemenea, analiza calitativă a răspunsurilor deschise și a observațiilor din teren a permis identificarea schimbărilor de atitudine și a percepției elevilor asupra relevanței învățării limbii engleze prin conținuturi profesionale. Rezultatele au evidențiat o creștere semnificativă a performanței elevilor din grupul experimental în toate cele patru competențe lingvistice testate, dar și o îmbunătățire a competențelor digitale și a atitudinii față de învățare.

Analiza generală a progresului elevilor. Compararea rezultatelor obținute de elevii din grupul experimental și cei din grupul de control la testele inițiale și finale a demonstrat o creștere semnificativă a performanțelor lingvistice în rândul elevilor care au participat la activitățile bazate pe modelul pedagogic EngRED+. Progresul s-a manifestat în mod particular la competențele listening și speaking, considerate de obicei cele mai deficitare la elevii din învățământul profesional. Mai exact, elevii din grupul experimental au demonstrat:

- o înțelegere mai rapidă și mai precisă a textelor audio (prin exerciții de ascultare bazate pe materiale video autentice: instrucțiuni de service, demonstrații tehnice, ghiduri vocaționale);
- o capacitate sporită de exprimare orală, în special în contexte de comunicare profesională simulate („customer–mechanic dialogue", „explaining a repair procedure");
- o mai bună utilizare a vocabularului tehnic în activitățile de scriere și prezentare;
- și o receptare mai activă a feedbackului prin intermediul platformelor digitale

Un aspect major observat în etapa formativă a fost creșterea motivației pentru învățarea limbii engleze în rândul elevilor din grupul experimental. Dacă, la începutul cercetării, majoritatea elevilor declarau că percep limba engleză ca pe o disciplină „abstractă" sau „neutilă meseriei lor", după aplicarea modelului EngRED+, proporția celor care consideră engleza „utilă pentru viitorul profesional" a crescut de la 28% la 79%. Această schimbare de atitudine s-a datorat, în principal, faptului că învățarea limbii engleze a fost contextualizată: elevii au văzut imediat relevanța cunoștințelor lingvistice în sarcini aplicate — diagnosticarea unei defecțiuni, interpretarea unei fișe tehnice, realizarea unei prezentări în format digital a unui proces mecanic.

Cercetarea a arătat că utilizarea sistematică a resurselor educaționale deschise (RED) a avut un efect benefic nu doar asupra competențelor lingvistice, ci și asupra competențelor digitale și profesionale. Elevii au învățat să navigheze autonom pe platforme educaționale, să creeze fișiere digitale (fișe de lucru, mini-proiecte, prezentări video), să utilizeze limbajul tehnic în contexte informatice (navigare în meniuri, citirea instrucțiunilor digitale).

Mai mult, activitățile realizate cu ajutorul hipertextelor - materiale educaționale care combină text, imagine, sunet și interactivitate - au permis formarea unei gândiri integrative, în care elevul face conexiuni între conceptele tehnice și cele lingvistice. Astfel, procesul de învățare a devenit multidimensional: cognitiv, practic și reflexiv.

Prin analiza produselor digitale create de elevi (fișe în eXeLearning, miniproiecte video, prezentări despre piese și procese mecanice), s-a observat o îmbunătățire considerabilă a preciziei terminologice și a autonomiei de lucru. Elevii nu doar că au utilizat corect terminologia specifică, ci au demonstrat și capacitatea de a o aplica în contexte noi, ceea ce confirmă transferul cognitiv și profesional urmărit de cercetare.

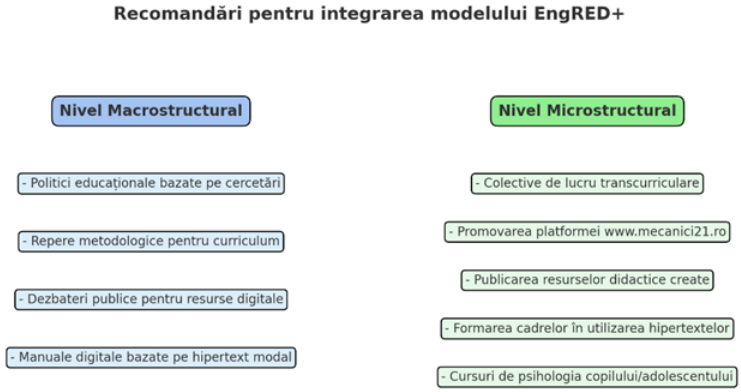
Interviurile semistructurate cu profesorii implicați în experiment au confirmat eficiența și aplicabilitatea practică a modelului propus. Cadrele didactice au subliniat că introducerea RED-urilor și a abordării transcurriculare a schimbat dinamica orelor de engleză, generând o relație mai echilibrată între teorie și practică și o creștere a interesului elevilor pentru comunicare.

Profesorii au remarcat, de asemenea, că integrarea limbii engleze în conținuturi profesionale a condus la o autenticitate a procesului de învățare: elevii au perceput limba ca pe un instrument util meseriei, și nu ca pe o cerință formală a programei. Acest fapt a contribuit la consolidarea motivației instrumentale, esențială în procesul de formare profesională.

Rezultatele obținute în urma implementării modelului pedagogic EngRED+ confirmă faptul că utilizarea resurselor educaționale digitale accesibile – structurate sub forma hipertextelor modale și disponibile pe platforme interactive – favorizează nu doar învățarea contextualizată, ci și construirea unor relații semnificative între cunoștințele generale și cele de specialitate.

Abordarea transcurriculară aplicată în cadrul experimentului pedagogic a condus la un progres vizibil în dezvoltarea atitudinilor proactive și a încrederii de sine a elevilor. Elevii implicați în experiment au demonstrat o capacitate sporită de a accesa, interpreta și utiliza informațiile digitale în contexte reale, ceea ce reflectă nu doar progresul în plan cognitiv, ci și o maturizare la nivel metacognitiv și atitudinal. Astfel, dezvoltarea competențelor lingvistice prin intermediul tehnologiei educaționale nu a fost doar un mijloc de optimizare a procesului instructiv-educativ, ci și un instrument eficient de pregătire pentru integrarea activă în societate și pe piața muncii.

Se pot formula şi unele recomandări pentru cadrele didactice, factorii de decizie și instituțiile de formare. Prin urmare, adaptarea programelor școlare pentru disciplina Limba engleză la specificul învățământului profesional, prin introducerea de conținuturi aplicate domeniului de calificare este o necesitate în învăţământul professional. Formarea continuă a profesorilor în domeniul pedagogiei digitale și al designului transcurricular, pentru a facilita integrarea limbii engleze în activități interdisciplinare și practiceduce la o relaxare privind anxietatea unor cadre didactice ancorate în trecut. O promovare a colaborării între profesorii de limbi străine și cei de discipline tehnice, în vederea realizării de proiecte comune, în care elevii să aplice simultan competențele lingvistice și tehnice, poate crea un cadru inovativ și un ambient placut pentru cadrele didactice și elevi.



Recomandări pentru integrarea modelului EngRED+
Nivel Macrostructural
- Politici educaționale bazate pe cercetări
- Repere metodologice pentru curriculum
- Dezbateri publice pentru resurse digitale
- Manuale digitale bazate pe hipertext modal Nivel Microstructural
- Colective de lucru transcurriculare
- Promovarea platformei www.mecanici21.ro
- Publicarea resurselor didactice create
- Formarea cadrelor în utilizarea hipertextelor
- Cursuri de psihologia copilului/adolescentului

Într-o lume educațională aflată sub semnul globalizării și al inovației tehnologice, predarea limbii engleze în școlile profesionale nu mai poate fi abordată ca o simplă componentă teoretică a curriculumului, ci trebuie înțeleasă ca un proces formativ integrator, care contribuie la dezvoltarea competențelor profesionale, digitale și interculturale ale elevilor. Adaptarea metodelor de predare la specificul învățământului profesional, corelarea conținuturilor lingvistice cu activitățile practice și valorificarea resurselor educaționale digitale devin premise fundamentale pentru crearea unui act didactic relevant, motivant și eficient.

Astfel, limba engleză se transformă dintr-un obiect de studiu într-un instrument al formării profesionale și al reușitei socio-economice, oferind elevilor oportunitatea de a comunica, de a învăța și de a lucra într-un spațiu educațional și profesional interconectat la nivel global.

d. It provides electricity to start the engine.
e. It makes the spark to start the combustion.
f. It keeps the engine cool.
g. It removes dirt from the oil.
h. It changes the piston’s movement into rotation.

2. Grammar Practice (There is / There are + Prepositions of Place)
Look at the picture of an engine (teacher provides or imagine it). Complete the sentences:
1. _____ a battery next to the engine block.
2. _____ spark plugs on top of the cylinder head.
3. _____ a radiator in front of the engine.
4. _____ many pistons inside the engine block.
5. _____ an oil filter under the intake manifold.

6. _____ fuel injectors above the pistons.
7. _____ a crankshaft at the bottom of the engine block.

3. Speaking Task

Work in pairs. Look at the diagram of a car engine.

- Student A asks: "Where is the battery?"
- Student B answers: "The battery is next to the radiator. There is also a drive belt in front of it."

Then change roles and continue with other parts.

4. Writing Task

Write 5 sentences about the parts of the engine using There is/There are and prepositions.

Example: -There are pistons inside the engine block.
- There is a radiator in front of the car engine.

DEVELOPING LEARNER AUTONOMY IN PRIMARY EDUCATION: STRATEGIES AND CLASSROOM PRACTICES

Mirela Paraschiva
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă ", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: Learner autonomy in primary education is increasingly recognized as a key component of effective and sustainable learning. The development of autonomy at an early age lays the foundation for critical thinking, self-regulation, and long-term academic engagement. The article examines a range of strategies that enable young learners to take greater responsibility for their own learning, including goal-setting routines, choice-based activities, reflective practices, and collaborative learning structures. Classroom observations and relevant research highlight the importance of an autonomy-supportive climate in which teachers provide guidance without limiting pupils' initiative. Practical examples demonstrate how routines, feedback, and scaffolded tasks can be adapted to children's developmental levels, gradually strengthening independence and self-directed behavior. The findings underscore the need for intentional instructional design and consistent teacher support to cultivate autonomy as an integral part of primary education.

Keywords: Learner Autonomy; Primary Education; Self-Regulated Learning; Autonomy-Supportive Teaching; Classroom Strategies

Learner autonomy has become a core concept in contemporary educational research, reflecting a broader shift toward student-centred pedagogies. Although traditionally associated with adult or adolescent learners, autonomy is increasingly recognized as fundamental in primary education, where early experiences of self-direction lay the groundwork for long-term academic engagement and personal development. Understanding how autonomy emerges requires examining the cognitive and socio-emotional characteristics of young learners, the historical evolution of the concept, and the pedagogical frameworks that support its development.

The term learner autonomy was introduced prominently by Henri Holec, who described it as the learner's capacity to take charge of their own learning (Holec, 1981). In his foundational report, Holec conceptualized autonomy as both an ability and a responsibility, an idea widely cited in modern pedagogy.

Further theoretical grounding emerged from constructivism, particularly from Jean Piaget, who emphasized that children build knowledge through active, self-initiated interaction with the environment. According to Piaget (1952), children in early school years are transitioning from preoperational to concrete-operational thought, a stage that supports increased independence and logical reasoning.

Lev Vygotsky's sociocultural theory also influenced the concept, stressing that autonomy grows as children internalize social interactions. The idea of the Zone of Proximal Development suggests that learners gradually assume control as the teacher adjusts support. Vygotsky (1978) claimed that effective learning happens when assistance enables the child to accomplish tasks they could not complete alone.

More recently, self-determination theory (SDT) developed by Deci and Ryan highlighted autonomy as one of three basic psychological needs—alongside competence and relatedness—that foster intrinsic motivation (Deci & Ryan, 2000).

Paraphrased formulations commonly describe autonomy as "the learner's ability to set goals, make choices, monitor progress, and reflect on learning" (Little, 1991, p. 15)).

In the context of primary education, autonomy must be reframed developmentally: young learners require structured opportunities for guided choice, self-regulation, and reflection, adapted to their evolving capacities.

Children in early primary grades (ages 6–10) typically operate within Piaget's concrete operational stage, characterized by improved logical thinking, classification, sequencing, and perspective-taking. These abilities make it increasingly possible to:

- follow multi-step instructions
- organize simple tasks
- understand cause–effect relationships
- reflect on actions with teacher support

However, their metacognitive capacities are still emerging. Research shows that young children benefit from explicit modelling of planning, monitoring, and self-evaluation strategies (Flavell, 1979).

Primary school pupils are developing emotional regulation, empathy, and social awareness. Autonomy-supportive environments nurture:

- confidence through small, successful tasks
- responsibility via classroom roles
- collaboration skills
- resilience when confronted with challenges

Bandura's social learning theory underscores the importance of self-efficacy: children are more willing to act autonomously when they believe they can succeed (Bandura, 1997).

Young learners often respond positively to routines, clear expectations, predictable feedback, and tasks that integrate play, exploration, and creativity. These traits influence how autonomy should be introduced—gradually, consistently, and through meaningful activities.

Developing learner autonomy in primary education requires a clear understanding of how young children learn, reason, and interact with their environment. At this age, autonomy does not mean independence in the adult sense, but rather guided independence, where pupils participate actively in learning decisions while relying on structured support. Scholars such as Little (1991) emphasize—paraphrase—that autonomy is a gradual process shaped by the learning environment rather than an innate trait. In the primary years, this means building frameworks that allow children to experience ownership without being overwhelmed by excessively demanding tasks. The aim is not to remove the teacher's role, but to reshape it so that pupils learn to take increasing responsibility for their learning behaviours.

A central principle of autonomy in early schooling is choice, but choice must be purposeful, limited, and developmentally appropriate. Offering too many options can lead to cognitive overload, especially for younger pupils whose executive functions are still developing. Research informed by self-determination theory (Deci & Ryan, 2000) shows that meaningful choices—such as selecting reading materials, choosing between task formats, or deciding the order in which to complete activities—can strengthen intrinsic motivation. In the classroom, these choices help children understand that learning is not something done to them but something they are actively involved in. This shift in attitude fosters agency, persistence, and engagement.

Another important principle is scaffolding. Primary learners require explicit modelling of how to set goals, monitor progress, and evaluate outcomes, as their metacognitive abilities are still emerging. According to Vygotsky (1978), children progress when teachers provide structured support within the learner's Zone of Proximal Development. In practice, this means teachers break down tasks into manageable steps, provide visual aids or prompts, and gradually withdraw assistance as pupils gain competence. Scaffolding in autonomy-oriented classrooms often includes the use of checklists, learning journals, reflection prompts, and guided discussions that help children understand and internalize learning strategies. Thus, autonomy becomes possible because pupils learn how to manage their learning, not merely because they are told to do so.

In autonomy-supportive classrooms, the emotional climate plays a critical role. Young learners thrive when they feel respected, safe, and encouraged, and these conditions are essential for risk-taking and decision-making. A climate of psychological safety allows pupils to try new strategies, ask questions, and accept mistakes as part of learning. Teachers who adopt a calm, encouraging tone and validate pupils' perspectives contribute significantly to children's confidence. Research grounded in social learning theory (Bandura, 1997) suggests that self-efficacy grows when pupils experience small successes, observe peers working independently, and receive constructive feedback. An emotionally supportive environment therefore serves as an anchor for autonomy, giving children the courage to explore learning pathways more independently.

Finally, implementing autonomy in primary education has direct implications for classroom organization, curriculum design, and teacher behavior. Classrooms must be arranged so that materials are accessible, instructions are visible, and routines are predictable—conditions that allow pupils to act without constant teacher intervention. The curriculum should include tasks open to variation, exploration, and decision-making, such as project work, learning stations, and inquiry-based activities. Moreover, teachers must shift from being the sole source of knowledge to acting as facilitators who guide, question, prompt, and encourage reflection. This shift requires professional awareness and training: teachers must learn how to balance structure with freedom, how to provide support without controlling, and how to observe pupils' behaviours to adjust guidance levels appropriately. When these elements come together, autonomy becomes an integral, realistic part of primary education rather than an abstract ideal.

Developing autonomy in primary education depends on implementing instructional strategies that encourage pupils to take an active and reflective role in their learning. One foundational method is the deliberate integration of goal-setting and planning routines. Young learners benefit from simple, visual, and structured tools that help them articulate intentions, such as "learning ladders," weekly goal charts, and "I can…" statements. These tools help pupils understand what they are working toward and give them a sense of ownership over the learning process. Paraphrasing Flavell (1979), planning strengthens emerging metacognitive abilities by helping children become aware of their cognitive processes in a guided manner. When teachers model how to set specific, achievable goals and revisit them with students, goal setting becomes a developmental scaffold rather than a cognitive burden.

Another powerful strategy is the incorporation of purposeful choices, which promote a sense of agency while remaining developmentally appropriate. Research influenced by self-determination theory (Deci & Ryan, 2000) suggests that giving learners choices enhances motivation, engagement, and persistence. In the primary classroom, choices must be carefully curated to avoid overwhelming young learners. For example, a teacher might offer three possible writing prompts, two formats for demonstrating understanding (drawing or writing), or the option to complete tasks in a preferred sequence. These decisions are meaningful to children because they allow them to express preferences and take responsibility for outcomes. The goal is not unrestricted freedom but structured opportunities for decision-making that gradually build autonomy.

Learning centers and activity stations represent another effective method, as they naturally embed responsibility, organization, and independence into the learning environment. When pupils rotate through literacy, numeracy, science, or creative stations, they practice following instructions, managing materials, and collaborating with peers. Learning stations also support differentiated instruction, allowing children to progress at their own pace or explore varied tasks tailored to multiple learning styles. From a Vygotskian perspective (1978, paraphrase), stations provide a social context in which children both receive and provide support, internalizing collaborative and self-directed learning behaviours. These setups transform the classroom from a teacher-centred space into a dynamic environment where autonomy emerges organically.

Developing autonomy also requires systematic attention to metacognitive skills, even in the early years. Primary pupils can learn to reflect on their learning through guided tools such as traffic-light self-assessments, smiley-face reflection scales, "Two Stars and a Wish" feedback, or simple learning journals that include drawings and short sentences. By simplifying reflective language, teachers help young learners understand concepts such as effort, progress, and strategy use. According to research on metacognition (Flavell, 1979), children can develop awareness of their thinking earlier than once believed, provided that adult's model and scaffold reflective practices. Over time, these tools support the transition from teacher-led reflection to student-initiated evaluation.

Another set of autonomy-enhancing practices involves collaborative learning structures, which leverage the social nature of primary-aged children. Working in pairs or small groups encourages pupils to negotiate roles, share resources, and explain ideas to one another—behaviours that require responsibility and self-regulation. According to Bandura's principles of social learning (1997, paraphrase), peer interactions offer powerful opportunities for observational learning, enabling children to internalize strategies modelled by classmates. Furthermore, teachers can strengthen autonomy by assigning rotating classroom responsibilities, such as "materials manager," "group leader," or "feedback captain," which help children practice leadership, initiative, and shared decision-making. Collaborative work thus becomes both a social and cognitive tool for building autonomy.

Finally, modern autonomy-supportive classrooms increasingly use digital and physical tools that enable learners to explore content independently. Child-friendly apps, interactive quizzes, digital portfolios, and learning platforms allow pupils to progress at their own speed while receiving immediate feedback. When technology is used purposefully, it supports differentiation, encourages experimentation, and builds confidence in self-paced learning. Similarly, physical tools—such as task cards, manipulatives, anchor charts, and inquiry kits give learners concrete opportunities to make decisions, test hypotheses, and self-correct. However, successful integration depends on the teacher's ability to model responsible use, provide clear expectations, and gradually release responsibility. In this sense, technology and materials act as extensions of the autonomy-supportive environment the teacher intentionally cultivates.

Implementing learner autonomy in primary education is a complex pedagogical undertaking, primarily because young learners' developmental characteristics impose natural limitations on self-regulation. Although children aged 6–10 can make simple choices and participating in structured planning, their executive functions—attention control, inhibition, and working memory—are still developing. This means that autonomy must be introduced gradually, through well-defined routines and carefully scaffolded tasks. Teachers often find that pupils require consistent reminders to stay focused, follow instructions, or manage materials, which can make autonomous learning feel time-consuming and difficult to sustain. According to Piaget's developmental framework (1952, paraphrase), children in the concrete operational stage benefit most from tasks that are tangible, routine-based, and directly connected to observable outcomes—conditions that must be met for autonomy to flourish.

Another challenge is related to uneven levels of readiness among pupils, both in terms of cognitive development and socio-emotional maturity. Primary classrooms often include children with diverse needs, temperaments, and learning profiles. Some pupils eagerly embrace responsibility, while others may feel insecure or easily frustrated when given choices. Socio-emotional development plays a decisive role here: children who struggle with emotional regulation or self-confidence may avoid tasks that require independent thinking. Bandura (1997) explains that self-efficacy is a prerequisite for autonomous behavior; children who doubt their abilities are less likely to take initiative or persevere in the face of difficulty. Teachers therefore face the challenge of designing autonomy-supportive environments that are adaptable enough to meet every learner where they are.

A further complication arises from the structure of curriculum and assessment systems, which in many countries emphasize standardization, measurable outcomes, and teacher-directed instruction. These systems often leave limited time for exploratory activities, project-based learning, or individualized goal-setting—practices that are essential for cultivating autonomy. Teachers may feel pressure to prioritize content coverage over autonomy-oriented activities, especially in contexts where standardized testing plays a central role. Little (1991) highlights—paraphrase—that autonomy requires space for learner decision-making, reflection, and experimentation, yet these elements can be constrained by rigid curriculum frameworks. As a consequence, autonomy-supportive practices may appear secondary rather than integral, unless educational policies explicitly encourage them.

Teachers also encounter practical classroom management challenges when implementing autonomy. Young learners moving freely between stations, making choices, or collaborating in groups may generate noise, movement, and unpredictability. Without strong routines and clear expectations, autonomy-based activities can quickly become chaotic. Effective autonomy therefore depends on classroom organization—accessible materials, posted instructions, predictable transitions, and well-defined behavioural norms. Reeve (2006) notes that autonomy-supportive environments require teachers to maintain structure while minimizing control. Achieving this balance demands significant skill: teachers must guide without dominating, support without micromanaging, and correct misbehaviour without undermining pupils' sense of agency.

Another consideration relates to teacher beliefs and professional preparedness. Some teachers may be sceptical of autonomy, believing that young learners lack the maturity to manage their own learning or that teacher-directed methods are more efficient. Additionally, many teacher education programs offer limited training on autonomy-supportive pedagogy, focusing instead on classroom management, content instruction, and assessment. As a result, teachers may feel unsure about how to implement strategies such as goal-setting routines, metacognitive reflection, or scaffolded decision-making. Deci and Ryan (2000) argue that teachers need to adopt an autonomy-supportive mindset to create classrooms that satisfy learners' basic psychological needs. Professional development, mentorship, and collaborative planning are therefore essential for building teacher confidence and competence in this area.

Finally, family and cultural expectations can influence how autonomy is perceived and enacted. Some families highly value independence and encourage children to take responsibility at home, while others may prioritize obedience, adult authority, or academic achievement over self-directed exploration. These cultural differences affect children's readiness to engage autonomously at school and shape their attitudes toward decision-making and problem-solving. Teachers must therefore navigate a complex interplay between school values, family expectations, and cultural norms. Successful autonomy-supportive environments often include communication with families—explaining why autonomy matters, sharing examples of classroom practices, and encouraging parents to foster independence at home. When the school and home environments align, children experience autonomy as a consistent developmental pathway rather than a disconnected school requirement.

Developing learner autonomy in primary education is both a pedagogical necessity and a long-term investment in children's academic and personal growth. The early school years represent a critical developmental window during which learners form foundational habits related to self-regulation, decision-making, and goal-oriented behavior. When autonomy-supportive practices are introduced at this stage, pupils gradually internalize the idea that learning is an active process in which they play a central role. This shift moves them away from passive compliance toward thoughtful engagement, curiosity, and ownership of their learning experiences. As Holec (1981) suggests, autonomy is not a fixed attribute, but a learned capacity developed over time through participation in meaningful educational contexts.

The findings explored throughout this article highlight that autonomy in primary education must be developmentally appropriate, taking into account the cognitive, socio-emotional, and behavioral characteristics of young learners. Primary school children are capable of making meaningful choices and participating in reflective processes, yet they require structure, modelling, and consistent guidance. Strategies such as goal-setting routines, purposeful choices, learning stations, collaborative activities, and metacognitive tools demonstrate that autonomy can be nurtured through carefully designed classroom practices. These methods not only enhance academic engagement but also contribute to broader competencies such as resilience, self-efficacy, and interpersonal skills, which are essential for lifelong learning.

At the same time, autonomy should not be romanticized as simply giving children freedom. It is a guided, scaffolded process that relies heavily on the teacher's pedagogical expertise and ability to balance structure with flexibility. The role of the teacher evolves from transmitter of knowledge to facilitator of learning—one who observes, prompts, questions, and supports without dominating. This shift requires deliberate professional development, reflective teaching practices, and a willingness to share control with pupils. Teachers must also be sensitive to individual differences in readiness, motivation, and socio-emotional development, adapting autonomy-supportive strategies to ensure that all learners can participate meaningfully.

However, the successful implementation of autonomy also depends on broader contextual factors such as curriculum constraints, assessment pressures, classroom management challenges, and cultural expectations. Rigid, standardized educational systems may restrict opportunities for choice and reflection, while diverse family beliefs about independence may shape pupils' attitudes toward autonomy in school. For autonomy to thrive, schools must establish coherent policies and support structures that encourage innovation, collaboration, and pedagogical flexibility. Building partnerships with families and fostering a supportive school culture can further reinforce the development of autonomous behaviors in young learners.

In conclusion, learner autonomy in primary education represents a dynamic interplay between developmental readiness, pedagogical design, and contextual influences. When thoughtfully implemented, autonomy-supportive practices not only enhance students' academic performance but also prepare them for the increasingly complex demands of modern education and society. Encouraging autonomy from the earliest years empowers children to become reflective thinkers, active learners, and responsible individuals. As educational research continues to evolve, the challenge lies in ensuring that autonomy remains at the forefront of pedagogical innovation, shaping primary classrooms that truly nurture the potential of every learner.

TAXONOMY OF TEACHING STAFF ACTIONS ORIENTED TOWARDS PERFORMANCE: CASE STUDY IN THE CONTEXT OF MODERN EDUCATIONAL MANAGEMENT

Diana-Gabriela Corfu
PhD Student, "Ion Creangă ", Pedagogical State University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: The paper addresses the issue of teaching performance from the perspective of a taxonomy of teachers' actions oriented toward professional excellence and educational efficiency. The study aims to highlight the role of intrinsic motivation, energizing competence, and praxeological management in shaping high-performing professional behavior. Conducted in the pre-university educational context, the research explored the correlations between professional motivation, reflective competence, and the frequency of performance-oriented pedagogical actions. The results revealed that educational performance is closely linked to the balance between internal motivation, perceived self-efficacy, and a collaborative organizational climate. Furthermore, teachers who demonstrate energizing competence and a reflective attitude tend to adopt innovative practices, contributing to the development of an educational culture based on continuous learning, collaboration, and shared leadership.

Keywords*: educational performance; motivation; energizing competence; teaching actions; educational leadership.*

Introducere

Performanța educațională reprezintă una dintre provocările esențiale ale sistemelor de învățământ contemporane, fiind asociată nu doar cu atingerea standardelor academice, ci și cu dezvoltarea competențelor profesionale, morale și relaționale ale actorilor implicați în procesul de învățare. În acest context, activitatea cadrului didactic capătă valențe tot mai complexe, depășind rolul tradițional de transmitere a informațiilor și orientându-se spre facilitarea învățării active, colaborative și reflexive.

În ultimele decenii, literatura de specialitate a adus în prim-plan ideea că performanța profesorului nu este un rezultat întâmplător, ci un produs al echilibrului dintre motivația intrinsecă, competența profesională și contextul organizațional [4; 5; 8]. Profesorul performant este acela care reușește să transforme cunoștințele teoretice în acțiuni educaționale eficiente, adaptate nevoilor elevilor și obiectivelor instituției școlare.

Abordarea performanței prin prisma taxonomiei acțiunilor didactice oferă un cadru conceptual și metodologic pentru înțelegerea modului în care comportamentele profesorului pot fi structurate, evaluate și optimizate. O astfel de taxonomie permite nu doar descrierea comportamentelor profesionale, ci și orientarea lor strategică spre dezvoltarea continuă și excelență.

Demersul de față are la bază convingerea că performanța educațională este o construcție multidimensională, în care se întâlnesc factori cognitivi, afectivi și organizaționali. Analiza acțiunilor cadrelor didactice dintr-o perspectivă praxiologică contribuie la înțelegerea modului în care motivația, competența energizantă și leadershipul educațional se influențează reciproc în cadrul școlii contemporane.

Studiul de caz urmărește, așadar, să evidențieze modul în care profesorii transformă intențiile pedagogice în acțiuni eficiente, cum își mobilizează resursele interne pentru atingerea performanței și în ce măsură climatul instituțional le facilitează sau le limitează potențialul profesional. Scopul principal este de a construi un model integrativ al performanței didactice, bazat pe taxonomia acțiunilor orientate spre motivație, reflecție și competență energizantă.

În acest sens, articolul propune o analiză aplicativă realizată în mediul preuniversitar, având ca obiectiv identificarea tipologiilor de acțiuni performante, evaluarea motivației profesionale și a competenței energizante, precum și explorarea modului în care managementul educațional modern sprijină aceste procese.

Fundamentul teoretic se sprijină pe triada conceptuală motivație – competență – performanță, considerată un nucleu epistemic al dezvoltării profesionale în educație.

Motivația reprezintă un construct psihopedagogic central în analiza comportamentului profesional al cadrului didactic. Conform teoriilor dezvoltate de McClelland [11], Atkinson și Weiner [15], motivația de performanță este determinată de interacțiunea dintre dorința de succes, teama de eșec și percepția autoeficacității. În acest sens, profesorul performant este caracterizat de o motivație intrinsecă ridicată, care nu depinde de recompense externe, ci de satisfacția derivată din procesul educațional și din impactul pozitiv asupra elevilor.

Deci și Ryan [6] definesc motivația intrinsecă drept acea formă de angajament care se manifestă atunci când activitatea este percepută ca interesantă și valoroasă în sine. În contextul educațional, această formă de motivație se concretizează prin dorința de inovare, asumarea responsabilității și implicarea constantă în activități de formare profesională. Profesorul motivat intrinsec este cel care caută sens în propria activitate, dezvoltând o atitudine reflexivă și o relație autentică cu elevii săi.

În același timp, literatura de specialitate accentuează rolul autoeficacității (Bandura [1]) ca determinant major al motivației performanței. Profesorii care cred în capacitatea lor de a influența rezultatele elevilor manifestă o implicare crescută, perseverență și flexibilitate în abordarea sarcinilor complexe.

Conceptul de competență energizantă, (Cojocaru [5]), aduce o perspectivă inovatoare asupra profesionalismului didactic. Această competență reprezintă o combinație dinamică între resurse cognitive (cunoștințe, abilități), afective (pasiune, empatie) și volitive (determinare, reziliență), care generează energie internă și acțiune eficientă.

Cadrele didactice care manifestă competență energizantă se caracterizează prin: capacitatea de anticipare și planificare strategică a activităților educaționale, flexibilitate în adaptarea metodelor la nevoile individuale ale elevilor, reflecție critică asupra propriei practice și deschidere spre autoînvățare și inovare pedagogică.

Această competență are un caracter transformator, fiind cea care convertește motivația în acțiune și acțiunea în performanță observabilă. Profesorul energizat profesional devine astfel un agent al schimbării, capabil să inspire, să mobilizeze și să susțină învățarea la nivel individual și organizațional [5; 14].

Dintr-o perspectivă praxiologică, performanța didactică nu poate fi redusă la simpla execuție a unor sarcini prescrise, ci presupune o gândire strategică și reflexivă asupra propriilor acțiuni [14; 7]. Fullan [7] și Hargreaves [8] consideră că profesorul performant este un profesionist reflexiv, care își asumă un rol activ în proiectarea, implementarea și evaluarea procesului educațional.

Praxiologia educațională analizează raportul dintre intenție, acțiune și rezultat. Din această perspectivă, activitatea didactică performantă se caracterizează prin: claritate în formularea scopurilor pedagogice, coerență între strategie și execuție, adaptabilitate la contexte și nevoi diverse și feedback constant și autoreglare continuă [12; 16].

Integrarea acțiunilor profesorului într-un sistem coerent de management al performanței contribuie la profesionalizarea carierei didactice și la crearea unei culturi instituționale bazate pe colaborare și învățare colectivă [7; 9].

Pornind de la lucrările lui Hattie [9] și Leithwood & Jantzi [10], se poate afirma că performanța educațională rezultă din interacțiunea complexă dintre factorii personali (motivație, competență, reflecție), contextuali (climat școlar, suport managerial) și acționali (strategii de predare, evaluare, leadership).

Astfel, taxonomia acțiunilor didactice propusă în acest studiu este structurată pe cinci dimensiuni principale:

1. Acțiuni motivaționale – stimularea interesului și implicării în procesul de învățare;
2. Acțiuni formative – proiectarea și implementarea strategiilor de predare active și reflexive;
3. Acțiuni evaluative – utilizarea evaluării formative ca instrument de reglare și progres;
4. Acțiuni de dezvoltare profesională – autoînvățare și formare continuă;
5. Acțiuni de leadership educațional – coordonare, mentorat și implicare comunitară.

Acest model taxonomic oferă un cadru operațional pentru analiza performanței profesorului contemporan și contribuie la consolidarea unei paradigme educaționale bazate pe motivație, competență și inovație.

Metode și materiale aplicate

Scopul general al studiului de caz este identificarea și analiza acțiunilor cadrelor didactice orientate spre performanță, prin corelarea dintre motivația profesională, competența energizantă și climatul organizațional din instituțiile de învățământ preuniversitar. Se pornește de la premisa că performanța educațională nu este o consecință întâmplătoare, ci rezultatul unor comportamente profesionale deliberate, susținute de o motivație intrinsecă solidă și de o cultură organizațională colaborativă.

În concordanță cu acest scop, au fost formulate următoarele obiective specifice:

1. Identificarea principalelor tipuri de acțiuni pedagogice realizate de cadrele didactice în activitatea curentă;
2. Evaluarea relației dintre motivația profesională și comportamentele orientate spre performanță;
3. Analiza nivelului competenței energizante și a modului de manifestare a acesteia în activitatea didactică;
4. Determinarea influenței contextului organizațional asupra implicării cadrelor didactice în activități de leadership educațional.

În baza fundamentării teoretice, au fost formulate următoarele ipoteze:

- I1: dacă profesorii au motivație intrinsecă ridicată, atunci aceștia manifestă comportamente inovative și reflexive;
- I2: dacă nivelul competenței energizante este ridicat, atunci frecvența acțiunilor orientate spre performanță va fi mai mare;
- I3: dacă climatul școlar este colaborativ și managementul educațional este sprijinitor, atunci implicarea profesorilor în activități de leadership educational va crește.

Aceste ipoteze derivă din modele teoretice consacrate privind motivația și performanța în educație [4; 5; 10; 17] și au fost validate prin corelarea datelor obținute din chestionare, interviuri și observații.

La studiu au participat 40 de cadre didactice din învățământul preuniversitar, selectate intenționat pentru a asigura o distribuție echilibrată în funcție de:

- nivelul de experiență profesională (debutanți, titulari, experți);
- aria curriculară (discipline umaniste, reale, artistice și tehnologice);
- mediul de activitate (urban și rural).

Această diversitate a permis o analiză nuanțată a manifestărilor comportamentale în contexte educaționale variate. Reprezentativitatea eșantionului se bazează pe criteriul diversității profesionale, nu pe cel statistic, dat fiind caracterul calitativ-praxiologic.

Am folosit metode cantitative și calitative, urmărind triangularea datelor pentru creșterea validității interpretărilor [2; 6]:

1. Chestionar de autoevaluare – destinat măsurării nivelului de motivație profesională, a percepției competenței energizante și a frecvenței acțiunilor performante. Itemii au fost construiți pe baza teoriilor lui Deci & Ryan [6], Cojocaru [5] și Hattie [9].
2. Interviu semistructurat – aplicat unui subeșantion de 12 cadre didactice, pentru aprofundarea dimensiunilor calitative ale performanței și explorarea experiențelor subiective legate de motivație și leadership educațional.
3. Fișă de observație directă – utilizată pentru a urmări manifestările comportamentale în situații de predare, evaluare și colaborare instituțională. Observațiile au fost efectuate în timpul orelor de curs și în activități extracurriculare.
4. Analiza documentelor instituționale – planuri de activitate, rapoarte de autoevaluare, portofolii profesionale, fișe de evaluare anuală, care au oferit indicii suplimentare privind performanța educațională și cultura organizațională.

Colectarea datelor s-a desfășurat pe parcursul unui interval de cursuri, cu respectarea principiilor etice de confidențialitate și consimțământ informat. Datele cantitative au fost prelucrate prin metode descriptive (frecvențe, procente, scoruri medii), iar cele calitative au fost analizate prin analiza tematică propusă de Braun & Clarke [3], care presupune codificarea, categorizarea și interpretarea modelelor recurente din răspunsurile participanților.

Triangularea rezultatelor obținute din chestionare, interviuri și observații a permis conturarea unei imagini complexe a performanței didactice, evidențiind corelațiile dintre dimensiunile motivaționale, competențiale și organizaționale.

Rezultate obținute și discuții

Nivelul motivației profesionale

Analiza datelor a evidențiat faptul că 78% dintre cadrele didactice manifestă o motivație predominant intrinsecă, determinată de plăcerea activității educative, dorința de autorealizare și satisfacția produsă de progresul elevilor. Doar 22% dintre respondenți au indicat o motivație extrinsecă dominantă, orientată spre recompense externe sau recunoaștere instituțională. Aceste rezultate confirmă teoriile autodeterminării formulate de Deci & Ryan [6], potrivit cărora motivația intrinsecă conduce la implicare autentică, creativitate și perseverență. Mai mult, analiza interviurilor a arătat că profesorii motivați intrinsec percep activitatea didactică drept un proces de autoîmplinire profesională. Un respondent afirma: „Nu caut recompense exterioare; satisfacția mea vine atunci când elevii devin curioși, întreabă și se bucură de învățare.” Acest tip de motivație susține comportamente proactive și o atitudine reflexivă, caracteristici specifice profesorilor performanți [7; 14].

Competența energizantă și autoeficacitatea

Rezultatele chestionarului de autoevaluare au arătat că 72% dintre participanți se percep ca având un nivel ridicat al competenței energizante, manifestată prin implicare activă în formare continuă, adaptabilitate metodologică și deschidere spre inovație. Participanții cu scoruri ridicate la această dimensiune s-au implicat constant în activități de mentorat, proiecte educaționale și dezvoltare profesională colaborativă, confirmând ipoteza a doua.

Conform teoriei autoeficacității lui Bandura [1], această percepție pozitivă a propriei competențe determină o implicare crescută și o gestionare eficientă a provocărilor. Profesorii cu competență energizantă ridicată au demonstrat, de asemenea, o capacitate superioară de a utiliza resurse digitale și metode participative (Kahoot, Mentimeter, Canva), elemente esențiale pentru crearea unui climat de învățare atractiv și interactiv [8; 13].

Tipologia acțiunilor didactice

Rezultatele observațiilor și ale chestionarului au permis clasificarea acțiunilor cadrelor didactice în cinci mari categorii, corespunzătoare taxonomiei propuse:

Tabelul 1. Clasificarea acțiunilor cadrelor didactice

Categoria de acțiuni	Frecvență (%)	Nivel de performanță	Exemple de manifestare
Motivaționale	84	Ridicat	Feedback pozitiv, valorizarea efortului, relație de încredere cu elevii
Formative	77	Ridicat	Utilizarea metodelor interactive, interdisciplinare, bazate pe proiecte
Evaluative	70	Mediu-înalt	Aplicarea evaluării formative, autoevaluare și portofolii reflexive
Dezvoltare profesională	66	Mediu	Participare la formări, activități de mentorat, cercuri pedagogice
Leadership educațional	55	Variabil	Implicare în proiecte școlare, coordonare, activități de consiliere colegială

Aceste date confirmă ipotezele, demonstrând că acțiunile motivaționale și formative sunt cele mai frecvent întâlnite în practica profesorilor, în timp ce leadershipul educațional depinde în mare măsură de cultura colaborativă a instituției [6; 9].

Climatul organizațional și performanța colectivă

Rezultatele calitative relevă importanța unui climat instituțional bazat pe încredere, autonomie și sprijin managerial. Profesorii au afirmat că se simt mai motivați și implicați atunci când conducerea școlii valorizează inițiativa individuală și încurajează colaborarea. Această perspectivă confirmă modelele de leadership transformațional descrise de Leithwood & Jantzi [10], potrivit cărora performanța colectivă crește în condițiile în care profesorii sunt tratați ca parteneri în procesul de decizie și inovație.

De asemenea, s-a observat că instituțiile care favorizează învățarea colaborativă și schimbul de bune practici între colegi manifestă o cultură organizațională orientată spre progres. În aceste contexte, cadrele didactice raportează un nivel mai înalt de satisfacție profesională și motivație internă [7; 15].

Coroborarea datelor obținute indică o relație directă între motivația intrinsecă, competența energizantă și performanța observabilă. Profesorii motivați și competenți energic tind să se implice activ în activități de formare continuă, învățare colaborativă și inițiative de leadership educațional. În același timp, performanța instituțională este strâns legată de gradul de susținere managerială și de existența unui climat educațional deschis inovării. Aceste concluzii susțin ideea că performanța didactică este un proces emergent, rezultat al interacțiunii dinamice dintre factorii personali, organizaționali și contextuali [5; 6; 9].

Concluzii

Rezultatele confirmă ipoteza centrală conform căreia performanța educațională a cadrelor didactice este un construct dinamic, determinat de interacțiunea complexă dintre motivația intrinsecă, competența energizantă și climatul organizațional.

Studiul demonstrează că profesorii performanți sunt caracterizați printr-o motivație internă puternică, o percepție pozitivă asupra propriei competențe și o atitudine reflexivă față de actul educațional. Acești profesori își manifestă implicarea prin acțiuni inovative, capacitate de adaptare metodologică și dorința de a contribui la dezvoltarea unei culturi educaționale bazate pe colaborare și învățare continuă.

De asemenea, s-a constatat că competența energizantă funcționează ca un veritabil catalizator al performanței. Profesorii care dispun de resurse cognitive, afective și volitive echilibrate reușesc să transforme intențiile pedagogice în acțiuni concrete, eficiente și orientate spre excelență. Această competență amplifică reziliența profesională, reduce riscul epuizării și favorizează dezvoltarea unei mentalități de creștere [5; 14].

În plan organizațional, climatul școlar și stilul de leadership exercită o influență semnificativă asupra nivelului de implicare și inovație al cadrelor didactice. Instituțiile care promovează autonomia profesională, comunicarea deschisă și colaborarea interinstituțională generează condițiile necesare dezvoltării performanței colective [7; 9; 15].

Taxonomia acțiunilor didactice propusă în acest studiu de caz oferă un cadru metodologic și diagnostic util pentru evaluarea și optimizarea performanței profesionale. Prin clasificarea acțiunilor în cinci dimensiuni – motivaționale, formative, evaluative, de dezvoltare profesională și de leadership – modelul permite analiza holistică a comportamentului didactic și orientarea acestuia spre excelență. Astfel, studiul de caz contribuie la fundamentarea unui model integrativ de performanță educațională, bazat pe principii praxiologice, care valorifică experiența, reflecția și colaborarea ca factori determinanți ai dezvoltării profesionale.

În perspectivă, aplicarea acestei taxonomii poate susține: elaborarea unor instrumente de evaluare profesională bazate pe indicatori de performanță calitativă, dezvoltarea programelor de formare continuă adaptate la nevoile reale ale profesorilor, promovarea unei culturi organizaționale orientate spre învățare și inovare.

În concluzie, performanța didactică nu trebuie înțeleasă ca o simplă măsură a eficienței, ci ca un proces evolutiv, un echilibru între competență, reflecție și pasiune pentru educație – valori care definesc profesorul contemporan și garantează progresul sistemului de învățământ.

COPING MECHANISMS AND PERCEIVED SOCIAL SUPPORT AMONG PARENTS OF CHILDREN WITH AUTISM SPECTRUM DISORDER: AN ONLINE QUANTITATIVE STUDY IN ROMANIA

Adriana Oncu
PhD Student, „Ion Creangă" State Pedagogical University, Chișinău, Republic of Moldova

Abstract: The study investigates the relationship between coping mechanisms (problem-focused, emotion-focused, and avoidant) and perceived social support among parents of children with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) in Romania. This research employs a cross-sectional, quantitative, online design and will collect data on coping strategies, levels of perceived support, sociodemographic characteristics, and indicators of parental well-being. Planned analyses include descriptive statistics, reliability (Cronbach's alpha), correlations, multiple regression analyses, and mediation/moderation tests. The findings will contribute to informing psychosocial interventions and support programs for families.

Keywords: coping mechanisms; perceived social support; parents of children with ASD; parental stress; psychological well-being.

Objectives:

- To describe the prevalence of different coping strategies among parents of children with ASD.
- To assess the level of perceived social support.
- To investigate the relationship between coping styles and perceived support.
- To examine whether perceived support mediates/moderates the relationship between stress and parental well-being.
- To identify sociodemographic variables (e.g., parent age, child age, severity level, employment status) associated with coping and perceived support.

Parents of children diagnosed with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) face a complex set of emotional, behavioral, and social challenges, far more pronounced than those experienced by families with neurotypical children. In recent years, research has highlighted the essential importance of coping mechanisms and social support in these families' adaptation process. Both the way parents manage stress and the resources available to them influence not only their psychological well-being, but also the child's development, family dynamics, and long-term quality of life.

I. Introducere

Tema aleasă pune accentul pe importanța înțelegerii modului în care părinții copiilor cu tulburări de spectru autist (TSA) fac față stresului și cum percep suportul social. Gestionarea eficientă a stresului parental are implicații directe asupra bunăstării părinților și, indirect, asupra dezvoltării și adaptării copiilor. Studiul mecanismelor de coping și al suportului social oferă informații utile pentru dezvoltarea programelor de sprijin psihosocial dedicate acestor părinți.
Rezultatele confirmă că atât caracteristicile demografice (vârsta, educația) cât și percepția suportului social sunt factori importanți în modul în care părinții fac față stresului asociat îngrijirii unui copil cu TSA.

Suportul social perceput și strategii adaptative de coping sunt interconectate, ceea ce sugerează că intervențiile care sporesc suportul social pot favoriza adoptarea de strategii de coping mai eficiente.

II. Cadru teoretic

Mecanismele de coping la părinții copiilor cu autism

Conceptul de coping, definit de Lazarus și Folkman ca totalitatea „abilităților comportamentale și cognitive folosite pentru a face față cererilor interne și externe în situații stresante", este esențial în adaptarea parentală. În contextul autismului, părinții se confruntă cu stres cronic cauzat de comportamentele provocatoare ale copilului, dificultățile de comunicare, necesitatea rutinei stricte, incertitudinea prognosticului și presiunea accesării serviciilor terapeutice.

Literatura evidențiază două categorii principale de coping:

- coping orientat spre problemă, axat pe acțiuni concrete și soluții;
- coping orientat spre emoție, centrat pe reglarea și reinterpretarea emoțiilor.

Strategiile orientate spre problemă includ planificarea, informarea privind diagnosticul, participarea activă la intervențiile terapeutice, căutarea de servicii, comunicarea cu specialiștii și implicarea în rețele de părinți. Aceste strategii sunt asociate cu un mai mare sentiment de control și cu o adaptare eficientă (Haytham et al., 2022).

Pe de altă parte, strategiile orientate spre emoție includ acceptarea, reinterpretarea pozitivă, spiritualitatea, căutarea sprijinului emoțional, dar și strategii disfuncționale precum evitarea, retragerea sau minimizarea. Studiile subliniază că strategiile neadaptative se asociază cu niveluri mai ridicate de stres, depresie și anxietate (Sartor et al., 2023).

Diferențele de gen sunt clare: mamele folosesc mai des coping emoțional, fiind mai implicate în îngrijirea directă a copilului, în timp ce tații tind să adopte strategii orientate spre problemă. Această distincție este confirmată în numeroase studii, fiind asociată cu rolurile parentale tradiționale și cu timpul petrecut efectiv în activitățile de îngrijire.

Un aport important la înțelegerea copingului îl aduce articolul Coping Strategies in Mothers of Children with Autism: Insight from F-COPES, care arată că mamele utilizează preponderent trei strategii: reinterpretarea cognitivă, sprijinul spiritual și mobilizarea suportului familial. Reframing-ul le ajută pe mame să dea sens situațiilor dificile, să le perceapă ca gestionabile și să găsească soluții creative. Sprijinul spiritual are un rol profund în acceptarea diagnosticului și în menținerea echilibrului emoțional, iar mobilizarea suportului familial este una dintre resursele-cheie care reduce presiunea asupra părintelui principal.

Totuși, strategiile precum passive appraisal și căutarea redusă a sprijinului social apar la multe mame, fiind asociate cu percepția de judecată din partea celor din jur sau cu experiențe negative anterioare.

Copingul este influențat semnificativ de vârsta copilului și de severitatea simptomelor; mamele copiilor mai mici sau cu simptome mai severe au tendința de a utiliza mai puține strategii adaptative.

Suportul social și rolul său în adaptarea parentală

Suportul social este definit ca ansamblul resurselor emoționale, informaționale și instrumentale pe care părinții le primesc din partea familiei, prietenilor, comunității și profesioniștilor. Acesta este unul dintre cei mai puternici predictori ai ajustării părinților la stresul impus de ASD.
Sprijinul emoțional se referă la a avea pe cineva care ascultă, validează și oferă înțelegere, în timp ce sprijinul informațional presupune accesul la cunoștințe corecte despre autism, tratamente, drepturi legale sau intervenții terapeutice. Sprijinul instrumental include ajutor practic, cum ar fi îngrijirea copilului, transportul, resursele financiare sau sprijinul în activitățile cotidiene.

Studiile arată că părinții care beneficiază de suport social consistent au niveluri mai reduse de depresie și anxietate și raportează o satisfacție mai mare cu viața (Sartor et al., 2023). De asemenea, sprijinul social încurajează utilizarea strategiilor de coping adaptative, cum ar fi reinterpretarea pozitivă, acceptarea și căutarea informațiilor. Deși suportul social este esențial, mulți părinți ai copiilor cu autism sunt reticenți în a-l solicita. Stigmatizarea socială, experiențele negative cu rudele sau prietenii și teama de judecată îi determină pe unii părinți să se izoleze. În aceste cazuri, programele de suport organizate, grupuri de părinți, sesiuni de consiliere, comunități online, toate devin extrem de valoroase.

Un exemplu semnificativ este studiul lui Demšar & Bakracevic (2023), care arată că reinterpretarea pozitivă și orientarea spre creștere personală sunt corelate cu niveluri ridicate de suport social perceput și cu mai puține simptome depresive. Aceasta confirmă faptul că suportul social și copingul sunt interdependente în procesul de adaptare.

Provocările specifice părinților copiilor cu autism

Părinții copiilor cu ASD raportează niveluri de stres semnificativ mai mari decât părinții copiilor neurotipici sau ai copiilor cu alte dizabilități. Provocările includ:

- comportamente provocatoare (agresivitate, auto-stimulări, opoziționism);
- dificultăți de comunicare;
- probleme senzoriale;
- presiune financiară;
- dificultăți în accesarea serviciilor terapeutice;
- izolare socială;
- tensiuni în relațiile de cuplu.

Stigmatizarea, în special în spațiile publice, agravează stresul parental, iar multe mame experimentează depresie, anxietate sau epuizare. Kiran (2025) arată că lipsa suportului social, combinată cu simptomele severe ale copilului, poate duce la suprasolicitare emoțională și burnout.

Studiile din mediul educațional și sportiv (Avcı et al., 2024) indică faptul că părinții folosesc, în general, strategii active de coping, însă părinții copiilor mai mici prezintă scoruri mai ridicate la strategiile pasive și neajutorare. Totodată, părinții băieților cu autism raportează un stres parental mai ridicat decât părinții fetelor, ceea ce sugerează diferențe de comportament și ritm în dezvoltare în funcție de sexul copilului.

Relația dintre coping și suportul social

Relația dintre coping și suportul social este una bidirecțională și complexă. Suportul social adecvat facilitează utilizarea strategiilor de coping adaptative, iar părinții care folosesc mecanisme eficiente sunt mai capabili să valorifice resursele sociale disponibile. De exemplu, părinții care comunică mai bine cu ceilalți percep mai mult suport și tind să folosească strategii active, precum căutarea informațiilor și restructurarea pozitivă.

Totuși, suportul social nu explică integral stresul parental. Sartor et al. (2023) concluzionează că acesta nu mediază complet relația dintre cerințele zilnice și stres, indicând importanța altor variabile, precum autoeficacitatea, nivelul resurselor familiei sau personalitatea părintelui.

Astfel, intervențiile eficiente pentru familiile copiilor cu autism ar trebui să abordeze simultan ambele dimensiuni: dezvoltarea mecanismelor adaptative de coping, consolidarea suportului social prin programe, rețele, educație și politici publice.

Implicațiile mecanismelor de coping și suportului social asupra funcționării familiei

Înțelegerea mecanismelor de coping și a rolului suportului social nu are doar valoare teoretică, ci și implicații importante pentru modul în care funcționează întreaga familie. Părinții copiilor cu autism navighează permanent între responsabilități, emoții intense și cerințe zilnice solicitante; de aceea, modul în care reușesc să gestioneze stresul are efecte directe asupra interacțiunilor familiale, climatului emoțional și stării de bine a tuturor membrilor.

Strategiile de coping adaptative, precum reinterpretarea pozitivă, acceptarea, planificarea sau căutarea de informații, toate acestea contribuie la stabilitatea emoțională a părintelui și reduc probabilitatea apariției reacțiilor impulsive sau disproporționate. Atunci când un părinte reușește să-și gestioneze stresul prin mecanisme sănătoase, comportamentele copilului sunt gestionate mai calm, conflictul domestic scade, iar relațiile dintre membrii familiei sunt mai solide. În schimb, utilizarea predominantă a strategiilor disfuncționale, precum evitarea sau retragerea, poate agrava tensiunile și poate conduce la diminuarea implicării parentale.

Studiile confirmă faptul că părinții care folosesc strategii de coping adaptative au o percepție mai pozitivă asupra relației cu copilul și manifestă un nivel crescut de satisfacție parentală (Haytham et al., 2022). Această percepție pozitivă nu este doar o interpretare subiectivă, ci se reflectă în comportamente efective: un părinte care simte că are resursele necesare răspunde mai consistent cerințelor copilului, este mai receptiv la nevoile acestuia și menține o comunicare mai eficientă cu specialiștii.

Impactul asupra relației de cuplu și asupra climatului familial

Un aspect adesea trecut cu vederea este influența copingului asupra relației de cuplu. Creșterea unui copil cu autism poate genera dezechilibre, mai ales când unul dintre părinți preia majoritatea responsabilităților. Atunci când mecanismele de coping sunt ineficiente sau suportul social este insuficient, apare riscul de conflict, distanțare emoțională și epuizare. Mamele raportează frecvent că se simt copleșite și insuficient sprijinite, ceea ce duce la tensiuni în cuplu, iar tații exprimă adesea dificultăți în a-și găsi rolul în îngrijire sau a înțelege pe deplin nevoile emoționale ale partenerelor (Avcı et al., 2024).

În schimb, atunci când ambii părinți adoptă strategii de coping complementare și beneficiază de suport social consistent, climatul familial devine mai stabil. Comunicarea eficientă, împărțirea responsabilităților și acceptarea comună a diagnosticului favorizează coeziunea familiei.
Literatura de specialitate subliniază că familiile care reușesc să combine copingul orientat spre problemă cu cel orientat spre emoție au o adaptare mai sănătoasă și o calitate a vieții mai ridicată.

Impactul asupra relației părinte–copil

Starea emoțională a părintelui influențează în mod direct interacțiunea cu copilul. Un părinte stresat, deprimat sau copleșit poate avea dificultăți în a oferi răbdarea, structura și consistența de care un copil cu autism are nevoie în mod constant. De exemplu, reacțiile impulsive ale părintelui pot intensifica comportamentele de opoziție sau pot amplifica rigiditatea copilului, ceea ce duce la un cerc vicios al tensiunii.

În schimb, părinții care utilizează strategii precum restructurarea pozitivă, acceptarea, planificarea și sprijinul social prezintă mai multă stabilitate emoțională. Aceasta favorizează crearea unui mediu previzibil și sigur, aspect esențial în dezvoltarea copiilor cu ASD. Studiile lui Demšar & Bakracevic (2023) arată că nivelurile ridicate de suport social sunt asociate cu o percepție parentală mai pozitivă și cu un comportament parental mai eficient.

Necesitatea intervențiilor integrate

Pe baza cercetărilor existente, se poate afirma că intervențiile destinate familiilor copiilor cu autism ar trebui să fie integrate și multidimensionale. Nu este suficient ca părinții să primească informații despre terapiile copilului; este esențial ca și ei să fie instruiți în gestionarea propriului stres și în dezvoltarea unor strategii eficiente de coping.

Programele eficiente ar trebui să includă:
traininguri parentale (ex.: programe de tip ABA, TEACCH, PRT, dar și programe axate pe managementul stresului);

- consiliere individuală sau de familie;
- grupuri de suport, care permit schimb de experiențe;
- acces la servicii comunitare, precum centre de respiro;
- educație privind drepturile copilului și resursele existente.

Intervențiile care combină suportul social cu învățarea activă de strategii de coping au cel mai mare impact pozitiv asupra părinților, reducând stresul și îmbunătățind calitatea vieții întregii familii.

III. Obiective și ipoteze

Obiectivele cercetării

Obiectiv general

Studierea relației dintre mecanismele de coping, suportul social perceput și variabilele de mediu în rândul părinților copiilor cu TSA.

Obiective specifice

1. Analiza relației dintre suportul social perceput și formele de coping.
2. Investigarea relației cu variabilele demografice.

Ipotezele cercetării

H1: Există relații semnificative statistic între vârsta respondenților și mecanismele de coping adaptativ.

H2: Există o relație pozitivă semnificativă între vârsta respondenților și suportul social total perceput.

H3: Există o relație semnificativ statistic între suportul social perceput și utilizarea mecanismelor de coping adaptative

H4: Nivelul de studii influențează nivelul suportului social perceput.

H5: Nivelul de studii influențează strategiile de coping utilizate.

IV. Metodologia Cercetării

Designul cercetării

Studiul de față este unul pilot, cu caracter cantitativ, derulat prin aplicarea unui chestionar online adresat părinților copiilor cu tulburări din spectrul autismului (TSA). Cercetarea urmărește investigarea relației dintre nivelul suportului social perceput și mecanismele de coping utilizate de părinți, precum și diferențele acestor variabile în funcție de gen, nivelul de studii și participarea în terapie alături de copil si alte date demografice. Studiul pilot are rolul de a testa fezabilitatea designului, claritatea itemilor și stabilirea direcțiilor pentru o cercetare viitoare extinsă.

4.1.1. Participanți

Eșantionul este unul de convenienţă, format din părinți ai copiilor cu TSA din România. Participanții au fost recrutați prin distribuirea chestionarului în grupuri naționale de suport pentru părinți ai copiilor cu autism (rețele sociale, grupuri asociative, ONG-uri). Participarea a fost voluntară, răspunsurile anonime, iar criteriul unic de includere a fost ca participantul să fie părinte al unui copil diagnosticat cu TSA.

La studiu au participat 22 de respondenți astfel:

Un sigur părinte de gen masculin a participat la studiu. 90.9% fiind respondenți de gen feminim.

Din 22 de respondenți, 2 sunt necasătoriți (9,1%), 1 divorțat (0.9%), si 19 căsătoriți (8,4%).

La studiu au participat 5 respondenți care au absolvit ciclul gimanzial (22,7%), 6 nivel liceal (27,3%), 1 postliceal, 7 universitar (36,4%) și 2 postuniversitar (9,1%).

Doar 2 dintre copiii respondenților nu participă la terapie în mod activ la data completării chestionarului (9,1%).

Descriptive Statistics

	N	Minimum	Maximum	Mean	Std. Deviation
Ani	22	26	59	39,41	7,968
Vârsta copilului în ani împliniți	22	3	18	8,05	4,736
Valid N (listwise)	22

Tabel 1. Repartiția pe vârstă a părinților și copiilor

Conform tabelului 1 în cazul celor 22 de respondenti , minimul de vârstă al părinților a fost de 26 ani, maximul de 59 cu o medie de 39,41 și abatere standard de 7,968. În ceea ce privește copii, vârsta lor a variat intre 3 ani (minim), 18 ani (maxim) cu o medie de 8,05 si o abatere standard de 4,73. Descrierile detaliate procentual a vârstei respondenților se regăsesc în Anexa 1.

4.2.Procedura de colectare a datelor

Chestionarul a fost construit și distribuit online prin intermediul unei platforme dedicate (Google Forms / Microsoft Forms).

Acesta a fost disponibil timp de 10 zile, fiind distribuit în următoarele medii:

- grupuri online naționale ale părinților copiilor cu autism;
- pagini de suport dedicate TSA;
- rețele de ONG-uri care lucrează cu familii ale copiilor cu autism.

Participanții au fost informați despre caracterul anonim și confidențial al studiului. Completarea a durat aproximativ 10–12 minute.

4.3.Instrumente

4.3.1. Scala de coping COPE (Carver, Scheier & Weintraub, 1989)

Chestionarul COPE include 53 de itemi, fiecare evaluat pe o scală Likert în 4 trepte (1 = de obicei nu fac acest lucru; 4 = fac deseori acest lucru). Scala măsoară 14 forme de coping, fiecare formată din 4 itemi, cu excepția recurgerii la alcool/medicamente, evaluată printr-un item unic.

Formele de coping evaluate sunt:

1. Coping activ
2. Planificarea
3. Eliminarea activităților concurente
4. Reținerea de la acțiune
5. Căutarea suportului social-instrumental
6. Căutarea suportului social-emoțional
7. Reinterpretarea pozitivă
8. Acceptarea
9. Negarea
10. Descărcarea emoțională
11. Orientarea spre religie
12. Pasivitatea mentală
13. Pasivitatea comportamentală
14. Recurgerea la alcool/medicamente

Scorarea se realizează prin însumarea celor 4 itemi aferenți fiecărei dimensiuni (cu un singur item pentru dimensiunea alcool-medicamente). Chestionarul permite atât evaluarea dispozițiilor stabile de coping, cât și a copingului situațional, în funcție de instructaj.

Fiabilitatea raportată în literatura de specialitate este adecvată, autorii descriind chestionarul ca un instrument robust și utilizat extensiv în psihologia stresului.

4.3.2. Inventarul Suportului Social (Social Support Inventory – SSI; Timmerman et al., 2000)

SSI este un instrument scurt, format din 20 de itemi, la care respondenții evaluează suportul perceput pe o scală Likert cu 5 trepte (1 = mult prea puțin suport; 5 = mult prea mult suport). Răspunsurile vizează suportul perceput din partea unei persoane semnificative (soț/soție/partener sau alt adult apropiat).

Scala are structură factorială cu 4 dimensiuni:

- Suport emoțional: itemii 1, 6, 9, 12, 17
- Suport informativ: itemii 2, 5, 10, 15, 19
- Companie socială: itemii 3, 8, 13, 16, 20
- Suport instrumental: itemii 4, 7, 11, 14, 18

Fiabilitatea raportată este bună (α între 0,70 și 0,86).

4.4.Procesarea și analiza datelor

Datele colectate au fost exportate și analizate cu programul statistic SPSS.

Au fost utilizate următoarele analize:

- corelații Pearson pentru testarea relației dintre suportul social și coping (H1);
- ANOVA unifactorială pentru diferențele în funcție de nivelul de studii (H2, H3);

Nivelul de semnificație utilizat a fost $p < 0.05$.

4.4.1. Etică și confidențialitate

Participarea a fost voluntară și anonimă. Participanții au fost informați asupra scopului studiului, posibilității de retragere în orice moment și faptului că datele vor fi folosite strict în scopuri științifice. Nu s-au colectat date personale care să permită identificarea respondenților.

V. Rezultatele studiului

Studiul corelațional

Am construit un tabel exhaustiv al tuturor posibilelor relații dintre suportul social perceput ca scor general, vârsta și toate stilurile de coping măsurate. Acesta este regăsit în anexa 2. S-a utilizat coeficientul Pearson pentru toate corelațiile.

- Semnificația a fost testată la nivelul $\alpha = 0.05$ (două cozi).
- Numărul de observații (N) pentru fiecare corelație este între 21–22, în funcție de variabilă.

5.1.Relația cu vârsta

În urma studiului corelațiilor dintre mecanismele de coping, suportul total perceput ca și scor complet, mecanismele de coping utilizate și vârsta respondenților am identificat următoarele relații semnificative statistic:

Variabilă coping	r	p	N
Coping activ	0.469	0.032	21
Eliminarea activităților concurente	0.483	0.027	21

Tabel 2.Rezultatele studiului corelațional dintre vârstă și mecanismele de coping și suportul social perceput global.

- Conform tabelului Vârsta se corelează pozitiv și semnificativ cu copingul activ și cu eliminarea activităților concurente.
- Coeficienții Pearson indică o asociere moderată pozitivă ($r \approx 0.47–0.48$).

Toate celelalte corelații între vârstă și variabilele de coping sau suport complet nu sunt semnificative ($p > 0.05$). Conform rezultatelor, putem conclude că se respinge parțial ipoteza de null aferentă H1 și se acceptă ipoteza de null aferentă H2, neexistând relații semnificative între vârstă și suportul social global perceput. Rezultatele sugerează că, pe măsură ce vârsta crește, respondenții tind să utilizeze mai mult aceste strategii de coping pozitiv precum copingul activ și eliminarea activităților concurente.

5.2.Relația coping- suport social global

În baza tabelului citat în Anexa 2 am identificat următoarele relații semnificative

Variabilă coping	r	p	N
Coping activ	0.449	0.041	21
Eliminarea activităților concurente	0.588	0.005	21
Căutarea suportului social-instrumental	0.595	0.004	21
Căutarea suportului social-emoțional	0.551	0.010	21
Reinterpretarea pozitivă	0.434	0.049	21
Acceptarea	0.446	0.043	21

Tabel 3. Rezultatele studiu corelațional dintre mecanismele de coping și suportul social perceput global.

Suportul complet se corelează pozitiv și semnificativ cu mai multe strategii de coping adaptativ. Valorile coeficienților Pearson indică corelații moderate ($r \approx 0.43–0.60$).
Corelațiile negative au avut $p > 0.05$ nu deci nu sunt semnificative statistic.

Conform rezultatelor putem respinge ipoteza de null aferentă H3, suportul total perceput se corelează pozitiv și semnificativ cu mai multe strategii de coping considerate adaptative.
Putem astfel conclude ca Respondenții care percep că primesc mai mult suport social folosesc mai frecvent strategiile de coping considerate adaptative și invers.

5.3.Relația dintre nivelul de studii și mecanismele de coping si suportul social perceput

În tabelul One Way Anova atașat în Anexa 3 am efectuat studiul exhaustiv a diferențelor intergrup în functie de nivelul de studii și mecanismele de coping raportate și surpotul social global.

În urma analizei sau identificat următoarele relații semnficative statistic:

Variabilă	F	df (Between, Within)	p (Sig.)
Coping activ	3.221	4, 15	0.043
Planificare	4.634	4, 15	0.012
Reinterpretare pozitivă	4.300	4, 15	0.016
Negarea	3.117	4, 15	0.047

Tabel 4. Studiul variabilelor în funcție de nivelul de studiu.

Conform tabelului 4 constatăm că:

Există diferențe semnificative între grupurile definite de nivelul de studii în utilizarea copingului activ ($F = 3.221$, $df = 4,15$, $p = 0.043$).Aceasta indică faptul că educația influențează frecvența folosirii strategiilor de coping activ; anumite niveluri de studii sunt asociate cu utilizarea mai frecventă a acestui tip de coping.

Nivelul de studii influențează semnificativ utilizarea strategiei de planificare ($F = 4.634$, $df = 4,15$, $p = 0.012$). Persoanele cu studii mai înalte tind să planifice mai sistematic acțiunile în fața stresului, ceea ce sugerează o legătură între educație și capacitatea de organizare și anticipare.

Diferențele între nivelurile de studii sunt semnificative și pentru reinterpretarea pozitivă ($F = 4.300$, $df = 4,15$, $p = 0.016$). Persoanele cu niveluri mai înalte de educație utilizează mai frecvent această strategie, transformând evenimentele stresante în experiențe constructive sau învățături.

Nivelul de studii are un efect semnificativ și asupra strategiei maladaptative de negare ($F = 3.117$, $df = 4,15$, $p = 0.047$). Grupurile cu educație mai redusă pot recurge mai frecvent la negare, în timp ce cei cu studii superioare folosesc această strategie mai rar, sugerând o diferență educațională în modul de gestionare a stresului.

În baza acestor informații ne permitem să respingem ipoteza de null aferentă H4 completând și ca negarea este un mecansim negativ influențat de nivelul de studii.

De asemenea, ne permitem sa acceptam ipoteza de nul aferenta H5. Suportul social global perceput nefiind influnețat de nivelul de studii al respondenților.

Limite și cercetări viitoare

Principală limită a cercetării o reprezintă dimensiunea mică a eșantionului ($N = 22$), ceea ce reduce puterea statistică și limitează generalizarea rezultatelor la întreaga populație de părinți ai copiilor cu TSA. Din cauza numărului redus de respondenți, doar relațiile dintre vârstă și nivelul de studii cu mecanismele de coping și suportul social global au putut fi evaluate statistic, celelalte variabile demografice, precum statusul marital, genul copilului sau al părintelui și vârsta copilului, rămânând neexplorate.

De asemenea, studiul este de natură corelațională, ceea ce împiedică stabilirea relațiilor cauzale între variabile. În plus, datele au fost colectate prin auto-raport, ceea ce poate introduce bias subiectiv și poate influența fidelitatea informațiilor referitoare la mecanismele de coping și percepția suportului social.

Cercetările viitoare ar trebui să se concentreze pe extinderea eșantionului, astfel încât să fie posibilă o analiză mai complexă și să se exploreze toate variabilele demografice relevante. Este recomandată realizarea unor studii longitudinale pentru a urmări modul în care strategiile de coping și percepția suportului social se schimbă în timp, în funcție de experiența parentală și de evoluția copilului cu TSA.

În plus, integrarea unor metode calitative, precum interviuri sau focus-grupuri, ar putea oferi o înțelegere mai profundă a nevoilor și experiențelor părinților. Totodată, cercetările viitoare ar putea include evaluarea eficienței programelor de suport social și psihologic, pentru a determina impactul acestora asupra adoptării strategiilor adaptive de coping și asupra bunăstării psihologice a părinților.

Concluzii finale ale studiului

Studiul pilot oferă o analiză empirică valoroasă asupra relației dintre mecanismele de coping și suportul social perceput în rândul părinților copiilor cu tulburări din spectrul autismului, evidențiind modul în care factorii individuali și resursele familiale influențează adaptarea la stresul parental. Rezultatele obținute indică faptul că vârsta parentală este asociată cu o utilizare crescută a strategiilor de coping orientate spre acțiune, sugerând că maturitatea și experiența pot facilita abordări adaptative în fața solicitărilor complexe ale îngrijirii unui copil cu TSA.

De asemenea, suportul social perceput se corelează pozitiv cu o serie de strategii de coping considerate adaptative, precum căutarea sprijinului emoțional și instrumental, reinterpretarea pozitivă și acceptarea, subliniind rolul central al rețelelor de suport în modularea impactului stresului parental. Nivelul de educație diferențiază, la rândul său, utilizarea anumitor strategii: părinții cu studii superioare tind să recurgă mai frecvent la planificare și restructurări cognitive pozitive, în timp ce strategiile dezadaptative, precum negarea, sunt raportate mai des de către respondenții cu nivel educațional redus. Lipsa diferențelor în percepția suportului social în funcție de nivelul de studii indică faptul că sprijinul perceput este influențat de factori contextuali, nu de statutul educațional. Deși dimensiunea redusă a eșantionului limitează generalizarea concluziilor, studiul evidențiază tendințe relevante și oferă direcții promițătoare pentru cercetări viitoare, care să exploreze aceste relații în eșantioane mai mari și prin metodologii complementare.

În ansamblu, concluziile subliniază necesitatea implementării unor intervenții psihosociale integrate, orientate spre consolidarea suportului social și promovarea strategiilor de coping adaptativ, cu scopul de a reduce distresul parental și de a sprijini reziliența familiilor care cresc copii cu TSA.

THE ACT OF THANKING IN CONTEMPORARY SPOKEN ROMANIAN: A STRATEGY OF POSITIVE POLITENESS. A CASE STUDY

Alexandra Crețu
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: In this article, we aim to demonstrate that the act of thanking, understood as a behavioural speech act, constitutes a strategy of positive politeness, primarily based on the strengthening of interpersonal closeness among participants in an interaction and the expression of solidarity. The illocutionary force of this act is realized through the expression of gratitude for a received benefit. This function aligns with the principles of politeness, as the absence of thanks for benefit could be perceived as impolite. Thanking is a highly ritualized speech act, however, in this article, we will analyze two contexts in which gratitude is expressed sincerely. The excerpts are drawn from a cultural debate (1) and an interview (2), with the dynamics of social images being particularly relevant for the analysis. We have selected for examination one instance of indirectly expressed thanks and one instance marked by a conventionalized formula. Although indirect acts are often associated with negative politeness, in the analyzed context they function as instruments for reinforcing interpersonal relationships.

Keywords: thanking; gratitude; positive politeness; solidarity; social harmony.

1. Mulțumirea ca act de vorbire comportativ

Inclus în clasa comportativelor, actul mulțumirii vizează „reacțiile la anumite comportamente și comportamentele față de alții și totodată, este menit să dezvăluie atitudini și sentimente" (Austin 2005: 87). În acord cu cele prezentate de Austin, mulțumirea constituie un performativ explicit atunci când este realizată prin formele aferente verbului „a mulțumi" precum: îți mulțumesc (Austin 2005: 84). Conform mențiunilor sale, performativele explicite din clasa comportativelor pot fi cu ușurință confundate cu alte tipuri de acte, în special cu performativele primare și actele constative (Austin 2005: 146-147). În acest sens, expresia „sunt recunoscător" corespunde unui performativ primar, deoarece enunțul poate presupune mai multe semnificații, iar sintagma „mă simt recunoscător" este pur descriptivă și poate fi interpretată doar în termenii de adevărat sau fals (Austin 2005: 84). Ca acte ilocuționare, formulele de mulțumire, utilizate atât cu intenția de a mulțumi cuiva, cât și de a încheia armonios o conversație, servesc la aprecierea realizărilor interlocutorului (Jautz 2013: 27).

Mulțumirea este un act de vorbire puternic ritualizat (Watts 2003: 186), folosit adesea în contexte în care este necesară exprimarea unei atitudini politicoase (Jautz 2013: 31). În continuare, vom prezenta câteva perspective ale autorilor care susțin includerea mulțumirii în sfera principiului politeții, exemplificând aceste puncte de vedere cu exemple relevante extrase din corpusul propriu.

2. Corpusul utilizat în analiză

Corpusul utilizat în analiza actului mulțumirii este alcătuit din forme de discurs aparținând discursului mediatic și politic. În acest corpus sunt incluse dezbateri televizate (culturale și politice), interviuri, emisiuni de tip podcast, precum și o emisiune de tip concurs. În selecția acestor materiale, am urmărit diversitatea strategiilor discursiv-pragmatice, gradul de formalitate al contextelor, precum și variabilele sociologice ale participanților, cum ar fi genul, vârsta și statutul social. Convențiile de transcriere sunt preluate din Corpus de limbă română vorbită actuală nedialectală, lucrare coordonată de Luminița Hoarță Cărăușu[1].

Fiind un act de vorbire puternic ritualizat, actul mulțumirii este frecvent întâlnit în cadrul dezbaterilor televizate, unde contribuie la menținerea contactului și a coeziunii discursive, îndeplinind astfel funcție fatică (Jautz 2013: 69). Am analizat mulțumirea ca act comportativ, deoarece taxonomia propusă de Austin evidențiază legătura acestuia cu normele sociale și, implicit, cu principiul politeții.

[1] Hoarță Cărăușu, Luminița, coord. 2013. Corpus de limbă română vorbită actuală nedialectală. Iași: Universitatea „Alexandru Ioan Cuza".

Ca act de vorbire intrinsec politicos (Leech 1983: 104; Holmes 2013: 115), mulțumirea se înscrie în sfera politeții pozitive, prezentând anumite trăsături specifice acesteia, pe care le vom descrie în rândurile care urmează.

3. Actul mulțumirii în raport cu principiul politeții

Potrivit celor conturate de Leech, politețea vizează „transmiterea unui anumit tip de valoare între vorbitor și destinatar" (Leech 2014: 8, t.n.)[2]. Corelând această idee cu principiul cooperării, valoarea poate reprezenta cooperarea pe care vorbitorul și interlocutorul o manifestă pentru protejarea reciprocă a feței. În acest sens, politețea este intrinsec legată de actele de vorbire care presupun o asemenea relație, printre care cererile și invitațiile, complimentele, felicitările, condoleanțele, ofertele, sfaturile, scuzele, mulțumirile și altele similare (Leech 2014: 8). Prin mulțumire, vorbitorul își exprimă recunoștința față de interlocutor ca urmare a beneficiului produs de acesta. Astfel, vorbitorul transmite un sentiment, pe care partenerul său îl recunoaște și îl acceptă. Valoarea transmisă între vorbitor și interlocutor leagă actul mulțumirii de principiul politeții, făcând din acesta un fenomen lingvistic inerent politicos (Leech 2014: 8-9).

În analiza sa asupra actului mulțumirii, Leech (2014: 12) susține că acesta îndeplinește o dublă funcție comunicativă. Prin asociere cu politețea negativă, mulțumirea este considerată un act reparator, prin care vorbitorul rectifică un sentiment de datorie pe care-l are față de interlocutor, restabilind echilibrul interacțional (Leech 2014: 8). În cadrul politeții pozitive, actul mulțumirii contribuie atât la valorizarea imaginii vorbitorului, cât și a interlocutorului, prin exprimarea apropierii și a solidarității (Leech 2014: 8-12). Așadar, în viziunea lui Leech, actul mulțumirii se situează la granița dintre politețea pozitivă și politețea negativă, implicând, în funcție de normele contextuale, fie consolidarea unei relații de apropiere, fie o dimensiune reparatorie prin care este exprimată recunoștința pentru beneficiul primit.

Pe de altă parte, Brown și Levinson (1987: 67) afirmă că rolul reparator îi revine exclusiv actului scuzei, în timp ce mulțumirea deține funcție apreciativă, urmărind satisfacerea imaginii individului care a produs un beneficiu. De aceeași părere este și Edmondson (1981: 278), care susține că actul mulțumirii este adesea asociat, în dinamica interacțională, cu un eveniment cu valoare pozitivă, iar funcția sa principală este menținerea armoniei sociale.

Sabine Jautz este de părere că actul mulțumirii este desprins din sfera politeții pozitive, deoarece scopul său ilocuționar este reprezentat de „exprimarea aprecierii față de interlocutor și/ sau față de acțiunea acestuia, contribuind astfel, la menținerea armoniei și a bunăvoinței dintre participanții la interacțiune" (Jautz 2013: 28, t.n.)[3]. Holmes susține, de asemenea, că mulțumirea este un act intrinsec politicos, bazat pe stabilirea unei relații de apropiere între interlocutori (Holmes 2013: 115).

Analizată dintr-o perspectivă psiholingvistică, mulțumirea este, potrivit lui Nicole M. Percival și Briony D. Pulford, un act de vorbire cu efecte pozitive asupra interacțiunii în general, întrucât diminuează formalitatea și intensifică percepția de apropiere și prietenie dintre interlocutori (Percival și Pulford 2019: 1).

În raport cu perspectivele prezentate, susținem că actul mulțumirii ilustrează o strategie a politeții pozitive, exprimând solidaritatea și apropierea dintre interlocutori. În continuare, vom argumenta această premisă prin analiza a două exemple în care actul mulțumirii prezintă trăsături specifice politeții pozitive.

4. Actul mulțumirii ca manifestare a politeții pozitive

Mulțumirea reprezintă o manifestare a politeții pozitive, întrucât vizează apropierea dintre vorbitor și interlocutor, precum și protejarea și valorizarea feței celui din urmă (Brown și Levinson

[2] „(…) it is fairly central to politeness that it involves the passing of some kind of transaction of value between the speaker and the other party.", t.n., Leech, Geoffrey. 2014. The Pragmatics of Politeness. Oxford: Oxford University Press, p. 8.

[3] „Expressing appreciation of the addressee and/ or what s/he has done (...) adds to the comity of the interlocutors.", t.n., Jautz, Sabine. 2013. Thanking Formulae in English: Explorations accros varieties and genres. Amsterdam/ Philadelphia: John Benjamins Publishing Company, p. 28.

1987: 70). În cazul mulțumirii, scopul ilocuționar presupune o dimensiune convivială, bazată pe menținerea echilibrului social (Leech 1983: 104). Astfel, prezența unei asemenea trăsături conferă actului mulțumirii un caracter intrinsec politicos, orientat spre respectarea normelor și a armoniei sociale (Aijmer 2014: 35). Pentru a demonstra validitatea acestor informații, vom apela la exemplul (1):

(1) „DCE: ↑ da. + și referitor + la:: ce spunea + ↑ foarte frumos + doamna carmen firan + mai:: + devreme ++ ↑ cred că + este un poet + care poate fi + ↑ CU + relativă + ușurință + TRAdus + în:: limbi + de circulație + internațională […] ↑ și::: aș încheia + cu această propoziție + foarte frumoasă + și foarte exactă + a lui + nicolae manolescu + din istoria critică + a literaturii române + despre + ioan es pop ++ <CIT ↑ un poet + care are + puritatea tragicului.>

DZB: ↑ DA:: ++ știam ++ ↑ ȘTIam această + zicere ++ și + mă bucur + că ai adus-o + între noi." (Intrare liberă: În memoriam Ioan Es. Pop, TVR Cultural, 2023)

Potrivit distincției realizate de Searle între acte de vorbire directe și acte de vorbire indirecte (Searle 1979: 20), în exemplul (1) este performată o mulțumire indirectă, întrucât nu există niciun marcator explicit al exprimării recunoștinței sau gratitudinii (Bach și Harnish 1979: 70-73). Cu toate că Brown și Levinson (1987: 73) asociază noțiunea de indirectivitate cu strategiile politeții negative, menite să atenueze impunerea vorbitorului asupra interlocutorului, în contextul de față, aceasta îndeplinește un rol diferit, orientat spre apropiere și manifestarea sentimentelor pozitive.

În conformitate cu ideile expuse de Sabine Jautz, mulțumirea este performată „în situațiile în care vorbitorul intenționează să transmită interlocutorului, recunoștința sa pentru ceea ce a făcut sau a realizat" (Jautz 2008: 142, t.n.)[4]. Aplicând condițiile propuse de Searle (1969: 67) în performarea actelor de vorbire, în contextul de față, vorbitoarea îi mulțumește interlocutorului pentru remarca pozitivă pe care a adus-o în discuție, asociată condiției de conținut propozițional: „[…] ↑ și::: aș încheia + cu această propoziție + foarte frumoasă + și foarte exactă + a lui + nicolae manolescu + din istoria critică + a literaturii române + despre + ioan es pop ++ <CIT ↑ un poet + care are + puritatea tragicului.>". Replica interlocutorului poate fi interpretată drept un beneficiu (condiția pregătitoare) adus moderatoarei, care manifestă, la rândul său, un sentiment pozitiv (condiția de sinceritate): „↑ DA:: ++ știam ++ ↑ ȘTIam această + zicere ++ și + mă bucur + că ai adus-o + între noi." Acest enunț indică prezența unei mulțumiri indirecte (condiția esențială), întrucât îndeplinește condițiile de realizare a actului și figurează totodată, ca expresie a politeții pozitive, fundamentată pe aprecierea și recunoștința față de acțiunea interlocutorului. În exemplul (1), verificarea condițiilor de reușită propuse de Searle este necesară, întrucât mulțumirea este realizată în mod indirect și poate genera ambiguități, în contextul în care cele mai multe acte de acest tip sunt exprimate în mod explicit, printr-o formulă performativă precum „mulțumesc, mersi, sunt recunoscător/ recunoscătoare...etc) (Aijmer 2014: 38). Totodată, exemplul de față devine relevant în contextul manifestării politeții pozitive, deoarece prin utilizarea strategiilor asociate acestui principiu, este performat în mod indirect actul mulțumirii, aspect subliniat de Searle în descrierea actelor indirecte (Searle 1979: 30-31).

Pentru a analiza exprimarea indirectă a mulțumirii „mă bucur + că ai adus-o + între noi", vom apela la strategiile propuse de Henk Haverkate în lucrarea Speech Acts, Speakers, and Hearers, din 1984. Potrivit ideilor sale, în performarea unui act de vorbire, vorbitorul se află în măsura de a alege dintr-un set de opțiuni referitoare la modalitatea concretă de realizare a actului respectiv (Haverkate 1984: 40). Aceste strategii pot fi grupate în trei categorii principale și anume: neutre (engl. neutral), intensificatoare (engl. reinforcing) și atenuatoare (engl. mitigating) (Haverkate 1984: 40). Aijmer este de părere că strategiile de realizare a actului mulțumirii se situează la granița dintre cele neutre și cele intensificatoare, întrucât actul în discuție poate prezenta un caracter vizibil emoțional (Aijmer 2014: 35). Haverkate (1984: 41) susține că strategiile neutre sunt utilizate în contextele în care vorbitorii nu doresc să pună un accent deosebit asupra modului în care își evaluează relația interacțională cu interlocutorul, drept urmare, evită să utilizeze mijloace intensificatoare sau atenuatoare. În exemplul (1), vorbitoarea performează actului mulțumirii într-o manieră ce evidențiază latura afectivă a limbajului, caracteristică strategiilor intensificatoare. Prin bucuria și aprecierea manifestate, aceasta accentuează relația de solidaritate, asigurând buna continuare a interacțiunii.

[4] „Expressions of gratitude are used when a speaker wants the addresse to know that s/he is grateful for what the addressee has said or done.", t.n., Jautz, Sabine. 2008. „Gratitude in British and New Zealand radio programmes: Nothing but Goshing?" în Variational Pragmatics: a focus on regional varieties in pluricentric languages, editat de Klaus P. Schneider și Anne Barron. Amsterdam/ Philadelphia: John Benjamins Publishing Company, pp. 141-178.

Potrivit aspectelor identificate de Brown și Levinson (1987: 70), politețea pozitivă presupune o relație de apropiere între vorbitor și interlocutor, în care cel dintâi respectă dorințele celuilalt și manifestă considerație față de acțiunile acestuia. Relația de apropiere este fundamentată prin exprimarea interesului și a aprobării față de personalitatea celuilalt, aspecte care indică reciprocitate și solidaritate (Brown și Levinson 1987: 101). În exemplul (1), relația dintre cei doi interlocutori se bazează, mai întâi de toate, pe colaborare și se consolidează prin împărtășirea aceluiași „teren comun" (Brown și Levinson 1987: 103). Invitatul amintește o replică relevantă despre un prieten comun „[…] ↑ și::: aș încheia + cu această propoziție + foarte frumoasă + și foarte exactă + a lui + nicolae manolescu + din istoria critică + a literaturii române + despre + ioan es pop ++ <CIT ↑ un poet + care are + puritatea tragicului.>", în urma căreia, moderatoarea exprimă o reacție pozitivă, de bucurie, în semn de apreciere. Prin formularea enunțului „↑ DA:: ++ știam ++ ↑ ȘTIam această + zicere ++ și + mă bucur + că ai adus-o + între noi.", vorbitoarea își manifestă acordul față de replica interlocutorului, intensificând forța ilocuționară prin repetarea verbului „știam", care transmite, mai mult decât apreciere, un sentiment de încântare. Repetiția aceasta funcționează ca mijloc de intensificare a acordului și a interesului față de interlocutor (Holmes 2013: 77) și totodată, reprezintă o formă a exagerării lingvistice, fenomen specific politeții pozitive (Brown și Levinson 1987: 105). Prin utilizarea strategiilor caracteristice politeții pozitive, precum consolidarea relației de prietenie și colaborare, crearea unui teren comun cu interlocutorul, respectiv exagerarea acordului și a încântării, vorbitoarea formulează o mulțumire indirectă „mă bucur + că ai adus-o + între noi", validând astfel procesele pragmatice asociate principiului politeții.

Pe lângă argumentele prezentate, relația de prietenie dintre cei doi interlocutori este consolidată prin utilizarea persoanei a doua a formei verbale: „ai adus", fapt care indică o distanță socială redusă și un anumit grad de intimitate (Ionescu-Ruxăndoiu 2003: 14). Prin folosirea pronumelui personal la persoana întâi, numărul singular, vorbitoarea stabilește „cu interlocutorul o relație amicală" (Ionescu-Ruxăndoiu 2003: 71), potrivită politeții pozitive.

În conformitate cu aspectele analizate în cadrul acestei secțiuni, susținem că actul mulțumirii se înscrie în sfera politeții pozitive, contribuind la instaurarea echilibrului între participanții la interacțiune și la consolidarea armoniei sociale (Rovența-Frumușani 2005: 59). Cu toate că mulțumirea este considerată un act puternic rutinizat (Leech 2014: 39) și cel mai puțin sincer (Norrick 1978: 285) din categoria comportativelor, în exemplul (1) întâlnim o mulțumire substanțială (Goffman 1967: 45), realizată în mod indirect, prin intermediul strategiilor intensificatoare propuse de Haverkate (1984: 40). În contextul analizat, vorbitoarea alege să performeze actul mulțumirii într-o manieră indirectă, întrucât urmărește valorizarea feței interlocutorului și exprimarea aprecierii față de acțiunea benefică a acestuia. Beneficiul adus nu este unul direct, ci, mai degrabă, de natură intențională, motiv pentru care vorbitoarea subliniază indirect intenția interlocutorului decât rezultatul concret al acțiunii sale. Așadar, exprimarea mulțumirii are un efect pozitiv asupra interacțiunii, contribuind la menținerea echilibrului relației de prietenie stabilite între moderatoare și invitat.

În exemplul (2) putem identifica același mecanism de manifestare a politeții pozitive, construit de data aceasta cu ajutorul unui compliment. Fragmentul propus spre analiză este următorul:

(2) „DZB: ↑ așa m-am gândit și eu + dragă + iuliana + că ++ dacă ieri am făcut crăciunul + restrâns + cu familiile noastre ++ astăzi + ne-am propus un crăciun + profesional ↑ + cu familia ++ mai extinsă ++

IM: (xxx) ↑ DA. + familia televiziunii ++ îți mulțumesc că mă consideri un + campion pentru că + este mic dejun cu un campion ++ ă: ↑ +++" (Mic dejun cu un campion, TVR2, 2024)

În exemplul (2), actul mulțumirii este marcat prin prezența performativului explicit „îți mulțumesc", care indică faptul că vorbitoarea exprimă în mod autentic, recunoștința față de interlocutoare. Invitata (IM) rostește cuvintele „îți mulțumesc", dotate cu sens și referință, fiind îndeplinită în acest fel, dimensiunea locuționară a actului mulțumirii. În plan ilocuționar, sentimentul transmis este recunoștința, ca urmare a unui fapt lingvistic interpretat drept compliment. Iuliana Marciuc (IM) îi mulțumește moderatoarei (DZB) pentru prilejul de a participa la o asemenea emisiune, al cărei nume, Mic dejun cu un campion, o face să se simtă specială. Această idee fundamentală leagă actul mulțumirii de categoria clasei comportativelor, întrucât sentimentul de recunoștință este exprimat ca reacție la invitația moderatoarei, așadar este „o exprimare de atitudine față de purtarea anterioară ori iminentă a unei alte persoane" (Austin 2005: 146). Potrivit lui Austin, dimensiunea perlocuționară a actului mulțumirii poate fi legată de o anumită emoție simțită între vorbitor și interlocutor (Austin 2005: 83), aspect care validează încadrarea acestui act în clasa expresivelor identificată de Searle. Jautz susține că, indiferent de rolul pe care îl îndeplinește într-un enunț, principala funcție a mulțumirii constă în menținerea unei relații armonioase între participanți (Jautz 2013: 126-127). În exemplul (2), efectul perlocuționar se manifestă prin consolidarea relației dintre moderatoare și invitată, precum și prin crearea unei atmosfere relaxante, specifice unui interviu. Așadar, pe baza acestei interpretări, mulțumirea poate fi considerată un act de vorbire comportativ, care, în contextul principiului politeții, presupune manifestarea recunoștinței și a gratitudinii față de un beneficiu primit sub forma unui compliment.

În contextul prezent, performarea mulțumirii sub forma unei formule convenționale („îți mulțumesc") indică aprecierea sinceră a invitatei față de moderatoare, consolidând în acest fel relația de prietenie și de solidaritate. De asemenea, elemente precum apelativele afective „dragă" și „Iuliana", în principiu, adresarea pe nume contribuie la crearea unui teren comun cu interlocutorul, marcând totodată, intimitate discursivă (GALR II 2005: 816). Astfel, pe baza celor prezentate, susținem că actul mulțumirii constituie o strategie a politeții pozitive, prin care vorbitorii accentuează relația de colaborare cu interlocutorul, stabilind relații interpersonale armonioase (GALR II 2005: 815).

5. Concluzii

În lucrarea de față, am demonstrat, pornind de la principiul politeții formulat de Brown și Levinson, că actul mulțumirii se înscrie în sfera strategiilor politeții pozitive. Analiza celor două fragmente arată că esența mulțumirii, ca strategie a politeții pozitive, constă în crearea unei relații de colaborare și solidaritate între vorbitor și interlocutor, menținerea unei atmosfere armonioase și generarea unui anumit grad de intimitate, care permite consolidarea legăturilor interpersonale și exprimarea recunoștinței într-un mod sincer și eficient.

THE APOLOGY ACT IN CONTEMPORARY SPOKEN ROMANIAN: A STRATEGY OF NEGATIVE POLITENESS. A CASE STUDY

Alexandra Crețu
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: In this article, we aim to analyze the act of apologizing as a strategy for expressing negative politeness. In speech act theory, an apology is considered a behavioural speech act, as it concerns both the speaker's conduct and their attitudes in relation to social norms. The illocutionary purpose of an apology lies in expressing regret for an offense that has been committed, thus seeking to restore interactional balance and maintain social harmony. The act of apologizing holds particular importance in relation to social norms because it contributes to the proper functioning of interpersonal relationships. The fragment proposed for analysis is part of our own corpus and was extracted from a televised debate, transcribed according to established conventions. Televised debates, whether cultural or political, are pragmatically relevant because they involve a large number of participants who may or may not follow the rules governing speaking turns, express different opinions and may cause offenses. In this context, the way speakers manage social image and maintain relationships with the audience becomes essential. Interactants may act either in accordance with social norms or out of sincerity, and understanding these attitudes is possible only through interpreting the conversational context. As a strategy of negative politeness, the act of apologizing contributes to maintaining the relationship with the interlocutor by avoiding imposition, expressing difference and, not least, limiting one's own rights and freedoms, thereby facilitating the restoration of conversational balance.

1. Politețea în raport cu actele de vorbire și normele sociale

Politețea reprezintă un fenomen fundamental în cadrul interacțiunilor umane, întrucât reglementează procesele de socializare și modelează dinamica relațiilor interumane. În acord cu Deutschmann (2003: 25), politețea vizează ansamblul normelor sociale, constituite ca un set de reguli prescriptive, care dictează bunele maniere într-o anumită situație. În acest sens, „pentru ca un act să fie considerat politicos, acesta trebuie raportat la un standard; un standard care se află dincolo de actul în sine, dar care este recunoscut atât de către emitent, cât și de către destinatar sau de către o a treia parte care poate participa la interacțiune. Acest standard se bazează pe valori sau norme colective, dobândite, de regulă, de către indivizi timpuriu, în cadrul procesului de socializare" (Márquez Reiter 2000: 2, t.n.)[1]. Politețea este, așadar, un principiu care mediază între individ și planul social (Márquez Reiter 2000: 3), iar această perspectivă se aliniază definiției date de Austin actelor comportative, în care acestea presupun „reacții la comportamentul și soarta altor persoane, precum și atitudini și exprimări de atitudini față de purtarea anterioară ori iminentă a unei alte persoane" (Austin 2005: 146). Potrivit celor remarcate de Rosina Márquez Reiter (2000: 29), actele de vorbire funcționează ca instrumente de investigare a principiului politeții, în baza unor principii pragmatice universale, ba mai mult, modurile de performare par a fi guvernate de principii universale ale cooperării și ale politeții. În acest sens, conform clasificării propuse de Austin (1962), scuza reprezintă un act de vorbire de tip comportativ, implicând evaluarea ofensei produse, asumarea responsabilității și, implicit, repararea acesteia cu scopul restabilirii și menținerii armoniei sociale. În continuare, vom analiza perspectivele mai multor cercetători care discută despre actul scuzei ca strategie a politeții, exemplificând aceste idei prin intermediul unui fragment aparținând discursului mediatic.

[1] „In order for an act to be regarded as polite it has to be set upon a standard, a standard which lies beyond the act itself but which is recognized by both the actor and the hearer or a third party who might be part of the interaction. This standard is based on collective values or norms which have been acquired by individual agents usually ealry in their lives as part of a socialisation process.", t.n., Márquez Reiter, Rosina. 2000. Linguistic Politeness in Britain and Uruguay: A Constrastive Study of Requests and Apologies. Amsterdam/ Philadelphia: John Benjamins Publishing Company, p. 2.

2. Corpusul utilizat în analiză

Exemplul analizat în această lucrare este extras din corpusul propriu, alcătuit din fragmente aparținând discursului mediatic și politic, selectate pe baza relevanței lor pentru investigarea actului scuzei în cadrul conversațional. Corpusul propriu cuprinde o serie de dezbateri televizate (culturale și politice), interviuri, emisiuni realizate în format podcast, precum și o emisiune aparținând genului concurs/ magazin, selectate în funcție de diversitatea strategiilor discursiv-pragmatice pe care le oferă. Convențiile de transcriere sunt preluate din Corpus de limbă română vorbită actuală nedialectală, lucrare coordonată de Luminița Hoarță Cărăușu[2].

Prin selectarea acestor emisiuni, am urmărit suprinderea modului în care actul scuzei apare și se manifestă în contextele sociale variate. Spre deosebire de spațiul privat, în mediul public scuzele funcționează diferit ca elemente ale politeții, întrucât, așa cum susține Leech (1983: 144), cu cât o interacțiune este mai apropiată, cu atât gradul de politețe scade. Vom aborda actul scuzei pornind de la teoria actelor de vorbire inițiată de Austin (1962), în cadrul căreia, scuza este un act de tip comportativ. Am adoptat această abordare, deoarece taxonomia lui Austin, într-o formă sau alta, se regăsește în toate clasificările ulterioare (DPAD 2023: 17).

3. Perspective asupra scuzei ca strategie a politeții

În literatura de specialitate, încadrarea actului scuzei într-una dintre categoriile politeții lingvistice (negativă sau pozitivă) se dovedește a fi dificil de realizat, întrucât perspectivele cercetătorilor variază în funcție de diverși factori contextuali și de modul de percepere a noțiunii de față (engl. face). Termenul derivă din studiile sociologice ale lui Erving Goffman (1967), dar este fundamentat ca atribut social de către Brown și Levinson (1978, 1987). Potrivit lui Goffman, fața constituie „o imagine de sine conturată în termenii unor atribute sociale aprobate de către ceilalți" (Goffman 1967: 5, t.n.)[3]. În baza acestei premise, Brown și Levinson (1987: 61) consideră că imaginea socială poate fi pierdută, menținută sau consolidată în funcție de specificul fiecărei interacțiuni și de intențiile participanților. Autorii identifică două dimensiuni fundamentale: fața pozitivă și fața negativă (Brown și Levinson 1987: 61). Fața pozitivă vizează „imaginea de sine pozitivă și coerentă, sau personalitatea pe care indivizii o afișează, incluzând dorința ca această imagine de sine să fie consimțită și apreciată de ceilalți" (Brown și Levinson 1987: 61, t.n.)[4]. Fața negativă reflectă dorința de „revendicare a indivizilor asupra teritoriului personal și a autonomiei, în esență, dreptul la libertatea de acțiune și la absența constrângerii" (Brown și Levinson 1987: 61, t.n.)[5]. Potrivit acestor idei fundamentale, actul scuzei are implicații atât asupra feței pozitive, cât și asupra feței negative a vorbitorului (Brown și Levinson 1987: 67), întrucât acesta acceptă o formă de umilință prin recunoașterea ofensei, limitându-și totodată, propria libertate de acțiune. Afectând atât fața pozitivă, cât și fața negativă, în literatura de specialitate, scuzele sunt interpretate fie ca strategii ale politeții pozitive, fie ca strategii ale politeții negative. În contextul vulnerabilității reciproce a feței, fiecare individ va încerca să evite actele cu potențial amenințător atât pentru sine, cât și pentru interlocutor (Brown și Levinson 1987: 68). Însă, atunci când aceste acte nu pot fi evitate, este necesară alegerea strategiilor potrivite în procesul de remediere a echilibrului interacțional. Potrivit lui Brown și Levinson, politețea pozitivă presupune o relație de cooperare între vorbitor și ascultător, fundamentată pe respectarea dorințelor celui din urmă (Brown și Levinson 1987: 70). În schimb, politețea negativă presupune protejarea feței ascultătorului prin respectarea dorinței de menținere a teritoriului și a lipsei de contrângere (Brown și Levinson 1987: 70).

[5] „negative face: the basic claim to territories, personal preserves, rights to non-distraction – i.e. to freedom of action and freedom from imposition.", t.n., Brown și Levinson 1987: 61.

Analizând actul scuzei prin raportarea la principiul politeții, Leech (2014: 12) situează actul în discuție la granița dintre politețea pozitivă și politețea negativă. Ca strategie a politeții pozitive, scuza este utilizată de către vorbitor în cadrul interacțiunii cu scopul „realizării unui gest pozitiv, menit să anuleze un dezechilibru care îl favorizează pe el însuși sau îl defavorizează pe interlocutor" (Leech 2014: 12, t.n.)[6]. Potrivit autorului menționat, politețea negativă se realizează prin diminuarea sau atenuarea valorii negative implicate în interacțiune, iar politețea pozitivă, dimpotrivă, prin amplificarea valorii pozitive a relației dintre vorbitor și interlocutor" (Leech 2014: 12, t.n.)[7]. În acord cu această interpretare, putem afirma că scuza poate fi considerată o strategie a politeții pozitive în funcție de intensitatea sentimentului de regret transmis (Leech 2014: 121). Astfel, actul scuzei funcționează ca strategie a politeții pozitive atunci când devine favorabil imaginii interlocutorului, prin menținerea unei bune relații și a echilibrului social (Leech 2014: 121). Analizat în sfera strategiilor politeții negative, actul scuzei are funcție predominant reparatorie, urmărind răsplătirea unei datorii și restabilirea feței interlocutorului (Leech 2014: 121). În ambele situații, beneficiul constă în valorizarea imaginii sociale a interlocutorului, astfel că, din perspectiva lui Leech, scuza poate fi interpretată drept o strategie a politeții pozitive.

Eva Ogiermann (2009: 52) fundamentează ideea potrivit căreia actul scuzei ilustrează o strategie a politeții pozitive, deoarece presupune restabilirea feței vorbitorului și totodată, repararea relației cu interlocutorul. Imaginea socială a vorbitorului se deteriorează în urma comiterii unei ofense, iar rolul esențial în repararea acestei imagini revine scuzei (Ogiermann 2009: 52). Autoarea evidențiază importanța scuzei în menținerea și restabilirea imaginii sociale a vorbitorului, afirmând că atunci când „ne cerem scuze, nu ne riscăm imaginea pozitivă, ci încercăm să o refacem, motiv pentru care scuzele sunt orientate spre satisfacerea dorințelor imaginii pozitive a vorbitorului, în detrimentul imaginii sale negative (Ogiermann 2009: 52, t.n.)[8].

În altă ordine de idei, Brown și Levinson (1978, 1987) stabilesc principii diferite în ceea ce privește strategiile politeții pozitive și negative. Actul scuzei face parte din sfera strategiilor politeții negative, fiind considerat cea de-a șasea strategie în clasificarea propusă de cei doi cercetători (Brown și Levinson 1987: 187). În acord cu informațiile propuse, scuza reprezintă o strategie de atenuare a actelor de amenințare, prin care vorbitorul admite lezarea imaginii interlocutorului, exprimându-și în acest fel, intenția de a repara echilibrul interacțional (Brown și Levinson 1987: 187). Prin exprimarea sentimentelor asociate scuzei, vorbitorul își amenință propria față cu scopul reparării prejudiciului adus feței interlocutorului (Brown și Levinson 1987: 68).

În acord cu Brown și Levinson, Blum-Kulka și Olshtain sunt de părere că prin performarea unei scuze, vorbitorul admite că a avut loc o încălcare a regulilor sociale și recunoaște că este implicat în comiterea acesteia (Blum-Kulka și Olshtain 1984: 206). Ca urmare a acestui fapt, scuzele implică, prin natura lor, o pierdere a feței pentru vorbitor și totodată, o grijă față de imaginea socială a interlocutorului (Blum-Kulka și Olshtain 1984: 206).

În cadrul acestei lucrări, ne aliniem perspectivei propuse de Brown și Levinson, conform căreia actul scuzei reprezintă o strategie a politeții negative, întrucât implică acceptarea unei ofense, asumarea responsabilității și cel mai important, limitarea propriilor libertăți de acțiune în beneficiul interlocutorului. În continuare, vom ilustra printr-un exemplu concret, apartenența scuzei în sfera politeții negative.

4. Actul scuzei ca strategie a politeții negative

În cadrul acestei secțiuni, vom analiza un fragment semnificativ, prin intermediul căruia vom argumenta apartenența scuzei în categoria strategiilor politeții negative. Exemplul propus spre analiză este următorul:

În acest exemplu, actul scuzei este realizat printr-o exprimare verbală indirectă, întrucât nu este vizibilă prezența a ceea ce lingviștii numesc dispozitive de indicare a forței ilocuționare (engl. IFID) (Blum-Kulka și Olshtain 1984: 206). Potrivit lui Searle, actele de vorbire indirecte implică o semnificație diferită față de sensul literal al enunțului și sunt utilizate adesea, pentru a realiza un alt tip de act ilocuționar (Searle 1979: 30-31). În mod implicit, actele indirecte reprezintă strategii de realizare a politeții prin diminuarea forței ilocuționare a enunțului, sporind opționalitatea și libertatea de răspuns a interlocutorului (Leech 1983: 108). Vorbitoarea, Daniela Zeca-Buzura (DZB), nu enunță în mod direct faptul că își cere scuze, motiv pentru care actul ilocuționar poate fi dedus pe baza fundalului comun de cunoștințe, împărtășit de ambii participanți (Bach și Harnish 1979: 72). În același sens, puterile de raționare și de inferență ale interlocutorului dețin un rol pragmatic fundamental (Searle 1979: 32). Astfel, bazându-se pe informațiile factuale de fond, interlocutorul trebuie să realizeze inferența „corectă" pentru a interpreta enunțul ca pe o scuză (Searle 1979: 32).

În cadrul propus spre analiză, vorbitoarea încearcă să preia cuvântul atât pentru a respecta timpul alocat, cât și pentru a introduce un alt subiect în discuție. În conformitate cu cele subliniate de Sacks, Schegloff și Jefferson (1974: 703), organizarea accesului la cuvânt funcționează în baza principiului „un singur vorbitor la un moment dat", iar auto-selectarea (engl. self-selecting) ca vorbitor trebuie să aibă loc în punctul relevant de tranziție (engl. transition relevance place), în care celălalt vorbitor face o pauză sau își arată intenția de a ceda cuvântul. Vorbitoarea, care este și moderatoarea dezbaterii, încalcă aceste reguli prin „întreruperea intenționată" (Dascălu-Jinga 2001: 21) a replicii invitatului (VA), motiv pentru care devin necesare „mecanismele de reparare destinate gestionării erorilor și încălcărilor din sistemul de preluare a cuvântului" (Sacks, Schegloff și Jefferson 1974: 701). Prin cele două replici „↑ CEEA CE + e rezidual + și trebuie să lăsăm=" și „= ↑ TREBUIE SĂ LĂSĂM deoparte_acum + ȘI +=", moderatoarea produce un act de amenințare (engl. face threatening act) la adresa imaginii interlocutorului, limitându-i libertatea de a acționa neîmpiedicat (Brown și Levinson 1987: 61). Ea încercă minimizarea ofensei prin utilizarea unor atenuatori (engl. hedges), precum verbul la persoana întâi, numărul plural „să lăsăm", folosit de două ori, fapt care indică necesitatea de a întrerupe discursul în vederea gestionării timpului și a celorlalte subiecte (Brown și Levinson 1987: 204). Utilizarea acestor forme verbale indică dorința vorbitoarei de a evita impunerea în fața interlocutorului, arătându-i respect și solidaritate (Brown și Levinson 1987: 200).

Prin enunțul „↑ DOMNULE ministru ++ dacă tot + TOT vorbiți + ↑ și eu vă:: + ↑ neelegant + vă::: + DIN MOTIVE DE TIMP + vă::: + tot + împiedic + să continuați + ↑ o să vă las totuși să vorbiți + de îndată + CE VEDEM + <MARC lucrarea care a lipsit >”, vorbitoarea recunoaște încălcarea normei sociale și încearcă remedierea relației cu interlocutorul. Exprimarea scuzei în această manieră indirectă dezvăluie mai multe aspecte ale actului de vorbire analizat.

Revenind la modalitatea de exprimare indirectă a actului scuzei, aceasta constituie o strategie a politeții negative (Brown și Levinson 1987: 91, Leech 2014: 11), întrucât este diminuat gradul de impunere a vorbitorului asupra interlocutorului. În contextul actualei dezbateri, vorbitoarea recurge la mai multe strategii specifice actului scuzei, urmărind remedierea ofensei comise și a relației cu interlocutorul (Trosborg 1987: 148). Mai întâi de toate, moderatoarea își umilește propria față prin critica adusă discursului său: „și eu vă:: + ↑ neelegant + vă::: + DIN MOTIVE DE TIMP + vă::: + tot + împiedic + să continuați”, asumându-și în acest fel, vina și responsabilitatea pentru întreruperea replicii ministrului (Olshtain și Cohen 1990: 46). În raport cu strategiile propuse de Fraser, formularea actuală a actului scuzei poate fi asociată strategiei a noua, care presupune „oferirea unei reparații” (Fraser 1981: 263). Autoarei ofensei propune îndreptarea situației prin restituirea dreptului la cuvânt interlocutorului „↑ o să vă las totuși să vorbiți”, în urma vizionării materialului propus. Folosirea mai multor strategii în performarea actului scuzei sugerează o forță ilocuționară mai puternică, încercările de salvare a imaginii interlocutorului devin mai evidente, iar gradul de umilință a vorbitorului, mai accentuat (Olshtain și Cohen 1990: 47). Moderatoarea se adresează interlocutorului său cu „DOMNULE ministru” și folosind persoana a doua, numărul plural în cazul pronumelui „vă” și al verbelor „vorbiți”, „să continuați” și „să vorbiți”. În acord cu Brown și Levinson, utilizarea pronumelor la plural pentru adresarea către o singură persoană derivă din strategia de impersonalizare, rezultatul fiind exprimarea deferenței (Brown și Levinson 1987: 179). Pentru a evidenția statutul social și pentru a satisface totodată, dorința interlocutorului de a fi tratat cu superioritate (Brown și Levinson 1987: 179-180), Daniela Zeca-Buzura se adresează invitatului printr-un apelativ onorific (engl. honorifics) „DOMNULE ministru”. În contextul amplificării gradului de formalitate, manifestarea respectului devine mai pronunțată, iar relațiile dintre participanți, mai detensionate (Brown și Levinson 1987: 179).

În raport cu ideile prezentate în cadrul acestei analize, putem susține că actul scuzei constituie, „prin excelență”, o manifestare a politeții negative (Kerbrat-Orecchioni 1992: 150). Scopul ilocuționar vizează un schimb reparator, menit „să lipească bucățile unei interacțiuni provizoriu fragilizate și amenințate de ofensa produsă” (Kerbrat-Orecchioni 1992: 150, t.n.)[9]. În exemplul analizat, este ilustrată, după cum am observat, formularea unei scuze indirecte, care, raportată la principiul politeții, funcționează ca mijloc de atenuare a actelor amenințătoare la adresa imaginii interlocutorului și implicit, ca strategie de manifestare a deferenței față de acesta (Leech 1983: 108). Potrivit lui Leech, pe măsură ce actul devine mai indirect, cu atât gradul de politețe crește (Leech 1983: 108). Așadar, vorbitoarea recurge la mai multe strategii de reparare a ofensei produse în urma întreruperii discursului interlocutorului. Pentru a evidenția lipsa intenției și pentru a restaura armonia conversațională, ea folosește următoarele strategii de remediere: asumarea responsabilității, umilirea propriei fețe, oferirea unei reparații și adresarea cu forme onorifice cu scopul de a sublinia diferența de statut social. Utilizarea mai multor strategii reflectă grija față de interlocutor și efortul de a restabili echilibrul dinaintea ofensei (Brown și Levinson 1987: 72-74). În general, întreruperea discursului nu constituie o formă gravă de ofensă, însă, fiind în contextul dezbaterii televizate, moderatoarea acordă o atenție deosebită procesului de restabilire a imaginii de sine a interlocutorului, dar și a propriei persoane. Potrivit acestor argumente, putem conchide că actul scuzei joacă un rol fundamental în interacțiunile de zi cu zi (Kerbrat-Orecchioni 1992: 150), acela de a menține armonia și echilibrul relațional dintre interlocutori.

5. Concluzie

Am argumentat, pe baza perspectivelor multiple propuse de cercetători, că actul scuzei se înscrie în sfera strategiilor politeții negative. Analiza exemplului selectat susține cercetările prezente în literatura de specialitate, demonstrând că actul scuzei implică manifestarea respectului, a deferenței și evitarea impunerii față de interlocutor. Așa cum am remarcat, prezența actului scuzei în interacțiune este fundamentală, întrucât contribuie la menținerea armoniei și la protejarea imaginii sociale a interactanților, aspecte esențiale în contextul dezbaterilor televizate.

FRACTAL TRAUMA THEORY: MULTILEVEL PATTERNS OF PSYCHOLOGICAL AND CULTURAL WOUNDS

Amalia Purda
PhD Student, "Aurel Vlaicu" University of Arad

Abstract: Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT) proposes that trauma is not merely an isolated rupture in personal or collective life but a patterned phenomenon that repeats across scales of experience. Drawing on psychoanalysis, cultural trauma studies, and complexity science, FTT identifies three interrelated principles – self-similarity, recursive structure, and systemic interdependence – as central to understanding how trauma persists, replicates, and transforms. The theory illuminates parallels between individual symptoms (such as flashbacks and avoidance) and collective practices (such as silences, memorials, or cycles of violence), suggesting that trauma functions fractally, producing recursive loops across generations, families, and societies. Through theoretical grounding and case studies – including Holocaust memory, postcolonial trauma, and familial abuse cycles – FTT demonstrates how trauma's "shape" remains recognizable across diverse contexts. By integrating insights from psychology, literary studies, sociology, and complexity theory, FTT offers an interdisciplinary framework that not only maps trauma's persistence but also highlights potential leverage points for healing.*

Introduction

Trauma studies have long recognized that overwhelming experiences disrupt both memory and identity, often returning in repetitive and fragmented forms rather than as coherent narratives (Freud, 1920/1955; Caruth, 1996; Herman, 1992). Early psychoanalytic accounts emphasized trauma's recursive qualities, while subsequent scholarship expanded analysis to cultural memory and collective identity (Halbwachs, 1992; Alexander, 2004). More recently, attention has turned to how trauma reverberates across generations, families, and communities (Danieli, 1998; Hirsch, 2012; Yehuda et al., 2014).

This article advances Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT) as a synthetic framework that bridges these perspectives. Borrowing from complexity science, particularly the notion of fractals (Mandelbrot, 1982), FTT highlights how trauma patterns recur at multiple scales of human experience, from the psyche to the nation. The concept of fractals – structures that exhibit self-similarity, recursive formation, and systemic interdependence – provides a heuristic for analysing trauma as both repetitive and interconnected across levels.

By reframing trauma as fractal, this study emphasizes both the persistence of destructive patterns and the possibility of systemic interventions. Survivors' flashbacks, intergenerational abuse cycles, and collective rituals of commemoration all reveal trauma's recursive dynamics. Yet, by tracing these patterns, we also identify points where cycles can be interrupted – whether through therapy, cultural remembrance, or systemic reform. In doing so, FTT contributes to ongoing interdisciplinary conversations in psychology, cultural studies, and social theory, offering a vocabulary for integrating insights across otherwise disconnected domains.

Theoretical Background

Modern trauma theory originates in psychoanalysis, where early clinicians sought to understand how overwhelming experiences disrupt the mind. A central finding was that traumatic events resist normal integration into memory. Rather than being recalled in a coherent narrative, they return as nightmares, flashbacks, or compulsive reenactments. In Beyond the Pleasure Principle, Freud (1920/1955) observed that trauma patients "cannot remember the whole of what is repressed… [they are] obliged to repeat the repressed material as a contemporary experience." This "repetition compulsion" suggested that trauma loops time: the psyche, unable to symbolize the shock, relives it in the present. Freud even linked this repetition to a deeper drive beyond pleasure – the "death drive" (Freud, 1920/1955).

Later psychoanalysts elaborated Freud's insight, which became foundational for trauma theory. Caruth (1996) emphasized trauma's belatedness: it is not assimilated at the moment but returns later through intrusive symptoms. Because it overwhelms cognition, the traumatic event remains unspeakable, a "foreign body" lodged in memory. For Caruth, to be traumatized is to be possessed by involuntary repetition – a paradox of simultaneous forgetting and compulsive recall. Trauma memory is thus nonlinear, fragmented, and often embodied rather than narrativized.

This recursive quality appears in relational life as well. Survivors often re-enact trauma in new contexts – for example, abused children unconsciously seeking abusive partners or becoming abusive themselves. Ferenczi (1933/1988) and later theorists described this as "identification with the aggressor," in which victims internalize the perpetrator and reproduce the dynamic. Trauma, in this sense, generates behavioural feedback loops.

Herman (1992) likewise described trauma as fragmenting memory and self. Survivors oscillate between reliving and avoiding the trauma, with symptoms surfacing as nightmares, panic, or somatic distress rather than coherent story. Trauma shatters attachments and trust, producing alienation and contradictory patterns of rage and numbness. Herman also broadened trauma studies to include domestic and sexual violence, noting that chronic childhood abuse creates "complex trauma" marked by enduring relational distortions and self-perpetuating expectations of betrayal.

LaCapra (2001) extended psychoanalysis into cultural memory, distinguishing between "acting out" (repetitive reliving) and "working through" (gaining distance and integrating trauma into narrative). Acting out traps one in recursive loops – flashbacks, compulsive speech, or symbolic reenactments – while working through interrupts these cycles by situating trauma in the past. These modes are not mutually exclusive but oscillating processes, visible even at collective scales: societies may repeat violence or commemoration (acting out) while also pursuing truth-telling or reconciliation (working through).

Psychoanalysis highlights trauma's defining features: non-linear temporality, recursive repetition, memory fragmentation, and relational transmission. While these concepts were first articulated at the level of the individual or dyad, they suggest patterns scalable to families, generations, and cultures. Trauma's fractal nature – loops repeating across different levels of psychic and social life – emerges here in its earliest theoretical form.

Trauma in Cultural Studies and Collective Memory: From Individual Wounds to Cultural Narratives

While psychology focused on individual suffering, scholars in the humanities and social sciences extended trauma theory to collectivities. Cultural trauma and collective memory studies ask how societies absorb catastrophic events – wars, genocides, slavery, colonialism – into shared stories, symbols, and identities. This macro-level perspective complements the micro-level insights of psychoanalysis.

Alexander (2004: 1) defines cultural trauma as an event that leaves "indelible marks upon group consciousness, marking their memories forever and changing their future identity." Such traumas are not just personal but collective: the Holocaust for Jewish communities, slavery for African Americans, or colonial violence for Indigenous peoples. They become focal points of identity through memorials, anniversaries, and political claims (e.g., reparations, "never again"). Crucially, Alexander emphasizes that cultural trauma is constructed through public narratives; events must be represented as traumatic in literature, art, rituals, and historiography to become embedded in collective memory.

Memory studies provide further tools. Halbwachs (1992) showed that memory is always socially framed, while J. Assmann (1995) distinguished between communicative memory (interpersonal, short-term) and cultural memory (institutionalized, long-lasting). Traumas often migrate from one to the other as survivors die and their stories become inherited narratives. Hirsch's (2012) concept of postmemory describes how the children of survivors – especially of the Holocaust – internalize their parents' traumatic past so deeply that it functions as their own "memory." This exemplifies trauma's fractal quality: second-generation experience is a smaller-scale echo of the first. Research on intergenerational trauma supports this. Studies of Holocaust survivors' children found heightened vulnerability to psychological distress (Danieli, 1998), while Yehuda et al. (2014) provided biological evidence for transmission across generations. Psychoanalyst Fraiberg, Adelson, and Shapiro (1975) captured this phenomenon with the metaphor of "ghosts in the nursery" – unresolved parental trauma haunting the next generation.

At the community level, Erikson (1976) showed that disasters like the Buffalo Creek dam collapse damage not only individuals but also the "tissues of community" itself, eroding trust and cohesion. Similarly, LaCapra (2001) argued that societies can become trapped in "acting out" historical trauma through compulsive repetition, while "working through" requires critical reflection and contextualization.

Cultural trauma studies also highlight politics and power. Postcolonial critics (e.g., Craps, 2013) argue that trauma theory long cantered Euro-American histories while neglecting colonized and marginalized groups. Fanon (1963/2004) analysed how colonial violence reproduces itself fractally: structural domination at the macro level engenders interpersonal aggression and psychic fragmentation within colonized communities. Here trauma is not just remembered but actively perpetuated through systems of oppression.

Cultural trauma theory demonstrates how individual and collective processes mirror one another: both involve fragmented memory, cycles of repetition, and transgenerational transmission. A survivor's flashback and a nation's memorial ritual may seem different, but both enact the same structure of past erupting into present. This self-similarity across scales lays crucial groundwork for Fractal Trauma Theory.

Complexity and Fractals: Self-Similarity, Recursion, and Systemic Patterns

Having reviewed trauma's micro- and macro-dynamics, we now turn to complexity theory – specifically fractals – as a unifying framework for multilevel patterns. Coined by Mandelbrot (1982), "fractal" describes structures that are self-similar across scales. A fern frond resembles the entire plant, just as each branch of a coastline resembles the larger outline. Formally, fractals are generated by recursion: a simple rule is iterated, feeding its output back into itself, to yield infinite complexity. The Mandelbrot set exemplifies this principle, producing endlessly self-similar boundary patterns.
Fractals are compelling because they clarify the relationship between part and whole. Though real-world systems are rarely perfectly fractal, many exhibit approximate self-similarity or scale-invariance – patterns repeating with variation at different levels (Vicsek, 1992). This perspective is useful for trauma: patterns in an individual may echo in families, communities, and cultures. The analogy is heuristic, not mathematical, but it helps reveal trauma's recursive dynamics. We have already seen hints of this: cycles of abuse across generations, postmemory as a reproduction of parental memory, and collective rituals mirroring individual flashbacks.

Key fractal features applied to trauma include:

- Self-Similarity. In fractals, each part resembles the whole; in trauma, patterns recur at multiple scales. An individual survivor may avoid reminders of trauma, while a society may avoid confronting historical trauma through silence or denial. Both are avoidance coping strategies, differing only in scale. Cycles of violence show similar replication: the abused child who becomes abusive parallels a community marked by widespread intergenerational abuse. Self-similarity does not imply exact duplication, but recognizable analogy (Mandelbrot, 1982).
- Recursion. Fractals emerge through recursive processes; trauma often behaves similarly, generating feedback loops. War trauma can fuel renewed conflict; personal trauma symptoms may lead to further harmful experiences (Caruth, 1996). Recursion also shapes traumatic temporality: survivors frequently report feeling "stuck" in the moment of trauma, reliving it as if time has frozen (Herman, 1992). Anthropologists and psychologists describe addiction and trauma alike as producing "fractal time," a fragmented temporality where the past repeatedly invades the present (Bateson, 2001; Haskell et al., 2020).

- Systemic Interdependence. Fractals occur in complex systems where local interactions generate global patterns. Likewise, trauma circulates between individuals and collectives: traumatized people shape their communities, and social denial or acknowledgment in turn affects survivors (LaCapra, 2001). Healing, too, propagates: individual recovery can alter family or community dynamics, while collective recognition (e.g., truth commissions, memorials) can ease personal healing. Neglecting one level risks perpetuating trauma at others (Alexander, 2004).

Fractal Trauma Theory therefore posits that trauma's effects scale up and down: the "shape of suffering" remains recognizable whether in nightmares or national memory. Victim–perpetrator dynamics, dissociation versus intrusion, and oscillations between remembering and forgetting recur at multiple levels.

Fractal analogies are not speculative imports: social science and physiology already document fractal structures. City sizes, market fluctuations, neural branching, and cardiac rhythms all exhibit fractal organization (Bak, 1996; Goldberger et al., 2002). Cognitive patterns like rumination may also resemble recursive loops (Ihlen & Vereijken, 2010). If human biology and society tend toward fractal structures, it follows that trauma – a major disruption – might lock these tendencies into rigid, pathological forms. Recognizing these patterns may help map both the spread of trauma and possible routes to healing.

Core Principles of Fractal Trauma Theory

Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT) rests on three interrelated principles – self-similarity, recursive structure, and systemic interdependence. Taken together, these principles capture how trauma manifests across multiple scales, from the intimate psychology of individuals to the dynamics of families, communities, and entire cultures.

Self-similarity does not imply exact duplication but rather structural analogy, where forms or dynamics repeat across scales (Mandelbrot, 1982). At the individual level, a trauma survivor may avoid reminders of the event, while at the collective level a society may avoid confronting its violent past through silence or denial. Both responses reflect avoidance coping strategies (American Psychiatric Association, 2013). Freud's (1920/1955) notion of repetition compulsion – where individuals unconsciously reenact traumatic dynamics – finds parallels in societies that reproduce oppressive structures after revolutions or that fall into recurring cycles of ethnic violence. Intergenerational trauma illustrates this self-similarity vividly: children of survivors often show hypervigilance, distrust, or depression even without directly experiencing the original trauma (Danieli, 1998; Yehuda et al., 2014). Hirsch's (2012) concept of postmemory describes how children of Holocaust survivors inherit traumatic knowledge in structurally similar ways, while Fraiberg, Adelson, and Shapiro's (1975) "ghosts in the nursery" metaphor captures how unresolved parental trauma is replicated in the next generation. Self-similarity also appears in narrative forms: fragmented, looping, and silenced testimonies recur both in individual survivor accounts and in broader cultural memory practices (Caruth, 1996; Herman, 1992). These echoes – such as the parallel between an individual's hypervigilance and a community's collective "siege mentality" – demonstrate how trauma operates fractally across levels.

The second principle is recursive structure and repetition cycles. Trauma rarely unfolds in a straight line; instead, it tends to circle back, binding past and present in repetitive loops. Individually, PTSD symptoms such as flashbacks and reenactments trap survivors in oscillations between intrusion and avoidance (Herman, 1992). Freud (1920/1955) identified this process as repetition compulsion. Families, too, may reproduce trauma through feedback loops, as in the cycle of abuse where past wounds are unconsciously re-enacted (Fraiberg et al., 1975). On a larger scale, cycles of retaliatory violence – atrocity answered by atrocity – illustrate recursion at the collective level (Erikson, 1976). Caruth's (1996) concept of belatedness underscores trauma's recursive temporality, where the past erupts into the present, sometimes decades later, through testimony, memory, or renewed conflict.

Even in therapeutic contexts, recursion emerges in the phenomenon of reenactment, where patients unconsciously recreate traumatic dynamics in the relationship with the therapist. As LaCapra (2001) notes, recognizing these loops is the first step toward breaking them.

The third principle is systemic interdependence of trauma levels. Trauma at one level – individual, familial, or cultural – inevitably influences and is influenced by others. Wars, for instance, wound both societies and families; conversely, unresolved personal trauma can ripple outward into broader communities (Halbwachs, 1992; Alexander, 2004). Family systems theory demonstrates that one member's symptoms often reflect wider systemic distress, while the degree to which societies deny or acknowledge trauma profoundly shapes individual healing (Herman, 1992). Patterns also move across levels: authoritarian family dynamics may reinforce authoritarian political cultures, while collective ideologies of mistrust can be internalized as personal worldviews (Fanon, 1963/2004). Importantly, trauma at the collective scale has emergent properties – it is not merely the sum of individual wounds but produces new features, such as cultural narratives or identity shifts, which in turn shape future generations (Hirsch, 2012). Recognizing this interdependence opens possibilities for healing: a survivor's recovery may improve family dynamics, just as community truth-telling rituals can support individual recovery. Conversely, neglecting one level – such as treating individuals without addressing structural injustices – risks perpetuating harm. For this reason, FTT calls for multi-level, interdisciplinary approaches to both understanding and intervening in trauma.

Methodology: Applying Fractal Trauma Theory to Cultural and Literary Analysis

Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT) is not only descriptive but also methodological, offering tools for analysing texts, testimonies, and cultural practices. It combines literary close reading, historical contextualization, psychological insight, and systems theory to trace trauma patterns across levels of experience. The goal is to identify multilevel trauma dynamics and their interrelationships.

1. Identify Trauma Narratives at Each Level. Establish the trauma's content and scale – personal, familial, collective. In literature, this might involve both a protagonist's individual trauma and a broader historical trauma (e.g., slavery in Morrison's Beloved). In cultural rituals, one might distinguish between personal testimonies and symbolic representations of collective trauma (Herman, 1992).
2. Map Patterns and Motifs. Track recurring symbols, structures, and emotional tones. Fragmented plots, silences, or looping narrative arcs often mirror trauma's psychological effects (Caruth, 1996). Comparing personal and collective arcs may reveal parallels (e.g., family disintegration echoing civil war).
3. Scale the Analysis Up and Down. Shift between micro and macro readings, zooming in on individual dynamics and out to collective narratives. For instance, binary thinking in a survivor's memoir may align with polarized rhetoric in the surrounding culture (Alexander, 2004).
4. Integrate Psychoanalytic and Cultural Hermeneutics. Combine psychoanalytic readings of symptoms (dreams, compulsions, transference) with cultural-historical interpretations (collective silence, denial, symbolic rituals). This dual approach often reveals self-similar structures (Freud, 1920/1955; Hirsch, 2012).
5. Trace Recursive Temporalities. Identify loops in time: flashbacks, repetitive rituals, anniversaries, or narrative circles. Trauma often disrupts linear time, producing cyclical returns (Herman, 1992; Caruth, 1996).
6. Compare Across Texts and Domains. Examine how trauma themes recur in memoirs, fiction, testimony, and commemorations. Cross-domain comparison can highlight fractal patterns, such as silence manifesting in survivor accounts, novels, and memorial practices alike (Halbwachs, 1992).
7. Validate with Scholarship and Context. Anchor interpretations in historical and psychological research to avoid overreach. For instance, intergenerational patterns in literature can be cross-checked with studies on epigenetic trauma transmission (Yehuda et al., 2014).

8. Note Points of Break or Divergence. Self-similarity is rarely total. Breaks in the pattern – such as a character escaping repetition even while society remains trapped – may signal agency or healing (LaCapra, 2001).

For instance, in Beloved, Sethe's personal trauma mirrors slavery's collective trauma. The ghost Beloved embodies recursion (the past invading the present), while avoidance operates both personally (Sethe's repression) and communally (society's reluctance to confront slavery). Healing occurs systemically when the community intervenes, exemplifying interdependence.

By structuring analysis around these steps, FTT ensures balanced attention to individual psychology and collective history, while systematically tracing how trauma patterns repeat, scale, and diverge.

Case Studies: Applications of Fractal Trauma Theory

To demonstrate the explanatory power of Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT), this section presents three case studies at different scales: Holocaust memory (collective and intergenerational trauma), postcolonial trauma (historical, political, and cultural wounds), and familial abuse cycles (intergenerational trauma in intimate systems). In each, we trace patterns of self-similarity, recursion, and systemic interdependence across levels of experience.

Case Study 1: Holocaust Memory – Individual Wounds and Collective Postmemory

The Holocaust (Shoah), in which six million Jews and millions of others were murdered by Nazi Germany, stands as a paradigmatic instance of collective trauma. Its legacy endures through survivor testimony, cultural memory, and intergenerational transmission (Hirsch, 2012; Alexander, 2004). At the individual level, survivors often reported intrusive symptoms such as nightmares, flashbacks, survivor's guilt, and profound difficulties articulating their experiences. Primo Levi captured this struggle when he described language as inadequate to convey the horrors of the camps, leaving survivors "obliged to speak but unable to be understood" (Levi, 1988). These contradictory impulses – avoidance on the one hand, compulsion to retell on the other – echo Freud's (1920/1955) concept of repetition compulsion.

At the collective level, silence initially dominated many postwar societies, reflecting a kind of cultural avoidance. It was only decades later that a "memory boom" took hold, with testimonies, memorials, and Holocaust education gaining prominence (Assmann, 2010). Hirsch's (2012) notion of postmemory describes how children of survivors internalized this trauma indirectly, often through fragmented stories, silences, or parental behaviours. Art Spiegelman's Maus exemplifies recursive storytelling, with a second-generation author narrating both his father's trauma and his own struggle to represent it. Within this field of memory, fractal patterns become visible. Silence and delayed eruption appear at both personal and cultural levels, culminating in remembrance rituals such as Yom HaShoah that echo the intrusive recurrence of individual nightmares. Trauma transmits recursively across generations, both behaviourally and biologically, as demonstrated by Yehuda et al.'s (2014) findings on epigenetic markers in survivors' descendants. Finally, systemic interdependence emerges in the fact that individual healing often depended on societal acknowledgment. Suppression of Jewish specificity in Soviet memory politics left survivors doubly wounded, while institutions such as Spielberg's Shoah Foundation enabled testimony that shaped both personal recovery and collective remembrance.

Case Study 2: Postcolonial Trauma – Fractal Wounds of Colonization and Independence

Colonialism involved extensive violence, cultural suppression, and racial domination, leaving legacies that persisted long after independence struggles. These legacies include partitions, systemic inequality, and fractured identities (Fanon, 1963/2004; Craps, 2013). At the individual level, colonial subjects often internalized a sense of inferiority, a dynamic Fanon (1967/2008) famously described as "colonial mentality." His psychiatric case studies reveal how humiliation and domination by colonizers were displaced into domestic spaces, with men reenacting patterns of violence against women and children.

At the collective level, independence often produced identity crises and renewed violence. The Partition of India is a clear example of traumatic rupture: millions were displaced or killed, while silenced memories resurfaced decades later in oral history projects (Butalia, 1998). Rwanda's genocide similarly demonstrates how colonial-era ethnic stratification created recursive cycles of violence that culminated in catastrophic atrocities (Mamdani, 2001). The fractal dynamics of postcolonial trauma can be seen in several ways. Oppression recurred in altered forms, with new elites sometimes mirroring colonial domination – a large-scale "identification with the aggressor." Interpersonal violence within families mirrored macro-colonial structures, showing self-similarity across levels (Fanon, 1967/2008). Recursion is also evident: colonization's traumas repeated across generations, as in the case of residential schools in Canada, which produced enduring family dysfunction (Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada, 2015). Even in literature, recursion appears formally, as postcolonial novels like Salman Rushdie's Midnight's Children employ nonlinear and fragmented narrative structures to mirror fractured histories. Systemic interdependence underscores that healing requires both personal and structural work. South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission illustrates this: testimony provided individual catharsis while also fostering national acknowledgment (Tutu, 1999). By contrast, denial or silence by former colonial powers perpetuates harm across generations.

Case Study 3: Intergenerational Family Trauma – Cycles of Abuse and the "Ghosts" Within Trauma often manifests fractally in families through cycles of abuse and neglect. Research consistently shows that many abusers were themselves abused, though repetition is not inevitable (Fraiberg, Adelson, & Shapiro, 1975; van der Kolk, 2014). At the individual and familial levels, abuse and substance misuse frequently transmit across generations, with children unconsciously reenacting parental patterns, particularly under conditions of stress. Attachment theory demonstrates how insecure attachment styles may repeat unless interrupted by intervention (Main & Solomon, 1990).

These patterns follow the core principles of FTT. Self-similarity is evident in victim–perpetrator role inversion, where children who were once victims reproduce abusive dynamics as adults. Emotional dysregulation – hypervigilance, rage, or dissociation – also appears in toggled forms across generations. Recursion manifests in trauma loops over time, as parental triggers evoke both past wounds and present conflicts, thereby recreating abusive scenarios. Belief systems such as "violence is normal" reinforce these cycles, making them difficult to break. Systemic interdependence further complicates these dynamics. Family trauma is shaped and sustained by wider contexts such as poverty, cultural acceptance of corporal punishment, and lack of social services. Conversely, systemic supports – therapy, education, and legal reforms – can disrupt these cycles. Biological interdependence may also contribute, as trauma-related epigenetic changes influence how offspring regulate stress (Yehuda et al., 2014). Together, these examples illustrate how intimate family trauma resonates with the broader fractal model of repetition, recursion, and interdependence.

Critiques and Limitations of Fractal Trauma Theory

Like any ambitious theoretical framework, Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT) invites critique. One common objection concerns the question of metaphor versus empirical validity. Critics argue that "fractal trauma" risks being little more than a metaphorical flourish, borrowing the language of mathematics without providing measurable or testable claims. Trauma, after all, is not literally a Mandelbrot set, and there is a danger that FTT simply rebrands concepts such as intergenerational transmission or cultural trauma in novel terminology. In response, it is important to clarify that "fractal" functions as analogy rather than mathematical identity. Its value lies in synthesis: FTT encourages analysts to identify repeating patterns across scales and to conceptualize trauma as a dynamic system rather than as isolated phenomena. Similar complexity metaphors are widely and productively used in fields such as sociology and ecology. The test of FTT is not whether trauma can be assigned a fractal dimension, but whether this lens fosters integrative insights. At the same time, the analogy must not be overstretched – differences, asymmetries, and contexts remain crucial.

A second critique focuses on determinism and pessimism. Because FTT highlights cycles and repetitions, it may appear to suggest that trauma is an inexorable curse, endlessly transmitted across generations. Such a view risks fatalism and could discourage agency or hope. However, the intention of FTT is precisely the opposite: recognizing trauma patterns can empower individuals and communities to break them. In clinical practice, for example, naming the "cycle of abuse" often motivates clients to seek new strategies for parenting or relationships. Complexity theory also reminds us that even entrenched systems can shift into new attractors, suggesting that change is always possible. Incorporating research on resilience and post-traumatic growth helps counter determinism by showing that many survivors do not replicate harm but instead transform trauma into activism, empathy, or healing.

A related limitation is the risk of overgeneralization and loss of nuance. Stressing structural similarities across levels can flatten important differences. For instance, equating a survivor's involuntary flashback with a society's intentional memorial ritual risks reductionism; while both may repeat the past, their functions and meanings differ significantly. Moreover, trauma manifests differently across cultural contexts, raising concerns of Western-centrism if FTT is applied uncritically. Here again, clarification is needed: self-similarity in FTT is meant as analogy, not identity. Memorials and flashbacks may share structural repetition, but ritual can serve to transform what is pathological at the individual level into something reparative or commemorative at the collective level. Sensitivity to cultural and historical contexts is essential. FTT offers one analytic layer but should never replace close attention to difference.

A fourth concern is testability and scientific rigor. Without clear criteria for falsification, FTT risks being seen as more interpretive framework than scientific theory. If patterns repeat, the theory appears confirmed; if they do not, one can invoke divergence. This flexibility can make FTT seem unfalsifiable. Yet parts of the theory can be operationalized. Empirical research already documents heightened trauma symptoms in the children of Holocaust survivors (Yehuda et al., 2014), while historians and social scientists trace cycles of retaliatory violence in post-conflict societies. Linguistic or textual analysis might reveal recurring trauma motifs across generations of literature or testimony. Nonetheless, FTT is best understood as an interdisciplinary framework: its strength lies in organizing observations and generating new questions, not in making predictive claims with scientific precision. Finally, there are ethical concerns, especially around blame and agency. Stressing repetition may risk excusing perpetrators by portraying them as inevitable products of prior trauma, or it may pathologize entire communities as "traumatized cultures." Such interpretations would minimize accountability or reduce groups to victimhood. Here it is vital to stress that explanation does not mean exoneration. Recognizing that abusers may themselves have been victims clarifies the roots of behaviour but does not absolve responsibility. On the cultural scale, FTT should never define a group solely by its trauma. Creativity, resilience, and agency always coexist with legacies of violence. Careful, balanced application can avoid "trauma essentialism" and instead highlight both continuity and transformation. Fractal Trauma Theory offers a compelling integrative lens that connects micro- and macro-level phenomena, but its limitations must be acknowledged. Its metaphorical foundations, potential for deterministic interpretations, risks of overgeneralization, challenges of testability, and ethical implications all call for careful application. Properly used, however, FTT can complement domain-specific research, highlight resilience alongside repetition, and point toward the leverage points where trauma cycles can be disrupted. Its strength lies in providing a systemic, multi-level framework that honours nuance while recognizing trauma's persistence and the potential for healing.

Conclusion and Future Directions

Trauma is often described as rupture – a break in the fabric of individual life or collective history. Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT) reframes trauma not only as rupture, but also as a pattern of rupture that can replicate across scales of human experience. By emphasizing self-similarity, recursive cycles, and systemic interdependence, FTT offers an integrated lens for understanding both the persistence of trauma and possibilities for healing.

Across this study, we have traced how nightmares of a survivor echo in the memorial rituals of a nation, how the violence of colonization reverberates in domestic abuse, and how silence in one generation becomes unspoken knowledge in the next. Such patterns suggest that trauma encodes itself in stories, bodies, and institutions, outlasting the original wound.

The central contribution of FTT is interdisciplinary integration. Drawing on psychoanalysis (repetition compulsion), literary trauma studies (fragmentation, unspeakability), social theory (cultural trauma, collective memory), and complexity science (recursion, feedback loops), FTT offers a common vocabulary to link insights across fields. In doing so, it shows how psychological, historical, and cultural processes are interdependent.

Equally important, FTT highlights trauma as a process, not merely an event. Because trauma unfolds iteratively, identifying where cycles can be interrupted points us toward high-leverage interventions – whether preventing abuse in at-risk families, or establishing collective rituals of remembrance that transform silence into meaning before distortions take hold.

Several avenues for further research could deepen or test Fractal Trauma Theory (FTT). One promising direction lies in empirical studies of transmission. Longitudinal and cross-generational research could investigate how trauma manifests not only in survivors but also in their children and grandchildren. Such studies could also explore whether open acknowledgment and narrative integration reduce fractal repetition compared to silence and suppression. These findings would help clarify the extent to which narrative practices, memory work, and cultural discourse can alter the trajectory of inherited trauma.

Another fruitful path involves comparative cultural analyses. Examining cases such as Rwanda and the post-Yugoslav states could illuminate why some societies appear trapped in recursive cycles of violence while others achieve reconciliation and relative peace. Such cross-case studies would refine our understanding of the systemic and cultural factors that either sustain or disrupt trauma fractals, including leadership, justice processes, and commemorative practices.

In addition, computational modelling may offer a novel tool for exploring trauma dynamics. Agent-based or network simulations could model how trauma spreads – or is dampened – through social systems, revealing which individuals or institutions serve as "hubs" of influence. Identifying such nodes could inform interventions that maximize impact, much like epidemiological modelling identifies points of leverage in controlling contagion.

Beyond research, FTT carries implications for trauma-informed policy. Applying its principles to education, healthcare, or justice could involve "trauma audits" of policies, ensuring that well-intentioned practices do not inadvertently replicate harm. Pilot programs might test community-wide interventions that integrate multiple sectors – schools, mental health services, law enforcement, and cultural institutions – to address trauma as a systemic rather than isolated issue.

Finally, FTT opens doors for philosophical and ethical inquiry. By highlighting inherited trauma patterns, it raises difficult questions about agency, accountability, and justice. How should societies balance empathy for those shaped by historical trauma with the need to hold individuals and groups accountable for their actions? These dilemmas are especially acute in transitional justice contexts, where perpetrators may themselves be victims of earlier violence. Speculatively, FTT could also be extended to emerging global traumas such as climate change. Patterns of denial, disaster, and inadequate response may replicate across generations, suggesting that ecological trauma too might follow fractal-like dynamics. Together, these directions point toward a rich interdisciplinary agenda. They underscore that FTT is not a closed system but a framework designed to evolve as it is tested across psychological, cultural, and global contexts.

If trauma is fractal, perhaps healing can be fractal too. Small acts of repair within families may ripple outward to communities, while collective justice efforts can enable individual recovery. Recognizing these interdependencies invites us to see trauma not in isolation but in relation, and to imagine interventions that resonate across levels.

FTT affirms what survivors often intuit: personal journeys are tied to larger histories, and societal healing depends on attending to individual hearts. Trauma may repeat, but so can resilience. Just as "hurt people hurt people," so too "healed people heal people." Seeing trauma's fractal patterns is a first step toward rewriting them into patterns of recovery, justice, and growth – from the neuron to the nation.

CONSEQUENTIALISM BETWEEN MORAL EFFICIENCY AND HUMAN DIGNITY

Daniela Onița-Ivașcu
PhD Student, Technical University of Cluj Napoca, North University Center in Baia Mare

Abstract: This essay examines consequentialism as a moral theory and its influence on contemporary ethical thought, highlighting both its appeal and its inherent limitations. Beginning with the classical utilitarianism of Bentham and Mill, the text explores how the pursuit of maximizing happiness can generate ethical dilemmas that sacrifice the individual for the sake of collective good. Major critiques by Kant, Rawls, Williams, Appiah, and Anderson are discussed, emphasizing the risks of instrumentalizing persons and reducing morality to an abstract calculation of outcomes. The essay also presents alternatives such as rule utilitarianism, G.E. Moore's ideal consequentialism, and hybrid theories that seek to reconcile consequences with respect for rights and human dignity. Additionally, it analyzes the implications of consequentialist reasoning in public policy, bioethics, and criminal justice, where the tension between efficiency and principle becomes most evident. The conclusion argues for a balanced ethical framework that incorporates responsibility for consequences while preserving fundamental moral values, thus avoiding a drift toward a purely instrumental view of morality.

Consecinționalismul ocupă un loc paradoxal în filosofia morală contemporană: este, în același timp, una dintre cele mai influente și una dintre cele mai contestate teorii. Pe de o parte, el pare să vorbească „limba" lumii moderne, în care deciziile politice, economice, juridice sau tehnologice se justifică aproape inevitabil prin invocarea consecințelor lor: costuri, beneficii, impact social. Pe de altă parte, tocmai această orientare spre rezultate ridică întrebări tulburătoare despre sacrificiul individului, relativizarea valorilor morale și riscul transformării eticii într-un simplu calcul al utilității. Într-o epocă în care deciziile unui guvern, ale unui algoritm sau ale unui sistem de justiție afectează milioane de vieți, consecinționalismul devine mai mult decât un capitol de manual: devine o problemă de conștiință colectivă.

În forma sa cea mai generală, consecinționismul este o teorie normativă care susține că valoarea morală a unei acțiuni se determină exclusiv în funcție de consecințele ei. Nicolae Sfetcu rezumă această idee afirmând că o acțiune este corectă dacă produce „cele mai bune consecințe posibile comparativ cu alte alternative disponibile", criteriul maximizării binelui fiind central pentru orice formă de consecinționism.[1035] Shelly Kagan formulează și mai concis: acțiunile trebuie evaluate „exclusiv în funcție de bunătatea (sau valoarea morală) a rezultatelor lor".[1036] Așadar, întrebarea morală fundamentală nu mai este „ce îmi poruncește datoria?" sau „ce fel de persoană sunt?", ci „ce efecte produce ceea ce fac?" și „cât bine rezultă din acțiunea mea?".

Comparat cu teoriile deontologice, care pun accentul pe reguli și principii ce trebuie respectate indiferent de context, consecinționismul se prezintă ca o etică a flexibilității și a adaptării. El permite, cel puțin în teorie, să justificăm unele abateri de la norme în situații excepționale, dacă rezultatul global este superior. În contextul deciziilor de criză: războaie, pandemii, catastrofe naturale, această abordare pare nu doar atractivă, ci inevitabilă: când resursele sunt limitate, când vieți trebuie „salvate" sau „pierdute" în funcție de criterii de prioritate, apelul la consecințe pare singura cale rațională. Și totuși, tocmai acolo unde consecinționismul pare cel mai realist, se află și pericolul său cel mai mare: acela de a transforma persoanele în „mijloace” într-un calcul impersonal, în care binele total contează mai mult decât demnitatea fiecărei vieți în parte.

Cea mai cunoscută întruchipare a consecinționismului este utilitarismul clasic, asociat cu Jeremy Bentham și John Stuart Mill. Bentham, jurist și filosof englez, propune un model de morală extrem de „modern” pentru timpul său: binele moral este plăcerea, răul moral este durerea, iar acțiunile trebuie evaluate printr-un fel de „calculus hedonistic” care ține seama de intensitatea, durata, certitudinea și întinderea plăcerilor și durerilor produse.[1037] Fericirea devine, astfel, o mărime care poate fi, cel puțin teoretic, cuantificată și comparată. Dictonul său, „cea mai mare fericire pentru cel mai mare număr” exprimă ambiția de a transforma etica într-o știință a fericirii colective, un instrument de reformă socială și juridică.[1038] Mill va prelua această moștenire, dar o va rafina profund. Păstrând principiul utilității, el insistă asupra distincției dintre plăceri „superioare”, intelectuale, morale, estetice și plăceri „inferioare”, predominant senzoriale. Celebrul său enunț, „este mai bine să fii un Socrate nemulțumit decât un prost satisfăcut”, nu este doar o formulă ingenioasă, ci o tentativă de a salva demnitatea umană în interiorul unei teorii care risca să reducă omul la un consumator de plăceri.[1039] Fericirea nu mai este doar o sumă de senzații plăcute, ci calitatea unei vieți care îmbină libertatea, dezvoltarea capacităților, relațiile profunde și participarea responsabilă la viața comunității.

În pofida acestor nuanțări, critici importanți ai utilitarismului vor observa rapid că, în forma sa clasică, teoria lasă deschisă posibilitatea sacrificării individului în numele binelui general. Dacă singurul criteriu moral este maximizarea fericirii totale, nimic nu pare, în principiu, să interzică sacrificarea unei persoane sau a unei minorități, dacă acest lucru crește „scorul global al fericirii”. Scenariile celebru discutate, medicul care ar putea salva cinci pacienți prin uciderea unuia sănătos, sau judecătorul care condamnă un nevinovat pentru a potoli o mulțime furioasă au rolul de a arăta că, dus la limită, utilitarismul intră în conflict cu intuițiile morale cele mai elementare legate de dreptate și demnitate.

Bernard Williams subliniază că o astfel de teorie poate ajunge să „înstrăineze” individul de propria sa conștiință morală, obligându-l să adopte decizii contrare angajamentelor sale profunde, atâta vreme cât acestea sporesc utilitatea totală.[1040] John Rawls, dintr-o perspectivă politică, observă că utilitarismul tratează societatea ca pe un simplu agregat de bunăstări, ignorând faptul că ea este, de fapt, „o cooperare între persoane distincte, fiecare cu propria viață”, ceea ce face inacceptabil sacrificiul sistematic al unora pentru beneficiul altora.[1041]

Pe acest fundal se poate înțelege mai bine acuzația că, în adâncul său, utilitarismul ascunde o formă de „egoism etic sistemic”. Nu este vorba, aici, de egoismul individual, ci de faptul că sistemul moral însuși, punând în centrul său doar fericirea agregată, tinde să transforme indivizii în simple „unități de calcul”, valorizate doar în măsura în care contribuie pozitiv la rezultatul global. Egoul nu mai este persoana, ci suma abstractă a bunăstărilor; sacrificiul unuia devine acceptabil dacă „funcționează” pentru ansamblu. În termenii lui Kant, principiul fundamental al moralității, să nu tratezi niciodată persoana doar ca mijloc, ci întotdeauna și ca scop este aici permanent amenințat.[1042]

Egoismul etic, ca teorie separată, radicalizează în alt sens logica consecinționistă. Aici se afirmă că fiecare agent moral ar trebui să urmărească exclusiv propriul interes: acțiunea corectă este aceea care produce cele mai bune consecințe pentru sine. Dacă utilitarismul diluează individul într-o masă anonimă, egoismul etic îl izolează într-o auto-referință absolută. Paradoxal, însă, ambele forme pun în pericol relația autentică cu celălalt: într-un caz, celălalt devine un „număr" într-un calcul colectiv, în celălalt, un instrument sau un obstacol pentru propriul succes.

În fața acestor extreme, conceptul de altruism rațional poate fi văzut ca o încercare de reechilibrare. Altruismul rațional nu ne cere să ne anulăm interesele proprii, nici să ne sacrificăm complet convingerile în numele unui bine abstract; el propune o formă de grijă pentru ceilalți ghidată de rațiune, conștientă de interdependența dintre indivizi și de natura socială a omului. A acționa pentru binele altora devine, aici, nu o obligație impusă din exterior, nici o emoție necontrolată, ci o formă de coerență rațională: înțeleg că o lume în care și ceilalți sunt bine este, în ultimă instanță, o lume mai bună și pentru mine. În acest sens, altruismul rațional împărtășește cu utilitarismul preocuparea pentru binele general, dar refuză să reducă persoana la o variabilă într-o funcție de maximizare.

Dacă utilitarismul clasic identifică binele cu fericirea, G.E. Moore va contesta această reducție și va propune consecinționismul ideal. În Principia Ethica, el argumentează că este o „eroare naturalistă" să definim binele printr-o proprietate naturală, cum ar fi plăcerea: „binele" este o noțiune simplă și indefinibilă, percepută printr-o anumită intuiție morală.[1043] Moore extinde sfera valorilor intrinsece: frumusețea, adevărul, cunoașterea, prietenia autentică sunt, toate, bunuri care contează „în sine", independent de plăcerea pe care o produc. Consecinționismul ideal rămâne, astfel, o teorie a consecințelor, dar nu a consecințelor hedonice, ci a consecințelor asupra unui „mosaic" complex de valori. O acțiune este corectă dacă promovează cea mai bună combinație posibilă de astfel de bunuri.[1044]

Prin această mișcare, Moore oferă consecinționismului un suflu pluralist, mult mai apropiat de experiența reală a vieții morale, în care oamenii sacrifică uneori confortul pentru adevăr, plăcerea pentru fidelitate, siguranța pentru libertate. Totuși, critica nu întârzie să apară: fără criterii clare de ierarhizare a valorilor, apelul la „intuiția morală" riscă să devină vag și subiectiv, mai ales într-o societate pluralistă în care intuițiile diferă radical.[1045] Consecinționismul ideal reprezintă un pas important în depășirea hedonismului, dar nu reușește să elimine dificultățile de fond legate de măsurarea și compararea consecințelor.

Problema măsurării consecințelor este, de altfel, una dintre cele mai serioase obiecții aduse consecinționismului. Orice decizie bazată pe rezultate presupune, în mod implicit, o formă de anticipare a viitorului: trebuie să evaluăm, cât mai realist, ce efecte va avea o acțiune, nu doar imediat, ci și pe termen mediu și lung. Dar viitorul este structural imprevizibil; lanțurile cauzale sunt complexe, iar efectele secundare, inclusiv cele simbolice și psihologice sunt adesea imposibil de anticipat. O politică publică ce pare benefică pe termen scurt poate genera, în timp, forme subtile de injustiție sau de dependență; o decizie medicală luată în logica maximizării numărului de vieți salvate poate produce, în plan social, neîncredere și sentimentul de abandon al unor categorii vulnerabile.

Chiar dacă am presupune, idealizant, că am putea previziona corect consecințele, rămâne întrebarea: cum le măsurăm? Fericirea, suferința, demnitatea, respectul, umilința nu sunt „unități" ușor de cuantificat. Utilitarismul clasic vorbea despre intensitate și durată ale plăcerii, dar cum comparăm suferința profundă a unei persoane cu disconfortul moderat al altora? Este justificabil să adunăm suferințele a zece oameni și să concluzionăm că ele sunt „mai rele" decât moartea unuia singur? Cum agregăm suferința fizică cu cea psihică, pierderea unui membru al familiei cu pierderea unui loc de muncă, umilirea cu foamea?

Aceste întrebări arată că dificultatea consecinționismului nu este doar practică, ci profund conceptuală. Orice tentativă de a agrega stări umane într-un „scor global de bine" riscă să simplifice excesiv complexitatea vieții morale. David Pârvu, reflectând asupra raportului dintre etică și raționalitate, subliniază că orice decizie morală autentică presupune nu doar calcul, ci și reflecție critică și asumarea limitelor cunoașterii noastre.[1046] Etica deciziei, cum o descrie Ștefan Ganea, nu poate fi redusă la algoritmi; ea presupune un dialog permanent între principii, context și conștiință.[1047]

În acest punct devine relevantă o altă linie de critică, legată de existența valorilor morale absolute. Consecinționismul, în forma sa pură, pare să nege că ar exista norme care să fie valabile „indiferent de consecințe". Dacă rezultatul global justifică mijloacele, atunci minciuna, trădarea sau chiar uciderea unui inocent pot fi, în anumite circumstanțe, moral acceptabile. Kant respinge radical această idee: o acțiune este morală nu pentru că produce un anumit efect, ci pentru că se conformează unui imperativ categoric, unei reguli care poate fi voită ca lege universală.[1048] Astfel, minciuna rămâne greșită chiar dacă, într-un caz particular, pare să producă un rezultat mai bun decât adevărul; uciderea unui inocent rămâne moral inacceptabilă, indiferent câte vieți s-ar salva prin acest act.

Rawls, la rândul său, propune o teorie a justiției în care principiile sunt stabilite „în poziția originară", sub vălul ignoranței, tocmai pentru a preveni sacrificiul celor mai slabi în numele unei fericiri agregate.[1049] În această construcție, anumite drepturi de bază – libertățile fundamentale, egalitatea de șanse – nu pot fi încălcate nici măcar pentru a obține o creștere globală a bunăstării. Dreptatea nu este, aici, o consecință a maximizării utilității, ci o condiție de posibilitate a unei ordini politice legitime.

În fața acestor obiecții, apărătorii consecinționismului au încercat să reformuleze teoria într-o manieră mai „soft". Utilitarismul de regulă (rule utilitarianism), de pildă, susține că nu trebuie evaluată fiecare acțiune în parte, ci trebuie urmărite acele reguli care, dacă ar fi urmate de toți, ar produce cele mai bune consecințe pe termen lung.[1050] Astfel, reguli precum „nu ucide un inocent" sau „nu condamna un nevinovat" pot fi justificate consecinționist: o societate care le-ar încălca ar produce, în ansamblu, mai multă teamă, neîncredere și suferință decât una care le respectă. Consecinționismul pluralist, de inspirație mooreană, încearcă, la rândul său, să recupereze caracterul obiectiv al unor valori precum adevărul, frumusețea sau prietenia.[1051]

Cu toate acestea rămâne senzația că, odată ce acceptăm principiul de bază, „doar consecințele contează", nici o regulă nu mai este cu adevărat inviolabilă. În situații suficient de extreme, chiar și cele mai solide reguli pot fi „suspendate" în numele binelui general. Aici intervine, în mod interesant, și critica unor autori contemporani care analizează consecinționismul din perspectiva identității și egalității.

Kwame Anthony Appiah arată că o etică exclusiv consecinționistă riscă să ignore dimensiunea identitară a persoanei: apartenențele culturale, istorice, de gen sau de rasă nu sunt simple „date de context", ci elemente constitutive ale demnității morale.[1052] Elizabeth Anderson, la rândul ei, critică abordările care reduc egalitatea la o distribuție optimă a resurselor; pentru ea, egalitatea este înainte de toate o relație morală între cetățeni, iar o etică ce maximizează doar „rezultatul global" poate legitima relații subtile de dominație și umilire.[1053]

Dacă părăsim planul teoriilor abstracte și ne uităm la impactul social al consecinționismului, observăm că el este prezent, explicit sau implicit în multe domenii. În politica publică, criteriul eficienței și al utilității colective este omniprezent: de la alocarea bugetelor în sănătate și educație la deciziile de infrastructură sau de politică socială. însuși imagina o legislație construită în întregime pe principiul utilității, în care legile se justifică prin tendința lor de a spori fericirea cetățenilor.[1054]

În bioetică, deciziile privind resursele limitate, cine primește un organ pentru transplant, cine are acces la un tratament experimental, cum se prioritizează pacienții într-o criză sanitară sunt în mod vădit consecinționiste. Peter Singer, de exemplu, argumentează că ignorarea suferinței atunci când putem interveni eficient este moral echivalentă cu o complicitate la acea suferință, ceea ce justifică obligații extinse de ajutorare, inclusiv dincolo de granițele naționale sau de specie.[1055] Beauchamp și Childress, însă, propun un cadru în care principiile autonomiei, binefacerii, non-maleficenței și justiției limitează simpla maximizare a beneficiilor: o decizie corectă nu poate fi redusă la numărul de vieți salvate, ci trebuie să țină seama și de respectul pentru persoană și de corectitudinea procedurilor.[1056]

În justiția penală, consecinționismul se manifestă prin accentul pe prevenție, reabilitare și protecția societății. H.L.A. Hart, de pildă, arată că justificarea pedepsei poate fi înțeleasă atât în termeni retributivi (pedeapsa ca răspuns meritat la o faptă), cât și în termeni consecinționiști (pedeapsa ca mijloc de descurajare și de menținere a ordinii sociale).[1057] R.A. Duff subliniază dimensiunea comunicativă a pedepsei: ea transmite un mesaj către infractor și către comunitate, vizând reînnoirea relațiilor morale, nu doar „neutralizarea" unui pericol.[1058]

Abordările exclusiv consecinționiste ale pedepsei care justifică sancțiunile numai prin efectele lor viitoare sunt, însă, vulnerabile la critica clasică: dacă tot ce contează este impactul social, atunci condamnarea unui nevinovat ar putea fi, în anumite circumstanțe, „justificată", dacă ea descurajează infracționalitatea sau calmează o opinie publică inflamată. Bassiouni, analizând istoria conceptului de pedeapsă, avertizează că o asemenea logică poate eroda garanțiile procesuale și poate transforma individul într-un „mijloc statistic" de menținere a ordinii.[1059] De aceea, mulți autori contemporani pledează pentru un model mixt: principiile retributive (vinovăția, proporționalitatea) trebuie să limiteze și să structureze logica consecinționistă a prevenției.[1060]

În tot acest peisaj, Martha Nussbaum atrage atenția asupra unui element pe care consecinționismul îl bagatelizează adesea: rolul emoțiilor în moralitate. Emoțiile; compasiunea, rușinea, indignarea, speranța nu sunt simple „distorsiuni" ale rațiunii, ci expresii ale valorilor noastre cele mai profunde. O etică ce se vrea umană nu poate ignora modul în care oamenii trăiesc efectiv binele și răul, dreptatea și nedreptatea; reducerea tuturor acestor trăiri la un calcul de utilitate riscă să producă un tip de raționalitate rece, în care eficiența morală se obține cu prețul dezumanizării.

Ajungem astfel la o concluzie care nu este, poate, spectaculoasă, dar este necesară: consecinționismul este, astăzi, indispensabil, dar insuficient. El este indispensabil pentru că ne obligă să ne gândim la efectele reale ale acțiunilor noastre, la responsabilitatea pentru urmări, la modul în care deciziile afectează nu doar intențiile, ci viețile concrete ale oamenilor. În lumea politicilor publice, a bioeticii și a justiției penale, a evalua consecințele nu este un lux filosofic, ci o datorie minimă. Dar consecinționismul este insuficient pentru că nu poate, singur, să garanteze respectul pentru demnitatea fiecărui individ, să fundamenteze limitele de neîncălcat ale drepturilor omului, să dea seama de importanța principiilor și a emoțiilor morale.

O etică matură trebuie să îmbine atenția față de consecințe cu fidelitatea față de principii și respectul pentru persoane. Ea trebuie să recunoască faptul că uneori, chiar în fața unui bine colectiv aparent mai mare, există lucruri care nu pot fi făcute fără a trăda însăși ideea de umanitate – uciderea unui inocent, tortura, umilirea sistematică a unor grupuri vulnerabile. Consecinționismul poate și trebuie să intre în dialog cu deontologia, cu etica virtuții, cu teoriile dreptății și ale identității; numai din acest dialog poate rezulta o filosofie morală capabilă să răspundă complexității lumii în care trăim.

Dacă etica ar fi doar un joc al numerelor, am putea delega întreaga responsabilitate algoritmilor. Faptul că încă ne punem întrebări despre ce „se cade" și ce „nu se cade" dincolo de rezultate arată, însă, că între total și individ, între eficiență și conștiință, se joacă drama oricărei filosofii morale coerente. Consecinționismul este una dintre figurile principale ale acestei drame, puternică, seducătoare, problematică, iar reflecția critică asupra lui nu ne îndepărtează de responsabilitatea morală, ci ne apropie de o formă mai lucidă și mai umană a ei.

SCHOOL BULLYING IN ROMANIAN AND HUNGARIAN COMMUNITIES IN GERMANY: THEORETICAL PERSPECTIVES AND EMPIRICAL INVESTIGATION

Nora Alice Györbiró
PhD Student, „Babeș-Bolyai" University of Cluj-Napoca

Abstract: This paper explores school bullying as a multidimensional phenomenon at the intersection of educational, sociological, and criminological perspectives. The study integrates a theoretical analysis with empirical research conducted among Romanian and Hungarian migrant families in Germany. Online interviews were conducted in 38 Facebook groups. The findings show that bullying primarily occurs within same-ethnicity groups, involving verbal and occasionally physical aggression. While the German educational system provides effective integration overall, internal group dynamics can lead to conflicts that are difficult to manage. The results emphasize the need for prevention and intervention strategies tailored to multicultural and digital contexts.

1. Introducere

Hărțuirea școlară reprezintă una dintre cele mai persistente probleme ale mediului educațional contemporan, având implicații profunde asupra dezvoltării emoționale, sociale și academice a copiilor și adolescenților. Primele cercetări sistematice asupra fenomenului au fost realizate în anii 1970 în Norvegia și Suedia de către Dan Olweus, considerat fondatorul cercetărilor moderne asupra bullyingului (Olweus, 1978; 1993). De la acea perioadă, studiile asupra fenomenului s-au extins la nivel global, dezvoltând un cadru interdisciplinar solid.

2. Cadru teoretic

2.1.Definiția bullyingului

Bullyingul este definit ca un comportament agresiv, intenționat și repetitiv, caracterizat printr-un dezechilibru de putere între agresor și victimă (Olweus, 1993). Smith și Sharp (1994) subliniază faptul că aceste comportamente nu sunt izolate, ci inserate într-o dinamică de grup care validează sau inhibă violența.

2.2.Forme clasice de bullying

Literatura de specialitate distinge între:

- bullying fizic – lovire, împingere, distrugerea bunurilor (Rigby, 2002);
- bullying verbal – insulte, amenințări, porecle (Craig & Pepler, 1997);
- bullying relațional – excludere socială, izolare, răspândirea de zvonuri (Crick & Grotpeter, 1995).

Aceste forme sunt asociate cu riscuri crescute de anxietate, depresie și abandon școlar (Wolke & Lereya, 2015).

2.3.Bullying digital și inteligența artificială

Odată cu dezvoltarea rețelelor sociale, a apărut cyberbullyingul, definit ca utilizarea tehnologiilor digitale pentru a intimida sau hărțui (Smith et al., 2008). Cercetările recente arată că inteligența artificială și algoritmii de recomandare pot contribui la amplificarea conținutului agresiv și la crearea de identități false (deepfakes), crescând impactul psihologic asupra victimelor (Patchin & Hinduja, 2020; Kowalski et al., 2019).

2.4.Perspective sociologice asupra agresorilor

Din perspectivă sociologică, agresorii nu sunt doar indivizi izolați, ci produși ai unor structuri sociale mai largi. Espelage și Swearer (2003) afirmă că bullyingul este adesea corelat cu modele familiale violente, statut socio-economic precar și norme de grup care valorizează dominanța. Bourdieu (1991) explică aceste comportamente prin teoria capitalului simbolic: agresorii caută recunoaștere și putere în cadrul grupului.

Studii interculturale demonstrează că bullyingul apare în toate culturile, dar se manifestă diferit în funcție de normele sociale și nivelul de integrare al grupurilor etnice (Verkuyten & Thijs, 2002; Menesini & Salmivalli, 2017).

2.5.Legătura dintre bullying și criminalitatea organizată

Conform declarațiilor directoarei Europol, Catherine De Bolle, copiii vulnerabili, în special cei expuși hărțuirii școlare, sunt ținte predilecte pentru rețelele de criminalitate organizată (De Bolle, 2025). Aceste rețele recrutează minori prin jocuri online și platforme digitale, transformându-i în instrumente ale violenței. Astfel, bullyingul capătă o dimensiune criminologică, depășind cadrul strict educațional. Conform declarațiilor directorului executiv Europol, Catherine De Bolle, rețelele criminale recrutează tot mai frecvent minori, profitând de vulnerabilitățile psihologice sau sociale ale acestora. Această tendință reprezintă, potrivit Europol, cea mai gravă amenințare actuală la adresa securității Uniunii Europene, întrucât destabilizează coeziunea socială și lovește direct în nucleul familial. Fenomenul este agravat de proliferarea infracționalității digitale, amplificată de dezvoltarea accelerată a inteligenței artificiale, precum și de interacțiunea cu alte riscuri emergente, inclusiv războiul hibrid și criminalitatea transfrontalieră. Catherine De Bolle afirmă, că problematica bullyingului — deseori tratată ca o temă marginală în educație — devine un factor de risc major, integrat într-un ecosistem de vulnerabilizare a minorilor. Rezultatele subliniază necesitatea regândirii politicilor educaționale și sociale, prin consolidarea strategiilor de prevenție, consiliere psihologică și protecție digitală, pentru a limita capacitatea rețelelor criminale de a instrumentaliza tinerii și pentru a preveni consecințele severe asupra siguranței europene.

3. Dimensiuni interculturale ale bullyingului școlar și testarea ipotezei privind discriminarea lingvistică în Germania

Globalizarea și mobilitatea populației au determinat apariția unor comunități tot mai diverse cultural. În școli, acest fenomen aduce atât beneficii, cât și provocări, printre care se numără și creșterea riscului de bullying intercultural victimă. În context multicultural, agresiunea poate fi motivată de diferențe etnice, lingvistice, religioase sau culturale, devenind un hibrid între bullying și discriminare

4. Cadrul metodologic al cercetării

4.1.Ipoteza cercetării

Presupoziția de la care a pornit cercetarea a fost aceea că, în contextul educațional din Germania, elevii proveniți din familii de altă naționalitate sunt mai frecvent expuși hărțuirii și agresiunii școlare, principalul factor de risc fiind necunoașterea sau stăpânirea insuficientă a limbii germane. S-a presupus că barierele lingvistice generează dificultăți de comunicare în cadrul grupului , favorizând marginalizarea socială și vulnerabilitatea la comportamente agresive (Olweus, 1993; Smith, 2019).
Această ipoteză a fost formulată în acord cu cercetările interculturale anterioare, care au arătat că elevii migranți sau aparținând minorităților etnice pot fi expuși unor riscuri sporite de victimizare, în special în contexte de integrare lingvistică deficitară (Ttofi & Farrington, 2011; Due et al., 2005).

4.2.Metodologia cercetării

Pentru verificarea ipotezei a fost utilizată tehnica interviului online, aplicată în perioada 1 septembrie – 15 noiembrie 2025. Instrumentul a fost distribuit în 38 de grupuri de pe platforma Facebook, dedicate comunităților de limbă română și maghiară din Germania.

Respondenților li s-a solicitat să transmită un scurt comentariu privind experiențele de hărțuire sau discriminare ale copiilor lor, în special în ciclul primar. Au fost obținute 56 de răspunsuri valide de la părinți care se confruntau în prezent sau se confruntaseră în ultimii trei ani cu dificultăți legate de adaptarea școlară a copiilor

Distribuția pe naționalități a respondenților a fost următoarea:

- 54% familii provenite din România;
- 32% familii provenite din Ungaria;
- 9% familii provenite din Republica Moldova;
- 5% familii cu structură etnică mixtă.

4.3.Rezultate privind competențele lingvistice

Un element central al analizei a fost legat de utilizarea limbii germane în mediul familial. Rezultatele indică faptul că:

- doar 6% dintre respondenți au declarat că folosesc limba germană la nivel conversațional în familie;
- doar 2% afirmă că vorbesc frecvent limba germană cu propriii copii.

Participanții au declarat în proporție de 100% că, în cadrul întâlnirilor dintre familii de origine română sau maghiară, comunicarea se realizează exclusiv în limba maternă, limba germană nefiind utilizată în contexte informale.

4.4.Discriminare școlară și statutul ipotezei

Contrar ipotezei inițiale, datele cercetării nu au confirmat existența discriminării sistematice din partea școlilor pe criterii de necunoaștere a limbii germane. La întrebarea privind discriminarea instituțională:

- 84% dintre respondenți au declarat că nu au identificat comportamente discriminatorii legate de apartenența etnică din partea cadrelor didactice și nici din partea colegilor de clasă.
- restul de16% au afirmat că, există discriminare, dar nu au dat exempl concrete, în aces sens.
- 31% dintre părinți au semnalat anumite dificultăți de învățare ale copiilor, în special la limba germană și matematică, însă au subliniat faptul că elevii au beneficiat de sprijin educațional adecvat.

Prin urmare, ipoteza inițială nu a fost confirmată în cadrul prezentului eșantion.

4.5.Fenomenul neașteptat: bullying intragrupal

Un rezultat semnificativ și neașteptat al cercetării a constat în identificarea unui tip de bullying intragrupal, manifestat în interiorul grupurilor etnice. Majoritatea respondenților au raportat cazuri de:

- agresiune verbală;
- umilire publică;
- etichetare negativă între copii care vorbeau aceeași limbă maternă.

Aceste comportamente au fost raportate atât în cadrul clasei, cât și la nivelul interacțiunilor dintre elevi din clase diferite, dar de vârstă apropiată. S-au raportat, de asemenea, cazuri de agresiune fizică în afara perimetrului școlar.

Acest rezultat confirmă teoriile sociologice conform cărora bullyingul nu este exclusiv rezultatul diferențelor etnice, ci o dinamică de putere care poate apărea și în interiorul grupurilor omogene (Espelage & Swearer, 2010).

4.6.Studiu de caz

Un caz ilustrativ este cel al unui elev în vârstă de 7 ani, care prezenta dificultăți ușoare de învățare la limba germană și matematică. Cadrele didactice au propus părinților ca opțiuni fie repetarea anului, fie înscrierea copilului într-o formă alternativă de educație (sistem Montessori sau învățământ special).

După ce această informație a devenit cunoscută în cadrul grupului etnic, copilul a devenit ținta hărțuirii psihologice din partea colegilor de aceeași naționalitate. Cadrul didactic nu a putut identifica cauza fenomenului, neînțelegând limba română, observând doar manifestări de tristețe, apatie și retragere socială.

În final, părinții au fost nevoiți să transfere copilul într-o altă școală, cu sprijinul consilierului educațional.

4.7.Concluzii sociopedagogice

Rezultatele studiului indică faptul că sistemul educațional german dispune de mecanisme funcționale de integrare a elevilor din diverse naționalități, iar cadrele didactice sunt, în general, pregătite pentru lucrul în contexte multiculturale (OECD, 2018)

Totuși, un punct slab identificat este monitorizarea bullyingului în limbile materne ale minorităților, fenomen care scapă ușor de sub controlul cadrelor dactice atunci când nu există competențe lingvistice adecvate.

Responsabilitatea intervenției este transferată frecvent către grupul parental, care, în lipsa formării de specialitate, poate amplifica problema în loc să o atenueze (Farrington, 2011).

4.8.Concluzie

Rezultatele indică faptul că ipoteza inițială referitoare la discriminarea interetnică nu a fost confirmată de datele obținute. Dimpotrivă, sistemul educațional german pare să dispună de mecanisme eficiente de integrare a elevilor proveniți din medii multiculturale, iar cadrele didactice par bine pregătite pentru gestionarea diversității culturale.

Cu tot caraterul orientativ, cercetarea evidențiază existența unui fenomen mai puțin vizibil și dificil de controlat: hărțuirea intraetnică, care se manifestă exclusiv în cadrul grupurilor de copii de aceeași origine lingvistică și culturală. Această formă de bullying prezintă un risc major tocmai prin caracterul său „invizibil" pentru cadrele didactice, care nu cunosc limba de interacțiune a elevilor. Responsabilitatea intervenției este, în aceste cazuri, transferată aproape exclusiv către părinți, care, în absența competențelor de specialitate, pot amplifica involuntar conflictul, în loc să îl atenueze.

Deși datele nu sunt reprezentative din punct de vedere statistic, ele oferă indicii relevante privind dinamica reală a bullyingului intraetnic în școlile din Germania și subliniază necesitatea dezvoltării unor strategii de prevenție cultural și lingvistic adaptate.

Acest rezultat confirmă teoriile sociologice conform cărora bullyingul nu este exclusiv rezultatul diferențelor etnice, ci o dinamică de putere care poate apărea și în interiorul grupurilor omogene (Espelage & Swearer, 2010).

METROPOLITAN VENIAMIN COSTACHI OF MOLDAVIA. THE ROLE AS POLITICAL FIGURE DURING THE RUSSIAN OCCUPATION (1828–1834)

Mirela Beguni
Lecturer, PhD, "Ştefan cel Mare" University of Suceava

Abstract: On the basis of the Byzantine custom of the "symphonic" relationship between State and Church, Metropolitan Veniamin Costachi had, in his capacity as head of the Church of Moldavia, not only a major spiritual role but also an important role in the governance of the country. The period of Russian occupation, linked to the Russo–Turkish War (1828–1829), was extremely difficult: to the political and economic abuses of the occupying army was added the imposition of essential legislative changes through the drafting and enforcement of The Organic Regulation. Thus, the political role, prestige, and influence of the Church and its representatives were drastically reduced. By secularizing the state, Romanian legislation made the transition toward modernity.

Personalitate proeminentă a Bisericii Ortodoxe Române, mitropolitul Veniamin Costachi[1] a dominat Moldova primei jumătăţi a veacului al XIX-lea, impunându-se, în această învolburată perioadă premergătoare constituirii statului modern, nu doar ca slujitor liturgic, ci şi ca român iubitor de patrie şi ca luptător pentru drepturile ei.

Cinstit ca un „obraz ce purta fruntea neamului"[2], Veniamin a avut un foarte însemnat rol şi în guvernarea ţării, căci, în baza colaborării tradiţionale între biserică şi stat, mitropoliţii aveau o poziţie de frunte şi în plan politic, rolul de caimacam – care i-a revenit lui Veniamin de trei ori în timpul ocupării celui mai înalt scaun ierarhic al ţării – fiind ilustrativ în acest sens.

Ipostaza de om politic l-a pus frecvent pe mitropolit în conflict cu potentaţii timpului, căci opoziţia faţă de aceştia pentru binele românilor, chiar şi cu riscul propriei funcţii sau a vieţii, l-au transformat în persoană indezirabilă pentru stăpânitori, concludente fiind perioadele războaielor ruso-turce purtate pe teritoriul moldav, răscoala tătărăşenilor sau Eteria, pentru a oferi doar câteva exemple.

La scurtă vreme de la devastarea prilejuită de revolta grecească, Moldova s-a confruntat cu apăsătoarea ocupaţie rusească începută în anul 1828, ce a adus „iarăşi nenorociri, iarăşi persecuţii, iarăşi refugieri şi chiar exilări; ţara românilor ia fizionomie rusească, angării nesfârşite, biruri înmulţite, silnicii câte îşi poate mintea închipui, lipsă, foamete, boli, şi chiar ciuma distrugătoare", care au „sfâşiat cu necruţare pământul românesc"[3].

Sosit la Iaşi cu trupele ţariste, Feodor Petrovici Pahlen, primul dintre cei trei guvernatori ai Principatelor, a alcătuit Divanul săvârşitor (împlinitor) din mitropolitul Veniamin şi patru boieri, apoi, considerat la Petersburg ca lipsit de energie, şi-a dat demisia, în ianuarie 1829, fiind înlocuit cu generalul Petru Teodorovici Jeltuhin, om aspru şi violent, care, dotat cu toate însuşirile necesare pentru a impune tăcerea, „uita uşor regulile cele mai elementare ale bunei cuviinţe", chiar faţă de marii boieri şi de ierarhi[4].

Cu toate că abuzurile ruşilor faţă de populaţia Principatelor au depăşit toate limitele previzibile, noua invazie costându-i pe români, după expresia agentului consular francez Viollier „mai mult sânge şi lacrimi decât toate celelalte la un loc”[5], respectul general de care mitropolitul Veniamin se bucura, ca şi faima de persoană sfântă şi făcătoare de minuni pe care şi-o câştigase în faţa poporului şi, de la o vreme, chiar şi în faţa conducătorilor ruşi[6], întărită de unele întâmplări extraordinare[7], au ferit biserica şi ţara de multe greutăţi[8].

Astfel, graţie respectului şi simpatiei inspirate tuturor claselor sociale prin „moravurile sale pline de puritate şi de o pietate exemplară”, Veniamin a fost tratat de ruşi cu deferenţă şi consideraţie, prin intervenţiile sale reuşind să „strecoare” în noua legiuire cu caracter constituţional a ţării, Regulamentul Organic – elaborat din iniţiativa administraţiei ruse – mai multe dispoziţii „asiguratoare cu deosebire pentru învăţământul public”[9].

În timpul generalului Jeltuhin, pe baza instrucţiunilor ruseşti, a fost alcătuită comisia moldavă de redactare a Regulamentului Organic, compusă din Mihail Sturdza, Iordache Catargiu, Constantin Cantacuzino-Paşcanu şi Costache Conachi, văr primar după mamă cu Veniamin, iar ca secretar, Gheorghe Asachi, apropierea mitropolitului de membrii comisiei facilitându-i ierarhului introducerea unor prevederi favorabile românilor[10].

Noul guvernator general al Principatelor, Pavel Kiseleff, „om foarte politic şi înţelept”[11], a reînfiinţat Divanul domnesc, cu mitropolitul Veniamin ca preşedinte (calitate în care ierarhului îi revenea sarcina judecării în ultimă instanţă a pricinilor trimise de „deplin împuternicitul”), prin ofisul din 4 mai 1831, Veniamin, ca membru al Divanului, intrând şi în componenţa Adunării extraordinare de revizie a Regulamentului[12].

În acelaşi an, apreciind că cea mai mare parte a mănăstirilor, înzestrate cu îndestulare, se află într-o stare de „părăsire mâhnicioasă”, Kiseleff le-a cerut membrilor Adunării să numească o comisie pentru organizarea administraţiei averilor bisericeşti, dar neparticiparea unora la şedinţe i-au paralizat activitatea, atrăgând mustrarea în termeni severi a mitropolitului Veniamin de către Kiseleff, care i-a cerut „să readucă în calea ordinii şi a legalităţii” pe membrii care absentau. Că invocarea necesităţii prezenţei tuturor membrilor Adunării la şedinţele acesteia pentru ca ea să poată lucra, idee susţinută şi de Veniamin, era o stratagemă ce urmărea evitarea ingerinţei ruşilor în treburile instituţiei ecleziastice o afirma şi agentul consular austriac Ferro, care consemna că „mitropolitul, episcopul de Roman, marele logofăt Teodor Balş, marele vistier D. Ghica şi marele vornic Ioniţă Paladi paralizau lucrările Adunării, spunând că trebuie aşteptată sosirea tuturor deputaţilor din provincie”[13].

Transformarea Moldovei în „teritoriu de stoarcere” pentru susţinerea nevoilor armatei ruseşti a sporit conflictele dintre autoritatea politică provizorie şi biserică, noii cârmuitori, „deprinşi de acasă de la ei cu stăpânirea prin ucazuri şi reglemente a eparhiilor şi a mănăstirilor, supuse cu totul Ţarului-[7] Cum ar fi căderea unei ploi abundente şi generale la câteva ore după ce Veniamin, în timpul unei perioade de foarte mare secetă, a făcut o slujbă la care a cântat cu atâta pietate şi s-a rugat cu atâta credinţă încât toţi „vărsară şiroaie de lacrimi”, sau stoparea unei epidemii de ciumă în timpul domniei lui Scarlat Callimachi, când tot poporul, îngrozit, a postit o săptămână după sfatul mitropolitului Veniamin, cu ale cărui neîncetate rugăciuni „a vrut Dumnezeu a o tăia îndată” (Manolachi Drăghici, Istoriea Moldovei pe timp de 500 ani până în zilele noastre, tom. Patriarh”[14], impunându-le ierarhilor diferite obligaţii, precum strângerea de bani pentru statuia istoricului rus Karamzin, miluirea săracilor de ziua împăratului sau transformarea mănăstirilor în „adăposturi pentru lepădăturile şi naufragiaţii societăţii”, aceasta din urmă, zădărnicită de propunerea mitropolitului Veniamin de a o înlocui cu un ajutor financiar[15].

[6] Nu de aceeaşi preţuire a ocupanţilor s-a bucurat merituosul mitropolit muntean Grigorie, fostul traducător de la Neamţ şi colaborator al lui Veniamin, aproape 30 de ani, a cărui opoziţie faţă de excesele ruseşti i-a adus ridicarea silită din scaun şi exilarea în Basarabia, fapt „nerepetat” în istoria bisericii noastre (Constantin N. Tomescu, Mitropolitul Grigorie IV al Ungrovlahiei, Tipografia Eparhială „Cartea Românească”, Chişinău, 1927, pp. 55-64, 224-229, 302).

În perioada ocupaţiei militare ruseşti, foarte împovărătoare pentru populaţia autohtonă atât din pricina cerinţelor materiale pentru susţinerea armatei, cât şi din aceea a epidemiilor devastatoare răspândite în ţară[16], rusofilia a suferit încă o lovitură, după cea cauzată de anexarea de către Rusia, în anul 1812, a unei importante părţi a Moldovei, pentru români o tristă „încoronare a unei izbânzi repurtate în contra acelora din asuprirea cărora ruşii voiau să-i mântuie”[17]. Astfel, consulul englez Blutte constata, în octombrie 1829, că „aproape toţi boierii sunt într-adevăr sătui de protecţia rusească şi se gândesc cu cea mai mare groază că ţara ar putea rămâne pentru totdeauna în mâna ruşilor”, sentimente similare observând, în septembrie 1831, şi consulul francez Lagan, care scria despre moldoveni că, „prin singurul fapt al poziţiei geografice fiind mai puţin apăsaţi de turci, erau mai preocupaţi de teama de a fi siliţi, după pilda locuitorilor Basarabiei, să schimbe simpla ocrotire a cabinetului din Petersburg în naţionalitate rusească”[18].

Totuşi, drept consecinţă a creşterii preponderenţei Rusiei în Orient în urma păcii de la Adrianopol (1829), deplin consacrata putere protectoare a obţinut în Principate forma de stăpânire cea mai potrivită intereselor ei politice şi comerciale, încât cancelarul rus Nesselrode afirma că „nici cucerirea lor şi nici punerea în locul Împărăţiei Otomane a unor state noi, care în curând le-ar fi fost rivale în putere, cultură, activitate şi bogăţie, nu le-ar fi fost de atâta folos, căci acum, fără a întreţine trupe acolo, pot dispune de acele provincii după placul lor, în timp de pace, ca şi de război”[19].

Elaborat din iniţiativa administraţiei ruseşti şi intrat în vigoare în prima zi a anului 1832, Regulamentul Organic accelera subordonarea bisericii faţă de stat, prin extinderea şi oficializarea controlul domnitorilor şi al dregătorilor lor în problemele ecleziastice, prin prescrierea normelor de selectare a preoţilor şi a egumenilor, prin alegerea mitropoliţilor şi a episcopilor de către un număr covârşitor de laici şi prin supravegherea lor de către un logofăt al treburilor, om al şefului statului, ca şi prin remunerarea clericilor de către stat[20]. Mai mult, deşi Regulamentul Organic le lăsa ierarhilor stăpânirea în domeniul spiritual şi judecarea, în eparhiile lor, a afacerilor bisericeşti şi a celor duhovniceşti, îi lipsea de dreptul de a dispune liber de proprietăţile şi de veniturile eparhiilor, iar prin desfiinţarea Divanului domnesc le restrângea drastic atribuţiile civile şi participarea la treburile obşteşti, luându-le puterea judecătorească în pricini laice[21].

Deşi noua legiuire prevedea ca mitropolitul, în calitate de preşedinte al comitetului central al celor opt case de binefacere, să se ocupe de supravegherea activităţii şi de controlul socotelilor lor, între ele fiind casa milelor, a şcolilor publice, a Seminarului de la Socola şi a Sfântului Spiridon, cu care Veniamin avusese multe legături şi înainte[22], prin introducerea separaţiei între stat şi biserică şi prin diminuarea rostului ei în guvernare, Regulamentul ducea la scăderea prestigiului şi a influenţei politice a instituţiei ecleziastice şi a reprezentanţilor ei, marcând intrarea în modernitate a legislaţiei româneşti şi făcând tranziţia către statul laic.

Purtătoare a amprentei anticlericalismului francez şi a stăpânirii bisericii de către stat, ca în Rusia, noua constituţie făcea să înceteze poziţia ei specială, înlăturând – după aprecierea lui Nicolae [21] Încă din 1829, Alexandru Sturdza propusese, într-un memoriu adresat cancelarului rus Nesselrode, să se limiteze influenţa autorităţilor ecleziastice, prin preluarea de către stat a puterii lor administrative şi judecătoreşti, iar acestora să li se admită intervenţia doar în problemele spirituale (Anastasie Iordache, Principatele române în epoca modernă, vol. I, Editura Albatros, Bucureşti, 1996, pp. 311, 312).

Iorga – „fără cruţare şi fără pietate, fără simţ istoric şi fără înţelegerea drepturilor ce derivă din prescripţii cu caracter nestrămutat şi dintr-o practică de atâtea veacuri", viaţa canonică deosebită pe care aceasta o avusese până atunci, declanşând lucrarea „dezbrăcării de orice autonomie, putere şi autoritate a bisericii, surgunită în regiuni pur spirituale care sunt, bisericeşte, vecine cu moartea"[23].

Deşi prin multe dintre dispoziţiile sale Regulamentul reprezenta un progres de netăgăduit faţă de starea anterioară[24], „sub masca formei vechi, Rusia introdusese, prin mijlocirea unor modificări puţin aparente, o transformare radicală, care făcea din aşezămintele ţărilor române un instrument pentru stăpânirea rusească şi dădea soarta lor în mâinile acestei puteri". Dincolo de caracterul ei progresist, noua constituţie avea şi menirea – în opinia îndreptăţită a lui A. D. Xenopol – de „a asigura veşnic înrâurirea politică a Rusiei în Principate, prin întocmirea de aşa natură a jocului puterilor statului astfel încât el să atârne întotdeauna de puterea proteguitoare"[25].

În spiritul nemulţumirii şi suspiciunii pe care introducerea Regulamentului Organic le provocase în toate straturile sociale[26], Pompiliu Eliade considera, exagerând, că „viaţa pe care o oferise generalul Kiseleff moldovenilor şi valahilor era mai rea decât moartea, căci ea tindea, nici mai mult, nici mai puţin, decât la suprimarea conştiinţei româneşti, visul său fiind de a vedea «europeni» civilizaţi, în locul moldovenilor şi valahilor cu obiceiuri simple". De asemenea, adăuga el, „de la originile istoriei sale şi până în zilele noastre, ramura latină a românilor n-a cunoscut prieten mai perfect, nici duşman mai redutabil decât generalul Pavel de Kiseleff", căci „a fi oameni civilizaţi este ceva, dar esenţialul este de a fi însuţi"[27]. În acelaşi spirit era văzută noua stare a naţiei şi de către Nicolae Iorga, care aprecia că, „acum, la începutul epocii de cultură glorificate de cei interesaţi, românimea de la Dunăre îşi pierdu şi ultimul drept ce-i mai rămăsese, acela de a-şi da ea singură legi, bune sau rele, asiatice sau europene"[28].

[24] În 1834, ca expresie a mulţumirii faţă de Rusia şi Turcia pentru acea „epocă însemnată în istoria patriei, care prin lucrări paşnice va însemna a ei înflorire", boierii şi Veniamin i-au înaintat domnitorului Mihail Sturdza propunerea ridicării unui monument comemorativ în grădina publică a capitalei – cunoscutul Obelisc al leilor din Parcul Copou. Realizat după planul lui Gheorghe Asachi, sub asistenţa de specialitate a colonelului şi arhitectului Mihail Singurov, monumentul are inscripţia bilingvă, în română şi latină: „Auguştilor Monarhi carii au dat Moldovei noul aşezământ introdus la anul 1832. Mihail Sturza VVD împreună cu clerul şi boierimea Principatului au înălţat acest monument la 8 noiembrie 1834" (Theodor Codrescu, Uricarul, vol. AN OUTRAGE SCANDAL WITH ANTI-SEMITIC CONNOTATIONS IN 1909

Radu Florian Bruja
Lecturer, PhD, "Ştefan cel Mare" University of Suceava

Abstract: The present study aims to decipher an unknown episode from the biography of Ion Zelea Codreanu. Having become a teacher at the "Anastasie Panu" Gymnasium in Huşi, Zelea Codreanu was involved in various Haretist projects aimed at modernizing Romanian education. These propelled him to the top of the gymnasium in Huşi in 1908. On the other hand, Zelea Codreanu was involved in various conflicts at the school even before being appointed director of the institution. His inability to solve school problems, disagreements with other classmates, and a pamphlet that sparked comment led to his removal after only one year. His conflicting personality, coupled with an increasingly virulent anti-Semitism, caught him in the battles waged by the personalities of the time for influence in the Romanian educational environment. In our analysis, we considered the undercurrents of this scandal, the conflicts in Romanian schools at the beginning of the 20th century, and the way they were presented in the press of the time. The politicization of the Romanian pre-university environment radicalized this sulfurous character, the moment coinciding with the founding of the Nationalist Democratic Party.

Introducere.

Lumea şcolară preuniversitară din epoca lui Spirut Haret beneficiază de numeroase studii şi analize, care privesc variate aspecte didactice şi pedagogice. Viaţa şcolilor din oraşele mici ale României antebelice este, la rândul ei, surprinsă în pagini semnificative. În general, despre marele proces reformator iniţiat de ministrul liberal Spiru Haret s-a scris în termeni laudativi. Există şi unele aspecte mai controversate ale mediului şcolar din primul deceniu al secolului XX, dar forfota care a cuprins corpul profesoral, scandalurile şi anchetele prin care au trecut dascălii epocii nu sunt încă pe deplin elucidate. Mediul preuniversitar a fost prins între interese meschine, susţinute politic, cu o însemnată coloratură antisemită ceea ce dovedeşte limitele haretismului. Anul 1907 a fost marcat vârful conflictului dintre principalele forţe politice ale ţării, violenţele punându-i într-o situaţie dificilă atât pe Haret cât şi pe şi pe dascălii epocii. Frecventele schimbări în conducerea şcolilor îşi au rădăcina în conflictul politic dintre marile partide ale epocii, acesta reverberând până în mediul şcolar. Studiul de faţă îşi propune să ilustreze un astfel de scandal, la conducerea Gimnaziului „Anastasie Panu", din Huşi. Atunci când în mijlocul luptei pentru putere care a inflamat mica urbe moldavă se găseşte Ion Zelea Codreanu, exemplul este cât se poate de ilustrativ.

Capitol mai puţin cunoscut din biografia lui Ion Zelea Codreanu, cariera sa profesională, ilustrată prin activitatea la catedra de germană a Gimnaziului din Huşi, oferă o mai bună înţelegere a personalităţii sale. Profesorul Ion Zelea Codreanu l-a anticipat pe politicianul de mai târziu, iar caracterul său şi modul cum a înţeles să îşi facă meseria sunt mai uşor de descifrat prin această cheie de interpretare. Nu ne propunem să analizăm biografia complexă a lui Ion Zelea Codreanu şi nici nu avem intenţia de a detalia activitatea sa didactică. Amintim doar că, la începutul carierei sale, a fost implicat în diverse programe de sorginte haretistă, dar a avut şi numeroase derapaje, amestecând problemele politice şi antisemitismul cu activităţile şcolii. În lipsa surselor arhivistice, ne-am bazat cercetarea pe presa epocii, care a detaliat conflictul din cancelaria aşezământului huşean, dar şi mărturiile lui Zelea Codreanu apărute într-o broşură controversată la 1909.

Născut la Igeşti în raionul Storojineţ din Bucovina austriacă, Ion Zelea Codreanu (pe numele din condica parohială a satului natal Ioan Zilinschi) a absolvit şcoala primară din Igeşti şi şapte clase ale Gimnaziului Superior din Suceava. Beneficiind de legislaţia haretistă care permitea absolvenţilor de şapte clase din liceele din Austro-Ungaria să se înscrie la Universităţile din România, tânărul Ioan Zilinschi a ajuns student al Facultăţii de Ştiinţe din Iaşi. Aici îşi va schimba numele şi, fără să fi absolvit studiile universitare, a ajuns în anul şcolar 1901-1902 la Gimnaziul „Anastasie Panu" din Huşi, fiind suplinitor la limba germană. Școala huşeană fusese creată printr-o hotărâre din ianuarie 1876, când Adunarea Deputaţilor vota un proiect de lege care propunea deschiderea în fiecare capitală de judeţ a unui gimnaziu, dar abia la 1891 Ministerul Cultelor şi Instrucţiunii trecea în bugetul statului sumele pentru funcţionarea primului Gimnaziu de stat din Huşi, cunoscut din 1894 drept „Anastasie Panu"[1]. Gimnaziul nu avea decât clase pentru ciclul inferior (clasele I-IV), cu un număr limitat de locuri, creşterea populaţiei şcolare impunând şi atragerea unor profesori suplinitori între care şi Zelea Codreanu. Iniţial, începând cu luna aprilie 1901, el a suplinit orele profesorului Leopold Haes. Anul școlar 1901/1902 a fost primul an complet în care Ion Zelea Codreanu a predat la Gimnaziul din Huşi, fiind, totodată, numit şi diriginte a clasei a IV-a[2]. Tot în septembrie îşi clarifica norma sa lunară la Limba germană, fiind suplinitor şi la alte discipline pentru completarea catedrei[3]. În acelaşi timp s-a înscris la Facultatea de Litere şi Filosofie a Universităţii din Iaşi, a căror cursuri le-a urmat între 1901 şi 1904, fără să fie student regulat[4]. Singurele cursuri pe care le-a urmat cu prezenţă la ore erau cele ale modulului pedagogic organizat de profesorul Ion Găvănescul pentru studenţii care doreau să se titularizeze în învăţământul secundar[5].

Abia la 1904, după ce și-a definitivat studiile universitare a devenit profesor calificat la Gimnaziul din Huși. În iunie 1906 susţinea examenul de capacitate promovat cu 7,64. La 1 septembrie 1906 erau numiţi profesori titulari Ioan Băiulescu, de geografie şi limba română, I. Z. Codreanu, de limba germană, şi Neculai D. Neştian, de limba română, limba latină şi instruire publică[6]. Codreanu nota într-un memoriu că „din momentul în care am devenit dascăl, am considerat această carieră, nu ca un meşteşug de a mă hrăni, ci ca un adevărat apostolat în serviciul ideii de mîntuire a neamului"[7].

Între 1908 şi 1909 a devenit director la gimnaziului huşean, mandatul său fiind presărat cu disensiuni şi controverse. În toamna anului 1909 avea să fie înlocuit în urma unui alt scandal, de data aceasta cu conotaţii antisemite. Îndepărtarea sa din fruntea şcolii avea să îl radicalizeze şi mai mult, devenind, în primăvara anului 1910 membru fondator al Partidului Naţionalist Democrat şi şeful organizaţiei judeţene Fălciu al grupării politice conduse de Nicolae Iorga şi A.C. Cuza. Devenit un „trăsnit"[8] controversat încă din acei ani, el a fost în centrul atenţiei unor scandaluri între ziariştii de la „Opinia", ziar conservator a grupului din jurul lui Take Ionescu, şi cei de al „Neamul românesc", gazetă lui Nicolae Iorga, alături de care Zelea Codreanu a debutat în politică.

Educaţia în accepţiunea lui Zelea Codreanu.

În același timp, primii pași în cariera didactică i-a făcut în anii mișcării haretiste. De aceea, el și-a asumat o dublă misiune: pe de o parte a încercat să își educe elevii în spiritul național, folosindu-se de instrumentele și programele haretiste, iar pe de alta, depășind curricula a încercat să promoveze idei naționale în societate prin intermediul aceloraşi programe haretiste.

Educaţia avea o însemnătate specială pentru profesorul Codreanu. Ea era menită să aducă valori moral-civice elevilor, să îi pregătească pentru societate, dezvoltând în elevi atât o componentă spirituală, cât şi una socială, armonizând viaţa individuală, cu cea socială[9]. Pregătit la şcoala pedagogică a profesorului Găvănescul el îşi însuşise concepţiile acestuia, care erau dominante în epocă. În acelaşi timp educaţia trebuia să fie naţională. Până în 1908, Codreanu îşi câştigase o frumoasă notorietate în cadrul evenimentelor organizate de Liga Culturală condusă de Nicolae Iorga. Profesorul Codreanu percepea şcoala ca pe un spaţiu al mântuirii naţionale. El definea între adversarii românismului: cosmopolitismul, „pătura diriguitoare" şi emigranţii care distrug clasa de mijloc românească![10]. În acelaşi timp, nu se considera un emigrant, conform accepţiunii epocii. Asta dacă ţinem cont nu de obârşia sa, ci de originea românească pe care o apăra vehement. Educaţia trebuia impregnată de sentimente naţionale, trebuia eliberată de politicile seculariste, iar şcoala transformată într-o „Biserică seculară", catedra profesorului devenind altarul în care se plămădeau viitoarele generaţii de luptători pentru cauza naţională[11].

Ion Zelea Codreanu a fost influenţat în prima fază a carierei sale şi de mişcarea haretistă. Cu un discurs apropiat de mişcarea haretistă, profesorul a fost implicat în diverse proiecte, nu întotdeauna încununate de reuşită. O iniţiativă încununată de succes avea să fie crearea societăţii „Munca", devenită tribuna care îi va aduce celebritatea în plan local[12]. Ulterior, el avea să continue, în calitate de conducător al societăţii" Munca" cu alte iniţiative, între care deschiderea unei tipografii, a unei librării şi a unei brutării. Seria conferinţelor organizate sub egida asociaţiei sale culturale au adus la Huşi nume importante, aici conferenţiind, alături de reprezentanţi ai elitelor locale, şi Nicolae Iorga, A.C. Cuza, D.A. Teodoru, I.G. Duca[13]. Toate aceste succese, deşi însoţite de numeroase controverse locale, l-ua propulsat la 1908 în fruntea Gimnaziului „Anastasie Panu".

Există şi o altă realitate care l-ar fi putut propulsa pe Codreanu în fruntea şcolii. Începuturile au fost marcate de dificultăţile inerente epocii, conducerea şcolii fiind captivă conflictului dintre Prefectura judeţului şi Episcopia Huşilor. În primii ani ai activităţii lui Zelea Codreanu la Huşi a fost martor al conflictului dintre Episcopia Huşilor, prefectul judeţului şi conducerea şcolii. Implicarea directă a ministrului conservator Mihail Vlădescu, care a dus la înlocuirea directorului Gh. Săvescu, la 1906, cu puternice conotaţii electorale[14], l-ar fi putut determina pe Codreanu să îşi susţină propria cadidatură la funcţia de conducere a şcolii. Următorii directori, I. Arnăutu şi Panait Sufleţel şi I. Baiulescu, susţinuţi de clubul conservator, n-au rezistat decât scurt timp. Venit ca urmare a schimbării guvernamentale de la 1907, Neculai Neştian s-a transferat un an mai târziu, oferindu-i lui Zelea Codreanu şansă să acceadă în fotoliul de director al aşezământului huşean la 1908[15].

Ion Zelea Codreanu a profitat de poziția pe care o avea de director al Gimnaziului din Huși pentru a „confisca" anuarul școlii pentru propriul scop. Astfel, sub titlul Spre altă școală, numărul din 1909 a devenit o tribună de lansare a ideilor sale naționale. Autorul explica decizia prin faptul că anuarul, devenit o broșură politică sub masca unui manifest educațional, urmărea să atragă atenția asupra problemelor școlii românești din ultimele decenii. Codreanu deplângea situația școlii românești care ar fi ajuns o rampă de lansare spre o carieră profesională a neromânilor, în vreme ce autohtonii își pierdeau identitatea în sistemul de învățământ românesc. El nu ataca haretismul direct, arătând chiar că în ultimul deceniu acesta avusese rezultate meritorii în lumea rurală. În schimb, critica decăderea clasei de mijloc românești: „zi cu zi, autohtonii, în timp de pace, se sting de mizerie fiziologică, cedând pământul lor străinoșesc, străinilor cari se înmulțesc în mod spăimântător, colonizând țara în massă"[16]. O altă tară atacată în preambulul ediției din 1909 era părăsirea de către locuitori a orașelor mici, care optau pentru „mocirla altui oraș mai mare", unde găseau „cel puțin un birt cum se cade". Acest exod, considera Codreanu, ducea la ruptura dintre cei rămași în micile localități urbane și cei care optau pentru lumea mult mai cosmopolită a orașelor mari unde își pierdeau identitatea[17]. Pentru autorul broșurii, munca trebuia îndreptată spre construirea statului etnic prin eliminarea tuturor celor care nu cadrau ca „buni români". În fruntea listei erau evreii, stereotipiile legate de aceştia devenind pregnante. Ion Zelea Codreanu vorbea de pericolul evreiesc, care ameninţa dezvoltarea naţiunii române. O serie de tare ale lumii româneşti de la începutul veacului trecut, despre care atrăsese atenţia faimosul şi popularul ministru liberal al Educaţiei, Spiru Haret, cum erau frecventele epidemii, mortalitatea infantilă sau alcoolismul, erau puse de naţionalistul Codreanu tot pe seama evreilor. Acest tip de discurs va fi lesne de regăsit nu doar la Corneliu Zelea Codreanu, ci la întreaga generaţie formată în deceniile doi-trei ale secolului trecut. Profesorul I.Z. Codreanu mergea mai departe, avertizând că mediul urban, „cucerit de omida jidovească", trebuia reformat în întregime[18].

În raportul său de evaluare a situației școlare pentru anul 1908/1909, Ion Zelea Codreanu, în calitate de director al Gimnaziului „Anastasie Panu", semnala o serie de aspecte care deveniseră simptomatice pentru școală. Broşura sa a atras atenţia colegilor din învăţământ şi a indignat. Fiind o personalitatre conflictuală, a intrat în colimatorul gazetarilor de la „Opinia", care luau în derâdere conferințele sale despre pericolul extincției neamului românesc. Take Ionescu era un adversar redutabil al lui Spiru Haret, ale cărui măsuri şi legislaţie produseseră efecte în lumea rurală sau în micile oraşe ale ţării. Haretismul atacase baza socială şi economică a Partidului Conservator, învăţătorii fiind implicaţi în activităţi care deranjau marii proprietari funciari. De multe ori, activitatea extracuriculară a profesorilor din mediul rural sau din micile oraşe moldave în special intrau în conflict cu interesele unor negustori sau arendaşi evrei. Antisemitismul se răspândise printre micii dascăli care îmbrăţişaseră iniţiativele haretiste, iar reacţia guvernelor conservatoare fusese dură. Evenimentele din 1907 au înăsprit conflictul, învăţătorii şi profesorii fiind acuzaţi că au instigat. La acel moment, notorietatea lui Ion Zelea Codreanu, datorată discursului politic şi antisemit, şi viaţa sa tumultuoasă, depăşise frontierele oraşului Huşi şi ale judeţului Fălciu. Diferitele scandaluri în care a intrat, numeroasele procese în care a fost implicat şi acţiunile sale directe, au alterat atmosfera din micul oraş moldav, fiind aspecte care i-au influenţat imaginea.

Alături de performaţele didactice criticate de elevi şi părinţi, activitatea sa în fruntea gimnaziului l-au transformat într-unul din cei mai contestaţi profesori din şcoala huşeană. Orice iniţiativă publică era disecată de presa vremii. „Opinia" amintea că, Spiru Haret îi recomandase să nu participe la evenimentele publice şi să nu iasă în evidenţă prin discursurile sale. Spre exemplu, Spiru Haret îi sugerase „să nu se deplaseze" cu ocazia serbării de 10 Mai 1909 la Iaşi unde era invitat să ţină un discurs public[19]. S-a remarcat totuși la Huși, unde a pus doi elevi să prezinte două poezii ale lui Octavian Goga, considerate „revoluționare" și „nepotrivite cu serbarea zilei"[20]. Adversarii săi îl acuzau că era lipsit de merite şi suprapunea problemele politice şi naţionale peste cele ale şcolii, transformându-l într-un veritabil „trăsnit" în comunitatea huşeană[21].

Scandalul

Pentru Codreanu problema cea mai gravă era atitudinea profesorilor din şcoală. Relaţia sa dificilă cu unii colegi era cunoscută în oraş. Fără să nominalizeze, el nota că „unul obicinuia să plece din oraş fără concediu, era suplinit de formă de cine nu trebuia, şi când se înturna iscălia în condica de prezenţă ca şi cum ar fi fost la şcoală"[22]. Indiferent dacă exemplul dat de Zelea Codreanu era adevărat sau nu, astfel de cazuri erau frecvente în şcoala românească la începutul secolului XX. Adversarii săi au lansat o adevărată ofensivă media pentru a-l discredita, calomniile însoţind articolele de presă. Gazetele „Opinia" și „Acțiunea" au dus o campanie împotriva directorului Zelea Codreanu pe parcursul întregului an în care a condus Gimnaziul de la Huși. „Opinia” îl avea în colimator pe Zelea Codreanu, fiind considerat un apropiat al dr. N. Lupu, adversar al mișcării conservator-democrate[23]. Nici după ce Zelea Codreanu şi-a pierdut funcţia, atacurile nu au încetat, calomniile fiind la ordinea zilei în presa politică a epocii. Astfel, într-un articol din „Opinia” era numit „ilustrul bastard al seminției polone”, „renegatul polonez, bastardul seminției românești, rușinea rasei omenești”[24], „maimuță corpută”, „om secătuit de patimi veninoase”, „Jelea Codreanu”, „neaoșul Zdrelea Codreanu”, fiind atacat chiar și pe cunoștințele de limbă germană „pe care o cunoaște mai puțin decît un indian”. Articolul aducea în vedere că Zelea Codreanu ar fi primit bani de la bancherul evreu Heim-Schorr. În fapt, gazetarii de la „Opinia” îl acuzau că făcea pe antisemitul, având relații apropiate cu diferiți evrei din Huși[25].

Ofensiva pentru îndepărtarea sa din fotoliul de director a început devreme. El fusese avertizat încă din momentul în care a fost numit director al școlii, de un funcționar religios şi coleg de şcoală, Gh. C. Vântu, că situția sa „deja era grea” și va face tot ceea ce va putea pentru a-l înlocui. Zelea Codreanu a încercat să se apere, folosind paginile „Neamului Românesc” în acest scop. Justificarea sa era legată de faptul că tocmai cel acre avea să fie numit director, Constantin Al. Holban, ar fi fost lezat în broșura Spre altă școală, dar că adevăratul motiv era altul: „Și, dacă Ministerul va recunoaște că, în afară de munca cinstită din școală și pentru scopurile școlii, în afară de munca extra-școlară în vederea nevoilor neamului nostru, în afară de capacitatea și rîvna dovedită a cuiva, mai e nevoie de <<drepturi cîștigate în partid>>, atunci – dar numai atunci – eu sunt gata să recunosc că situația mea <<deja era grea>>, nu numai înainte de publicarea broșurii mele Spre altă școală, ci chiar înainte de numirea mea în situația de director al Gimnasiului din Huși!”. Ion Zelea Codreanu mai preciza că „ordinul d-voastră referindu-se însă la raportul domnilor inspectori ai învățământului secundar lasă a se înțelege că broșura mea – chiar dacă aș avea dreptate în cele ce susțin în ea – ar fi iritat corpul dăscălesc din țară și că ar fi iritat în genere opinia publică”[26].

Presiunile erau foarte variate, I.Z. Codreanu amintind de o notă a Ministerului Instrucției Publice din mai 1909 în care se spunea că „Ministeriul fiind informat că d-voastră voiți să demisionați, este hotărât să primească demisia”. Încă de atunci, gazeta ieșeană „Opinia” vorbea de înlocuirea lui Zelea Codreanu cu Constantin Al. Holban, de la Gimnaziul din Fălticeni, iar în august 1909 se zvonea prin Huși că urma să fie transferat la un liceu din Iași. Aceasta ar fi fost doar o stratagemă pentru a-l determina să demisioneze, înainte ca eventualul transfer să fie invalidat. Alte tertipuri invocate de profesorul hușean erau legate de o serie de cărți poștale venite pe adresa lui Holban, trecut cu titulatura de director al Gimnaziului. La acestea el răspundea „Nu voi nega că întrebuințarea unor asemenea arme de luptă constituie un <<tact>> și o <<măsură>> în grad superior, voi refuza însă întotdeauna cu încăpățînare a deprinde acest tact, care în limbagiul de toate zilele se înseamnă de regulă cu un cuvânt tare, pe care eu însă – pentru respectul ce îl doresc autorității școlare – nu-l voi scrie aici”. Autorul articoului amintea și de calomniile privind viața sa de familie, care „trăiește rău cu soția sa”, considerând că doar un răuvoitor ar fi putut aduce astfel de argumente în această speță. „Că samănă copiii cu d. Zelea-Codreanu, dar foarte puțin; că d-na îngrijește de gospodărie, dar a lăsat în părăsire straturile din grădină!” erau comentate pe larg în presă[27]. Atacurile şi calomniile din presă arată nu doar la cel nivel era înţeleasă libertatea cuvântului în epocă, dar şi atmosfera viciată în care s-a creionat personalitatea unui ilustru precursor al fascismului românesc.

În fapt, scandalul se limita la un conflict din interiorul şcolii. Directorul Codreanu intrase în colimatorul adversarilor din şcoală şi din afara ei după ce a obținut acordul consiliului școlii pentru exmatricularea unui elev evreu acuzat că se „obrăznicise prea mult față de unul dintre profesori”. Ancheta făcută de responsabilii Ministerului au găsit actul directorului ca fiind unul abuziv, dar redactorii de la „Neamul Românesc” considerau că intervenția tatălui elevului direct la București ar fi cauza destituirii lui Zelea Codreanu[28]. Presa naționalistă a reacționat, învinuindu-l chiar și pe ministrul Spiru Haret, etichetat drept „cel mai pătimaș dintre toți vrăjmașii curentului naționalist”. Asta după ce, inițial, Ion Zelea Codreanu îl lăudase pe Haret pentru modul cum a condus Ministerul, pentru măsurile sale și pentru lucrarea Școala naționalistă[29].

Anul şcolar 19109/1910 începuse cu el în fruntea gimnaziului, dar în scurt timp presiunile s-au intensificat. Între ultimele activităţi pe care le-a făcut în calitate de director se număra participarea la Congresul băncilor populare de la Galaţi, care începea la 12 octombrie 1909, fapt pentru care solicita un concediu, asigurându-se că Ioan I. David, un coleg cu care colabora bine la acel moment[30], îl suplinea pentru a putea participa la eveniment[31]. Ulterior, în luna noiembrie, documentele privind concediile nu mai erau semnate de Ion Zelea Codreanu, ci doar de solicitanţi, fiind înlocuită şi cerneala verde pe care o introdusese[32]. Nu apare însă nici un nume de director[33].

El mai amintea de o carte poștală primită la 4 noiembrie 1909, exact a doua zi după ce fusese demis. Ilustrația prezenta imaginea unui om legat în lanț și cu botniță de câine, cu un text în germană: „Gratuliere, Graf von Lausleben. Guck mihr an! Wenn um Frühjahr das grüne Gras wächst, kann Euer Wohlgeboren drein bissen. Es soll uns freuen sie im Irrenhaus zu wissen. Űbrigens können sie zu Weinachten am Bratspies schmoren. In dankbaren Zuneigung enere besten Freunde”. Lăsăm traducerea și comentariul în seama profesorului de germană Ion Zelea Codreanu, așa cum apare în articolul său: „Te felicit, conte de păd...i. Ia ascultă. Cînd o crește în primăvară iarbă verde, poți s-o pești. Ne-ar bucura să te știm în casa de nebuni. De altminterea, ai putea să te frigi în frigare, de Crăciun. În aplecare recunoscătoare, cei mai buni prieteni ai d-tale”. Și tot el continua: „Pentru a ști cine sunt acești prieteni, voi adăugi o singură lămurire: nici un romîn din oraș și împrejurimi nu e așa de stăpân pe fraseologia germană, încât să fi putut scrie conținutul de mai sus”[34]. Codreanu a trimis aceste probe la Minister, solicitând să se revină asupra deciziei demiterii sale. Și gazetarii de la „Opinia” au reacționat, amintind că profesorul Holban „l-a exoflist” pe Codreanu. Motivația demiterii era, conform gazetei conservator-democrate: „de cînd este el director anchetele se țin lanț. Proces la tribunal, la consiliul permanent; dări afară de elevi, asmuțiri de uri și patimi naționale; era un visepar viața la gimnaziu și d. Haret s-a hotărît să-l scoată. Îl știu toți ca pe un cal breaz, s-a convins și secretarul general de zăticneala lui Codreanu”[35].

Radicalizarea.

În replică, în martie 1910, el deschidea o serie de articole intitulate Școala partidelor și a cahalului în care critica faptul că măsurile lui Haret nu și-au atins scopul, școala devenind prea dependentă de factorul politic. Încă din titlu se poate observa obsesia pentru o conspirație ocultă orchestrată de evrei. Codreanu atrăgea atenția în articolele sale că nu făcuse parte din niciun partid și că numirea sa în fruntea școlii hușene fusese făcută pe criteriul meritocrației. El considera că lucrarea sa Spre altă școală fusese una din cauzele care duseseră la înlăturarea sa deoarece o serie de personalități locale s-ar fi regăsit în paginile cărții, fiind criticate de el[36]. „Neamul Românesc”, devenit tribuna ideilor lui Iorga, l-a captat de la început pe Ion Zelea Codreanu care şi-a făcut debutul în paginile gazetei iorghiste. Devenit „un canal a unui antisemitism tot mai vehement” şi un soi de „instituţionalizare a mesianismului”[37] lui Nicolae Iorga, ziarul ieşean a marcat momentul radicalizării profesorului de la Huși. În articolul din martie 1910, Zelea Codreanu amintea că fusese destituit din cauza măsurilor arbitrare, din cauza „lipsei de tact și măsură”. În același număr din „Neamul Românesc”, Ion Zelea Codreanu semna și un articol referitor la Inamovibilitatea inspectorilor și directorilor școlari[38]. Articolul nu era întâmplător, deoarece Zelea Codreanu fusese destituit în baza unui raport al inspectoratului școlar. Nu întâmplător Iorga va amenda modalitatea de numire a directorilor care devenise o formă de recompensare „pentru servicii politice” PND propunând ca aceştia să fie numiți de colegii lor, fără amestecul politicului[39].

Următorul articol din seria Școala partidelor și a cahalului apărea în aprilie, sub semnătura N.N. de Tigheciu. El relua cazul Zelea Codreanu luând apărarea profesorului hușean în fața calomniilor apărute. Autorul pretindea că primise detalii și documente despre acest caz chiar de la Zelea Codreanu, folosind același tip de limbaj în încercarea de arăta că școala devenise victima politicianismului: „zugrumată de politicieni și înveninată de Jidani, la dispoziția tuturor samavolniciilor unui politician sectar sau la dispoziția altui politician hazliu, în micimea lui, din toate punctele de vedere, cum sînt mulți, în sfîrșit la cheremul celui mai nul dintre politicianii din provincie, la cheremul orcărui salariat al Jidanilor!”[40].

Momentul coincidea cu apariţia Partidului Naţionalist-Democrat care a marcat intrarea în politică a lui Ion Zelea Codreanu. Aceasta ar putea fi determinată și de înlocuirea sa, după doar un an, din funcția de director al Gimnaziului din Huși. Vina pentru înlocuirea sa din funcție era pusă pe seama politicienilor liberali din judeţul Fălciu, care ar fi fost cumpărați de evrei. Devenit, din aprilie 1910, membru fondator şi liderul local al Partidului Național Democrat, Ion Zelea Codreanu îi identifica pe aleșii judeţeni în legislativul României. Îl atacă pe deputatul Alecu Răşcanu, care s-ar fi ocupat de cu totul alte probleme în Parlament, între care obținerea cetățeniei bancherului Heim Schorr. Anterior, chiar Zelea Codreanu fusese acuzat că avea legături cu acesta. Îl avea în vedere și pe N.A. Teodoru, ales local, ajuns într-o poziție înaltă în Ministerul Instrucțiunii și pe care l-a învinovățit de demiterea sa din fruntea gimaziului. Același N.N. de Tigheci revenea cu o completare a articolului, la începutul lui mai 1910. El amintea de problema portului național în școli care să înlocuiască „postavurile proste și citurile cu care se îmbracă sătenii noștrii”, considerând că problema era una de identitate etnică. Autorul îl acuza direct pe Haret pentru că s-ar fi opus introducerii uniformei, susținând că refuzul „ar fi ieșit din cancelariile lui Appony – colegul lui Haret din Budapesta”[41]. Cum problema portului naţional în şcoală era o obsesie mai veche a lui Zelea Codreanu iar articolele din „Neamul Românesc” au acelaşi stil este foarte posibil ca N.N. de Tigheci să fie chiar Zelea Codreanu. Imaginea sa în costum popular avea să devină foarte cunoscută în Huşi înainte de a intra în politică.

La un an de la schimbarea sa din funcția de director Ion Zelea Codreanu a scris pentru „Neamul Românesc” două articole Gimnasiul din Huși ajunge o primejdie publică în octombrie și noiembrie 1910 în care se arată neîndurător cu imobilul în care își făcea meseria și în care funcționa școala pe care a păstorit-o timp de un an. Schimbarea de atitudine era evident influențată de intrarea sa în politică și de scandalurile în care fusese implicat odată cu demiterea sa de la cârma școlii secundare hușene. El atrăgea atenția că imobilul era prea vechi pentru a mai funcționa ca școală și că după 1858 funcționase ca dormitor al elevilor seminarului de la Huși[42]. Gimnaziul se instalase în această clădire abia la 1892, dar profesorul hușean conchidea că nu era un spațiu corespunzător. Nici încercarea din 1907 de reparare a edificiului nu s-a bucurat de succes. Ironiile lui Zelea Codreanu la adresa clădirii pot fi ilustrate pe fiecare clasă, el amintind că imobilul nu avea decât patru camere pentru elevi, o cancelarie și un birou al directorului. Clasa I-a „are multe calități pedagogice importante; unele dintre ele ar fi: din subsol unde locuiește servitorul cu familia (...) străbate în clasă încontinuu miros de bucate și alte mirosuri; acesta desigur pentru ca țincanii cei mici venind în clasa întâia să nu-și ieie nasul la purtare, umflîndu-şi-l cu aier curat[43]. Autorul articolului nu spunea nimic cititorilor gazetei iorghiste despre inițiativele sale din timpul mandantului de director de reparare a edificiului. Cel de-al doilea articol aducea la lumină alte aspecte, etichetate ca „urmările acestei realități". Din cauza frigului sau a aerului închis din clădire, ne spune polemistul dascăl, toți profesorii ar fi avut probleme de sănătate. „Cîțiva au dureri reumatice, alții au catar, alții dureri nevralgice, unul a răcit la șele, pe altul îl dor la infinit măselele și în sfîrșit, altul se ține numai cu oblojeli, cu cataplasme aplicate în fiecare noapte pe piept". Nu ne precizează nimic despre propria sa stare de sănătate și cât a fost ea afectată deși preda în acest imobil din 1901, având o vechime de nouă ani la momentul în care și-a redactat materialele. Descrierea acestor realități nu era adevăratul scop al articolelor sale. Zelea Codreanu urmărea să identifice vinovații pentru starea de fapt, începând cu diriguitorii Ministerului Instrucțiunii. El nu ezită să arată că în perioada mandatalui a trimis înștiințări la Minister asupra stării imbolilului din Huși dar nu a primit niciun răspuns[44].

Concluzii.

Format la școala ideilor naționale de la cumpăna secolelor al XIX-lea și al XX-lea, prins între Bucovina multietnică şi regiunea moldavă din Vechiul Regat, cu situația sa specifică, Ion Zelea Codreanu visa la crearea unui stat naţional al tuturor românilor. Profesorul I.Z. Codreanu a fost un „trăsnit" controversat încă din acei ani. Concepţiile sale erau etnocratice, vizând eliminarea alogenilor din structurile statului român, din mediul economic şi din şcoală. Mesajul său, promovat încă din perioada haretistă aveau să influenţeze generaţii de elevi, atât înainte, cât şi după Primul Război Mondial. Apartenenţa sa la mişcările politice radicale şi antisemite se explică prin faptul că se vedea în fruntea acestor „salvatori" care militau pentru îndepărtarea elementelor străine din trupul naţiunii române. De pe băncile şcolii la pupitrul Camerei Deputaţilor, Codreanu a pozat într-un politician care dădea naţionalismului propria interpretare; termenul „mântuire" reprezentând eradicarea tuturor elementelor neromâneşti, chiar cu sacrificiul suprem. Profund religios, crezul lui Codreanu îi limita concepţiile la o dimensiune transcedentală care o dubla pe cea pământească. Cum un astfel de discurs a fost introdus în şcoala unde activa, nu este de mirare că a intrat repede în atenţia elitelor intelectuale şi politice locale. Influenţa politicului în şcoală şi luptele intestine dintre profesori pentru putere aveau să îl capteze. De aceea, directoratul său nu avea să dureze decât un an, deşi Codreanu vorbise în broşura Spre altă şcoală de dificilele sarcini pe care le avusese de surmontat. Broşura, apărută la jumătatea lunii septembrie 1909, era corolarul activității sale, dar și un motiv de scandal, care a însoțit înlăturarea sa din funcția de director al aşezământului educațional huşean. Prins în războiul de presă dintre „Opinia" lui Take Ionescu şi „Neamul românesc" patronat de Nicolae Iorga, Ion Zelea Codreanu se definea ca un luptător la cauzei iorghiste folosind şcoala pentru a-şi promova imaginea proprie. Antisemitismul pe care îl propaga tot mai vehement, indiferent de natura scandalului din consiliul şcolar, l-au definit ca personalitate şi l-au compromis ca pedagog. De aceea, îndepărtarea sa de la conducerea aşezământului huşean nu putea fi decât una dublată de un astfel de scandal, care avea să îl radicalizeze şi să îi aştearnă drumul spre viaţa politică.

JEWISH FUNERARY HERITAGE: MEANINGS, SYMBOLS, AND TRADITIONS

Cristina Has (Antal)
PhD Student, "Babeș-Bolyai University of Cluj-Napoca

Abstract: This study examines the Jewish funerary heritage as a complex cultural, religious, and historical repository that preserves the memory and identity of Jewish communities in Central and Eastern Europe. Focusing on the cemeteries of Sălaj County, the paper analyses epitaphs, symbolic motifs, and funerary traditions as primary sources for understanding communal organization, socio-religious structures, and linguistic evolution. The research highlights the interdisciplinary value of funerary sites, which function simultaneously as spiritual spaces, historical archives, and vulnerable cultural landscapes requiring preservation. Through the analysis of acronyms, iconography, and regional typologies, the study emphasizes the continuity of Jewish sacred language and artistic symbolism, as well as the effects of historical ruptures such as the Holocaust. Ultimately, it argues for the necessity of safeguarding Jewish cemeteries as essential components of European cultural memory and educational heritage.*

Keywords: Jewish cemeteries; funerary heritage; epitaphs; symbolism; cultural memory.

Lucrarea explorează semnificațiile religioase, culturale și educaționale ale vizitării cimitirelor evreiești, precum și importanța interpretării textelor funerare ca surse istorice și spirituale. Cimitirul evreiesc este prezentat ca un loc sacru, destinat rugăciunii și reflecției asupra trecutului.Vizita la un astfel de spațiu presupune respectarea unor reguli tradiționale: acoperirea capului, separarea zonelor pentru bărbați și femei, evitarea profanării locului.

Moștenirea patrimoniului sacru în România

Cimitirele evreiești din România sunt locuri sacre conform Legii 489/2006, art.27/2, dar și instituții de igienă publică, având ca scop principal înhumarea decedaților de religie mozaică.Cimirirele evreiești trebuie să funcționeze ca zone de liniște și respect pentru cei ce se odihnesc acolo. Cimitirele evreiești sunt organizate după un regulament strict care are la bază prescripțiile religioase mozaice și sunt în conformitate cu prevederile Legii nr.102/2014 privind libertatea religioasă și regimul general al cultelor, Legii nr.102/2014 privind cimitirele, crematoriile umane și serviciile funerare și Legii nr.598/2002 pentru aprobarea Ordonanței de Urgență a Guvernului nr.36/2002 privind reglementarea dreptului de proprietate al Federației Comunităților Evreiești din România-Cultul Mozaic asupra lăcașilor de cult , cimitirelor și altor bunuri destinate cultului mozaic.

Cimitirele evreiești din România se administrează conform prescripțiilor Legii Mozaice și a cutumelor locale sub îndrumarea Cancelariei Rabinice a F.C.E.R. Identitatea confesională a cimitirelor este protejată de către Legea nr.489/2006, Art.28/3. Cimitirele evreiești din România sunt bunuri comunitar-religioase , ca parte a patrimoniului sacru-mozaic , sunt proprietatea F.C.E.R.-CM, conform Legii nr.598/2002 și au fost sacralizate în acest scop . Cimitirele evreiești , atât cele în funcțiune , cât și cele închise sunt arondate Comunităților Evreiești din România , pe criterii teritoriale. Cimitirele nearondate niciunei comunități sunt arondate Federației Comunităților Evreiești din România - Cultul Mozaic. Modificarea arondării se realizează numai ptin decizia conducerii F.C.E.R.- Cultul Mozaic. Dreptul de administrare a cimitirelor, supravegherea lor , atribuirea locurilor de veci, înhumarea, oficierea serviciilor religioase , executarea de monumente funerare, îngrijirea mormintelor, deshumarea sau orice altă acțiune care se desfășoară în incinta cimitirelor, precum și acțiuni legate de cimitire care se desfășoară în afara lor , constituie un drept al F.C.E.R. din România, prin comunitatea locală căreia îi este arondat cimitirul, sau, în cazul cimitirelor arondate la F.C.E.R., prin Departamentul de Administarare a Patrimoniului Imobiliar , care exercită atribuții în acest sens prin membri de conducere, președinți de comunități , obști , angajați delegați .

În cimitirele evreiești pot fi înhumați numai decedați evrei, cu excepția membrilor și descendenților din căsătorii mixte , care pot fi înhumați numai conform regulamentului și numai în parcelele special amenajate în acest scop. Președintele de comunitate răspunde în aria sa de competență pentru înhumarea evreilor, precum și a membrilor de comunitate elegibili pentru zona mixtă . De asemenea răspunde de administrarea cimitirelor arondate comunității.

Serviciul SACRA din cadrul Comunității Evreilor din București răspunde pentru desfășurarea exhumărilor și transportul osemintelor pe tot teritoriul României. Cancelaria Rabinică a F.C.E.R. stabilește prevederile ritual referitoare la administrarea cimitirelor și la desfășurarea înhumărilor și a deshumărilor, îndrumează personalul de cult și urmărește respectarea prevederilor pe tot teritoriul României. Luarea de decizii halahice în cazul în care se ivesc situații speciale.

Nu sunt premise înmormântări de Șabat și de Yom Kipur . În zilele de sărbătoare înhumarea este permisă numai cu condiția ca toate muncile , atât fizice cât și cele administrative , să fie efectuate de personal neevreu și fără a aduna un Minian . De Hol Hamoed (zile intermediare între sărbători) înhumarea este permisă. Fiind un cimitir de cult, înhumarea este permisă numai cu îndeplinirea ritualului prevăzut de prescripțiile religiei mozaice și stabilit prin procedură de Cancelaria Rabinică a F.C.E.R.. Pentru înhumarea în zona mixtă a membrilor și descendenților din căsătorii mixte se va proceda conform procedurii stabilite de Cancelaria Rabinică a F.C.E.R. pentru înhumarea în zona mixtă membrilor și descendenților din căsătorii mixte. Giulgiurile (tahrihim) se vor confecționa din pânză simplă , conform modelului avizat de Cancelaria Rabinică a F.C.E.R . Comunitățile vor deține o rezervă suficientă de giulgiuri. Sicriul va fi confecționat din scânduri , conform modelului avizat de cancelaria Rabinică a F.C.E.R. Spălarea rituală va fi făcută de preferință de o persoană de religie mozaică . De regulă bărbații nu vor fi spălați de femei , iar o femeie nu va fi spălată de către un bărbat. Înhumarea va fi oficiată de un bărbat evreu halahic desemnat de președintele de comunitate și cu acordul Cancelariei Rabinice a F.C.E.R. Comunitățile vor face face toate diligențile pentru asigurarea unui Minian . În cazul în care nu este prezent un Minian , nu se va rosti Kadiș în cimitir , ci în sinagogă , cu prima ocazie când se adună un Minian.

Monumentele funerare se execută numai cu respectarea modelelor tradiționale. Destinația unui cimitir nu poate fi schimbată , în sensul că nu este permisă dezafectarea lui prin deshumarea tuturor osemintelor. Comportamentul în incinta cimitirului va fi respectos, ținuta sobră , iar capul bărbaților va fi acoperit. În cimitir nu se mănâncă , nu se bea și sunt interzise orice activități care nu sunt legate direct de înhumări și de întreținerea cimitirelor. Cimitirele sunt închise vizitatorilor în zilele de Șabat, sărbători mozaice inclusiv Hol Hamoed , Roș Hodeș și în toată luna Nisan.

Semnificația ritualului de înhumare : ” Și se va întoarce țărâna în țărână precum a fost iar sufletul se va întoarce la Dumnezeu care l-a dat” (Kohelet/Ecclesiastul 12:7) . Omul este o îmbinare dintre trup și suflet. Sufletul este cel care dă viață trupului.Trupul este ca o îmbrăcăminte a sufletului prin care el are puterea de a acționa.Trupul se trage din țărână . Sufletul vine de la Dumnezeu. Când sufletul se desparte de trup acesta este momentul amar al morții. Sufletul se întoarce la Dumnezeu care l-a dat, iar trupul ne rămâne nouă pentru a-i asigura somnul liniștit în țărâna din care a fost luat. Fiecare din ei urmează să primească răsplata faptelor de o viață. Unul din fundamentele credinței mozaice este că va reveni timpul când cei adormiți în țărână se vor trezi. După o despărțire grea , cei doi tovarăși de o viață vor fi din nou împreună.

Trupul, ca fost lăcaș al sufletului , este demn de tot respectul. El trebuie tratat cu grijă , spălat și îmbrăcat în haine simple dar curate.Tot timpul el trebuie să stea acoperit. Autopsia este considerată mare necinstire și trebuie evitată atât cât permite legea. Trupul neînsuflețit este considerat impur. Astfel, orice apropiere de el , în afara celei necesare pentru a-l cinsti , este de evitat. Ceremonia de înhumare nu se desfășoară în sinagogă ci în capela din incinta cimitirului . Cohenilor le este interzis să se apropie de un trup neînsuflețit sau de un mormânt.

Momentul cel mai semnificativ al ritualului de înhumare este sfâșierea hainelor - keriah קריעה . Pe de o parte, ea este o expresie a durerii , a pierderii . Oricât ar încuraja societatea noastră compotamentul reținut , sunt momente în care exprimarea ei este absolut necesară. Reținerea în momente de doliu lasă durerea înăuntru , mocnită și devastatoare.

Pe de altă parte, ea este o expresie a durerii mărginite. Haina trupului este un simbol al hainei sufletului , adică trupul. Doar trupul s-a pierdut. Sufletul a rămas pentru veșnicie. Conform tradiției iudaice , despărțirea sufletului de trup este treptată. În timpul ceremoniei de înhumare sufletul încă plutește deasupra trupului. Sufletul aude elogiile și se bucură. Sufletului îi cerem iertare pe care care nu am avut ocazia să o cerem în timpul vieții precum și pentru eventuala lipsă de respect față de trupul neînsuflețit. Pentru suflet, înhumarea este un moment de mare încordare. În curând urmează judecata..

Pietrele funerare evreiești est-europene urmează modelul aşkenaz, dezvoltat în Europa Centrală între secolele al XI-lea și al XIV-lea. Trăsăturile lor cele mai tipice includ poziția verticală (spre deosebire de pietrele funerare sefarde, care sunt de obicei așezate orizontal), forma dreptunghiulară și proeminența câmpurilor de inscripție. Pe lângă plăcile verticale simple, pseudosarcofagele erau populare în unele localități în secolele al XVI-lea până al XVIII-lea. Începând cu secolul al XVIII-lea, unele morminte ale unor cărturari, rabini sau oameni sfinți excepționali au fost construite cu un ohel (lierar, cort), o structură simplă care acoperea mormântul . Inscripțiile ebraice erau scrise în scriere pătrată. Scrierea cursivă și semicursivă au început să apară sporadic abia în secolele al XVI-lea și al XVII-lea și au fost folosite pentru formula de încheiere (sau o parte a acesteia) a epitafului. De-a lungul întregii perioade, și mai ales până în secolul al XIX-lea, cel mai comun material pentru pietrele funerare a fost, fără îndoială, lemnul. Pietrele funerare erau simple scânduri cu inscripții pictate sau imagini ale unor pietre funerare de dimensiuni naturale, sculptate în lemn. Având în vedere lipsa de permanență a materialului, foarte puține dintre acestea au supraviețuit (câteva se află în Belarus. Dintre pietrele funerare care au supraviețuit, marea majoritate sunt sculptate în piatră, deși au dăinuit și câteva exemple din secolul al XIX-lea și începutul secolului al XX-lea, realizate din fontă, precum și unele din secolul al XX-lea, compuse din piatră artificială (terrazzo, beton). Prin urmare, cele mai frecvent conservate pietre funerare nu sunt reprezentative pentru arta sepulcrală evreiască est-europeană în ansamblul ei; mai degrabă, ele sunt mai tipice pentru arta sepulcrală a claselor mai bogate, deoarece prelucrarea pietrei era scumpă până în secolul al XIX-lea. Cele mai vechi pietre funerare evreiești din ținuturile cunoscute mai târziu sub numele de Europa de Est provin din Pannonia romană din secolele al III-lea și al IV-lea, din așezările Solva (Esztergom, Ungaria de astăzi), Aquincum (Buda, Ungaria), Intercisa (Dunaújváros, Ungaria), Siklós (Ungaria), Mursa (Osijek, Croația), Ciglana (Čelarevo lângă Novi Sad, Iugoslavia) și Oescus (Gigen, Bulgaria). Zece pietre funerare au supraviețuit din aceste localități, presupunând că toate au fost identificate corect ca fiind evreiești. Acestea aveau epitafe tipic romane, scrise în latină și greacă (piatra funerară de la Ciglan. Pietrele funerare rămase sunt realizate în stilul deja tipic formelor sepulcrale aşkenazice medievale târzii: sunt plăci dreptunghiulare verticale, plane, singurele elemente decorative fiind fascia plată care mărginește câmpul inscripției. care avea o cultură artistică extrem de dezvoltată — întruchipa o estetică renascentistă (și mai târziu barocă), încorporând motive arhitecturale clasice pentru a îmbogăți compoziția feței pietrei funerare. La mijlocul secolului al XVII-lea, acest tip de piatră funerară s-a răspândit în întreaga regiune, suferind în același timp o „primitivizare” și o evoluție rapidă către forme de artă populară. Versiunea populară a acestui tip de piatră funerară, uneori denumită baroc evreiesc, a devenit cel mai cunoscut tip în rândul comunităților evreiești din Europa de Est; a predominat până la mijlocul secolului al XIX-lea și - în multe localități din Ucraina, estul Poloniei și Belarus - până la Holocaust. Câmpul de inscripție a continuat să fie elementul cel mai proeminent într-o piatră funerară de acest stil, dar compoziția părții frontale a stelei s-a schimbat sub influența modelelor arhitecturale contemporane - așa cum se vede, de exemplu, în motivul arcadei, ediculei și, de la începutul secolului al XVII-lea, o tendință notabilă de a împărți partea frontală a stelei în părți clar diferențiate: un fronton, un câmp de inscripție înrămat și o bază. Inițial, frontonul conținea formula de deschidere a inscripției (sau cel puțin o parte din aceasta), dar de la sfârșitul secolului al XVII-lea a fost din ce în ce mai des umplut cu imagini ornamentale și simbolice. În același timp, frontonul în sine a crescut. Un exemplu extrem al acestei tendințe poate fi observat în pietrele funerare din sud-estul Poloniei, Ucrainei și Moldovei din secolul al XVIII-lea și începutul secolului al XIX-lea, unde frontonul, bogat ornamentat și plin de motive simbolice, constituia aproape jumătate din piatra funerară .

Repertoriul de motive folosite pentru decorarea pietrelor funerare includea elemente arhitecturale ornamentale, precum și poate 100 de motive figurative simbolice, adesea legate între ele în compoziții stilizate, complexe și foarte specializate . Exemple ale acestor scheme hieratice specializate includ coroane flancate de lei heraldici sau cerbi, ulciorul și bolul cu pietre funerare levitice, Datarea cu pietre funerare poate oferi dovezi pentru perioada în care a existat o comunitate evreiască. Pietrele funerare tradiționale evreiești indică data morții folosind alfabetul ebraic. De la această dată poate fi stabilită și perioada de timp în care cimitirul a fost folosit de comunitatea evreiască. Cea mai veche piatră funerară este adesea cea mai veche dovadă documentată fizic a existenței unei comunități evreiești. Acesta este în special cazul cimitirelor mici, uitate, a căror comunitate evreiască a fost complet distrusă în timpul Holocaustului. Cimitirele evreiești din județul Sălaj constituie un segment fundamental al patrimoniului cultural al regiunii, reprezentând, totodată, ultimele urme materiale ale unei prezențe comunitare active până la mijlocul secolului al XX-lea. În lipsa comunităților evreiești contemporane semnificative, aceste cimitire funcționează astăzi ca spații ale memoriei, ca arhive epigrafice și ca situri de patrimoniu vulnerabil. Analiza acestora oferă perspective multiple – istorice, epigrafice, arheologice și antropologice – care permit reconstituirea aspectelor privind organizarea comunitară, practicile funerare, structura demografică și relațiile interculturale locale. În Sălaj, densitatea ridicată a cimitirelor evreiești raportat la numărul mic al centrelor urbane atestă extinderea și diversitatea rețelei comunităților evreiești din secolele XVIII–XX. În timp ce multe cimitire evreiești au dovezi documentate ale existenței comunităților evreiești, există câteva cazuri în care cimitirele evreiești sunt singurele dovezi păstrate sau cunoscute. Prin urmare, este important să protejăm aceste urme ale trecutului pentru a ne asigura că aceste cimitire evreiești din județul Sălaj constituie un ansamblu unic de mărturii istorice, artistice și lingvistice, ilustrând o identitate comunitară dispărută, dar încă prezentă prin urmele sale materiale. Analiza epigrafică și tipologică demonstrează că aceste situri pot fi tratate ca surse primare de cercetare – comparabile cu arhivele documentare – capabile să ofere date despre structura socială, demografia și cultura evreiască transilvăneană. Restaurarea și valorificarea acestor spații funerare necesită o colaborare interdisciplinară între istorici, arheologi, conservatori, rabini și autorități locale, pentru a transforma cimitirele evreiești din Sălaj din „locuri uitate” în situri active de memorie și educație.

Limbajul sacru utilizat în tradiția iudaică reprezintă una dintre cele mai vechi și persistente forme de codificare culturală și religioasă. Cu mult înainte de apariția abrevierilor moderne asociate comunicării digitale, comunitățile evreiești utilizau sistematic acronime și formule prescurtate în ebraică și aramaică. Acestea se regăsesc în texte religioase, corespondență, discursuri rabinice, documente istorice și, în mod particular, în inscripțiile funerare. Acronimele simplifică transmiterea mesajelor, dar, mai important, concentrează conținut teologic și simbolic, facilitând fixarea unor concepte fundamentale ale tradiției iudaice.

Acronim	Scriere ebraică	Semnificație
AH	ע״ה	Alav hashalom („Pacea fie asupra lui/ei”). Se folosește după numele unei persoane decedate.
BD”E	בד״א	Baruch dayan emet („Binecuvântat fie Judecătorul adevărului”). Expresie adresată unui îndoliat.
B”H	ב״ה	B’ezrat Hashem sau Baruch Hashem („Cu ajutorul lui Dumnezeu” / „Binecuvântat fie Dumnezeu”). Se scrie frecvent în colțul paginii.
BS”D	בס״ד	B’siyata dishmaya („Cu ajutorul Cerului”). Se notează în scrisori sau documente.
IY”H	אי״ה	Im yirtzeh Hashem („Dacă va fi voia lui Dumnezeu”). Echivalentul ebraic al expresiei „Deo volente”.
LI”N	לע״נ	L’iluy neshamah („Pentru ridicarea sufletului”). Indică o faptă bună făcută în memoria unui decedat.
N”Y	נ״י	Nehro/nehrah yair („Lumina lui/ei să ardă puternic”). Folosit când scrii unei persoane vii.

Shlita	שליט״א	Sheyichyeh l'orekh yamim tovim amen („Fie ca el/ea să trăiască multe zile bune"). Apare după numele rabinilor în viață.
Shotz	ש״צ	Shaliach tzibur („Emisar public"). Persoana care conduce rugăciunea în sinagogă.
Tanach	תנ״ך	Torah, Nevi'im, Ketuvim – Tora, Profeți și Scrieri. Biblia ebraică (Vechiul Testament).
Z"L	ז״ל	Zichrono/Zichrona livracha („Fie ca amintirea lui/ei să fie o binecuvântare"). Folosit după numele persoanelor decedate.

Acronime funerare și epigrafice. În cimitirele evreiești și pe pietrele funerare, acronimele sunt o parte esențială a limbajului vizual și spiritual. Ele concentrează credința, respectul și speranța într-o formulă scurtă, adesea gravată artistic.

Acronim
N"E	נ״ע	Nucho/Nucha Eden („Odihna lui/ei să fie în Eden"). Apare frecvent pe pietre funerare.
P"N	פ״נ	Po nikhbar („Aici zace"). Variante: Po tamun („Aici este ascuns").
TNZBH	תנצב״ה	Tehi nishmato tzrurah b'tzror hachayim („Fie ca sufletul lui/ei să fie legat în legătura vieții"). Formulă sacră standard în epitaful evreiesc.

De mai bine de două milenii, acronimele fac parte din structura limbii ebraice. Ele apar în comentariile rabinice, în texte sacre și în limbajul zilnic. Cele mai cunoscute exemple includ: Rashi – Rabi Shlomo Yitzhaki și Rambam – Rabi Moshe ben Maimon (Maimonide)

Literatura rabinică abundă în acronime pentru expresii uzuale, precum „dacă este posibil", „este interzis", „așa cum este scris". Prin acestea, studiul voluminoaselor tratate de Talmud devine mai accesibil și mai sistematic. Acronimele au facilitat nu doar scrierea și lectura, ci și memoria colectivă – comprimând teologia și tradiția în forme ușor de recunoscut.Cercetarea analizează simbolistica și ornamentica pietrelor funerare evreiești, evidențiind rolul acestor reprezentări vizuale în transmiterea valorilor spirituale, identitare și culturale ale comunităților evreiești. Studiul explorează ritualurile funerare evreiești, accentuând conceptele de puritate, respect față de defuncți și semnificația simbolurilor de pe pietrele funerare. Aceste elemente nu doar reflectă credințele religioase, ci și transmit informații sociologice și culturale despre comunitățile care le-au creat. Prin urmare, studiul cimitirelor evreiești oferă o perspectivă interdisciplinară, unind domeniile istoriei, religiei, artei și antropologiei Tranziția de la vechile restricții corporative la un regim de drepturi civile generalizate redefinește poziția evreilor în societatea transilvăneană: acces la proprietate, mobilitate profesională, instituționalizare comunitară, participare la economia modernă. Efectele se reflectă în dinamica demografică, în diversificarea profesională și în producția culturală, marcând întreaga evoluție a comunităților evreiești până la Primul Război Mondial. Materialul reafirmă importanța cercetării și conservării patrimoniului evreiesc ca parte integrantă a memoriei și identității europene. Cimitirele evreiești, prin valoarea lor istorică și educațională, sunt esențiale pentru înțelegerea relației dintre trecut și prezent, servind ca punți de legătură între generații și culturi.

Simbolistica funerară evreiască .Pe lângă acronime, pietrele funerare includ o simbolistică bogată care exprimă statutul religios, ocupația, virtuțile și identitatea familială a defunctului. Printre cele mai răspândite simboluri se numără:

- Menora – simbol al luminii divine și al templului;
- Mâinile de kohen – indică descendența sacerdotală;
- Ulciorul leviților – simbol asociat celor din tribul Levi;
- Lumânările de Șabat – utilizate pentru mormintele femeilor;
- Steaua lui David – devenită, începând cu sec. XIX, marcă identitară;
- Simboluri animale – leul (putere), cerbul (grație), pasărea (libertatea sufletului), himerele (protecție spirituală).

În perioada secolului al XVIII–XIX-lea se observă o prezență a formelor stelare din calcar/marnă, cu reliefuri bogate (lei, coroane, ulcioare, copaci rupți), frontoane semicirculare și motive vegetale.

În perioada secolului al XIX-lea târziu – XX, are loc o transformare spre forme neoclasice; apar epitafe bilingve/trilingve (ebraică + maghiară/germană/română), cu mai multă sobrietate la comunitățile neologe. Steaua lui David devine frecventă abia din a doua jumătate a secolului al XIX-lea – XX, reprezentând un marcaj al identității iudaice, nu un simbol „al morții".

În Transilvania – Sălaj, Cluj, Oradea, Satu Mare, Sighet, Mediaș – se constată tiparele de mai sus. La mormintele femeilor observăm prezența candelabrelor, la rabini/învățați – suluri, coroane, cărți, la kohanim/leviți – mâini și ulcioare.

Un aspect interesant în tradiția evreiască este faptul că mormintele nu sunt împodobite cu flori, ci cu pietre. Această tradiție este una veche, iar originile sale sunt neclare. Este mai degrabă un obicei sau o tradiție decât o poruncă, iar de-a lungul timpului au fost oferite multe interpretări pentru această practică. Pentru a păstra sufletul în această lume: Talmudul menționează că, după moarte, sufletul continuă să locuiască pentru o vreme în mormântul său. Punerea de pietre menține sufletul jos în această lume, ceea ce aduce consolare. Mulți oameni aleg o piatră cu semnificație personală – dintr-un loc drag celui decedat sau asociată unui moment de comemorare. Pe lângă acestea, piatra este folosită frecvent în Tora ca metaforă pentru Dumnezeu. Cel mai comun material a fost lemnul, simplu pictat sau sculptat – de aceea, puține exemple au supraviețuit. Pietrele funerare din piatră naturală s-au generalizat abia în secolul al XIX-lea, fiind rezervate familiilor mai înstărite. În perioada modernă apar și exemplare dinfontă sau piatră artificială (terrazzo, beton). În vestul Poloniei, Silezia și Boemia, pietrele funerare capătă influențe baroce, rococo și clasiciste; în estul Poloniei, Ucraina, Moldova și Belarus, se păstrează forme populare, hieratice, încărcate de simbolism religios. În vest, se observă apropierea de estetica creștină, în timp ce în est se dezvoltă oartă sepulcrală unică evreiască, cuo identitate spirituală inconfundabilă.

Tipologic, se observă o evoluție de la pietre funerare verticale simple (secolul XIX) la monumente mai elaborate, uneori cu influențe neoclasice (columne, obeliscuri, frontoane), caracteristice epocii moderne. Ornamentele cele mai frecvente includ Menorah-ul, Steaua lui David, cărțile deschise (pentru rabini), mâinile binecuvântării (pentru cohanim) și ulciorul (pentru leviți). Aceste simboluri, alături de variațiile lingvistice și grafice, oferă indicii asupra diversității profesionale și religioase a comunităților, precum și asupra gradului lor de integrare în societatea majoritară.

Studiul patrimoniului funerar evreiesc presupune abordarea concomitentă a trei dimensiuni fundamentale: documentară, tehnică și etico-religioasă. Întrucât cimitirele evreiești reprezintă spații sacre, protejate de normele halahice, orice intervenție trebuie să îmbine cercetarea științifică cu respectul pentru valorile spirituale și memoria colectivă. În județul Sălaj, unde numeroase cimitire evreiești se află într-o stare avansată de degradare, este necesară elaborarea unui model metodologic integrat, bazat pe principii interdisciplinare și pe colaborare interinstituțională, care să asigure atât conservarea materială a pietrelor funerare, cât și valorizarea educațională și culturală a siturilor. Prin studierea tipologiilor funerare, a evoluției simbolisticii și a limbilor utilizate în epigrafie, se conturează un tablou complex al continuităților culturale și religioase evreiești. Astfel, cimitirele evreiești din Sălaj trebuie înțelese nu doar ca locuri de înhumare, ci ca martori ai unei identități comunitare dispărute, ale cărei urme persistă în aceste repere culturale fragile.

THE ROLE OF JOURNALISM AND WRITTEN PRESS IN THE PROCESS OF ASSIMILATING ANGLICISMS AND THE ANGLICIZATION OF THE ROMANIAN DISCOURSE

Nicoleta Simona Radu
PhD Student, National University of Science and Technology „Polithenica" Bucharest, Pitești University Centre

Abstract: The hypothesis of this study is that the integration of Anglicisms into the Romanian language is significantly influenced by journalism and the written press, which play a crucial role in shaping public perception, acceptance, and the overall process of Anglicization in Romanian. This process reflects broader trends of globalization and language evolution.

The present study explores how modern journalism and the written press significantly influence the integration of English words and phrases into the Romanian language. It also examines the historical context of Anglicisms and their growing prevalence in various fields, including technology, business, and popular culture. Through analyzing media content, the article highlights the ways in which journalists and publications not only introduce new terms but also shape public perception and acceptance of these linguistic changes. The study concludes that the written press plays a crucial role in both the spread of Anglicisms and the overall Anglicization process of Romanian, reflecting broader trends of globalization and language evolution.

Keywords: Anglicism; journalism; assimilations; language evolution; discourse

The present paper comes to expand and explore other facets that I have previously approached in a previous thesis, entitled Translation Studies and the Influence of Anglicization and Calque on the Restructuring of Other Languages. As stated previously, language is a living entity, dynamically evolving under the influence of social, cultural, and technological changes. In recent decades, the Romanian language has experienced a significant influx of English lexical elements, particularly through mass media, technological innovations, and globalization. This influence manifests significantly through the influx of English lexical items, including anglicisms and calques, which are increasingly integrated into Romanian discourse across various domains. However, it is not fully explored the extent to which these linguistic influences affect the linguistic identity, language wholeness, and communicative practices of Romanian speakers. Specifically, there is a need to analyze how translation practices contribute to the enrichment of Romanian vocabulary and how media, especially magazines and digital platforms, serve as means for this linguistic evolution. Therefore, this study aims to investigate the mechanisms, scope, and implications of English influence on Romanian language and discourse, considering both the enriching potential and the challenges it presents. The discussion aims to shed light on the mechanisms through which Romanian integrates English vocabulary, the role of translation practices in this integration, and the implications for the language's identity and expressive capacity.

What is a text*?*

According to the Explanatory Dictionary of the Romanian Language, the term means A sequence of sentences or words, that make up a (written) communication, built according to the rules of a given language (our tr.), and it derives from the lat. textum, fr. texte, germ. Text.[1]

The term text is known by most of us and we can all recognize different types of texts that we come across in our daily activities. A text is an accurate succession of words, sentences, phrases through which we are communicated different ideas. There is a rich diversity of texts, literature texts, mathematical, newspaper editorials, news, slogans, recipes, calendars, lists of names, law texts and many others. There are texts written down in books, newspapers, notes and there are also oral texts, either on video or audio tapes, or uttered directly in front of us by the people we interact with every day. We are also able to recognize texts belonging to different types of writings, we know that their size is directly connected to their characteristics, that there are differences between texts found in schoolbooks and those printed in newspapers, we can state whether a text is complete or if there are parts of it missing. We can see the differences between texts belonging to different authors, according to their styles, and we can write texts ourselves, we can make changes when we want to, we can resume them, write them by hand, type them or edit them directly on the computer. Some of use write easily, some not, we use drafts or not. We all produce texts in different situations, either at home or at school, at the office, on the street, at an examination etc.

There are some aspects to be considered whenever we talk about a text. Somebody produces a text having in mind a certain cause and a defined purpose. The given text is produced for an audience, it communicates ideas in a certain language and these ideas are transmitted in a certain form. Any text is produced in a given context, in a time and space very well defined, alongside other texts of the same type or different ones.

The written text, as well as the oral one, is a form of communication, meaning that somebody intends to share thoughts and feelings with other members of a society. When somebody communicates, that they have the possibility of expressing their own personality, of exploring ideas and gaining power by interacting with the readers through words. To produce a text, means to give sense and to find the most efficient means of communicating with others. And communication is both a social and an individual act.

Any text takes form after following certain rules, that most times are beyond correctness or grammaticality. A good text, from a grammatical point of view, is not necessarily a good text, or even interesting or convincing. To write a text means to take decisions regarding the ideas that are about to be expressed, the form in which they are about to be presented and the strategies used in order to convince the readers. In order to ensure the efficient sending of information, the author must seek to find the coincidence between his mental state of mind, and that of the readers. The author must transform the reader from an outsider into an insider, as concerns the text.

Writing a text involves a continuous process of thinking, acting and examining, since it is a dynamic and ongoing process that involves more than simply putting words on paper or screen. It requires a continuous cycle of thinking, acting, and examining, each phase building upon and informing the others.

The general rules that are to be considered when writing a text always change from one type of text to another: there are administrative texts that must follow certain rules, while literature, for instance, seems to disobey all rules. The predilection for one type of text or the other depends upon our own tastes in different domains.[2] (our tr.)

However, regardless of the type of text or the domain it belongs to, or even our own tastes, a good text must fulfill a series of demands. First of all, it must have a good chosen theme, function of the context of communication, it must have a unitary content, leading to a conclusion. The author must be an authority in the given matter, so that the text may offer the reader a qualitative information. The author must be involved in the subject that he writes about, by means of his attitude towards the theme, to share his feelings and thoughts to the readers. The text must have a clear scope, it must satisfy the expectations of the readers, it should be elegantly built both in content and shape, it must be a single whole. It must be concise, so that the message may reach the readers in a given form and convince them. And last, but not least, the author must be fully aware of the consequences that his text may have on the audience.

Some distinctions between literary and journalistic

In order to understand what exactly is the journalistic text, we must clarify to which domain it belongs: either literature or communication. Although the works of various linguists offer a variety of useful suggestions, it is difficult to find a particular and comprehensive analysis of the journalistic language. We may accept the fact that journalism is a specialized extension of literature, considering thus the pragmatic literature or the frontier literature.

According to Heinrich F. Plett, "literature has three constitutive levels: syntactical, semantic and pragmatic", thus, journalism belongs to the pragmatic level.[3](our tr.) By pragmatism we understand "the study of language, considering the context of the characteristics of its usage: the psychosocial motivations of the transmitter, the reactions of the interlocutor, the object of the discourse, the social context of the discourse etc."[4] (our tr.) Therefore, since the media discourse is fundamentally dependent on the reader, on the targeted audience, the pragmatic approach may be considered the most appropriate means of underlining the characteristics and basic features of a journalistic text. Taking into consideration the lack of an elementary definition and some clear criteria for distinguishing between poetry, prose, theatre, pamphlet, we can only state that any text written in a book is literature, and what is published in a newspaper belongs to journalism.

These two types of writing, literature and journalism, both resemble and separate from one another in extremely important points: the management of information, the degree of topicality, the simplicity, the concision, the credibility etc. There is, also, another important aspect that separate the two writings, literature seeks the aesthetic effect, while journalism wants to communicate, to say directly what it has to say. As D. Husson states, "Regardless of its qualities, the article has no other reason to survive its mission. We could say that the article dies in the very instant when it is read. It is not the case of the literary text, which claims for finality the eternity itself. "[5] (our tr.) Literature creates, while journalism only registers, the distinction takes into consideration the way in which each of the two representatives use time, thus the writer uses eternity, and the journalist uses the day or even the moment.

It seems that the main criterion for distinguishing between literary and journalistic is that of fiction. Thus, the press language refuses to validate the imaginary, the fantasy. The journalistic text is an account of events "from the spot", therefore it has to accede to certain accuracies, it must be clear, concise, believable. Another aspect to be considered is the degree of freedom of the writer, because, while in literature this type of freedom seems to be limitless, in journalism it is often limited by some specific rigours: the event must be recent, real, new, and to be the subject of interest of as many people as possible. In other words, the journalistic text cannot use most of the aesthetic categories, the bizarre, the unusual, the grotesque, the macabre etc., while the author has the freedom of making use of as many techniques he pleases: he may invent situations and characters, change the narrative voices, use several means of expressing his intentions etc.

Considered from a pragmatic point of view, the journalistic text is a discourse marked by all concrete conditions of communication. Being totally dependent upon the reader, the basis of a journalistic text is, in fact, a text with a clear and distinct finality of communication. The journalistic text has a distinct discursive dynamism that reflects both the immediacy of the information it conveys and the evolving nature of public discourse. Unlike other forms of communication, journalistic language operates within specific constraints and expectations—such as clarity, conciseness, objectivity, and engagement—that shape its structure and stylistic features. This discursive dynamism results from the constant negotiation between these norms and the contemporary socio-cultural context, which includes prevailing linguistic trends, technological influences, and audience preferences.

Journalism and journalistic discourse in written press

The first thing that comes to one's mind when thinking of journalism, is something connected to mass media.

The expression means of mass information denotes either a sector of social communication, such as written press or radio-television, a sub-sector, such as periodicals, magazines, FM radio, cable television or a certain organ: a newspaper, a magazine, a radio or television programme. A means of mass information is, in this view, an institution that, by using specific technical means, broadcasts, simultaneously or almost simultaneously, a given product, informative or entertaining, to an assembly of individuals spread in different areas.

Regardless of the geographical area, political form of government and economical development of the country it operates in, a means of mass information has several constants in its evolution, structure end tendencies. These resemblances are due mainly to technology and partly to tradition.

There is no place in the world where, besides local weeklies or associative radio programmes, mass media have the possibility of producing all of their contents. In order to gather the information published, they use agencies, that can be either worldwide, such as France Press, the first one in the world of the kind, national, such as Press Association, in Great Britain, or specific ones, such as Dow Jones, a financial agency in the US. Mass media also have many collaborators, that are Paid for each article they write and permanent or occasional correspondents. For the entertainment sections, mass media use comic producers, film producers etc., and they have to call on foreign producers, especially Hollywood, as well as Televisa, in Mexic and Globo, in Brasil.

As concerns the audience, we can distinguish at least between three categories, with extremely different tastes in media. These are:

- people with a high cultural level, highly educated, which are usually rich people, but small in number
- opposite to them are the poor people, undereducated
- between these two extremes, there are the middle classes, which are important both in number, as well as incomes.

Mass media function mostly for the latter category, thus in the countries where this category is poorly represented, mass media are also rare.[6] (our tr.)

Journalism is the practice of investigation and reporting of events, issues, and trends to a broad audience. Although there is much variation within journalism, the ideal is to inform the citizenry.[7]

Journalism has certainly built a strong tradition in all countries, over time. It is the one that offers the greatest richness of styles and it serves as an inspiration source for the broadcasted journalism. Philippe Gaillard defines journalism as "The profession of those who, either as employees or collaborators, carry out an informative function, that is (a function) of searching or presenting news, being in the service of a written newspaper, of audio-visual media or a press agency."[8] (our tr.)

The study aims to analyze the processes through which English anglicisms and calques are introduced into Romanian vocabulary, highlighting at the same time the dynamic interaction between media, language evolution, and cultural exchange. The key concepts of this process are anglicization, the phenomenon which allows for the introduction and assimilation of English words and expressions into Romanian and, at the same time, the calques that adapt foreign idioms into our native structures.

The Concept of Anglicisms and Calques

Defining Anglicisms

Anglicisms refer to words, phrases, or stylistic features borrowed from English into other languages. They often emerge due to cultural influence, technological innovations, or social trends propagated through mass media, advertising, and digital communication. For example, Romanian has incorporated terms such as email, click, review, and feedback into its vocabulary, often used in both colloquial and formal contexts.

In Romanian, anglicization manifests in various aspects:

- Lexical Borrowing: Incorporation of English terms into Romanian vocabulary.
- Semantic Shift: Extension or alteration of meanings of native words under English influence.
- Stylistic Borrowing: Use of English idioms, expressions, or stylistic devices in writing and speech.

Calques and Their Role

Calques, also known as loan translations, involve translating the constituent parts of a foreign expression into native words. For example, the English phrase "brainwash" becomes Romanian spălare pe creier, literally "washing on the brain." These translations serve to adapt foreign concepts within the native linguistic framework, fostering a sense of familiarity and linguistic coherence.

Translation is not merely a linguistic transfer but a cultural act that mediates ideas, values, and linguistic innovations. It introduces new concepts, terminologies, and stylistic features from source languages (primarily English in recent decades) into Romanian. This influence of English on Romanian language has been facilitated over the years, but especially in recent ones, by a series of social and cultural factors, among which it is worth mentioning the globalization, as a primary one, through the interconnectedness of education and mass media, which also affects the economy as well.

English also dominates fields like IT, science, and business, and therefore the technological advances are domains which are almost entirely operated in English, making this a domain of continuous development influenced by this language. Going again back to media, be it written press or not, it is closely connected to the internet, which again is highly dominated by English and since these are the domains that most interest the young generations, it is obvious that exposure to English content through movies, music and social networks is present in the lexicon of youth, often incorporating trendy English words. Not to mention politics, which also tends to align people's views on important matters, again, through the use of the same language.

We can conclude that the overall cultural perception is intensely influenced by English, since it has become a symbol of modernity in all important aspects of life, and translation is not merely a linguistic transfer but has come to be regarded as a cultural act that mediates ideas, values, and linguistic innovations.

Trying to detail the domain of media, which is accessible to everyone nowadays, the translation of journalistic discourse introduces new concepts, terminologies, and stylistic features from source languages, since this field of communication presents a unique set of challenges due to its genre-specific features, dynamic nature, and the influence of social, cultural, and political contexts.

Mass media play a pivotal role in the dissemination of new vocabulary and stylistic features from English into Romanian. Media outlets, being one of the most influential channels of communication, represented by television, newspapers, online platforms, and social media, actively introduce anglicisms and calques, shaping contemporary discourses.

The Role of Mass Media in Spreading Anglicisms and Calques

The present paper aims to examine the contribution of mass media, especially magazines, online content, and social media platforms, in propagating and normalizing English lexical and stylistic features within Romanian discourse.

In Romanian mass media, especially in news reportage, entertainment, and online content, English expressions are often adopted because they evoke modernity, immediacy, or a cosmopolitan image. The terms that are specific to the domain come to be so frequently used, that their presence in speech reflects their functional utility. The integration of English expressions in Romanian mass media exemplifies how language functions as a reflection of societal values and aspirations.

One of the key ways the mass media facilitates this spread is through the rapid dissemination of neologisms associated with technology, business, and popular culture. As audiences become accustomed to encountering these terms in media content, they start to adopt them in their everyday conversations and written communication. This process accelerates their integration into the Romanian language and normalizes their use in various social contexts.

The media also acts as an educational space by shaping language norms. For many readers and viewers, the way terms are presented in headlines and reports directly influences their perception of what is considered "correct" or "modern" language. Consequently, the repeated exposure to anglicisms and calques in the media helps normalize their usage and speeds up their acceptance into everyday language.

Magazine articles often employ stylistic devices borrowed from English, such as punchy slogans, catchy headlines, and informal expressions, which appeal particularly to younger audiences seeking a connection with global culture. These stylistic features create a linguistic environment where English expressions are seen as more fashionable, trendy, or impactful. Over time, repeated exposure to such language use helps these anglicisms become ingrained in the readers' vocabulary, reducing resistance to foreign terms and fostering their naturalization Calques frequently serve as crucial linguistic tools for adapting foreign concepts and expressions within Romanian discourse. By translating the structural and semantic components of English idioms, phrases, or terminologies into native Romanian forms, calques facilitate a smoother integration of international ideas into the local language. This process of domestication preserves the familiarity and cultural resonance of the language, while at the same time enhancing comprehension among speakers who may find direct borrowings or untranslated foreign terms less accessible or less aligned with their linguistic norms. Magazines play a significant role in translating or creating calques based on English idioms, further contributing to language naturalization. These calques help maintain cultural relevance and comprehension, making foreign concepts more accessible and less foreign.

We can clearly state that magazines influence the broader discourse by setting stylistic standards. When they adopt a language rich in anglicisms, they encourage their readership to mirror this language style, creating a cycle of influence that extends beyond the printed page into everyday conversations and online platforms. Moreover, they serve as dynamic platforms that shape cultural trends, stylistic norms, and language use, especially among urban, educated, and youth audiences who are often at the forefront of linguistic innovation.

Magazines, and especially those oriented toward fashion, entertainment, lifestyle, and celebrity culture, are powerful agents of linguistic influence. Their language often adopts a high density of English words, idioms, and stylistic features borrowed directly from English-speaking media. These publications serve as gateways through which anglicisms enter and affect everyday discourse, particularly among younger audiences.

One of the primary functions of magazines is to introduce and normalize anglicisms that align with contemporary lifestyle, fashion, entertainment, and technological trends. Popular fashion magazines like Vogue or Elle, as well as entertainment magazines such as Ok!, frequently incorporate English terminology, such as trendy, street style, look, famous, and celebrity in order to evoke sophistication, international appeal, and modernity.

Thus journalism, through the existence of magazines, acts as both a facilitator and an agent of linguistic hybridization, since it integrates English elements into the Romanian lexicon and idiomatic repertoire.

In conclusion, mass media significantly contribute to the spread of anglicisms and calques in Romanian by providing a constant stream of new terminology, stylistic innovations, and idiomatic expressions. It acts as a powerful agent of linguistic change, fostering a hybrid language that blends native elements with internationally recognized terms. Through its influence, the media helps embed English lexicon into the fabric of Romanian discourse, shaping public language use and reinforcing the broader process of anglicization in society.

NEGATIVITY WITHIN THE NEWS A FRAMING-BASED INQUIRY INTO ROMANIAN NEWS DISCOURSE

Mihaela Mihalea
Phd Student, "Babeș-Bolyai" University of Cluj Napoca

Abstract: In an era when propaganda, disinformation, and fake news place increasing pressure on the reliability of journalism, viewing news discourse as part of a broader process of production and consumption allows for more realistic expectations and encourages the development of critical thinking in news consumption. This perspective follows a Discourse Analysis theoretical framework, particularly Teun A. van Dijk's (1988) work on news discourse, where "news is not characterized as a picture of reality, which may be correct or biased, but as a frame through which the social world is routinely constructed" (p. 7). Within media research, this analysis follows David L. Altheide's work, particularly his characterization of media—especially electronic media—as "part of a 'problem-generating machine' geared to entertainment, voyeurism, and the 'quick fix' rather than to understanding and social change." Building on this perspective, we argue that the fragmentation of media platforms over the past two decades has contributed to an intensification of negativity within news discourse. We approach our research inquiry from a diachronic perspective through a qualitative analysis, aiming to identify the changes in Romanian news discourse at the beginning of the transition to the digital environment. To illustrate these developments, we examine a sample of texts published in the Romanian news outlet Adevărul between 2000 and 2010, in both print and electronic formats.

Keywords: news; negative framing; discourse; Romanian media discourse; platforms

News as discourse

Following the sociocognitive approach of Teun van Dijk, we address discourse as „not just text, but also a form of interaction" (van Dijk, 1988: 29) . Hence, any analysis of a text should take into account the broader social context in which it is produced, distributed, and consumed. The Dutch scholar argues that discourse analysis should not engage in an in-depth examination of the cognitive processes or social situations that also fall within the domains of psychology and sociology, but should instead focus on "the systematic relationships between text and context" (van Dijk, 1988, p. 30). In analyzing this relationship, the interaction between cognitive processes and social situations should be understood as bidirectional: cognitive processes shape the production and reception of discourse structures, and, in turn, discourse structures influence social situations. From a sociocognitive perspective, news is understood as incorporating norms, values, and goals that are socially shared by both news producers and consumers: "people usually do not read news just to update their personal models of the world but also because such models may be relevant for further social interaction" (van Dijk, 1988, p. 140). Thus, the present article conceptualizes news as an influential process that shapes and constructs social comprehension.

A New Emerging Space: The Fifth Estate

During the industrial era, the media functioned as a central meeting point between journalists and their audiences, with professional journalists serving as the primary gatekeepers of information. In communicative terms, news could be understood as an exchange between experts and laypeople. As Bill Kovach and Tom Rosenstiel (2021) note in the introduction to the fourth edition of The Elements of Journalism, "in the new open ecosystem of news and information, the role of professional journalists is smaller" (p. xxviii). In the current digital context, however, the roles of journalist and reader have become increasingly blurred, and the production and dissemination of news is no longer the exclusive domain of professionals—a development that does not necessarily enhance the quality of journalism. As Kovach and Rosenstiel emphasize, "It is an oversimplification to imagine that more sources of information mean more truth" (p. xxix). Social media platforms have become primary sources of information, and news is increasingly disseminated by public figures and ordinary citizens, often without the mediation of professional journalists. Individuals frequently act as news producers by sharing information through their personal social media accounts. Kovach and Rosenstiel (2021) refer to this emerging space, where citizens function as both producers and witnesses, as "the fifth estate." This estate includes individuals and institutions, "as well as state-run ministries of misinformation, all of whom want to influence the public for commercial and political purposes" (p. xxix).

Avoidance of news

These merged roles of producer and consumer of the news do not benefit either news production or consumption, as studies on news consumption consistently indicate a decline in public interest. As Banks et al. (2020) point out, "news consumption becomes more closely associated with network behavior." Moreover, research on media consumption indicates that the digital environment—particularly social media—encourages a tendency toward passive news engagement, described as the "news finds me" perception (de Zúñiga & Cheng, 2021).

The latest report issued by the Reuters Institute for the Study of Journalism, Reuters Digital News Report 2025, indicates that 40% of respondents across 48 markets say they sometimes or often avoid the news—an increase of 11 percentage points since 2017. The findings of the report show that "low trust and low engagement in the news are closely connected with 'avoidance', an increasing challenge in a high-choice news environment, where news is often upsetting in different ways" (Reuters Digital News Report 2025, 2025, p. 27). Among the listed reasons for news avoidance, the top three are: the news has a negative effect on mood, feeling worn out by the amount of news, and too much coverage of conflict and war (Reuters Digital News Report 2025, 2025, p. 27). However, negative framing remains the predominant approach in news reporting.

News Framing: Theories and Typology

Following the approach initiated by Pan and Kosicki (1993), we view framing analysis as a means of connecting news with both its production and consumption—"to view news texts as a system of organized signifying elements that both indicate the advocacy of certain ideas and provide devices to encourage certain kinds of audience processing of the text" (p. 56). The literature on news framing is extensive and multidisciplinary, attracting interest from various branches of the social sciences. However, this abundance of research has resulted in a lack of methodological and conceptual homogeneity across different approaches.

In an effort to consolidate and define the theory and typology of news framing, Claes H. de Vreese (2005) describes framing as "a tool to study media content" (p. 51). He mentions three stages of the framing process: "frame-building, frame-setting, and individual and societal level consequences of framing" (p. 52). Frame-building indicates „structural qualities of news frames" (de Vreese, 2005, p. 52), including framing in the newsroom as an interaction between the newsrooms/ news producers as internal factors (news values, editorial policies, and norms) and external factors (political factors, social movements, policy advocates). Frame-setting consists of the "interaction between media frames and individuals' prior knowledge and predispositions" (de Vreese, 2005, p. 52). In terms of its effects, de Vreese identifies both individual-level and societal-level impacts: at the individual level, exposure to certain frames may generate new attitudes and behaviors; at the societal level, frames can influence policy decisions and collective action. The scholar (2005) identifies two types of frames in news texts: issue-specific frames and generic frames. "Certain frames are pertinent only to specific topics or events. Such frames may be labelled issue-specific frames" (p.

54). In contrast, generic frames have broader applicability, producing effects that extend beyond a particular topic or moment in time.

Although both types of frames encompass a wide range of subcategories, generic frames can be broadly divided into positive frames and negative frames. As previously noted, a brief review of contemporary news content reveals that negative frames tend to predominate. Most of the research we have on negative framing is related to political news, as exposure to certain "frame types (e.g. conflict, valenced, episodic) in particular is seen as highly effective in sparking emotions" (Corbu et al. 2021), which influence political attitudes and options.

Another framing categorization comes from Pan and Kosicki, who classify framing devices in news discourse into four groups that represent "four structural dimensions of news discourse: syntactical structure, script structure, thematic structure, and rhetorical structure" (Pan & Kosicki, 1993, p. 59). The syntactical structure, commonly associated with the inverted pyramid model in journalism, "refers to a sequential organization of structural elements (i.e., headline, lead, episodes, background, and closure)" (Pan & Kosicki, 1993, p. 59).

Human tendency toward negativity bias

"If it bleeds, it leads," a phrase commonly attributed to 19th-century media magnate William Randolph Hearst Jr., originated as a guiding principle of tabloid journalism but has increasingly permeated mainstream news coverage over the past century. This media principle is closely aligned with audience preferences, driven by the human tendency toward negativity bias. The public preference for negative news has received extensive scholarly attention, not only within media and communication studies but also across a wide range of social science approaches. A study conducted by Soroka et al. (2019), based on cross-national evidence from 17 countries, showed that "there is, on average, a negativity bias in psychological reactions to video news content." These findings align with earlier work by Trussler and Soroka (2013), which demonstrated that participants were more likely to select negative news content even when they expressed a preference for more positive coverage. Such ambiguous attitudes toward negativity in the news complicate efforts to identify its primary source: do readers consume negative news because journalists present it that way, or do journalists frame events negatively in order to remain competitive in an increasingly saturated media market?

We consider this ambiguity to have been further accentuated by the platform fragmentation brought about by the digital revolution. This observation is consistent with the work on news framing in U.S. media developed by David L. Altheide (1997), who argued that "the majority of topics, problems, and issues presented as 'news' involve those framed as 'problems.'" He describes the "problem frame" as a characteristic of the new media news format, functioning as part of the production processes that shifted news from an informative to an entertainment-oriented format. In his view, news is organized "around a narrative that begins with a general conclusion that 'something is wrong' and we know what it is." Similar observations have been made in analyses of European media. James Curran and Jean Seaton (2010) note in the seventh edition of Power Without Responsibility: Press, Broadcasting and the Internet in Britain that "the technical transformation of the press never produced a corresponding editorial revolution" (p. 95). They observe that a tabloid approach has continued to prevail in British journalism, which has "led to ever more inventive ways for arousing indignation" (Curran & Seaton, 2010, p. 96). Keeping readers angry or frightened has become a strategic method for maintaining audience engagement in the UK media landscape. Available research in the field of media studies shows that the tendency toward tabloidization is present across much of the European media landscape.

Romanian Media and Its Historical Legacy

While the digital revolution significantly impacted traditional media markets in Western Europe and the United States—where media outlets already had a consolidated editorial style—the transformations brought about by digital migration have been no less pronounced in Eastern European media markets. The Romanian news market reflects this trend as well.

Following the sociocognitive approach, we assert that the analysis of news framing must take into account the sociocultural context in which news is produced. In the case of Romania, a former communist country, the history of democratic media begins in 1990, following the revolution. From its inception, Romanian democratic media adopted a polemical approach, marked by tendencies toward tabloidization and partisan discourse. In the early 1990s, Romanian media remained "highly political and partisan" (Gross, 1999, p. 173). Scholars observing Romanian media over the years (Gross, 1996; Coman, 2003; Petre, 2012) have pointed out that Romanian news has rarely been strictly factual, with polemical framing consistently present throughout its evolution. As Petre (2012) observes, "a diachronic look into the praxis of Romanian journalism shows that objectivity has never been a main value in the Romanian understanding of doing journalism" (p. 169). Research on news framing in Romanian media is still limited.

Hanna Orsolya Vincze, in a study published in 2014, examines crisis as a frame in Romanian news. Drawing on a sample corpus from 2008 and 2009 that includes two Romanian quality newspapers and two online news portals, she observes that "in 2008–2009, 'crisis' became a major theme of Romanian news media, becoming a journalistic frame employed both in a generic and issue-specific manner" (Vincze, 2014). She concludes that a content analysis of the selected corpus reveals that the crisis frame encompassed a range of approaches—from highlighting the negative effects of the crisis and proposing solutions, to examining its impact on the media and employing polemical narratives about governmental efficiency. Focusing on Romanian online media, Simona Bader and Corina Sîrb (2021) described the Romanian online narrative style as post-sensationalist, characterized by dominant frames such as catastrophes and conflict. Their observations are based on an analysis of Romanian online news content from 2018 and 2019. As they note, "our data show that Romanian online media appeal more to a rhetoric of fear, conflict, and panic" (Bader & Sîrb, 2021, p. 72, author's translation). As previously noted about British media, fear remains a commonly used frame to maintain audience engagement in Romanian media as well.

Bader and Sîrb noted that fear, as a frame in the Romanian online news analysed, operates in two ways to persuade the public: either as a promise of safety through avoiding conflict, or as a warning of potential harm when facing it (Bader & Sîrb, 2021, p. 81). The two Romanian scholars emphasized that catastrophic framing often follows a clickbait logic, with many articles failing to deliver on the negative tone set by their headlines or leads. "Most of it represents a catastrophic manner of presenting trivial facts from the social, political, or lifestyle fields regarding sensitive topics for the public, such as health, standard of living, or education" (Bader & Sîrb, 2021, p. 80, authors' translation).

The News Framing in the Digital Era: Examples from Romanian News

The hypothesis we advance within the present article is that the transition to the digital environment has enhanced the tabloidization and polemical tendencies of Romanian media, with negative news framing becoming more salient than in print. To test this hypothesis, we conducted a qualitative comparative analysis of a sample of news articles published in Adevărul (The Truth), one of the oldest Romanian newspapers and among the few consistently classified as a quality outlet over the years. These articles are drawn from the corpus compiled for our doctoral research, consisting of pieces published in the print editions of Adevărul during the month of January over a 20-year period. For this comparative approach, we analyzed the print and digital versions of the same articles, published in both formats over a ten-year period between 2000 and 2010. We compiled a selection of 34 texts—print and digital—covering 17 different topics. Of the 17 topics analyzed, only three had identical titles across both digital and print formats. For the remaining topics, we observed a strengthened negative framing in the digital versions, with greater emphasis on institutional dysfunctions, conflicts, or potential dangers. The selected articles adhere to the conventions of hard news reporting, covering events related to politics, economics, and other current affairs, and are concise in length in accordance with standard journalistic practices.

Following Pan and Kosicki's (1993) classification of framing analysis devices, this analysis involves a comparison of the headlines of the selected articles, considering them "the most salient cue to activate certain semantically related concepts in readers' minds; it is thus the most powerful framing device of the syntactical structure" (p. 59).

Negative Framing: Emphasis on Systemic Failures

The selected articles indicate that the online headlines shift the emphasis from the reported event to the actors involved, thereby amplifying the negative framing. For example, on January 30, 2020, the print version of Adevărul included an article titled Lipsa parteneriatului civil în România, în discuția CEDO [The lack of civil partnership in Romania, in the ECHR discussion]. The same article was published online on January 29, 2020, under the title România, audiată de CEDO din cauză că nu are legislaţie privind parteneriatul civil [Romania, heard by ECHR, because it does not have legislation on civil partnership]. It can be observed that in the online headline, the focus shifts to "Romania" in contrast to the print version, which centers on "civil partnership," and the description of the action is intensified from "discussion" to "heard by ECHR".

Following the same pattern, an article published in the print version on January 21, 2015, under the title BCR: Unele impozite ar putea crește în 2015 [BCR: Some taxes could increase in 2015], appeared in the online version on January 20, 2015, with the title A promis Guvernul că nu va creşte nicio taxă în 2015? Experţii şi analiştii BCR cred altceva [Did the Government promise not to increase any taxes in 2015? Experts and analysts from BCR believe otherwise]. A comparison of the two headlines reveals that the digital version explicitly mentions the government, establishing a link between public authorities and the analysis of a private institution, a connection that is absent in the print version. Structured as a rhetorical question followed by an implicit answer, the online headline suggests that the government is likely to fail in keeping its promise regarding the tax increase.

An article titled Anchetă: analize HIV falsificate la Spitalul din Târgu Jiu [Investigation: falsified HIV tests at the Târgu Jiu Hospital], printed on January 16, 2014, was published online on January 15, 2014, under the headline Neregulile din Sănătate se ţin lanţ. Ministerul ia la puricat Spitalul din Gorj, unde au fost eliberate analize HIV false [Ongoing Public Health Irregularities: The Ministry has taken action against the Gorj Hospital, where fake HIV tests were issued]. The digital version of the article includes an explicit reference to the government, whereas in the print version, this involvement is only implied through the noun investigation. Additionally, the first sentence of the online headline alludes to broader systemic issues in the Romanian health system—an element that is absent from the print version.

Another example illustrating the online headlines' emphasis on a negative aspect is the article published on January 9, 2017, under the title Turcii cu bani încep să cumpere locuințe în România [Turks with money start buying houses in Romania], which appears online with the headline Tot mai mulţi turci cumpără locuinţe în România, speriaţi de atacurile din ţara lor [More and more Turks are buying houses in Romania, scared by the attacks in their country]. The online title links the action described in the article—namely, the purchase of homes in Romania by Turkish citizens—to a threatening situation in their home country, whereas the print version connects the same action to their financial means, in a more neutral tone.

News Framing – To Elicit Indignation

While comparing print and digital headlines, another notable difference is the tendency of digital titles to include additional information that aligns more closely with commentary than with factual reporting—a stylistic feature more characteristic of tabloid and soft news than of traditional hard news. An example illustrating this observation is the article published on January 8, 2019, with the title Poliția, amendată pentru lipsa rovinietei [Police fined for lack of Romanian vignette] in the print version, which bears the following headline online: Poliţia, amendată pentru lipsa rovinietei la o maşină scutită de la plata taxei. Cum s-a ajuns în această situaţie absurdă [Police fined for missing Romanian vignette on tax-exempt car. How this absurd situation came about]. The second sentence of the online headline, which is missing in the print version, does not provide any additional information but emphasizes the negative aspect. By labeling the situation as "absurd" and posing a rhetorical question, the title reinforces a negative and interpretive framing.

A similar approach can be observed on January 9, 2019, in the print headline Și-a angajat fiica în baza unei diplome false [He hired his daughter based on a fake diploma], which in the digital version—published one day earlier, on January 8, 2019—appears as Primar acuzat că şi-a angajat fiica în baza unei diplome false, achitat de instanţă. Fata nu absolvise nici liceul, fiind exmatriculată de la o şcoală de meserii [Mayor accused of hiring his daughter with a fake diploma, acquitted by court. The girl had not even graduated from high school, having been expelled from a vocational school]. Although the first sentence of the online headline includes information that attenuates the accusation—namely, that the mayor was acquitted by the court—the second sentence introduces information that is not directly related to the central subject of the article. The focus of the article should be the actions of the father, not the educational background of the daughter. However, this additional detail contributes to framing the story in a way that elicits public indignation.

The examples presented illustrate significant differences in the way news headlines frame information, supporting our initial hypothesis that the digital environment contributes to the amplification of negative framing. The remaining texts in the corpus follow similar patterns in constructing negative framing, further reinforcing this observation.

Conclusions

Due to the limited corpus available, the present article offers only preliminary observations that may contribute to a broader analysis of news framing in Romanian media discourse following the critique approach of discourse analysis. The value of this inquiry lies in the comparative analysis of the print and digital versions of the same articles, viewed from a diachronic perspective and based on examples published over a decade, which demonstrate consistency in this framing practice. As most Romanian collections of print newspapers are not available in digital format, compiling a corpus requires direct access to print archives, the selection of relevant articles, and their subsequent comparison with the corresponding versions available in the publication's online archive. This process makes it difficult to compile a large and fully representative corpus. However, considering several characteristics of the Romanian media market—as a former communist country with a limited history of democratic press and relatively scarce research on news discourse—we argue that, in a context where journalistic roles and audience profiles are increasingly heterogeneous, even a small-scale diachronic analysis can help establish a baseline for future research.

JOURNALISM IN ROMANAȚI / OLT DURING THE COMMUNIST PERIOD. TEXT AND SUBTEXT IN THE PAGES OF THE OLTUL NEWSPAPER (1968)

Maria-Magdalena Bratu
PhD Student, University of Craiova

Abstract: The administrative-territorial reorganization of 1968 created the conditions for the emergence of new local institutions, intended to consolidate the identity and cohesion of the newly formed communities. In this context, the Oltul newspaper was established in Olt County as the main instrument of propaganda and reflection of economic, social, and cultural transformations. Claiming the role of informing and affirming regional values, the publication quickly became a platform for promoting party policies and influencing the thinking and opinions of the population during a period of rapid transformation in the structure of society. This article aims to analyse the conditions surrounding the newspaper's emergence and the recurring themes in its pages during its first year of publication.

Keywords: Oltul newspaper; Olt County; county party newspapers; communism; Oltenia

Introducere

Analiza presei postbelice în județul Romanați, respectiv Olt, arată că prima parte a acestei perioade este marcată de o diminuare drastică a publicațiilor, ca efect al instaurării treptate a controlului comunist asupra mijloacelor de comunicare. Numeroase ziare locale și regionale au fost suprimate sub pretextul „defascizării", proces ce maschează de fapt eliminarea celor nealiniate noii orientări ideologice. În acest context, presa își pierde treptat rolul de mijloc de informare și devine instrument de transmitere sistematică a doctrinei comuniste, integrându-se aparatului politico-propagandistic al statului.

În urma reformei administrativ-teritoriale s-a produs și reorganizarea presei locale, prin înființarea cotidienelor județene de partid, Oltul fiind unul dintre acestea. Ziarele și revistele de partid erau considerate cele mai importante mijloace de comunicare cu masele, având în vedere răspândirea la nivelul întregii țări și costul lor redus. Prin urmare, Oltul va fi folosit și el ca un puternic instrument de propagare a ideilor și doctrinelor comuniste în nou înființatul județ Olt, dar și de influențare a gândirii și opiniilor populației, alături de alte suporturi și căi prin care se puteau transmite mesaje, precum sistemul educațional, cultura și arta.

Cercetători precum Peter Gross caracterizează etapa în care este plasată apariția ziarului Oltul ca fiind una de „încercări de îmblânzire a feței comunismului, o oarecare deschidere față de cărți și alte forme de comunicare de masă din Occident"[1]. Însă, așa cum semnalează Emilia Șercan, controlul exercitat asupra presei rămâne strict. Libertatea cuvântului nu mai poate fi folosită „în scopuri potrivnice orânduirii socialiste și intereselor celor ce muncesc", potrivit art. 29 din Constituția R.S.R. adoptată în 1965, iar reorganizarea presei locale este dublată de extinderea instituțională a cenzurii la nivel local[2].

Contextul socio-politic în care apare Oltul este, așadar, cel în care se renunță la organizarea administrativă tipic sovietică în regiuni și raioane și se reînființează județul. Între 14-18 mai are loc vizita oficială a președintelui francez Charles de Gaulle – inclusiv la Craiova și Slatina – și se inaugurează prima uzină de autoturisme din țară, la Pitești (20 august), și primul autoturism românesc, Dacia 1100. Pe plan internațional, invadarea Cehoslovaciei de trupele Pactului de la Varșovia determină România să adopte o poziție de distanțare față de U.R.S.S., fapt exploatat propagandistic de întreaga presă comunistă, inclusiv de ziarul Oltul.

Cadrul politic, social și economic în noul județ Olt

Apariția ziarului Oltul urmează măsurilor adoptate în sesiunea extraordinară a Marii Adunări Naționale din 15-17 februarie 1968, elaborate pe baza hotărârilor luate la Conferința Națională a Partidului Comunist Român (6-8 decembrie 1967). Măsuri care – afirmă politicienii comuniști – reieșeau din necesitatea punerii de acord a organizării administrative a țării cu sarcinile pe care și le propuseseră în vederea îmbunătățirii planificării economice. Iar acestea vizaseră, între altele, prin Legea nr. 2 privind organizarea administrativă a teritoriului Republicii Socialiste România, și desființarea județului Romanați. Cea mai mare parte din teritoriul său a fost trecută la Olt, peste partea de sud-vest s-a întins Doljul, iar o mică porțiune din sud-est (comuna Islaz) a revenit județului Teleorman.

Cu justificări și explicații ample îndeosebi în ceea ce privește recent înființatul județ Olt venea Virgil Trofin – membru supleant al Comitetului Executiv al C.C. al P.C.R., secretar al C.C. al P.C.R. Acesta argumenta impunerea noii organizări administrativ-teritoriale prin faptul că județele și municipiile vor dispune astfel „de răspunderi sporite, de atribuții și posibilități mult mai largi, vor putea să asigure o mai bună dezvoltare a economiei locale și vieții social-culturale, a gospodăririi raționale a orașelor și comunelor și soluționarea în condiții tot mai bune a cerințelor populației”[3]. Cuvântarea sa avea loc în contextul în care la Slatina s-au desfășurat „lucrările adunării activului de partid al organizației județene de partid Olt, convocată de Comitetul Central al P.C.R. în vederea constituirii organizației județene de partid, alegerii organelor provizorii de conducere pe linie de partid și de stat și stabilirii măsurilor necesare pentru înfăptuirea obiectivelor ce stau în fața locuitorilor județului Olt, pentru sporirea contribuției lor la opera de dezvoltare și înflorire continuă a patriei socialiste”.

Ziarul Oltul apărea la o zi după ce la Slatina avea loc această adunare a activului de partid din județul Olt, iar „Cuvîntarea tovarășului Virgil Trofin”, inserată pe prima pagină a nr. 1 al publicației, face referire la noua structură administrativ-teritorială – strâns legată de planificări în principal de ordin economic și, desigur, de viața de partid. Secretarul C.C. al P.C.R. menționează că „în organizarea județului Olt s-a avut în vedere faptul că el trebuie să fie o unitate teritorială complexă din punct de vedere economic și social-cultural, bine echilibrat ca suprafață, număr de locuitori și potențial economic, s-a ținut seama de tradițiile istorice locale, de relațiile dintre localități, statornicite în anii construcției socialiste”.

În discursul său, Virgil Trofin a prezentat un „tablou edificator al puterii industriale a județului Olt, al bazei economice care va sta la temelia înfăptuirilor viitoare”. Astfel, aflăm că la data respectivă județul Olt avea: o suprafață de peste 5500 kmp, cu 4 orașe, 136 comune și 475 sate; aproape o jumătate de milion de locuitori, din care peste 14% în mediul urban; peste 57.000 de salariați, din care 9.000 în industrie; 85.000 de elevi, 383 școli de cultură generală, 12 licee teoretice, 4 licee de specialitate, 9 școli profesionale; 10 spitale și 106 dispensare; 13 întreprinderi industriale, din care 4 republicane, care realizau o producție globală de aproape 1300 milioane lei; peste 440.000 ha suprafață agricolă; 158 cooperative agricole de producție, 12 stațiuni de mașini și tractoare și 9 întreprinderi agricole de stat.

Contextul presei naționale și locale

În 1965, anul în care Nicolae Ceaușescu a preluat funcția de secretar general al PCR, în România existau 25 de ziare regionale, cu un tiraj zilnic total de 912.000 de exemplare, și 8 ziare raionale, cu un tiraj zilnic total de 65.000 de exemplare. Presa locală de partid era formată din 20 de cotidiene locale, 4 cotidiene regionale, 2 ziare cu apariție săptămânală, 1 bisăptămânal regional, 1 săptămânal regional și 4 bisăptămânale raionale. Cele 20 de cotidiene locale erau: Secera și Ciocanul (Pitești), Steagul roșu (Bacău), Drapelul roșu și Szabad Szó (Timișoara), Drum nou (Brașov), Făclia și Igazság (Cluj), Crișana și Fáklya (Oradea), Dobogea nouă (Constanța), Viață nouă (Galați), Drumul socialismului (Deva), Flacăra Iașului, Pentru socialism și Bányavidéki Fáklya (Baia Mare), Steaua roșie și Vörös Zaszló (Târgu Mureș), Înainte (Craiova), Flamura Prahovei (Ploiești) și Zori noi (Suceava).

În 1967, cu un an înainte de reforma teritorial-administrativă, principalele 18 ziare centrale aveau un tiraj zilnic cumulat de 3.969.000 de exemplare[4]. Temele articolelor erau, în principal, legate de activitățile muncitorești din fabrici și uzine, de munca țăranilor în cooperativele agricole de producție, și aveau limbajul unor ședințe de partid. În 1968, numărul publicațiilor autorizate să apară era de 593[5], însă au fost tipărite efectiv doar 576 de publicații, într-un tiraj general de 915 milioane de exemplare. Veniturile totale înregistrate în primele luni ale anului au fost de 356 milioane lei – din vânzarea publicațiilor fiind realizate 308 milioane lei, iar din publicitate, restul de 48 milioane lei, adică 13,4%. În 1969, numărul publicațiilor ajunsese la 609 titluri, tipărite într-un tiraj de 1.311.400.000 de exemplare, profitul obținut fiind de 65.800.000 de lei, cu peste 15 milioane de lei mai mult decât în 1968[6].

În urma reformei administrativ-teritoriale s-a produs și reorganizarea presei locale, prin înființarea cotidienelor județene de partid, între anii 1968-1970. Oltul este unul dintre acestea, așa cum în Gorj va apărea, tot în 1968, Gazeta Gorjului, care va ființa până în 1989. Rolul lor era, desigur, popularizarea platformei politice comuniste și difuzarea de mesaje propagandistice, menite să servească sistemul politico-ideologic. Jurnalista Emilia Șercan mai notează că, în urma reformei teritorial-administrative, „presa județeană de partid a avut o creștere a numărului de titluri de la 33 la 54 de unități, tirajul general rămânând la același nivel". Între cele mai însemnate titluri din județul Romanați, respectiv Olt, care își încetează apariția după instaurarea regimului comunist, se regăsesc Romanațul, „ziar de cultură și informațiuni pentru județele Romanați și Olt", care a apărut la Caracal (pare-se săptămânal), în 1936, existența sa prelungindu-se până cel puțin în anul 1945. De asemenea, Zorile Romanaților – „revistă de cultură generală", cu primul număr în anul 1927, publicația continuându-și neîntrerupt apariția timp de 19 ani, până în 1945, cu o frecvență de obicei lunară. Mai sunt semnalate apariția ziarului Oltul, la 17 ianuarie 1928, la Slatina[7], și a Gazetei Oltului, cu unele întreruperi, până în anii 1947-1948.

Datorită descentralizării presei, s-a impus imediat sporirea vigilenței, în consecință și a cenzurii. În toate orașele reședință de județ, în care se aflau noile redacții, conținutul publicațiilor era supravegheat de cenzori, subordonați Direcției Generale a Presei și Tipăriturilor, înființată încă din 1949, când a avut loc instituționalizarea controlului informațional din România[8]. DGPT era un organism cu multiple funcții de cenzură și control, care autoriza apariția tipăriturilor, difuzarea, importul și exportul de ziare, cărți, obiecte de artă, reglementa regulile de funcționare a librăriilor, anticariatelor, bibliotecilor, depozitelor, dădea instrucțiuni cu privire la organizarea birourilor de cenzură din capitală și din provincie, stabilea condițiile în care se ștampilau șpalturile sau manuscrisele cu mențiunea „Bun de tipar" sau „Cenzurat".

Primul număr al ziarului Oltul și structura conținutului publicației

Primul număr al ziarului Oltul apare duminică, 18 februarie 1968, în patru pagini, ca organ al Comitetului județean Olt al P.C.R. și al Consiliului popular județean provizoriu. Tiparul este executat la Întreprinderea Poligrafică „Argeș" – Pitești, mențiune care se regăsește în josul ultimei pagini și care este singura făcută, neexistând casetă redacțională cu alte informații. Începând cu numărul 16, din data de 7 martie 1968, în același loc va apărea precizarea că redacția și administrația se află la Slatina, strada Filimon Sîrbu nr. 2.

De la început are pe frontispiciu faimosul slogan „Proletari din toate țările, uniți-vă!". Literei O din sigla Oltul îi sunt suprapuse grafic conturul din spice al stemei R.S.R. și însemnele secera și ciocanul – folosite pentru reprezentarea comunismului, cele două unelte simbolizând alianța politică dintre țărănime și proletariatul industrial.

Pe prima pagină a primului număr este enunțat scopul publicației în comunitate – în principal acela de informare –, într-un text scurt, de numai trei paragrafe, adresat Colectivului redacțional și semnat de Comitetul Județean Olt al P.C.R.:

Militînd cu fermitate și cu înaltă conștiință patriotică pentru traducerea în viață, pe plan local, a măsurilor de partid și de stat, ziarul Oltul trebuie să devină o tribună a tuturor oamenilor muncii de pe aceste locuri, supunînd dezbaterii largi toate problemele legate de propășirea economică, socială și culturală a județului nostru. El va trebui să aducă o contribuție de seamă la sporirea activității politico-educative în rîndul maselor, cultivînd dragostea fierbinte față de patrie și oglindind profundul atașament al locuitorilor orașelor și satelor oltene față de politica Partidului Comunist Român.

Urăm succes deplin colectivului redacțional, în îndeplinirea acestei misiuni de cinste și de răspundere".[9] Textul de fond al primei pagini se referă la Constituirea Comitetului județean Olt al P.C.R. și a Consiliului popular județean provizoriu, care avusese loc în ziua precedentă, succedat de „Cuvîntarea tovarășului Virgil Trofin" – om politic apropiat al lui Nicolae Ceaușescu, în perioada 1968-1969 fiind a doua personalitate a P.C.R. Ambele texte au dimensiuni însemnate și continuă în pagina a treia.

Faptul că la 16 februarie Marea Adunare Națională adoptă Legea nr. 2 privind organizarea administrativă a teritoriului Republicii Socialiste România, iar la 17 februarie aveau loc lucrările adunării activului de partid al organizației județene Olt explică de ce tipărirea acestui prim număr la data de 18 februarie 1968, într-o zi de duminică, nu este întâmplătoare. Numărul 2 al ziarului va apărea marți, 20 februarie 1968, iar distribuirea publicației șase zile pe săptămână, cu excepția celei de luni, devine regulă.

Apariția cotidianului, ca și regionalizarea și descentralizarea sunt salutate într-un text elogios publicat în pagina a treia din numărul 4 / 22 februarie 1968, cu titlul „Orație pentru Oltul", de scriitorul Petre Pandrea[10], simpatizant comunist, iar mai apoi acuzat de denigrare a regimului și de colaborare împotriva lui, și care se va și stinge din viață în același an 1968. „În coloanele cu principii comuniste ale Oltului nostru se va reflecta, zi de zi, în efemeride, zidirea socialismului din Republica Socialistă România, cu țelul viitor al comunismului pretutindenesc"[11], scrie acesta.

Numărul de patru pagini și prețul de 30 de bani ale ziarului vor fi păstrate și ele în următorii ani. În mare măsură și structura conținutului se va menține, singurele care perturbă aritmia spațiului fiind, de obicei, textele cuvântărilor – cele ale lui Nicolae Ceaușescu fiind integral preluate, uneori acoperind mai mult de jumătate din suprafața tipărită.

Din pagina întâi nu vor lipsi cuvântări și informații despre deplasări ale liderului comunist al țării, nici despre obiective industriale ale Oltului ori ale sectorului agricol. Pagina a doua este rezervată informațiilor privind educația, istoria, tradițiile, cultura. Din martie, ediția de duminică va edita pagina a doua, alternativ, sub titlurile generice „Literatură și artă" (include poeme, proză, articole de Petre Pandrea – care devine colaborator al ziarului) și „Magazin" (cu epigrame, umor, rebus, informații de cultură generală ori despre personalități și obiective din Olt). Pagina a treia vizează în general actualitatea internă a județului, cu accent pe domeniile agriculturii și meșteșugurilor, și conține de cele mai multe ori continuări ale articolelor din prima pagină. Treptat, începe să includă mai multe subiecte din sport și anunțuri de mică publicitate. Pagina a patra, încă de la primul număr tipărit al ziarului sub genericul „Lumea în 24 de ore", reflectă – în note informative scurte – actualitatea politică și socială internațională.

Teme recurente în paginile cotidianului

Numerele de început ale ziarului popularizează noile schimbări administrativ-teritoriale, în primul rând, și caută să facă cunoscut cât mai bine orașul Slatina și mai ales recent înființatul județ Olt. O fac prin reportaje, inițierea unor rubrici tematice ori articole pe teme de istorie-arheologie, care prezintă descoperiri ce atestă vechimea așezării. Împlinirea a 600 de ani existență documentară a orașului Slatina, în ianuarie 1968, va fi prilej de publicare a numeroase articole în acest scop, pe tot parcursul anului.

Tema privind noua organizare este, desigur, strâns legată de viața de partid și de planificările în principal de ordin economic, industrializarea fiind printre cele mai importante obiective. Fiecare număr al ziarului va prezenta chiar pe prima pagină unul dintre obiectivele industriale ale Oltului. De asemenea, activitatea cooperativelor agricole (C.A.P.-urilor) și a cooperativelor de consum, campaniile agricole și recoltele, realizarea producției, activitatea unităților comerciale din județ (texte inclusiv despre parametrii cerințelor și ritmul aprovizionării) etc.

Educația, în general, dar îndeosebi învățământul începând cu grădinița până la școala profesională (în perspectiva adoptării Legii nr. 11/ 13 mai 1968 privind învățământul în R.S.R.), ca și tineretul și preocupările lui reprezintă teme predilecte, abordate în texte ample ca întindere. În fine, activitatea bibliotecilor și căminelor culturale, a brigăzilor artistice, artiștilor amatori și formațiilor de teatru popular, de dansuri și cântece folclorice, cu contextele de performare este vizată aproape în fiecare număr al ziarului, pentru popularizare și încurajare, sub pretextul ridicării la un nivel superior a activității cultural-științifice.

Prin mesajul pe care transmit, articolele din cuprinsul publicației nu pot fi neglijabile din punct de vedere ideologic, fiind eficiente în atingerea unor obiective de propagandă. Așadar, este necesar ca ele să fie lecturate în subtext. Se constată înlocuirea rolului informativ cu cel educativ, cu scopul vădit al propagării mesajelor ideologice și politice. Textele privind mișcarea artistică de amatori și, în general, manifestările din sfera cultural-artistică, inclusiv cea a culturii tradiționale, iau forma unui îndrumar, cu norme și reguli de respectat. De multe ori, reliefarea aspectelor/consecințelor pozitive se face prin comparație cu exemple negative, pentru un impact sporit asupra cititorului. Articolele comunică multe idei și mai puține informații, într-un limbaj accesibil – pe alocuri intenționat adaptat și devenit chiar colocvial, încărcat de sintagme și clișee, ca în toată presa comunistă.

- Industrializarea și agricultura, cuvântările și viața de partid – subiecte care înlocuiesc articolul de fond

În cuprinsul niciunuia din cele 271 de numere ale ziarului Oltul tipărite în decursul anului 1968 nu se regăsește un editorial în adevăratul sens al cuvântului. Respectiv un articol care să prezinte poziția oficială a publicației față de un subiect de actualitate și important pentru public, care să dezbată probleme de interes general, să exprime atitudini personale ale autorului, să îi îndemne pe cititori la reflecție.

Dacă în presa liberă acesta indică „direcția" publicației, în Oltul deocamdată lipsește sub această formă, însă sub o alta el glorifică „faptele mărețe" ale partidului și pe „conducătorul iubit". O face într-un limbaj de lemn, plin de clișee. Editorialul este suplinit în Oltul anului 1968 de texte despre obiectivele industriale și agricole din județ, cuvântări și activitatea lui Nicolae Ceaușescu (deplasări, primiri de delegații), viața de partid (întruniri, decizii).

- Promovarea județului Olt după noua organizare administrativ-teritorială: istorie, obiective cultural-istorice și turistice

Prezentarea orașului Slatina, ca și a județului Olt cu obiectivele lui cultural-istorice și turistice, descoperirile de vestigii arheologice ce atestă vechimea așezării, este constantă – de la primele numere, pe întreg parcursul anului 1968.

Justificarea o dau noua organizare administrativ-teritorială și aniversarea împlinirii a 600 de ani de existență documentară a orașului.

„Slatina este unul din cele mai vechi centre economice de la sud de Carpați, menționat încă din secolul al XIV-lea (1368), odată cu primele capitale ale Țării Românești: Cîmpulung (1300) și Curtea de Argeș (1330). (...) Rămas în general slab dezvoltat economic în întreaga orînduire capitalistă, orașul Slatina se va trezi din lunga amorțire abia în anii construcției socialiste, ca urmare a înțeleptei politici a partidului nostru de industrializare socialistă și de dezvoltare armonioasă a întregii țării"

– scrie Mihai Butoi[12], directorul Muzeului Județean Olt. Pe de altă parte însă, educarea tinerei generații „în spiritul patriotismului revoluționar socialist" se face și prin această formă de „cultivare a respectului față de tot ce însemna trecut, istorie, moștenire culturală ca o formă de consolidare a apartenenței la o comunitate politică, culturală"[13].

- Învățământul și educația: textele-preambul la adoptarea Legii nr. 11/ 13 mai 1968 privind învățământul în R.S.R.

Preocuparea pentru educația la toate nivelurile, reflectată constant în paginile ziarului din primul trimestru al anului 1968, este explicabilă mai întâi în perspectiva adoptării, la data de 13 mai, a Legii nr. 11 privind învățământul în Republica Socialistă România. Apariția legii este pregătită temeinic prin publicarea de articole favorabile care vizează punctual noile ei norme, lăsându-se însă impresia că acestea sunt puse în dezbatere publică. Chiar sub acest generic sunt publicate numeroase articole care aduc în atenție aspecte privind necesitatea pregătirii corespunzătoare atât a elevilor, cât și a cadrelor didactice, baza materială, vârsta potrivită pentru începerea școlii etc. Se acordă atenție sporită educației tehnice și profesionale, elevii fiind îndrumați să își aleagă cariere care să contribuie la dezvoltarea economică a țării. Pentru Olt, se face corelație între rețeaua de școli profesionale și dezvoltarea economiei județului

Elevul nu este, așadar, doar un simplu participant la procesul de învățare, ci și un potențial agent al schimbării sociale. În procesul de învățământ, „elevii își însușesc un bagaj bogat de cunoștințe din cele mai diferite domenii și în același timp își dezvoltă capacitățile intelectuale, trăsăturile cele mai bune ale personalității lor în formare, capătă deprinderi și convingeri trainice, formîndu-se ca cetățeni demni ai patriei", se subliniază în articolul intitulat „Corelația instruire – educație"[14].

Textul cu titlul „Criterii științifice în orientarea profesională a elevilor” reiterează ideea:

„Învățământul de cultură generală, în anii puterii populare, s-a dezvoltat și perfecționat necontenit, mergînd în pas cu adîncite prefaceri ce au avut loc în toate domeniile de activitate din țara noastră. Partidul și statul au depus susținute eforturi pentru dezvoltarea învățămîntului, întrucît el constituie mijlocul principal de pregătire pentru viață, pentru societate a tineretului patriei”.[15]

Cu câteva zile înainte de aprobarea de către Plenara Comitetului Central al PCR a studiilor elaborate de Ministerul Învățământului cu privire la dezvoltarea învățământului de cultură generală, superior, profesional și tehnic, care urma să fie legiferate de Marea Adunare Națională, Oltul publică articolul cu titlul „Crește rolul social al școlii”, cu scopul de a oferi cititorilor posibilitatea să își formeze o idee completă asupra ansamblului de măsuri propuse pentru dezvoltarea învățământului de toate gradele:

„Coborîrea limitei de școlarizare de la 7 la 6 ani asigură încheierea ciclului obligatoriu de 10 clase la vîrsta de 16 ani, vîrstă la care tinerii sînt suficient de dezvoltați și pregătiți pentru a fi angajați în producție. Absolvenții școlii generale de 10 ani vor putea să-și însușească mai ușor o meserie, fie urmînd o școală profesională, fie încadrîndu-se direct în producție. Școala generală de 10 ani asigură noi dimensiuni împlinirii aspirațiilor spre cultură ale poporului nostru. Ea va da oameni mai culți, care vor putea să-și însușească mai repede și mai bine o calificare, ceea ce va grăbi progresul material și spiritual al societății noastre”.[16]

Legea adoptată pe 13 mai 1968 precizează că „învățământul are drept scop însușirea, de către cetățeni, a culturii generale și a cunoștințelor necesare exercitării unor profesiuni utile societății, formarea concepției lor materialist-dialectice despre natură și societate, educarea intelectuală, morală, estetică și fizică, cultivarea dragostei lor față de patrie și popor, față de idealurile de pace și progres social”[17].

- Tineretul, între „educația prin muncă și pentru muncă” și timpul liber Tineretul reprezenta pentru partid o categorie specială, interesul pe care i-l arată fiind explicabil din perspectiva rolului atribuit în planul de transformare socialistă a țării. Tinerii erau viitorul națiunii, așadar acea forță socială care putea contribui la materializarea viitorului comunist. Erau „materialul” cel mai maleabil pentru făurirea „omului nou” pe care partidul și-l dorea – însă văzut nu doar ca „un simplu executant al planurilor naționale de dezvoltare, cât mai ales un participant activ, conștient de valoarea contribuției sale creatoare la dezvoltarea socialistă a României”, scrie cercet. Manuela Marin. Iar acest lucru implica un proces continuu de dezvoltare a conștiinței prin intermediul socializării politice.

Una dintre dimensiunile socializării politice era, spre exemplu, participarea tinerilor la munca patriotică. „Semnificația prestării muncii patriotice mergea dincolo de necesitatea asigurării unei specializări sau experiențe practice valoroase pentru tânărul muncitor. Astfel, ea căpăta însemnătatea unei experiențe formative subsumate obiectivului educației prin muncă și pentru muncă. (...) Prin munca depusă, tinerii s-ar fi creat sau recreat pe sine în postura de «oameni noi pentru o nouă Românie»", mai scrie Manuela Marin[18].

Un adevărat elogiu face Oltul tinerilor și muncii patriotice chiar în primele numere:

Tinerii din orașele și comunele județului Olt, îndrumați cu competență și atenție de către Comitetul județean al U.T.C., vor fi în primele rînduri, alături de toți oamenii muncii, în vasta acțiune de transpunere în viață a hotărîrilor partidului nostru de dezvoltare a industriei, agriculturii, științei și culturii, vor fi la înălțimea încrederii pe care partidul și poporul o au în tînăra generație".[19]

„Pretutindeni unde ai călători, de-a lungul și de-a latul țării, vei întîlni rezultate ale colaborării voluntare a tuturor vîrstelor la acțiuni de construire a unor obiective economice și sociale, de înfrumusețare și ornamentare a orașelor și satelor".[21]

Cercet. Manuela Marin accentuează nu doar diversitatea și complexitatea activităților de socializare politică destinate tinerilor, „dar mai ales modul în care ele monopolizau toate aspectele vieții cotidiene (publice și private) ale tinerilor". Așadar, accentul era pus pe participarea generației tinere și pe implicarea activă și continuă, pentru a ocupa cât mai mult din așa-zisul timp liber.

Timpul liber este subiect frecvent abordat în ziarul Oltul, de cele mai multe ori pus în corelație cu activități cultural-educative. Revigorarea culturii de masă și mișcării de amatori, în special din întreprinderi, ca și de la sate, se face și în scopul câștigării competiției cu noile forme de divertisment accesibil generației tinere. „Bătălia" pe care partidul o duce este, așadar, pentru conștiința tinerilor – pe terenul divertismentului. Sugestii și recomandări pentru „organizarea timpului liber într-un mod plăcut și instructiv" sunt făcute cu fiecare articol publicat:

instructiv constituie, de fapt, una din preocupările de seamă ale organizațiilor U.T.C. Am profitat de vibranta manifestare care, de altfel, este cunoscută în fiecare comună – hora care te smulge și te alătură cu o forță magnetică, dînd glas «zestrei spirituale a comunei». În acest sens am solicitat opiniile cîtorva tineri. Tema?! – manifestările ce au loc pentru îndeplinirea acestei cerințe supreme (organizarea timpului liber)".[23]

„Deunăzi, am avut o convorbire cu tovarășul Daniel Rotaru, vicepreședintele cooperativei «Arta meșteșugarilor» din Slatina despre activitatea cultural-artistică.
– Se poate vorbi despre timpul liber ca factor de cultură, capabil să-ți transmită și să-ți facă familiare valori indiscutabile de frumos?
– Fără îndoială că da. Deși limitat, timpul afectat formațiilor noastre cele mai active – orchestra de mandoline, brigada artistică de agitație, grupul vocal folcloric – are în vedere în primul rînd selectarea și afirmarea folclorului nostru tradițional, poetic și muzical, a formelor sale variate de expresie. În cultivarea lui intră nu numai respectul pentru marile sale comori de frumusețe ci și o legătură de sînge. Sîntem români nu numai prin nume, ci și prin afinitatea spirituală cu pămîntul pe care ne-am născut și am crescut".[24]

- Activitatea cultural-educativă și contextele de performare

Socializarea politică a tinerilor are loc și prin educația cultural-artistică, cu participarea bibliotecilor, căminelor culturale în mediul rural, a caselor de cultură, cluburilor tineretului, muzeelor, teatrelor și instituțiilor muzicale, respectiv a școlilor populare de artă – în fapt, a tuturor instituțiilor implicate în desfășurarea unei activități cultural-educative.

Mișcarea artistică de amatori, ale cărei echipe erau organizate și îndrumate de căminele culturale, de casele de creație populară și de organizațiile sindicale, în întreprinderi, este în plin avânt în anul 1968. Există un număr mare manifestări cultural-artistice și de formații – grupuri vocale și coruri, tarafuri, ansambluri de cântece și de dansatori, orchestre de muzică ușoară și populară, ansambluri de obiceiuri populare, formații instrumentale, fanfare, brigăzi artistice, formații de teatru folcloric.

Toată această anvergură de forțe cultural-artistice este reflectată plenar în paginile ziarului Oltul, în articole care le potențează rolul. Participarea tinerilor la astfel de manifestări artistice girate oficial viza, pe lângă stabilirea unui control asupra timpului lor liber, și educarea printre forme atractive și mai ales ilustrative, în valorile socialist-naționaliste ale regimului[25].
Presa comunistă, în general, încearcă să redea idealurile de vitalitate, tinerețe, entuziasm personificate de tineretul implicat în astfel de manifestări mai ales prin strategii vizuale, iar evenimentele demonstrative, de tip paradă sau festival, le puneau cel mai bine în valoare. Aceste reprezentări ale tineretului erau cel mai bine exhibate în parade și „demonstrații" care puteau etala la scară largă tipologia „omului nou", afirmă cercet. Andrada Fătu-Tutoveanu[26].

tradițiilor și obiceiurilor locuitorilor de pe această uriașă vatră folclorică, care este județul Olt, de a ridica la un nivel superior activitatea așezămintelor culturale.
Dar obiectivul major, care trebuie să călăuzească în permanență de acum înainte munca tuturor celor ce lucrează în domeniul culturii de masă, este realizarea unui salt calitativ în activitatea cultural-artistică, printr-o receptivitate sporită la cererile și exigențele cetățenilor, printr-o mai pronunțată fundamentare științifică și artistică a acestei activități. (...) Adeseori la programele artistice prezentate de unele formații de amatori, prezența publicului e foarte slabă. Cauza nu e nevoie s-o căutăm prea departe, ea se găsește în însăși calitatea artistică a programelor prezentate, în sărăcia repertoriului".[27]

„Purtătoare ale folclorului nostru poetic și muzical, tarafurile au conservat și vehiculat în timp și în spațiu neprețuitul tezaur al artei noastre populare, cale de secole. Transmițîndu-și-l o dată cu lăuta din tată în fiu, generații întregi de lăutari au fost sufletul petrecerilor noastre populare și păstrători ai unor datini străbune. Județul Olt are localități ca Iancu Jianu, Tomeni, adevărate centre, în care numărul lăutarilor trece deseori de cifra 100 – adevărate conservatoare de muzică populară. În mod frecvent grupați cîte 4-5, ei cîntă mai ales la nunți, pe un areal proporțional ca mărime cu faima ce o dețin. Alții cîntă în restaurantele de la oraș. Mulți dintre ei însă au fost sau sînt celebrități în arta lor. Sînt numeroase, am spus, căminele culturale care au posibilitatea să-și organizeze în bune condiții astfel de formații: Iancu Jianu, Drăgănești, Spineni, Brîncoveni, Valea Mare, Optași, Priseaca, Mogoșești, Coteana și multe altele. (...) Din păcate multe cămine culturale, care se bucură de avantajul unor astfel de posibilități, nu înțeleg ce aport și-ar aduce prin constituirea unui taraf. Nu înțeleg că muzica vocală, dansul, brigada artistică, montajul cer suportul unei formații de muzică instrumentală bine organizate".[29]

„Obiceiurile și tradițiile poporului nostru se păstrează intacte la țară. Acolo folclorul reînvie continuu. În satele noastre tinerii fredonează nu numai doinele învățate din bătrîni, ci și cîntece care vorbesc despre viața nouă, despre partid, despre oameni noi. Dansurile, motivele naționale de pe costume, cîntecele populare etc., se întîlnesc în orice sat al țării noastre la fel de frumoase, la fel de vii și noi, ca și acum două-trei sute de ani.
Educarea socialistă a oamenilor muncii se face nu numai prin muncă și învățătură, ci și prin artă. Dată fiind uriașa dezvoltare pe care au luat-o orașele noastre, tineretul din mediul urban își completează educația comunistă prin intermediul cinematografelor și al teatrelor moderne, al terenurilor de sport și parcurilor, al caselor de cultură și universităților populare. La educația tineretului sătesc contribuie, în primul rînd, căminul cultural. Dacă programele sale de activitate vor îmbina în mod armonios toate celelalte laturi ale educației cu cea artistică, rezultatele vor fi la nivelul cerințelor. Pentru aceasta, însă, vor trebui găsite cele mai accesibile și potrivite forme, pentru a atrage cu mai mult tineret".[30]

Rolul educațional al activităților cultural-artistice era cel mai bine ilustrat de organizarea brigăzilor artistice, iar atenția pe care regimul comunist o acordă acestui tip de manifestări are legătură cu caracterul și conținutul programelor artistice prezentate.

Oltul publică nu puține articole despre rolul și responsabilitatea brigăzii artistice. Primul dintre ele – intitulat „În dezbatere: Actualitatea brigăzii artistice" și apărut în chiar în nr. 8 – este, înainte de toate, un îndrumar privind repertoriul. Nu lipsesc din cuprins exemplificările negative, critica „sărăciei evidente de inspirație", cu rol de a sublinia utilitatea normelor și regulilor propuse de autor, care este metodist al Casei de Cultură din Slatina:

Scenetele, dialogurile, scheciurile, cupletele, strigăturile, etc. dau mai mare dinamism spectacolului decît «clasicul» vers-cîntec-joc, la care în majoritatea cazurilor nu poți să-i adaptezi altă mișcare scenică decît «celebrul» semicerc, care mai apoi a evoluat în «U» sau «V», cu vîrful sau baza spre public. (...)
Brigada nu trebuie să fie un arhivar care îndosariază realizările și lipsurile, ci un motor activ în mersul înainte al colectivității respective; ea trebuie să ia atitudine și să dea soluții pentru lichidarea unor rămîneri în urmă, să lupte pentru un trai mai bun. Bineînțeles, toate acestea transfigurate artistic, cu un înalt grad de exigență și după o foarte precisă documentare asupra stării de fapt a lucrurilor. Trebuie să scoatem odată din spectacolele de brigadă tabelul cifric cu oile și vacile existente și să ne ocupăm mai mult de oameni: cum gîndesc ei, ce năzuințe au, cum vorbesc, cum se poartă și ce vor ei de la viață. Textul de brigadă are obligația să dezbată o temă precisă, nu să ia în discuție un noian de probleme cărora să nu le dea în final nici o rezolvare, iar spectatorul să plece din sală cu «capul calendar», fără să fi învățat sau aflat nimic nou".[31]

Concluzii

În concluzie, ziarul Oltul constituie un exemplu reprezentativ al presei de partid din România comunistă, într-o etapă de reorganizare administrativă și de repoziționare politică. Publicația integrează atât particularitățile locale ale județului Olt, cât și constrângerile ideologice ale respectivei perioade, configurând un discurs care, sub aparența informării, servește într-o manieră coerentă și sistematică obiectivele propagandistice ale regimului.

ADVERTISING DISCOURSE FOR COSMETIC PRODUCTS. THE LEAFLET AND THE COMMERCIAL

Diana Ionela Alexandrescu
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract*: The proposed paper shows a rhetorical and a pragmatic analysis of advertising discourse for cosmetic products. The work method is based on a corpus analysis formed with the examination of two complementary formats: first, the printed leaflet, and second, the audiovisual commercial. This article couldn't be made without a retrospective look at the advertising's foundational principles of rhetoric and pragmatics, as well as frameworks developed by their important contributors. The study aims to discuss some persuasive and argumentative strategies. Based on this dual perspective analysis, the paper highlights how verbal, visual and contextual elements interact at the same time to create a huge influence and to guide silently the consumer.

Keywords*: rhetoric, pragmatics; discourse; argumentation; implicature

De-a lungul timpului, noțiunea generală de discurs a primit numeroase definiții. O primă modalitate de definire a acestuia o identificăm în lucrarea Dicționar de analiză a discursului (Nagy, 2015): „Termenul discurs trimite, în ultimele decenii, la realități lingvistice eterogene, uneori vagi, conceptualizate din perspective teoretice diferite, care au fost generate de necesitatea de a suprinde limbajul în acțiune, limba ca activitate, cu toate ipostazele sale, ignorate de viziunile mai vechi." (Ibidem, s.v. discurs)

În articolul de față, subiectul analizei va fi discursul publicitar. Conform autoarei Adriana Maria Robu (2015), discursul publicitar, „văzut în complexitatea sa ca text, imagine, simbol și muzică totodată, este un tip de discurs construit pe baza interacțiunii discursive, a resurselor intertextuale și a sincretismului codurilor semiotice." (Ibidem, 387-388), urmând, ca mai apoi, să vedem cum se va realiza această unire.

Conform părerii lui Dumitru Irimia (1986), stilul publicistic specific acestui tip de discurs „apare și se dezvoltă în condițiile întemeierii și dezvoltării presei în limba română, ca expresie a «publicizării», a interpretării pentru public a vieții social-politice și cultural științifice, naționale și internaționale (Ibidem, 185) și se manifestă prin „împletirea funcției referențiale cu funcția conativă, cu intervenția, de ordin secundar, dar fără importanță, a funcției expresive." (Ibidem)

Tot acesta notează că acțiunea funcției referențiale se manifestă în discursul publicitar sub atenta dirijare a funcției conative și că referentul domină printr-un caracter dinamic, reprezentând o imagine (dominată de două componente: una informativă, cealaltă propagandistică) modelată în actul publicistic cu ajutorul funcției conative. (Ibidem, 186)

Raportându-ne la componenta informativă, facem un pas către tărâmul retoricii, „una dintre cele mai cultivate științe despre limbă în lumea antică greco-romană […] care îmbină arta construcției discursurilor cu o teorie a discursului, în special a celui cu funcție persuasivă, deoarece, prin discursul său, oratorul urmărea să impună un punct de vedere, un mod de exprimare sau orientarea către o activitate." (Nagy, 2015, s.v. retorică)

Componenta propagandistică ne îndreaptă către tărâmul pragmaticii. În definirea conceptului s-a pornit chiar de la etimologia cuvântului, evidențiind că: „„pragma («acțiune») [-] am spune că pragmatica este studiul modalităților în care limbajul este «pus în acțiune» de către utilizatori în vederea unui scop." (Robu, 2015: 76)

Când vorbim despre retorică, avem neapărat în vedere și teoria argumentării. O privire atentă în dicționarul retoric ne va duce către termenul de argument despre care suntem informați

că a fost „împrumutat în lingvistica modernă din logica formală, unde, în operația de reprezentare a propozițiilor, desemnează variabila independentă a funcției predicative sau, altfel spus, indică entitățile (obiectele și indivizii) de care depind proprietățile și relațiile, adică predicatele. […] În gramatica generativă, desemnează participanții minimum necesari, deci participanții implicați obligatoriu în activitatea sau starea exprimată de predicat, cărora predicatul le atribuie o funcție/ un rol tematic, extras(ă) din ansamblul de roluri: Temă, Agent, Pacient, Experimentator, Beneficiar/ Benefactiv, Sursă, Recipient/ Țintă, Locativ etc." (Pană Dindelegan, 2023, s.v. argument)

Pe lângă cele deja menționate, mai trebuie să cunoaștem și că prin argument „se înțelege mijlocul sau premisa pe care se sprijină sau cu care se respinge o idee, o atitudine sau o teorie, situație în care el se concretizează ca un enunț sau ca un șir de enunțuri conexate, ce pot intra în componența unui mare număr de discursuri, între care multe dintre speciile discursului științific, discursului oratoric, polemic și dialogic." (Nagy, 2015, s.v. argument)

Teoria argumentării reprezintă rezultatul cel mai de seamă al pragmaticii integrate, rezultat ce a fost dezvoltat de către J.-Cl. Anscombre și O Ducrot în lucrarea L`argumentation dans la langue. (1983)

Ideile centrale din cadrul acestei teorii sunt următoarele: „evidențierea elementelor și regulilor care determină organizarea externă și interpretarea argumentelor, fără a se opri și la teoretizarea aspectelor de natură contextuală a discursului" (Robu, 2015: 92) și „modalitățile formale care se articulează în limba vorbitorului pentru a da o orientare argumentativă enunțurilor sale și, totodată, vizează modalitățile formale care îi servesc destinatarului pentru a-și construi interpretarea." (Ibidem)

Teoria lor despre argumentare are în vedere și noțiunea aristotelică de topos, acesta desemnând, în cazul teoriei lor, „«principiile generale, admise în sânul unei comunități lingvistice, care servesc drept sprijin argumentației»". (Ibidem)

Toposul este clasificat în trei elemente: „cunoașterea admisă într-o comunitate din care fac parte locutorul și alocutorul, posibilitatea de a utiliza această cunoaștere în situații diferite și posibilitatea de a lega două proprietăți graduale sau scalare în baza principiului comun." (Robu, 2015: 92) Aceștia fac o importantă distincție între două tipuri de argumentare: „argumentarea în sens curent, ca «ansamblu de dispozitive și strategii discursive utilizate de un locutor în scopul de a-și convinge auditoriul» și argumentarea în sens tehnic care «desemnează un tip specific de relații între conținuturi semantice, relații manifestate în discurs și înscrise în limbă»" (Ibidem, 215) Dintre cele două, cercetătorii consideră că al doilea tip de argumentare ar reprezenta obiectul pragmaticii integrate.

Pe cealaltă parte, când vorbim despre pragmatică, avem în vedere teoria relevanței/ a pertinenței. Termenul de pertinență a fost impus în domeniul lingvisticii, „prin Școala de la Praga și ține de dezvoltarea teoriei fonologice structurale." (Nagy, 2015, s.v. pertinență).

Teoria pertinenței este considerată a fi teoria de bază a pragmaticii cognitive. Ea a fost propusă de autorii americani D. Sperber și D. Wilson, dorindu-și ca prin intermediul ei să explice „comportamentul comunicativ din punct de vedere cognitiv." (Ibidem) Însă, pentru a ajunge să o analizăm, trebuie să amintim și să discutăm punctul acesteia de plecare, respectiv teoria conversației propusă de Herbert Paul Grice. Motivul este următorul: teoria pertinenței „concentrează toate maximele lui H. P. Grice într-un singur principiu și afirmă că pertinența trebuie căutată în interacțiunea comunicativă." (Nagy, 2015, s.v. pertinență).

Teoria conversației a fost propusă „în cadrul conferințelor din 1967 și publicată ulterior în lucrarea Logic and Conversation (1975)". (Robu, 2015: 79) Publicarea acestei teorii „a reprezentat un moment la fel de important ca și cel al publicării teoriei actelor de vorbire" (Ibidem), motivul fiind că „acestea două marchează detașarea de înțelegerea strict reprezentațională a limbajului sau a semanticii exclusive vericondiționale." (Ibidem, 79-80)

Grice este de părere că semnificația non-naturală din teoria lui Austin și Searle poate fi înțeleasă de interlocutor prin două tipuri de implicaturi conversaționale, identificabile prin anumite mărci lingvistice și conversaționale, care sunt inferențe bazate pe semnificație și nu pe formă.

Tipurile de implicaturi care ajută interlocutorul să înțeleagă acest tip de semnificație sunt în număr de două, respectiv: implicatura convențională și cea conversațională.

Conform lingvistei Luminița Hoarță Cărăușu (2004), implicatura conversațională are o istorie relativ scurtă și, în esență, ea transmite „niște sfaturi despre cum ar trebui să folosească oamenii o anumită limbă, sfaturi relatate foarte pe scurt și schițate. (Ibidem, 95) Pentru a avea o comunicare care să fie corectă, dar și eficientă, autoarea observă că s-au identificat „ca linii directoare […] patru maxime conversaționale (maxime = imperative), care reprezintă principii generale, care conduc la o conversație eficientă și cooperantă, și care principii exprimă împreună un principiu general al comunicării." (Ibidem)

Principiul cooperării vizează formularea contribuției aduse la conversație având în vedere scopul avut în momentul respectiv și direcția conversației. Despre acesta, Grice a susținut următoarele: „Am putea formula un principiu general relativ referitor la care participanții se vor aștepta (cu celelalte lucruri neschimbate) să îl respecte, și anume: Să vă aduceți contribuția la conversație așa cum este necesar, în stadiul în care aceasta are loc, cu scopul acceptat sau cu schimbul de opinii în care ești angajat. Unii ar putea numi acesta PRINCIPIUL COOPERĂRII." (t.n.)" (Grice, 1975: 45)

Prin intermediul maximei calității, Grice susține că trebuie să aducem o contribuție adevărată conversației, iar acest lucru se poate realiza astfel: să nu spunem lucruri neadevărate și să nu susținem anumite fapte fără a avea dovezi concludente: „În categoria calității se încadrează supermaxima – „Încearcă să-ți faci din contribuția ta una care este adevărată." – și încă două maxime specifice: 1. Nu spune ceea ce crezi că e fals; 2. Nu susține anumite fapte pentru care nu ai dovezi concludente." (t.n.) (Grice, 1975: 46)

Cea de a doua maximă, a cantității, aduce în prim plan ideea de a fi suficient de informativi, atât cât este necesar, pentru a se realiza scopul vorbirii, dar, totodată, conversația să nu fie informativă mai mult decât este necesar. „Cantitatea se referă la cantitatea de informații care trebuie furnizată și intră sub incidența următoarelor maxime: 1. Contribuția să fie atât de informativă pe cât este necesar (pentru scopurile actuale ale schimbului comunicativ); 2. Nu faceți informația mai informativă decât este necesar." (t.n.) (Ibidem, 45)

Maxima relevanței transmite că trebuie adusă o contribuție relevantă și persuasivă la conversație: „În categoria RELAȚIEI am plasat o singură maximă, anume: Fii relevant!" (t.n.) (Ibidem, 46)

Ultimul tip, maxima modalității, evidențiază că este necesară claritatea, ordinea și exactitatea în conversație, evitând ambiguitatea. „În cele din urmă, în categoria MODALITĂȚII, pe care o înțeleg nu ca referindu-se (precum categoriile anterioare) la ceea ce se spune ci, mai degrabă, la ceea ce se spune a trebui spus, includ supermaxima „Fii perspicace" – și numeroase alte maxime precum: 1. Evitați obscuritatea exprimării; 2. Evitați ambiguitatea; 3. Fii succint (evită proxilitatea inutilă); 4. Fii ordonat." (t.n.) (Ibidem)

Autoarea amintită mai devreme, Luminița Hoarță Cărăușu (2004), evidențiază o serie de aspecte la fel de importante legate de teoria lui Grice. Prin aceasta, lingvistul „a inaugurat o viziune complet nouă asupra pragmaticii și asupra problemei comunicării. În plan teoretic, Grice a indus o nouă noțiune, aceea de implicatură, iar în privința comunicării, Grice a propus un principiu general, principiul de cooperare: pentru ca auditoriul să poată interpreta ce a vrut să spună vorbitorul, trebuie presupus că acesta din urmă a respectat principiul." (Ibidem, 96)

Concluzia autoarei referitoare la implicatura conversațională este următoarea: „este, deci, rezultatul unei intenții precise prin care se nesocotește o regulă conversațională." (Ibidem, 97)

Acestui aspect lingvistic de o importanță deosebită trebuie să i se mai adauge o clarificare suplimentară. Pentru o mai bună înțelegere, este necesară și amintirea principalelor șase caracteristici stabilite de către Grice implicaturii conversaționale. Astfel, trebuie să cunoaștem faptul că implicaturile conversaționale sunt: „calculabile […]; neutralizabile […]; nondetașabile […]; nonconvenționale […]; nu sunt implicitate în ceea ce este spus, ci în spunere […], nedeterminate" (t.n.) (Grice, 1975: 57-58)

Revenind la teoria pertinenței propusă de Sperber și Wilson, aceasta a reprezentat, deci, teoria fundamentală a pragmaticii cognitive, aceasta pornind de la una din maximele lui Grice. Ea datează din anul 1986, a fost publicată în lucrarea Relevance. Communication and Cognition, și are la bază principiul pertinenței care susține că: „Orice act de comunicare ostensivă comunică prezumția propriei sale pertinențe optimale". (Robu, 2015: 84)

Conform părerii celor doi autori americani, noțiunea de pertinență este dependentă de efortul cognitiv și cel contextual, astfel contribuindu-se la enunțarea a două maxime de relevanță. (Ibidem, 84) Prima maximă exprimă ideea că: „o afirmație este relevantă într-un context în măsura în care efectele ei contextuale sunt majore" (t.n.) (Sperber, Wilson, 1995: 125), iar cea de a doua: „o afirmație este relevantă într-un context în măsura în care efortul pe care îl presupune procesarea acesteia este mic". (t.n.) (Ibidem)

Teoria celor doi a subsumat un concept de bază din sfera pragmaticii cognitive referitor la tipul de comunicare ostensiv-inferențială, referindu-se la două tipuri de intenție: una informativă, iar cealaltă comunicativă.

Cei doi pragmaticieni vorbesc despre mai multe tipuri de relație la nivelul unui act de comunicare. Un prim tip ar fi relația dintre efort și efect. Aceștia sunt de părere că „toate actele ostensiv-inferețiale produc o așteptare de pertinență, în sensul că acestea au în mod cert o relevanață pentru emițător și receptor. Însă, pentru a înțelege pertinența/ relevanța unui enunț, este nevoie de un efort care va conduce către un efect." (Ibidem, 97)

Cel de al doilea tip de legătură discutată în teoria celor doi autori, Sperber și Wilson, vizează relația dintre context și concept. Teoria celor doi prezintă contextul ca reprezentând „informațiile care se adaugă formei logice a enunțului în interpretarea proceselor inferențiale […] [și care este compus] „din cunoștințele enciclopedice accesibile prin forma logică, din circumstanțele fizice ale enunțării și din date care provin din enunțurile precedate." (t.n.) (Sperber, Wilson, 1995: 132)

Pentru cei doi pragmaticieni acest întreg ansamblu de elemente reprezintă „cadrul cognitiv al individului" (t.n.) (Ibidem) În cadrul acesta, conceptele care vizează memoria pe termen lung dețin rolul definitoriu, întrucât ele sunt înnăscute și nu dobândite de către om. (Ibidem) Această idee este argumentată de către cei doi astfel: „pentru existența unei abilități înnăscute a omului de a face operații de bază, iar existența unor concepte prototip face posibilă dobândirea altor concepte în mod deductiv." (t.n.) (Ibidem)

Discursul publicitar recurge frecvent la elementele de context pentru a putea transmite și decoda mesajul de catre receptor, iar interpretarea și analiza discursului sunt facilitate de cunoasterea acestor elemente contextuale.

După cum reiese din titlul articolului de față, partea practică vizează analiza pliantului și a filmului publicitar.

Discuția va debuta cu pliantul publicitar. Nivelul lingvistic al acestuia va fi evidențiat și discutat având în vedere următoarea ilustrație:

Anexa 1, Dm-drogherie markt, campania octombrie-noiembrie 2023, vezi Anexa (1)

În categoria nivelului lingvistic, în publicitatea pentru produsele cosmetice putem întâlni trei constituenți majori: marca/ brandul, sloganul și textul extins al reclamei, care variază în funcție de canalul prin care este transmis (fie scris, sub formă de pliant, fie televizual, sub forma filmului publicitar). Toți aceștia pot fi identificați în Anexa (1).

Textul reclamei publicitare propusă spre analiză este următorul: „Nuanțele calde ale toamnei îmi pun în evidență frumusețea!”. Despre el putem aminti că reprezintă, „ca element structural, […] partea lingvistică prin care se susține ideea de bază.” (Robu, 2015: 153):

Marca sau brandul, în cazul de față „Dm”, pe care îl vedem în colțul din dreapta, jos, s-a impus în publicitate odată cu dorința „de a da nume produselor […] pentru a îl diferenția în mintea consumatorilor.” (Corbu, 2009: 58-59). S-a optat și pentru dubla numire a acestui constituent întrucât, în cele mai multe lucrări de specialitate, termenul de marcă a fost găsit sub denumirea englezească de brand. Putem să îl identificăm în dicționarul de specialitate sub forma: brand[2], branduri, s.n. Marcă de produs a unei firme renumite. [Pr. brend] – Cuv. engl. (DEX `09, s.v. brand[2]). O privire atentă ne arată că acesta este al doilea sens a cuvântului, în timp ce primul este: brand[1], branduri, s.n. (Mil.) Aruncător de mine; p. ext. proiectil aruncător de mine – Din n. p. Brandt. (DEX `09, s.v. brand[1]).

Sloganul „Aici mă regăsesc, aici cumpăr” poate fi definit drept o „formă concisă de transmitere a unui mesaj […] [care, în mod] corect trebuie să fie coerent, diferit de mesajele altor companii, ușor de înțeles, vizibil, durabil și adaptabil.” (Zbuchea, 2009: 21)

Ca o caracteristică de tip pragmatic, putem identifica în pliantul propus spre analiză forța persuasivă a imperativului. Această utilizare imperativă are, în fapt, valoarea semantică de îndemn adresat interlocutorului, deoarece îl îndeamnă să devină curios, să se uite la aceste produse și să le achiziționeze. Despre acest mod putem aminti părerea lingvistei Luminița Hoarță Cărăușu (2007) aceea că reprezintă „modul persoanei a doua, cu distribuție, din acest motiv, mult mai restrânsă comparativ cu celelalte moduri, fiind legat de adresarea directă la interlocutor.” (Ibidem, 151)

În pliantul publicitar ca strategie persuasivă întâlnim și interogația retorică:

99Următoarea mea dorință?
Deja împlinită!66
Mai multe informații despre noul serviciu de plată în magazinul online, puteți afla urmând acest cod QR

Anexa 2, Dm-drogherie market, campania martie-aprilie 2024, Anexa (2)

Interogația retorică din Anexa (2) este adresată unui interlocutor absent, dar potențial viitor cumpărător, datorită acestui dialog fals cu un receptor imaginar. Despre interogația retorică putem spune că este, în cazul de față, folosită cu scopul de a capta atenția și de a sublinia ideea că magazinul cu produse cosmetice anticipează și are răspunsul fiecărei dorințe a oricărei persoane, oferind o gamă largă de produse care să se muleze pe fiecare consumator în parte, indiferent de vârstă.

Pentru o scurtă analiză a nivelului retoric, propunem spre analiză următorul pliant:

Anexa 3, Dm-drogherie markt, campania octombrie-noiembrie 2023, vezi Anexa (3)

Pentru început, în Anexa (3) iese în evidență chipul onest al fetei din imagine, care apare în două modalități: înainte și după ce a folosit produsul cosmetic. Modalitatea la care se recurge aici este comparația de tip vizual, aceasta reprezentând „o altă figură […] prin care sunt puse în relație două concepte asociate printr-o relație de similitudine. (Robu, 2015: 427)

O privire scurtă, dar atentă, tot în josul paginii ne va scoate în evidență o reclamă pentru un produs cosmetic, mai exact pentru „un fond de ten legendar", epitet căruia îi este alăturată imaginea propriu-zisă a produsului.

Pe lângă epitet se mai poate identifica și enumerația. Enumerarea sau enumerația reprezintă o „figură retorică de construcție realizată prin coordonarea multiplă a unor constituenți sintactici care alcătuiesc o serie coerentă din punct de vedere semantic." (Pană Dindelegan, 2023, s.v. enumerația)

În ceea ce privește analiza filmelor publicitare, se pot observa, cu precădere, dintre mărcile pragmatic-discursive, următoarele*: mărcile de inițiere* sub formă de structuri imperative (Descoperă primul ruj lichid Avon!) și interogative (Cum îmi curăț și demachiez tenul?), mărcile de menținere, de exemplu așa că (Așa că dacă ești make-up lover, în Bebe Tei te așteaptă standurile Maybelline și L'Oréal Paris cu multe produse pe care să le descoperi.) și mărcile de încheiere sub formă de slogan (Recomandată de Lorena și mama ei, potrivită pentru tine.) sau invitație (Încearcă și tu noua infuzie de ulei de trandafir online și în magazinele Yve Rocher.)

Alături de mărci, un rol important joacă și prezența deixisului în reclame. Poate fi identificat deixisul personal: tenul tău („Cu noua infuzie de trandafir, tenul tău va fi hrănit"), apa mea („Cu apa mea micelară Garnier!"); deixisul spațial („vreau să vă arăt și preferatele mele pe care le puteți găsi în Bebe Tei Brașov. Acum hai să vă arăt și preferatele mele de la raft!") sau temporal („Rezistă ore întregi fără să usuce buzele!"). Acesta reprezintă „ansamblul modalităților de expresie care asigură ancorarea mesajului lingvistic (enunț) în situația de comunicare în care este produs." (GALR, vol. II, 2005: 635)

Toate aceste elemente care tocmai au fost discutate atât teoretic cât și practic reușesc să pună bazele discursului publicitar sub formă de pliant și de film publicitar, elemente pe care le întâlnim zilnic peste tot și care ne influențează fără a ne da seama.

Abstract: According to demographic data and projections, Europe's population is experiencing a significant shift in its age structure, which is also evident in Romania. It is crucial to consider this trend when devising age-related policy measures. The concept of the silver economy is closely associated with the positive change in attitudes towards aging. It represents an economic paradigm that focuses on the active participation and economic activity of the elderly, as well as the unique needs and challenges of the aging population. The silver economy approach aims to encourage cooperation between age groups and promote the participation of the elderly in the labor market, as well as to ensure a sustainable and satisfactory quality of life for an aging society. This study seeks to explore the question of what type of public policy role civil society organizations assume concerning dimensions of the silver economy, such as employment, social care, and enhancing quality of life. We analyze the relationship between the indicators of the active aging index and the concept of silver economy. Our study employs a mixed-methods approach. Presently, we are developing a case study that explores the characteristics of Érmellék, a disadvantaged Romanian micro-region comprising 14 predominantly rural administrative units. To create this case study, we have conducted semi-structured interviews with ten key stakeholders in the region, including mayors, clerks, and social service specialists. Additionally, we have utilized secondary statistical analyses to present regional characteristics and the desk research method to investigate public policy elements. As a best practice, we focus attention on Caritas Catolica, the primary social service provider in the region. The importance of this study lies in the fact that it provides relevant and useful information about the situation and role of the elderly population in the economic and social life of the micro-region, as well as points out the opportunities for development inherent in the silver economy. The results of this study can inspire practical solutions and public policy measures through the involvement of civil organizations.

Introduction

The aging of societies presents a significant challenge to the global economy, as well as to health and social care systems. The concept of the "silver economy" pertains to the economic and social potential of older age groups, encompassing consumption patterns, labor market participation, and the demand for health and social services. The silver economy represents society's response to aging, with a focus on five key areas: policy reforms, technological development, sources of finance, the introduction of new career models (such as lifelong learning), and support for entrepreneurship. Policy reforms are crafted to address demographic changes and aging without bias (Jackson, 2014). In this context, the notion of active aging becomes prominent, as the quality of processes affecting the elderly is a crucial aspect to which relevant indicators should be assigned. The Active Aging Index endeavors to measure the effectiveness of economic and political measures impacting the elderly (Vajda, 2017). It is particularly important to investigate this issue in rural, disadvantaged areas, where demographic aging is accelerating, primarily due to youth migration, while care systems confront resource constraints and structural challenges.

The objective of this study is to examine local responses to the ageing process, with particular emphasis on the role of the civil sector, employing the silver economy and active ageing approach, within a micro-region in Romania, specifically the Érmellék region of Bihor County.

This study investigates the role of active ageing and the involvement of civil society within the framework of the silver economy in a disadvantaged micro-region of Romania. The research is guided by the following core questions:

1. What roles do non-governmental organizations (NGOs) play in promoting active ageing and advancing the silver economy in rural settings?
2. How does the NGO sector—particularly faith-based entities such as Caritas Catolica—contribute to the social inclusion and quality of life of older adults in rural areas?
3. How are public policy interventions related to the development of the silver economy in these contexts?

By addressing these questions, the study aims to elucidate the specific challenges, structural limitations, and best practices encountered in ageing rural communities. The findings will contribute to the development of an empirically grounded conceptual framework to support localized ageing policy strategies in socioeconomically disadvantaged rural regions.

The Silver Economy and Active Ageing

The silver economy refers to economic opportunities arising from public and private expenditures linked to an ageing society and the specific needs of the population aged 50 and above. Its scope encompasses various sectors, including health, nutrition, leisure, housing, well-being, employment, and elder care. Through the promotion of conscious or active ageing, new economic processes, market opportunities, and structural models can emerge. Within the silver economy, older individuals are envisioned as capable of self-care, supported by evolving business and social infrastructures that facilitate this autonomy. Rather than viewing ageing as a disadvantage, the silver economy positions it as a potential asset. The ageing population can be broadly categorized into three groups—active, frail, and dependent—each characterized by distinct needs. While the silver economy intersects substantially with the broader consumer economy, it differs significantly in terms of spending priorities and consumption patterns due to the demographic diversity of older age groups (European Commission, 2015, p. 7).

The concept of the "silver economy", introduced in the early 2000s, can be interpreted as an elderly oriented economy, aiming to transform the globally pressing challenge of population ageing—particularly in Europe—into a valuable resource. The term was first referenced in European Parliament resolution in 2008, where emphasis was placed on encouraging the economic and social participation of older individuals.

The principal intervention areas of the silver economy include enhancing employment opportunities for older workers—for example through lifelong learning initiatives—adapting the built environment (homes, workplaces, and public spaces) and transportation systems to be age-friendly, increasing the number of healthy life years through health promotion and screening programs, and expanding telecare and monitoring systems. These domains contribute to improving the quality of life for ageing and elderly populations, fostering social inclusion, and maintaining economic activity (Eatock, 2015).

Bran, Popescu and Stanciu (2016) also highlights that the concept of the silver economy in the European Union (EU) pertains to economic opportunities linked to the aging population and the specific needs of individuals over 50. The aging population, a longstanding trend in industrialized nations, has recently led to the emergence of the silver economy. This demographic shift poses challenges for EU labor policies and healthcare systems, necessitating adaptations to accommodate the changing population dynamics. Defined as a component of the real economy, the silver economy capitalizes on the increasing demand from the aging population resulting from longer life expectancies and declining birth rates. To manage the associated costs, the EU seeks to bolster sectors like independent living solutions, senior tourism, long-term care systems, and innovation for active aging. Challenges presented by the silver economy include the establishment of a new consumer market and ensuring the sustainability of state budgets to support this demographic shift. While the new consumer market is expected to drive growth in industries like healthcare, housing, transportation, banking, and tourism, integrating the silver economy into the broader economy requires thoughtful planning due to its consumption-focused nature.

The Active Ageing Index (AAI) originated in 2012, aligning with the European Year for Active Ageing and Solidarity between Generations, and is grounded in the World Health Organization's definition of active ageing. This concept emphasizes optimizing health, participation, and security to improve quality of life as individuals age. The AAI encompasses four domains: employment, societal participation, healthy and independent living, and the enabling environment for active ageing, utilizing 22 indicators. Initially calculated at the national scale, it has expanded to various subnational levels. Overall, the AAI serves as a crucial tool for assessing and promoting active ageing policies (UNECE, 2019).

Zaidi and Howse (2017) in an analysis reflecting on policy discourse of active ageing underline the fact that the reassessment of aging policies in the mid-twentieth century, European states established public pension schemes, taking responsibility for providing financial support to individuals unable to independently support themselves. Initially intended to reduce poverty risk in old age and promote savings, these schemes evolved post-World War II to improve pension systems and welfare provisions, including social care services, in response to increased affluence and government accountability. Measuring contributions of older adults as population aging due to declining fertility rates and longer life expectancies became prominent, governments reevaluated pension sustainability and recognized the necessity for comprehensive policies addressing aging. The perception of old age shifted from dependency to a stage of life offering opportunities. New frameworks like “active ageing”, “healthy ageing”, “successful ageing” and “productive ageing” emerged, emphasizing positive aging trajectories over elderly support. Promoting engagement through healthy ageing these frameworks vary in their objectives and criteria for favorable aging outcomes. For example, Healthy Ageing prioritizes health as crucial to well-being and societal welfare, while Successful Ageing examines how individuals navigate aging, comparing high-performing individuals with those encountering challenges.

Civic engagement is a dimension of active aging. In their 2022 study, Vega-Tinoco, Gil-Lacruz, and Gil-Lacruz investigated the extent to which civic participation facilitates active aging using the European Social Survey (ESS) data from 2002 to 2016. The focus was on individuals born before 1965 across 14 European countries. The study formulated specific hypotheses to examine whether civic engagement positively affects well-being, differentiated by age, gender, and generational influences. Analysis of the data yielded significant insights regarding civic participation. Approximately 50% of older adults reported engaging in some form of civic activity within the past year, with observed variations across genders and generations. Baby Boomers demonstrated higher levels of engagement compared to the Silent Generation, particularly in activities like signing petitions. Overall, findings emphasize that civic participation is crucial for fostering well-being, with notable correlations identified between happiness, life satisfaction, and health. Further exploration of these relationships revealed that past civic engagement had a strong effect on future health and happiness indicators, while the effect of prior well-being on subsequent civic participation was considerably weaker. Interestingly, while both genders reported similar levels of happiness and life satisfaction, men indicated better health outcomes. It is noteworthy that women’s civic engagement had a more pronounced positive effect on well-being across various measures. The authors underline, that empirical evidence shows a strong connection between prior civic engagement and current well-being indicators, highlighting the need for renewed focus on fostering civic participation among older populations. Public policies should aim to establish frameworks that not only facilitate engagement but also enhance the well-being of older adults by recognizing their societal contributions (Vega-Tinoco, Gil-Lacruz & Gil-Lacruz, 2022).

The role of civil society organizations is important not only in civic engagement and participation in the context of aging. Civil society organizations hold a pivotal position in the sphere of active aging and the silver economy, extending their impact beyond simple civic involvement. The organization of public services for the elderly is managed by three principal entities: the state, the market, and civil society. In Romania, the majority of elderly services are delivered within the social sector, where civil society and church organizations frequently assume a complementary role to bridge service gaps. Chirugu (2023) in an analysis about social services for elderly people in Romania investigates the Romanian social services system for the elderly, focusing on the specific needs of seniors facing physiological limitations and social isolation. It underscores the critical need for these services to enhance the elderly's quality of life. The research methodology involves a comprehensive review of existing legal frameworks governing social services in Romania. The key findings denote that social services are integral to addressing social exclusion, poverty alleviation, and fostering social integration for the elderly. The legislative analysis shows that the framework categorizes social services as activities aimed at mitigating social needs and encouraging inclusion. The increasing aging population presents significant challenges, particularly as traditional familial support structures weaken due to socio-economic shifts and emigration trends. The mainstream care model shows that seniors often rely on informal care from family and volunteers, highlighting the social services paradigm's reliance on community involvement. However, the preference for residential care in Romania contrasts with the global trend towards home-based care, often regarded as a last resort. Institutional care facilities have proliferated, yet access remains inequitable, especially in rural areas where services are scarce. The study underscores the necessity of tailored services encompassing nursing, therapy, and psychological support, alongside community-based solutions. Research findings stress that seniors' socio-economic conditions, health, and living arrangements significantly affect their access to social services. The paper also discusses the dichotomy between public and private care providers in Romania, noting that while most elderly care is institutionalized, significant gaps remain in service coverage, particularly for lower-income groups. It highlights the need for sustainable service models that prioritize home-based solutions, which are preferred by the elderly but require a stable financial and social support framework. Moreover, the study emphasizes the importance of integrating health and social services to ensure a holistic approach to elderly care. Engaging informal caregivers, particularly women, who predominantly assume caregiving roles, is essential, thus addressing the economic and emotional burdens they face. In conclusion, the findings advocate for a systemic shift toward enhancing home care services, improving institutional quality, and fostering a supportive policy environment that recognizes and addresses the complexities of aging in Romania. Continuous adaptation to demographic changes and community needs is vital to developing an effective, sustainable elderly care framework (Chirugu, 2023).

Demographic and Social Context - Aspects of Active Ageing in Romania

Population ageing in Romania is a decades-long process that has accelerated significantly over the past 20 years. The median age has increased from 26.3 years in 1950 to 43.2 years in 2020, and is expected to reach 47.4 years in 2050. The proportion of the population aged 65 and over was 19.2% in 2020, rising to 27.7% in 2050. The proportion of people aged 80 and over will also increase, from 4.8% to 8.5%. The old-age dependency ratio (the proportion of older people in relation to the working-age population) is rising steadily and is projected by the UN to reach 50% by 2050. While urban areas benefit from internal migration of young people, in some rural areas the number of elderly people can be up to 2.5 times higher than in urban areas (Guvernul României, 2022).

According to data from the Romanian Statistical Institute (2022), the demographic ageing process of the resident population has continued to accelerate, with the proportion of elderly people aged 65 and over exceeding the proportion of young people aged 0-14 by more than 20%. In some rural municipalities, the number of older people aged 65 and over can be 5-10 times higher than the number of people aged 0-14 (Guvernul României, 2022). As evidence of the increase in ageing, the EU's population aged 65 and over increased by 3% between 2013 and 2023, compared to 3.4% in Romania over the same period. In 2013, 16.3% of the population in Romania belonged to the age group 65 and over, in 2023 the figure will be 19.7% (Eurostat 2024). Table 1 below presents the population by age group.

Table 1. Population by Age Group in the EU and Romania in 2023 (Eurostat, 2024).

Area/Age group	0-14	15-64	65 and above
European Union	14.9	63.8	21.3
Romania	16.1	64.2	19.7

The older age group cannot be considered a homogeneous community. The needs of the over-80s are different as at this age the demand for formalised long-term care and professional support services is higher. The increase in this age group is also significant as life expectancy increases. In the EU, it was 5% in 2020 and is projected to rise to 9% in 2050 (ISSA, 2022). The demographic dependency ratio for the total population in the EU countries was 56.7% in 2023, of which the old-age dependency ratio was 33.4% (Eurostat, 2024).

In Romania, the dependency ratio is 55.8%, of which the old-age dependency ratio is 30.7% (ISSA, 2022). All these data illustrate the growth rate. It can be expected that this phenomenon will lead, among many other sectors, to an increase in demand for health and social services.

Let us now consider the evolution of the Active Ageing Index in Romania. The UNECE and European Commission Active Ageing Index at subnational level in Romania (2019) report indicates that Romania's AAI (Active Ageing Index) consistently scores below the EU average, with a widening gap over time. While the AAI score rose by 0.6 points in Romania from 2010 to 2016, the EU average rose by 2.3 points. Regional disparities exist, with certain areas outperforming the national average despite a higher poverty and emigration rate. Despite increased caregiving responsibilities, resource deficiencies hinder seniors' engagement in volunteering and political activities. Consequently, in Romania, the elderly allocate their time and resources primarily to familial support, reflecting limited participation in political and community life.

The domain of independent, healthy and secure living encompasses various aspects of active aging, such as physical exercise, healthcare access, and financial stability, highlighting significant disparities between Romania and other EU countries. Romania ranks second lowest in this domain among EU states. Poverty rates among seniors are notably higher in poorer regions, with severe material deprivation being prevalent. In Romania, men demonstrate higher AAI values than women, with a notable gender gap of 3.5 compared to the EU average of 3.1 in 2016. The gender gap in employment favors men, particularly in the 55-59 age group, though it diminishes among those aged 70-74 due to men retiring. Conversely, women are more engaged socially, though their participation rates remain below the European average. Political engagement shows a negative gap, with significant regional disparities. In terms of independent living, men lead in active lifestyles post-55. Yet, older women face increased poverty risk, influenced by their employment history, particularly in rural areas, highlighting a feminization of poverty among the elderly (UNECE, 2019).

Addressing the challenges associated with Romania's ageing population necessitates not only the enhancement of care systems but also a paradigm shift towards acknowledging older adults as active contributors to society. The implementation of the national strategy could represent a foundational step towards establishing an inclusive framework that fosters dignity, autonomy, and intergenerational solidarity in the forthcoming year.

Methodological Aspects

Érmellék as a micro-region has been the site of several of our research projects in the past period, in which, in addition to the research field, the topic was also a common intersection, since the labour market, the elderly, businesses, i.e. the socio-economic environment that determines the lives of the people living here, were at the centre of attention. We have previously studied social enterprises in Bihor County (Pásztor & Gál, 2022a, 2022b), then analysed aspects of the silver economy with a specific focus on Érmellék (Gál & Pásztor, 2020, 2021), while we also designed a study to explore the labour market specificities in this disadvantaged sub-region (Gál & Pásztor, 2023). In this study, we adopted a mixed-methods research design, drawing upon both quantitative and qualitative approaches to provide a comprehensive analysis of the Érmellék micro-region. Initially, we contextualized the area under investigation by analyzing census data and other relevant statistical indicators to offer an overview of this socioeconomically disadvantaged sub-region. Subsequently, we examined the development strategies of the municipalities within the Érmellék micro-region (Gál & Pásztor, 2024), with particular attention to objectives and strategic visions concerning the elderly population. This was complemented by the collection of qualitative data through semi-structured interviews conducted with key stakeholders.

Empirical data collection occurred between 2021 and 2023, comprising 17 professional interviews with regional actors who possess in-depth knowledge of local economic and social processes. Participants included active workers, municipal officials and employees, educators, clergy, and representatives from both civil society and the business sector. The insights derived from these interviews were systematically integrated into the analysis and will inform a case study - the central focus of this research – focusing on Caritas Catolica, the principal social service provider in the region, as an example of best practice.

The aim of this study is to provide a comprehensive analysis of phenomena related to the silver economy and active ageing within a well-defined geographical area, using a case study approach. The research seeks to address the following questions:

1. What role do civil society organizations play in the development of the silver economy and active ageing in rural areas?
2. How does the civil sector - particularly the church-based Caritas Catolica - affect social inclusion and the quality of life of older people in rural environments?
3. What is the relationship between public policy roles and the development of the silver economy in rural regions?

The region under investigation is a relevant field for examining the silver economy and active ageing, given its rural character, ethnic composition (predominantly Hungarian, with a significant Hungarian Roma population), and socio-economic disadvantages. While the growth of the ageing population has wide-ranging impacts - including healthcare, the labor market, technological development, and consumption patterns - this study focuses primarily on demographic analysis, economic effects (especially social services), and local policy responses.

Results

An Analysis of the Érmellék Micro-region through the Lens of the Silver Economy

The focus of this study is Érmellék, located in the northern part of Bihor County, Romania, which is defined as an ethnographic rather than an administrative region. The micro-region consists of 14 settlements - three towns, one large commune, and ten smaller communes - which also include several additional small villages. The area is predominantly composed of small settlements, with a majority of Hungarian population and a significant Hungarian Roma community. In total, the settlement network encompasses 45 localities. The region's disadvantaged status stems from its rural character, ethnic composition, and economic features (Gál & Pásztor, 2023). The population of Érmellék represents 12% of Bihor County's inhabitants, amounting to 66,233 residents (Census, 2023).

The age structure of the Érmellék area - similarly to other rural, economically disadvantaged regions - presents significant demographic challenges. The proportion of older age groups in the region is steadily increasing, while the proportion of younger people is declining, a trend attributable to both natural population decrease and outmigration. This tendency is reflected, on the one hand, in the shrinking active-age population and, on the other, in the growing share of the elderly population. As a result, there is increasing pressure on the social and healthcare systems, which also affects local economic and social processes. Such an age structure typically shifts toward an ageing population, which requires special attention in local development strategies, particularly in the areas of social services and the social integration of older people.

Based on the qualitative interviews, the following conclusions were formulated in the context of the silver economy in the Érmellék region. Caring for the elderly is an important responsibility of local communities, but it is crucial that this takes place at the regional level as well. Good practices must be shared to ensure that accumulated professional knowledge can also benefit others. Another key aspect, also underlining the need for regionalization, is that "...village communities must be brought together..." and that cooperation at the community level is essential. This is a forward-looking perspective, and practices from organizations working with youth should be adapted to mobilize older adults. Participants in the interviews with stakeholders (professionals in elderly care, and also young public figures) reported these as very positive experiences. They emphasized the importance of a university - as a key regional institution - addressing this problem, and expressed a need for professional support, experts, and training opportunities. The digital environment might have also contributed to the openness in expressing the need for such discussions. The interviews also clearly revealed that in the Érmellék micro-region, there is no significant generational divide. Local interpretations, the attitudes of young people, and the openness of the older generation all suggest that their goals are not fundamentally different - even across generations. Our research shows that the region suffers from a care deficit, both in terms of institutional services and informal care. In many settlements, basic home care services, particularly personal care, are provided mainly by civil society actors. Two faith-based foundations - Caritas Catolica and the Diakonia Christian Foundation- have taken on identifiable roles in service provision. However, the number of professional caregivers is limited, and the extent of informal caregiving is insufficient. Other civil organizations, mainly youth-focused ones, participate in informal assistance, offering support services that fall within the category of basic care. Care needs are not matched by the range of available services. Factors specific to the 65+ age group - such as gender composition (higher proportion of women), health status, etc. - are not adequately addressed. The majority of interviewees highlighted loneliness among older people as a pressing issue, which could be alleviated through the development of social networks and the introduction of group activities. In rural areas, multidimensional care models are still missing. These models would involve sequential engagement of multiple fields tailored to individual life situations, guided by a professional team. During the analysis, it became evident that in our selected micro-region, Érmellék, existing structural disadvantages are further amplified from the perspective of the silver economy. In terms of services targeting the elderly, the area does not provide an ideal setting for the practical implementation of various silver economy dimensions. In our study area, civil society organizations offer a potentially effective medium-term solution. Therefore, it is the task of public policy to support the establishment and operation of non-governmental organizations capable of alleviating the state's burden in elderly care. However, a paradigm shift in aging policy also requires a transformation in the perception of older people and the concept of work. The silver economy revives a new market sector focused on needs-based products and services designed for the target group. To develop an effective strategy, it is essential to understand these needs, needs assessment is the foundation of service delivery. By identifying care needs, the quality of services can be ensured and individual demands can be met (Gál - Pásztor, 2020,2021).

Caritas Catolica Case Study

Based on interviews conducted with stakeholders and professionals, it became apparent that among the various types of social services in Érmellék, two activities are predominant: home care for the sick and meal provision. These activities constitute part of the basic services, providing support that enables individuals to maintain independent living. Such services are primarily operated by church-affiliated or civil society organizations. In some cases, funding is shared between the organization and the local municipality.

Interviews and on-site observations indicate that civil society organizations maintained by churches play a significant role in the implementation of policies related to ageing. The Roman Catholic and Reformed churches are the main sponsors of these organizations, while the state is present as a cooperating partner. Local governments support these organizations to the extent possible, mainly by facilitating their operational activities, although direct financial assistance is less common.

In our case study, we aim to present the region's most prominent service provider, the Caritas Catolica organization. Caritas Catolica operates residential care homes for the elderly, provides home nursing care, manages a social kitchen, and is also involved in social assistance initiatives. Our case study focuses on the organizational unit of the Caritas Catolica Association within the Diocese of Oradea. This charitable organization is a member of the Caritas Confederation based in Bucharest and is actively engaged in social and healthcare activities within our research area. The case study synthesizes data from the organization's reports and interviews conducted with staff members.

Caritas Catolica was established in 1990, following the fall of the communist regime, as one of the first officially registered and state-recognized organizations. Its motto, "a helping hand for those in need," has guided its mission since its inception. The organization operates under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church and is a key actor in providing dignified care and support for the elderly in the region (Caritas Catolica, 2024).

Caritas Catolica operates four residential care homes for the elderly, two social kitchens, and seven home care centers. In addition to these institutional forms of care, the organization also provides healthcare services and social assistance. Its target groups include large families, elderly individuals with health problems, living alone, people with disabilities, Roma communities, and the homeless. Caritas Catolica Oradea is active in ten localities across three counties (Satu Mare, Bihor, and Sălaj).

The residential care homes provide comprehensive services for elderly residents, including accommodation, daily meals, personal hygiene assistance, laundry, cleaning, recreational activities, and opportunities for religious practice. The social kitchens ensure the provision of hot meals to registered elderly and vulnerable individuals, with delivery available for those with limited mobility. The home care centers offer medical and nursing care for patients in their own homes, currently serving hundreds of individuals across the region.

Funding for these services is typically shared between Caritas Catolica and local municipalities. The activities of the organization are supported primarily by the Roman Catholic Church, with local governments and the state acting as partners. Through this extensive network, Caritas Catolica plays a crucial role in addressing the social and healthcare needs of marginalized and vulnerable populations in the region (Caritas Catolica, 2024).

The organization allocates 45% of its budget to the maintenance of residential care homes for the elderly, 15% to social meal provision, 5% to home care services, and 9% to social assistance, while 26% is devoted to transportation, storage, and other operational costs. Regarding the sources of the annual budget, 51% comes from domestic sources and donations, 34% from foreign support, 11% from project funding, and only 4% from state subsidies(Caritas Catolica, 2023).

The paper provides a detailed account only of the services that are present within the micro-region under scrutiny.

In this region, residential institutional care is provided by two nursing homes operated by Caritas Catolica: Saint Anthony and Saint Margaret, both located in Marghita. Together, these facilities can accommodate up to 40 individuals. The Saint Margaret Home primarily serves individuals requiring specialized care. Elderly residents typically live in rooms designed for two or three people, each equipped with a private bathroom. In addition to receiving care, residents regularly participate in recreational and social activities, as well as religious programs.

Another significant service is home nursing care. There are three centers operating in the area: in Marghita, Sălacea, and Săcuieni. Home nursing care provides assistance to elderly individuals suffering from acute or chronic illnesses. These people receive both professional healthcare and basic care services. The costs are covered by the Bihor County Health Insurance Fund for up to 90 days per year, provided the individual has a specialist's referral. If the service is required for a longer period, or if the person in question does not have health insurance, the fee is calculated based on income. The home care centers are staffed by social workers and nurses with healthcare qualifications. Social workers also assist elderly people with advocacy and administrative matters. Carers provide regular monthly care to 30–40 individuals, whose ages range from 70 to 94 years (Tóth, 2022).

Social meal provision is also among the services offered. This service is also based in Marghita, where meals are prepared not only for the residents of the nursing homes but also for social beneficiaries; each day, 40 portions of lunch are distributed to those in need. Some of these meals are delivered to the homes of recipients who are homebound.

The most significant strength of Caritas Catolica lies in its continuity, as it has been providing services for 34 years. The organization is well known among those in need, and local governments support it to the extent they can afford. At the same time, the figures clearly indicate the limited capacity of the service network: despite being the most prominent provider in the region, Caritas Catolica manages to serve only a few dozen individuals at a time.

Based on the interviews, it is clear that service capacity falls far short of demand, as evidenced by lengthy waiting lists and the high number of daily requests, both of which underscore the necessity of expanding these services. At present, however, such expansion is primarily hindered by a lack of financial resources. This situation further highlights that supporting civil society organizations is crucial for future social security. The services operating within the micro-region are focused on providing basic care; specialized forms of care are scarcely present. Professionals working within what is perceived as a bureaucratic system are underpaid, overburdened, and face chronic resource shortages. Among actors in elderly policy, civil society organizations are the primary stakeholders, while the state plays only a secondary role. This results in persistent uncertainty and deficiencies in service provision (Gál - Pásztor, 2021).

Conclusions

In Érmellék, demographic trends and the challenges of population ageing are particularly pronounced, bringing issues related to the silver economy and active ageing to the forefront. The ageing population in the region presents significant challenges for local communities. Romania's national strategy targeting older people establishes a strategic framework for addressing these problems, aiming to offer sustainable solutions for the growing elderly population, with particular emphasis on active ageing and the social integration of older adults.

However, opportunities for active ageing in Érmellék remain limited, as local interventions are still insufficient to address the most pressing issues, such as poverty, loneliness, and the outmigration of young people. In this context, the role of local social services and community support is of critical importance, as the state social welfare system is unable to fully meet the needs of the elderly. Civil society organizations - especially those maintained by religious and community actors - play a significant role in service provision, compensating for gaps left by the state.

Nonetheless, cooperation between civil organizations and local governments continues to face difficulties. While civil organizations strive to cover the spectrum of services for the elderly, the bureaucratic system often hinders the effective operation of these services. As a result, the challenges of demographic decline and ageing in Érmellék are compounded by structural limitations in both public and civil support systems, making the development of the silver economy and the promotion of active ageing particularly complex in this rural context.

For Érmellék and other similarly disadvantaged regions, it would be essential to establish a long-term, sustainable network that would enable civil society organizations, as service providers, to act as partners in the development and operation of the social care system. Collaboration aligned with strategic objectives would not only be suitable for meeting local needs, but would also promote more active participation of elderly communities in social life. Due to the outmigration of young people and high poverty rates, the composition of local communities is changing dramatically, making it increasingly necessary to strengthen local social support systems. The integration of the elderly and the Roma community should also receive special attention in future interventions.

At the local level, including Érmellék, the civil sector - especially local community and faith-based organizations - can complement state services and adapt to the specific needs of older residents. Public policies that focus on the social integration of the elderly and their reintegration into the workforce would further contribute to the growth of the silver economy. Looking ahead, effective cooperation between state and civil organizations will be essential for establishing sustainable and well-functioning silver economy models in rural areas. International best practices highlight that regional action plans, support for social enterprises, and targeted training initiatives are effective tools for strengthening the silver economy and improving the quality of life for older adults in rural communities. There are indeed examples of good practice in Érmellék, as also highlighted by experts in the interviews; however, these are not part of a consciously directed national strategic vision, but rather the fortunate outcome of local initiatives that have developed effective models and survival strategies. The situation in Érmellék thus appears to confirm the broader Romanian context reflected in the literature regarding the relationship between elderly care and the civil sector: it is local adaptation and grassroots innovation, rather than coordinated national policy, that drive successful responses in this field (see Chirugu, 2023).

A key finding of the case study is that Caritas Catolica goes beyond the traditional understanding of the civil sector: it not only provides care, but also organizes communities, advocates for interests, and innovates. In doing so, it actively embodies multiple elements of the silver economy. On the one hand, it ensures economic participation by creating new jobs, on the other hand it fosters the social engagement of older adults through community, religious, and leisure programs, as well as through cultural and spiritual dimensions such as supporting religious life as a means of upholding dignity and community integration in old age. In rural areas, where infrastructure is underdeveloped, outmigration is high, and labor market opportunities are limited, civil society organizations often represent the only stable institutional presence. The case of Caritas Catolica clearly demonstrates that the intersection of the silver economy and civil society can be one of the most important guarantors of quality of life. The stability, quality, and recognition of the services offered by the organization among beneficiaries indicate that the civil sector is capable of operating a sustainable and reliable care system even where the state or market cannot. The findings of the case study reveal that there is a need to develop networks to enable service expansion that better meets the needs of older people and improves their quality of life.

MEASURE TO REDUCE ROMANIA'S EXTERNAL IMBALANCE. LESSONS FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF POLAND AND HUNGARY

Cătălin Drăgoi
Researcher, PhD, „Victor Slăvescu" Center for Financial and Monetary Research, Romanian Academy, Bucharest

Abstract: In the context of globalization and economic interdependencies, Romania's current account is an important indicator of the country's economic health. From a relative balance in the years leading up to 2014, Romania's current account has deteriorated significantly over the last ten years, reaching considerable deficits, especially after 2020, the year of the COVID pandemic. This evolution is closely linked to trends in the trade balance (exports and imports), but also to the structure of financing sources, especially foreign direct and portfolio investments. Because the situation has become increasingly difficult to manage from year to year, it is necessary to take measures, a mix of fiscal, monetary, exchange rate, investment policies, etc., to gradually reduce this imbalance. For this, we will study how two other Eastern European countries, with which Romania is often compared, have reacted at different times to correct external imbalances, especially the trade balance imbalance.

Keywords*: current account; external imbalances; economic evolution; policy mix; external sustainability*

Integrarea Poloniei în Uniunea Europeană în 2004 a oferit un impuls comerțului și investițiilor, ceea ce a facilitat o reducere a deficitului de cont curent prin îmbunătățirea performanței la export și permițând accesul la piețe mai mari. Mediul economic a facilitat o reducere a deficitului de cont curent, deoarece exporturile au crescut semnificativ. Cu toate acestea, creșterea inflației și efectele instabilității economice globale, au afectat mediul economic intern.

Abordarea guvernului a inclus o combinație de politici fiscale care au ca scop stabilizarea datoriei publice și reducerea deficitului bugetar, alături de măsuri monetare pentru combaterea inflației. Politicile pentru stimularea ofertei au fost prioritizate pentru a îmbunătăți productivitatea și a reduce costurile de producție, crescând competitivitatea exporturilor. Guvernul a fost criticat pentru politicile adoptate, pentru că acordau prioritate măsurilor pe termen scurt față de strategiile cuprinzătoare pe termen lung. În ciuda progreselor în reducerea deficitului de cont curent, Polonia se confrunta cu probleme structurale care diminuează stabilitatea economică.

Reducerea deficitului de cont curent in Polonia a fost influențată de o serie de politici economice și reforme structurale de-a lungul anilor. Politicile implementate au variat în funcție de domeniul de aplicare, acordând importanță competitivității economiei, abordând totodată preocupările fiscale largi.

Politicile fiscale au fost ajustate pentru a se alinia la condițiile economice și la obiectivele mai largi de reducere a deficitului de cont curent. Guvernul polonez a încercat să mențină un echilibru între susținerea creșterii economice și menținerea disciplinei fiscale. În urma pandemiei, politicile fiscale au vizat evitarea unei poziții expansioniste pentru a preveni supraîncălzirea economiei, care este o condiție pentru creșterea durabilă și menținerea unui echilibru favorabil de cont curent.

Implementarea politicilor pentru stimularea ofertei a fost menite să sporească productivitatea și competitivitatea în economie au inclus eforturi de îmbunătățire a condițiilor de pe piața muncii și de stimulare a investițiilor. Prin crearea unui mediu favorabil pentru afaceri, guvernul polonez și-a propus să susțină exporturile, contribuind astfel la o poziție mai bună a contului curent. Cu toate acestea, au rămas anumite probleme, printre care creșterea prețurilor la energie și presiuni inflaționiste, care au necesitat ajustări ale politicilor.

Guvernul polonez a adoptat diverse politici menite să reducă deficitul de cont curent, în special ca urmare a provocărilor economice generate de pandemia de coronavirus. Aceste politici s-au concentrat pe înăsprirea măsurilor fiscale și monetare, îmbunătățirea competitivității și gestionarea presiunilor inflaționiste.

Disciplina fiscală are ca scop de a crea spațiu fiscal pentru a aborda viitoarele șocuri economice și presiunile pe termen lung, cum ar fi lipsa forței de muncă, îmbătrânirea populației și costurile tranziției energetice.

Pentru a spori reziliența fiscală, Polonia a luat în considerare reforme care să contribuie la reducerea în continuare a deficitului, asigurând că finanțele disponibile guvernului sunt suficiente pentru a face față provocărilor neprevăzute.

Politica monetară a avut un rol important în gestionarea inflației și asigurarea stabilității macroeconomice. În urma creșterii prețurilor la energie și a perturbărilor lanțului de aprovizionare, autoritățile poloneze au recunoscut necesitatea unei înăspriri suplimentare a politicii monetare pentru a combate presiunile inflaționiste. Au fost impuse rate mai mari ale dobânzilor pentru a crește costul împrumutului, reducând astfel consumul și cererea de import, ceea ce influențează pozitiv balanța contului curent.

Polonia s-a concentrat, și pe politici pentru a stimula competitivitatea economiei sale. Astfel de politici includ investiții în infrastructură, educație și tehnologie, care vizează îmbunătățirea eficienței și reducerea costurilor de producție. Acest lucru face mărfurile poloneze mai atractive pe piața internațională, promovând astfel exporturile și contribuind la rectificarea deficitului de cont curent.

La nivelul guvernului au existat negocieri cu privire la măsuri protecționiste, cum ar fi creșterea tarifelor la import. Aceste măsuri implică riscul unor represalii din partea partenerilor comerciali, ceea ce ar putea reduce exporturile poloneze. Astfel, deși protecționismul ar putea oferi o ușurare pe termen scurt pentru contul curent, este posibil să nu fie o strategie bună pe termen lung.

Eforturile de devalorizare a monedei și de reducere a consumului intern au avut ca scop îmbunătățirea acestei balanțe comerciale prin ieftinirea exporturilor și scumpirea importurilor. Cu toate acestea, eficacitatea acestor măsuri a fost împiedicată de complexitatea continuă a mediului economic global, în special după războiul din Ucraina, care a creat incertitudine și a afectat lanțurile de aprovizionare.

Economia Poloniei a cunoscut o creștere semnificativă a inflației, prețurile la energie și la alimente fiind principalele contribuții. Această presiune inflaționistă a complicat capacitatea guvernului de a menține exporturile competitive, gestionând în același timp cererea internă. În special, în ciuda acestor tendințe inflaționiste, PIB-ul țării pe cap de locuitor a continuat să crească, Polonia fiind una din țările din Europa de est cu cea mai mare creștere economică. Cu toate acestea, inflația ridicată prezintă riscuri la nivelul consumatorilor, a companiilor dar și pentru stabilitatea economică generală.

Economia poloneză are un sector informal semnificativ, de aproximativ 20,% din totalul locurilor de muncă (în 2022). Această economie subterană limitează eficacitatea măsurilor de politică care vizează reducerea deficitului de cont curent și ar putea afecta stabilitatea economică pe termen lung.

Problemele legate de schimbările din sistemul fiscal au creat incertitudine pentru investițiile străine, complicând și mai mult eforturile de realizare a unei strategii economice echilibrate.

Orientarea către politicile de ofertă, cum ar fi privatizarea și dereglementarea, a urmărit să sporească competitivitatea economiei și să facă exporturile mai atractive. Cu toate acestea, aceste măsuri necesită mult timp pentru a da rezultate.

Politicile bugetare ale guvernului s-au caracterizat prin scheme de cheltuieli care răspund în primul rând la crize, mai degrabă decât prin implementarea unor soluții cuprinzătoare, pe termen lung.

În ciuda creșterii economice susținute și a progresului în digitalizare a Poloniei în ultimi ani, aceasta încă se luptă să țină pasul cu țările dezvoltate din Uniunea Europeană. Adoptarea lentă a tehnologiei de către antreprenorii polonezi, împreună cu reticența de a investi în formarea forței de muncă, limitează potențialul de îmbunătățire a productivității și rezistența economică la șocurile externe. Este posibil ca factorii de decizie să fie nevoiți să acorde prioritate intervențiilor care facilitează transformarea digitală pentru a consolida stabilitatea pe termen lung a economiei.

Tranziția Ungariei la economia de piață, începută ca și în cazul României după anul 1989, a pregătit terenul pentru schimbări în economia Ungariei, conducând la necesitatea unor politici pentru a aborda problemele fiscale care au apărut la începutul anilor 2000, caracterizate de cheltuieli publice nesustenabile și deficite bugetare în creștere. Pe măsură ce Ungaria se confrunta cu diferite dezechilibre economice, deficitul de cont curent a atins niveluri crescute, a devenit un subiect important pentru factorii de decizie care urmăreau să stabilizeze economia și să crească competitivitatea acesteia.

Pentru a atenua deficitul de cont curent, Ungaria a adoptat măsuri care au inclus reforme structurale, management fiscal, ajustări ale politicii monetare și eforturi de a atrage investiții străine directe cât mai mari. Măsurile au vizat îmbunătățirea planificării bugetare, restructurarea întreprinderilor de stat și menținerea unui curs de schimb flexibil pentru a face față șocurilor externe. Guvernul a acordat prioritate disciplinei fiscale cu obiective de reducere a deficitului, promovând în același timp investițiile străine directe pentru a crește capacitatea de export și a stimula creșterea economică în perioadele dificile.

Aceste măsuri au vizat în mod colectiv restabilirea stabilității economice, îmbunătățirea balanței contului curent și creșterea durabilă. Acest echilibrul între atingerea obiectivelor fiscale, creșterea competitivității și stabilitatea socială a fost o preocupare permanentă pentru factorii de decizie din Ungaria.

Începutul anilor 2000 a fost caracterizat de o creștere relativ dinamică a PIB-ului. Disparitățile economice au început să apară, în special după 2001–2002, culminând cu o criză bugetară la mijlocul anilor 2000. Factorii care au contribuit la această criză au inclus creșteri excesive ale salariilor pre-electorale și promisiuni electorale costisitoare făcute de guvernul de atunci, care au dus la o creștere semnificativă a cheltuielilor publice. Până în 2006, salariile reale din Ungaria nu numai că au revenit la nivelurile de dinainte de tranziție, dar le-au depășit cu 24%, ceea ce indică o creștere economică reală; cu toate acestea, aceasta a fost cuplată cu un deficit bugetar în creștere de aproximativ 8% din PIB și o valoare a datoriei publice de 80% din PIB.

Ca răspuns la problemele fiscale tot mai mari, guvernul ungar a abordat problemele care afectează contul curent. Aceasta a inclus reducerea investițiilor publice. Au fost adoptate măsuri pentru îmbunătățirea nivelului de trai, urmărind simultan o reducere a deficitului bugetar la 3% din PIB în câțiva ani, cu ținte specifice de deficit stabilite pentru anii următori Disciplina fiscală și reformele orientate spre piață au devenit esențiale în efortul de stabilizare a economiei și de reducere a deficitului de cont curent, împreună cu efortul de a promova un mediu economic rezilient la provocările globale și a disparităților interne.

Au fost introduse reforme structurale menite să îmbunătățească planificarea și execuția bugetului pentru a plasa diferite niveluri de guvernare pe o bază financiară solidă. Aceste reforme au inclus și măsuri de restructurare a întreprinderilor de stat, inclusiv a băncilor, care au contribuit la stabilizarea finanțelor publice și la creșterea competitivității economice generale.

În momentul actual guvernul a acordat prioritate stabilității fiscale printr-un angajament de a îndeplini țintele fiscale stabilite pentru 2024 și 2025, vizând deficite de 4,5%, respectiv 3,7% din PIB. Acest angajament a venit ca urmare a presiunilor semnificative asupra cheltuielilor și a costurilor ridicate ale împrumuturilor.

Autoritățile au menținut un regim de curs de schimb flexibil, care a fost important pentru gestionarea șocurilor externe și pentru facilitarea ajustărilor la presiunile atât interne, cât și internaționale. Această strategie a fost însoțită de politici macroprudențiale care au consolidat reziliența sectorului financiar, permițându-i să facă față provocărilor prezentate de creșterea prețurilor la energie și de cererea ridicată de import.

Eforturile de atragere a investițiilor străine directe au jucat un rol semnificativ în creșterea capacității de export, contribuind astfel la îmbunătățirea balanței contului curent. Guvernul a utilizat subvențiile de stat în timpul pandemiei de coronavirus pentru a compensa lipsa fondurilor UE și a încuraja fluxurile de investiții străine directe.

Abordarea Ungariei în ceea ce privește gestionarea deficitului de cont curent a implicat o combinație de politici direcționate, reforme structurale și ajustări macroeconomice care au vizat creșterea competitivității economice și stimularea creșterii economice.

Evaluările creșterii pe termen mediu a Ungariei indică faptul că investițiile recente în capitalul uman, alături de îmbunătățiri ale eficienței productive, ar putea susține creșterea în următorii ani. Deși progresul lent anterior în ceea ce privește stabilizarea și reformele structurale au împiedicat creșterea, investițiile străine directe și îmbunătățirea capitalului uman oferă perspective de creștere economică.

Modernizarea tehnologiei prin deschiderea către comerț și investiții au permis Ungariei să reducă decalajul tehnologic cu economiile mai dezvoltate.

Politicile pentru stimularea ofertei au jucat un rol crucial în creșterea competitivității economiei Ungariei. Prin promovarea privatizării și a dereglementării, guvernul a urmărit creșterea eficienței, reducerea costurilor de producție și, îmbunătățirea atractivității exporturilor.

Un alt aspect al strategiei Ungariei a implicat gestionarea salariilor pentru a susține competitivitatea. Politicile care au inclus reducerea salariilor din sectorul public au vizat scăderea costurilor de producție, deși această abordare riscă să reducă cererea agregată și să ducă potențial la deflație. Guvernul a acordat prioritate programelor de muncă publică față de schemele tradiționale de șomaj, contribuind la o creștere semnificativă a ratei de ocupare forței de muncă, alături de o reducere a ratei șomajului în aceeași perioadă.

Intervențiile imediate în timpul crizelor, cum ar fi furnizarea extinsă de lichidități în timpul pandemiei de COVID-19, pot avea efecte negative pe termen lung. Deși aceste măsuri au scopuri specifice în perioada de criză, ele generează efecte negative în faza de redresare post-pandemică.

Creșterea lichidității a necesitat în cele din urmă ajustări, cum ar fi creșterea ratelor dobânzilor și gestionarea strictă a lichidității pentru a atenua presiunile speculative asupra monedei.

Ungaria se confruntă cu probleme structurale care îi complică peisajul economic. Deficitul de cont curent rămâne un punct esențial pentru strategia economică, iar orice ajustări ale politicilor fiscale sau monetare trebuie să ia în considerare echilibrul dintre creșterea internă, controlul inflației și competitivitatea internațională. Nerespectarea acestor probleme structurale ar putea crește vulnerabilitățile economice și ar diminua eforturile de stabilizare a economiei pe termen lung.

Concluzii

Polonia și Ungaria au avut un start mai bun ca România în tranziția către economia de piață, și acest lucru a făcut ca aderarea lor la Uniunea Europeană să se facă cu câțiva ani mai devreme, 2004 față de 2007 în cazul României. Acest lucru a făcut ca ele să servească drept model pentru România în tot ceea ce a însemnat reformele necesare pentru armonizarea cu legislația Uniunii Europene. Mai mult decât atât o parte din problemele economice și sociale pe care le-a întâmpinat România dea lungul timpului aveau un precedent in experiența acestor țări. De aceea putem considera ca o parte din măsurile adoptate de guvernele celor trei țări în încercarea de a diminua dezechilibrele externe ți în special deficitul de cont curent pot servi ca exemplu factorilor de decizie din România.

Măsuri din experiența Poloniei:

- politici fiscale care au ca scop stabilizarea datoriei publice și reducerea deficitului bugetar, alături de măsuri monetare pentru combaterea inflației.
- politicile pentru stimularea ofertei pentru a îmbunătăți productivitatea și a reduce costurile de producție, sporind în continuare competitivitatea exporturilor.
- politicile fiscale pentru a preveni supraîncălzirea economiei, care este o condiție pentru creșterea durabilă.
- crearea unui mediu favorabil pentru afaceri,
- înăspriri suplimentare a politicii monetare pentru a combate presiunile inflaționiste.
- impunerea unor rate mai mari ale dobânzilor pentru a crește costul împrumutului, reducând astfel consumul și cererea de import.
- investiții în infrastructură, educație și tehnologie, care vizează îmbunătățirea eficienței și reducerea costurilor de producție.
- devalorizarea monedei și de reducere a consumului intern au avut ca scop îmbunătățirea acestei balanțe comerciale prin ieftinirea exporturilor și scumpirea importurilor.
- disciplina fiscală concepută pentru a crea mai mult spațiu fiscal.
- înăsprirea fiscală a contribuit la stabilizarea economiei și la reducerea dependenței de finanțarea externă.

Măsuri din experiența Ungariei:

- promovarea privatizării și a dereglementării, pentru creșterea eficienței, reducerea costurilor de producție și, îmbunătățirea atractivității exporturilor.
- măsuri de restructurare a întreprinderilor de stat, inclusiv a băncilor.
- reducerea investițiilor publice pentru diminuarea cheltuielilor bugetare în anumite momente.
- promovarea investițiilor străine directe pentru a crește capacitatea de export și a stimula creșterea economică în perioadele dificile.
- menținerea un regim de curs de schimb flexibil
- gestionarea salariilor pentru a susține competitivitatea, reducerea salariilor din sectorul public au vizat scăderea costurilor de producție.
- acordat prioritate programelor de muncă publică față de schemele de șomaj, pentru creșterea ratei de ocupare forței de muncă, și reducere a ratei șomajului.
- subvențiile de stat în timpul pandemiei de coronavirus pentru a compensa lipsa fondurilor UE.

Ajustarea bugetară, corelată cu reforme și investiții structurale ar trebui să fie modalitățile de abordare a vulnerabilităților macroeconomice. Reducerea deficitului bugetar ar ajusta mai bine cererea la ofertă și ar limita deficitele interne și externe. Astfel, s-ar evita, de asemenea, împovărarea inutilă a altor instrumente de politică macroeconomică și s-ar reduce costul ajustării pe termen mediu. Implementarea integrală a multor reforme (cum ar fi cele privind impozitarea și pensiile) și investiții îndreptate către creșterea productivității și a exporturilor, precum și îmbunătățirea competitivității prin costuri și prin alte elemente decât costurile, precum și prin respectarea obiectivelor bugetare prevăzute în cadrul procedurii de deficit excesiv ar avea un rol important în micșorarea deficitului extern (Comisia Europeană, 2023).

Considerăm că sunt necesare investiții îndeosebi în sectoarele tradables pentru a susține dezvoltarea producției de bunuri pentru export cu valoare adăugată ridicată și grad înalt de prelucrare. De asemenea, sunt necesare investiții în sectoarele în care România deține avantaje comparative (sectorul agricol, energetic, de turism), precum și pentru creșterea calificării forței de muncă.

O inflație în scădere și rate de dobândă reale pozitive la depozite ar stimula economisirea internă, cu efect favorabil asupra dezechilibrului extern.

O direcție de investiții care să susțină buna desfășurare a economiei în general și a comerțului exterior, în particular, ar fi lanțurile de producție și aprovizionare.

România trebuie sa capitalizeze mai bine condițiile naturale (resursele) de care dispune și să extragă beneficii cât mai multe din fondurile europene pe care le are la dispoziție.

Pentru ameliorarea deficitului extern o soluție ar fi creșterea competitivității reale prin micșorarea prețurilor interne și îmbunătățirea calității bunurilor și serviciilor pentru export. Aceasta se poate obține prin îmbunătățiri tehnologice, facilitate de investiții.

TAXING THE HOUSEHOLD CAPITAL INCOME IN EUROPEAN UNION. IMMOVABLE PROPERTY VS FINANCIAL ASSETS

Nicoleta Mihăilă
3rd Degree Scientific Researcher III, PhD, „Victor Slăvescu" Center for Financial and Monetary Research, Romanian Academy, Bucharest

Abstract: The scope of the paper is to analyze the taxation of household capital income in European Union, namely the income from immovable property vs financial assets. We refer more precisely to owner-occupied housing vs. rented housing, on the one hand, and the financial assets of the household (deposits, bank accounts, pension funds) on the other. We use an empirical and descriptive methodology, by using bibliographic references from specialized literature and statistical data provided by the institutions authorized in this regard (Eurostat, OECD, National Bank of Romania).

Keywords: household; capital income taxation; property; financial assets; the user cost of housing (UCOH)

1. Introduction

Capital taxation, including taxation of capital income and stocks, could play an important role in increasing revenue efficiency and making the tax system fairer. Recent international tax developments in the area of automatic exchange of information and administrative cooperation have enhanced the ability of Member States to collect taxes on mobile tax bases such as capital income.

Capital taxes include taxes on capital income from corporations, households and the self-employed, as well as taxes on capital stocks (recurrent property taxes, inheritance taxes) or on their transactions. Specifically, household capital means the capital stock and capital income. The capital stock refers to property taxation and property transfer taxation, and capital income refers to the taxation of income resulting from capital holdings (income from rentals, financial assets or private pension funds) and the taxation of income resulting from the transfer of capital property (capital gains).

In this paper, we consider two of the components of household capital, namely, immovable property and financial assets. In this regard, we carry out a theoretical approach to the revenues from their taxation (context in which we approach the user cost of housing (UCOH) indicator, analyzed by the European Commission, the statistical data coming from the House taxation database, for the year 2023), the methodology used being descriptive, by calling on bibliographical references from international specialized literature, as well as statistical data for the member states of the European Union, for the years 2022/2023 (depending on the availability of data) provided by the European Commission (Data on Taxation Trends, based on Eurostat data, Housing Taxation Database 1995-2023 v6.0), OECD and the National Bank of Romania.

2. Theoretical analysis on the taxation of household capital income in European Union countries

Taxing household capital income influences inequality/makes the tax system more redistributive. In general, the distribution of capital income is much more unequal than that of labour income, with capital income inequality being due to differences in (accumulated) labour and savings income, as well as in inherited wealth. Taxing household capital stocks (wealth) can also make the tax system more efficient and help address inequality issues. In addition to income or consumption inequality, wealth inequality, inequality of opportunity and the transmission of inequality between generations are important. According to the European Commission, studies on wealth inequality have found that wealth is about twice as concentrated as income, and that wealth concentration is linked to income concentration, but also to indebtedness and the life cycle.

The composition of the asset portfolio varies greatly by wealth size: real estate accounts for the largest share of gross wealth for most of the distribution, while financial assets are particularly important at the top of the distribution. Taxing inheritances and gifts helps to reduce wealth inequality and increase equality of opportunity in society. At the same time, these taxes are considered to be among the least distortive taxes, as they have a small effect on donor incentives and can be targeted at high-income earners. Moreover, in the context of an aging population and an overall increase in wealth, the value of future inheritances is increasing, which creates an impetus to reconsider inheritance taxes as a potentially more important source of revenue and a way to help address inequality issues.

Taxation of household capital income has an impact on household disposable income (especially during periods of unemployment or retirement), on household investment decisions, namely households' decisions on how much and when to invest and in which assets to invest. In addition, there is a need to reconsider taxation of household capital as a source of income. Given the mobility of international capital flows, taxes on capital have long been considered to be relatively more distortive sources of income, as they would lead to major behavioural changes (and could be easily avoided).

As a result, many Member States rely little on taxation of household capital as a revenue-raising tool. Many countries tax dividends, interest and capital gains at a flat and lower rate than labour income, as keeping final taxes withheld at source prevents tax avoidance behaviour. However, this argument may become less relevant given recent developments in the area of automatic exchange of information and anti-abuse measures, which have increased the ability of Member States to collect taxes from mobile tax bases. This makes capital taxation more attractive as a source of revenue and offers the opportunity to design it in a way that fosters inclusive growth.

Given the lower tax rate on capital income, a dual income taxation system grants preferential tax treatment to capital income compared to labour income. This may raise questions of fairness, as high-income households tend to earn higher capital income than low-income households. Furthermore, a dual income taxation system does not always solve the measurement problems raised by a comprehensive tax approach (for exemple, measuring imputed rent).

The tax treatment of households' capital income differs considerably across countries (as shown in Table 1). Sweden and Finland apply a dual income tax system (an income tax system that uses two different tax rates for labour and capital, for example, a proportional rate for capital and a progressive rate for labour); most other Member States apply a mixed tax approach, combining the features of a comprehensive and dual income tax system by taxing some assets inside and others outside the personal income tax system.

Within a country, the tax treatment of household capital income also differs depending on the asset (real estate, financial assets, private pensions). While in most Member States rental income and private pension income are taxed under the personal income tax system, income from financial assets is taxed separately in most countries. Also, to encourage investment, many Member States use tax expenditures (tax benefits/facilities) to favour certain types of capital income, tax expenditures that include exemptions, deductions, credits and reduced rates for certain groups of taxpayers or specific activities.

2.1. Revenue from taxation of immovable property

When analyzing the tax treatment of real estate, a distinction must be made between owner-occupied housing and rented housing. Most Member States tax rental income under the income tax system, although the tax treatment is country-specific. Only Greece, Croatia, the Netherlands, Slovenia, Romania, Finland and Sweden tax rental income separately from other personal income, at a flat rate. Italy, Latvia, Malta and Poland have a dual system, where the taxpayer can choose whether rental income is taxed separately at a flat rate (without deductions) or calculated together with other income and taxed at the personal income tax rates. Lithuania allows the taxpayer to choose a flat rate for rental income not exceeding a certain threshold. The tax base and tax deductions also differ from country to country.

Almost all Member States use the rental income received as the tax base. Belgium uses (outdated) cadastral values as a proxy for the real market values of rental properties, while the Netherlands calculates taxable rental income on the basis of the value of the assets. Only thirteen Member States grant a full tax deduction for expenses related to the rental activity (Czech Republic, Denmark, Germany, Croatia, Cyprus, Latvia, Luxembourg, Hungary, Austria, Poland, Slovenia, Slovakia, United Kingdom). Other Member States cap the deductions of expenses or impose a fixed tax deduction (Bulgaria, Estonia, Ireland, Greece, Spain, France, Italy, Malta, the Netherlands, Romania and Sweden).

Owner-occupied housing is usually subject to the same property taxes, both transfer and recurrent, as rented housing. Although there is a significant degree of variation between Member States, property taxes are still widely used in many Member States.

For owner-occupiers, residential property is a way to maintain their standard of living after retirement; most Member States do not tax the capital aspect of owner-occupied housing and do not include imputed rent in the income tax base. Imputed rent is only taxed in the Netherlands, although it is below the corresponding market rental value. However, the exemption from taxation of imputed rent entails a significant tax cost. Recurrent property taxes can be used to partially compensate for the absence of taxation of imputed rent.

We discuss the "user cost of housing (UCOH)" indicator, expressed as a share of the value of the home, which shows the impact of taxation on the housing investment decision and measures the marginal cost of capital for owner-occupied housing, respectively the calculation of the internal rate of return of the housing investment decision.

The User cost of owner-occupied housing indicator is a synthetic indicator of the distortions exerted by the tax system on households' housing investment choices. The UCOH indicator measures the annual tax-adjusted cost of owning and operating the main residence as a percentage of the home value. The indicator is related to investments in new housing, financed mainly by mortgage debt.

The elements taken into account in its calculation are property taxes, transfer taxes, capital gains taxes, rental taxation and mortgage interest tax exemptions, which represent fiscal components, and non-fiscal ones are represented by maximum loan-to-value ratios, maximum loan duration, long-term government bond interest rates, house prices and other relevant indicators.

Recurrent property taxes contribute to the largest share of tax payments, although for some countries and over the life of the investment, the contribution of transaction taxes is higher than that of recurrent taxes (for Croatia, Italy, Luxembourg, Hungary and Romania).

According to the European Commission (House taxation database), in the period 2022-2023, the UCOH indicator fluctuated in most EU countries; there are states where it decreased in 2023 compared to 2022, for example Hungary, which recorded a decrease of 2.17 pp compared to the previous year, followed by Ireland, Greece. Finland, Germany, Denmark had increases. In 2023, the cost of using housing varied between less than 1% (Lithuania, Hungary, Estonia) and approximately 8% (Italy, Cyprus), most of the values being between 0.03 and 5.71%. It should be noted that for the negative values of the UCOH non-tax components are responsible, and for the increasing values, property and transfer taxes predominate.

The data show that the UCOH indicator has a downward trend, which is particularly pronounced for some countries. However, after the crisis years, Ireland, Greece, Spain and Portugal have seen an increase (a stabilisation in the case of Spain) in the cost of ownership of housing. This is also the case in Croatia and Latvia, where purchasing a house remains relatively more expensive than in other countries, possibly due to national limitations and relatively high property taxes. Other countries have been less affected by this general downward trend and show a relatively stable cost of ownership (Czechia, Cyprus, Hungary, Slovenia, Slovakia) or show a trend linked to specific national conditions (Romania).

Overall, the use of mortgage tax relief for new loans has decreased, while recurrent property taxes have increased, indicating a more growth-friendly tax structure. However, transfer taxes are still substantial in many Member States.

Overall, changes in the user cost of housing may be due to changes in macroeconomic conditions, the real estate market and related fiscal policies, with the evolution of the contributions of different fiscal elements being reflected in some reforms targeting those components.

Although home ownership is usually taxed either annually or at points in time related to the sale or purchase of property, many countries have specific tax mechanisms that aim to subsidise home ownership and encourage indebtedness, but which undermine affordability over time. Homes are subject to multiple taxes, including property transfer taxes, property taxes (which include recurring property taxes and wealth taxes), capital gains taxes and income taxes.

In addition, there are countries that support home ownership through specific mechanisms, namely tax reductions on mortgage interest payments, tax exemptions on capital gains from main residences and preferential tax treatment for main residences. These can be supplemented by other instruments, such as grants and support for preventing foreclosures. Most EU countries have some form of real estate transaction tax, namely transaction taxes, which are levied when a property changes hands; these are generally paid by the new owner and their taxable base is usually the purchase price. Newly built residential properties are usually exempt from transfer tax but are subject to value added tax (VAT), sometimes at a reduced rate. This VAT is sometimes interpreted as an approximation of the VAT that would otherwise apply to the flow of real estate services over time, namely imputed rents. In 2023, 22 Member States had real estate transfer taxes, with rates ranging from 0.1% in BG to 7% in LU, five Member States did not (Czech Republic, Estonia, Lithuania, Romania, Slovakia).

Recurrent taxes on residential properties can be an efficient source of taxation and reduce speculative demand. As they apply to a stable tax base, they are difficult to avoid. Although recurrent property taxation is implemented in most EU countries, it is not applied in six Member States (Cyprus, Estonia, Croatia, Hungary, Italy, Malta). Different rates may apply to the main residence and other types of property, such as secondary residences or homes held as investment assets. Recurrent property taxes usually represent a large share of property taxes and a major source of revenue for local governments.

It is worth noting that tax revenues have not increased in line with house prices, some factors being the "visibility" of residential property taxes, the valuation and updating of the relevant tax base being often controversial, and given that residential taxes are mostly paid to local authorities, an increase may require balancing revenues at different levels of government. Furthermore, property taxes can be perceived as unfair, as they are not linked to the taxpayer's current ability to pay, making them unpopular.

In addition to recurrent property taxes, houses may be subject to wealth taxes (Spain, France, Netherlands), although the main residence generally benefits from tax breaks. Other taxes on houses include capital gains taxes, inheritance taxes and income taxes.

Capital gains taxation applies to the accumulated increase in value at the time of sale. This can reduce the incentive to invest in houses for speculative purposes. However, since other forms of capital gains (such as gains from shares or investment funds) are usually taxed more heavily, housing investments can be relatively tax-friendly. This can lead to a diversion of investment funds from productive housing investments.

The tax treatment of capital gains from housing can differ depending on various criteria, such as the holding period and the type of investment (main residence vs. rental investment). Capital gains from a main residence are usually tax-exempt, which provides a greater advantage to wealthier households. EU/OECD policy recommendations suggest capping this exemption. In most countries, housing rents are subject to income tax, but taxation of imputed rents for owning a home is generally tax-exempt. Imputed rents of homeowners are taxed in the Netherlands, and a few Member States (Denmark, for example) have substitute taxation in the form of property taxes on the property owner.

The following table shows the tax components on homes in the EU in 2023.

Favourable tax treatment for home ownership "inflates" house prices and disproportionately benefits higher-income households. Tax policies on home ownership have developed since the 1980s, with tax breaks being the main policy instrument, and tax measures favouring home ownership reaching 1% of GDP in some Scandinavian countries.

Tax relief measures, such as exemptions from acquisition costs and mortgage interest deductions, encourage home purchases and increase borrowing, particularly in markets with limited housing supply. Some Member States apply mortgage interest exemptions to all mortgage loans, e.g. Estonia, Luxembourg and the Netherlands. In some Member States where the mortgage interest tax exemption has been abolished, the measure applies to mortgage loans taken out before the tax exemption was abolished (e.g. Lithuania and Portugal).

The mortgage interest tax exemption encourages debt take-up, potentially fuelling a credit-driven housing boom, increasing price volatility and potentially reducing home ownership among financially constrained households.

Support for home ownership across the EU increasingly relies on direct subsidies rather than public housing, with national approaches varying. As shown in Table 2, most EU countries offer mortgage subsidies or guarantees, with the exception of Portugal and Sweden, and almost all offer tax exemptions, with the exception of Germany and Lithuania. Estonia, Germany, Hungary, Latvia, Luxembourg and the Netherlands offer grants or subsidies for home buyers. In contrast, the mortgage interest tax exemption has been phased out across the EU and only a few Member States continue to grant it for new mortgages. This remains in force in countries such as Belgium, Czechia, Estonia, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Finland and Sweden, while in others, including Ireland, Spain, France, Lithuania and Portugal, it only applies to older mortgages taken out before the legislative changes. Support for home ownership can also take the form of loan subsidies, potentially contributing to rising house prices.

Several EU countries use housing subsidies for low-income households living in rented accommodation. The Joint Housing Subsidy Programme is aimed at low-income tenants who may not be able to afford to buy their own home or pay rent on the market, while the government does not have a sufficient stock of social housing to rent. The results of such programmes vary: in the Netherlands, support for tenants has shown positive effects, while in Finland, housing subsidies have not reduced rents. Taxes are also used to regulate vacant properties, which have become a significant challenge in the EU (estimates show that one in six properties in Europe is vacant), for example in countries such as Bulgaria, Romania, Portugal, Malta, Cyprus and Hungary. Identification of vacant properties can be achieved through various methods, including monitoring utility usage (significant and long-term decrease in water, electricity or gas consumption), real estate databases (properties listed for sale for a long time), postal service data (undelivered mail or request for primary redirection), visual inspection (excessive grass, accumulated mail) or community reporting.

We recall that EU countries have experienced a significant increase in house prices over the past three decades, a trend that has accelerated during the pandemic, making it difficult for younger generations to access the housing market, which has seen a decline in home ownership rates; housing is the main asset for most households, especially for the middle class, with owner-occupied households accounting for an average of 60% of middle-class wealth. However, high-income, wealthy and elderly households hold a disproportionate share of total housing wealth. According to Eurostat data, after stabilising at around 2.25% of GDP between 2014 and 2020, property tax revenues in the EU are set to fall to 1.85% of GDP in 2023, the lowest level since 2009. There are significant variations at the national level; for example, recurrent property taxes account for over 35% of local government revenues in France, while Malta does not levy any recurrent property tax and Estonia only taxes the value of land, not buildings.

Systems also differ in terms of the tax base. Some are based on an outdated cadastral value, such as the municipal property tax in Spain and Italy, while others use the current market value of the property as a reference (Ireland, the Netherlands). Property tax systems based on outdated cadastral values can affect inequality, allowing wealthier owners to benefit from lower assessed values, while honest homeowners pay a proportionally higher share of their property value (a case in Italy, where there is a greater mismatch between cadastral values and market prices for higher-value properties and for the wealthiest owners).

Therefore, property tax reforms should take into account the broader fiscal and non-fiscal context and the impact on households.

Property taxes are of increasing importance, given the pressure on governments to raise revenues, improve the functioning of housing markets and combat inequality. Regular updating of property values is therefore essential for the efficiency, fairness and revenue potential of recurrent property taxes; granting tax deferrals for certain taxpayers can help alleviate liquidity problems; tax incentives for energy-efficient home renovations could be better targeted to ensure they reach low-income households; phasing out or capping the mortgage interest exemption for owner-occupied homes would have a positive effect on progressivity, and would increase tax revenues; phasing out the mortgage interest exemption could also reduce indebtedness and incentives for excessive investment in owner-occupied homes.

2.2. Financial assets in EU Member States

If we consider the situation of financial assets of households in the European Union, in the period 2014-2024, according to Eurostat, they are reflected in 5 main types of instruments: currency and deposits; loans; shares and investment fund shares; insurance, pensions and standardized guarantees; and other receivables/payments. Small shares of total financial assets of households in the EU in 2024 were represented by 3 other types of assets, which are grouped as other instruments (with a collective share of 2.7% of total financial assets of households): monetary gold and special drawing rights (SDRs); debt securities; and financial derivatives and employee stock options. In particular, the category of monetary gold and SDRs was valued at zero for all EU countries for the household sector.

Of the total financial assets of EU households in 2024, investment fund shares accounted for the largest share (36.6%), followed by cash and deposits (30.6%) and insurance, pensions and standardised guarantees (26.9%). Smaller shares were recorded for other receivables (2.7%), other instruments (2.7%) and loans (0.4%).

Across EU countries, the main types of assets held by households in 2024 were generally investment fund shares, cash and deposits, and insurance, pensions and standardised guarantees. The cash and deposits category was the largest instrument in 13 EU countries. This category accounted for more than half of total financial assets in 2 EU countries: Cyprus (53.9%) and Poland (51.9%).

The investment fund shares category was the largest instrument in 11 EU countries. This category also accounted for more than half of total financial assets in 2 EU countries: Estonia (70.7%) and Finland (51.4%). The insurance, pension and standardised guarantees category was the largest instrument in 3 EU countries and accounted for more than half of total financial assets in the Netherlands (54.9%).

The value of households' financial assets as a percentage of GDP increased in most EU countries in 2024; between 2014 and 2024, they increased almost continuously, falling only in 2022 (by 4.5%). Their total value increased from 25.160 billion euros in 2014 to 39.482 billion euros in 2024 (an overall increase of 56.9%). Compared with 2023, the level, as a percentage of GDP, was 2.9 procentual points higher (pp) in 2024 than in the previous year. This ratio increased in most EU countries (as well as Norway), especially in Sweden (an increase of 21.7 pp). In contrast, the largest decrease was recorded in Malta, with 5.4 pp.

In the Assets structure, according to the Table above, in 2024, compared to 2014, cash and deposits increased by 52%, Investment fund shares and participations doubled (97% increase), Insurance, pensions and standardized guarantees, by 34%, Loans, by 24%, receivables doubled their value, while debt securities decreased slightly compared to the base year.

There are significant differences in the composition of the financial portfolio of households in Europe, with several structural factors that can explain these differences: the role of funded pensions in the general pension income system, the replacement rate of public pensions, the level of gross national income per capita, the level of financial education and the tax incentives available for investments.

According to EFAMA study (2024), one of the most important factors explaining the degree of participation in capital markets is the extent to which households save for retirement. Indeed, four of the five countries with the lowest share of deposits (Sweden, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and Norway) have the highest share of financial wealth held in pension savings, and households in the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and Sweden have the highest level of pension funds per capita, followed by Denmark, which has the lowest share of deposits, and Norway. The high level of pension fund saving in these countries reflects long-standing policy efforts to achieve high pension coverage through mandatory or quasi-mandatory arrangements.

If we consider the role of tax incentives available for investment, it is known that the tax element influences the way households allocate their financial wealth, an aspect reflected by several practices at European level:

- In Belgium, a favorable tax treatment granted to life insurance products led to a wide distribution of these products in the late 1980s. Around the same time, the government introduced 3rd pillar pension savings plans and encouraged the population to save in these products by implementing an attractive tax regime.
- In Croatia, the introduction of a 12% tax on savings account income has strengthened the outflow of deposits towards real estate investments.
- In Denmark, an equity savings account offering a special tax incentive scheme for equity instruments (including investment funds with more than 50% equity) is available up to a certain investment level and is tax-friendly compared to other investments.
- The concentration of life insurance savings in France can also be explained by the tax advantages enjoyed by these products (tax deductions and reduced rates after a certain holding period, inheritance tax advantages, etc.), which are more favourable than those applying to direct holdings of securities. To a lesser extent, share savings plans, known as "Plan d'Epargne en Action" (PEA), and employee savings plans also benefit from tax incentives after a certain holding period under certain conditions (taxation limited to social security contributions).
- In Germany, insurance contracts and investment funds benefit from tax incentives under the state-subsidized pension scheme "Riester" and the so-called "Vermögenswirksame Leistungen" (VL). This is a seven-year savings plan that allows employers to invest typically up to 480 euros per year in a savings contract of the employee's choice, for example an investment fund.
- In Italy, the government launched "PIR savings plans" (Piani Individuali di Risparmio) in 2017, which allowed asset managers to set up tax-exempt investment plans at no additional cost to individual investors. These PIR plans are exempt from the 26% substitute tax on capital gains and financial income (except for those included in the tax base for Italian personal income tax purposes and taxed at progressive rates). To be eligible, they must meet certain conditions.
- In Portugal, the increase in the share of deposits is due to the fact that, since 2015, long-term deposits have benefited from a reduction in the tax rate applicable to interest payments. While the "normal" tax rate is currently 28%, this is reduced to 22.4% if the deposit term is at least five years and to 11.2% if the term is more than eight years.
- In Spain, the authorities have reduced the maximum contributions to personal pension products in the 3rd pillar from EUR 8,000 per year to EUR 1,500. As a result, the total amount saved by households in such products was reduced by EUR 4.4 billion in 2021 and 2022.

A few points are worth noting:

- The average increase of 4.1 percentage points in the share of deposits in Europe between the end of 2019 and 2022 was mainly driven by the decline in stock markets and fixed income instruments in 2022, which had a strong impact on the share of pension funds in the Netherlands, Ireland, Denmark and the United Kingdom.
- In Belgium, Spain, Portugal and France, the above-average increase in the share of deposits was mainly due to the decrease in the share of life insurance, triggered by the negative impact of rising interest rates on the valuation of life insurance products.
- On the other hand, the share of deposits decreased in five countries. In Slovakia and Romania, this result reflected an increase in the share of pension funds, while this development mainly reflected an increase in the share of investment funds and debt securities in Greece and the Czech Republic, and an increase in investment funds and listed shares in Norway.

- Investment funds and listed shares were the two categories of capital market instruments that recorded an increase in their shares in households' financial wealth in the largest number of countries, 21 in total.

At the European Union level, policy measures have been taken to encourage households to invest in capital market instruments, namely, at the European level, in November 2021, the European Commission published three legislative proposals related to the 2020 Action Plan, which contain four different objectives:

- Creating a European Single Access Point (ESAP) to create a single point of access to public information on EU companies and EU investment products.
- Promoting long-term investments through European Long-Term Investment Funds (ELTIFs).
- Diversifying financing for companies by revising the Alternative Investment Fund Managers Directive (AIFMD).
- Strengthening market transparency by revising the Markets in Financial Instruments Regulation (MiFIR).

Subsequently, the European Commission published an Individual Investment Strategy (RIS) in May 2023, to update and modernise the relevant regulatory framework for individual investments.

3. Conclusions

The tax system plays an important role in the economic life of households, more precisely, in their income/disposable income, consumption, saving, investment decisions. The paper presents a theoretical analysis of the tax treatment of household capital income among EU Member States, namely income from housing and financial assets.

What should be noted is that these taxes do not bring significant revenues to the state budgets, but they are a source that can lead to increased revenue efficiency and make the tax system fairer.

Housing is usually one of the most important investments of households, and governments generally favor home ownership through the tax system. Given the wider benefits that home ownership generates for society, most Member States use the tax system to encourage home ownership, mainly by exempting imputed rent and/or reducing mortgage tax.

To ensure sustainable tax revenues in the future, possible strategies to increase capital tax revenues include promoting tax simplification, strengthening tax compliance (including by tackling tax avoidance) and strengthening international tax cooperation (European Commission, Annual report on taxation 2025). Consideration should therefore be given to:

- strengthening the role of recurrent property taxes, in particular by ensuring that they are levied on regularly updated property values, while reducing property transaction taxes to increase the efficiency of the property market and improve vertical and horizontal equity.
- phasing out or capping the mortgage interest exemption for owner-occupied housing, which would positively impact progressivity, tax revenues and housing affordability.
- improving the targeting of tax incentives for energy-efficient housing renovations to ensure that they reach low-income households. This could contribute to greater emission reductions and increase the fairness of tax incentive schemes.
- Strengthening reporting requirements, including third-party reporting, tax authority reporting and international exchanges of information for tax purposes are important to ensure the correct application of housing taxes.

Abstract: Decarbonizing the energy sector is a fundamental component in global efforts to combat climate change and an essential pillar of the European Union's climate objectives. The process involves drastically reducing greenhouse gas emissions by replacing fossil fuels with low- or zero-emission energy production technologies, such as renewable sources and nuclear energy. The massive integration of renewable energies, the modernization of energy infrastructure, the development of storage capacities, the electrification of key sectors of the economy and the adoption of coherent public policies are decisive elements for achieving climate neutrality. In parallel, emerging technologies such as green hydrogen, new generation nuclear reactors and carbon capture and storage solutions are accelerating the transition to a sustainable economy. Through strategic investments, international collaboration and innovation, the EU is strengthening its role as a global leader in decarbonisation and in building a secure, efficient and environmentally friendly energy system.

Keywords: sustainable development; climate neutrality; decarbonization; strategies; energy transition.

Climate change is one of the biggest challenges of our time, with significant impacts on the environment, economy and society. Climate change and ambitious CO2 reduction targets at global and European level call for a transition from fossil fuels to renewable sources. In a global context marked by increased greenhouse gas emissions, the study looks at various carbon reduction strategies, including renewable energy expansion, energy efficiency and technological innovations.

The European Union has set ambitious goals, committing to achieving climate neutrality by 2050. Decarbonizing the energy sector becomes an essential element of the transition to a sustainable development model. The process involves drastically reducing greenhouse gas emissions by adopting clean technologies, modernizing energy infrastructure and implementing effective public policies, providing a comprehensive perspective on the transformations needed to achieve European climate goals. By adopting a coherent and coordinated approach, we can ensure not only a sustainable energy economy, but also a safer and greener future for future generations.

The importance of decarbonizing the energy sector in the context of sustainable development

The concept of sustainable development involves meeting the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs. A central element of this concept is protecting the environment and maintaining global climate stability. The energy sector, responsible for a significant share of global greenhouse gas emissions, is a critical area in the transition to sustainability.

Decarbonizing energy is not only an ecological necessity, but also an economic opportunity. Investments in clean energy stimulate innovation, create new jobs and reduce dependence on finite resources, strengthening long-term economic stability.

Decarbonization is therefore a fundamental component of a green economy and a pillar of climate neutrality, as the situation is presented in Table 1

Table 1. Total CO_2 emissions and per capita emissions, 2024

Country	Total emissions ($MtCO_2$)	Emissions per capita (tCO_2 /capita)	Observations
Germany	675	8.1	industrialized , gas and coal use in transition
France	310	4.7	low emissions due to nuclear energy
Italy	330	5.5	dependence moderate natural gas
Spain	255	5.3	rapid growth of solar and wind energy
Poland	360	9.3	high dependence on coal

Key trends in decarbonizing the energy sector

1. Transition to renewable energy sources
- solar and wind power - have become increasingly economically accessible and offer a clean alternative to energy production;
- hydroelectric and geothermal energy - although widely used in certain regions, have geographical constraints that limit their expansion in all countries.
2. Energy efficiency - improving efficiency in the consumption and distribution of electricity can help reduce energy demand, thereby limiting the amount of energy produced from polluting sources.
3. Carbon capture and storage (CCS) - this technology allows the capture of CO2 emitted by power plants and its safe storage, underground/in other forms; the technology is still expensive and not widespread.
4. Modernizing energy infrastructure
- smart grids - optimize energy distribution and consumption, allowing for better integration of intermittent renewable sources - wind and solar panels;
- energy storage - batteries and other storage technologies are becoming increasingly important to balance supply and demand, especially during periods when renewable sources are not producing energy.
5. Electrification of other sectors - decarbonizing the energy sector can facilitate the electrification of transport and industry, which have traditionally relied on fossil fuels; if these sectors use clean electricity, their contribution to global emissions will decrease significantly.
6. Policies and regulations - governments play a key role by setting clear carbon reduction targets, renewable energy tariff schemes, research and development subsidies and carbon taxes to discourage the use of fossil fuels.
7. Technological advances
- green hydrogen - produced using renewable energy can become a solution for energy storage and can be used in sectors that are difficult to decarbonize;
- advanced nuclear energy - new generation nuclear reactors could provide a constant source of low-emission energy, although there are debates about their safety and costs.

Energy transition - definition, objectives and strategic directions

The energy transition refers to the transformation of the traditional energy system, based on fossil fuels, into a sustainable, efficient system based on clean energy sources. This transition involves changes in the energy infrastructure, the technologies used, consumer behavior and the legislative framework.

a. The objectives of the energy transition:

- reducing greenhouse gas emissions;
- increasing the share of renewable energies in the energy mix;
- increasing energy efficiency;
- ensuring universal access to sustainable energy;
- increasing the resilience of the energy system.

b. Key strategies of the energy transition

- development of renewable energies – expansion of wind, solar, hydroelectric and geothermal capacities;
- digitalization of the energy system – integration of IoT (Internet of Things) technologies in the energy, climate and green economy sectors because IoT: - reduces total energy consumption; - allows for real-time monitoring of emissions; - optimizes resources; - reduces losses in networks; - increases energy efficiency in industry and buildings; - facilitates smart electrification of transport;

IoT thus becomes a central digital tool for achieving the EU's 2030 and 2050 goals;

- energy storage – development of batteries and alternative solutions, such as green hydrogen;
- electrification of related sectors – transport, industry and buildings;
- implementation of efficient public policies – carbon taxes, support mechanisms for green energy:

Renewable energy sources – the engine of decarbonization

Renewable energy sources are the foundation of any decarbonisation strategy.

They allow for significant reductions in GHG emissions and contribute to sustainable development.

a. Solar and wind energy

Solar and wind energy have experienced rapid expansion due to falling technological costs and political support at European level.

Their intermittency remains a challenge, but storage technologies and smart grids offer effective solutions.

b. Hydroelectric and geothermal energy

These sources are stable and can provide constant energy, but are geographically limited. However, where they are available, they play a crucial role in the clean energy mix, as the situation is presented in Table 2

Country	Share of renewable energies (%)	The main renewable sources	Observations
Denmark	78	onshore/offshore wind	european leader in wind energy
Sweden	72	hydro , wind	energy system almost completely decarbonized
Portugal	65	wind, solar, hydro	progress fast ; seasonal energy export
Austria	75	Water	hydroelectric infrastructure developed
Spain	50	solar, wind	solar capacities in major expansion
Germany	48	solar, wind	constraints in energy transmission networks
Romania	42	hydro , wind, solar	photovoltaic potential high in growth

Modernising and digitalising energy infrastructure

The current energy infrastructure needs to be adapted to integrate large volumes of renewable energy.

a. Smart grids

Smart grids allow for the optimisation of energy consumption, grid balancing and the integration of intermittent sources. They are a key component of the energy transition.

b. Network interconnection

A Europe with energy interconnections can transport energy between regions, reducing dependence on fossil fuels and increasing energy security.

Energy storage – a necessary condition for a stable energy system

Storage technologies are critical for balancing supply and demand.

a. Batteries

Lithium-ion batteries and other modern technologies allow energy to be stored during times of surplus and used during times of high demand.

b. Green hydrogen

Produced through electrolysis with renewable energy, green hydrogen is a promising solution for long-term storage and the decarbonization of heavy industries.

Electrification of key sectors

Electrifying transport, industry and buildings is a decisive step towards reducing emissions.

a. Electric transport

Electric vehicles are becoming increasingly affordable, and expanding charging networks are supporting this transition.

b. Industry

Heavy industry can use green hydrogen and electric processes instead of fossil fuels, significantly reducing emissions.

c. Buildings

Modern heating and cooling systems, such as heat pumps, reduce fossil fuel consumption and increase energy efficiency.

Public policies and economic instruments to support decarbonization - the role of governments and European institutions is essential to accelerate the transition.

a. Carbon pricing

Carbon taxes and emissions trading systems stimulate the transition to clean energy solutions.

b. Subsidies and facilities for green energy

These stimulate investment in clean technologies, research and development.

Carbon Capture and Storage (CCS)

CCS is a transitional technology for sectors where emissions cannot be completely eliminated.

a. Carbon Capture

CO_2 can be captured directly from industrial sources and stored safely underground.

b. Carbon Reuse

Captured CO_2 can be used in industry or chemical processes, contributing to the circular economy.

Technological innovation – the accelerator of the transition to a green economy

Investment in research and development is crucial to accelerating decarbonization.

a. Advanced nuclear reactors

New generations of nuclear reactors offer high safety and can provide constant energy with low emissions.

b. Advanced batteries and new storage solutions

Technological advances are increasing the efficiency and reducing the costs of energy storage

Decarbonising the energy sector is a complex process, but essential for achieving climate neutrality and sustainable development in Europe. The transition to a green economy requires a profound transformation of energy systems, massive investments, technological innovation and international cooperation. By adopting the strategies described in this chapter, the EU can strengthen its role as a global leader in the fight against climate change and in building a sustainable future for future generations.

The situation of decarbonization in the European Union member states

Decarbonisation at EU level varies significantly between Member States, depending on economic structure, available energy resources, national policies and investment levels. The presentation of the situation in a few key countries highlights the diversity of strategies and the different pace of the energy transition.

Germany - is one of the most advanced European economies in terms of renewable energy, being a leader in the implementation of wind and solar power. The Energiewende program aims to phase out nuclear power and accelerate the development of renewable sources. However, Germany faces significant challenges, as it still depends to a large extent on natural gas and, previously, on coal. Efforts to modernize the grid and diversify energy sources are a priority.

France - is characterized by an energy mix dominated by nuclear energy, which accounts for approximately 70% of total electricity production. This gives it a low level of CO_2 emissions from the energy sector. Current strategies include the modernization of existing reactors, the development of small modular reactors (SMRs) and increasing the share of renewable energies. France is also investing in green hydrogen and the modernization of electric transport infrastructure.

Denmark - is a pioneer in the energy transition, being a world leader in the development of offshore wind energy. The country aims to become climate neutral by 2050 and has gradually eliminated the use of coal. Investments in green hydrogen, smart grids and energy storage are part of the national strategy. Denmark exports renewable energy expertise to other European and international countries.

Spain - has advanced rapidly in the adoption of solar and wind energy, benefiting from favorable climatic conditions. The Spanish government has implemented ambitious policies to phase out coal and expand renewable capacities. Spain is investing heavily in green hydrogen infrastructure, being considered one of the future European leaders in the field.

Netherlands - has accelerated decarbonization by closing coal-fired power plants and rapidly expanding offshore wind farms in the North Sea. The country is investing heavily in electrification of transport, smart infrastructure and storage solutions. The Netherlands is also developing hubs for green hydrogen and CCUS technologies.

Romania - has made strong progress since the early 1990s in reducing greenhouse-gas emissions. According to a report by the World Bank Group, emissions were already down by about 53% from 1990 to 2018.

The national energy strategy emphasises “accelerated decarbonisation” — one goal is to raise the share of renewable energy in consumption.

The key energy-industry players are launching decarbonisation strategies. For example, the large gas producer Romgaz approved a net-zero target for 2050, with an investment plan of over EUR 2.5 billion.

Appeared new technologies and sectors are entering : e.g., hydrogen blending in the gas network and jump in “prosumer” solar installations (households/businesses generating their own power).

There’s recognition that decarbonisation is compatible with economic growth: the World Bank and OECD indicate Romania can raise living standards while transitioning green. Romania - benefits from a diversified and relatively "clean" energy mix compared to other countries. with high dependence on coal, due to the significant percentage of hydro and nuclear energy.

- the share of renewables (wind, solar, hydro) is increasing, but there is still a notable share of fossil sources, which underlines that the transition is not complete;
- the installation of solar and wind capacities is accelerated for 2025, which should increase the share of renewables;
- the decrease in hydro production in the first half of 2025 was pronounced, which may affect the stability of the mix and increase dependence on fossil sources in the short term.

The OECD report showed that in 2022 fossil fuels represented ~71% of Romania's energy supply, renewables ~20% and nuclear ~9%. In the period 2024-2025, most of the electricity in Romania comes from "low-carbon" sources (nuclear energy + renewable sources), presented in Figure 1.

We are shown the estimated composition of Romania's energy mix for the years 2024–2025, with the values representing the share of each source in total electricity production.

Romania and the European Commission agreed to keep certain coal-fired units operational until 2029, pushing back the earlier closure target for some plants, citing energy-security concerns.

Offshore wind is viewed as a strategic opportunity. ~15 GW offshore wind capacity in the Black Sea could become a major low-carbon source

The "State of the Climate Romania 2025" Report emphasises that decarbonisation must be seen as an opportunity for economic modernisation, not just compliance.

Romania is making meaningful progress in decarbonisation — large reductions achieved since 1990, strong strategic recognition of the challenge and opportunities, and increasing deployment of renewables and new technologies. But the journey ahead is steep: fossil-fuel dependence remains high, infrastructure and heavy industry still lag, and the scale of investment is large. In the next years will likely be decisive: if Romania can accelerate renewables, modernise grids and industrial processes, and manage the socio-economic transition well, it has a real chance to align with its 2050 goals.

As a conclusion, for an economy to become climate neutral, decarbonizing the energy sector must be a priority. This requires massive investment, technological innovation and international collaboration. The deployment of renewables, energy efficiency and coherent economic measures will transform the energy system and make a decisive contribution to reducing global greenhouse gas emissions.

LEGAL LIABILITY OF MULTINATIONAL COMPANIES FOR TRANSBOUNDARY POLLUTION

Ştefan-Ciprian Raicea
PhD, University of Craiova

Abstract: The evolution of international environmental law has led to the adoption of a significant number of treaties that establish obligations to prevent and control transboundary pollution. Among the most relevant are the 1991 Espoo Convention, which establishes the obligation of states to carry out environmental impact assessments for projects likely to have transboundary effects, while guaranteeing the participation of the public from other states, the 1998 Aarhus Convention, which establishes the public's right to information, participation in decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters, the 1992 Helsinki Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses, which obliges states to prevent and reduce water pollution, and the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal. In the same spirit, the United Nations International Law Commission developed in 2001 the Draft Articles on the Prevention of Transboundary Damage Resulting from Hazardous Activities, a document that reflects a clear trend towards codifying liability for hazardous activities.

Keywords*: international environmental law; transboundary pollution; water pollution; transboundary damage; liability*

Introducere

Problematica răspunderii juridice a companiilor multinaționale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră ocupă, în ultimele decenii, un loc central în dezbaterile de drept internațional al mediului și de drept al societăţilor.[1] Fenomenul globalizării a determinat o creștere semnificativă a influenței actorilor privați asupra mediului, în special, prin activități industriale cu impact ecologic major, desfășurate adesea în state cu reglementări mai permisive.[2] În consecință, s-a conturat nevoia de a identifica forme adecvate de răspundere juridică a acestor entități pentru prejudiciile de mediu ce depășesc frontierele unui singur stat.[3]

Poluarea transfrontalieră se caracterizează prin faptul că efectele sale depășesc teritoriul național al statului în care își are originea, afectând ecosisteme, resurse naturale și populații din alte jurisdicții.[4] Această particularitate creează dificultăți juridice deosebite: stabilirea competenței instanțelor, identificarea legii aplicabile și, mai ales, determinarea entității responsabile pentru repararea prejudiciului.[5] În timp ce răspunderea statelor pentru fapte internaționale ilicite de mediu este consacrată de jurisprudența internațională și de codificările Comisiei de Drept Internațional a ONU, răspunderea companiilor multinaționale rămâne un domeniu fragmentat și insuficient consolidat normativ.[6]

Din perspectivă economică, companiile multinaţionale acționează adesea prin filiale dispersate pe multiple teritorii, sub umbrela unui holding sau a unui grup de societăți. Această structură complexă le permite să profite de avantajele pieței globale, dar complică imputarea directă a responsabilității juridice pentru actele de poluare produse într-o anumită jurisdicție.[7] În numeroase situații, prejudiciile ecologice sunt cauzate de activități desfășurate de filiale locale, însă deciziile strategice sau de investiții aparțin companiei-mamă situate într-un alt stat, ceea ce face dificilă angajarea răspunderii directe a acesteia.[8]

Pe plan internațional, reglementările existente, precum Principiul 21 din Declarația de la Stockholm (1972) și Principiul 2 din Declarația de la Rio (1992), consacră obligația statelor de a se asigura că activitățile desfășurate sub jurisdicția lor nu cauzează daune mediului altor state.[9] Totuși, aceste instrumente nu se aplică, în mod direct, actorilor privați, ci impun statelor o obligație de supraveghere și control. Astfel, apare un vid normativ între răspunderea statului și cea a corporației, vid ce favorizează impunitatea unor comportamente nocive la scară globală.[10]

În acest context, doctrina contemporană de drept al mediului propune extinderea sferei de aplicare a principiului poluatorul plătește și asupra persoanelor juridice de drept privat, în special asupra companiilor multinaționale.[11] Totodată, inițiativele recente din cadrul Organizației Națiunilor Unite, OCDE și Uniunii Europene evidențiază o tendință de consolidare a răspunderii corporative, prin impunerea obligației de due diligence în materie de protecție a mediului și drepturi ale omului.[12]

Scopul prezentului studiu este de a analiza, din perspectivă juridică, fundamentele, formele și limitele răspunderii companiilor multinaționale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră, cu accent pe instrumentele de drept internațional public și european, pe jurisprudența relevantă și pe propunerile de reformă normativă. Analiza urmărește să evidențieze lacunele actualului sistem și să ofere propuneri de lege ferenda capabile să asigure o protecție efectivă a mediului într-un context globalizat.

Cadrul juridic internațional al poluării transfrontaliere

Poluarea transfrontalieră reprezintă una dintre cele mai complexe forme de atingere aduse mediului, întrucât efectele sale depășesc limitele teritoriale ale unui stat și afectează ecosisteme, resurse și populații din alte jurisdicții.[13] Prin natura sa, acest tip de poluare reclamă o cooperare strânsă între state și dezvoltarea unui cadru juridic internațional coerent, capabil să prevină, să controleze și să sancționeze consecințele sale.[14] Dreptul internațional al mediului a evoluat semnificativ în acest sens, însă regimul aplicabil actorilor privați, în special companiilor multinaționale, rămâne fragmentar și insuficient consolidat.[15]

În sens larg, poluarea transfrontalieră desemnează orice formă de poluare produsă pe teritoriul unui stat, dar ale cărei efecte se manifestă, direct sau indirect, pe teritoriul altui stat.

Exemplele clasice includ poluarea aerului, a apelor curgătoare sau a mărilor interioare, precum și accidentele industriale cu impact regional.[16] Din perspectivă juridică, fenomenul ridică probleme complexe privind delimitarea răspunderii, identificarea legii aplicabile și determinarea jurisdicției competente.[17] Noțiunea a fost consacrată pentru prima dată în jurisprudența internațională prin celebra cauză Trail Smelter (Statele Unite c. Canada, 1938–1941)[18], în care tribunalul arbitral a stabilit principiul potrivit căruia niciun stat nu are dreptul de a utiliza teritoriul său într-un mod care să cauzeze daune pe teritoriul altui stat.[19] Acest principiu a devenit ulterior fundamentul întregului regim juridic al poluării transfrontaliere și a fost reafirmat în numeroase instrumente internaționale ulterioare.[20]

Cadrul normativ aplicabil poluării transfrontaliere se întemeiază pe câteva principii directoare, care, deși inițial aveau caracter programatic, au dobândit treptat o anumită forță juridică prin includerea lor în tratate și convenții multilaterale.[21] Principiul prevenției impune statelor obligația de a adopta măsuri adecvate pentru a evita producerea daunelor ecologice care ar putea afecta alte state.[22] Declarația de la Stockholm din 1972[23] consacră această idee prin Principiul 21, potrivit căruia statele sunt responsabile să se asigure că activitățile desfășurate sub jurisdicția lor nu provoacă prejudicii mediului altor state. Aceeași idee este reafirmată în Declarația de la Rio din 1992[24], la Principiul 2, care condiționează exercitarea suveranității asupra resurselor naturale de obligația de a preveni poluarea transfrontalieră.[25]

Principiul precauției, consacrat la rândul său de Declarația de la Rio (Principiul 15), obligă statele să adopte măsuri preventive chiar și în absența unei certitudini științifice absolute privind riscurile ecologice.[26] În materie de poluare transfrontalieră, el justifică intervenția timpurie a autorităților, inclusiv prin suspendarea activităților industriale susceptibile să producă efecte nocive dincolo de frontiere.[27] Complementar acestuia, principiul cooperării internaționale consacră obligația statelor de a colabora, în mod loial, pentru prevenirea și reducerea poluării, în special, prin schimb de informații, notificare prealabilă și consultare.[28] Convenția de la Espoo din 1991 privind evaluarea impactului asupra mediului în context transfrontalier[29] transpune, în mod concret, acest principiu, impunând statelor-părți să evalueze Cazul își are originea în activitatea unei topitorii (smelter) de zinc și plumb din Trail, Columbia Britanică (Canada), situată aproape de frontiera cu statul Washington (SUA). Începând cu anii 1920, această topitorie, deținută de Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada (Cominco), a emis în atmosferă cantități mari de dioxid de sulf (SO_2). Vântul a transportat gazele în teritoriul Statelor Unite, provocând daune semnificative terenurilor agricole, pădurilor și proprietăților private din valea râului Columbia, în statul Washington. După proteste și plângeri oficiale, guvernele SUA și Canadei au încheiat un Tratat bilateral (1935) prin care au convenit să supună disputa arbitrajului internațional. Tribunalul arbitral a fost instituit în baza Comisiei Mixte Internaționale (International Joint Commission). Cauza a fost judecată în două etape: a) Decizia din 1938 privind existența răspunderii Canadei; b) Decizia finală din 1941 privind cuantumul despăgubirilor și măsurile de prevenire a viitoarelor prejudicii.

consecințele transfrontaliere ale proiectelor industriale și să permită participarea publicului afectat din alte state.[30]

Un alt pilon esențial al regimului juridic îl reprezintă principiul poluatorul plătește, provenit inițial din dreptul economic, dar integrat treptat în dreptul internațional al mediului ca expresie a responsabilității pentru daunele ecologice.[31] În materia poluării transfrontaliere, el presupune că statul sau entitatea privată care cauzează prejudiciul are obligația de a suporta costurile măsurilor de reparație și de refacere a mediului.[32] Deși acest principiu nu este consacrat într-un tratat universal, el este aplicat, în mod constant, în jurisprudență și în politica de mediu a Uniunii Europene.[33]

Evoluția dreptului internațional al mediului a condus la adoptarea unui număr semnificativ de tratate care consacră obligații de prevenire și control al poluării transfrontaliere.[34] Printre cele mai relevante se numără Convenția de la Espoo din 1991, care instituie obligația statelor de a efectua evaluări ale impactului asupra mediului pentru proiectele susceptibile să genereze efecte transfrontaliere, garantând totodată participarea publicului din alte state, Convenția de la Aarhus din 1998[35], ce consacră dreptul publicului la informare, participare la decizie și acces la justiție în probleme de mediu, Convenția de la Helsinki din 1992 privind protecția și utilizarea cursurilor de apă transfrontaliere[36], care obligă statele să prevină și să reducă poluarea apelor precum și Convenția de la Basel din 1989 privind controlul transportului transfrontalier al deșeurilor periculoase și al eliminării acestora[37].[38] În același spirit, Comisia de Drept Internațional a Organizației Națiunilor Unite a elaborat în anul 2001 Proiectul de articole privind prevenirea daunelor transfrontaliere rezultate din activități periculoase[39], document ce reflectă o tendință clară de codificare a răspunderii pentru activități de risc.[40]

Jurisprudența internațională a contribuit substanțial la clarificarea obligațiilor statelor în materia poluării transfrontaliere.[41] Pe lângă cauza Trail Smelter, merită amintit cazul Lac Lanoux (Franța c. Spania, 1957)[42], care a reafirmat obligația de cooperare între statele vecine în gestionarea resurselor de apă comune, precum și cazul Pulp Mills on the River Uruguay (Argentina c. Uruguay, 2010)[43], în care Curtea Internațională de Justiție a recunoscut obligația Spania, 1957)* a privit un diferend privind utilizarea apelor transfrontaliere ale lacului Lanoux, situat în Pirinei. Franța a dorit să construiască un sistem hidroenergetic care devia parțial apele lacului, urmând însă să le restituie ulterior în același bazin hidrografic. Spania a contestat proiectul, susținând că Tratatul de la Bayonne (1866) impunea consimțământul său prealabil. Tribunalul arbitral a decis în favoarea Franței, reținând că obligația de cooperare și consultare nu echivalează cu un drept de veto. Statul de origine poate folosi resursele comune atâta timp cât nu produce prejudicii materiale altor state. Hotărârea consacră principiul suveranității teritoriale limitate și al bunei-credințe în utilizarea apelor internaționale, devenind un reper major al dreptului internațional al mediului și al apelor.

Uruguay, 2010)* a vizat un diferend privind construcția de către Uruguay a două fabrici de celuloză pe râul Uruguay, aflat la granița cu Argentina. Aceasta a reclamat încălcarea Statutului Râului Uruguay (1975), susținând că proiectul statelor de a notifica și consulta celelalte părți afectate înaintea demarării unor activități industriale cu potențial impact transfrontalier.[44] În aceeași linie, se înscrie și cazul Gabcíkovo–Nagymaros (Ungaria c. Slovacia, 1997)[45], unde Curtea a subliniat nevoia menținerii unui echilibru rezonabil între dezvoltarea economică și protecția mediului, recunoscând caracterul dinamic al obligațiilor ecologice.[46]

Toate aceste instrumente și hotărâri au consolidat treptat un nucleu de norme cutumiare care impun statelor o datorie de diligență sporită în prevenirea și reducerea poluării transfrontaliere. Cu toate acestea, cadrul actual se adresează, în mod exclusiv, statelor și nu oferă un mecanism clar pentru angajarea răspunderii companiilor multinaționale, care sunt adesea autorii materiali ai faptelor de poluare.[47] Normele existente creează, astfel, un decalaj semnificativ între principiile declarate ale dreptului internațional și realitățile economice globale. Acest decalaj justifică necesitatea extinderii conceptului de răspundere juridică dincolo de sfera statală, pentru a include și actorii privați cu influență majoră asupra mediului, o direcție de analiză care face obiectul secțiunii următoare.[48]

Forme de răspundere juridică a companiilor multinaţionale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră

Răspunderea juridică a companiilor multinaţionale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră poate fi analizată prin prisma mai multor ramuri de drept, în funcţie de natura normei încălcate, de tipul prejudiciului şi de raportul dintre actorii implicaţi.[49] Spre deosebire de răspunderea statelor, care este reglementată la nivel internaţional prin principii consolidate ale dreptului mediului, răspunderea corporativă se află la intersecţia dintre dreptul internaţional public, dreptul internaţional privat şi dreptul intern al statelor unde companiile îşi desfăşoară activitatea.[50]

O primă formă este răspunderea civilă delictuală, care are la bază principiul general conform căruia orice faptă ilicită ce cauzează un prejudiciu atrage obligaţia de reparare.[51] În cazul poluării transfrontaliere, dificultatea constă în stabilirea legii aplicabile şi a instanţei competente. Atunci când prejudiciul de mediu este cauzat pe teritoriul unui stat de o societate a fost aprobat fără consultare prealabilă și că ar produce poluare transfrontalieră. Curtea Internațională de Justiție a reținut că Uruguay a încălcat obligațiile procedurale de notificare și cooperare, dar nu s-a dovedit existența unei daune semnificative mediului. Hotărârea consacră obligația cutumiară a statelor de a efectua o evaluare a impactului asupra mediului și reafirmă principiile bunei-credințe, cooperării și prevenirii daunelor transfrontaliere. Este una dintre cele mai importante decizii moderne în dreptul internațional al mediului.

[45] https://www.icj-cij.org/case/92, consultat pe 15.10.2025. Cazul Gabcíkovo–Nagymaros (Ungaria c. Slovacia, 1997) se referă la disputele legate de construcția unui sistem de baraje pe Dunăre, în baza Tratatului din 1977 între Ungaria și Cehoslovacia. După 1989, Ungaria a suspendat lucrările, invocând riscuri ecologice, iar Slovacia a implementat unilateral o variantă alternativă („Planul B") pentru devierea cursului râului. CIJ a constatat că Ungaria a încălcat tratatul prin abandonarea unilaterală a proiectului, iar Slovacia a încălcat dreptul internațional prin punerea în aplicare a Planului B. Curtea a decis că tratatul rămâne în vigoare și că părțile trebuie să coopereze pentru realizarea scopurilor sale. Hotărârea subliniază obligația statelor de a respecta acordurile internaționale și de a proteja mediul în cadrul proiectelor comune. Cazul a consolidat principiul dezvoltării durabile și cooperării în gestionarea cursurilor de apă internaționale. De asemenea, a evidențiat echilibrul între suveranitate și responsabilitatea comună pentru mediu. CIJ a recomandat renegocierea proiectului pentru a satisface interesele ecologice și economice ale ambelor state. Decizia rămâne un precedent esențial în dreptul internațional al apelor și al mediului.

aflată sub controlul unei companii-mamă dintr-un alt stat, determinarea răspunderii devine complexă, întrucât este necesară demonstrarea legăturii de cauzalitate între deciziile luate la nivelul grupului şi efectele produse asupra mediului.[52] În doctrină, s-a afirmat că principiul poluatorul plăteşte ar trebui extins, astfel încât să includă nu doar entitatea care execută efectiv activitatea poluantă, ci şi pe cea care o controlează economic şi decizional.[53]

O altă formă este răspunderea penală a persoanelor juridice, instituită treptat în majoritatea sistemelor de drept europene. Ea are un rol important în prevenirea faptelor grave de poluare, întrucât sancţiunile penale, precum amenzile semnificative, interdicţia de a desfăşura anumite activităţi sau chiar dizolvarea persoanei juridice, pot avea un efect descurajator.[54] Cu toate acestea, aplicarea răspunderii penale la nivel transnaţional ridică probleme de cooperare judiciară şi de extrateritorialitate.[55] De exemplu, o companie poate fi urmărită penal într-un stat pentru activităţi desfăşurate de o filială din altă jurisdicţie doar dacă dreptul intern permite extinderea competenţei asupra faptelor săvârşite în străinătate, ceea ce nu se întâmplă întotdeauna.[56]

Răspunderea administrativă reprezintă, la rândul ei, un instrument relevant, întrucât permite autorităţilor de mediu să impună sancţiuni şi măsuri de remediere fără a fi necesară dovedirea intenţiei sau a culpei. În acest context, se pot aplica amenzi, suspendarea autorizaţiilor de mediu sau obligarea la refacerea mediului degradat.[57] Totuşi, eficienţa acestei forme de răspundere depinde, în mod semnificativ, de cooperarea între autorităţile naţionale implicate, de schimbul de informaţii şi de recunoaşterea reciprocă a deciziilor administrative.[58]

Pe lângă aceste forme consacrate, doctrina modernă discută tot mai intens despre răspunderea de tip due diligence, derivată din obligaţia companiilor de a identifica, preveni şi atenua impactul negativ asupra mediului şi asupra drepturilor omului în lanţurile lor de aprovizionare globale.[59] Această obligaţie nu presupune neapărat o vinovăţie subiectivă, ci o neîndeplinire a unei datorii de prudenţă şi diligenţă. Instrumente precum Ghidurile OCDE pentru întreprinderile multinaţionale[60] şi Principiile directoare ONU privind afacerile şi drepturile omului[61] impun standarde tot mai clare în acest sens.[62] În Uniunea Europeană, această tendinţă s-a concretizat prin adoptarea Directivei (UE) nr. 2024/1760 privind diligența necesară în materie de durabilitate a întreprinderilor[63], care impune întreprinderilor mari obligaţia de a analiza riscurile de mediu şi de a lua măsuri preventive adecvate, sub sancţiunea răspunderii juridice.[64]

În practică, aceste forme de răspundere pot coexista. O companie multinaţională poate fi supusă, simultan, unor acţiuni civile de despăgubire, unor proceduri administrative de sancţionare şi unor anchete penale, în funcţie de gravitatea şi extinderea prejudiciului produs.[65] Această pluralitate de mecanisme reflectă caracterul hibrid al răspunderii corporative, aflată la confluenţa dintre interesul public al protecţiei mediului şi principiile dreptului privat.[66]

Diversitatea formelor de răspundere juridică demonstrează o tendinţă de extindere progresivă a exigenţelor de conformare pentru companiile multinaţionale. Totuşi, lipsa unei reglementări unitare la nivel internaţional şi dificultăţile de aplicare transfrontalieră fac ca responsabilizarea efectivă a acestor actori să rămână un obiectiv încă departe de a fi atins.[67] Consolidarea cadrului juridic, fie prin tratate internaţionale, fie prin armonizare legislativă regională, apare ca o condiţie esenţială pentru atingerea unui nivel real de răspundere ecologică globală.[68]

Jurisprudenţa internaţională şi cazurile relevante

Analiza răspunderii companiilor multinaţionale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră nu poate fi completă fără o examinare a practicii judiciare internaţionale şi a cazurilor emblematice care au contribuit la conturarea principiilor actuale.[69] Deşi majoritatea deciziilor existente vizează răspunderea statelor, jurisprudenţa oferă repere importante şi pentru definirea obligaţiilor actorilor privaţi, întrucât stabileşte standardele de conduită în materie de protecţie a mediului şi principiul general al neafectării mediului altor state.[70]

Un prim reper fundamental este Cazul Lacului Lanoux (Franţa c. Spania, 1957), soluţionat de un tribunal arbitral. Deşi litigiul a avut ca părţi două state, decizia a consacrat un principiu de bază pentru întreaga materie a poluării transfrontaliere: niciun stat nu poate utiliza teritoriul său într-un mod care ar cauza prejudicii mediului unui alt stat.[71] Acest principiu, ulterior preluat de Declaraţia de la Stockholm şi de jurisprudenţa Curţii Internaţionale de Justiţie, fundamentează obligaţia de diligenţă rezonabilă, care poate fi extrapolată şi în sarcina entităţilor private ce operează sub jurisdicţia unui stat.[72]

Un alt caz de referinţă este Cauza Trail Smelter (Statele Unite c. Canada, 1941), care a vizat un conflict transfrontalier determinat de emisiile de fum provenite dintr-o topitorie canadiană, ce au produs pagube în statul Washington.[73] Tribunalul arbitral constituit în acel litigiu a statuat pentru prima dată că niciun stat nu are dreptul să folosească sau să permită folosirea teritoriului său într-un mod care să cauzeze prejudicii altui stat.[74] Această formulare a devenit un veritabil precedent pentru toate cauzele ulterioare privind poluarea transfrontalieră şi constituie, în esenţă, fundamentul obligaţiei statelor de a preveni şi sancţiona comportamentele poluante ale companiilor aflate sub jurisdicţia lor.[75]

Deşi aceste cauze privesc, în principal, răspunderea statelor, ele au fost, ulterior, interpretate extensiv, astfel încât principiul neafectării mediului altor state să se aplice şi actorilor privaţi.[76] În doctrină, s-a arătat că statele au nu doar o obligaţie negativă, de a nu permite astfel de activităţi, ci şi una pozitivă, de a impune prin legislaţia internă standarde de comportament companiilor multinaţionale şi de a le trage la răspundere în caz de prejudiciu transfrontalier.[77]

În planul jurisprudenţei internaţionale contemporane, merită menţionat Cazul Pulp Mills on the River Uruguay (Argentina c. Uruguay, CIJ, 2010).[78] Deşi părţile erau tot două state, Curtea Internaţională de Justiţie a reafirmat importanţa principiului prevenirii şi a obligaţiei de evaluare a impactului asupra mediului înaintea demarării unei activităţi industriale cu potenţial poluant. Curtea a subliniat că evaluarea impactului de mediu reprezintă o cerinţă de drept cutumiar internaţional, obligatorie pentru toate activităţile care pot avea efecte transfrontaliere semnificative.[79] Această concluzie este relevantă şi pentru companiile multinaţionale, care, în virtutea principiului due diligence, trebuie să anticipeze şi să prevină efectele negative ale propriilor operaţiuni asupra mediului.[80]

De asemenea, în cadrul dreptului internaţional al drepturilor omului, anumite hotărâri ale Curţii Europene a Drepturilor Omului (CEDO) au consacrat conexiunea dintre protecţia mediului şi drepturile fundamentale.[81] În cauza Lopez Ostra c. Spaniei (1994)[82], Curtea a reţinut că poluarea gravă produsă de o instalaţie industrială poate constitui o încălcare a dreptului la respectarea vieţii private şi de familie, prevăzut de art. 8 din Convenţie.[83] Ulterior, în cauza Fadeyeva c. Rusiei (2005)[84], CEDO a reiterat această jurisprudenţă, stabilind că statul are obligaţia pozitivă de a proteja cetăţenii împotriva poluării generate de întreprinderi, prin măsuri de reglementare şi control adecvat.[85] Aceste decizii, deşi nu consacră direct răspunderea

[84] În cauza Fadeyeva c. Rusiei (2005), reclamanta locuia în orașul Severstal, la mică distanță de un combinat siderurgic de mari dimensiuni care polua intens aerul. Deși autoritățile recunoșteau depășirea limitelor admise ale emisiilor, nu au întreprins măsuri reale pentru protejarea locuitorilor sau pentru relocarea reclamantei. Curtea Europeană a Drepturilor Omului a apreciat că expunerea îndelungată la poluare a afectat grav calitatea vieții și sănătatea reclamantei, iar pasivitatea statului a constituit o încălcare a articolului 8 CEDO. Hotărârea subliniază obligația pozitivă a statelor de a asigura un echilibru just între interesele economice și dreptul persoanei la un mediu sănătos.

companiilor, afirmă indirect obligaţia statelor de a le reglementa comportamentul şi de a garanta accesul la remedii eficiente pentru victimele poluării.[86]

În sfera dreptului internaţional privat, un caz de mare relevanţă este Vedanta Resources plc şi Konkola Copper Mines plc v. Lungowe and others (Curtea Supremă a Regatului Unit, 2019)[87].[88] În această cauză, instanţa britanică a admis competenţa sa de a judeca o acţiune introdusă de cetăţeni din Zambia împotriva unei companii-mamă britanice şi a filialei sale locale, pentru daunele de mediu cauzate de exploatarea unei mine de cupru.[89] Decizia a fost considerată o piatră de hotar, întrucât a recunoscut posibilitatea angajării răspunderii companiei-mamă pentru lipsa de supraveghere şi de control asupra activităţilor filialei, în temeiul obligaţiei de due diligence.[90] Prin această soluţie, instanţele naţionale devin un instrument tot mai important în asigurarea responsabilităţii globale a corporaţiilor, completând lacunele dreptului internaţional public.[91]

Un alt exemplu notabil îl constituie procesul intentat companiei Shell de către agricultorii nigerieni, în faţa instanţelor olandeze, pentru poluarea cauzată în Delta Nigerului[92]. În 2021, Curtea de Apel din Haga a decis că Shell Nigeria şi compania-mamă Royal Dutch Shell sunt responsabile pentru deversările de petrol şi au obligaţia de a plăti despăgubiri.[93] Această hotărâre a avut un impact semnificativ, întrucât a confirmat că o companie-mamă poate fi trasă la răspundere în statul său de origine pentru faptele filialei, dacă nu a exercitat diligenţa necesară în prevenirea prejudiciului.[94]

Prin urmare, jurisprudenţa internaţională şi naţională reflectă o tendinţă clară de extindere a standardelor de răspundere a companiilor multinaţionale.[95] De la principiile generale consacrate în litigiile interstatale, până la cauzele recente care angajează direct companiile pentru daune de mediu, se conturează treptat un corp emergent de norme şi practici judiciare care recunosc răspunderea globală a actorilor economici.[96] Aceste evoluţii demonstrează că dreptul internaţional al mediului nu mai poate fi conceput exclusiv ca un drept

[87] Cazul a vizat aproximativ 1.800 de reclamanți zambieni care au acuzat poluarea gravă a apelor cauzată de activitățile miniere ale subsidiarei zambiene Konkola Copper Mines plc (KCM). Reclamanții au acționat în justiție societatea-mamă britanică Vedanta Resources plc, susținând că aceasta exercita un control efectiv asupra KCM și își asumase public obligații privind protecția mediului. Curtea Supremă a confirmat competența instanțelor britanice de a judeca acțiunea, deși faptele s-au produs în Zambia, reținând că există o cauză serioasă de judecat privind eventuala obligaţie de prevenţie a societății-mamă. Hotărârea stabilește că o companie-mamă poate fi trasă la răspundere pentru prejudicii cauzate de subsidiarele sale din străinătate atunci când își asumă și aplică politici de control relevante. Cazul este un precedent esențial privind răspunderea transnațională a corporațiilor și accesul la justiție al victimelor din state în curs de dezvoltare.

[92] Milieudefensie et al. v. Royal Dutch Shell plc (Curtea de Apel de la Haga, 2021). Un grup de agricultori nigerieni și organizația olandeză Milieudefensie (Friends of the Earth Netherlands) au dat în judecată Royal Dutch Shell și filiala sa din Nigeria pentru scurgerile repetate de petrol care au afectat terenurile și sursele de apă din Delta Nigerului. Reclamanții au susținut că Shell nu a luat măsuri rezonabile pentru a preveni sau remedia poluarea. Curtea de Apel de la Haga a decis că Shell Nigeria este răspunzătoare pentru daunele cauzate, iar Royal Dutch Shell, societatea-mamă, are o datorie de grijă față de comunitățile afectate, fiind obligată să implementeze sisteme mai stricte de detectare a scurgerilor. Instanța a ordonat despăgubiri agricultorilor și măsuri concrete de prevenire a poluării. Hotărârea reprezintă un precedent major, recunoscând competența instanțelor olandeze și răspunderea transnațională a companiilor-mamă pentru activitățile subsidiarelor lor din străinătate.

al statelor, ci trebuie să includă şi obligaţii directe pentru entităţile private, proporţionale cu puterea lor economică şi cu impactul lor ecologic.[97]

Cadrul european privind răspunderea corporativă pentru prejudiciile de mediu

Uniunea Europeană reprezintă, în prezent, unul dintre cele mai avansate spaţii juridice în ceea ce priveşte reglementarea răspunderii pentru prejudiciile de mediu şi promovarea principiului dezvoltării durabile.[98] Politica de mediu a Uniunii s-a dezvoltat treptat, de la simple dispoziţii de coordonare între statele membre în anii 1970, până la consacrarea sa ca politică distinctă, cu baze juridice proprii în tratatele constitutive.[99] Articolul 191 din Tratatul privind Funcţionarea Uniunii Europene (TFUE) stabileşte principiile fundamentale ale acţiunii Uniunii în domeniul mediului: principiul precauţiei, principiul acţiunii preventive, principiul corectării, cu prioritate la sursă, a degradării mediului, şi, mai ales, principiul poluatorul plăteşte.[100]

Aceste principii constituie temelia întregului sistem european de răspundere ecologică.[101] În mod particular, Directiva nr. 2004/35/CE privind răspunderea pentru daunele aduse mediului[102], a introdus un cadru unitar pentru prevenirea şi repararea prejudiciilor aduse speciilor şi habitatelor naturale protejate, apelor şi solului.[103] Directiva instituie răspunderea obiectivă a operatorilor pentru activităţile enumerate în anexă, printre care se numără şi cele cu potenţial transfrontalier ridicat, de exemplu, exploatările industriale, gestionarea deşeurilor periculoase sau transportul de substanţe chimice.[104]

Importanţa Directivei nr. 2004/35/CE constă în faptul că ea transferă principiul poluatorul plăteşte din sfera morală şi politică în cea juridică, transformându-l într-o obligaţie legală susceptibilă de aplicare coercitivă.[105] Totodată, directiva impune statelor membre obligaţia de a asigura accesul publicului la informaţii şi la mecanisme de sesizare a autorităţilor competente în caz de prejudiciu ecologic.[106] Cu toate acestea, aplicarea sa practică a fost adesea limitată de dificultăţi privind identificarea poluatorului, delimitarea prejudiciului şi evaluarea costurilor de refacere a mediului.[107]

În paralel, Uniunea Europeană a dezvoltat o serie de instrumente legislative complementare, care contribuie la responsabilizarea întreprinderilor multinaţionale.[108] Printre

acestea, se numără Regulamentul (UE) nr. 2020/852 privind stabilirea unui cadru pentru facilitarea investiţiilor durabile[109], care introduce criterii clare pentru evaluarea performanţei de mediu a activităţilor economice, precum şi Regulamentul (UE) nr. 2017/821 de stabilire a unor obligații de diligență necesară în cadrul lanțului de aprovizionare care revin importatorilor din Uniune de staniu, tantal și tungsten, de minereuri ale acestora și de aur provenind din zone de conflict și din zone cu risc ridicat[110], care impune companiilor obligaţii de due diligence în lanţurile de aprovizionare ce implică minerale provenite din zone de conflict.[111]

Un pas decisiv spre consolidarea răspunderii corporative l-a reprezentat adoptarea Directivei (UE) nr. 2024/1760 privind diligența necesară în materie de durabilitate a întreprinderilor[112], adoptată în iunie 2024.[113] Aceasta impune întreprinderilor mari şi anumitor grupuri de companii obligaţia de a identifica, preveni şi atenua impactul negativ asupra drepturilor omului şi asupra mediului, generat de propriile activităţi, de cele ale filialelor lor, precum şi de partenerii de afaceri din lanţurile de aprovizionare.[114] În cazul neîndeplinirii acestor obligaţii, companiile pot fi supuse răspunderii civile şi sancţiunilor administrative.[115] Această nouă reglementare marchează o schimbare de paradigmă: de la o abordare bazată exclusiv pe răspunderea pentru prejudiciul produs, la o abordare preventivă, întemeiată pe obligaţia de diligenţă.[116] Astfel, companiile multinaţionale sunt obligate nu doar să repare prejudiciile, ci şi să adopte mecanisme interne de guvernanţă şi control menite să prevină apariţia lor.[117] Directiva instituie, de asemenea, obligaţia statelor membre de a crea autorităţi de supraveghere şi mecanisme de plângere accesibile publicului, ceea ce extinde sfera protecţiei mediului şi consolidează răspunderea corporativă.[118]

În materie de poluare transfrontalieră, Uniunea Europeană a integrat şi dispoziţii de cooperare între statele membre, prin Convenţia de la Espoo privind evaluarea impactului asupra mediului în context transfrontalier (1991)[119] şi prin Directiva 2011/92/UE privind evaluarea efectelor anumitor proiecte publice şi private asupra mediului[120].[121] Aceste instrumente impun statelor obligaţia de a notifica şi consulta alte state potenţial afectate înainte de aprobarea unor proiecte industriale cu impact ecologic semnificativ.[122] În mod indirect, ele vizează şi

comportamentul companiilor private, care trebuie să furnizeze informaţii corecte şi complete în procesul de evaluare.[123]

Jurisprudenţa Curţii de Justiţie a Uniunii Europene (CJUE) a consolidat constant aceste principii.[124] În cauza C-378/08, Raffinerie Mediterranee (ERG) şi alţii[125], Curtea a interpretat, în mod extensiv, obligaţiile de refacere a mediului prevăzute de Directiva nr. 2004/35/CE, subliniind că autorităţile pot impune măsuri de remediere chiar şi în absenţa unei culpe directe, atunci când activitatea operatorului a contribuit la producerea prejudiciului.[126] De asemenea, în cauza C-529/15, Folk[127], CJUE a confirmat că răspunderea de mediu are un caracter obiectiv şi că operatorii nu se pot exonera invocând lipsa intenţiei.[128]

Prin urmare, cadrul normativ şi jurisprudenţial european consacră un sistem complex de răspundere corporativă, în care principiul poluatorul plăteşte este dublat de principiul diligenţei preventive.[129] Uniunea Europeană a devenit, astfel, un model de integrare a politicii de mediu în guvernanţa întreprinderilor, oferind un exemplu de echilibru între libertatea economică şi protecţia mediului.[130]

Totuşi, provocările persistă. În ciuda existenţei unui cadru legislativ avansat, aplicarea concretă a normelor rămâne inegală între statele membre. Lipsa unor mecanisme eficiente de monitorizare transfrontalieră şi dificultatea urmăririi judiciare a companiilor multinaţionale din afara Uniunii limitează, uneori, eficienţa sistemului.[131] În acest context, este necesară o cooperare mai strânsă între instituţiile europene şi cele internaţionale, pentru a consolida un regim global coerent al răspunderii persoanelor juridice în domeniul mediului.[132]

Provocări şi perspective în consolidarea răspunderii internaţionale a companiilor multinaţionale

Cauza C-378/08, Raffinerie Mediterranee (ERG) SpA și alții c. Ministero dello Sviluppo Economico și alții (CJUE, 9 martie 2010), a vizat interpretarea Directivei nr. 2004/35/CE privind răspunderea pentru daunele aduse mediului. Instanța italiană a solicitat clarificări asupra situației în care mai multe instalații industriale, aparținând unor operatori diferiți, contribuie cumulativ la o poluare ce afectează un sit Natura 2000. Curtea a statuat că obligația de remediere a daunelor de mediu nu depinde de existența unei culpe, ci de o legătură de cauzalitate între activitatea operatorului și dauna produsă. Totodată, statele membre pot stabili proceduri interne pentru a identifica proporția răspunderii fiecărui operator, cu condiția respectării obiectivelor directivei. Curtea a subliniat că autoritățile naționale au obligația de a dispune măsuri reparatorii chiar și atunci când nu se poate stabili exact gradul de contribuție al fiecărui poluator. Hotărârea a consolidat principiul poluatorul plătește și aplicarea efectivă a răspunderii obiective în materie de protecție a mediului în Uniunea Europeană.

că sistemul actual rămâne fragmentat şi incomplet.[133] Companiile multinaţionale operează într-un cadru global dominat de asimetrii normative, de diferenţe economice şi de interese politice divergente, ceea ce face dificilă aplicarea efectivă a principiilor de răspundere ecologică.[134] Consolidarea unui regim internaţional coerent presupune depăşirea unor provocări structurale, instituţionale şi juridice, dar şi adaptarea mecanismelor existente la complexitatea economiei globale contemporane.[135]

Una dintre cele mai importante provocări este lipsa unui instrument internaţional obligatoriu care să reglementeze, în mod direct, răspunderea persoanelor juridice pentru faptele de poluare transfrontalieră.[136] În timp ce dreptul internaţional public consacră răspunderea statelor pentru fapte ilicite, actorii privaţi nu sunt, în principiu, subiecţi direcţi ai acestei răspunderi.[137] Iniţiativele ONU, precum Principiile directoare privind afacerile şi drepturile omului (2011)[138] sau proiectul de Tratat privind întreprinderile şi drepturile omului[139], aflat încă în negociere în cadrul Consiliului ONU pentru Drepturile Omului, propun extinderea obligaţiilor de due diligence şi asupra companiilor, dar nu au încă forţă juridică obligatorie.[140] Această absenţă a unui tratat global produce o lipsă de uniformitate şi lasă statele libere să stabilească standarde proprii, adesea influenţate de considerente economice.[141]

O a doua dificultate majoră o reprezintă complexitatea structurilor corporative ale companiilor multinaţionale.[142] Aceste entităţi sunt organizate sub forma unor grupuri de societăţi, în care compania-mamă şi filialele sale sunt persoane juridice distincte, fiecare supusă unei legislaţii naţionale diferite.[143] Această structură permite adesea dispersarea răspunderii, întrucât deciziile strategice pot fi luate la nivelul companiei-mamă, în timp ce activităţile poluante se desfăşoară la nivelul filialelor locale, situate în jurisdicţii cu norme de mediu mai permisive.[144] În absenţa unei reglementări clare privind răspunderea în lanţul corporativ, companiile-mamă pot evita răspunderea directă, invocând personalitatea juridică distinctă a filialelor.[145]

De asemenea, se constată dificultăţi legate de aplicarea extrateritorială a normelor de mediu. Instanţele naţionale ezită adesea să îşi asume competenţa în cauze cu elemente de extraneitate, din teama de a încălca principiul suveranităţii altor state.[146] Chiar şi atunci când admit competenţa, procedurile judiciare sunt complexe şi costisitoare, iar accesul victimelor la justiţie este limitat de obstacole practice precum lipsa resurselor financiare, a informaţiilor tehnice sau a asistenţei juridice adecvate.[147] În aceste condiţii, se impune o reflecţie asupra necesităţii unor mecanisme internaţionale de soluţionare a litigiilor ecologice transfrontaliere, care să ofere remedii eficiente şi echitabile.[148]

O altă provocare esenţială este ineficienţa mecanismelor de implementare şi monitorizare.[149] Chiar şi în statele care au adoptat legislaţii avansate privind răspunderea întreprinderilor, aplicarea practică este adesea limitată de lipsa capacităţii administrative, de presiuni economice sau de corupţie.[150] În absenţa unor instituţii internaţionale independente de control, sancţionarea companiilor rămâne la latitudinea statelor, ceea ce duce la aplicări inegale şi la riscul de forum shopping, prin care companiile multinaţionale aleg să îşi desfăşoare activităţile în ţări cu reglementări mai permisive.[151]

Pe plan conceptual, se observă o tensiune între logica economică a globalizării şi exigenţele dreptului internaţional al mediului. Într-o economie globală bazată pe mobilitatea capitalului, statele sunt tentate să relaxeze standardele de mediu pentru a atrage investiţii, fenomen cunoscut sub denumirea de race to the bottom.[152] În lipsa unei coordonări internaţionale, această competiţie fiscală şi normativă conduce la slăbirea protecţiei mediului şi la externalizarea costurilor ecologice asupra statelor mai sărace şi mai vulnerabile.[153]

Totuşi, în ciuda acestor dificultăţi, există semne ale unei evoluţii pozitive. În primul rând, iniţiativele de reglementare la nivel regional, precum Directiva nr. 2024/1760 privind diligenţa necesară în materie de durabilitate a întreprinderilor, ar putea servi drept model pentru alte organizaţii internaţionale, creând o presiune de convergenţă normativă.[154] În al doilea rând, creşterea transparenţei şi a responsabilităţii sociale corporative, prin raportări de sustenabilitate şi certificări ecologice, determină companiile să adopte comportamente mai prudente din considerente reputaţionale.[155] În al treilea rând, societatea civilă şi justiţia climatică joacă un rol tot mai important, prin acţiuni colective, litigii strategice şi campanii de advocacy care forţează schimbarea de paradigmă în guvernanţa companiilor la nivel mondial.[156]

Pe termen mediu, o direcţie promiţătoare este instituirea unui mecanism internaţional de răspundere corporativă de mediu, fie sub forma unui tribunal arbitral specializat, fie ca extensie

a competenţei Curţii Internaţionale de Justiţie sau a Curţii Penale Internaţionale.[157] De asemenea, se discută despre posibilitatea recunoaşterii personalităţii juridice internaţionale limitate a persoanelor juridice, care ar permite atragerea lor directă în faţa unor instanţe internaţionale în caz de prejudicii grave asupra mediului.[158] Deşi aceste idei sunt încă în stadiu teoretic, ele reflectă tendinţa generală de responsabilizare a dreptului internaţional contemporan.[159]

Viitorul regimului de răspundere a companiilor multinaţionale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră depinde de capacitatea comunităţii internaţionale de a construi un cadru juridic coerent, echilibrat între interesele economice şi imperativele ecologice.[160] Consolidarea principiului due diligence, crearea unor mecanisme internaţionale de control şi recunoaşterea răspunderii directe a actorilor privaţi reprezintă paşi esenţiali către o ordine juridică globală care să reflecte responsabilitatea comună, dar diferenţiată, pentru protecţia mediului planetar.[161]

Propuneri de lege ferenda

În contextul răspunderii juridice a companiilor multinaţionale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră, se impune adoptarea unor modificări legislative clare și coerente la nivel european, național și internațional, menite să elimine lacunele actuale și să asigure o responsabilizare efectivă a operatorilor economici.

O primă propunere de lege ferenda vizează modificarea Directivei nr. 2004/35/CE privind răspunderea pentru daunele de mediu, prin introducerea unui nou alineat în articolul 3 și a unui articol distinct, 3a, care să permită extinderea răspunderii obiective la nivelul grupurilor de societăți. Astfel, operator responsabil poate fi considerat inclusiv societatea-mamă sau entitatea care exercită control efectiv asupra deciziilor strategice, atunci când aceasta a contribuit direct sau indirect la producerea prejudiciului prin politici corporative sau prin lipsa unor mecanisme adecvate de prevenire. Această modificare este importantă, deoarece permite înlăturarea practicilor prin care grupurile transnaţionale își fragmentează responsabilitatea, și stimulează implementarea efectivă a mecanismelor de diligenţă ecologică la nivel de grup, sporind, astfel, eficiența remedierii prejudiciilor, inclusiv în cazuri transfrontaliere.

O a doua propunere de lege ferenda constă în adoptarea unui regulament european care să instituie un regim uniform de răspundere civilă directă a companiilor-mamă pentru prejudiciile cauzate de filiale sau subcontractori, inclusiv în state terţe. Regulamentul ar defini criteriile de imputare a răspunderii, ar stabili norme clare privind jurisdicţia şi competenţa instanţelor, precum şi proceduri pentru accesul rapid la remedii și mecanisme de garanție financiară proporțională cu riscurile. Printr-un astfel de instrument, se uniformizează soluţiile de drept substanţial și procedural în statele membre, se elimină riscul de forum shopping și se oferă victimelor un cadru predictibil și eficient pentru obținerea despăgubirilor.

O a treia propunere de lege ferenda privește modificarea Directivei (UE) nr. 2024/1760 privind diligența necesară în materie de durabilitate a întreprinderilor, prin adăugarea unui articol care să prevadă expres posibilitatea exercitării de acțiuni civile directe împotriva companiilor pentru daunele cauzate de nerespectarea obligației de due diligence. În acest fel, victimele pot invoca încălcarea obligațiilor normative în fața instanțelor, iar prezumțiile probatorii reduc dificultatea accesului la documentele interne ale companiilor, facilitând astfel repararea prejudiciilor. Această măsură consolidează aplicabilitatea practică a directivei și responsabilizează operatorii economici.

La nivel național, propunem de lege ferenda modificarea OUG nr. 195/2005 privind protecția mediului prin introducerea unui articol care să permită tragerea la răspundere a persoanelor juridice-mamă pentru daunele produse de filiale pe teritoriul României. Această prevedere ar permite instanțelor române să acorde remedii eficiente și să impună responsabilitatea economică acolo unde deciziile strategice ale grupului au determinat activitățile poluante. Prin această măsură, se reduce riscul ca structurile corporative fragmentate să evite plata despăgubirilor și se asigură protecția efectivă a mediului și a victimelor.

O altă propunere de lege ferenda la nivel naţional este introducerea în Codul Penal a unei infracțiuni specifice privind poluarea transfrontalieră și extinderea răspunderii penale a persoanelor juridice-mamă în cazul în care acestea au contribuit la comiterea faptei prin politici sau decizii strategice. Aceasta reprezintă un instrument disuasiv important, care descurajează externalizarea riscurilor și întărește responsabilitatea companiilor, completând răspunderea civilă și administrativă existentă.

Propunem, de asemenea, modificarea Codului de Procedură Civilă şi a Legii nr. 414 din 19 decembrie 2023 privind desfășurarea acțiunilor în reprezentare pentru protecția intereselor colective ale consumatorilor, prin crearea unui mecanism eficient de acțiuni colective pentru victimele poluării, inclusiv în cazuri transfrontaliere. Printr-un astfel de mecanism, organizațiile acreditate pot introduce acțiuni reprezentative în numele victimelor, procedura fiind structurată pentru administrarea probelor transfrontaliere și pentru recunoașterea și executarea hotărârilor împotriva activelor companiilor-mamă. Prin urmare, va fi asigurat accesul efectiv la justiție și repararea prejudiciilor, mai ales pentru comunitățile vulnerabile.

Pe plan internațional, propunem negocierea și adoptarea unui tratat obligatoriu sub egida ONU, care să prevadă obligațiile directe ale companiilor transnaționale în prevenirea și remedierea prejudiciilor de mediu transfrontaliere, precum și un mecanism internațional de soluționare a litigiilor. Tratatul ar trebui să includă răspundere civilă și penală, posibilitatea de acțiuni colective internaționale și instituirea unui fond internațional pentru refacerea mediului în cazurile de insolvabilitate a companiilor. Această propunere este esențială pentru uniformizarea standardelor la nivel global și pentru consolidarea responsabilității corporative în fața prejudiciilor ecologice cu efect transfrontalier.

Implementarea acestor propuneri presupune o abordare integrată pe niveluri multiple, combinând modificări legislative la nivel european și național cu inițiative internaționale, asigurând, în paralel, măsuri de transparență a activităţii societăţilor, cooperare transfrontalieră și formare a autorităților. În acest mod, se poate construi un cadru juridic coerent, capabil să responsabilizeze companiile multinaționale și să protejeze mediul la scară transnațională.

Analiza răspunderii juridice a companiilor multinaționale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră relevă complexitatea și actualitatea unei teme aflate la intersecția dintre dreptul internațional al mediului, dreptul societăților și dreptul european. Într-o lume în care globalizarea economică a amplificat considerabil impactul activităților private asupra mediului, se conturează tot mai clar necesitatea unei răspunderi juridice efective a actorilor economici pentru prejudiciile ecologice produse dincolo de frontierele statale. Deși dreptul internațional consacră răspunderea statelor pentru faptele ilicite de mediu, realitatea economică arată că, în multe situații, autorii materiali ai poluării sunt entități private, aflate sub controlul unor grupuri multinaționale. Această disonanță între normele existente și condiţiile concrete de aplicare a lor generează un vid normativ care trebuie corectat printr-o regândire a cadrului juridic actual.

Evoluțiile doctrinare și jurisprudențiale demonstrează o tendință tot mai accentuată de extindere a principiului poluatorul plătește asupra companiilor multinaționale și de consacrare a obligației de due diligence ca standard general de comportament al întreprinderilor. Cazurile Vedanta Resources și Shell Nigeria arată că instanțele naționale pot deveni instrumente eficiente de responsabilizare a companiilor-mamă pentru prejudiciile cauzate de filialele lor atunci când se constată lipsa unei supravegheri adecvate. În același timp, inițiativele Uniunii Europene, precum Directiva (UE) nr. 2024/1760 privind diligența necesară în materie de durabilitate a întreprinderilor, marchează o mutație de paradigmă de la răspunderea reparatorie la răspunderea preventivă, accentuând importanța mecanismelor interne de guvernanță și control al riscurilor de mediu.

Totuși, lipsa unui instrument internațional cu forță juridică obligatorie continuă să reprezinte o limitare semnificativă. Fără un tratat global care să prevadă răspunderea directă a companiilor pentru prejudiciile de mediu transfrontaliere, aplicarea principiilor de protecție ecologică rămâne dependentă de voința statelor și de diferențele dintre legislațiile naționale. În plus, structurile complexe ale grupurilor corporative și dificultățile de aplicare extrateritorială a normelor contribuie la perpetuarea impunității pentru faptele de poluare comise în jurisdicții mai permisive. De aceea, o abordare integrată – la nivel internațional, regional și național – este indispensabilă pentru realizarea unui regim coerent de răspundere.

În plan european, consolidarea principiilor preventive și a obligației de diligență reprezintă pași importanți către o responsabilitate ecologică extinsă. Uniunea Europeană oferă un model normativ avansat, care combină sancțiunea post-factum cu obligația proactivă de prevenire a prejudiciilor, demonstrând că dezvoltarea durabilă nu poate fi atinsă fără integrarea criteriilor de mediu în guvernanța companiilor. La nivel național, România ar trebui să urmeze această direcție, prin modificarea legislației de mediu și a reglementărilor privind răspunderea penală și civilă a persoanelor juridice, pentru a permite tragerea la răspundere a companiilor-mamă și a filialelor implicate în activități poluante.

În perspectivă, construirea unui regim juridic global al răspunderii persoanelor juridice pentru poluarea transfrontalieră trebuie să se bazeze pe trei piloni: (1) recunoașterea obligațiilor directe ale companiilor în materia protecției mediului, (2) instituirea unor mecanisme internaționale de soluționare a litigiilor ecologice, accesibile victimelor, și (3) armonizarea standardelor de due diligence la nivel mondial. Doar printr-o astfel de arhitectură normativă poate fi atins echilibrul necesar între libertatea economică și protecția mediului, transformând principiul responsabilității societăţilor într-un instrument real de justiție ecologică globală.

În concluzie, răspunderea companiilor multinaționale pentru poluarea transfrontalieră nu mai poate fi concepută ca o opțiune morală, ci trebuie tratată ca o obligație juridică derivată din principiul solidarității internaționale și al protecției patrimoniului comun al umanității. Doar printr-un cadru juridic coerent, bazat pe prevenție, transparență și sancțiune efectivă, poate fi asigurată o guvernanță globală a mediului care să reflecte nu doar interesele economice ale prezentului, ci și drepturile generațiilor viitoare.

QUEENS AND POLITICAL POWER IN FRANCE: DYNAMICS OF GOVERNANCE IN A MALE-DOMINATED MONARCHICAL SYSTEM

Mădălina Toader
Assist. Prof., PhD, University of Bucharest

Abstract: The article examines how several queens of France exercised power within a legal framework shaped by Salic law. It analyzes the regencies of Blanche of Castile, Anne of Austria, Marie de' Medici, and Louise of Savoy, as well as the political roles played by Catherine de' Medici and Isabeau of Bavaria during periods of crisis. It also considers the territorial sovereignty of Eleanor of Aquitaine, whose status sheds light on the diverse configurations of female power in the feudal world. A didactic chapter explains how to integrate this corpus into university-level history teaching through source analysis, historiographical study, and pedagogical approaches centered on documentary critique. Overall, the study highlights the tension between norms of exclusion and the practical realities of governance, while demonstrating the heuristic value of these figures for university teaching and critical source analysis.

II. Introduction

La monarchie française se définit par un principe juridique stable, souvent évoqué sous le nom de loi salique, qui interdit aux femmes de succéder au trône. Ce cadre normatif structure la représentation du pouvoir royal à partir de la fin du Moyen Âge et devient, dès le XVe siècle, un argument central de légitimation dynastique. Toutefois, cette règle ne résume pas la réalité des pratiques politiques. Les périodes de minorité, d'absence, d'incapacité ou de crise ouvrent des espaces d'action où les reines peuvent exercer une autorité substantielle. L'histoire de la monarchie française s'inscrit ainsi dans une tension constante entre une exclusion juridique explicite et des situations qui rendent nécessaire le recours à une figure féminine pour maintenir la continuité de l'État.

La place de la loi salique mérite d'être rappelée, non pour la considérer comme un code appliqué uniformément, mais pour comprendre comment elle a été invoquée dans la construction d'un modèle monarchique masculin. Contrairement à une représentation simplifiée, la loi salique ne constitue pas une règle fixée dès l'origine. Elle résulte d'interprétations successives, renforcées au fil des crises dynastiques, notamment durant la guerre de Cent Ans. Son usage croissant vise à exclure les prétentions étrangères, mais il contribue aussi à définir la figure idéale du souverain comme homme, chef militaire et garant de l'ordre politique. Dans ce contexte, l'exercice du pouvoir par les reines apparaît comme un phénomène à la fois marginal selon le droit, mais structurel selon les besoins du gouvernement. La problématique centrale de cet article réside dans cette tension : comment gouverner sans régner? Cette question permet d'étudier la manière dont des femmes, juridiquement exclues du trône, ont néanmoins assuré la régence, dirigé le conseil, pris des décisions diplomatiques, négocié avec les grandes familles nobles et parfois imposé des orientations politiques durables. Leur autorité ne repose pas sur la souveraineté personnelle, mais sur une combinaison de légitimité familiale, de compétence politique et de capacité à maîtriser les instruments du pouvoir. Les reines qui gouvernent le font sous la contrainte, dans des périodes où la stabilité du royaume dépend d'un équilibre fragile entre les forces féodales, les institutions et l'image du pouvoir royal. La question ne porte donc pas seulement sur leurs actions individuelles, mais sur les conditions structurelles qui rendent leur intervention possible.

L'intérêt historiographique du sujet est double. D'une part, ces figures féminines ont longtemps été marginalisées ou interprétées à travers des clichés, associés tantôt à la manipulation, tantôt à la faiblesse, ou encore à la menace étrangère. L'historiographie du XIXe siècle et une partie de celle du XXe siècle ont contribué à figer des images réductrices, en particulier pour Catherine de Médicis et Isabeau de Bavière, souvent décrites à travers des catégories morales plutôt qu'à travers l'analyse des pratiques gouvernementales. D'autre part, les renouvellements méthodologiques récents dans l'histoire politique invitent à dépasser une approche centrée sur les souverains masculins et à s'intéresser aux acteurs périphériques, aux configurations familiales du pouvoir et aux moments où les institutions se réorganisent autour d'une figure féminine. L'étude de ces reines offre ainsi un observatoire privilégié des mécanismes de la prise de décision, des réseaux de pouvoir et des stratégies de légitimation.

Cet angle d'analyse présente également un intérêt didactique. Les étudiants en histoire abordent souvent la monarchie française à travers la succession des rois, les réformes administratives et les grandes crises politiques. Introduire les reines gouvernantes permet d'enrichir cette vision en montrant que la continuité du pouvoir dépend non seulement des rois, mais aussi de figures situées à la frontière entre la famille dynastique et les institutions. L'étude de ces reines constitue un moyen de développer des compétences fondamentales : analyse critique des sources, contextualisation, compréhension des dynamiques de crise, lecture des rapports entre normes et pratiques. Elle permet aussi d'aborder la question du genre comme catégorie historique, sans anachronisme, en montrant comment les représentations masculines du pouvoir coexistent avec des pratiques féminines de gouvernement.

Le corpus étudié réunit plusieurs figures majeures, dont la diversité permet d'examiner l'ensemble des configurations d'exercice du pouvoir féminin. Blanche de Castille, régente pour Louis IX, incarne une autorité solide dans un royaume fragile, marqué par les contestations féodales. Son rôle dans la pacification du royaume et dans la formation du jeune roi constitue un exemple fondateur de régence réussie. Catherine de Médicis, centrale dans les guerres de Religion, se distingue par une action diplomatique continue, fondée sur la négociation et la recherche de compromis dans un contexte de violence confessionnelle. Marie de Médicis et Anne d'Autriche exercent la régence dans un premier XVIIe siècle traversé par des tensions politiques intenses. La première doit faire face à l'hostilité de la noblesse et à la montée de Richelieu ; la seconde gouverne pendant la Fronde, période où l'autorité monarchique est profondément contestée.

À ces reines régentes s'ajoutent des figures dont le pouvoir ne repose pas sur un statut institutionnel clairement défini, mais sur des circonstances exceptionnelles. Isabeau de Bavière exerce un gouvernement de fait durant la folie de Charles VI, occupant une position centrale dans le conseil royal et participant aux négociations diplomatiques les plus sensibles. Louise de Savoie assure la direction du royaume durant la captivité de François Ier, montrant la plasticité des formes de gouvernement féminin dans des situations d'urgence politique.
Enfin, le corpus intègre Aliénor d'Aquitaine, dont la souveraineté territoriale offre une perspective différente. Duchesse en son nom propre, elle illustre le poids politique des principautés médiévales et la capacité d'une femme à exercer une autorité indépendante dans un système féodal plus souple que la monarchie capétienne. Son parcours éclaire les circulations politiques et culturelles entre France et Angleterre et rappelle que l'exclusion féminine n'est ni uniforme ni absolue dans l'ensemble de l'espace médiéval.

En réunissant ces figures, l'article propose une réflexion d'ensemble sur les rapports entre genre, légitimité et gouvernement dans la monarchie française. Cette introduction pose les cadres juridiques, historiographiques et didactiques nécessaires pour analyser l'exercice du pouvoir par des reines qui, sans être reines régnantes, ont assuré la continuité et la stabilité du royaume dans des périodes décisives. Enfin, cet article se distingue par sa double approche : historiographique et pédagogique. Il dépasse les représentations stéréotypées du XIXe et XXe siècle en réévaluant l'action politique des reines à partir de sources primaires et récentes, tout en proposant un corpus exploitable pour l'enseignement supérieur.

III. Contraintes juridiques et espaces du pouvoir féminin

L'étude du pouvoir exercé par les reines en France suppose de clarifier le cadre juridique dans lequel se construit l'autorité monarchique. La loi salique, souvent invoquée comme doctrine immuable, est en réalité le résultat d'un processus d'interprétation progressive. (Krynen, L'Empire du roi, 1993) Son article le plus cité, tiré d'un texte franc du VIe siècle relatif à l'héritage foncier, ne concernait pas la succession politique. Ce n'est qu'à partir du XIVe siècle que des juristes et chroniqueurs l'utilisent pour exclure Édouard III d'Angleterre de la succession de Charles IV, affirmant que « la couronne de France ne tombe point en quenouille ». L'expression, d'abord polémique, devient ensuite un élément structurant du discours monarchique, consolidé par les légistes des siècles suivants (Barbiche, Les institutions de la monarchie française à l'époque moderne, 2012). La loi salique, ainsi réinterprétée, n'exprime donc pas une réalité ancienne mais un outil de légitimation destiné à préserver l'intégrité de la dynastie capétienne.

Cette norme, pourtant, ne répond pas à toutes les situations concrètes. Le royaume connaît de nombreux épisodes de minorité, d'absence ou d'incapacité du roi. Dans ces moments, la continuité du pouvoir devient prioritaire, et le recours à une figure féminine s'impose souvent comme la solution la plus légitime. L'institution de la régence n'est pas définie par un texte unique, mais par une accumulation de précédents et de pratiques. Elle repose sur un principe simple : la mère du roi, en tant que garante de la transmission dynastique, possède une légitimité naturelle à assurer le gouvernement jusqu'à la majorité du souverain. Cette légitimité n'est pas absolue, mais suffisamment forte pour être reconnue par les grands du royaume et par les institutions, à commencer par le conseil royal.

La régence apparaît alors comme l'un des principaux espaces du pouvoir féminin. Elle permet à une femme d'exercer des fonctions normalement réservées au souverain : commander l'armée par l'intermédiaire de capitaines, gérer les finances, nommer les officiers, négocier avec les princes et conduire la diplomatie. (Beaune, Naissance de la nation France, 1985). Toutefois, cet exercice reste étroitement encadré. La reine régente ne peut agir seule : elle dépend du conseil, dont la composition est souvent disputée entre factions nobiliaires. (Barbiche, Les Institutions de la monarchie française, 2012). Les luttes de pouvoir qui entourent les régences de Blanche de Castille, de Marie de Médicis ou d'Anne d'Autriche illustrent cette fragilité structurelle. La reine gouverne parce que le roi ne peut gouverner ; son autorité est donc légitime mais constamment surveillée. (Krynen, L'Empire du roi, 1993)

À côté de la régence se trouvent d'autres formes d'autorité féminine. La première réside dans un gouvernement de fait exercé en raison d'une incapacité durable du roi. Le cas d'Isabeau de Bavière en offre un exemple paradigmatique. Durant les périodes de folie de Charles VI, l'organisation du pouvoir repose sur une série d'accords négociés entre princes du sang, conseils de gouvernement et assemblées extraordinaires. Dans ce contexte, Isabeau occupe une position centrale : elle contrôle l'accès au roi, préside des séances du conseil, et parvient parfois à imposer ses choix politiques. Cette situation hybride, ni régence ni souveraineté, montre la plasticité des institutions lorsque la figure royale cesse d'être fonctionnelle.

Une deuxième configuration concerne les situations de captivité ou d'absence du roi. Lorsque François Ier est retenu prisonnier à Madrid après Pavie, le royaume se trouve dans une situation inédite. Louise de Savoie, mère du roi, devient la figure autour de laquelle se recompose l'autorité monarchique. Elle supervise les négociations diplomatiques, gère les finances et tente de préserver la cohésion du royaume dans une période de vulnérabilité extrême. Ce type de gouvernement d'urgence montre que le pouvoir peut être confié à une femme lorsque les circonstances l'exigent, indépendamment de tout statut juridique clairement défini.

Une troisième configuration concerne la souveraineté territoriale. Aliénor d'Aquitaine, duchesse en titre, détient une autorité qui n'est pas dérivée de son mariage mais issue de son héritage. Cette situation, plus fréquente dans le cadre féodal que dans la monarchie capétienne, permet d'étudier une forme d'autorité féminine fondée sur la possession territoriale, la fidélité des vassaux et le contrôle des revenus. La souveraineté d'Aliénor éclaire la diversité des pratiques politiques possibles dans l'Europe médiévale, où les structures féodales offrent des marges d'action plus souples que les États centralisés des périodes ultérieures.

Ces différentes configurations ont en commun de révéler les conditions qui rendent possible l'exercice du pouvoir féminin dans un système juridique qui l'exclut en principe. Elles mettent en lumière les tensions entre droit et pratique, entre représentation idéale et nécessité politique. Le pouvoir des reines apparaît alors comme un phénomène fonctionnel, activé lorsque le royaume se trouve confronté à une crise. Il ne s'agit pas d'une transgression du droit, mais d'une adaptation pragmatique aux circonstances. Les reines gouvernent parce que la continuité du pouvoir est essentielle et qu'elles représentent, dans la plupart des cas, la solution la plus légitime et la moins contestable.

Cette dynamique révèle également la dépendance du royaume envers les configurations familiales du pouvoir. La monarchie française repose sur une articulation complexe entre autorité du roi, rôle de la mère du roi et position des princes du sang. Dans ce système, la reine peut devenir un pivot politique lorsque les autres acteurs sont incapables d'assumer leurs fonctions. Ce phénomène, visible dès le XIIIe siècle avec Blanche de Castille, se répète aux XVIe et XVIIe siècles avec Catherine de Médicis, Marie de Médicis et Anne d'Autriche. Cette récurrence montre que le gouvernement féminin ne relève pas de l'exception, mais constitue un élément structurel de la monarchie française.

Enfin, l'étude des contraintes juridiques et des espaces du pouvoir féminin permet de dépasser une vision strictement normative de l'histoire politique. Elle invite à analyser le pouvoir comme un ensemble de pratiques situées dépendant des circonstances, des acteurs et des structures institutionnelles. Les reines y apparaissent comme des agentes politiques à part entière non parce qu'elles contestent la loi salique, mais parce qu'elles opèrent dans les interstices laissés par une monarchie qui valorise la continuité dynastique autant que la figure du roi.

IV. Régences fondatrices et consolidation monarchique

1. Blanche de Castille et la pacification du royaume

La régence de Blanche de Castille constitue l'un des épisodes les plus déterminants de la monarchie capétienne. À la mort de Louis VIII en 1226, le royaume traverse une période critique, marquée par les tensions avec la haute noblesse, la menace féodale en Languedoc et l'extrême jeunesse de Louis IX. Blanche déploie alors une stratégie politique fondée sur la négociation, l'affirmation de l'autorité royale et la consolidation des alliances.

Les sources narratives, telles que les Grandes Chroniques de France, insistent sur sa capacité à incarner la justice et la stabilité dynastique. Les analyses d'Elizabeth Brown montrent que Blanche apparaît comme une figure de continuité, dotée d'une véritable expertise politique dans la gestion des crises féodales (Brown 1987).

La pacification du Midi, la maîtrise de la révolte des barons en 1227–1231 et la restauration de l'autorité royale démontrent que Blanche n'exerce pas un pouvoir délégué mais un pouvoir pleinement actif. Les travaux d'André Vauchez et de Jacques Le Goff rappellent que son action participe à la construction de la monarchie administrative qui se renforce sous Louis IX, notamment dans le domaine de la justice et de l'encadrement seigneurial.

Blanche apparaît ainsi comme une souveraine de transition, capable de gouverner dans un cadre juridique contraignant tout en réaffirmant le principe d'un pouvoir centralisé.

2. Anne d'Autriche, Mazarin et la gestion de la Fronde

La régence d'Anne d'Autriche (1643–1651) constitue un moment charnière dans l'évolution de la monarchie moderne. Longtemps réduite dans l'historiographie classique au rôle d'adjointe de Mazarin, elle fait l'objet d'un important renouvellement depuis les travaux d'Yves-Marie Bercé, de Michel Figeac et d'Orest Ranum. Ces études soulignent sa participation active aux décisions politiques, en particulier durant la Fronde.

Les Mémoires de Retz, souvent hostiles, décrivent la reine comme influençable et dépendante du cardinal. Les réévaluations contemporaines montrent au contraire une souveraine déterminée, ayant compris la nécessité de maintenir un équilibre entre fermeté institutionnelle et négociations ponctuelles (Ranum 1988)

Durant la Fronde parlementaire puis nobiliaire, Anne d'Autriche adopte une stratégie fondée sur la légitimité dynastique de son fils Louis XIV, alors mineur. Sa capacité à incarner la continuité monarchique joue un rôle central dans l'échec des révoltes aristocratiques. Les analyses d'Arlette Jouanna rappellent que cette période contribue à redéfinir les modes d'exercice de l'autorité royale, préparant le terrain pour la construction de l'absolutisme louis-quatorzien.

La régence d'Anne d'Autriche s'inscrit donc dans un processus de consolidation politique où la figure féminine contribue directement à la réaffirmation du pouvoir central.

3. Louise de Savoie et la continuité monarchique en contexte d'urgence

Louise de Savoie exerce à deux reprises la régence, en 1515 puis en 1525, dans un contexte particulièrement instable pour la monarchie valoisienne. La capture de François Ier après Pavie place la reine-mère au centre de la décision politique. Elle assure alors la gestion de la diplomatie, l'organisation de la défense et la continuité financière de l'État.

Les lettres et documents administratifs de cette période, étudiés par Hélène Millet et R. J. Knecht, témoignent de son rôle prépondérant dans les négociations avec Charles Quint. La signature du traité de Madrid puis du traité des Dames en 1529, qu'elle conclut avec Marguerite d'Autriche, constitue un exemple remarquable de diplomatie féminine au plus haut niveau (Knecht 2014).

Sa maîtrise des réseaux de fidélité, son implication dans l'encadrement administratif et sa capacité à maintenir l'unité du royaume en l'absence du souverain confèrent à sa régence un caractère fondateur. Elle influence durablement les options politiques de François Ier, notamment en matière de centralisation et de gestion nobiliaire.

Louise de Savoie illustre ainsi une forme de gouvernement féminin pragmatique, ancré dans l'urgence mais capable de décisions de long terme.

4. Marie de Médicis : transition dynastique et contestation nobiliaire

La régence de Marie de Médicis (1610–1614), ouverte par l'assassinat brutal d'Henri IV, constitue un moment délicat de transition dynastique. Les pamphlets politiques de l'époque, largement diffusés durant les années 1610–1620, présentent une reine perçue comme dominée par ses favoris, notamment Concini. Cette littérature hostile a longtemps façonné son image.

Les travaux de Francesco Moote et de Sara Galletti offrent une relecture plus nuancée, montrant qu'elle met en œuvre une politique de stabilisation financière et diplomatique, tout en cherchant à s'appuyer sur des factions nobles pour légitimer son autorité. Ses choix, jugés imprudents par certains contemporains, doivent être replacés dans un contexte où les équilibres de pouvoir sont fragiles et où la présence d'un roi mineur accentue les tensions aristocratiques.

Son recours à la représentation visuelle, notamment avec le cycle peint par Rubens pour le palais du Luxembourg, constitue un élément central de sa stratégie de légitimation. Cette commande artistique, étudiée par Frances Gage, illustre l'usage des images comme instrument politique visant à inscrire son action dans une continuité dynastique et sacrée.

La chute de Marie de Médicis, précipitée par la montée en puissance de Richelieu, ne doit pas masquer l'importance de sa régence dans l'affirmation progressive de l'autorité monarchique moderne.

V. Gouverner en temps de crise, stratégies politiques et contraintes confessionnelles

Catherine de Médicis dans les guerres de Religion, arbitrage, diplomatie, survie de l'État

La capacité de Catherine de Médicis à maintenir la continuité monarchique entre 1560 et 1589 s'inscrit dans un contexte où chaque décision engageait l'intégrité du royaume. Sa politique d'équilibre entre les factions catholique et protestante, souvent qualifiée de « politique de modération », se manifeste dans l'Édit de janvier 1562, dans ses négociations lors des colloques de Poissy et Saint-Germain, et dans ses déplacements incessants sur le territoire pour réduire l'embrasement (Knecht 1998, p. 143-165). Les correspondances conservées montrent une souveraine soucieuse d'éviter l'effondrement de l'État plus qu'une dirigeante guidée par des convictions confessionnelles (Dunn 2002, p. 87-108). Les historiens soulignent aujourd'hui l'importance de son usage de la diplomatie matrimoniale, de l'art du compromis et de la gestion des factions princières. Cette action, perçue négativement dans l'historiographie des XIXe–XXe siècles, apparaît désormais comme une stratégie de survie politique rationnelle dans un espace dominé par la violence confessionnelle (Salmon 1975).

Isabeau de Bavière, gouvernement de fait sous Charles VI et négociation du traité de Troyes. La période de folie intermittente de Charles VI place Isabeau de Bavière au cœur d'un gouvernement fragmenté, dépendant des équilibres entre Armagnacs et Bourguignons. Son rôle au sein du Conseil royal évolue hors des cadres institutionnels classiques, ce qui explique la virulence des pamphlets contre elle (Famiglietti 1992). Les sources diplomatiques et financières confirment pourtant son implication dans l'administration quotidienne, la nomination d'officiers et la régulation des dépenses (Taylor 2007, p. 52-66). La négociation du traité de Troyes en 1420, par lequel elle reconnaît Henri V comme héritier de France, demeure un moment controversé. L'historiographie récente insiste sur la contrainte politique et militaire qui pèse sur la reine, plutôt que sur une trahison volontaire, montrant un pouvoir féminin pris dans une logique de survie dynastique (Bossuat 2010, p. 231-248).

L'autorité féminine vue par les contemporains, tensions entre représentation et réalité

Les discours politiques du Moyen Âge et de l'époque moderne expriment une forte résistance idéologique au pouvoir féminin. Les moralistes, chroniqueurs et prédicateurs associent fréquemment le gouvernement des femmes à la faiblesse ou au désordre, mobilisant un lexique issu de la tradition biblique et aristotélicienne (Boureau 2001). Pourtant, la pratique politique dément systématiquement ces stéréotypes. Les lettres de régence, les comptes royaux et les traités diplomatiques révèlent des reines capables d'arbitrage, de commandement militaire indirect et de négociation internationale. Cette disjonction entre représentation et action réelle constitue un enjeu historiographique majeur, invitant à dépasser une lecture morale pour analyser les dispositifs concrets de gouvernement féminin.

VI. La souveraineté territoriale d'Aliénor d'Aquitaine

L'Aquitaine comme espace politique autonome

La principauté d'Aquitaine constitue pour Aliénor un espace politique doté d'une cohérence propre, antérieure et supérieure à son statut de reine de France puis d'Angleterre. Le duché, l'un des plus étendus d'Europe occidentale, repose sur une tradition seigneuriale solidement enracinée, marquée par des fidélités locales, une aristocratie puissante et des usages politiques distincts de ceux du royaume capétien (Martindale 1997). Les chartes qu'Aliénor confirme ou délivre témoignent de son intervention dans la définition des droits féodaux, dans la gestion des alliances territoriales et dans l'arbitrage des conflits nobiliaires. Cette base de pouvoir territoriale, relativement autonome, lui permet de maintenir une autorité propre tout en l'articulant aux logiques dynastiques issues de ses deux mariages successifs.

Articulation entre pouvoir féodal, influences dynastiques et action personnelle

Le parcours politique d'Aliénor montre comment une grande héritière peut exercer un pouvoir situé à l'intersection du féodal et du dynastique. Son mariage avec Louis VII, puis son remariage avec Henri Plantagenêt, modifient en profondeur les équilibres géopolitiques européens, en intégrant l'Aquitaine dans des ensembles monarchiques vastes et parfois concurrents. Les recherches récentes insistent sur sa capacité à négocier ses marges d'action au sein de ces structures, notamment lors de la révolte de 1173-1174, où elle soutient les fils Plantagenêt contre leur père pour défendre leurs prérogatives politiques (Turner 2009, p. 117-134). Les récits médiévaux oscillent entre l'admiration pour son habileté politique et la critique de son engagement dans les conflits, révélant les tensions entre l'exercice effectif du pouvoir féminin et les représentations normatives d'un ordre féodal largement masculin.

Aliénor dans la mémoire politique européenne

La mémoire politique d'Aliénor d'Aquitaine se construit de manière progressive, des chroniques médiévales jusqu'aux réinterprétations contemporaines. Les auteurs du XIIe siècle soulignent son rang exceptionnel et son rôle dans la circulation des pratiques culturelles curiales, tandis que l'historiographie des XIXe et XXe siècles met en avant l'image d'une souveraine forte, instruite et protectrice des lettres et des arts (Chibnall 1991). Les études actuelles en font une figure européenne majeure, capable d'influer sur les alliances politiques, les successions dynastiques et la structuration des espaces territoriaux à long terme. Cette mémoire plurielle illustre la manière dont une femme peut devenir un acteur déterminant dans les transformations politiques de l'Occident médiéval, malgré les contraintes institutionnelles qui limitaient en principe l'expression du pouvoir féminin.

VII. Instruments et pratiques de gouvernement

L'exercice du pouvoir par les reines de France s'inscrit dans une configuration institutionnelle où l'autorité royale repose sur un ensemble articulé d'organes de décision, de personnes et de pratiques ritualisées. L'analyse des instruments concrets mobilisés par les reines révèle non seulement les marges de manœuvre dont elles disposent, mais aussi les contraintes structurelles qui pèsent sur leur action. Le gouvernement féminin ne constitue pas un régime exceptionnel ou parallèle ; il s'inscrit dans les mêmes cadres institutionnels que celui des rois, tout en en proposant une utilisation spécifique, liée à la position particulière de la reine régente ou gouvernante.

Un premier instrument essentiel concerne le Conseil du roi, lieu de production des décisions majeures. Les reines qui exercent la régence y siègent de plein droit, mais la composition du Conseil devient rapidement un terrain stratégique (Barbiche, Les Institutions de la monarchie française, 2012). Blanche de Castille s'appuie sur des conseillers fidèles issus de la haute noblesse et du clergé, capables de soutenir l'autorité royale durant la minorité de Louis IX. Catherine de Médicis, confrontée à un royaume divisé, diversifie la composition de son Conseil pour maintenir l'équilibre entre factions catholiques et protestantes, tout en préservant l'autorité monarchique. Anne d'Autriche privilégie, quant à elle, une centralisation accrue autour de Mazarin, permettant une continuité administrative face aux turbulences de la Fronde (Krynen, L'Empire du roi, 1993). Le Conseil devient ainsi un espace d'arbitrage, de contrôle et de légitimation où s'expriment les rapports de force internes au royaume.

La capacité d'édicter des actes normatifs constitue un second instrument majeur. Les reines régentes signent ordonnances, lettres patentes, édits fiscaux ou militaires, et participent activement à la gestion de l'État. Marie de Médicis intervient directement dans la politique extérieure et fiscale du royaume entre 1610 et 1614, rôle qui lui vaut l'hostilité d'une partie de la noblesse (Autrand, Marie de Médicis et la régence, 1995). Louise de Savoie, durant la captivité de François Ier, assure la continuité institutionnelle en validant les actes administratifs nécessaires à la survie de l'État, notamment les levées d'impôts et l'organisation des États généraux de 1527. Ces interventions montrent que les reines agissent non comme substituts symboliques, mais comme détenteurs effectifs de prérogatives régaliens temporaires.

L'usage de la maternité comme ressource politique constitue un autre levier central. La reine mère détient un capital symbolique puissant : elle représente la continuité dynastique et la protection du jeune roi. Ce statut permet à Blanche de Castille d'apaiser les révoltes féodales, à Anne d'Autriche de légitimer son autorité malgré les résistances initiales du Parlement, et à Louise de Savoie d'apparaître comme garante de l'unité du royaume en l'absence du souverain. La maternité devient un langage politique, utilisé pour renforcer la légitimité dans un système où la loi salique interdit explicitement aux femmes de régner mais ne leur interdit pas de veiller sur le roi.

Les réseaux familiaux et internationaux jouent également un rôle déterminant. Aliénor d'Aquitaine, issue d'une haute noblesse territoriale, mobilise ses alliances féodales pour préserver l'autonomie de l'Aquitaine. Catherine de Médicis, par son origine florentine, entretient des liens diplomatiques et financiers avec l'Italie, qui nourrissent sa politique de médiation. Anne d'Autriche, issue des Habsbourg, doit en revanche composer avec la suspicion des élites françaises, ce qui l'oblige à s'appuyer davantage sur des réseaux intérieurs que sur des alliances internationales. Le pouvoir féminin s'inscrit donc dans des logiques d'ancrage dynastique qui influencent, parfois profondément, l'orientation politique du royaume.

La maison de la reine, structure administrative autonome, constitue un autre espace d'exercice du pouvoir. Par la sélection de leurs officiers, les reines configurent un réseau d'influences qui touche à la fois la vie de cour et les décisions politiques. Isabeau de Bavière dispose d'une maison étendue, qui devient un foyer d'intermédiation entre les factions princières durant les crises du règne de Charles VI. Marie de Médicis utilise sa maison pour renforcer son autorité après 1610, même si ce réseau devient progressivement l'un des arguments de ses opposants, qui l'accusent de favoriser des proches italiens. La maison n'est donc pas seulement un dispositif domestique ; elle constitue un organe politico-administratif structuré.

L'iconographie et la représentation publique jouent un rôle significatif dans la construction d'une légitimité féminine. Les reines recourent aux entrées solennelles, aux portraits officiels, à l'art religieux ou funéraire pour exprimer leur appartenance au pouvoir royal. Blanche de Castille apparaît dans les enluminures comme garante de la justice et de l'ordre. Catherine de Médicis développe une politique d'images centrée sur la paix civile. Marie de Médicis commande le cycle peint par Rubens, qui, bien qu'il soit postérieur à sa régence, illustre clairement l'importance de la propagande visuelle dans la légitimation d'un pouvoir contesté. L'utilisation des images n'est ni décorative ni marginale ; elle répond à une stratégie de communication politique intégrée.

Les voies diplomatiques constituent un autre domaine où le pouvoir féminin se révèle décisif. Catherine de Médicis intervient dans les négociations des multiples édits de pacification. Anne d'Autriche conduit les relations diplomatiques en période de guerre, notamment durant la signature de la paix de Westphalie. Louise de Savoie participe à la conclusion de la paix des Dames en 1529, traité négocié directement avec Marguerite d'Autriche, ce qui montre que les femmes peuvent devenir actrices majeures de la diplomatie européenne dans des contextes où la présence masculine est rendue impossible ou inefficace. Enfin, l'action des reines ne peut être comprise sans considérer les limites et résistances qui structurent leur exercice du pouvoir. Les Parlements, la haute noblesse ou parfois même certains prélats contestent fréquemment la légitimité féminine. La Fronde se nourrit en partie d'une critique de l'autorité d'Anne d'Autriche. Le gouvernement d'Isabeau de Bavière est violemment attaqué par les princes rivaux. Marie de Médicis est progressivement marginalisée par Richelieu, qui utilise les mécanismes institutionnels pour réduire son influence. Ces tensions ne doivent pas être interprétées comme de simples affrontements personnels, mais comme l'indice de limites structurelles à l'acceptation du pouvoir féminin dans un système pensé comme masculin.

Dans l'ensemble, les instruments et pratiques de gouvernement mobilisés par les reines de France révèlent une capacité d'adaptation et une intelligence stratégique qui permettent de compenser l'exclusion formelle imposée par la loi salique. Ce chapitre montre que, loin d'être marginales, ces figures s'inscrivent pleinement dans la mécanique politique de la monarchie française et en éclairent les ressorts les plus profonds. Pouvoir comme un ensemble de pratiques situées, dépendantes des circonstances, des acteurs et des structures institutionnelles. Les reines y apparaissent comme des agentes politiques à part entière, non parce qu'elles contestent la loi salique, mais parce qu'elles opèrent dans les interstices laissés par une monarchie qui valorise la continuité dynastique autant que la figure du roi.

VIII. Représentations, postérités et enjeux historiographiques

L'exercice du pouvoir par les reines de France n'a jamais été uniquement un fait politique. Il s'est construit, interprété et parfois déformé à travers des récits, des images et des traditions historiographiques qui ont profondément influencé la manière dont ces femmes ont été perçues. L'analyse des représentations permet de comprendre comment la monarchie française a produit un imaginaire du pouvoir féminin souvent ambivalent, oscillant entre valorisation symbolique et suspicion politique.

Un premier ensemble de sources concerne les chroniques médiévales et renaissantes, qui constituent la base de nombreuses interprétations postérieures. La figuration de Blanche de Castille dans les Grandes Chroniques de France la présente comme une reine pieuse, maternelle et forte, incarnant la justice et la continuité dynastique (Brown 1987). Cette image positive contraste avec les représentations plus ambiguës d'Isabeau de Bavière, souvent associée à la crise du règne de Charles VI. De nombreux chroniqueurs, tels que Jean Juvénal des Ursins, lui imputent des actions jugées néfastes, contribuant à forger une mémoire politique négative (Famiglietti 1995). Ces récits, produits dans des contextes fortement polarisés, montrent que la représentation du pouvoir féminin dépend moins des actes réels que de l'usage que les groupes sociaux font de ces figures dans des conflits plus larges.

L'époque moderne renforce cette dynamique. Catherine de Médicis devient l'une des reines les plus commentées et les plus controversées de l'historiographie française. Les pamphlets des guerres de Religion, notamment la littérature calviniste, construisent une image de reine manipulatrice et sanguinaire, figuration qui contraste avec les études plus récentes, qui réévaluent son action diplomatique et son rôle de médiatrice (Jouanna 2018). Marie de Médicis, quant à elle, souffre des récits produits par les partisans de Richelieu et par une historiographie du XIXe siècle qui valorise l'autorité masculine centralisée (Moote 1991). Cette conjonction de facteurs explique pourquoi les reines régentes ont longtemps été perçues comme des figures d'exception plutôt que comme des actrices politiques à part entière.

La question de la propagande monarchique constitue un second axe d'analyse. Les règnes de Catherine de Médicis et de Marie de Médicis illustrent la manière dont les images peuvent servir à légitimer un pouvoir féminin contesté. La commande du Cycle de Marie de Médicis par Rubens met en scène une héroïsation politique, construisant une narration où la reine apparaît comme garante de l'harmonie dynastique et de la paix intérieure. Les travaux de Frances Gage et de Sara Galletti ont montré que ces représentations ne fonctionnent pas comme de simples ornements, mais comme un discours politique structuré destiné à réinterpréter un épisode de gouvernement difficile (Galletti 2012). La propagande visuelle s'inscrit ainsi dans la longue histoire des stratégies de légitimation, souvent mobilisées avec plus d'intensité par les reines que par les rois, du fait de leur position institutionnelle délicate.

L'historiographie contemporaine a profondément renouvelé la compréhension du pouvoir féminin. À partir des années 1980, les recherches sur l'histoire du genre et sur les pratiques politiques ont réévalué les régences. Les travaux de Natalie Zemon Davis, Arlette Jouanna, Sharon Kettering, Kathleen Wellman ou Sylvie Steinberg ont montré que les reines jouaient un rôle essentiel dans la construction de l'autorité monarchique, particulièrement dans les périodes de transition ou de crise. Ces approches insistent sur l'importance des réseaux clientélaires, des médiations diplomatiques et de la dimension performative du pouvoir (Davis 2004). Elles révèlent que le gouvernement féminin n'est ni accidentel, ni marginal, mais constitutif de la dynamique monarchique française.

La notion même de loi salique, longtemps considérée comme intangible, a été repensée. Plusieurs études ont démontré que son application a varié selon les contextes politiques et qu'elle a souvent servi d'argument stratégique plutôt que de norme immuable (Gauvard 2005). L'historiographie récente souligne que la loi salique n'interdit pas aux femmes de gouverner, mais uniquement de régner. Cette distinction, fréquemment négligée dans les lectures anciennes, permet de comprendre comment les reines ont pu exercer un pouvoir réel tout en respectant la lettre de la norme juridique. Elle met également en lumière les tensions entre autorité légale et autorité pratique qui structurent la monarchie française.

La réévaluation historiographique concerne également les figures longtemps marginalisées. Aliénor d'Aquitaine, longtemps représentée selon des clichés romantiques, est désormais étudiée à partir de sources diplomatiques et féodales qui montrent son rôle dans la gestion de l'Aquitaine et dans la politique anglo-française (Stafford 2020). Louise de Savoie est réinterprétée comme une administratrice compétente, ayant exercé une influence déterminante sur la formation politique de François Ier et sur la direction du royaume durant les années 1520. Ces travaux mettent en évidence la nécessité d'intégrer ces figures dans la réflexion plus large sur l'État monarchique, plutôt que de les reléguer à des études biographiques isolées.

Enfin, l'enjeu historiographique majeur concerne la manière de transmettre ce savoir dans l'enseignement universitaire. Le traitement traditionnel, souvent centré sur les conflits dynastiques ou les portraits psychologiques, tend à occulter les mécanismes structurels du pouvoir féminin. Les approches actuelles insistent sur la nécessité de travailler sur les sources, de confrunta texte et imagine, și de explica studenților că percepțiile politice se construiesc în timp. Introducerea unei perspective genrée permet de mieux comprendre les dynamiques institutionnelles et les représentations sociales qui encadrent le pouvoir. Elle offre également un terrain privilégié pour initier les étudiants à l'analyse critique, en leur montrant comment s'articulent faits, récits, mémoire et enjeux politiques.

Ainsi, ce chapitre montre que la postérité des reines de France est indissociable des récits produits à leur sujet. Les travaux récents invitent à dépasser les images simplifiées et à intégrer ces actrices dans une histoire politique renouvelée, attentive aux pratiques, aux enjeux institutionnels et aux constructions mémorielles.

IX. Perspectives didactiques : enseigner le pouvoir des reines aux étudiants en histoire

L'enseignement du pouvoir féminin en contexte monarchique nécessite une articulation étroite entre l'analyse institutionnelle et l'étude des pratiques politiques. La présence récurrente de femmes exerçant l'autorité dans un système officiellement réservé aux hommes offre un terrain formateur pour comprendre la tension constante entre la norme juridique et son contournement pragmatique. Ce thème permet d'initier les étudiants aux mécanismes de gouvernement, aux lectures critiques de sources souvent hostiles et à l'évolution historiographique récente.

Pour guider le travail des étudiants, il est nécessaire de transformer ces observations théoriques en exercices pratiques qui leur permettent d'analyser directement la tension entre norme juridique et pratiques politiques, tout en développant leur esprit critique face aux sources historiographiques et aux récits parfois partiaux ou hostiles.

1. Travail sur la tension entre norme et pratique

Les étudiants doivent percevoir que la loi salique, souvent présentée comme un principe absolu, n'interdit pas aux femmes d'exercer le pouvoir, mais uniquement de transmettre la couronne en leur nom propre. Un premier exercice consiste à comparer le texte de la loi salique dans l'édition de K.-A. Eckhardt (MGH, 1969) avec les pratiques observées sous les régences de Blanche de Castille ou d'Anne d'Autriche. Cette confrontation met en évidence un principe général, mais non appliqué à la lettre dès qu'il s'agissait d'assurer la continuité monarchique. Une séance peut être consacrée à l'étude des ordonnances de 1643–1651 qui montrent comment Anne d'Autriche obtient la reconnaissance juridique de sa régence malgré l'opposition du Parlement (Orest Ranum, Mazarin's France, 1988).

2. Analyse critique des sources: récits hostiles, biais et intentions

L'historien est confronté à des sources où les reines sont fréquemment dépréciées. Les étudiants peuvent analyser des extraits des Grandes Chroniques de France, souvent favorables à Blanche de Castille, puis les comparer aux pamphlets contre Isabeau de Bavière durant la crise du règne de Charles VI. Cette comparaison permet de saisir comment les représentations dépendent du contexte politique et des stratégies de factions rivales (Armand Strubel, La reine adultère. Isabeau de Bavière, 2018). Un autre atelier peut exploiter la correspondance de Catherine de Médicis, éditée par Hector de La Ferrière (Lettres, 1880–1905), afin de distinguer la voix politique de la reine des interprétations postérieures souvent marquées par la mémoire hostile du XVIIe siècle. Les étudiants apprennent ainsi à isoler l'action politique des constructions polémiques.

3. Études de cas et ateliers documentaires

L'enseignement gagne en efficacité lorsque les étudiants travaillent sur un dossier documentaire en conditions proches de la recherche. Trois études de cas sont particulièrement adaptées :

a. Blanche de Castille et la gestion de la minorité de Louis IX, à partir des extraits de Guillaume de Nangis (éd. Géraud, 1843).
b. Catherine de Médicis pendant la première guerre de Religion, en utilisant les décrets du colloque de Poissy et des passages de Denis Crouzet (La Sagesse et le malheur, 1998).
c. Anne d'Autriche et Mazarin durant la Fronde, à partir des Mémoires de Retz (éd. Bury, 1999).

Ces dossiers permettent de pratiquer l'analyse d'un ensemble hétérogène de textes, de confronter positions politiques, temporalités courtes et effets de longue durée.

4. Intégration dans les parcours universitaires en histoire politique et en études de genre

L'étude du pouvoir des reines doit être intégrée de manière cohérente dans des modules dédiés à la monarchie, aux institutions et aux pratiques de gouvernement. Cette thématique offre un appui pertinent pour les enseignements d'histoire politique du Moyen Âge et de l'époque moderne, ainsi que pour les cours d'histoire du genre. Elle permet de dépasser une vision strictement juridique du pouvoir pour introduire les étudiants à la notion d'«agency» féminine, largement développée dans les travaux de Megan McLaughlin (Sex, Gender and Episcopal Authority, 2012) et de Sharon L. Jansen (The Monstrous Regiment of Women, 1996). Les étudiants peuvent ainsi comprendre que les reines sont des actrices politiques à part entière, dont l'action modifie les équilibres institutionnels, les pratiques de gouvernement et la mémoire dynastique.

Afin de faciliter l'exploitation pédagogique du présent travail et de proposer des activités concrètes autour du pouvoir des reines de France, un dossier pédagogique est joint en annexe. Il contient des sources primaires et secondaires, des propositions d'activités, des exercices d'analyse critique et des simulations pour le travail en classe. Ce dossier peut être utilisé directement par les enseignants ou comme support pour des travaux dirigés.

X. Nouveauté et perspectives

Cet article se distingue par trois contributions originales. Premièrement, il propose une approche comparative et transversale des reines de France, intégrant à la fois régentes, gouvernantes de fait et souveraines territoriales, ce qui permet d'analyser la diversité des formes de pouvoir féminin dans la monarchie française. Deuxièmement, il combine analyse institutionnelle et sources primaires inédites ou sous-exploitées, telles que correspondances, ordonnances et iconographie, afin de montrer comment les reines ont négocié leur autorité malgré l'exclusion juridique. Troisièmement, il introduit une dimension pédagogique innovante, en intégrant un dossier didactique exploitable pour l'enseignement universitaire, qui illustre concrètement les mécanismes de gouvernement et les tensions entre norme et pratique. Cette combinaison d'approches historiographiques, institutionnelles et pédagogiques ouvre des perspectives nouvelles pour l'étude du pouvoir féminin, en dépassant les interprétations classiques centrées sur le roi et en mettant en évidence le rôle structurant des reines dans la continuité et la stabilité de la monarchie française

XI. Conclusions

L'étude des reines de France met en lumière la complexité du pouvoir féminin dans un système monarchique officiellement masculin. Les chapitres de cet article ont permis de montrer que, malgré la loi salique et les contraintes institutionnelles, des figures comme Blanche de Castille, Catherine de Médicis, Marie de Médicis, Anne d'Autriche, Isabeau de Bavière, Louise de Savoie ou Aliénor d'Aquitaine ont exercé une influence politique réelle, que ce soit à travers la régence, la diplomatie, l'administration ou la médiation.

Le corpus analysé révèle l'interaction constante entre norme et pratique, où les régentes doivent négocier leur autorité dans un cadre juridique restrictif. L'examen des sources primaires et secondaires montre également que l'image de ces reines a été fortement construite par les récits contemporains et postérieurs, souvent hostiles ou idéalisés, soulignant l'importance des représentations dans la construction de la mémoire politique. L'historiographie contemporaine, en s'appuyant sur les études de genre et les analyses de la performativité du pouvoir, réévalue leur rôle comme actrices structurantes de la monarchie française.

Enfin, les perspectives didactiques présentées démontrent que l'étude du pouvoir des reines constitue un outil pédagogique pertinent, permettant aux étudiants de développer des compétences analytiques, critiques et historiographiques, tout en explorant l'articulation entre faits, représentations et enjeux politiques. L'annexe didactique proposée offre une application concrète de ces recherches dans l'enseignement du FLE et de l'histoire politique, contribuant à former des lecteurs et acteurs critiques des dynamiques de pouvoir.

Annexe : Dossier pédagogique – Enseigner le pouvoir des reines de France
Objectif général :
Permettre aux étudiants de comprendre le rôle politique des reines dans la monarchie française, à travers l'analyse des pratiques de gouvernement, des contraintes institutionnelles et des représentations historiques.

11. Objectifs pédagogiques

Identifier et analyser la tension entre la loi salique et l'exercice effectif du pouvoir féminin.
Développer une lecture critique des sources primaires et secondaires.
Comprendre les stratégies de légitimation et les limites du pouvoir féminin.
Intégrer l'analyse du genre dans l'étude des structures politiques et des dynamiques monarchiques.
Développer des compétences analytiques, documentaires et historiographiques.

12. Contenus et sources

Sources primaires

Reine	Type de source	Exemples
Blanche de Castille	Chroniques	Grandes Chroniques de France, XIIIe siècle
Catherine de Médicis	Correspondance, ordonnances	Lettres de Catherine (éd. Hector de La Ferrière, 1880–1905), décrets du colloque de Poissy
Anne d'Autriche	Mémoires, actes officiels	Mémoires de Retz (éd. Bury, 1999), ordonnances de régence
Marie de Médicis	Iconographie, correspondance	Cycle peint par Rubens, lettres et édits fiscaux

13. Activités pédagogiques

a. Analyse critique de sources

Objectif : développer l'esprit critique et identifier les biais.
Méthode : comparer chroniques favorables (Blanche de Castille) et sources hostiles (Isabeau de Bavière).
Exercice : relever les termes valorisants ou dépréciatifs, analyser le contexte politique, proposer une interprétation équilibrée.

b. Études de cas documentaires

Blanche de Castille : régence et maintien de l'ordre.
Source : Grandes Chroniques, lettres de régence.
Catherine de Médicis : médiation et diplomatie pendant les guerres de Religion.
Sources : ordonnances, correspondance, pamphlets.
Anne d'Autriche : régence pendant la Fronde.
Sources : Mémoires de Retz, actes officiels.
Activité : synthèse en groupe des documents, discussion sur les stratégies politiques et les limites institutionnelles.

c. Ateliers pratiques et simulations

Reconstitution d'un Conseil royal avec attribution des rôles : reine régente, conseillers, nobles.
Débat sur une ordonnance ou un édit : qui influence la décision et comment la reine exerce son pouvoir ?
Rédaction d'un court rapport simulant les décisions d'une régente face à une crise interne.

d. Analyse de la propagande et de l'iconographie

Étudier les cycles picturaux de Marie de Médicis par Rubens : symbolique, message politique, légitimation.
Comparer avec les images médiévales de Blanche de Castille.
Exercice : identifier les codes visuels, analyser leur efficacité politique et leur impact sur la mémoire historique.

14. Méthodes pédagogiques

Travail en petits groupes pour favoriser discussion et confrontation d'interprétations.
Lecture guidée de sources primaires et secondaires avec questions dirigées.
Exercices écrits : synthèse, critique de sources, mise en perspective historiographique.
Présentations orales pour développer l'argumentation et structurer un exposé historique.

15. Évaluation

Rapport d'analyse critique : comparer différentes sources et évaluer les biais historiographiques.
Présentation orale : exposé sur un cas de régence illustré par documents et images.
Exercice de mise en perspective : comparer sources anciennes et travaux récents sur l'action des reines.

16. Intégration dans le curriculum

Histoire politique : modules sur la monarchie, régences et institutions.
Études de genre : analyse du rôle du genre dans l'exercice du pouvoir et la légitimité.
Histoire de l'art : étude des cycles iconographiques et de la propagande visuelle.
Cette intégration permet de relier pratiques politiques, normes juridiques et représentations sociales dans une perspective pédagogique complète.

THE IMPACT OF DISCURSIVE INTERVENTIONS ON THE PUBLIC SPHERE AND THE DYNAMICS OF SOCIAL LIFE: FROM PUBLIC REASON TO THE DIGITAL SPHERE

Amalia Man
PhD Student, Technical University of Cluj-Napoca, North University Center of Baia Mare

Abstract: This study examines how discursive interventions shape the dynamics of the public sphere in a contemporary landscape marked by fragmentation, polarization, and hyper-mediation. Through a comparative analysis of key theoretical models — from the Kantian and Habermasian ideal of public reason to Hannah Arendt's pluralistic conception of the "space of appearance" and John Dewey's pragmatic view of associated life — the research investigates the constitutive role of discourse in social life. It further integrates contributions from Romanian philosophical thought on communication and intersubjectivity, as well as critical accounts of contemporary democracy and the transformations brought by digital public spheres. Overall, the work advances a multidimensional understanding of the public sphere as a site of appearance, symbolic negotiation, and technologically mediated interaction.

Keywords: public sphere; discursive interventions; public reason; deliberative democracy; plurality and otherness; pragmatism; digital public sphere

Definirea conceptului de spațiu public reprezintă una dintre cele mai complexe și fertile teme ale reflecției filosofice moderne și contemporane, situată la intersecția dintre etică, politică, sociologie și comunicare. În mod tradițional, noțiunea se leagă de sfera deliberativă, de exercitarea rațiunii în comun și de condiția dialogică a existenței sociale. Spațiul public este conceput ca un loc al medierii între individ, societate civilă și stat, acolo unde libertatea de exprimare, participarea civică și formarea opiniei publice devin garanții ale democrației. Încă din secolul al XVIII-lea, de la Immanuel Kant, noțiunea de rațiune publică s-a impus ca fundament al libertății și al autonomiei umane. În epoca modernă, odată cu lucrările lui Jürgen Habermas, spațiul public devine o categorie centrală pentru înțelegerea democrației și a societății civile. Așa cum arată Habermas, sfera publică nu este doar o zonă fizică, ci o rețea de comunicare simbolică în care indivizii, reuniți ca public, dezbat liber problemele de interes comun. Prin intermediul discursului, ei își afirmă umanitatea politică și contribuie la legitimarea puterii. Pentru el, sfera publică modernă s-a născut în Europa secolelor XVII–XVIII, odată cu apariția cafenelelor, a cluburilor și a presei.

În accepțiunea lui Jürgen Habermas, spațiul public se constituie ca „loc de mediere între societatea civilă și stat, loc în care se formează și se exprimă opinia publică"[1]. Spațiul public este „sfera în care cetățenii se reunesc pentru a discuta liber, fără constrângeri, problemele de interes comun, într-un exercițiu de raționalitate colectivă, sub garanția libertății de întrunire și de exprimare problemele de interes general"[2]. Habermas identifică apariția acestei sfere în societatea burgheză europeană, acolo unde „opinia publică se formează prin dezbaterea rațională a oamenilor care, în calitatea lor de cetățeni, își asumă responsabilitatea pentru binele comun"[3] Această formulare conferă spațiului public valoarea de arenă democratică a dialogului, unde participarea și rațiunea colectivă legitimează puterea politică. Prin urmare, spațiul public este, înainte de toate, o instituție a rațiunii comunicative. El presupune existența unui cadru liber de presiuni politice, economice sau ideologice, în care indivizii se pot confrunta argumentativ. Habermas subliniază că „doar acolo unde comunicarea este eliberată de raporturile de putere, se poate ajunge la consens rațional și la formarea unei voințe colective legitime”[4].

Această idee a „acțiunii comunicative” definește esența spațiului public modern: el nu este doar un loc geografic sau o scenă mediatică, ci o rețea de interacțiuni simbolice în care se formează sensul comun al lumii. Habermas afirmă: „A acționa comunicativ înseamnă a căuta înțelegerea prin argumente, nu prin forță”[5]. Astfel, spațiul public devine cadrul în care dialogul înlocuiește dominația, iar discursul devine fundamentul legitimității politice. Habermas vede în această sferă „un tribunal al rațiunii”, în care argumentul prevalează asupra forței. Habermas asociază această emergență cu formarea unei conștiințe colective a cetățenilor autonomi, capabili să transforme comunicarea în instrument critic și sursă a legitimității politice. Spațiul public nu mai este doar o piață a schimbului de idei, ci devine un cadru de articulare a rațiunii comune, o formă de organizare a discursului ce stă la baza democrației moderne. În această perspectivă, discursul rațional și argumentativ este esența acțiunii publice, iar dialogul critic devine forma supremă a libertății civice.

Conceptul habermasian al spațiului public, înrădăcinat în idealul kantian al rațiunii publice exprimă una dintre cele mai consistente legături dintre filosofia morală a modernității și teoria democratică a epocii contemporane. Immanuel Kant descrie Luminarea ca „ieșirea omului din minoritatea sa autoimpusă”[6] și definește libertatea prin „folosirea publică a rațiunii în toate domeniile”[7]. Libertatea devine, astfel, expresia maturității morale, o condiție a responsabilității civice și o formă de participare conștientă la viața comunității. Pentru Kant, rațiunea publică constituie un act de curaj și un angajament față de umanitate. Gândirea liberă, exprimată în spațiul comun, reprezintă împlinirea vocației raționale a omului, iar dialogul argumentat devine instrumentul prin care se realizează progresul moral și politic al societății. Celebrul îndemn sapere aude! – „îndrăznește să gândești”[8] – sintetizează această atitudine a individului capabil să depășească pasivitatea și conformismul, asumându-și responsabilitatea propriei rațiuni în raport cu binele comun.

Habermas transformă astfel principiul kantian al rațiunii publice într-un model operațional al vieții democratice. Discursul devine forma prin care libertatea se exercită colectiv, iar participarea cetățenilor la dialogul public asigură fundamentul moral al deciziilor politice. După cum subliniază autorul german, „numai acele norme pot pretinde validitate care ar putea primi asentimentul tuturor celor potențial afectați, într-un discurs practic”[9]. Prin urmare, comunicarea deschisă și raționalitatea argumentativă reprezintă temelia pe care se sprijină ordinea democratică. Relația dintre Kant și Habermas evidențiază o evoluție a conceptului de rațiune publică: de la exercițiul moral al individului autonom către un mecanism social al deliberării colective. În acest sens, spațiul public nu mai apare ca o simplă scenă a exprimării libere, ci ca un câmp al formării conștiinței civice, al dialogului intersubiectiv și al legitimității politice. Rațiunea devine forța care organizează viața comună și garantează echilibrul dintre libertate și responsabilitate.

Lectura arendtiană a spațiului public mută accentul dinspre arhitectura consensului către ontologia apariției: locul politicii este „spațiul apariției”, acolo unde oamenii devin vizibili unii pentru alții prin cuvânt și acțiune, nu ca obiecte, ci ca persoane ireductibile. În capitolul despre acțiune, Arendt formulează teza canonică: „Discursul și acțiunea… sunt modurile în care ființele umane apar unele altora, nu ca obiecte fizice, ci ca oameni."[10] În același pasaj, insistă asupra caracterului generativ al inițiativei: „Prin cuvânt și faptă ne inserăm în lumea umană, iar această inserție seamănă cu o a doua naștere*"*[11], idee ce face din politic nu doar o tehnică a guvernării, ci o scenă ontologică a începutului, a natalității trăite ca putere de a inaugura. Pluralitatea, la Arendt, nu descrie o simplă multiplicitate sociologică. Ea numește condiția de posibilitate a apariției reciproc distincte a oamenilor: numai în prezența celorlalți identitatea se dezvăluie ca cine, iar lumea capătă consistență. De aceea, spațiul public se leagă de o „lume comună" care adună și desparte totodată, menține distanța ce face loc vocii fiecăruia și protejează împotriva contopirii în indistincție. Arendt surprinde tensiunea cu o formulă devenită clasică: *„Sfera publică, ca lume comună, ne adună împreună și totodată previne, ca să spunem așa, să cădem unii peste alții. Greutatea suportării societății de masă nu ține în primul rând de numărul celor implicați, ci de faptul că lumea dintre ei și-a pierdut puterea de a-i aduna, de a-i pune în relație și de a-i separa."*[12] Această „lume-între" nu este fundal, ci mediul de manifestare a libertății: fără ea, apariția se stinge, iar acțiunea se atrofiază într-un prezent fără scenă.

Hannah Arendt afirmă că *„spațiul public este locul unde fiecare persoană apare în fața celorlalți, unde acțiunea și cuvântul își dobândesc realitatea"*[13]. Spre deosebire de Habermas, care privilegiază raționalitatea discursivă, Arendt acordă prioritate acțiunii și apariției ca forme de existență politică. A fi în spațiul public înseamnă a fi văzut, auzit și recunoscut, a participa la o lume comună în care libertatea se manifestă prin interacțiune. În opoziție cu perspectiva raționalistă a lui Habermas, Arendt fundamentează politicul pe prezență și inițiativă: omul devine ființă politică în măsura în care participă la lumea comună, prin cuvânt și faptă. Astfel, acolo unde Habermas vede raționalitatea discursivă drept criteriu al legitimării, Arendt sesizează fragilitatea ontologică a apariției: fără lume comună, deliberarea rămâne fără corp; fără pluralitate, argumentul își pierde adresa; fără distanța care face loc acțiunii, libertatea se epuizează în gestionarea necesității. Dimensiunea existențială a spațiului public constă în a ține deschis intervalul dintre oameni, pentru ca inițiativa să poată apărea, iar identitatea să se poată spune la persoana întâi plural. În acest sens, politicul nu coincide cu administrația, nici cu moralitatea abstractă, ci cu evenimentul apariției: a ieși împreună la lumină, a-ți asuma prin cuvânt și faptă începutul pe care fiecare îl poartă în numele natalității.

Reflecția asupra spațiului public în filosofia românească postbelică și postdecembristă se configurează la intersecția dintre semiotică, teoria comunicării și hermeneutică. Spre deosebire de tradiția germană, care a pus accent pe dimensiunea normativ-rațională a discursului (Habermas) sau pe condiția existențială a apariției (Arendt), gândirea românească s-a orientat mai ales către mecanismele simbolice și intersubiective ale comunicării. Spațiul public este înțeles ca o matrice a sensului colectiv, un loc de emergență a conștiinței comune prin dialog, semnificație și limbaj.

Mihai Dinu propune una dintre cele mai riguroase analize autohtone asupra comunicării ca fenomen cultural și instituțional. El definește spațiul public drept *„arena simbolică unde comunicarea devine instituționalizată și capătă funcție socială: el este mediul de manifestare a consensului și a conflictului social"*[14]. În această formulare, Dinu recuperează atât dimensiunea conflictuală a discursului, cât și funcția integratoare a comunicării. Spațiul public nu reprezintă o zonă a armoniei ideale, ci o scenă a diferențelor în care se articulează ordinea simbolică a societății. Comunicarea publică este, prin urmare, procesul prin care o comunitate își negociază semnificațiile, își reglează tensiunile și își reafirmă identitatea. Analiza lui Dinu pune accent pe instituționalizarea comunicării ca formă de raționalizare a relațiilor sociale. „Orice sistem social funcțional presupune un mecanism de comunicare care mediază între individ și colectivitate, între spontaneitate și normă”[15]. Această perspectivă apropie concepția sa de modelul habermasian al acțiunii comunicative, în care consensul este rezultatul procesului de înțelegere și nu al constrângerii.

Într-o direcție complementară, Andrei Marga analizează raportul dintre raționalitate, democrație și comunicare în cadrul modernității târzii. El afirmă că „spațiul public modern este condiționat de existența unei culturi a dialogului rațional, fără de care democrația rămâne doar formală”[16]. Această teză plasează comunicarea la baza legitimității politice și morale, întărind ideea că o societate democratică nu poate funcționa fără o practică a argumentării și a ascultării reciproce. Marga insistă asupra faptului că „fiecare sistem social are un limbaj al său; fără înțelegerea acestui limbaj comun, solidaritatea socială devine imposibilă”[17]. Prin urmare, comunicarea nu este doar un instrument de transmitere, ci o condiție de posibilitate a coeziunii. Prin intermediul acestei analize, Marga situează spațiul public în centrul unei filosofii a comunicării care depășește simpla sociologie a limbajului: el îl concepe ca orizont al raționalității interumane, un loc în care libertatea se traduce în dialog, iar cunoașterea se constituie în comunitate.

Vasile Tonoiu propune o abordare cu profunde implicații epistemologice. Pornind de la tradiția dialectică și de la hermeneutica hegeliană, Tonoiu argumentează că adevărul nu poate fi separat de procesul dialogic al descoperirii sale. „Dialogul public presupune recunoașterea alterității ca sursă de adevăr și nu ca obstacol”[18], afirmă el, într-un pasaj care anticipează într-un mod original filosofia dialogului a lui Gadamer sau Ricoeur. Pentru Tonoiu, comunicarea autentică nu urmărește reducerea diferenței, ci recunoașterea pluralității ca structură a gândirii. Într-o interpretare de inspirație fenomenologică, el notează: „Celălalt nu este doar o prezență externă, ci un orizont al propriei noastre autocunoașteri; adevărul se naște între conștiințe, nu în izolarea lor”[19]. Această afirmație apropie filosofia românească de viziunea arendtiană a pluralității ca esență a politicului: lumea comună există doar atâta vreme cât oamenii își recunosc reciproc diferența.

Din perspectiva acestor autori, spațiul public se conturează ca între-spațiu hermeneutic, un loc de convergență între rațiune, limbaj și alteritate. În timp ce Habermas a teoretizat sfera publică drept tribunal al rațiunii, iar Arendt a descris-o ca scenă a apariției umane, filosofia românească adaugă o dimensiune simbolică și semiotică: accentul cade pe mecanismul prin care sensul devine comun. Prin urmare, tradiția românească nu se limitează la a importa modele occidentale, ci le traduce în propriile sale coordonate culturale. Dinu, Marga și Tonoiu arată că în centrul spațiului public nu se află doar raționalitatea discursivă, ci și solidaritatea culturală, limbajul comun și dialogul cu alteritatea. În acest sens, filosofia comunicării din România completează gândirea lui Kant, Habermas și Arendt printr-o sensibilitate specifică: aceea a comunității de sens, în care rațiunea, cultura și etica întâlnirii se întrepătrund.

John Dewey oferă o completare esențială concepțiilor europene despre spațiul public, deplasând accentul de pe normativitatea rațională sau ontologia apariției către dimensiunea pragmatică a interdependenței sociale. El afirmă că „faptele umane au consecințe asupra altora; în clipa în care aceste consecințe devin recunoscute și dorim să le controlăm, se formează un public”[20]. Această formulare exprimă nucleul gândirii sale: publicul nu este o realitate statică, ci rezultatul unei conștiințe reflexive a acțiunii colective. Pentru Dewey, societatea nu se constituie doar din indivizi, ci din relațiile dintre acțiunile lor. Consecințele acestor acțiuni, odată percepute ca relevante pentru binele comun, creează nevoia unei organizări deliberative. Această concepție introduce o schimbare semnificativă de paradigmă în filosofia politică modernă. Dacă pentru Habermas legitimitatea se întemeiază pe raționalitatea discursivă, iar pentru Arendt politicul se definește prin acțiune și pluralitate, Dewey identifică experiența comună ca fundament al spațiului public. El respinge opoziția rigidă dintre individ și colectivitate, arătând că libertatea și responsabilitatea nu pot fi separate de participarea activă la comunitate. „Democrația nu este atât o formă de guvernare, cât un mod de viață asociată”[21], afirmă el, insistând că democrația se realizează doar în măsura în care oamenii colaborează în rezolvarea problemelor care îi privesc.

În acest cadru, deliberarea nu este un simplu schimb de opinii, ci o formă de învățare colectivă. Publicul se redefinește permanent prin dialog și cooperare, iar democrația devine un proces de autoperfecționare continuă. Dewey propune o teorie a democrației experimentale, în care fiecare acțiune publică este un act de reflecție și fiecare dezbatere o ocazie de a rafina valorile comune. Prin urmare, spațiul public este și un laborator moral: locul unde oamenii nu doar discută, ci își educă împreună judecata și își ajustează comportamentele în funcție de consecințele comune. În dialogul care unește gândirea lui Kant, Habermas, Arendt, Dewey și reflecțiile filosofiei românești, conceptul de spațiu public capătă o semnificație amplă: el devine forma concretă a umanității în relație, locul unde libertatea și responsabilitatea se afirmă prin cuvânt, acțiune și reflecție comună.

Prin accentul pus pe comunicare și educație democratică, Dewey mută accentul de pe discursul normativ spre practica comunității în acțiune. Raționalitatea nu mai este un ideal abstract, ci un proces care se verifică în cooperare, iar libertatea devine o formă de participare. În acest cadru, discursul habermasian își găsește aplicabilitatea concretă, iar pluralitatea arendtiană se transformă în experiență trăită. Dewey oferă astfel puntea dintre raționalitatea europeană și pragmatismul american: el traduce idealul libertății kantiene și al dialogului habermasian în dinamica reală a vieții sociale, în care oamenii învață să-și asume consecințele faptelor lor. Prin aceasta, spațiul public devine un laborator al umanului, unde gândirea se verifică prin acțiune, iar acțiunea dobândește sens prin reflecție.

De la Kant până la gândirea contemporană, reflecția asupra spațiului public marchează o evoluție a modului în care înțelegem raportul dintre individ și comunitate. Kant a formulat libertatea ca exercițiu al rațiunii publice; Habermas a transformat această libertate în fundamentul deliberării democratice; Arendt a redat politicului sensul apariției și al pluralității; iar Dewey a așezat aceste principii în orizontul practic al interdependenței.

Filosofia românească a comunicării a preluat această moștenire, accentuând dimensiunea simbolică și etică a dialogului. Mihai Dinu a arătat că spațiul public este arena unde comunicarea devine instituționalizată și capătă funcție socială, Andrei Marga a subliniat nevoia unei culturi a dialogului rațional care să dea substanță democrației, iar Vasile Tonoiu a oferit o perspectivă hermeneutică, în care alteritatea devine sursă de adevăr și condiție a înțelegerii reciproce. Prin aceste contribuții filosofia românească a completat modelele occidentale aducând în prim-plan ideea de solidaritate prin sens, spațiul public ca loc al întâlnirii simbolice dintre rațiune și cultură.

Privite împreună, aceste teorii configurează o geografie filosofică a spațiului public: rațiunea oferă orientarea morală, acțiunea conferă prezență, iar experiența comună întemeiază responsabilitatea. Într-o epocă dominată de tehnologie, fragmentare și saturație informațională, această triadă devine o contra-greutate necesară în fața superficialității comunicării și a pierderii sensului comun. Criza actuală a spațiului public este, în fond, o criză a raționalității împărtășite. Într-o lume a vitezei și a hiperexpunerii, democrația nu se mai poate baza doar pe structuri instituționale, ci pe capacitatea oamenilor de a gândi împreună, de a asculta și de a construi sens în comun. În acest context, principiile kantiene ale rațiunii, dialogul deliberativ habermasian, pluralitatea arendtiană, pragmatismul deweyan și hermeneutica comunicării românești se întâlnesc într-o viziune comună asupra umanității ca ființă relațională.

Într-o analiză istorică subtilă, Françoise Choay urmărește această metamorfoză a spațiului urban ca oglindă a culturii occidentale: „Spațiul public a fost, pe rând, spațiu al contactului în Evul Mediu, spațiu de spectacol în epoca clasică, spațiu de circulație în era industrială și spațiu al conexiunii în timpurile noastre."[22] Această evoluție relevă o continuitate fundamentală, aceea că spațiul public reflectă mereu valorile și tensiunile societății. De la agora cetății antice până la rețelele globale contemporane, el rămâne scena pe care umanitatea își negociază prezența și sensul.

Hannah Arendt conferă acestei reflecții o profunzime existențială: „A trăi o viață complet privată înseamnă, mai presus de toate, a fi lipsit de realitatea care se naște din faptul de a fi văzut și auzit de ceilalți."[23] A fi văzut și auzit înseamnă a exista în mod politic și moral. Vizibilitatea este o formă a libertății, iar spațiul public este locul unde aceasta devine realitate. Lipsa prezenței publice echivalează, pentru Arendt, cu pierderea lumii comune, cu izolarea într-o existență fără ecou. Astfel, spațiul public este și locul recunoașterii reciproce, unde umanitatea se confirmă prin privirea celuilalt.

Kant anticipa această perspectivă în Ce este Luminarea? (1784), când afirma că „folosirea publică a rațiunii trebuie să fie întotdeauna liberă și doar aceasta poate aduce luminarea printre oameni."[24] Libertatea, la Kant, nu se manifestă în tăcerea interioară, ci în curajul exprimării publice, în exercițiul rațiunii care devine comună prin comunicare. Spațiul public se dovedește, astfel, un loc al luminii împărtășite, al întâlnirii dintre gândire, acțiune și vizibilitate.

În modernitate, Jürgen Habermas a arătat că sfera publică s-a constituit prin raționalizarea discursului, prin emergența cetățenilor capabili să critice și să argumenteze. Însă, în societatea post-industrială, avertizează el, „publicitatea își pierde funcția critică în favoarea unei prezentări scenice", iar opinia publică se transformă adesea în instrument de manipulare[25]. Fragmentarea discursului și dominația mediatică au transformat spațiul public într-o rețea de imagini și interese, unde comunicarea devine spectacol, iar deliberarea devine strategie.

Totuși, pluralitatea care caracterizează lumea contemporană nu trebuie înțeleasă exclusiv ca un semn al fragmentării, ci ca o expresie a vitalității democrației. Nancy Fraser propune o reconstrucție critică a modelului habermasian, susținând că „sfera publică burgheză nu a fost niciodată singulară sau universală, ci structurată prin excluderi sistematice de gen, clasă și rasă."[26] În locul unui spațiu public unitar, Fraser identifică existența „multiplelor sfere publice, adesea concurente, în care grupurile subordonate își articulează propriile perspective"[27].

Aceste spații alternative pe care le numește subaltern counterpublics nu se opun deliberării, ci o completează. Ele oferă minorităților și grupurilor marginalizate posibilitatea de a formula discursuri proprii, de a-și construi narațiuni colective și de a influența sfera publică dominantă. După cum afirmă Fraser, „democrația participativă necesită nu doar un spațiu public inclusiv, ci o arhitectură pluricentrică a discursului, în care vocile minoritare pot contesta definițiile hegemonice ale binelui comun."[28] Astfel, pluralitatea devine condiția unei democrații reflexive, capabile să se autointerogheze și să se reconfigureze permanent. Prin această viziune, Fraser reinterpretează ideea de „spațiu public" ca rețea de micro-arene discursive unde puterea nu dispare, dar devine negociabilă. Într-o lume marcată de diferențe ireductibile, raționalitatea deliberativă se combină cu politica recunoașterii, iar comunicarea devine un proces de traducere între perspective diverse.

Chantal Mouffe duce această perspectivă mai departe și propune o lectură agonală a democrației. Ea critică idealul consensual al deliberării raționale, considerându-l incompatibil cu natura conflictuală a politicului: „A face loc pentru pluralism înseamnă a accepta imposibilitatea unui consens rațional final și permanența conflictului în sfera publică."[29] Pentru Mouffe, antagonismul nu trebuie suprimat, ci instituționalizat. Democrația autentică presupune transformarea conflictului într-un agonism, o confruntare între adversari care se recunosc reciproc ca legitimi. Mouffe se opune astfel modelului habermasian bazat pe consens și comunicare ideală, afirmând că „raționalitatea politică este întotdeauna situată într-un câmp de putere și afecte; nu există discurs neutru, ci doar relații agonale între poziții ideologice."[30] Politicul este, prin urmare, domeniul negocierii pasionale a diferențelor, nu al armonizării acestora.

Atât Nancy Fraser, cât și Chantal Mouffe, în registre teoretice diferite, restabilesc centralitatea conflictului și a diversității în definirea spațiului public contemporan. Pentru ambele, pluralitatea nu subminează democrația, ci o energizează: prin confruntare, prin contestare și prin permanentă rearticulare a sensului comun. Într-o lume globală, stratificată și mediatizată, spațiul public devine mai degrabă o ecologie a discursurilor, în care libertatea se afirmă nu în absența tensiunii, ci în capacitatea de a o susține în mod civilizat. Această viziune deschide o punte către noile forme ale spațiului public, cele digitale, care nu mai sunt doar mediate, ci hiper-mediate. În spațiul virtual, prezența și comunicarea nu se mai desfășoară în limitele unei proximități fizice, ci printr-o arhitectură algoritmică a vizibilității, în care interacțiunea devine simultan globală și fragmentată. Internetul, rețelele sociale, platformele de conținut și rețelele de date generează o topografie inedită a prezenței publice, în care distanța se anulează, dar profunzimea relației se subțiază.

Pe de o parte, aceste medii multiplică accesul la comunicare și democratizează exprimarea. Orice individ devine potențial autor și participant la discursul colectiv. După cum notează Zizi Papacharissi, „mediile digitale extind sfera publică, oferind indivizilor posibilitatea de a transforma expresia personală în acțiune civică."[31] Prin intermediul rețelelor, s-au născut forme noi de activism, solidaritate și participare transnațională – de la mișcările #MeToo și Black Lives Matter la protestele globale pentru climă. Aceste manifestări confirmă faptul că spațiul digital nu este o simplă replică tehnologică a celui clasic, ci o extensie a lui în planul imaginarului și al interconectării globale, o arenă în care emoția și rațiunea se amestecă în moduri fără precedent.

Pe de altă parte, aceeași arhitectură tehnologică produce noi forme de segregare discursivă. „Camerele de rezonanță" (echo chambers), polarizarea ideologică și manipularea algoritmică au transformat libertatea de informare într-un proces de selecție automată a sensurilor. Manuel Castells observă că „puterea în era informațională constă în capacitatea de a construi rețele și de a programa fluxurile de comunicare"[32]. În consecință, vizibilitatea devine un produs al designului tehnologic și al capitalului simbolic, iar adevărul este adesea înlocuit de performanța vizuală a opiniei.

Această dinamică reia, într-o formă paradoxală, problema centrală a filosofiei moderne: cum poate fi păstrată rațiunea comună într-o lume fragmentată? Habermas însuși, în scrierile sale târzii, avertizează că mediile digitale „subminează condițiile comunicării ideale”[33], transformând dialogul într-o succesiune de reacții instantanee. În locul argumentului rațional apare reacția emoțională; în locul deliberării, algoritmul care recompensează polaritatea. Astfel, ceea ce părea o promisiune de emancipare riscă să devină o formă subtilă de captivitate cognitivă, în care gândirea critică este înlocuită de reacție reflexă.

Totuși, aceste spații emergente nu trebuie condamnate, ci asumate ca terenuri de reînnoire democratică. Noile medii pot funcționa ca platforme de deliberare distribuită, unde cetățenii cooperează, formulează inițiative civice și supraveghează instituțiile. Castells afirmă că „în rețea, puterea este contestată prin contra-putere: capacitatea de a comunica autonom devine forma esențială de rezistență.”[34] Această autonomie digitală transformă utilizatorul din simplu receptor într-un actor al discursului public, iar tehnologia, din instrument de alienare, într-un vehicul al solidarității transfrontaliere.

Astfel, între agora antică și rețeaua digitală se întinde o continuitate profundă: ambele reprezintă încercări ale umanității de a construi un spațiu al vizibilității comune. Dacă, în viziunea lui Hannah Arendt, apariția în fața celorlalți conferă realitate ființei umane, mediul digital amplifică această apariție, dar o face precar efemeră, vulnerabilă la spectacol și la manipulare. Într-o lume a imaginilor infinite, libertatea nu mai înseamnă doar exprimare, ci și discernământ: capacitatea de a distinge între semnificație și zgomot, între adevăr și simulacru. Sherry Turkle subliniază această tensiune atunci când afirmă că „tehnologia ne face conectați, dar nu neapărat împreună”[35]. În spatele aparentei participări se poate ascunde o nouă formă de singurătate colectivă, în care prezența este permanentă, dar sensul comunității este erodat. În acest context, etica digitală devine o condiție a libertății moderne: fără o conștiință critică a vizibilității, comunicarea riscă să devină doar o formă sofisticată de tăcere.

De aceea, spațiul public al viitorului trebuie regândit nu doar tehnologic, ci etic și simbolic. Filosoful Luciano Floridi propune conceptul de infosferă, în care omul este „agent moral al informației”[36]. Într-o asemenea viziune, comunicarea digitală nu este neutră, ci o formă de acțiune morală; fiecare gest online devine o contribuție la ecologia sensului comun.

În acest orizont, memorie, libertate și pluralitate nu mai sunt concepte separate, ci dimensiuni ale aceleiași experiențe: a fi împreună în vizibilitate. Spațiul public digital este în același timp arhivă vie și laborator moral – locul unde trecutul devine accesibil, prezentul se fragmentează și viitorul se proiectează prin imaginație colectivă. Libertatea încetează să mai fie un simplu drept abstract și se transformă într-o practică de recunoaștere, iar pluralitatea nu mai este un obstacol, ci o formă de adevăr trăit împreună, în rețeaua interdependențelor globale.

Analiza conceptelor de spațiu public și a modului în care intervențiile discursive modelează viața socială a arătat că, dincolo de diferențele teoretice dintre autorii studiați, există o convergență fundamentală: discursul nu este un element secundar al vieții sociale, ci chiar motorul prin care aceasta se constituie, se transformă și se menține. Fie că vorbim despre rațiunea publică kantiană, despre acțiunea comunicativă habermasiană, despre spațiul apariției la Arendt, despre pragmatismul lui Dewey sau despre hermeneutica dialogului formulată de Dinu, Marga și Tonoiu, esența rămâne aceeași: societatea se naște și se reface permanent prin cuvânt, prin interacțiune și prin participarea simbolică a oamenilor la o lume comună.

În perspectiva lui Kant și Habermas, intervenția discursivă este forța prin care libertatea devine realitate publică și prin care legitimitatea politică poate fi justificată. În viziunea arendtiană, discursul este modul prin care oamenii apar în lume, iar acțiunea își capătă sens. La Dewey, comunicarea devine procesul prin care experiența individuală se deschide către comunitate, transformând publicul într-o entitate reflexivă și capabilă de auto-reglare. Filosofia românească a comunicării completează aceste modele, subliniind dimensiunea simbolică și semiotică a discursului ca mecanism de coeziune și de articulare a identității colective.

În modernitate, intervențiile discursive au fost considerate mijloace de orientare morală și politică; în contemporaneitate, odată cu emergența mediilor digitale, ele devin forțe structurale care reconfigurează arhitectura vizibilității, modul de producere a opiniei publice și formele solidarității. Analizele lui Nancy Fraser și Chantal Mouffe arată că sfera publică nu este un spațiu al consensului perfect, ci o ecologie a pluralității și a confruntării agonale, unde discursurile au rolul de a negocia nu doar argumente, ci și poziții sociale, identități și raporturi de putere. În același timp, teoriile recente asupra spațiului digital (Papacharissi, Castells, Turkle, Floridi) indică faptul că discursul online multiplică participarea, dar produce și noi vulnerabilități: polarizare, supra-expunere, manipulare algoritmică și pierderea profunzimii dialogului.

Într-o lume fragmentată, dominată de fluxuri informaționale rapide, păstrarea unui spațiu public deschis, plural și reflexiv devine o condiție a democrației vii. Intervențiile discursive nu mai pot fi gândite doar ca exerciții retorice, ci ca acte de responsabilitate față de lumea comună. Acolo unde cuvântul este folosit pentru a ilumina, pentru a asculta și pentru a construi sens împreună, viața socială își regăsește coerența și vitalitatea. Acolo unde discursul devine instrument de manipulare, de excludere sau de fragmentare, spațiul public se degradează, iar democrația își pierde fundamentul etic.

Concluzia finală este că intervențiile discursive reprezintă una dintre cele mai profunde și mai subtile forme de acțiune socială. Ele pot crea sau destrăma solidarități, pot deschide sau închide orizonturi, pot uni sau pot polariza. În acest sens, înțelegerea discursului devine esențială pentru înțelegerea lumii sociale însăși: un spațiu în continuă negociere, unde libertatea, pluralitatea și responsabilitatea se exprimă prin cuvânt, iar cuvântul, la rândul său, modelează condițiile posibilității de a trăi împreună.

SIMILARITIES AND DIFFERENCES IN THE CASE OF ROMANIAN SHIP TRAGEDIES IN THE 21ST CENTURY

Anca Gabriela Glogoveanu
PhD Student, „Dunărea de Jos" University of Galați

Abstract: The laws of nature have demonstrated that great civilizations were born and prospered due to the exploitation of fertile lands and river and maritime navigation route, which became communication and trade routes between different areas of the world, and the marine environment was one of the factors that favored this. Over time, the Black Sea became a bridge between the mysterious and promising East in resources and the civilized West of old Europe. The sea, this blue window open to the world, with which Romanian was also blessed, allowed the inhabitants of these lands to establish solid briges of communication with many of the peoples of the world. Disasters are a series of events of major importance, and the tragedies caused by them can strike anytime, anywhere and anyone. Only 3 years had passed since the catastrophe of the ship Independenta, and another large-tonnage ship Unirea, would sink in the waters of the Black Sea.

Introducere

Calitățile marinărești ale dacilor și romanilor, strămoșii noștrii, curajul și dârzenia, calmul în lupta cu valurile Dunării, sau cu furtunile mării s-au transmis poporului român care a continuat să locuiască și să muncească în spațiul carpato-danubiano-pontic[1]. După retragerea administrației și a armatei romane din Dacia, pe Dunăre și pe Marea Neagră au continuat să navigheze daco-romanii, iar apoi urmașii acestora, românii. Marinarii, oameni îndrăzneți, dârji, iscusiți în mânuirea navelor, căliți în lupta cu forțele aspre ale naturii, care prețuiesc libertatea mai mult decât orice pe lume, au practicat această îndeletnicire din cele mai îndepărtate timpuri, atât pe apele interioare românești, cât și pe cele de la hotare atât pe fluviul Dunărea cât și în largul Mării Negre. Parte integrantă din istoria țării noastre, evoluția marinei române cunoaște un trecut bogat, complex și interesant prin specificul său, care este strâns legat de evoluția transporturilor maritime, arealul în care acestea s-au desfășurat și mijloacele de navigație utilizate de-a lungul timpului. Mijloacele de navigație românești pe Dunăre, pe unele râuri mari ale țării, cât și pe Marea Neagră, s-au dezvoltat și perfecționat în decursul veacurilor, în raport de evoluția tehnicilor navale universale și în armonie cu condițiile geografice și istorice românești.

Legile naturii au demonstrat că marile civilizații s-au născut și au prosperat datorită exploatării pământurilor roditoare și căilor de navigație fluviale și maritime, care s-au constituit în căi de comunicație și schimburi comerciale între diferite zone ale lumii, iar mediul marin a fost unul din factorii care au favorizat acest lucru[2]. Dezvoltarea Europei și a Orientului Apropiat s-a concentrat în jurul Mării Mediterane. Civilizația egipteană, feniciană și cretană au înflorit rând pe rând pe malurile acestei mări, care în perioada Imperiului Roman a fost asimilată cu o mare interioară.

De-a lungul timpului, Marea Neagră s-a constituit într-o punte de legătură între Orientul misterios și promițător în resurse și Apusul civilizat al bătrânei Europe. În perioada modernă, numeroase porturi s-au dezvoltat pe țărmurile Oceanului Atlantic și ale Pacificului, centrul de greutate al concurenței comerciale deplasându-se de pe uscat pe apă, fapt ce a condus la rivalități de ordin politico-economic între marile puteri mondiale. Marea, această fereastră albastră deschisă spre lume, cu care a fost binecuvântată și România a permis locuitorilor acestor meleaguri să stabilească solide punți de comunicare cu multe din popoarele lumii. Spiritul cutezător al înaintașilor noștrii au făcut ca o asemenea comoară să fie păstrată, apărată și îmbogățită. "Marea cea Mare", cum o numea domnitorul Mircea cel Bătrân, a constituit o cale sigură, convenabilă și aproape permanentă pentru realizarea schimburilor de valori materiale și spirituale cu celelalte state ale lumii civilizate. Slăbirea dominației otomane asupra Țărilor Române, începând cu a doua jumătate a secolului al XVIII-lea și prima jumătate a secolului al XIX-lea, a dat posibilitatea "lansării la apă" a unor nave sub pavilion românesc precum și înființarea serviciilor și activităților de transport maritim și fluvial[3].

Deși a fost o vreme când Țările Române, nu au beneficiat de drumul mării, după Tratatul de la Adrianopol din 1829, navele românești încep să străbată cu regularitate oceanul planetar, contribuind substanțial la deschiderea spre lume[4]. Ca urmare a aplicării acestui important act legislativ internațional, s-au creat condițiile pentru înființarea marinei comerciale și militare moderne, pentru dezvoltarea porturilor și șantierelor navale, pentru organizarea unor instituții care să contribuie la bunul mers al navigației. După Războiul de Independență din 1877 dezvoltarea navigației românești, a porturilor și a șantierelor de construcții navale au cunoscut un avânt însemnat. În ultimele decenii ale secolului al XIX-lea au apărut două servicii de navigație: Navigația Fluvială Română și Serviciul Maritim Român, având fiecare personal de specialitate și parc de nave, care a fost mărit continuu în anii ce au urmat.

Oceanul planetar a oferit omului, dintotdeauna, nenumărate resurse pentru a trăi. Civilizația umană, a găsit de-a lungul timpului în mările și oceanele lumii, condiții de dezvoltare și posibilitatea desfășurării unei importante varietăți de activități precum navigația,[5] transportul pe apă și pescuitul. Dezvoltarea navigației a pus ființa umană în situația de a căuta și găsi drumuri maritime noi, care au înlesnit descoperirea de noi teritorii și zone, insule, peninsule bogate în materii prime și hrană. Suprafața globului pământesc este acoperită în proporție de aproximativ 70% de mări și oceane. Acest spațiu marin și lacustru, bogat în resurse naturale, atât biologice, cât și minerale, constituie un câmp vast pentru activitatea creatoare a omului încă din cele mai vechi timpuri. Astfel, mările și oceanele au fost și au avut dintotdeauna o importanță vitală pentru omenire, ele reprezentând căi de comunicație indispensabile economiei mondiale.

Inițial în zone restrânse, în perioada antichității, ulterior în spații marine vaste, oamenii și-au exercitat una din cele mai vechi profesii, aceea de navigator, comerciant pe mare și pescar. Țările ce se aflau în plin avânt industrial, datorită progreselor tehnicii, dispuneau de producția de mărfuri dar, în schimb aveau nevoie de materii prime. Aceste nevoi au determinat multe dintre acestea să pornească pe căile mărilor și oceanelor lumii în căutarea de noi teritorii cu asemenea resurse. A luat naștere epoca descoperirilor geografice care a dus la practicarea transporturilor de mărfuri, schimburilor și tranzacțiilor comerciale ce s-au desfășurat pe o rețea de drumuri și căi de comunicații maritime. Mările și oceanele lumii au devenit un câmp de activități comerciale și de prosperitate a civilizației umane, deschis mai întâi celor mai puternice țări, în prezent fiind practicat atât de cei cu tradiție în domeniul navigației cât și de țări a căror așezare geografică permite acest lucru. Traficul bogat de mărfuri[6] a creat o concurență urmată de conflicte politice care au degenerat în confruntări navale cu scopul de a lovi, distruge sau acapara comerțul adversarului[7].

Pentru obținerea avantajelor în domeniul transportului maritim de mărfuri, unele țări puternice și-au declarat politica maritimă care a avut drept scop declanșarea unei lupte înverșunate pentru stăpânirea unor zone cât mai întinse ale oceanului planetar. Confruntările navale pentru câștigarea supremației maritime au avut loc în mai toate conflagrațiile de pe glob, din cele mai vechi timpuri, și au continuat secole la rând, până în epoca modernă. Pentru realizarea politicii maritime de supremație și expansiune, unele țări dezvoltate și-au creat flote comerciale mari dar și flote militare puternice.

Omenirea, din dorința de a preveni și înlătura conflictele de orice natură, de a reglementa activitatea la bordul navelor, raporturile dintre armatori și echipaje, maniera de formare a personalului navigant și de specialitate, cât și alte activități specifice, precum ocrotirea vieții pe mare, semnalizarea, remorcajul, poluarea, au creat și îmbunătățit în timp acte normative cu caracter reglementativ și punitiv acceptate de marea majoritate a națiunilor.

De-a lungul anilor, în Oceanul Planetar în general și în Marea Neagră în special, Marina Română, cea Militară dar, și cea Comercială nu au fost ocolite de furtuni, catastrofe și accidente navale, soldate cu scufundarea a zeci de nave și pierderi importante de vieți omenești[8]. Conform statisticilor, pe coastele Mării Negre au naufragiat 46 de nave dintre care 16 grecești, 9 românești, 6 engleze, 3 norvegiene, 2 franceze și 2 rusești. Chiar dacă transportul maritim este considerat printre cele mai sigure mijloace de transport din lume, ținând cont de caracteristicile acestuia, accidentele maritime pot produce adevărate dezastre cu efecte pe termen lung, în special asupra mediului. Într-o astfel de situație, comandantul navei trebuie să ia imediat toate măsurile necesare pentru asigurarea vieții marinarilor, prevenirea deteriorării navei, a încărcăturii și a mediului înconjurător[9]. Notificarea timpurie a unei situații de pericol sau urgență, tuturor celor care pot fi implicați, este deosebit de importantă pentru salvarea pasagerilor, echipajului navei, navei sau mărfurilor și nu mai puțin importantă, limitarea sau chiar prevenirea poluării mediului.

Pe plan mondial, salvarea pe mare a fost și este o preocupare constantă, ținând cont că resursa umană este cea mai prețioasă și luând în considerare timpul necesar formării și instruirii personalului navigant[10]. Aceste preocupări s-au materializat de-a lungul timpului prin îmbunătățirea caracteristicilor de flotabilitate, nescufundabilitate și stabilitatea navelor construite, dotarea acestora cu instalații și echipamente de salvare, supraviețuire și comunicații moderne, instituirea unor organisme și servicii de supraveghere, avertizare și intervenții, în situații de urgență, și nu în ultimul rând, formarea inițială și formarea continuă a echipajelor navelor. În ciuda tuturor îmbunătățirilor tehnologice și a reglementărilor internaționale privind siguranța maritimă, industria navală are de înfruntat un factor care rămâne critic în producerea accidentelor maritime, eroarea umană[11]. Cu toate acestea, în industria maritimă există o continuă provocare, cea a evitării și minimalizării efectelor negative ale erorii umane în operațiunile maritime, în pofida tuturor îmbunătățirilor tehnologice aduse navelor și a reglementărilor internaționale privind siguranța maritimă.

Peste 75% din sinistrele maritime sunt atribuite factorului uman, între factorii care determină producerea acestora numărându-se deficiența în pregătirea echipajelor, subiect asupra căruia autoritățile din industria maritimă se concentrează foarte mult. Conform statisticilor, la fiecare 36 de ore o navă naufragiază, iar la fiecare 90 de minute o navă suferă o avarie în larg. Pornind de la aceste considerente, România trebuie să aibă o poziție fermă și transparentă în problema evitării unor astfel de incidente și accidente în zona sa de responsabilitate a Mării Negre întrucât accidentele de pe platformele petroliere offshore din Marea Neagră, sau în alte zone ale lumii[12], se pot produce foarte ușor, incidente care de-a lungul timpului s-au soldat, cu peste 200.000 de pierderi de vieți omenești.

Asemănări și deosebiri în cazul tragediilor navelor românești Independența și Unirea în secolul al XXI lea.

Obținerea independenței naționale și dezvoltarea economico-socială a României după 1878 au creat condiții favorabile dezvoltării activităților de navigație dar și a mijloacelor de transport maritim și a porturilor românești. Până la primul război mondial are loc un proces de organizare a navigației, înființându-se în marina comercială cele două servicii de navigație: Navigația Fluvială Română și Serviciul Maritim Român, iar în marina militară, cele două mari unități: Divizia de Dunăre și Divizia de Mare[13].A început procesul de reconstrucție a porturilor, făcându-se numeroase amenajări și instalații moderne, înlocuindu-se vechile instalații, un important pas în acest proces fiind introducerea iluminatului electric în incintele portuare. Odată cu revenirea Dobrogei la teritoriul României și câștigarea accesului la mare, s-a pus problema organizării transportului maritim. Serviciul Maritim Român a fost prima instituție de navigație românească, înființat în 1895, după războiul ruso-româno-turc din anii 1877-1878 și desființat după cel de-al Doilea Război Mondial, în 1945.

În Războiul pentru reîntregirea națională(1916-1918), pasagerele și o parte din cargourile SMR au fost închiriate guvernului rus pentru a fi transformate în crucișătoare auxiliare, sau pentru a puteafi folosite de Servicul Transporturilor Ruse din Marea Neagră. Cargoul SMR București, împreună cu cele aparținând societății particulare România, rămase în afara strâmtorilor, au efectuat transporturi de muniții pentru România și Aliați din Marea Neagră, ajungând chiar în Oceanul Înghețat de Nord[14]. Contribuția marinarilor la îndeplinirea idealului Unirii reprezintăun capitol important în istoria marinei românești și un punct de plecare în activitatea marinei militare române din cel de-al doilea război mondial, unde militarii marinari români vor avea de asemenea o contribuție semnificativă în desfășurarea ostilităților militare. Intrarea României în cel De-al Doilea Război Mondial a reorientat politica navală a țării către executarea misiunilor impuse de desfășurarea ostilităților, ostilități care pentru flota românească, ca de fapt, pentru întreaga economie națională, au avut consecințe dezastruoase. La 1 martie 1945, după cedarea primului lot de vase către statul sovietic, conform art. 11 al Convenției de Armistițiu, în folosința economiei naționale românești au rămas 14 unități cu propulsie și 232 unități fără propulsie. Acest lucru a însemnat reducerea cu aproximativ 45% a capacității de transport fluvial a României. Refacerea și dotarea Flotei Maritime Comerciale Române, cu suprastructurile necesare, a fost un proces de lungă durată și deosebit de dificil în condițiile existenței societăților mixte sovieto-române, în acest caz SOVROM-TRANSPORT, prin care partea sovietică a putut controla și impune politica proprie în cele mai importante sectoare ale economiei naționale. În anul 1954, când guvernul sovietic a transmis guvernului României cota sa de participare la sovromuri, navele Marinei Comerciale au trecut în proprietatea Întreprinderii de Navigație Maritimă și Fluvială NAVROM, care a demarat dificila misiune de reconstrucție și dezvoltare a Marinei Comerciale Române. Începând cu anul 1960, s-au alocat sume importante în domeniul construcțiilor de nave și pentru achiziționarea de nave din șantiere străine, astfel încât în anul 1989, flota maritimă românească număra 297 de nave, iar cea fluvială peste 650 de unități. În pofida acestei creșteri numerice, numeroși factori de ordin tehnic, economic și strategic au influențat negativ activitatea flotei, pe fundalul greutăților cu care s-a confruntat întreaga economie.

De-a lungul anilor, Marina Română atât în Marea Neagră cât și pe mările și oceanele lumii nu a fost ocolită de furtuni, catastrofe și accidente navale, soldate cu scufundarea a zeci de nave și pierderi importante de vieți omenești[15]. Parte integrantă din istoria țării noastre, istoria marinei române are un trecut bogat, complex și interesant prin specificul său. Mijloacele de navigație românești pe Dunăre și pe Marea Neagră s-au dezvoltat și perfecționat în decursul anilor, în raport cu evoluția tehnicii navale specifice sud-estului Europei, în concordanță cu condițiile geografice și de relief românești. Astfel, mările și oceanele lumii au avut dintotdeauna o importanță vitală pentru omenire, ele reprezentând căile prin care s-au realizat transporturile comerciale maritime, parte importantă a economiei mondiale.

La 15 noiembrie 1979, când se pregătea să treacă Bosforul venind dinspre Libia, nava Independența, încărcată cu țiței a fost lovită de nava grecească Evriali. Urmarea acestei coliziuni a fost izbucnirea unui incendiu de proporții la bordul Independenței și datorită încărcăturii speciale (țiței) focul nu a putut fi stins o lună de zile. Dintre cei 45 de marinari din echipaj, 42 și-au găsit sfârșitul în urma acestui accident naval. În ziua de 14 noiembrie 1979, în jurul orei 16.00 încărcat cu peste 94.280 tone de petrol brut din Libia, petrolierul Independența, sub pavilion românesc de 150.000 tone brut, a intrat în Marea Marmara, prin rada Bosforului. După ce vasul și-a petrecut noaptea în rada Bosforului, în dimineața de 15 noiembrie 1979 s-a pus în mișcare și a anunțat la orele 4 dimineața prin recepție stația de pilotaj[16] pentru efectuarea manevrelor de pilotaj. În acel moment, petrolierul Banat sub pavilion românesc care se afla în stația de pilotaj a cerut pilot. În general comandanții navelor cer pilot cu o oră înainte de a ajunge în fața stației de pilotaj și având în considerație că navele care cer acest lucru se prezintă în fața stației de pilotaj după două ore sau mai devreme, funcționarul a cerut comandantului petrolierul Independența, să îi comunice locul unde se află vasul, acesta răspunzându-i că se află la 2 Mm.

În timpul acesta, vasul Evriali l-a lăsat (debarcat) pe pilotul Dimcer în rada stației Harempilot ce fusese îmbarcat intrarea în Bosfor din Marea Neagră. Vasul care era încărcat cu laminate din U.R.S.S., își continua drumul fără pilot la trecerea în Marea Marmara. Comandantul de pe Independența, care a văzut vasul, a semnalizat și a dat de asemenea semnal sonor prin porta-voce, pentru a avertiza că are prioritate, dar a fost prea târziu. Vasul grecesc a lovit petrolierul românesc încărcat cu petrol, în centru din partea stângă. În urma acestei lovituri, la bordul petrolierului Independența, a izbucnit o explozie din care cauză petrolul a luat foc, provocând panică în oraș și producând o mare pagubă. În acest fel, petrolierul *Independența*a eșuat în flăcări în afara digului Haydarpașa. Din echipajul petrolierului, compus din 45 de persoane, s-au salvat sărind în mare, doar trei membrii de echipaj: comandantul, mecanicul șef și marinarul. Restul de 42 persoane au murit arse, dintre acestea foarte puține cadravre au fost scoase din mare. Vasul Evriali, scăpat din coliziune, s-a retras în rada direcției Agrikapi, cu toate că și la bordul său au fost câteva explozii nu s-a întâmplat nimic grav pentru că exploziile au fost stinse în scurt timp. Petrolul brut care s-a deversat în scurt timp din tancul petrolier, a luat foc și a provocat o mare panică în port și în oraș, periclitând operațiunile de la ieșire din Bosfor a vaselor din Marea Marmara. De asemenea, fost un mare pericol de incendiu în oraș, îndeosebi la clădirile de pe faleză[17]. Incendiul a durat 29 de zile și nopți, fiind stins în dimineața zilei de 14 decembrie 1979. Din cauza stării grave în care se afla, Independența a fost considerată pierdere totală și definitivă. Statul român prin proprietarul navei, Navrom Constanța a primit circa 60 milioane de dolari din partea asiguratorului Adas București.

Operațiunile de recuperare ale epavei au fost efectuate de către armata turcă pe parcursul a șase ani și a ridicat costuri de circa 18 milioane de dolari. Bucăți din epavă au stat mai mulți ani în apă, ulterior ele au fost aduse în țară și aruncate pe un câmp din Tuzla.

Din mărturii, concluzia la care s-a ajuns a fost aceea că, rămânând pe vas, comandantul petrolierului Independența, a ars în flăcări, totuși cadavrul nu a fost găsit. Vinovat de producerea accidentului, este comandantul navei grecești în vârstă de doar 29 de ani, a fost pus inițial sub supraveghere, interzicându-i-se să părăsească Turcia, ulterior fiind arestat, judecat și condamnat la 20 de luni de închisoare, perioadă transformată într-o cauțiune de 850 de dolari. Și ca suferința să fie și mai mare, în România catastrofa a fost ținută sub tăcere de către autoritățile comuniste.

În ziua de 13 octombrie 1982 orele 3.00 local, tancul Unirea, în stare bună de navigabilitate cu echipaj corespunzător și complet, a plecat din portul Constanța, în balast și sub gaz inert, cu destinația Side Kerir, pentru încărcare țiței[18]. Nava a fost construită în Șantierul Naval Maritim Constanța, în conformitate cu proiectul întocmit de firma Sener-Spania, sub simbolul PN-180 și avizat de Lloyd's Register of Shipping. Construcția a fost supravegheată de Registrul Naval Român, care i-a acordat clasă superioară categoriei respective de petroliere, destinată navigației maritime și oceanice în zone de navigație nelimitate. Construcția a fost conformă cu regulile și regulamentele internaționale, predată I.E.F.M. Navrom Constanța la data de 30 octombrie 1979. În ziua de 12 octombrie 1982, tancul Unirea a fost supus inspecției R.N.R. (Registrului Naval Român), cu care ocazie i s-a confirmat clasa și i s-a eliberat actele de rigoare, care atestau buna stare tehnică a navei[19]. Conform mențiunilor din registrul și buletinul de pilotaj, în momentul ieșirii tancului Unirea din port, vântul era din E-SE cu forța 6. În cursul marșului până la locul exploziei și al pierderii totale a navei, vântul a fost din NE forța 5-6, marea cu valuri și hulă groasă din direcția Est, curentul 0,5 Nd cu direcția Sud și vizibilitatea bună. Înainte de începerea marșului, comandantul navei și-a instruit ofițerii de punte asupra drumului și condițiilor de navigație, până la destinație, insistând asupra drumului și condițiilor de navigație, până la destinație, insistând asupra respectării RIPAM și a menținerii drumului. S-au verificat aparatele de navigație și cele de guvernarea navei, precum și documentele de navigație. La orele 3:05 tancul Unirea se afla travers Farului de la ieșirea din portul Constanța. Se dă liber celor 5 remorchere care au ajutat la manevra de plecare, și se coboară pilotul. La orele 3:30 se pune mașina pe drum și se navigă pe rute variind între 130 grade și 140 grade, în scopul evitării navelor ancorate în rada portului Constanța. După ieșirea petrolierului în larg, s-a angajat pe un drum de Sud care trecea la o distanța de 12-13 Mm de coastă, pentru a ateriza la o distanța de 175 grade, conform planului trasat din timp pe hartă. Motorul tancului funcționa normal, cu 116 rotații pe minut și mai erau în funcție Diesel generatoarele 1 și 2, consum sarcină 900 Kw, pompele și instalațiile necesare marșului fiind în perfectă stare de funcționare. Viteza medie de navigație era de 4,5 Nd, distanța parcursă 43,5 Mm în 3 ore. La orele 8:00, s-au predat carturile după care comandantul navei a urcat pe comandă, verificând drumul navei, desfășurarea navigației, apoi a intrat în stația radio a navei, pentru redactarea avizurilor radio către locul de încărcare. Erau orele 9:15 la circa 40 Mm S-SE de Cap Kaliakra când s-a produs o explozie foarte puternică în dreptul tancului nr. 3 babord. S-a simțit o zguduitură și deasupra punții s-a ridicat o pală înaltă de flăcări și mult fum negru și bucăți de metal au căzut pe punte. Comandantul petrolierului a dat imediat ordin ofițerului de cart să dea alarma de incendiu prin stația de comunicare internă și sonerie. În momentul exploziei toate geamurile de la comanda navei s-au spart, cei din comandă fiind proiectați în toate direcțiile, șocul fiind resimțit și în restul compartimentelor navei[20].

Comandantul a ordonat stoparea motorului, iar șefului mecanic care a urcat la comandă, i-a comandat să pună în funcțiune pompele de stins incendiu cu apă și spumă. Echipajul a trecut imediat la posturile de incendiu și au început să acționeze cu mijloacele din dotare. Cu toate că pompele erau în funcțiune la maximă capacitate jetul de apă abia ajungea la 5 metri din cauză că tubulatura principală era ruptă de șocul exploziei. Comandantul a ordonat să se mențină Diesel generatoarele și să se oprească căldările. Totodată a ordonat, șefului RTG să pună în funcțiune cheia automată radio pentru transmiterea SOS, și să închidă ușile etanșe de la punți, care din păcate nu mai puteau fi închise din cauza de fluxului exploziei. Deși echipajul a continuat să acționeze pentru salvarea navei, intensitatea incendiului creștea, trepidațiile se accentuau și în zona centrală a tancului se auzeau zgomote de bucăți metal care se rupeau. Către orele 9:35 s-a produs o trepidație puternică a corpului navei, însoțită de trosnituri de metal, în zona centrală și pe partea dinspre pupa, care s-a înclinat brusc la babord până la circa 8 grade- 9 grade. Comandantul și-a dat seama că nava era foarte avariată și că în situația din acel moment se aștepta la un pericol real pentru viața navei și a echipajului, așa că a ordonat lansarea la apă a bărcilor de salvare, evacuarea echipajului, la bord rămânând doar el, cu șeful mecanic și alți 4 membrii ai echipajului. Comandantul navei a ordonat ofițerilor de cart să ia cu dânșii în barcă documentele navei, jurnalele de bord și de mașină, jurnalul RTG, hărțile de navigație, carnetele de marinari și tot ce era legat de navă, inclusiv ștampila navei[21]. Documentele nu au mai putut fi recuperate întrucât au căzut cu totul în apă și au fost distruse, datorită mării care era agitată. La orele 10:20 incendiul avansa, înclinarea dinspre pupa tancului ajunsese la 10 grade babord, în timp ce partea dinspre prova tancului abia se bandase la babord[22]. Comandantul văzând că nu mai poate face nimic decide evacuarea ultimilor oameni de la bord, părăsind nava sărind în apă pe la pupa. Cauza cea mai probabilă a exploziei tancului Unirea a fost că în intervalul de timp cât tancul nr. 3 central a fost deschis, în atmosfera din interiorul acestuia, în imediata apropiere a gurii de vizitare, s-a format o mixtură explozivă. Inițierea exploziei acestei mixturi putea avea mai multe cauze dar cea mai probabilă pare a o avea descărcare electrică, datorată acumulărilor electrostatice, cauza certă a aprinderii fiind necunoscută. În urma șocului exploziei, tubulatura navei a fost afectată, fapt ce a dus la inundarea tancurilor din zona centrală a navei. Pătrunderea apei în zona centrală a navei a dus la pierderea flotabilității navei, corpul navei a fost supus la eforturi mari, care combinate cu înaintarea navei, datorate hulei și valurilor au dus la slăbirea treptată a navei ducând, în final la ruperea elementelor de rezistență în zona centrală a navei[23].

Încă de la începuturile omenirii, apa a fost resursa cea mai importantă și unul dintre factorii principali pentru dezvoltarea civilizației și a transportului pe apă. Transportul maritim de azi a început cu cea mai veche barcă, canoea Pesse, ajungând astăzi la navele gigantice cu tonaje de ordinul miilor, lucru ce a adus după sine crearea de piețe noi și intergrarea lor în rețeaua de transport global. Flota comercială maritimă este un sector industrial uneori ignorat, care trece de multe ori neobsevat, chiar și pentru cei care locuiesc la malul mării. O îndeletnicire care își are rădăcinile în antichitate, navigația este cea cu ajutotul căreia s-au înfăptuit cele mai importante descoperiri geografice și care a răspândit pe toate continentele marile descoperiri stiințifice. Apărută din dorința de a găsi noi piețe de desfacere pentru comercianții din antichitate, navigația fluvială, dar și cea maritimă a reprezentat și reprezintă și în prezent factorul de care a unit și unește națiunile lumii, prin intermediul său se realizează mai cea mai mare parte a transporturilor comerciale din întreaga lume, navele pot ajunge în cele mai îndepărtate colțuri ale lumii, sunt printre cele mai sigure și rapide mijloace de transport între continente, într-un cuvânt una din forțele motrice ale globalizării. Dezvoltarea și răspândirea activităților de comerț pe calea apelor de-a lungul istoriei a adus după sine și apariția unor evenimente care au marcat negativ existența societății umane, accidentele de navigație, naufragii, eșuări de nave, coliziuni cu țărmuri și nu în ultimul rând scufundări de nave care de multe ori s-au soldat cu victime omenești. În prezent la aceste probleme se mai adaugă unele de mare importanță și actualitate: poluarea marină, traficul de persoane sau de produse interzise, imigrația ilegală, protejarea florei și faunei marine.

Înființarea SMR-ului și a NFR-ului în 1895 a fost o necesitate imediată după Războiul de Independență câștigându-se accesul neîngrădit la Marea Neagră impunându-se problema transportului maritim românesc. Companii de mare succes în perioada antebelică cele două, NFR și SMR, au asigurat, prin rechiziționare de către stat din propriul parc naval, dotarea Armatei Române cu nave de război. Pe structura celor două companii se vor constitui după plecarea trupelor sovietice din România în anul 1958 viitoarele instituții de navigație românești, care cu unele modificări funcționează și astăzi, ANR, APMC. Ulterior, după cel de-al Doilea Război Mondial acest serviciu a fost desființat și confiscat de Guvernul Sovietic, un sfârșit nedemn pentru flota românească, și pentru una dintre cele mai de succes companii din România. După anul 1960 statul român a investit sume considerabile pentru construcția de nave în șantierele românești, astfel încât în 1989 flota maritimă număra peste 297 de nave, iar cea fluvială peste 650 de unități. Făcând parte din istoria țării noastre, evoluția marinei române comerciale a cunoscut un trecut bogat, complex și interesant prin mijloacele de navigație românești, care s-au dezvoltat și perfecționat, în concordanță cu evoluția tehnicii navale universale, dar în același timp nefiind ocolite de tragediile care au avut loc în portul Constanța și în apropierea coastei românești a Mării Negre.

Nașterea, mărirea și dispariția Serviciului Maritim Român reprezintă om pagină de istorie autentică din trecutul glorios al Marinei Române. O cronică episodic studiată și rareori invocată ca argument solid pentru potențialul nostru uman, comercial și managereial. O istorie din epoca romantică a navigației românești, evocată adesea cu nostalgie de lupii de mare din primele generații de temerari navigatori pontici. După 30 august 1944, navele S.M.R. au fost preluate și exploatate discreționar, fără forme legale de preluare, de la aliatul sovietic, majoritatea comandanților și echipajelor fiind înlocuite. La începutl anul 1945, S.M.R. mai dispunea doar de motonava Transilvania și vaporul Ardeal care, în perioada 1 martie-12 aprilie 1945 au continuat să execute diferite transporturi în Marea Neagră, fiind la dispoziția autorităților sovietice, în cadrul Convenției ce Armistițiu. La 14 iulie 1945 s-a înființat Societatea mixtă româno-sovietică de navigație Sovromtransport, cu un portofoliu de 10 nave, aceasta marcând o jumătate de secol, cât a existat activitatea Serviciului Maritim Român, prima societate națională de navigație românească.

DATAISM AS AN EPISTEMIC DISTORTION IN THE ARCHITECTURE OF THE INFOSPHERE

Florin Ghiurgiu
PhD Student, Technical University of Cluj-Napoca

Abstract: Articolul analizează Dataismul ca metanarațiune emergentă care influențează profund modul contemporan de a înțelege cunoașterea și statutul subiectului epistemic. Pornind de la interpretările lui Yuval Noah Harari și de la artefactele filosofiei informației formulate de Luciano Floridi, prezentul text arată că Dataismul depășește statutul unei simple paradigme tehnologice și tinde să configureze o viziune asupra lumii în care realitatea este redusă la fluxuri de date ce pot fi prelucrate algoritmic. În acest cadru, experiența și deliberarea umană sunt expuse riscului de a fi subordonate criteriilor automatizate de evaluare. Analiza este aprofundată prin aportul fenomenologic al lui Maurice Merleau-Ponty, respectiv Martin Heidegger, filosofi care insistă asupra rolului corporalității, intenționalității și interpretării în constituirea cunoașterii — dimensiuni ce nu pot fi convertite integral în structuri digitale. Pentru a înțelege modul în care infrastructurile digitale modelează distribuția cunoașterii și relațiile sociale, studiul integrează și perspectiva teoriei actor-rețea a lui Bruno Latour. Concluzia subliniază că Dataismul deschide atât posibilități de extindere cognitivă, cât și riscuri semnificative pentru autonomia epistemică. Un cadru al cunoașterii adecvat epocii digitale trebuie să îmbine capacitățile tehnologiei cu practicile interpretative care mențin deschisă pluralitatea sensului.

Accelerarea tehnologică a epocii digitale a generat o formă de discontinuitate conceptuală care depășește simplele inovații tehnice: ea a remodelat condițiile de posibilitate ale cunoașterii, a reconfigurat regimurile de adevăr și a repoziționat subiectul epistemic într-o ordine informațională în care mediul nu mai este un fundal pasiv, ci un actor constitutiv al realității. În noua arhitectură a infosferei[1], ceea ce înțelegem prin „a cunoaște" este indisolubil legat de procesele tehnologice care filtrează, structurează și normalizează însuși câmpul experienței inteligibile.

În acest cadru, Dataismul se configurează ca o metanarațiune emergentă care propune reinterpretarea lumii în termenii unui flux continuu de date, guvernat de algoritmi ce pretind o eficiență superioară deliberării umane. Datele nu mai reprezintă simple suporturi informaționale, ci devin elemente constitutive ale unei ordini cognitive în care experiența umană tinde să fie recalibrată prin logica calculabilului.

Această orientare se înscrie într-o tendință mai largă de interpretare tehnologică a realității, în care modelele algoritmice tind să substituie treptat criteriile tradiționale ale deliberării umane. În acest cadru, procesele de evaluare, selecție și interpretare nu mai sunt concepute ca acte situate ale unui subiect angajat, ci sunt transferate unor proceduri formalizate ce pretind neutralitate și eficiență superioare. Pe măsură ce aceste arhitecturi digitale devin mediatori ai relației noastre cu informația, se produce o recalibrare subtilă a modului în care este configurată autoritatea epistemică: validarea nu mai derivă din argumentare, experiență sau dialog, ci din performanța unui sistem capabil să identifice tipare și să optimizeze rezultate. Astfel, tehnologia nu se limitează la a sprijini actul cunoașterii, ci începe să-i contureze granițele, orientând treptat modul în care realitatea este percepută, ordonată și făcută inteligibilă.

[1] Infosfera desemnează arhitectura globală a entităților și proceselor informaționale, adică mediul în care se desfășoară activitățile de producere, vehiculare, tezaurizare și interpretare a datelor. Este un concept predominant descriptiv (propus de Luciano Floridi) nu spune cum ar trebui să fie organizată puterea, ci cum este structurată realitatea informațională.

I. Dataismul ca reconfigurare a cadrului epistemic contemporan

Yuval Noah Harari surprinde esența acestei mutații atunci când afirmă că „Dataismul adoptă o abordare strict funcțională asupra umanității, evaluând valoarea experiențelor umane în funcție de rolul lor în mecanismele de procesare a datelor. Dacă dezvoltăm un algoritm care îndeplinește aceeași funcție mai bine, experiențele umane își vor pierde valoarea. (...) Dacă un umanist începe să laude sacralitatea experienței umane, dataistul ar respinge o astfel de absurditate sentimentală.”[2] În această formulare devine vizibilă tensiunea dintre experiența trăită și criteriile algoritmice de evaluare a realității, tensiune ce redefinește raportul dintre subiect și cunoaștere.

Într-o direcție complementară, teoria infosferei dezvoltată de Luciano Floridi permite înțelegerea transformărilor digitale nu doar ca evoluții tehnice, ci ca reorganizări ale mediului ontologic în care se constituie cunoașterea. Floridi observă că „odată cu proliferarea actuală a dispozitivelor, senzorilor, roboților și aplicațiilor, precum și a acestor tehnologii emergente, am intrat într-o nouă fază a erei informaționale – o fază în care hibridizarea dintre biți și alte forme ale realității este atât de profundă încât schimbă radical condiția umană în moduri profunde.”[3]

Această perspectivă subliniază dimensiunea etică a noilor condiții epistemice și necesitatea unor cadre normative care să protejeze autonomia cognitivă și diversitatea experienței.

- Identitate, informație și emergența epistemologiei algoritmice

Influența Dataismului depășește sfera procesării informației și afectează modul în care sunt configurate identitățile și relațiile interumane. Într-un ecosistem digital dominat de logici predictive, subiectul nu mai este doar utilizator al unor instrumente tehnologice, ci devine el însuși un nod într-o arhitectură informațională care îi modelează preferințele, dispozițiile și chiar modalitățile de comprehensiune. Centralizarea datelor în infrastructuri controlate de corporații reduce accesul la diversitatea perspectivelor și diminuează autonomia cognitivă a individului, care ajunge să se raporteze la sine prin intermediul unor modele algoritmice. Astfel, identitatea nu mai este construită printr-un proces reflexiv, ci prin acțiunea unor profile digitale ce funcționează ca matrici normative ale comportamentului. În acest sens, Dataismul nu reorganizează doar distribuția informației, ci redefinește cadrul în care indivizii își negociază sensurile, relațiile și apartenențele.

Această transformare este întărită de extinderea proceselor digitale care convertesc tot mai multe aspecte ale vieții sociale în date analizabile întrucât „metadatele și datele au devenit o monedă de schimb obișnuită prin care cetățenii își plătesc serviciile de comunicare și securitate—un compromis care s-a instalat confortabil în rutina majorității oamenilor. Dataficarea își are rădăcinile în afirmații ontologice și epistemologice problematice. Fiind parte a unei logici mai largi a rețelelor sociale, aceasta prezintă caracteristicile unei credințe seculare răspândite. Dataismul, așa cum este denumită această convingere, este atât de eficient deoarece masele de oameni—naiv sau inconștient—își încredințează informațiile personale platformelor corporative.”[4]

Din această perspectivă, Dataismul se prezintă ca o alternativă la narațiunile tradiționale ale umanismului, substituind accentul pus pe experiența subiectivă cu criterii de validare bazate pe cuantificare. Adevărul și cunoașterea nu mai derivă din interpretare, reflecție sau revelație culturală, ci din capacitatea algoritmică de a identifica tipare și de a formula predicții. Rezultă astfel o „epistemologie algoritmică”, în care judecata este automatizată, iar procesele decizionale privilegiază eficiența și optimizarea în detrimentul deliberării critice.

Tensiunea dintre aceste două modele nu reprezintă doar o diferență metodologică, ci semnalează o schimbare profundă în modul în care societățile contemporane înțeleg și utilizează cunoașterea, cu implicații directe asupra autonomiei individuale și a structurii spațiului public. În măsura în care criteriile algoritmice devin instanțe de validare epistemică, cunoașterea nu mai este rezultatul unei interacțiuni interpretative între subiecți, ci un produs care circulă în forme standardizate, optimizate pentru procesare și eficiență. Această mutație afectează nu doar modul în care sunt formate opiniile, ci și condițiile în care poate avea loc deliberarea colectivă, întrucât spațiul public se reorganizează în funcție de vizibilitatea conferită de infrastructurile digitale. Adevărul tinde să fie asociat cu performanța tehnică, nu cu robustețea argumentării, ceea ce conduce la o diminuare a capacității individului de a evalua critic informația și de a participa activ la configurarea sensului comun.

- Fenomenologie, Gestell și limitele Dataismului

Presupoziția centrală a Dataismului, potrivit interpretării lui Yuval Noah Harari, este aceea că realitatea și experiența pot fi descrise integral prin structuri de date, iar procesele cognitive umane pot fi reproduse prin analize algoritmice. O asemenea poziție intră însă în tensiune directă cu perspectiva fenomenologică, pentru care subiectivitatea, intenționalitatea și corporalitatea reprezintă condiții constitutive ale cunoașterii.

Maurice Merleau-Ponty[5] subliniază că experiența este inseparabil legată de corporalitate: percepția nu este un simplu act de recepționare a informațiilor, ci o interacțiune situată într-un corp care se mișcă, simte și acționează în lume. Pentru fenomenologie, acest contact originar cu lumea nu este derivat sau mediat de un set de reprezentări, ci constituie solul pre-reflexiv al oricărei înțelegeri. În această lumină, reducerea experienței la indicatori cuantificabili (precum semnalele biometrice sau tiparele comportamentale) nu poate capta sensul trăit al unei emoții sau al unei intenții. Algoritmii pot corela date, dar nu pot reproduce dimensiunea trăită a afectivității sau a percepției, deoarece ceea ce este esențial în experiență nu este doar informația în sine, ci și modul în care este furnizată subiectului într-un orizont de semnificație pe care niciun calcul nu îl poate substitui.

Din perspectiva fenomenologică, experiența nu este o colecție de variabile, ci un mod de a fi în lume, o formă în care percepția și sensul se constituie simultan. Înlocuirea acestei dimensiuni cu date numerice conduce la o pierdere a elementului hermeneutic al cunoașterii, acolo unde sensul se construiește prin interpretare, context și relație, și nu prin simpla acumulare de informații. Reducerea experienței la parametri măsurabili ignoră faptul că înțelegerea presupune un subiect angajat, situat într-o lume pe care nu o observă din exterior, ci o trăiește și o modelează prin propria prezență. Cunoașterea devine, în logica Dataismului, un proces extern și automatizat, în timp ce fenomenologia insistă asupra caracterului intern, reflexiv al actului de a înțelege: un proces în care interpretarea nu poate fi delegată unui algoritm fără a pierde tocmai dimensiunea care conferă sens experienței umane.

Rezultă astfel o opoziție structurală: dacă Dataismul presupune o realitate integral digitalizabilă, fenomenologia afirmă existența unui rest ireductibil (intenționalitatea trăită) care nu poate fi capturat de nicio schemă algoritmică. Acest rest nu este un deficit de informație, ci expresia faptului că experiența umană se constituie într-un orizont al sensului care excede orice formalizare. Reducerea acestui orizont la serii de corespondențe statistice eludează dimensiunea prin care subiectul se raportează la lume ca la un câmp de posibilități, și nu ca la un set de variabile cuantificabile.

Această tensiune are consecințe directe asupra modului în care definim și diseminăm cunoașterea în societatea digitală, unde riscul este acela de a înlocui actul interpretativ cu o succesiune de operații statistice. În viziunea fenomenologică, cunoașterea nu este acumulare de date, ci un proces prin care subiectul conferă sens lumii, iar acest proces presupune o implicare existențială care nu poate fi delegată unui algoritm fără pierderea dimensiunii sale constitutive.

În „Ființă și timp", Martin Heidegger arată că omul nu este un observator exterior al realității, ci un mod de a fi care interpretează și configurează sensul lumii. Dasein-ul nu poate fi redus la opoziția clasică dintre subiect și obiect, deoarece „subiectul și obiectul nu sunt unul și același lucru cu Dasein-ul și lumea"[6]. Această observație delimitează un mod de a înțelege cunoașterea ca practică imposibil de separat de existența celui care cunoaște.

Pornind de aici, Dataismul propune o orientare radical diferită: el tratează cunoașterea ca pe un proces exterior subiectului, un fenomen care poate fi decuplat de experiența trăită și reconstruit în termeni strict algoritmici. Într-o asemenea viziune, actul de a cunoaște este redus la prelucrarea unor informații ce pot fi formalizate complet, iar subiectul este plasat în afara propriului proces cognitiv, ca un observator al datelor care îl definesc. Această externalizare a cunoașterii transformă subiectul uman într-un element pasiv într-o rețea de date, întrucât rolul său nu mai este acela de a interpreta lumea, ci de a furniza materiale pe care algoritmii le pot ordona și exploata. Dimensiunea existențială a cunoașterii se estompează astfel în favoarea corelațiilor statistice, iar experiența trăită (cu imprecizia, ambiguitatea și bogăția ei semantică) este înlocuită de un regim de semnificații produs exclusiv prin calcul.

Heidegger avertizează asupra acestui tip de raportare în reflecția sa despre Gestell, structura prin care tehnologia modernă nu doar organizează realitatea, ci o dezvăluie ca rezervor de resurse disponibile. Gestell-ul nu este o colecție de instrumente, ci modul prin care lumea ajunge să ne apară în termeni de eficiență, control și calculabilitate. Tehnologia, în acest sens, modelează posibilitățile cunoașterii și ale interpretării.

O astfel de orientare riscă să consolideze o dependență structurală a cunoașterii de dispozitivele care o mediază, diminuând capacitatea subiectului de a contesta criteriile tehnice ce organizează realitatea. Într-un asemenea cadru, mecanismele care ordonează experiența devin ele însele opace și, pe alocuri, greu de interogat, iar raportarea la lume este filtrată prin structuri algoritmice ce se autoimpun ca acte normative.

Dataismul poate fi înțeles ca o actualizare a Gestell-ului în condițiile digitalizării. Dacă în modernitate tehnologia orienta raportarea la ființare sub forma resursei, în Dataism această logică este extinsă: realitatea este tratată ca un flux continuu de date, iar algoritmii dobândesc statutul unor criterii normative de validare a adevărului. Astfel, ceea ce la Heidegger era un mod de revelare devine în epoca digitală o schemă de interpretare tot mai cuprinzătoare, care tinde să înlocuiască orice altă formă de raportare la lume, reducând pluralitatea posibilităților de înțelegere la ceea ce poate fi procesat și optimizat computațional.

Consecințele sunt semnificative. Pierderea autonomiei cognitive nu mai reprezintă o simplă ipoteză teoretică, ci efectul vizibil al unei delegări sistematice a facultăților de judecată către procese automate. În timp ce formele istorice de externalizare a cunoașterii (precum apariția scrisului sau instituționalizarea arhivelor) păstrau intact rolul interpretativ al subiectului, în contextul Dataismului însăși operația de interpretare este transferată către algoritmi, adesea în mod dificil de contestat. Subiectul nu mai constituie punctul originar al sensului, ci devine un element integrat într-o arhitectură funcțională de prelucrare a datelor, unde experiența este fragmentată și convertită în variabile măsurabile.

În această lumină, legătura dintre Gestell și Dataism evidențiază același risc fundamental: restrângerea câmpului de înțelegere la ceea ce poate fi cuantificat, optimizat și stabilizat tehnic. Dacă pentru Heidegger pericolul tehnicii consta în eclipsarea adevărului ființei, provocarea epocii digitale constă în necesitatea de a regândi raportul dintre algoritmi și cunoaștere, astfel încât realitatea să nu fie absorbită integral în regimul calculabilului. Într-o asemenea perspectivă, întrebarea nu este doar cum folosim tehnologia, ci cum evităm ca logica ei de funcționare să devină criteriul unic de constituire a adevărului.

- Dataismul, diseminarea cunoașterii și rețelele algoritmice

Un efect major al Dataismului privește modul în care cunoașterea este selecționată, filtrată și diseminată în spațiul digital. Dacă într-o optică fenomenologică cunoașterea autentică presupune un raport direct, interpretativ cu realitatea, Dataismul transferă actul cunoașterii către procese algoritmice care operează autonom, pe baza unor criterii optimizate tehnic și nu hermeneutic. În acest cadru, diseminarea cunoașterii devine un efect secundar al dinamicilor de calcul, al prioritizărilor funcționale ale platformelor și al fluxurilor de date prelucrate automat, fără participarea deliberativă a subiectului.

Un exemplu relevant îl constituie algoritmii de personalizare ai platformelor digitale, care structurează accesul la informație în funcție de istoricul comportamental al utilizatorilor. Această filtrare persistentă modelează nu doar vizibilitatea conținutului, ci și arhitectura posibilului epistemic, reducând expunerea la perspective divergente și reconfigurând implicit orizontul în care utilizatorul poate interpreta realitatea. Această triere continuă generează medii informaționale relativ închise, în care expunerea la perspective divergente este restrânsă semnificativ. Acest fenomen conduce la formarea așa-numitelor „camere de ecou", spații în care utilizatorii întâlnesc aproape exclusiv conținut ce le reafirmă predispozițiile cognitive și afective.

În The Fourth Revolution: How the Infosphere is Reshaping Human Reality, Luciano Floridi subliniază că transformările mediului digital nu afectează doar modul în care accesăm informația, ci și structura realității percepute, deoarece filtrele algoritmice modelează chiar condițiile posibilității experienței informaționale. În această perspectivă, camerele de ecou nu reprezintă simple anomalii ale distribuției informației, ci efecte sistemice ale unei arhitecturi digitale care prioritizează coerența internă în detrimentul pluralității epistemice.

Yuval Noah Harari observă, în aceeași direcție, cum complexitatea algoritmilor contemporani depășește adesea capacitatea de înțelegere a celor care îi creează: „fiecare membru înțelege doar o parte a puzzle-ului și nimeni nu înțelege cu adevărat algoritmul în ansamblu."[7] Această opacitate structurală amplifică dependența utilizatorilor de procese automate care decid ce devine vizibil și ce rămâne invizibil în câmpul informațional.

Într-o perspectivă diferită, dar complementară, Bruno Latour propune prin teoria actor-rețea ideea că realitatea socială și epistemică este constituită din interacțiuni între actori umani și non-umani.

Din acest unghi, algoritmii nu sunt simple instrumente, ci actori care participă activ la producerea și stabilizarea formelor de cunoaștere. Rețelele digitale configurează astfel un mediu în care agenții tehnologici influențează modurile de percepție, de selecție și de validare a informației.

Într-o perspectivă diferită, dar complementară, Bruno Latour arată prin teoria actor-rețea că realitatea socială și epistemică nu este constituită de entități fixe, ci de interacțiuni dinamice dintre actori umani și non-umani. În acest cadru conceptual, algoritmii nu pot fi considerați simple instrumente aflate la dispoziția utilizatorilor, ci actori care intervin efectiv în configurarea și stabilizarea modurilor de cunoaștere. Rețelele digitale devin astfel ecologii hibride, în care agenții tehnologici contribuie la modelarea percepției, a selecției informaționale și a criteriilor prin care un conținut dobândește statut de cunoaștere validă.

O asemenea reorganizare are implicații socio-politice profunde. Algoritmii nu sunt neutri: ei sunt construiți pe baza unor seturi de date marcate de preferințe culturale, economice sau instituționale, iar aceste constrângeri sunt reproduse și amplificate în procesul de filtrare a informației. În consecință, validarea cunoașterii tinde să se deplaseze din spațiul deliberării publice către infrastructuri digitale private, producând o formă de heteronomie epistemică. Utilizatorii nu mai participă activ la constituirea cunoașterii prin confruntare critică, ci consumă un conținut preselectat algoritmic.

În această lumină, Dataismul nu poate fi înțeles doar ca un nou regim epistemologic, ci ca o transformare a arhitecturii sociale a cunoașterii. Relațiile dintre oameni, tehnologii și instituții sunt reconfigurate prin logica automatizării, iar capacitatea individului de a naviga critic spațiul informațional depinde tot mai mult de înțelegerea mecanismelor care structurează accesul la adevăr. Această situație evidențiază necesitatea unor reflecții etice și politice menite să protejeze autonomia epistemică într-un mediu în care procesele algoritmice devin infrastructura implicită a vieții cognitive.

Analiza a evidențiat modul în care Dataismul reconfigurează condițiile de posibilitate ale cunoașterii, instaurând un regim epistemic în care algoritmii devin mediatori privilegiati ai adevărului. În această paradigmă, datele nu reprezintă doar indicatori operaționali, ci constituie infrastructura prin care realitatea este făcută inteligibilă, iar subiectul uman este repoziționat într-un ecosistem cognitiv marcat de externalizarea interpretării. Dataismul funcționează ca o metanarativă ce uniformizează diferențele dintre domeniile experienței și erodează rolul subiectului ca agent constitutiv al sensului, substituindu-i treptat facultățile hermeneutice prin proceduri algoritmice optimizate tehnic.

Această transformare capătă consistență atunci când este corelată cu lectura heideggeriană a tehnicii: dacă modernitatea tindea să dezvăluie ființarea sub forma resursei disponibile, Dataismul extinde această orientare asupra experienței trăite, convertind-o în seturi de variabile cuantificabile supuse prelucrării predictive. Adevărul devine un produs derivat al statisticilor, ceea ce conduce la o vulnerabilizare structurală a autonomiei epistemice. Cunoașterea nu mai apare ca rezultat al deliberării critice, ci ca output al infrastructurilor digitale care organizează accesul la realitate în funcție de criterii de performanță tehnică.

Înțelegerea Dataismului presupune, astfel, articularea unei dileme esențiale. Pe de o parte, algoritmii pot fi interpretați ca extensii cognitive, capabile să surprindă structuri ale lumii inaccesibile percepției imediate și să amplifice posibilitățile epistemice ale subiectului. Pe de altă parte, delegarea sistematică a proceselor de judecată către sisteme automate implică riscul ca adevărul să devină contingent intereselor celor care controlează infrastructura digitală, iar spațiul public să fie remodelat în funcție de logici care nu sunt transparente și greu de contestat. Provocarea centrală nu constă, așadar, într-o opoziție simplistă între om și tehnologie, ci în capacitatea de a construi un cadru al cunoașterii în care algoritmii să fie integrați fără a eroda pluralitatea interpretativă și responsabilitatea epistemică. Viitorul condiției umane va depinde de modul în care vom reuși să armonizăm potențialul tehnologic al Dataismului cu practicile hermeneutice care mențin deschisă posibilitatea sensului, a deliberării și a unei relații reflexive cu adevărul.

ACCIDENTS AND NAVAL RADIO COMMUNICATION SYSTEMS IN THE ROMANIAN NAVY

Abstract: Romania is a country whose geographical position gives it landforms such as mountains, hills, and plains, which offer important economic resources. We must also not forget that our country borders the Black Sea, which offers an important resource, namely the sea and water transport, the cheapest and most efficient way for the global economy to develop and spread. Civil and military navigation are two major economic hubs for any country located in areas with flowing waters, seas, oceans, or lakes, which is why it is important to have infrastructure that allows them to operate in conditions of maximum safety. Civil navigation and water transport are responsible for transporting over 80% of the goods and products produced worldwide today. However, there are phenomena in navigation that can disrupt its smooth running: sinkings, strandings, acts of piracy and robbery on the "high seas," illegal boarding, or shipwrecks, phenomena that endanger both the ship and its cargo, as well as the lives of the sailors or passengers on board. The way these communication systems are used often makes the difference between life and death. Therefore, human life remains the most important resource that humanity currently possesses.

Introducere

Supravegherea traficului portuar a apărut ca fenomen pentru a asigura bunul mers al activității portuare și este în prezent o activitate ce decurge din obligativitatea aderării României la convențiile și tratatele internaționale de navigație.

Strâns legată de existența și dezvoltarea Portului Constanța dar și a căilor navigabile fluviale și a celor care au legătură cu comerțul exterior al țării noastre(căile ferate și rutiere) activitatea de supraveghere și monitorizare a traficului portuar și naval a cunoscut o evoluție plină de evenimente dintre cele mai diferite, alternând cu cele de înflorire, dezvoltare, extindere, cu cele de stagnare, regres, chiar distrugere aproape totală.

Accidentele navale sunt unele dintre cele mai tragice evenimente care au influențat existența locurilor unde s-au produs prin poluare și deversare de materiale dintre cele mai periculoase în zona în care s-a produs sinistrul, au avut de asemenea consecințe grave asupra personalului navigant(au existat de cele mai multe ori victime între membrii echipajului sau au fost persoane care au suferit traume greu de depășit care au determinat încheierea carierei în navigație a celor în cauză). De asemenea, unele dintre aceste evenimente au determinat comunitatea internațională a navigatorilor să ia măsuri legale cu efecte pe întreg globul în ceea ce privește siguranța, traficul și căutarea și salvarea vieții pe mare, precum și monitorizarea activităților pe căile navigabile și incintele portuare. Există în acest sens o serie de convenții și legi internaționale care reglementează activitatea de navigație, care au fost adoptate de diverse organisme internaționale și care au fost ratificate și acceptate de statele care au avut și au activitate în domeniul naval. România ca parte integrantă a acestor organisme, a ratificat, a adoptat și a acceptat aceste norme legale necesare pentru a face parte și a se integra în marele circuit comercial și economic internațional.

Serviciile de radio-telecomunicații au avut și și-au dovedit importanța deosebită pe care o dețin în cadrul economiei naționale de-a lungul timpului. Încă de la începuturile existenței lor și-au demonstrat eficacitatea și necesitatea în organizarea și coordonarea activităților din incintele portuare cât și de pe căile navigabile fluviale și maritime. Numeroasele accidente care au avut loc în porturi și pe căile navigabile au făcut necesară apariția unui sistem coordonat și avizat, care prin activitatea sa să facă posibilă desfășurarea activităților de transport maritim și fluvial cât și cele din porturi, în deplină siguranță, eficiență și fără a pune în pericol viața celor care desfășoară astfel de activități.

Capitolul I

Naufragiile, scufundările și abordajele ilegale sunt evenimente care au o mare influență asupra mediului marin, echipajului, și încărcăturii navei. Acestea se pot întâmpla fie în largul mării, fie în zone unde condițiile meteo sau configurația geografică poate favoriza producerea acestor evenimente nedorite. În istoria navigației civile române s-au petrecut din păcate astfel de evenimente, care au avut ca și protagoniști marinarii și navele românești.

Naufragiul cargoului Dâmbovița

Dâmbovița a fost construit în șantierul Jdanov din Leningrad și a intrat în dotarea NAVROM în septembrie 1971. Capacitatea de încărcare a vasului era de 8230 de tone. În data de 30 septembrie 1973, nava a plecat din Hamburg cu destinația Rotterdam unde a sosit în ziua de 1 decembrie 1973 la ora 19.00 în vederea efectuării celei de-a 14 călătorii din scurta sa existență, cea în care s-a produs accidentul.[1]

În această călătorie nava avea de executat transportul unei încărcături contractate în data de 10 octombrie 1973 între NAVROM Constanța și și firma INTRAHA Duisburg-Ruhrort Republica Federală Germania, acest transport având ca obiect transportul unei mărfi străine între două porturi străine. Existau și anumite clauze care erau stabilite în ceea ce privește încărcătura și transportul mărfurilor. [2] Nava a încărcat circa 7200 tone laminate din Rotterdam cu destinația Istanbul. Încărcarea, stivuirea și legarea (amararea) mărfurilor s-a efectuat în contul firmei care închiria nava(navlositor). Comandantul navei era răspunzător pentru stivuirea și legarea mărfurilor încărcate. Condițiile în care a fost închiriată nava Dâmbovița pentru călătoria nr.14 au fost unele uzuale, folosite în practica transporturilor maritime și reprezenta pentru NAVROM, în calitate de armator, asumarea unor obligații normale în efectuarea acestui gen de transport. [3]

Pe plan internațional nu există norme referitoare la încărcarea și stivuirea barelor de oțel și a colacilor din fier beton. Pentru asigurarea stabilității navei și exploatării la maximum a capacității de transport a acestuia, încărcarea mărfurilor se efectuează cu respectarea următoarelor principii:

- umplerea cât mai completă a spațiilor din magazii;
- stivuirea mărfurilor grele în partea inferioară a magaziilor și a celor ușoare în partea superioară, în scopul de a se asigura navei stabilitate favorabilă;
- încărcarea mărfii pe punte se admite cu condiția asigurării unei rezerve suficiente de stabilitate a navei, verificată pe bază de calcul și cu acordul proprietarului mărfii, deoarece transportul pe punte se efectuează pe riscul comercial al acestuia.[4]

După sosirea navei Dâmbovița în portul Rotterdam, agenția care reprezenta firma care a închiriat nava(navlositor), a prezentat comandantului copia contractului de transport și lista mărfurilor care urmau a fi încărcate cu următorul conținut: o partidă de 998 tone oțel, o partidă de 148 tone bare oțel, o partidă de 6000 tone colaci fier beton. [5]

În dimineața zilei de 6 decembrie 1973, înainte de plecarea din Rotterdam, comandantul navei a analizat buletinul meteorologic din zonă, recepționat la ora 6.00. Clasa navei, stabilitatea bună, după încărcarea mărfii, rezultată din calcul, precum și condițiile meteorologice din zona Rotterdam și din următoarele zone de navigație au justificat hotărârea comandantului de a pleca din port. Nava a plecat din Rotterdam în ziua de 6 decembrie 1973 la ora 8.00. În seara zilei de 6 decembrie când nava se afla în apropiere de Dover, buletinul meteorologic primit pentru zona următoare de navigație (Canalul Mânecii) indica o scădere a intensității vântului din direcția Nord. La intrarea în Canalul Mânecii, în ziua de 7 decembrie către ora 3.00 condițiile hidrometeorologice indicate în buletinul meteorologic precedent nu s-au confirmat, vântul crescând în intensitate, din direcția Nord-Vest și Vest.

Buletinul meteorologic din ziua de 7 decembrie ora 18.00 prevedea pentru zona următoare de navigație din Golful Biscaia, vânt variabil din Vest și Nord-Vest, ceea ce dădea perspectiva unei traversări a acestei zone în condiții mai favorabile.

În jurul orei 2.45 din ziua de 8 decembrie 1973, vântul și-a schimbat direcția spre Nord-Vest, menținându-și viteza constantă (80 km /oră) . Această schimbare a determinat înrăutățirea mării și deci amplificarea balansului navei la unghiuri de până la 15º în ambele borduri.[6]

În dimineața zilei de 8 decembrie 1973 către ora 3.15 ofițerul de cart constatând înrăutățirea vremii l-a chemat pe comandant la comandă. Ultima informație meteorologică recepționată la bord prin intermediul sistemelor de comunicații radio indica faptul că în zona următoare de navigație, Biscaia, se prevedea o ameliorare a condițiilor hidrometeorologice. Către ora 5.00 nava a fost lovită de un val din dreapta care i-a imprimat o înclinare mare spre stânga.

În această situație critică pentru echipaj, navă, și încărcătură, în condiții de noapte, comandantul a luat următoarele măsuri:

- a ordonat schimbarea drumului navei, la dreapta, în intenția de a expune vântului partea înclinată a navei, pentru a conduce nava la adăpost spre coasta Franței;
- a alarmat echipajul cu semnale transmise prin soneria de alarmă;
- prin instalația de radiotranslație, ofițerul secund a transmis echipajului ordinul de a se aduna pe puntea de comandă și a;
- prin ofițerul secund s-a pus în funcțiune instalația de autoalarmă, în scopul transmiterii automate a semnalului a semnalului de cerere de ajutor (SOS);
- pentru redresarea navei în condițiile de înclinare permanentă(circa 25º), provocată de deplasarea centrului de greutate al mărfii, a dispus umplerea tancurilor din bordul ridicat (din dreapta) și golirea celor din bordul înclinat (din stânga) ;
- apreciind riscul pătrunderii apei în navă prin aceste neetanșeități a ordonat punerea în funcțiune a pompei de santină și a pompei de balast, pentru evacuarea apei .[7]

Văzând că măsurile de redresare a navei care au durat circa trei ore nu au dat nici un rezultat și apreciind iminența pericolului pentru securitatea vieții echipajului, comandantul a dispus lăsarea la apă a bărcii de salvare din dreapta navei și a plutelor pneumatice. Ajungând la concluzia că nava nu mai putea fi salvată cu mijloace proprii, comandantul, în jurul orei 7.00 a intrat în legătură cu salvatorul olandez ,GELDERLAND, aflat la Brest, solicitându-i intervenția pentru remorcarea navei la adăpost.

Ca urmare a semnalelor SOS emise de navă, au sosit în ajutorul ei două traulere sovietice DRUSKININKAY 0259 și SRT 4451, precum și tancul olandez ESSO BONAIRE.

După debarcarea la Brest, comandantul a depus protest de mare la Tribunalul de Comerț din localitate în ziua de 10 decembrie 1973, în care a notificat naufragiul. Datorită condițiilor hidro meteorologice care s-au îmbunătățit, salvatorul nu a reușit să ajungă la nava Dâmbovița pentru a o remorca.

Ținând seama de cele expuse mai înainte, Comisia a procedat la o analiză a faptelor și împrejurărilor ce ar fi putut determina producerea accidentului, în vederea identificării acelor fapte care, dat fiind raportul lor de cauzalitate directă cu efectele produse, constituie cauze ale accidentului.

Analizând deciziile privind conducerea navei pe timpul navigației de la Rotterdam până la locul accidentului, comisia de anchetă a considerat că drumurile urmate de navă au fost alese corect, încadrându-se pe traseele recomandate pentru navigație din zona respectivă. De asemenea comisia a apreciat că hotărârea comandantului de a continua drumul și de a nu intra cu nava la adăpost a fost justificată.

La nava Dâmbovița, când cele două valuri s-au succedat la intervale foarte mici de timp, au ambarcat o mare cantitate de apă, acestea contribuind la reducerea stabilității navei și la întârzierea revenirii ei la poziția dreaptă. În contextul celor întâmplate cu nava Dâmbovița, sensibilitatea navei și efectele ambarcării apei pe punți au constituit ca un factor favorizant al acțiunii factorilor hidrometeorologici.

Analiza trebuie făcută și din punctul de vedere al sistemelor de radio-telecomunicații navale pentru că acestea au avut rolul lor în desfășurarea evenimentelor de pe nava Dâmbovița. În dimineața zilei de 6 decembrie, înainte de plecarea de la Rotterdam, buletinul meteo recepționat prin radio-telegraf la ora 6.00, a fost analizat de comandant. Conținutul acestuia cuprindea date care arătau că vântul avea direcția Vest și o forță de 6-8(40-60 km /oră), fapt ce nu a îngrijorat comandantul care nu avea să știe că peste puțin timp avea să se afle în mijlocul unei adevărate furtuni, și chiar a unui fenomen destul de rar care se întâmplă în zona de navigație în care a avut loc accidentul, și anume o succesiune de valuri de mare putere care au lovit nava în aceeași porțiune, determinând ambarcarea de apă, înclinarea navei și scufundarea acesteia, nemaiputând fi adusă la poziția de plutire. Buletine meteo s-au primit și în seara zilei de 6 decembrie, cel din 6 decembrie seara, indica o scădere a intensității vântului, forța 5-7, iar cel din dimineața zilei de 7 decembrie, la intrarea în Canalul Mânecii indica vânt crescând în intensitate din direcția Nord-Nord și Vest, în seara zilei de 7 decembrie nava se găsea în partea vestică a Canalului Mânecii, unde vântul a bătut inițial din direcția Vest iar apoi din direcția Vest-Nord-Vest. Pentru zona de navigație din Golful Biscaia, buletinul meteorologic prevedea vânt variabil din Vest și Nord-Vest, ceea ce dădea perspectiva unei traversări a acestei zone în condiții favorabile. Schimbarea direcției vântului spre Nord-Vest a determinat înrăutățirea stării mării și deci amplificarea balansului navei la unghiuri de până la 15º, în ambele borduri. În concluzie, alegerea rutei de către comandant a fost corectă, date fiind condițiile și situația mării în zona de producere a accidentului.

[6] Ibidem, p.45.
[7] Ibidem, p.47.

De aceea, hotărârea comandantului de a continua drumul si de a nu intra la adăpost a fost justificată. Putem afirma de asemenea că rolul sistemelor de radio-telegrafie și monitorizare a traficului a fost unul care a determinat hotărârile comandantului de a continua drumul, întrucât informațiile primite prin sistemele radio de informare și avertizare au comunicat faptul că acest lucru se poate efectua în condiții de siguranță. De asemenea este important faptul că tot ofițerul radio-telegrafist a avut un rol important în informarea Radio-Coastei din zonă și acest lucru a determinat intervenția traulerelor sovietice și a tancului olandez care au fost salvatorii echipajului român în momentul scufundării.

Naufragiul cargoului Sadu

Cargoul Sadu părăsește în dimineața zilei de 1.12.1988 la ora 6.30 portul Galați cu destinația Constanța, în rada căreia sosește și ancorează la data de 1.12.1988 ora 22.00. Ținând cont de programul navei, care prevedea executarea reparațiilor la sosirea ei în portul Constanța și condițiile hidrometeorologice, nava a fost balastată la capacitatea maximă a tancurilor de balast. La bordul navei se mai găseau 54 de tone combustibil, 5 tone ulei și 100 tone apă dulce, ceea ce a condus la un pescaj al navei de 2,40 metri pentru prova și 5,4 metri la pupa. Avându-se în vedere consumul mediu de combustibil pentru o oră de marș, de aproximativ 10 tone, se poate trage concluzia că nava a plecat în voiaj în condiții de siguranță. Nava Sadu a sosit în rada portului Constanța în ziua de 1.12.1988 la ora 22.00 și a ancorat în careul A, destinat ancorării navelor de transport mărfuri generale, cu asemenea tonaj. Locul a fost ales de comandantul navei fără să anunțe Căpitănia Portului Constanța despre coordonatele punctului de ancorare, sarcină ce-i revenea conform adresei Căpităniei Portului Constanța nr. 2271 din 30.07. 1987 și cu Regulamentul Serviciului la bordul navelor maritime civile art.156. După ancorare s-a luat legătura prin radiotelefon cu Dispeceratul flotei, pentru comunicarea orei ancorării și pentru primirea eventualelor instrucțiuni. Dispeceratul de serviciu a comunicat că nu are instrucțiuni pentru nava Sadu. La sosirea navei Sadu în rada portului Constanța și în timpul manevrei de ancorare pe puntea de comandă a navei s-au aflat comandantul, ofițerul de cart și timonierul. În ziua de 2.12.1988 în jurul orelor 11.15 comandantul navei solicită și obține aprobarea schimbării punctului de ancorare la adăpostul digului de Nord, în zona de sud a acestuia. Hotărârea de schimbare a locului de ancorare a fost determinată de înrăutățirea condițiilor hidrometeorologice, intensificarea vântului, creșterea valurilor, reducerea vizibilității. Manevra pentru schimbarea punctului de ancorare urma să se execute după ce motorul principal era gata de manevră. Ordinul de pregătire a motorului principal pentru manevră a fost dat de comandant în jurul orei 11.20, până la producerea evenimentului, manevra pentru schimbarea punctului de ancorare nu a mai fost efectuată. În timpul staționării la ancoră în rada portului Constanța s-a organizat serviciul de cart, atât la comanda de navigație, cât și la compartimentul mașini. Din afirmațiile supraviețuitorilor rezultă că serviciul s-a efectuat de către un ofițer și un timonier la comandă și de către on ofițer și un motorist la mașini. Intensitatea vântului a început să crească și starea mării să se înrăutățească începând din dimineața zilei de 2.12.1988.

Către orele 12.50-13.00 căpitanul secund a urcat pe comandă, nava aflându-se la o distanță de 80-100 metri în vântul digului.. Din afirmațiile făcute de secund rezultă că mașina nu a răspuns la comenzi și că din compartimentul mașini s-a transmis că mai sunt necesare circa 10 minute pentru a se putea lansa motorul principal. Întârzierea executării comenzii se explică prin timpul necesar motorului principal pentru deschiderea valvulelor de aer pentru lansarea pornirii pompelor de alimentare cu carburant. În această situație, neavând motorul în stare de funcționare, comandantul navei a ordonat fundarisirea ancorei din tribord. În continuare comandantul a încercat evitarea apropierii de dig. În condițiile date, nava ajungând între valuri, cu vântul și valul din tribord, a continuat deriva spre dig, începând să izbească sub acțiunea vântului și valului stabilopozii digului. Prin soneria de alarmă s-a dat semnalul de abandon, la care echipajul a ieșit pe puntea tribord. O parte a echipajului a părăsit nava, îndreptându-se spre dig, Din relatările supraviețuitorilor de la bord și ale unor martori oculari de la uscat, rezultă că nava Sadu s-a scufundat în jurul orelor 16.03 în ziua de 2.12.1988 la aproximativ 500 de metri de Capul de Sud al digului. Remorcherele Orion, Zimbru-3, Alexandria-4, Galați-4, Viteazul, deși s-au aflat în zonă nu au putut interveni în salvarea echipajului din cauza apropierii foarte mari de dig a navei, valurilor foarte mari și a mării agitate precum și a întunericului.

În ceea ce privește cauzele și consecințele pe care scufundarea navei Sadu le-a avut se pot trage mai multe concluzii. Voiajul de la Galați în rada Constanța s-a desfășurat în condiții normale, sub aspectul stării tehnice al navei. La sosirea în rada Constanța, acestea s-au menținut satisfăcătoare. Observațiile privind radarul și girocompasul nu au avut o legătură cauzală directă cu producerea accidentului. Starea de navigabilitate a navei la plecarea de la Galați a fost afectată de componența echipajului și starea de pregătire și experiență a unor membri din echipaj. Ofițerul RTG nu s-a prezentat la plecare și nava a plecat fără operator radio, fiind lipsită de posibilitatea radiocomunicațiilor cu uscatul și de informare hidrometeorologică.

Măsurile pentru abandonarea navei au fost întreprinse tardiv, fără să fie asigurate și mijloace exterioare navei, necesare de salvare a echipajului. Măsurile luate pentru salvarea navei de autoritățile în drept au rămas fără rezultate.[8]

Lipsa comunicării între membrii echipajului, precum și lipsa de experiență au fost se pare cauzele producerii naufragiului navei Sadu în zona Portului Constanța.

Scufundarea Navei Scăieni

Cargoul Scăieni de 4620 tdw, proprietate a CNM NAVROM Constanța, a fost construit în anul 1980 la Șantierul Naval Brăila. Nava destinată transportului maritim de mărfuri generale, era prevăzut cu trei magazii destinate mărfii,. Din punct de vedere al aparaturii de navigație la bord existau: radar DON, radar DECCA RACAL, girocompas KURS 3, sondă ultrason, radiogoniometru UNITRA OG 132, radiotelefon SAYLOR, radiotelefon UNITRA, sistem guvernare AG-04, compas magnetic KAMOT.

Nava era dotată corespunzător, cu instrumentar pentru determinarea punctului navei și pentru efectuarea serviciului de veghe, precum și cu publicații nautice și cărți de specialitate la zi. Marfa încărcată pe nava Scăieni avea ca destinație Franța, zona Atlantic și era formată din 3.500 tone de azotat de amoniu în saci. La data de 2 decembrie 1991 la orele 17.00 nava Scăieni dublează capul digului de Nord al portului Constanța, angajându-se în voiaj internațional. Situația meteo din zona Constanța-Bosfor a fost bună,, nava comportându-se bine pe mare. La data de 4 decembrie 1991 ora 6.30 nava dublează farul Rumili, îmbarcă pilotul și tranzitează Bosforul, intrând în marea Marmara. La ora 8.00, când nava se afla travers Cap Matapan, ofițerul radiotelegrafist a prezentat comandantului navei meteorul(buletin meteo) luat de stația meteo de coastă. Comandantul a declarat că, studiindu-l, nu a semnalat probleme hidrometeorologice în zonă, în următoarele 24 de ore, cu singura mențiune că în vestul Mării Ionice vântul se anunța în creștere, fără aviz de furtună și a considerat că poate să angajeze nava în traversada Cap Matapan-Cap Passero. Începând cu ora 2.00 a zilei de 7 decembrie 1991 situația meteo s-a schimbat brusc, vântul s-a schimbat rapid de la SV la NV, crescând în intensitate, în numai 10-12 minute. Această modificare rapidă a datelor meteo a fost însoțită de apariția grindinei, a vizibilității 0 și înrăutățirea stării mării. În dimineața zilei de 7 decembrie 1991, ora 8.00 UTC este informată compania de situația navei. Recomandarea armatorului făcută comandantului este aceea de a se îndrepta către adăpost, a solicita asistența navelor din zonă și de a menține permanent legătura cu compania, în vederea cunoașterii evoluției situației. O dată cu lăsarea întunericului situația navei devine critică, starea mării confuză, vântul atinge intensitatea uraganului, valurile depășesc înălțimea de 12 metri, nava se guvernează cu mare dificultate, puntea principală rămâne inundată permanent de valuri masive.

[8] Marian Moșneagu, O istorie tragică a marinei comerciale române, Editura ExPonto, 29, ianuarie, 2020 pp238-247.

Comisia de anchetă a supus spre analiză respectivele meteoare mai multor comandanți de navă, aceștia, în majoritate fiind de părere că decizia luată de comandant de a efectua traversada a fost corectă. Lansarea semnalului SOS la data de 7 decembrie 1991 la ora 17.30 în poziția estimată latitudine =37º 15'' N, longitudine=18º 00'' E, a avut ca și consecințe pozitive intervenția promptă în zonă a salvatorilor și salvarea echipajului. Concluziile comisiei de anchetă arată faptul că nava a fost aptă din toate punctele de vedere pentru a efectua voiajul, previziunile meteo pentru zilele 6-7 decembrie recepționate de Scăieni nu au fost de natură să-l determine pe comandant să amâne traversada Cap Matapan-Cap Pssero. Trebuie remarcat în cazul navei Scăieni un fapt care a dus la salvarea echipajului. Permanenta comunicare dintre comnadant și companie, precum și cu echipajele de salvare prin intermediul sistemelor de comunicații radio a determinat evitarea pierderilor de vieți omenești .[9]

Serviciile de radio-telecomunicații navale își desfășoară activitatea și în conformitate cu hotărârile Convenției Internaționale de Comunicații prin Satelit (INMARSAT). Potrivit acestei convenții în anul 1979, la 3 septembrie, se pun bazele unei organizații internaționale, International Mobile Satelite Organisation care, dispunând de o rețea de telecomunicații înlesnește beneficiarilor săi transmisii digitale de tip data, telefonie, transmisii facsimil între stațiile de uscat, de pe mare sau aero.

Sistemul INMARSAT este format din trei componente majore :

- segmentul spațial, constituit dintr-o rețea de sateliți, stațiile de coastă INMARSAT, Coast Earth Station (CES), stațiile mobile, Ship Earth Station (SES), Land Mobile Earth Station (LMES), Aircraft Earth Station (AES).

Dispozitivul NAVTEX. Informațiile primite pe ecranul aparatului sunt rezultanta unei munci de adunare și prelucrare de informații complexe, presupunând și o conlucrare și coordonare minuțioase, la nivelul multor organisme din țări diferite.

Mesajele transmise de NAVTEX sunt de importanță vitală pentru asigurarea navigației în siguranță pe mare, împărțindu-se în materiale de navigație împărțite în două categorii:

- avertizări pentru navigație;
- avertizări meteorologice.

Sistemul Goniometric[10], este un sistem compus din șase stații complete de coastă, goniometrice, responsabil de identificarea direcției resurselor de câmp electromagnetic, emise de stațiile radio ale navelor aflate în primejdie iminentă sau în situații de urgență, precum și localizarea cu mare precizie a poziției acestora pe o hartă digitală.

Sistemul Maritim Global pentru caz de Pericol și Siguranță pe Mare, sistemul GMDSS

[9] Ibidem, pp.285-299.

[10] Sistemul SCOMAR, Sistem Complex de Observare, Supraveghere și Control al Traficului la Mare, Constanța, 2009.

(Global Maritime Distress and Safety Sistem) este un sistem de informare și acțiune, cu acoperire globală, în caz de pericol pe mare, pentru realizarea siguranței navigației maritime și a acțiunilor de căutare-salvare pe mare.[11]

GMDSS este un sistem internațional care utilizează tehnologii de radiocomunicații terestre prin satelit și echipamente radio navale aflate în apropiere, în cazul producerii unui sinistru.

Conform prevederilor SOLAS, orice navă de transport, aflată pe mare trebuie să dețină, mijloace tehnice necesare pentru:

- a recepționa mesaje de primejdie de tip navă-coastă;
- a transmite și recepționa traficul radio la locul producerii sinistrului și operațiunilor de căutare –salvare ;
- a transmite și recepționa semnale automate de localizare;
- a transmite și recepționa comunicațiile radio de rutină de tip navă-navă. GMDSS dă posibilitatea oricărei nave aflate în primejdie să transmită un mesaj (de primejdie) pe mai multe căi această navă având certitudinea că mesajul său va fi recepționat.[12]

Radarul este echipamentul de navigație utilizat pentru descoperirea țintelor navale, determinarea poziției relative a acestora prin relevment și distanță și calcularea parametrilor de mișcare, drumul și viteza. Radarul Arpa[13] este radarul de navigație dotat cu modul de calcul specializat în rezolvarea problemelor de evitare a coliziunii pe mare.

Riscul pe care îl presupune terorismul, jaful armat și pirateria pe mare este enorm, ținând cont de faptul că 80% sin comerțul mondial se face pe mare, iar 120.000 de nave circulă pe întreg globul, tranzitând 4000 de porturi, însumând activitatea a peste1,25 milioane de marinari.

Un fapt deosebit de important ca în zonele sensibile ale mărilor și oceanelor să existe posibilitatea escortării navelor de transport mărfuri, dar și pasagerele, să se asigure o supraveghere cu ajutorul dispozitivelor conectate la sateliții geo-staționari care au ca și arie de supraveghere acele zone, și în general să se evite zonele cu probleme și să se asigure o reconfigurare a traseelor navelor.

Concluzii

Navigația civilă și militară română au fost și sunt cele care asigură desfășurarea în bune condiții a unor importante activități din economia românească și anume transporturile și comerțul intern și internațional, siguranța și apărarea națională a României. Din acest motiv activitățile de navigație și transport maritim și fluvial, activități cu importanță strategică în economia României, europeană și mondială, este necesar să fie riguros și bine organizate.

În activitatea de navigație cele mai puțin dorite evenimente sunt eșuările, abordajele ilegale, jaful sau pirateria, dar și scufundările, care se pot întâmpla fie din cauza piraților care încă mai există în anumite zone ale globului, dar se pot produce și din cauze hidrometeorologice neprevăzute.

Telecomunicațiile radio au un rol important atât în domeniul navigației maritime și fluviale dar și în cel al siguranței naționale întrucât ele sunt cele care furnizează date, dar de multe ori sunt cele care aleg și soluții în rezolvarea problemelor legate de poluarea mediului marin, fluvial sau terestru, tranzitul ilegal de persoane, mărfuri, sau substanțe periculoase, tranzitarea ilegală a apelor teritoriale române de către nave sau persoane, precum și probabilitatea producerii de acte teroriste în zona maritimă alocată României.

Transporturile pe apă sunt în prezent cele care susțin și fac economia mondială să funcționeze la parametrii optimi, de aceea sete necesar ca acestea să se facă în condiții de maximă siguranță și eficiență. În același timp este important ca resursa umană să fie protejată și să se urmărească în permanență pregătirea profesională a acestora pentru a fi capabili să facă față situațiilor de criză ce pot apare la bordul navei.

NEW COORDINATES REGARDING MEDICAL DEONTOLOGY IN ROMANIA

Carmen Comaniciu

Abstract: Regardless of the field to which it refers, professional deontology is the one that regulates the activity, ensures the maintenance of high standards of quality and professional integrity, establishes directions regarding professional responsibility towards all those involved in the activity, identifies principles and standards of behavior and contributes to continuous professional training. In this context, medical deontology encompasses the duties, norms and rules that doctors must respect in the exercise of their profession, in their relationship with patients, with other medical professionals, and with society as a whole. Starting with 2026, the Romanian Code of Medical Deontology will bring significant changes to the profession, in full accordance with European standards and current challenges in medical practice. Without claiming an exhaustive approach, through this article, we will capture the new coordinates of the Romanian Code of Medical Deontology, which is intended to be a modern instrument, adapted to current medicine.*

Keywords: medical deontology; medical ethics; fundamental principles; respect; responsibility*

44. Introduction

Medical deontology represents the foundation of professional ethics in medical practice and constitutes an essential pillar in the relationship between doctor, patient and society. In a medical context undergoing continuous transformation, marked by rapid technological advances, economic pressures, and changes in patient expectations, the importance of having a well-defined code of ethics is greater than ever. The code of ethics is not just a set of formal rules, but an expression of the values that guide the medical profession: respect for life, dignity, patient autonomy, confidentiality and professional responsibility.

The main role of a code of deontology is to provide a clear regulatory framework that allows doctors to make correct decisions in complex clinical situations. In the absence of such a framework, medical practice risks becoming arbitrary, vulnerable to moral errors, and exposed to unethical external influences. Therefore, the code of medical deontology has a dual function. On the one hand, it protects the patient, guaranteeing correct and ethical treatment, and on the other hand, it protects the doctor, providing him with internationally accepted professional guidelines.

At the same time, the code of deontology represents a tool for professional self-regulation, contributing to maintaining high standards of integrity and competence among practitioners. Medicine involves not only the application of scientific knowledge, but also the assumption of moral responsibility towards the individual and the community. Therefore, the training of doctors must include not only technical training, but also a deep understanding of professional values and obligations.

- Study of the specialized literature

The interest in medical ethics/deontology and its impact on the health field is visible through the large number of studies and research found in the specialized literature. Thus, based on searches in the Web of Science database, the following resulted:

- Even though studies can be found as early as 1975-1980, the greatest interest of researchers in medical deontology is visible after 2011, especially in the last 10 years.

(Source: author's processing according to WoS, on 02.12.2025)

- The WoS database contains an impressive number of publications referring to medical ethics (33,577 documents), the largest share of which was found after 2016 (59.44%).

- Along with the large number of appearances, the relevant scientific content of articles on the topic of medical deontology is also given by the large number of citations in other specialized studies, taking into account the following aspects: (i) considering its importance from a professional point of view, medical deontology is becoming a mandatory discipline in most medical schools, its teaching using the case-based method, namely the ethics of everyday clinical practice (Truog et. all, 2015); (ii) cultural diversity often leaves its mark on informed consent and the way in which the truth is told (Surbone, 2004); (iii) among the objectives of deontological education in medical schools, a significant role is occupied by the use of reflective practice by detailing the situation, establishing relevant virtues, identifying ethical principles, values and frameworks, as well as courses of action (Bryan and Babelay, 2009); (iv) medical deontology should not be treated as a scientific body of knowledge, but should also take into account one's own intuition (Cowley, 2005);

- The publications in WoS with the medical ethics topic and with the most citations refer to: (i) trust in doctors, the medical act and medical institutions (Hall et. All, 2001); (ii) the use of artificial intelligence in medicine without explainability leads to a whole series of medical, legal, ethical and societal controversies (Amann et. All, 2020); (iii) scientific deviations, the presentation and manipulation of erroneous data are elements that lead to erroneous decisions, in some situations seriously affecting the health of patients (Fanelli, 2009); (iv) the concept of pain management as a human right is increasingly present in international approaches, failure to fulfill pain management obligations being considered professional misconduct (Brennan et. All, 2007); (v) without considering the main ethical principles - beneficence, non-maleficence, autonomy and justice - the actions of healthcare professionals will not give effect to the interdependence between clinical expertise, technical expertise and professionalism (Varkey, 2021).

- The New Code of Medical Deontology in Romania

Currently, the Code of Medical Deontology of the Romanian College of Physicians, in force since January 6, 2017 (Romanian College of Physicians, 2025), with subsequent modifications and additions, has 9 chapters in its structure, referring to: fundamental principles of practicing the medical profession; consent; professional secrecy and access to health data; general rules of conduct in medical activity; activities related to the medical act; medical research; advertising of medical activities; adjudication of deontological cases; final provisions.

Starting with January 1, 2026, a new Code of Medical Ethics will be applicable, mandatory for all doctors who are members of the Romanian College of Physicians, as well as for doctors who have the right to provide (temporarily or occasionally) medical services on the territory of Romania. This new Code updates the professional and ethical framework of the medical profession, in full accordance with the major transformations in healthcare, in a national and international context.

Thus, the New Code involves a change in both form and content, with an emphasis on: general provisions; fundamental principles of practicing the medical profession; general rules of conduct in medical activity; informed consent; professional secrecy and access to medical data; special situations in practicing the medical profession; requirements for drawing up medical documents; collegial relations; advertising of medical activities; medical research; removal and transplantation of organs, tissues and cells of human origin; principles of analyzing deontological causes.

Without capturing all the provisions of the New Code, we consider the following worth noting:

- The doctor's behavior in society – the entire activity of the doctor must be carried out through dignified and responsible conduct in society, so that, in any context, he or she demonstrates good professional judgment. The doctor is and must represent a pillar of society, a benchmark of trust, honesty and fairness. Increasing trust in doctors, in the medical act and in medical institutions must take into account the most relevant characteristics (Hall, 2002), namely: (i) fidelity - the patient's interest must be above all in a medical act, and the doctor must not take advantage of the vulnerability in which the patient may be; (ii) competence - the professionalism that medical professionals must demonstrate allows errors to be avoided and the best results to be obtained; (iii) honesty - avoiding any type of deception and promoting the truth are essential elements of any medical act; (iv) confidentiality - the protection and appropriate use of all personal data.
- Definition of the notion of diligence – exercising the profession of a doctor, with responsibility, professionalism, attention and prudence, without guaranteeing the patient's recovery. Whether we consider the meaning of diligence or promptness, the doctor must act in such a way as to clarify the situation, clarify all the circumstances, and request support if the situation requires it.
- Definition of the notion of conscience clause – the doctor’s right to refuse to perform a professional act, without violating the legal provisions and without endangering the patient’s life and health. The reasons underlying the introduction of this clause may be of a religious, moral, political, scientific, polite, etc. nature, and the basis for the introduction of this clause lies in labor legislation and constitutional norms, which through art. 29 guarantee freedom of conscience. The "conscience clause" will be submitted annually to the branches of the Romanian College of Physicians by all doctors who do not want to perform a certain medical procedure, taking into account the conditions imposed in order not to jeopardize the medical act and emergency situations, when this conscience clause no longer works.

- Evidence-based medicine – is a medical approach that consciously uses the best available scientific evidence to make diagnostic and treatment decisions, integrating the clinical experience of the physician and the patient's preferences. The key principles of evidence-based medicine (Masic et. all, 2008) are: (i) the appropriate use of scientific evidence and its application in the care of each patient; (ii) combining the best scientific research evidence with the expertise and professional experience of the physician, with the values and preferences of the patient; (iii) establishing a hierarchy of evidence so that the best quality evidence can be identified; (iv) objectivity in selecting scientific evidence and taking into account the effort-effect ratio, (v) constantly combining opinions with concrete data.
- Combating medical misinformation. Medical misinformation exists and has become one of the biggest challenges facing society today. The online environment is an important pillar for the formation and consolidation of opinions, which inevitably leaves room for misinterpretations. The effects are felt both in the case of patients and professionals, as it is a vicious circle in which each party involved suffers. According to the opinion of specialists (Ioannidis et. all, 2017), the key problems of medical misinformation are: (i) published medical research with uncertain reliability, without benefits for patients and without utility for decision-makers; (ii) lack of skills for medical professionals to assess the reliability and utility of medical evidence; (iii) lack of qualified guidance and relevant evidence for patients and their families when making medical decisions. These are the main reasons that increasingly emphasize combating medical misinformation, which must be the focus of attention of medical professionals, medical students, and public decision-makers.
- Medicine at the end of life. Advances in the medical field and the development of medical technology increase the prospects of survival and allow life to be prolonged. Regarding the decision-making process regarding medical treatment in end-of-life situations, it is based on ethical principles (Council of Europe, 2015) such as autonomy, beneficence, non-maleficence and justice. For end-of-life issues, respect for autonomy can be considered the most frequent topic in ethical debates in medicine, as success is achieved when a patient is competent, informed and free from external pressures. But, in many situations, autonomy is better understood if it is exercised in terms of a process that unfolds over time, and not a specific choice fixed in time. Showing great professionalism, for end-of-life care, the doctor must constantly find answers to questions such as (Astarastoae, 2024): Who makes decisions in end-of-life care? Does the patient have the capacity to express their preferences? Are there advance directives? What happens in the absence of an advance directive?
- Public communication and medical advertising. In the Official Gazette of Romania, Part I no. 918 of October 6, 2025, was published Decision no. 20/2025 on the conditions for carrying out advertising by medical offices and units. In this context, medical advertising is defined, the qualitative characteristics of medical advertising are established, the prohibited elements in medical advertising are mentioned, the typology of advertising media is identified; disciplinary liability for non-compliance with medical ethics is specified.
- The doctor-patient relationship - is a crucial interaction that involves a patient-centered approach, tailored to individual needs and preferences, for personalized care. If more than 5000 years ago, the relationship was perceived as one between a healer and a sick person, in the current context, it is considered as one between a care provider and a service user. In many situations, the doctor-patient relationship depends on (Harbishettar et. all, 2019): the type of disease, the way the patient understands his problem, clinical conditions, the attitude of medical professionals, the lack of resources for care, commercial aspects, therapeutic results, technological progress, documentation and information.

- Remote medical practice – involves the provision of health services (diagnosis, treatment, monitoring, prevention) using technology (video, telephone, messaging), the doctor and the patient not being physically in the same place. Considering the medical services that are the subject of telemedicine services (teleconsultation, teleexpertise, teleassistance, teleradiology, telepathology, telemonitoring), can be identified advantages such as: fast access and responsiveness; no constraints involving travel; good solution for those areas with difficult access to medical services; better quality for certain medical services; reduced time spent in health facilities; lower risk of contamination; better assessment for certain specializations; greater psychological comfort for the patient; flexibility in accessing medical services.
- The limits and role of artificial intelligence in medical practice. Artificial intelligence is gaining increasing importance in medicine, being integrated into many essential areas, often being an indispensable ally for doctors in decision-making and optimizing treatments. The new code of ethics establishes the limits and role of artificial intelligence in medical practice, specifying that it can only be used as an auxiliary tool, without substituting the doctor's clinical reasoning. The involvement of artificial intelligence in medicine can be analyzed based on the two subtypes (Malik et. all, 2019): (i) virtual - medical record IT applications, networks in treatment decision-making; (ii) physical - robotics that assist in performing surgical interventions, smart prostheses and elderly care.

Conclusions

The importance of a well-developed code of deontology in medicine is undeniable. It provides direction, stability and protection in a field where decisions have profound consequences for human life. By assuming and rigorously applying ethical principles, the medical profession maintains its credibility and fulfills its fundamental mission: the promotion and defense of health. Such a framework is indispensable for the integration of medical practice into a modern society, oriented towards responsibility, transparency and respect for the individual.

Contemporary medical ethics brings the concept of patient autonomy to the forefront of discussion. Respecting the patient's right to make informed decisions about their own health is one of the most important developments in medical ethics. In addition, informed consent, empathetic communication, and respect for cultural diversity are fundamental elements of responsible medical practice.

The health professional does not act in isolation, but within a complex system, in which his decisions have an impact at the community level. Promoting public health, medical education of the population and active involvement in disease prevention are components of the ethical mission of the modern doctor. The code of ethics clarifies these obligations and serves as a guide for balancing individual and collective interests.

THE ROLE OF CHROMATICS IN MEDICAL SPACES FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF THE DOCTOR-PATIENT COMMUNICATION RELATIONSHIP

Abstract: Chromatics plays a subtle yet profound role in the experience a patient has within a medical office. It is not merely a matter of aesthetics, but rather a silent language that speaks directly to our subconscious, influencing mood, comfort levels, and even the perception of pain. Color is the architect of the subconscious, exerting a deep and complex impact on the human being—especially in a medical setting where anxiety and vulnerability can heighten reactions to external stimuli. The chromatics of a medical space serve to transform the environment into a healing experience. Thus, colors do not merely offer a pleasant decorative appearance, but open a "gateway to healing," allowing them to transcend aesthetic perception and reach deep layers of the human body and mind.

Within a medical environment, colors can significantly influence the psychological state of patients. Each color has the power to evoke distinct emotions, having either a beneficial or adverse effect on the patient's psychological condition. In this context, understanding the chromatic spectrum becomes a key link in the medical act, addressing both the physical and the psychological dimensions.

Keywords: chromatic; communication; physician; patient; medical space

Cromatica joacă un rol subtil, dar profund, în experiența pe care un pacient o are într-un cabinet medical. Nu este doar o chestiune de estetică, ci o limbă tăcută ce vorbește direct subconștientului nostru, influențând starea de spirit, nivelul de confort și chiar percepția durerii. Culoarea este arhitectul subconștientului, având un impact profund și complex asupra ființei umane, în special într-un spațiu medical unde anxietatea și vulnerabilitatea pacienților pot amplifica reacțiile provocate de stimulii externi. Cromatica spațiului medical are rolul de a transforma mediul în care pacienții își petrec timpul, într-o experiență de vindecare. Astfel, culorile nu oferă doar un aspect decorativ plăcut, ci deschid o „poartă spre vindecare'', permițând culorilor să traverseze percepțiile estetice și să atingă substraturi profunde ale minții corpului uman.

Spectrul cromatic se definește ca o gamă complexă de culori vizibile, fiecare culoare având o lungime de undă diferită. Aceasta variază de la roșu, cu lungimi de undă lungi, până la violet, unde lungimea de undă este scurtă. Între aceste extreme se regăsesc celelalte culori ale spectrului: portocaliu, galben, verde, albastru și indigo. Acestea sunt percepute diferit în funcție de modul în care lumina este reflectată sau absorbită de diverse obiecte. În cadrul unui cabinet medical, spectrul cromatic nu este doar o gamă de culori, ci un instrument de influență asupra stării pacienților. Roshani A. (2014)

În interiorul unui spațiu medical, culorile pot influența semnificativ starea psihologică a pacienților. Fiecare culoare are puterea de a genera emoții distincte, având un efect benefic sau nu asupra stării psihologice a pacientului. În acest sens, înțelegerea spectrului cromatic devine o verigă cheie în actul medical, tratând atât fizicul cât și psihicul.

Percepția culorilor este un proces continuu și activ, implicând atât interacțiunea atentă a ochiului uman, cât și sinergia complexă cu creierul. Roshani A. (2014) Fiecare lungime de undă din spectrul cromatic declanșează răspunsuri emoționale și cognitive diferite. Culorile pot avea diferite efecte asupra stării de spirit și a nivelului de confort al unei persoane. Culorile reci (verde, albastru) sunt adesea asociate cu relaxarea și calmul. Folosirea acestora într-un mediu medical poate contribui la reducerea anxietății și crearea unui sentiment de siguranță. În contrast, culorile calde (roșu, portocaliu) pot avea un efect stimulator asupra energiei și emoțiilor. Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023)

Într-un cabinet medical, culoarea devine un instrument al psihicului. Când un pacient pășește într-un astfel de spațiu, culoarea devine un element de influență a psihicului într-un mod discret, dar puternic. Aceasta poate potența anumite temeri sau, dimpotrivă, poate atenua frica unei consultații sau al unui diagnostic nedorit. În acest sens, culoarea devine un instrument terapeutic, care completează munca medicului și induce o stare de confort și încredere pacientului.

Armonia culorilor reprezintă o piatră de temelie în ceea ce privește cromatica unui spațiu medical. Aceasta se referă la modul în care diferite culori ale spectrului pot fi alăturate pentru a crea o experiență vizuală plăcută și echilibrată. De asemenea, alegerea unei palete de culori ținând cont de aceste concepte, joacă un rol important în crearea unei stări de liniște. Armonia cromatică joacă rolul unui străjer al psihicului, anulând dezechilibrul emoțiilor creat de pătrunderea pacientului într-un spațiu medical. Astfel, se creează un mediu mai relaxant și mai puțin intimidant. Roshani A. (2014)
O a doua piatră de temelie a cromaticii o reprezintă contrastele. „Prezența contrastelor dintre culori nu se referă doar la simplul contrast dintre ele, ci la studiul relațiilor și comparațiilor dintre acestea" Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023). Acest concept poate fi folosit pentru a atrage atenția asupra anumitor elemente ale decorului, sau pentru a crea anumite accente sau linii, reducând dominanța unei culori și oferind o alta perspectivă spațiului medical. De asemenea, contrastele pot crea delimitări clare între diferite zone, ajutând pacientul într-o orientare facilă. Utilizarea contrastelor prea puternice și stridente pot genera disconfort atât vizual, cât și psihic. Echilibrul între armonie și contrast este esențial pentru o bună adaptare a acestor principii. McLachlan F. (2017-2019)

Aplicarea corectă a spectrului cromatic în cadrul spațiilor medicale are o importanță aparte asupra proceselor de vindecare. Alegerea culorilor nu trebuie realizată întâmplător, sau după preferințele personale, ci trebuie sa fie parte a unei strategii arhitecturale, menite să îmbunătățească starea psihologică și emoțională a persoanei aflate în cabinetul medical. Nuanțele de albastru și verde sunt adesea folosite în sălile de așteptare și în camerele de spital, având efectul de a induce un sentiment de liniște și confort. Asocierea culorilor cu natura induce sentimentul de evadare, vindecare și oferă un efect calmant asupra persoanei bolnave.

De asemenea, utilizarea culorilor calde, de exemplu portocaliu sau galben, pot stimula energia și optimismul pacienților. Acestea oferă un sentiment de dinamism și vitalitate, îmbunătățind complianța la anumite proceduri de recuperare fizice, cum ar fi kinetoterapia. Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023)

Nu în ultimul rând, culorile neutre, în special albul, sunt utilizate la scară largă în cabinetele medicale. Acestea au un efect de „curățenie'' vizuală, puritate, contribuind la conturarea unei atmosfere igienice și profesionale, specifice domeniului medical. Excesul poate genera un fenomen de sterilitate rece, în care pacientul este deprivat de empatia și căldura oferită de o încăpere proiectată pe baza conceptelor de armonie a nuanțelor și contrastelor. Completarea cu accente de culori calde sau reci este esențială pentru a crea un echilibru vizual si emoțional.

Având ca element central cabinetul medical, culorile devin veritabile „porți spre vindecare'', a căror cheie este la îndemâna medicului. Alese în mod corespunzător, acestea pot îndruma pacienții spre o încăpere în care psihicul este dominat de un sentiment de liniște, încredere și calm, contribuind în procesul de vindecare. Această putere tăcută a culorilor le transformă în parteneri nevăzuți ai actului medical. Fiecare nuanță are un rol bine definit în asistarea pacientului.

Culoarea nu este doar un aspect superficial, ci este unealta care pictează emoții și are un impact psihologic profund. Referindu-ne la un cabinet medical, unde există un amalgam de sentimente și experiențe, culorile pot calma sau amplifica anumite stări. În cercetările psihologice asupra influenței culorilor, s-a observat: „roșul înseamnă stimulare, iar albastrul calmare... camerele albastre ajută la scăderea tensiunii arteriale și reduc sentimentele agresive". De asemenea, „culorile reci, precum verdele și albastrul, sunt adesea considerate odihnitoare și calme, inducând stări de liniște și echilibru". Pe de altă parte, „culorile calde, cum ar fi roșul și portocaliul, pot provoca o varietate de emoții, de la confort și căldură la ostilitate și furie" Alya (2021). Culorile au capacitatea de a activa procese cognitive și emoționale complexe, influențând atenția și răspunsurile afective ale pacientului.

Cercetările demonstrează faptul că percepția culorilor influențează răspunsurile atât afective cât și cognitive. Acestea sugerează că „expunerea la anumite culori poate provoca schimbări fiziologice reale în corpul uman, culorile având capacitatea de a stimula, excita, deprima sau liniști” Babin S. E. (2013)

- ROȘU – Culoarea roșie este adesea asociată energiei sau unei stări de urgență, fiind puternică și stimulând emoțiile. „În domeniul psihologiei, culoarea roşie este asociată cu încrederea în sine. Prin urmare, această nuanță este utilizată în tratarea anxietății.” Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023) Datorită acestor efecte trebuie utilizată cu precauție, deoarece excesul poate amplifica stările de tensiune. Astfel, experiența pacientului poate fi afectată, iar culoarea va deveni un antagonist al efectului terapeutic dorit. Ladau și Mahnke & Mahnke menționează faptul că roșul acționează asupra aparatului cardiovascular, stimulând sistemul nervos simpatic. Alegerea atentă a culorilor adiacente și utilizarea contrastelor potrivite poate să fie de ajutor, atrăgând atenția și energizând pacienții în anumite situații. Roshani A. (2014)
- PORTOCALIU – Adesea culoarea portocaliu este asociată cu optimismul și entuziasmul, având un impact pozitiv asupra pacienților și creând un mediu cald și primitor. Utilizarea în cabinetele pediatrice este o opțiune potrivită, contribuind la reducerea anxietății copiilor și la creșterea sentimentului de confort. De asemenea, „culoarea portocalie este numită și culoarea anti-oboseală. Este una dintre nuanțele care aduc bucurie și este recomandată de psihologi pentru tratarea depresiei.” Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023) Totuși, utilizarea excesivă poate avea efecte similare cu cele ale culorii roșu, crescând tensiunea arterială și provocând disconfort. Roshani A. (2014)
- GALBEN – Culoarea galbenă este considerată o culoare a veseliei, luminoasă, stimulând claritatea mentală și optimismul. În cabinetele medicale, aceasta poate fi folosită pentru a stimula procesele cognitive și pentru a încuraja o stare de bine. Cu toate acestea, folosirea unei nuanțe prea puternice, poate induce agitație și neliniște, motiv pentru care „persoanele energice și nervoase ar trebui să evite o expunere prea mare la această culoare.” Roshani A. (2014)
- VERDE – Culoarea verde are un efect relaxant și este adesea asociată cu natura și echilibrul. Utilizarea în cabinetele medicale poate contribui la realizarea unei atmosfere liniștitoare, reducând stresul și anxietatea. De asemenea, verdele oferă o senzație de siguranță, sprijinind procesele de vindecare și induce o stabilitate emoțională pacienților. Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023) Nuanțele variate de verde pot genera efecte diferite: tonurile deschise stimulează prospețimea și claritatea mentală, în timp ce nuanțele mai închise conferă profunzime și un sentiment de protecție. Integrarea elementelor naturale – plante vii, texturi ce imită lemnul sau finisaje cu aspect marmorat în tonuri de verde – accentuează senzația de reconectare cu natura. Totuși, un exces de verde intens, lipsit de accente neutre sau iluminat adecvat, poate deveni copleșitor; de aceea, dozarea atentă în funcție de dimensiunea și orientarea spațiului asigură un echilibru vizual și emoțional.
- ALBASTRU – Albastrul este tot mai frecvent utilizat atât în spitale, cât și în cabinetele medicale, datorită efectelor sale calmante. Acționează asupra sistemului cardiovascular, reducând tensiunea și ritmul cardiac și induce o stare de calm. „Culoarea albastră este asociată cu relaxarea și contribuie la ameliorarea insomniei și la diminuarea agitației nervoase.” Khaleghimoghaddam, N. (2023) Efectele sale se manifestă cel mai profund în spațiile de recuperare și sălile de tratament, unde pacientul are nevoie de un mediu care să-i alunge temerile și să-l ghideze pe drumul spre vindecare. „Este important să menționăm că o expunere excesivă la culoarea albastră poate provoca depresie și oboseală.” Roshani A. (2014)
- VIOLET – Această culoare se regăsește rar în cabinetele medicale, fiind asociată frecvent cu spiritualitatea și meditația. Eficiența acesteia poate fi valorificată în sălile de terapie și în spațiile destinate liniștirii pacienților care suferă de stres psihologic. Violetul încurajează introspecția și calmul profund, „fiind benefică pentru atenuarea simptomelor de dependență și migrenă, îmbunătățind funcționarea sistemului nervos." Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023) Violetul are rol în ameliorarea sentimentelor de ură și furie, ajutând la atingerea unui echilibru emoțional. „Totuși, folosirea excesivă a acestei culori poate duce la depresie, nostalgie și disconfort spiritual." Roshani A. (2014)

- CULORI NEUTRE – Culorile neutre au capacitatea de a induce o stare de relaxare, fiind utilizate frecvent pentru a crea un mediu calm într-un cabinet medical. Deși efectele lor inițiale sunt unele pozitive, pe termen lung acestea pot avea consecințe neașteptate. Prin reducerea stimulării vizuale, mediul devine unul omogen, lipsit de dinamică, care poate genera plictiseală sau chiar depresie. Khaleghimoghaddam N. (2023) În absența unor accente subtile de culoare sau variații de textură, pacienții pot percepe spațiul ca fiind prea „rece" sau impersonal, ceea ce poate amplifica senzația de anxietate la prima vizită. Pentru a contracara acest efect, se pot introduce elemente decorative mici – o pernă colorată, o plantă în ghiveci sau un tablou cu tonuri calde –, care să ofere puncte de interes vizual și să reînvie senzația de confort. De asemenea, alternarea nuanțelor de bej și crem cu finisaje mate și lucioase ajută la menținerea unui echilibru între liniște și vitalitate vizuală.

Referindu-mă la propria experiență, am observat efectul terapeutic al culorii în timpul unei vizite la un cabinet medical. Mereu am asociat vizitele la medic cu o stare de apăsare, amânând pe cât posibil această interacțiune. Însă, acest lucru s-a schimbat când am intrat într-un cabinet în care cromatica era bine studiată și adaptată pentru a liniști pacientul, albastrul deschis și verdele fiind culorile predominante. Aceste culori, combinate cu un decor potrivit, au transformat atmosfera cabinetului medical într-un mediu primitor, reducând astfel starea de anxietate și promovând calmul. În contrast cu această experiență, am resimțit un disconfort emoțional amplificat într-un cabinet în care albul era predominant. Lipsa de afectivitate și impersonalitate a spațiului au accentuat senzația de neliniște.

Experiențele amintite m-au făcut să realizez cât de importantă este culoarea și cât de mult poate influența starea de bine a pacienților, în special atunci când aceștia așteaptă unui diagnostic. Culoarea s-a dovedit a fi un factor esențial în reducerea tensiunii și a anxietății, demonstrând că designul cromatic al unui cabinet medical joacă un rol important în crearea unui mediu de încredere și confort, atât fizic, cât și din punct de vedere psihologic.

Culorile nu influențează doar stările psihologice imediate din cabinetul medical, ci au efect și asupra modului în care experiențele sunt codificate în memorie, având un impact pe termen lung. Memoria umană funcționează adesea pe baza asocierilor emoționale, iar culorile au un rol bine stabilit în acest proces. Culoarea poate sa devină un factor declanșator în subconștient, transformând percepția prezentului.

Memoria emoțională asociată culorilor poate crea un cadru de referință inconștient pentru pacienți, activând reacții emoționale care nu sunt legate direct de prezent, ci sunt declanșate de experiențele anterioare din cadrul unui spațiu medical. Acest proces are loc deoarece „stările emoționale intense joacă un rol important în modul în care înregistrăm, consolidăm și recuperăm informațiile din memorie. Când trăim emoții puternice, atenția noastră se concentrează asupra stimulului emoțional, făcându-ne mai receptivi și atenți la informațiile asociate acestuia" Ivancovic C. (2024). Un pacient care a avut o experiență negativă într-un cabinet medical dominat de o anumită culoare (de exemplu, alb) poate crea o asociere între acea culoare și experiența negativă, resimțind disconfort și anxietate.

Acest fenomen este cu atât mai evident în cazul culorilor asociate cu traume sau experiențe medicale stresante. De exemplu, roșul, adesea asociat cu urgențele medicale sau sângele, poate declanșa o reacție de frică în rândul pacienților care au avut experiențe traumatizante în spitale. Așa cum afirmă Calvo Ivanovic, „relația dintre culoare și memorie este complexă și variată. Culorile pot influența memoria noastră, iar, la rândul său, memoria ne poate afecta modul în care percepem și ne amintim culorile." Ivancovic C. (2024)

Pacienții pot avea percepții diferite asupra culorilor, evocând emoții pozitive sau negative, în funcție de semnificațiile culturale și individuale asociate cu acea culoare. În unele culturi, albul este asociat cu moartea sau doliul, având un impact negativ asupra pacientului într-un cabinet medical, amplificându-i starea de neliniște. În contrast, alte culturi asociază albul cu puritatea și pacea, ceea ce poate avea o influență pozitivă într-un cabinet medical, ajutând la liniștirea pacienților. „Culorile pot trezi emoții sau amintiri puternic ancorate în contexte culturale și colective" Ivancovic C. (2024), ceea ce subliniază importanța înțelegerii memoriei emoționale colective și influența acesteia asupra percepțiilor individuale. „Cultura unui loc este absorbită de indivizi și de memoria acestora, iar amintirile și experiențele personale se împletesc cu evenimentele și istoria colectivă". Ivancovic C. (2024)

Culorile, pe lângă efectul lor psihologic, au si un rol funcțional, ajutând la orientarea pacienților în spațiile medicale mari și complexe. „Un perete într-o nuanță intensă de roșu și cu un model distinct a servit drept reper vizual eficient, ajutând pacienții să navigheze mai ușor în zonele confuze și contribuind la reducerea semnificativă a conflictelor și dezorientării." McLachlan F. (2017-2019) Astfel, culorile contrastante pot fi folosite în mod eficient într-un cabinet medical pentru a ajuta deplasarea facilă și în siguranță a pacienților.

PROIECTAREA SĂLII DE AȘTEPTARE – În proiectarea sălii de așteptare, culorile trebuie combinate cu atenție, pentru a crea un mediu care să reducă anxietatea și să ofere confort psihologic. Culorile reci, albastru și verde în nuanțe pale, sunt o alegere potrivită, având în vedere capacitatea lor de calmare și stabilitate emoțională. Culorile neutre, gri sau bej, conferă o senzație de ordine și profesionalism, dar în accente prea stridente pot da impresia de rigiditate sau sterilitate rece. Culorile puternice, roșu sau portocaliu intens, trebuie utilizate cu mare prudență, pentru a nu induce o stare de tensiune. Moutoussis K. (2015)

Pe lângă efectele psihologice dovedite ale culorilor, psihologia liniilor joacă un rol important în percepția spațiului, integrând culorile într-un mod eficient. Liniile, fie că sunt drepte, curbe sau unghiulare, pot genera reacții emoționale și cognitive distincte. Sayim B. (2011) Liniile curbe sunt deseori asociate cu fluiditatea, continuitatea și calmul. Utilizarea acestora poate crea un sentiment de siguranță și confort în sala de așteptare. Liniile drepte sau cele unghiulare, adesea percepute ca fiind mai rigide, pot genera tensiune și disconfort, mai ales într-un spațiu în care stresul crește pe măsură ce timpul trece. Stanischewski S.(2020)

Când liniile sunt utilizate în combinație cu psihologia culorilor, efectul este amplificat. Liniile curbe în nuanțe de albastru sau verde pot accentua efectul liniștitor, consolidând senzația de calm. Utilizarea liniilor drepte sau unghiulare în culori precum roșu sau portocaliu, pot genera o stare de agitație, amplificând starea de tensiune.

PROIECTAREA SĂLII DE TRATAMENT – Sala de tratament trebuie să ofere un echilibru între funcționalitate și confort psihologic. Nuanțele reci, precum albastrul deschis și verdele pal, sunt adesea utilizate pentru a crea un mediu liniștitor, facilitând recuperarea pacienților. Culorile neutre, precum gri și bej deschis, adaugă o notă de profesionalism, atât timp cât acestea rămân subtile. Accentele de culori vibrante trebuie utilizate cu prudență, pentru a oferi dinamism, însă fără a amplifica tensiunea emoțională.

PROIECTAREA CABINETULUI MEDICULUI – Cabinetul medicului trebuie să inspire profesionalism și să ofere o atmosfera relaxantă. Culorile neutre și calde, precum bej, crem, gri deschis, contribuie la crearea unui spațiu primitor și profesional, reducând distanța psihologică dintre medic și pacient. Accentele de galben pal sau portocaliu deschis pot adăuga o notă de empatie, în timp ce tonurile de verde sau albastru deschis ajută la menținerea unei atmosfere calme. Culorile puternice, precum roșu sau violet, ar trebui utilizate cât mai puțin sau chiar evitate, deoarece pot crea o stare de tensiune, contribuind la distanțarea psihologică dintre medic și pacient.

a. Cabinetul de pediatrie: Cromatica în acest tip de cabinet trebuie gândită atent, deoarece are un impact direct asupra copiilor, care adesea percep o vizită medicală cu teamă. Culorile vii și calde (galben, portocaliu, verde deschis) pot crea un mediu potrivit pentru această grupă de vârstă, având un efect de stimulare și reducere a anxietății. Este important ca designul cromatic ales să fie unul vesel, dar fără exagerarea unui tip de culoare. Contrastele puternice trebuie evitate deoarece pot deveni copleșitoare pentru copii, aceștia având mereu nevoie de un mediu care să ofere siguranță și confort.

b. Cabinetul de oncologie: În cazul pacienților oncologici, aceștia au nevoie de un sprijin atât psihic, cât și fizic. Culorile calme și subtile, precum verdele sau albastrul, induc o atmosferă de liniște și oferă o senzație de stabilitate și speranță. Adăugarea unor accente calde, cum sunt pastelurile de piersică sau crem, pot umaniza spațiul, oferindu-i o notă de confort emoțional. Acest lucru este esențial pentru pacienții care urmează un tratament de lungă durată.
c. Cabinetul de cardiologie: Pacienții care pătrund într-un cabinet de cardiologie prezintă adesea un nivel ridicat de anxietate. Astfel, un element foarte important îl reprezintă crearea unui spațiu care să contribuie activ la reducerea tensiunii și stresului. Utilizarea culorilor reci (albastru, verde) sau a nuanțelor neutre (bej, gri deschis) pot ajuta la stabilizarea psihologică și fizică a pacienților. Culorile stridente, cum sunt roșul intens sau portocaliul aprins, trebuie evitate pe cât de mult posibil. Acestea pot avea un impact asupra stării de calm a pacientului, contribuind la creșterea tensiunii arteriale.
d. Cabinetul de psihiatrie: Aici, culoarea devine un instrument terapeutic esențial în facilitarea dialogului și promovarea introspecției. Nuanțele delicate de lavandă, verde pal sau albastru deschis creează o atmosferă care reduce stresul și oferă pacienților un sentiment de siguranță. Evitarea culorilor vibrante sau a contrastelor exagerate este esențială, deoarece pot stimula agitația sau reacțiile emoționale nedorite, interferând cu procesul terapeutic.

Cromatica influențează percepțiile și starea psihologică a pacienților. Alegerea culorilor poate transforma un spațiu medical dintr-un mediu steril și rece într-un loc primitor și terapeutic. Lucrarea explorează interacțiunea dintre psihologia culorilor, designul interior și nevoile emoționale ale pacienților, evidențiind importanța armoniei cromatice în mediul medical.

Deci, cromatica are un rol terapeutic esențial în cabinetele medicale, contribuind nu doar la crearea unui mediu funcțional, ci și la sprijinirea echilibrului emoțional al pacienților. Studiul subliniază necesitatea integrării principiilor psihologiei culorilor în designul medical modern, propunând soluții practice pentru optimizarea experienței pacientului și umanizarea spațiilor de tratament.

Alegerea culorilor în spațiile medicale reprezintă o influență notabilă asupra stării emoționale și psihologice a pacienților. Testul Luscher, unul dintre cele mai cunoscute instrumente de evaluare a preferințelor cromatice, oferă o perspectivă psihologică asupra semnificației culorilor și modul în care acestea reflectă stările emoționale. În acest test, culorile fundamentale (albastru, verde, roșu și galben) sunt asociate cu trebuințe psihologice de bază, în timp ce culorile auxiliare (maro, gri sau negru), indică posibile tensiuni sau conflicte interne. Mureșan P. (1988)

În test, poziționarea culorilor fundamentale (albastru, verde, roșu, galben) pe primele poziții semnalează un echilibru psihologic, în timp ce plasarea lor pe ultimele poziții poate indica stres sau dezechilibru. Această analiză devine una foarte importantă pentru proiectarea cromaticii în cabinetele medicale, unde pacienții trebuie sa simtă un echilibru.

Testul Luscher oferă o perspectivă unică asupra modului în care culorile pot fi selectate pentru a răspunde nevoilor emoționale ale pacienților:

1. Diagnosticul stării emoționale: Prin analiza preferințelor cromatice, testul poate ghida alegerea culorilor care să reducă tensiunea sau să stimuleze confortul emoțional.
2. Crearea unui mediu personalizat: Preferințele cromatice ale pacienților pot inspira designul interior al cabinetelor pentru a răspunde unor nevoi individuale, oferind un mediu personalizat.
3. Reducerea stresului: Culoarea poate fi o punte între interior și exterior, facilitând o stare de calm și armonie.

Integrarea principiilor Testului Luscher în alegerea cromaticii cabinetelor medicale sugerează faptul că impactul culorilor merge dincolo de estetică, pătrunzând în profunzimea emoțiilor și a percepțiilor pacienților. Un design cromatic bine gândit, inspirat de aceste principii, poate deveni o parte integrantă a actului medical, contribuind la crearea unui mediu terapeutic și umanizat.

În contextul amenajării spaţiilor medicale, integrarea principiilor testului Luscher devine un proces complex, în care selecţia culorilor nu mai este privită doar ca o opţiune estetică, ci ca un instrument terapeutic. Printr-o abordare sistemică, proiectanţii şi echipele medicale pot valorifica informaţiile obţinute din analiza preferinţelor cromatice pentru a crea medii în care pacientul experimentează un sentiment de linişte şi siguranţă, reflectând grija pentru nevoile lor individuale și contribuind la o experiență medicală mai umană.

Mai întâi, orice intervenţie cromatică trebuie precedată de o fază de diagnoză psihocromatică, prin care pacientul sau grupuri de pacienţi completează testul Luscher. Această etapă oferă un tablou clar al nevoilor emoţionale dominante—de la dorinţa de confort şi stabilitate (reprezentate frecvent de alegerea nuanţelor de albastru şi verde) până la nevoia de stimulare şi energie (relevată prin preferinţa pentru roşu şi galben). În acest fel, paleta cromatică finală nu mai este generică, ci adaptată profilului psihologic al comunităţii deservite de respectiva unitate medicală.

Pe baza rezultatelor, designul interior poate fi structurat pe trei niveluri de intervenţie: fundal, elemente funcţionale şi accente. Fundalul – suprafeţele ample ale pereţilor şi tavanelor – vor adopta tonuri neutre sau pastelate preponderent albastru-verzui, menite să reducă anxietatea. Mobilierul şi echipamentele medicale, care sunt vizibile în permanenţă şi asigură funcţionalitatea practică a spaţiului, pot îmbrăca nuanţe temperate din paleta primară, astfel încât să reafirme echilibrul emoţional. Accentele discrete – textile, corpuri de iluminat, elemente decorative – vor prelua culori auxiliare, precum o textură caldă de galben sau un detaliu de roşu pal, pentru a stimula senzaţia de optimism şi a oferi o doză suplimentară de vitalitate.

Pe lângă selectarea cromaticii, instalarea şi modul de iluminare al spaţiului joacă un rol foarte important. Luminile reci, difuze permit reglarea intensităţii cromatice în funcţie de ora din zi şi de ritmul intervenţiei medicale, astfel încât impactul psihologic să fie optim. În sălile de tratament, iluminatul indirect, cu surse montate pe plafoane suspendate, previne reflexiile puternice şi menţine atmosfera calmă, în timp ce în zonele de recuperare luminile pot fi reglate către o temperatură mai caldă, pentru a însoţi procesul de relaxare şi regenerare.

Implementarea acestor principii în mediul clinic nu rămâne un demers izolat, ci necesită o colaborare strânsă între psihologi, designeri de interior şi personal medical. Psihologul oferă interpretarea datelor de testare Luscher şi validează consistenţa intervenţiei cu mecanismele cognitive şi emoţionale ale pacientului. Designerul transpune aceste date în soluţii tehnice şi estetice, adaptând materiale, texturi şi finisaje. Personalul medical, la rândul său, furnizează feedback continuu privind comportamentul şi confortul pacienţilor, ajustând ulterior nuanţele şi intensitatea cromatică. Astfel, cabinetul medical devine o veritabilă poartă spre vindecare.

În esenţă, integrarea testului Luscher în procesul de proiectare a spaţiilor medicale transcende rolul decorativ al culorii, transformând fiecare nuanţă într-un vector de echilibru emoţional. Prin abordarea metodică, bazată pe date psihocromatice şi ajustări iterativ-colaborative, designul interior devine un partener activ al actului medical, consolidând starea de bine a pacientului şi eficienţa actului terapeutic.

PRAGMALINGUISTIC ASPECTS IN DENTIST-PATIENT VERBAL INTERACTION. SPEECH ACTS IN A DENTAL OFFICE

Alexandru-Ioan Bădescu
PhD Student, National University of Science and Technology "Politehnica" Bucharest, University Center of Pitești

Abstract: This paper explores the use of speech acts in dental medical discourse, analyzing how dentists and patients talk through pragmatic tools. Drawing on John Searle's theory, we examined a few dentist-patient interactions in a dental office in order to emphasize the prevalence of the speech acts and the findings reveal a predominance of directive and assertive acts during the dental treatments and during consultations. Besides, this article highlights the need and the recommendation for the dental care providers to introduce more often expressive and comissive acts in their medical discourse for a pragmatic adaptation to patient's anxiety and to improve the trust and cooperation.

Key words*: pragmatics; speech acts; dentist-patient interaction; expressive acts; medical discourse*

1. Introducere

Pragmalingvistica oferă un cadru teoretic eficient pentru a analiza interacțiunea dintre medic și pacient în domeniul medical, precum și în cel stomatologic, întrucat aceasta implică un schimb complex de informații și de emoții, dincolo de conținutul strict informațional, punându-se accent pe intențiile comunicative, relațiile de putere sau pe strategiile de atenuare. Scopul pragmaticii este studiul capacității vorbitorilor de a împerechea propozițiile cu contextele în care se potrivesc, ceea ce Dell Hymes numește competență comunicativă.

Comunicarea într-un cabinet stomatologic reprezintă o parte foarte importantă a asistenței medicale, cu implicații imense pentru diagnostic, tratament și satisfacția pacientului, iar din punct de vedere lingvistic, interacțiunile medic-pacient posedă o semnificație pragmatică bogată, susținută de contextul medical și de un tip asimetric de interacțiune. Limbajul folosit în consultații, structurat pe diferite acte de vorbire, este văzut nu numai ca o metodă de transmitere a informațiilor, ci și pentru negocierea autorității, gestionarea emoțiilor sau pentru asigurarea faptului că pacienții se simt auziți și susținuți (Bigi, 2016).

2. Cadrul teoretic

Termenul de pragmatică provine din grecul πρᾶγμα pragma (acțiune) și se referă la un tip de acțiune umană realizată prin intermediul limbajului, într-un anumit domeniu.

*„Ca și în cazul sintaxei și semanticii, nu putem vorbi de o pragmatică în genere, ci despre pragmatici. De aceea nici nu vom putea să vorbim despre o definiție unică a pragmaticii, care să delimiteze cu fermitate și cu precizie un obiect care să fie al pragmaticii și numai al pragmaticii."(*Ioan Cârâc , „Pragmatica" în Teoria și practica semnului)

De asemenea, conceptul de enunțare descris de Émile Benveniste a făcut posibilă pragmatica lingvistică și este definit ca fiind punerea în funcțiune a limbii printr-un act individual de utilizare, iar condiția enunțării ar fi aceea că aceasta este chiar actul de producere a unui enunț și nu textul enunțului. Benveniste consideră că acest act al enunțării implică un locutor și un alocutor, însă pentru el actul rămâne individual și nu interindividual. (Păduraru Carmen, Eugen Coșeriu. Contribuții la pragmatica lingvistică, Iași, 2009).

În lucrarea fundamentală "How to Do Things with Words", J.L. Austin introduce teoria actelor de vorbire, reliefand ideea că limbajul nu servește doar la enunțarea unor fapte, ci este în sine o acțiune, întrucat prin cuvinte, oamenii promit, avertizează, întreabă sau ordonă: "To say something is to do something." (Austin, 1962) Astfel, J.L. Austin, în cadrul filozofiei limbajului, susține ideea centrală că a spune ceva înseamnă adesea a face ceva și a diferențiat trei tipuri principale de acte de vorbire: locuționar, ilocuționar și perlocuționar. Actul locuționar face referire la exprimarea propriu-zisă a cuvintelor, adică enunțul în sine, cu sensul său literal - spre exemplu: ”Îți promit că vin mâine." În continuare, actul ilocuționar subliniază intenția vorbitorului prin acel enunț (ce face prin a spune ceva: promite, avertizează, întreabă etc). Exemplul evocat mai sus este un act de promisiune. Nu în ultimul rand, actul perlocuționar evidențiază efectul pe care enunțul îl are asupra ascultătorului (convingere, teamă, motivare etc). În exemplul menționat anterior, putem observa că celălalt se bazează pe venirea ta.

Așadar, cele dintâi studii consacrate actelor de vorbire îi aparţin filozofului J. Austin, primul care a oferit o clasificare, distingând cinci clase delimitate în funcţie de valoarea lor ilocuţionară. J. Austin este cel care a demonstrat că orice enunţare a unei propoziţii în procesul de comunicare presupune realizarea unui act ilocuţionar, iar acesta poate avea valori diferite, în funcţie de scopul urmărit de emiţător. Luând în considerare „forţa” care se aplică la diverse conţinuturi şi care poate fi exprimată cu ajutorul verbelor performative, Austin pune baza clasificării actelor de vorbire, împărţindu-le astfel:

1. acte verdictive; constau în „exprimarea unei judecăţi, oficiale ori neoficiale, bazate pe probe ori motive referitoare la valori ori fapte”. Scopul ilocuţionar poate fi marcat cu ajutorul verbelor performative, precum: a achita, a condamna, a decreta, a considera, a crede, a înţelege, a estima, a evalua, a caracteriza, a aprecia, a descrie, a analiza etc.
2. acte exercitive (decizionale); presupun „exprimarea unei decizii în favoarea sau împotriva unei anumite acţiuni”. Scopul lor ilocuţionar poate fi marcat prin verbe performative ca: a ordona, a cere, a comanda, a implora, a sfătui, a numi în funcţie, a destitui, a concedia, a abroga, a se opune etc.
3. acte promisive (comisive); au menirea „să angajeze vorbitorul la anumite acţiuni”. Au ca marcă a scopului ilocuţionar verbe performative precum: a promite, a se angaja, a garanta, a accepta etc.
4. acte behabitative (comportative/comportamentale); „presupun reacţii la comportamentul şi soarta altor persoane, precum şi atitudini şi exprimări de atitudini faţă de purtarea anterioară ori iminentă a unei alte persoane”. Verbele performative prin care este marcat scopul lor ilocuţionar sunt: a mulţumi, a felicita, a compătimi, a critica, a-şi cere scuze, a se plânge, a binecuvânta etc.
5. acte expozitive; sunt folosite pentru „a expune un punct de vedere, de a conduce un argument şi de a clarifica întrebuinţări şi referinţe”. Verbele performative folosite în cazul acestor acte sunt: a afirma, a nega, a postula, a remarca, a obiecta, a informa, a explica. (Austin, 1962)

Considerată de însuşi Austin ca fiind „o clasificare generală preliminară”, una provizorie, clasificarea dată nu este scutită de neajunsuri, cum ar fi lipsa unui criteriu clar în delimitarea claselor de acte de vorbire, numeroase suprapuneri între clasele de acte de vorbire delimitate. Referindu-se la clasificarea propusă de Austin, J. Searle observa că este vorba mai puţin de o clasificare de enunţuri performative şi mai degrabă de o clasificare a verbelor performative din limba engleză, adică verbele caracterizate printr-o anumită valoare ilocuţionară.

Raportându-se la clasificarea actelor de vorbire propusă de Austin şi urmărind scopul de a depăşi deficienţele clasificării date, John Searle propune o nouă clasificare. Spre deosebire de Austin, care identifică tipurile de acte de vorbire pornind de la semantica verbelor performative, Searle pune la bază noţiunea simplă şi clară de scop comunicativ urmărit de locutor în situaţia dată de comunicare. Astfel, clasificarea actelor de vorbire în funcţie de forţa ilocuţionară care se asociază unui conţinut propoziţional i-a permis lui Searle să amelioreze clasificarea actelor de vorbire elaborate de profesorul său.

Lucrul cel mai important pe care îl face Searle în stabilirea taxonomiei actelor de vorbire este să clarifice criteriile în funcţie de care acestea urmează să fie clasificate. În acest scop, Searle a amplificat numărul de trăsături pe baza cărora se poate contura o tipologie a actelor ilocuţionare, stabilind un fascicul de douăsprezece parametri, care pot fi grupaţi în funcţie de condiţiile producerii actelor de vorbire, în patru tipuri. Cele mai importante criterii luate în considerare de Searle în clasificarea actelor de vorbire sunt: scopul actului ilocuţionar, direcţia de ajustare (de la cuvinte spre realitate sau de la realitate spre cuvinte), starea psihologică exprimată (convingerea, dorinţa, regretul etc.) şi conţinutul propoziţional.

Ca urmare a aplicării acestor criterii, J. Searle identifică și descrie cinci clase (sau categorii de bază) de acte de vorbire în lucrarea "Les actes de langage. Essai de philosophie du langage": 1) asertivele (afirmaţii), 2) directivele (cererile, inclusive întrebările, sfaturile), 3) promisivele (asumarea unor angajamente), 4) expresivele (acte care servesc la exprimarea emoţiilor şi acte comportamentale) şi 5. declarativele (diverse acţiuni instituţionale). (Searle, 1972)

3. Material și metodă

Am ales să mă raportez la clasificarea lui John Searle ce conține cele cinci tipuri de acte de vorbire, așa cum este ilustrată în figura 1, cu scopul de a observa impactul acestora în discursul medical stomatologic. În acest sens, am identificat aceste tipuri de acte prin metoda observației participative și prin transcrierea conversațiilor din interacțiunea medic dentist-pacient. Cercetarea s-a desfășurat în cabinetul stomatologic propriu din Pitești, județul Argeș, pe parcursul lunilor iulie-noiembrie 2025, pe un interval de timp de cinci luni, iar pacienții implicați și-au dat acordul de participare. Am analizat actele de vorbire în funcție de trei parametri contextuali: 1. consultația inițială, 2. ședința propriu-zisă de tratament și 3. etapa de consiliere a pacientului.

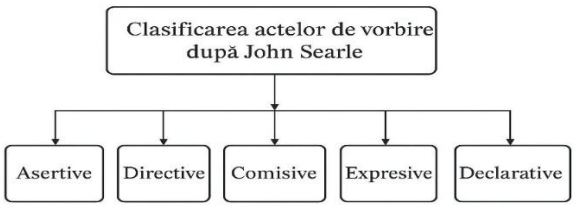

Figura 1. Clasificarea actelor de vorbire după John Searle

4. Rezultate și discuții. Actele de vorbire observate în cabinetul stomatologic

În contextul comunicării medicale din cabinet, am observant aceste categorii de acte de vorbire în comunicarea stomatologică sub forma indicațiilor clinice, explicațiilor, promisiunilor terapeutice, exprimării empatiei sau constatărilor medicale. Ca aplicabilitate în contextul dat, am regăsit toate cele cinci tipuri de acte de vorbire în interacțiunea mea ca medic dentist cu pacienții, așa cum reiese din următoarele exemple identificate în cabinet: *acte asertive prin care am transmis informații medicale: „Aveți o carie pe acest incisiv pe care va trebui să o îndepărtatăm, iar dintele va avea nevoie ulterior de o obturație." (obturație = plombă, n.n.); acte directive, prin care am transmis anumite comenzi în cadrul etapelor de tratament: „Rămâneți cu gura deschisă, vă rog, ca să aplic materialul de plombă!."; *acte expresive, prin care am încercat să manifest empatie: „Îmi pare rău, știu că este neplăcută această etapă a tratamentului. Fac tot ce pot să aveți o experiență fără durere la mine în cabinet."; acte comisive, prin intermediul cărora am lansat promisiuni:„Tratamentul pe acest dinte se finalizează în două ședințe, după care veți putea manca pe el fără nicio problemă." și acte declarative, cu ajutorul cărora am făcut constatări astfel ca pacientul să fie informat referitor la progresul tratamentului: „Am terminat procedura de astăzi așa cum ne-am propus."

În ceea ce privește aplicabilitatea actelor de vorbire descrise de Searle în sfera medicinei dentare, putem facem următoarele mențiuni, pe baza observației participative din cabinet:

O perspectivă care provine din studiu este că actele de vorbire sunt contextuale. De exemplu, directivele și asertivele în discursul medical nu apar într-un vid, ci depind de rolurile instituționale ale participanților pentru forța și funcția lor. Punctual, atunci când un medic spune „Trebuie să luați acest antiinflamator", gradul de autoritate este diferit de cel dintr-o conversație obișnuită. În astfel de cazuri, statutul de medic ca profesionist medical are o pondere mai mare în utilizarea unei directive, iar un pacient răspunde de obicei cu acte de vorbire comisive, care arată acordul sau conformitatea.

Această dinamică încalcă noțiunea de forță iluzorie a lui Searle, dar subliniază în același timp modul în care contextul instituțional aduce autoritate unor acte de vorbire.

Ca rezultate observate, în cadrul consultației inițiale, remarcăm o prevalență crescută a actelor de vorbire asertive, întrucât accentul cade pe a culege date și pe a informa pacientul referitor la diagnosticul și planul său de tratament. În această etapă, desi predomină explicațiile medicale și recomandările terapeutice, propunerea mea este să introducem minimum trei acte de vorbire comisive, concretizabile prin luarea unor angajamente realizabile din partea medicului „Vom avea coroana dentară gata în două ședințe" sau „Vă promit că nu o să simțiți disconfort la mine în cabinet." Consider că lansarea acestor promisiuni va întări încrederea pacientului și implicit va crește gradul de cooperare.

Apoi, în cadrul unei ședințe propriu-zise de tratament (de exemplu atunci când s-a efectuat un detartraj=igienizare dentară sau o obturație coronară = plombă, n.n.) am constatat că predomină actele de vorbire directive, prin care medicul dentist emite comenzi: „Deschideți gura mai mare, vă rog"/ „Vă rog să clătiți". Propunerea aici este să inserăm în discursul medical minimum trei acte de vorbire expresive în cadrul oricărei etape de tratament (fiecare dintre ele la un interval de 15-20 minute), prin care să dăm dovadă de grijă și atenție, astfel încât pacientul să perceapă nota umană și să se simtă în siguranță, de exemplu „Voi face tot posibilul ca extracția de astăzi să fie complet nedureroasă!" sau „Îmi doresc să aveți o experiență cât mai confortabilă pe scaunul meu stomatologic."

În continuare, atunci când ne raportăm la consilierea pacientului (discursul de consiliere) observația mea este că în această etapă se împletesc actele de vorbire comisie cu cele expresive „Vă promit că voi face în așa fel încât să vă fie bine"/ „Vă promit că vom face echipă și prin toate căile vom încerca să oprim evoluția bolii parodontale, eu prin mijloacele din cabinet, iar dumneavoastră îmi veți promite că vă veți îmbunătăți igiena orală." Recomandarea aici este să utilizăm actele de vorbire comisive cu limitările necesare și să nu facem abuz de folosirea acestora, întrucât în medicina dentară, conform Codului Deontologic, nu există garanții în ceea ce privește actul medical. Deci, menționez că este de evitat un act comisiv precum „Vă asigur că intervenția va avea un success de 100%", întrucât același protocol terapeutic poate evolua altfel la doi pacienți diferiți.

O recomandare utilă este că nu încheiem ședința de tratament brusc, fără să informăm pacientul de etapa în care ne aflăm, astfel aici subliniez importanța de a face apel la actele de vorbire declarative, mai ales la finalul ședinței și să menționăm „Am încheiat tratamentul de astăzi conform graficului.", astfel pacientul poate să perceapă și să poată cuantifica stadiul în care ne aflăm în ceea ce privește planul său de tratament.

Prin prezenta cercetare, am constatat că răspunsurile date la anumite acte de vorbire de către pacienți pot dezvălui înțelegerea acestora sau aderarea la planul de tratament prescris. Reacţii precum angajamente parţiale sau incertitudinea din partea lor, cum ar fi „Voi încerca, dar nu sunt sigur cum anume și când să folosesc apa de gură pe care mi-ați recomandat-o", au arătat zonele în care a fost necesară clarificarea. Prin acest feedback, medicul este capabil să-și controleze abordarea prin comunicare, prin oferirea unei explicații mai elaborate sau prin adresarea de întrebări de urmărire pentru ca pacienții să înțeleagă pe deplin și să fie încrezători în planul de tratament.

5. Concluzie

Acest articol oferă noi perspective asupra rolului pe care empatia îl joacă în cadrul actelor de vorbire în discursul medical. Actele de vorbire expresive, cum ar fi „Nu trebuie să vă faceți griji, procedura de astăzi este una simplă și nedureroasă", constituie o parte importantă a comunicării medicale, deoarece prin astfel de acte, nivelul de anxietate al pacienților este redus și, prin urmare, relația de încredere dintre cei doi membri ai comunicării prinde contur. A adăuga acte de vorbire expresive ori de câte ori este posibil în diferitele contexte medicale, combinate cu acte asertive sau directive, aduce un plus valoare discursului medical. Acest amestec de informații tehnice medicale (actele asertive) cu asigurarea emoțională (actele expresive) pare să funcționeze deosebit de bine în promovarea satisfacției și înțelegerii pacientului.

O observație care reiese din articol constă în faptul că pacienții percep siguranță sporită și crește gradul de încredere al lor în medicul curant atunci cand se folosesc cu precădere în discursul medical acte de vorbire expresive, care denotă grijă, și totodată acte de vorbire comisive, prin care se fac angajamente în gestionarea planului de tratament.

Așadar, prezenta lucrare pune accent pe importanța conștientizării impactului diferitelor acte de vorbire în îmbunătățirea experienței și a percepției pacientului, în cadrul vizitelor la cabinet, lăsand loc pentru viitoare cercetări în această direcție: "If you can't say it clearly, you don't understand it yourself" John Searle. Propunerea mea se concentrează spre elaborarea unui ghid în care să indicăm folosirea actelor de vorbire strategic în cabinetul stomatologic, astfel incat să avem un discurs eficient care să contribuie la închegarea relației terapeutice dintre medic și pacient.

MEDICAL DISCOURSE AND DOCTOR–PATIENT VERBAL INTERACTION: THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS OF LINGUISTIC ANALYSIS

Georgiana-Adelina Floroiu
PhD Student, National University of Science and Technology „Politehnica", Bucharest, Pitești University Center

Abstract: Communication in psychiatry is a multifaceted process in which language serves simultaneously as a means of assessment and as a therapeutic instrument. This article explores the theoretical foundations of linguistic analysis applied to verbal interaction in the medical context, highlighting the role of speech acts, conversational implicatures, and politeness strategies in creating a collaborative and ethical relationship. Concrete examples inspired by doctoral research illustrate the ways in which language facilitates the negotiation of meaning, reduces communicative asymmetry, and supports the therapeutic process. The analysis underscores the need to integrate linguistic approaches into professional training and psychiatric practice, as well as their relevance for optimizing clinical communication and therapeutic outcomes.*

Introducere

Comunicarea între medic și pacient reprezintă un proces complex, multidimensional, în care limbajul nu este doar un mijloc de transmitere a informațiilor, ci și un instrument terapeutic ce influențează percepția pacientului asupra propriei stări de sănătate, gradul de aderență la tratament și calitatea relației terapeutice. În psihiatrie, importanța interacțiunii verbale devine și mai evidentă: experiențele subiective ale pacientului trebuie înțelese, validate și integrate în procesul terapeutic, ceea ce necesită o sensibilitate pragmatică și lingvistică deosebită.

Fiecare enunț, întrebare, pauză sau intonație poate avea o valoare clinică și relațională. Analiza discursului medical dintr-o perspectivă lingvistică permite astfel înțelegerea modului în care sensul este construit, negociat și interpretat în interacțiunea medic–pacient.

Scopul prezentului articol este de a identifica fundamentele teoretice ale analizei discursului medical și de a evidenția specificul comunicării în îngrijirea psihiatrică, unde dimensiunea emoțională și cea simbolică a limbajului capătă o importanță esențială.

Cadrul teoretic al analizei discursului medical Analiza discursului medical se fundamentează pe două perspective complementare care permit înțelegerea complexității comunicării dintre medic și pacient: perspectiva critică și perspectiva pragmatică.

Abordarea critică, inspirată de Michel Foucault, subliniază modul în care discursul medical este strâns legat de structurile de putere instituțională și de autoritatea profesională. Conform acestei perspective, medicul nu doar că transmite informații, ci și modelează percepțiile pacientului asupra propriei stări de sănătate, exercitând o influență asupra modului în care pacientul înțelege boala și opțiunile terapeutice disponibile.

În cadrul cercetării mele doctorale, analiza transcrierilor consultațiilor psihiatrice a evidențiat cum utilizarea anumitor formulări și termeni tehnici conferă legitimitate deciziilor medicale, dar poate genera, de asemenea, percepția unei bariere comunicative. De exemplu, atunci când un pacient descria simptomele depresive ca „o greutate constantă în piept", medicul folosea termenul tehnic „simptome anxios-depresive" pentru a clasifica și interpreta experiența subiectivă, ceea ce a fost ulterior clarificat printr-o reformulare empatică: „Înțeleg că simțiți o apăsare continuă, iar aceasta este o manifestare comună a anxietății și depresiei." Această intervenție ilustrează cum discursul medical exercită putere, dar poate fi calibrat pentru a nu produce alienare sau confuzie.

Pe de altă parte, perspectiva pragmatică, derivată din teoriile actelor de vorbire ale lui Austin și Searle și din principiile implicaturii conversaționale ale lui Grice, se concentrează asupra modului în care sensurile sunt negociate în cadrul interacțiunii. Actele de vorbire directive, asertive și expresive sunt utilizate pentru a transmite informații, recomandări și sprijin emoțional, iar în contextul psihiatriei, aceste acte capătă o complexitate suplimentară datorită variabilității experienței subiective a pacientului. În analiza conversațiilor din teza mea, s-a observat că pacienții folosesc adesea expresii indirecte pentru a comunica stările interioare („Simt că nu mai pot să mă concentrez pe nimic"), iar medicul trebuie să interpreteze aceste mesaje, să confirme înțelegerea și să transforme informațiile subiective într-o strategie terapeutică clară.

De asemenea, cercetarea a arătat importanța asimetriei comunicative în contextul psihiatriei. Medicul deține expertiza profesională, dar pacientul deține experiența personală a bolii. Prin intermediul strategiilor lingvistice, această asimetrie poate fi diminuată. Într-un exemplu din teza mea, medicul a folosit reformulări empatice și întrebări deschise pentru a facilita exprimarea pacientului: „Spuneți-mi mai multe despre cum se manifestă această senzație în viața de zi cu zi?" Această abordare nu doar că a permis colectarea de informații relevante pentru diagnostic, dar a contribuit și la consolidarea încrederii și a colaborării terapeutice.

Astfel, cadrul teoretic al analizei discursului medical combină în mod integrat perspectivele critice și pragmatice, oferind un instrument puternic pentru înțelegerea interacțiunii medic–pacient. Exemplele extrase din practica clinică ilustrează cum limbajul funcționează simultan ca instrument de putere, de diagnostic și de suport terapeutic, evidențiind necesitatea unei interpretări nuanțate și a unei abordări interdisciplinare în formarea și practica profesională a medicilor.

Asimetria comunicativă și strategiile de echilibrare

Asimetria comunicativă reprezintă un element definitoriu al discursului medical, reflectând diferența între cunoașterea profesională deținută de medic și experiența subiectivă a pacientului. Această discrepanță generează o tensiune structurală între limbajul tehnic, orientat spre informație, și limbajul experiențial, centrat pe trăirile pacientului. În cadrul interacțiunii psihiatrice, tensiunea nu este doar cognitivă, ci și afectivă, ceea ce face ca normele instituționale de comunicare să fie continuu negociate. Pacientul nu mai este doar receptor pasiv al informației, ci devine un partener activ în construcția sensului și în definirea procesului terapeutic, contribuind la co-crearea strategiilor de îngrijire.

Pentru a reduce efectele asimetriei și a facilita colaborarea, medicii recurg la diverse strategii discursive. De exemplu, un pacient cu depresie severă din cercetarea doctorală a afirmat: „Nu știu dacă ceea ce simt este normal sau dacă greșesc cumva". Medicul a răspuns printr-o reformulare empatică și printr-un act asertiv, explicând natura simptomelor și validând experiența pacientului: „Este firesc să simțiți aceste emoții în contextul depresiei, iar împreună putem identifica modalități prin care să gestionați aceste trăiri". În alt caz, un pacient cu anxietate exprima dificultatea de a respecta recomandările terapeutice printr-o afirmație indirectă: „Parcă nu reușesc să fac tot ce ar trebui". Medicul folosește pronumele de persoana I plural și formulează recomandări indirecte: „Haideți să vedem împreună cum putem ajusta pașii, astfel încât să fie mai ușor de urmat". Aceste exemple evidențiază modul în care limbajul poate echilibra relația și reduce tensiunea generată de asimetria de cunoaștere.

Astfel, gestionarea asimetriei comunicative nu constă doar în transmiterea corectă a informațiilor, ci și în construirea unei relații intersubiective care să promoveze încrederea, cooperarea și implicarea activă a pacientului în procesul terapeutic. Aceste strategii discursive reprezintă un pilon esențial al eficienței și eticii în practica psihiatriei, demonstrând că succesul comunicării clinice depinde la fel de mult de modul în care informațiile sunt transmise, cât și de calitatea relației terapeutice.

Fundamente pragmatice ale discursului medical

Analiza discursului medical din perspectivă pragmatică se concentrează asupra actelor de vorbire, implicaturilor și strategiilor de politețe. Pragmatica limbajului oferă instrumente pentru înțelegerea modului în care sensul se construiește, negociază și interpretează în interacțiunea medic–pacient. În cadrul tezei mele doctorale, analiza transcrierilor consultațiilor psihiatrice a evidențiat că aceste dimensiuni au efecte directe asupra calității comunicării și asupra procesului terapeutic, influențând atât percepția pacientului asupra propriei stări, cât și eficiența recomandărilor medicale.

Actele de vorbire în comunicarea medicală au funcții multiple și interdependente. Actele directive, precum prescripțiile sau recomandările, coexistă cu actele asertive, prin care medicul explică sau interpretează simptomele, și cu actele expresive, prin care manifestă empatie și sprijin emoțional. Reformulările empatice ale medicului („Înțeleg că simțiți o presiune constantă…") clarifică informația, reduc anxietatea pacientului și încurajează exprimarea sinceră a experiențelor subiective. Actele directive, atunci când sunt formulate prin formule mitigative („Ați putea încerca…"), permit transmiterea recomandărilor fără a induce presiune sau vinovăție, menținând astfel echilibrul relațional și colaborarea terapeutică. Acest echilibru este esențial în psihiatrie, unde experiența subiectivă a pacientului are un rol central în definirea stării de sănătate și a planului de tratament.

Implicaturile conversaționale, conform teoriei lui Grice, subliniază că sensul comunicat nu este niciodată complet explicit. Medicul poate transmite îngrijorare, prudență sau optimism prin formule aparent neutre, iar pacientul poate ascunde, minimaliza sau amplifica anumite informații. În cadrul analizei doctorale, pacienții cu tulburări de anxietate comunicau dificultăți prin formulări indirecte („Parcă gândurile mele nu se opresc niciodată"), iar interpretarea corectă a acestor implicații a permis ajustarea intervențiilor și consolidarea unei relații de încredere, evidențiind că limbajul devine un instrument de negociere și adaptare a tratamentului.

Politețea și păstrarea „feței" interlocutorului, concept dezvoltat de Goffman și aprofundat de Brown & Levinson, sunt esențiale în comunicarea medicală. Respectarea demnității pacientului și evitarea stigmatizării se realizează prin formule mitigative („Ați putea încerca…") și întrebări deschise („Spuneți-mi mai multe despre cum se manifestă această senzație"). Aceste strategii facilitează exprimarea liberă a experiențelor pacientului, sprijină implicarea activă și reduc efectele asimetriei de cunoaștere și autoritate dintre medic și pacient. În teza mea, utilizarea acestor tehnici a fost asociată cu creșterea colaborării terapeutice și cu consolidarea încrederii reciproce.

Dimensiunea emoțională și simbolică a limbajului reprezintă o componentă centrală a pragmaticii psihiatrice. Pacienții folosesc metafore pentru a exprima experiențe afective complexe („depresia e o ceață", „anxietatea e un nod în gât"), iar recunoașterea și validarea acestor metafore de către medic constituie un act terapeutic în sine. De asemenea, tăcerile pacientului pot semnifica rezistență, protecție sau dorința de apropiere; interpretarea acestora face parte din competența pragmatică a clinicianului, contribuind la ajustarea intervențiilor și la menținerea unui dialog deschis și respectuos.

Negocierea sensului și co-construcția terapiei reprezintă esența comunicării pragmatice în psihiatrie. Limbajul funcționează simultan ca instrument de diagnostic și ca instrument terapeutic, permițând medicului să transforme experiențele subiective ale pacientului în planuri de tratament concrete. Procesul este interactiv și dialogic, în care ambii participanți contribuie activ. Această negociere reduce efectele asimetriei de cunoaștere și autoritate, întărește colaborarea și facilitează implicarea activă a pacientului în propria terapie.

Astfel, fundamentele pragmatice ale discursului medical evidențiază faptul că eficiența comunicării nu depinde doar de transmiterea informațiilor, ci și de modul în care sensul este construit și negociat, de respectul pentru experiența subiectivă a pacientului și de utilizarea limbajului ca instrument terapeutic complex. Integrarea acestor principii în practica clinică și în formarea profesională contribuie la creșterea calității relației medic–pacient, la îmbunătățirea rezultatelor terapeutice și la respectarea standardelor etice în psihiatrie.

Discursul psihiatric: între diagnostic și terapie

Discursul medical capătă o formă particulară în psihiatrie, unde limbajul pacientului funcționează simultan ca simptom și ca instrument terapeutic. Medicul nu lucrează doar cu corpul, ci și cu narațiunea — modul în care pacientul își povestește experiența suferinței devine parte integrantă a procesului de evaluare și tratament.

Procesul terapeutic presupune negocierea sensului. Pacientul aduce un discurs fragmentat, uneori incoerent sau încărcat emoțional, iar medicul organizează această narațiune, construind un cadru inteligibil care permite interpretarea simptomelor și stabilirea unui plan de intervenție. Această „resemantizare" este un proces colaborativ de co-construcție a realității pacientului, în care experiența subiectivă este recunoscută și validată.

Metaforele și imaginile simbolice utilizate de pacienți reprezintă elemente centrale ale discursului psihiatric. Ele permit exprimarea emoțiilor complexe, greu de articulat literal. Prin recunoașterea și validarea acestor metafore, medicul oferă pacientului un cadru sigur în care experiențele subiective sunt acceptate și integrate în procesul terapeutic.

Tăcerea are o valoare comunicativă aparte. În psihiatrie, momentele de tăcere nu sunt simple lacune de comunicare, ci pot indica reflecție, rezistență, protecție emoțională sau dorința de apropiere. Capacitatea medicului de a interpreta aceste momente face parte din competența sa pragmatică și contribuie la ajustarea intervențiilor, menținând dialogul terapeutic deschis și respectuos.

Discursul psihiatric integrează, de asemenea, strategii de politețe și formule mitigative care permit transmiterea recomandărilor și interpretărilor într-un mod non-intruziv. Această abordare favorizează colaborarea pacient-medical, crește implicarea pacientului și reduce efectele asimetriei de cunoaștere.

Un aspect esențial al discursului psihiatric este dinamica interacțiunii: comunicarea nu este un transfer unilateral de informații, ci un schimb activ în care sensul se construiește continuu. Medicul interpretează limbajul verbal și non-verbal, ajustează întrebările și reformulările, iar pacientul își adaptează răspunsurile în funcție de feedback-ul primit. Această flexibilitate creează un proces dialogic, în care limbajul este simultan instrument de înțelegere și mijloc terapeutic.

Astfel, limbajul în psihiatrie îndeplinește roluri multiple și interdependente.

În primul rând, funcționează ca un instrument de diagnostic, permițând medicului să interpreteze simptomele, să identifice patternuri psihologice și să înțeleagă modul în care pacientul experimentează propria suferință.

În al doilea rând, limbajul servește ca mijloc de negociere a sensului, deoarece experiența subiectivă a pacientului este ordonată, clarificată și integrată în cadrul terapeutic, facilitând un proces colaborativ în care pacientul devine partener activ în definirea stării sale de sănătate.

În al treilea rând, limbajul are un rol terapeutic propriu-zis, prin validarea experiențelor, restructurarea simbolică a suferinței și întărirea relației terapeutice, consolidând încrederea și colaborarea între pacient și medic.

Această perspectivă subliniază că eficiența și etica în psihiatrie nu depind doar de cunoașterea clinică, ci și de competența pragmatică a medicului, care trebuie să interpreteze nuanțele verbale și non-verbale, să gestioneze subtilitățile comunicative și să folosească limbajul ca instrument complex ce modelează experiența pacientului și contribuie la construirea unei relații intersubiective autentice.

Implicații etice și epistemologice

Analiza discursului medical nu poate ignora dimensiunea etică. Comunicarea dintre medic și pacient implică o relație de încredere, construită prin transparență discursivă, respect reciproc și atenție la efectele comunicative ale limbajului. Etica comunicării presupune asumarea responsabilității pentru impactul ilocuțiunilor, deoarece un diagnostic formulat brutal sau lipsit de empatie poate avea consecințe psihologice la fel de grave ca o eroare terapeutică, afectând motivația pacientului, aderența la tratament și relația terapeutică. În contextul psihiatriei, această responsabilitate etică devine și mai complexă, întrucât limbajul nu doar descrie simptome, ci modelează experiența pacientului și participă activ la procesul terapeutic. Medicul trebuie să echilibreze transmiterea informației cu susținerea emoțională, validarea experiențelor subiective și păstrarea demnității pacientului. Utilizarea actelor de vorbire expresive și a strategiilor de politețe nu reprezintă doar un instrument pragmatic, ci și o obligație etică.

Din perspectivă epistemologică, studiul discursului medical evidențiază că cunoașterea în psihiatrie este de natură dialogică, fiind rezultatul unei interacțiuni hermeneutice în care pacientul contribuie activ la definirea propriei boli, iar medicul interpretează, clarifică și integrează aceste informații în evaluarea și planificarea tratamentului. Această abordare dialogică presupune co-construcția sensului, pacientul devenind un partener activ care influențează modul în care simptomele și experiențele subiective sunt înțelese și integrate în diagnostic. Responsabilitatea interpretativă a medicului implică recunoașterea implicațiilor emoționale, simbolice și sociale ale limbajului pacientului, ajustând intervențiile pentru a evita interpretări eronate sau stigmatizante. Transparența și respectul reciproc în comunicare contribuie la consolidarea încrederii și la crearea unui cadru sigur, în care pacientul se simte auzit și respectat.

De exemplu, într-o consultație documentată în teza doctorală, pacientul a exprimat anxietatea printr-o afirmație indirectă: „Parcă nu mai pot să fac față lucrurilor". Medicul a răspuns printr-o reformulare empatică și printr-o întrebare deschisă, permițând pacientului să-și clarifice experiența și demonstrând responsabilitatea etică în interpretarea mesajului și menținerea relației de încredere. Astfel, dimensiunea etică și cea epistemologică a comunicării medicale sunt inseparabile, limbajul devenind atât un mijloc de cunoaștere, cât și un instrument terapeutic, iar competența pragmatică a medicului reprezentând un pilon esențial pentru o practică clinică eficientă, colaborativă și etică.

Comunicarea în psihiatrie reprezintă un proces complex, multidimensional, în care limbajul funcționează simultan ca instrument de diagnostic, mijloc terapeutic și vector al relației intersubiective. Analiza discursului medical evidențiază că sensul nu este doar transmis, ci construit și negociat în interacțiunea medic–pacient, unde experiența subiectivă a pacientului, competența profesională a medicului și contextul pragmatic se intersectează. Fundamentele teoretice ale limbajului, actele de vorbire, implicaturile conversaționale și strategiile de politețe contribuie la crearea unui cadru colaborativ și etic, reducând efectele asimetriei comunicative și sprijinind implicarea activă a pacientului în procesul terapeutic.

Discursul psihiatric particularizează aceste principii, evidențiind rolul metaforelor, narațiunii și tăcerilor în exprimarea emoțiilor și construirea sensului. Prin intermediul limbajului, pacientul devine partener activ, iar medicul nu doar interpretează simptome, ci co-construiește realitatea subiectivă și susține procesul terapeutic. În această perspectivă, comunicarea clinică nu este doar o transmisiune de informații, ci o practică etică, dialogică și reflexivă, în care responsabilitatea medicului și validarea pacientului sunt esențiale pentru eficiență și etică profesională.

Astfel, integrarea abordărilor lingvistice și pragmatice în formarea profesională și practica clinică poate optimiza comunicarea în psihiatrie, contribuind la rezultate terapeutice mai bune și la o relație medic–pacient mai colaborativă și empatică. Recunoașterea limbajului ca instrument complex, cu funcții cognitive, emoționale și sociale, subliniază necesitatea unei abordări interdisciplinare și a unei sensibilități pragmatice în practica medicală contemporană.

ASPECTS OF THE IMPACT OF ENGLISH MEDICAL TERMS ON ROMANIAN MEDICAL TERMINOLOGY

Mirela-Simona Gurău (Rusu)

Abstract: This study examines the evolution of Romanian medical terminology under the increasing influence of English as the global lingua franca of medicine. Drawing on historical, theoretical, and applied perspectives, it traces the layered development of the lexicon from its classical Greek and Latin foundations, through the domestication of French borrowings in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, to the contemporary influx of English terms. The analysis focuses on two primary strategies, foreignization, which retains original forms for precision and international interoperability, and domestication, which adapts terms to Romanian morphological and phonological norms for accessibility. Comparative insights from the French model highlight divergent policy orientations toward linguistic sovereignty and functional interoperability. Special attention is paid to the impact of technological innovation and interdisciplinary research, which accelerate the adoption of unassimilated English terminology in such fields as biotechnology, digital health, and nanomedicine. The findings underscore the necessity of a register-sensitive, hybrid approach: foreignizing in specialist discourse to maintain global alignment, while domesticating in patient communication to ensure clarity and cultural resonance. This balanced strategy is essential to safeguard both the international relevance and linguistic integrity of Romanian medical language in the twenty-first century.*

Argument

The influence of English on Romanian medical terminology represents a paradigmatic case of linguistic evolution within a globalized epistemic community. As English consolidates its role as the dominant language of international medicine (Montgomery, 2013: 42), Romanian confronts the dual imperative of maintaining terminological precision for professional interoperability while preserving linguistic coherence for national and cultural identity (Pîrvu, 2020: 84). The resulting dynamic is not one of linguistic replacement but of strategic negotiation, a process that oscillates between foreignization and domestication, depending on communicative register, institutional policy, and disciplinary context (Venuti, 1995: 34, Cabré, 1999: 125).

From a linguistic-structural perspective, the proliferation of English medical terms can be understood as an outcome of Romania's integration into global biomedical networks, where rapid knowledge exchange demands terminological immediacy (Salager-Meyer, 2008: 129). Fields such as biotechnology, molecular medicine, and digital health rely heavily on conceptual innovation, making the direct borrowing of English terms (e.g., checkpoint inhibitor, wearables, telehealth) not merely a matter of convenience but a functional necessity. The foreignization of these terms ensures synchronicity with global standards such as the World Health Organization's International Classification of Diseases (WHO, 2019: 15) and international research databases, thereby facilitating participation in transnational collaboration and ensuring semantic uniformity across linguistic boundaries (Mureșan and Pérez-Llantada, 2014: 152).

However, this same process introduces challenges for linguistic sovereignty and public comprehension. Direct borrowings, while precise, often remain opaque to non-specialist audiences, potentially undermining the patient's understanding and informed consent in clinical contexts (Bassnett and Lefevere, 1990: 12). Here, domestication serves an essential communicative and ethical function. By morphologically and syntactically adapting English-derived concepts, such as translating health literacy into alfabetizare în sănătate, Romanian medical discourse reclaims intelligibility for lay audiences without compromising conceptual integrity (Bidu-Vrănceanu, Căpălă, & Forăscu, 2001: 66). This process of domestication is, therefore, not merely linguistic but socio-pragmatic, ensuring that medical language fulfills its public communicative role while retaining professional rigor (Gumperz & Cook-Gumperz, 2008: 78).

The comparative analysis with French medical terminology underscores the broader ideological underpinnings of these linguistic strategies. The French model, shaped by a tradition of prescriptive linguistic governance, demonstrates how systematic domestication can preserve linguistic cohesion and cultural authority (Ciobanu, 2006: 133; Gotti, 2008: 174). In contrast, more permissive toward English borrowings, the Romanian practice reflects a pragmatic adaptation to global scientific realities rather than a purely protectionist orientation (Phillipson, 1992: 68). The two systems, though divergent in policy, converge in their ultimate objective: achieving a balance between linguistic identity and scientific participation.

Consequently, the argument advanced here is that the sustainable evolution of Romanian medical terminology depends on the deliberate adoption of a register-sensitive, hybrid model, foreignizing in specialist and research discourse to maintain interoperability, and domesticating in clinical and educational communication to preserve accessibility and cultural resonance (Venuti, 1995: 35; Pîrvu, 2020: 96). Such a model aligns with contemporary translation theory, which emphasizes the contextual and purpose-driven nature of terminological mediation (Cabré, 1999: 128; Bassnett and Lefevere, 1990: 14).

In this framework, Romanian medical language emerges not as a passive recipient of linguistic imperialism but as an active mediator between global and local epistemologies (Phillipson, 1992: 71; Seidlhofer, 2011: 19). The selective integration of English terms, governed by functional, communicative, and ethical criteria, enables Romanian to remain both globally intelligible and linguistically autonomous. Ultimately, the resilience of Romanian medical terminology in the twenty-first century will depend not on resisting English influence, but on strategically managing it, transforming linguistic borrowing from a symptom of dependency into a mechanism of intellectual participation and cultural adaptation (Montgomery, 2013: 45; Pîrvu, 2020: 118).

1. Introduction

Over the past several decades, English has consolidated its position as the global lingua franca of medicine, functioning not only as the dominant medium of international academic publishing but also as the operational language in many areas of clinical practice (Montgomery, 2013: 42). In the Romanian context, this linguistic realignment has paralleled an intensification of transnational exchange in research, professional training, and medical technologies, thereby accelerating the incorporation of English-derived terminology into the national medical lexicon (Mureșan and Pérez-Llantada, 2014: 152). Unlike legal discourse, where translation practices strive to secure strict jurisdictional equivalence, medical terminology often enters Romanian through direct borrowing, with limited or no morphological or semantic adaptation. This phenomenon is facilitated by the need for rapid conceptual transfer in fields characterized by high rates of innovation and by the prestige associated with English as a vehicle for scientific authority.

While such borrowings may enhance the terminological precision and global interoperability, they also generate challenges in terms of linguistic compatibility, communicative accessibility, and preservation of cultural-linguistic sovereignty (Gumperz and Cook-Gumperz, 2008: 78). The resulting tension, between the imperatives of international standardization and the principles of linguistic autonomy, frames the present study. By adopting historical, theoretical, and applied perspectives, the analysis seeks to trace the influence of English on the evolution of Romanian medical terminology, to identify the mechanisms of term transfer, and to assess the sociolinguistic implications of these processes for both professional and lay audiences.

2. Historical Evolution of Romanian Medical Terminology

The Romanian medical lexicon has developed through successive layers of foreign influence, each corresponding to distinct socio-historical and epistemological phases. In its earliest scholarly stages, medical discourse was shaped predominantly by Greek and Latin, the languages of classical medicine, which provided the conceptual and lexical foundation for anatomical, physiological, and pathological terms (Crystal, 2003: 113). The Renaissance and Enlightenment periods further entrenched this classical heritage, with many terms entering Romanian via Latinized scholarly works.

From the nineteenth century through the early twentieth century, French emerged as the primary conduit for medical knowledge transfer, reflecting Romania's political and cultural orientation toward Francophone Europe. Borrowings during this period were frequently domesticated through French morphology and Latinate cognates, producing fully integrated Romanian forms such as infecție, operație, and patologie (Bidu-Vrănceanu et al., 2001:66). This stage was marked by a deliberate effort to harmonize foreign medical concepts with the morphological and phonetic norms of Romanian, ensuring both accessibility for practitioners and conformity with the prestige literary standard.

The post-World War II era signaled a progressive shift toward English, initially in specialized research domains and later as a pervasive influence across clinical, educational, and administrative contexts (Montgomery, 2013: 45). The acceleration of medical innovation, combined with the global dominance of English in academic publishing and international conferences, facilitated the direct transfer of English medical terminology into Romanian, often without intermediary translation. This phenomenon has been particularly visible in emergent medical fields such as molecular biology, biotechnology, and digital health, where the imperative of terminological immediacy outweighs concerns over full linguistic assimilation.

Romanian medical terminology today operates as a specialized sublanguage (Pîrvu, 2020: 84), shaped by processes of derivation, compounding, and loan adaptation. Its Greek and Latin substrate remains a stabilizing influence, enabling relatively seamless integration of many internationalisms, while also serving as a source for coining equivalents to foreign neologisms. However, the contemporary influx of English words introduces structural and semantic challenges (Ullmann, 1977: 92), particularly in balancing professional precision with lay comprehensibility.

Two principal mechanisms govern the incorporation of English medical terms, i.e.,

(b) Direct Borrowing – retaining the original English form to preserve referential accuracy and facilitate participation in international discourse (e.g., placebo, telemedicină, checkpoint inhibitor). This strategy often applies to highly technical innovations with no established Romanian equivalent at the time of adoption.

(c) Adaptation – Modifying phonology, morphology, or syntax to align with Romanian grammatical and lexical norms (e.g., deficite cognitive, alfabetizare în sănătate). This process is more prevalent in terms destined for patient education, public health communication, or contexts where linguistic accessibility is paramount.

The historical layering of borrowings—from classical antiquity to the present—has produced a hybrid medical lexicon that simultaneously reflects Romania's linguistic identity and its integration into the transnational medical knowledge network. This dual orientation—anchored in tradition yet open to global exchange—remains a defining feature of Romanian medical terminology in the twenty-first century.

3. Strategies of Foreignization and Domestication in Romanian Medical Terminology

The integration of foreign medical terminology into Romanian has historically oscillated between two main translation strategies: preservation of the source form and adaptation to the target language system. These approaches, which parallel what Venuti (1995: 34) describes as foreignization and domestication, reflect broader tensions between global scientific alignment and linguistic-cultural continuity.

Foreignization in the Romanian medical context involves the retention of the original lexical form, typically without orthographic or morphological modification, in order to safeguard terminological precision and ensure direct interoperability with international medical discourse (Montgomery, 2013: 42; Cabré, 1999: 125). Examples include placebo, in vitro, and lab-on-a-chip, all of which function as internationally standardized designators in biomedical literature. Such unaltered borrowings act as "transparent signifiers" (Gotti, 2008:78) for professionals engaged in transnational research, where unambiguous reference is critical for knowledge exchange, conference communication, and the interpretation of multilingual scientific literature.

Domestication, by contrast, entails the systematic adaptation of a borrowed term to conform to Romanian phonology, morphology, and syntactic norms (Bidu-Vrănceanu et al., 2001:66). This process is especially prevalent in public health communication and patient-oriented contexts, where accessibility and immediate comprehension take precedence over exact reproduction of the source form. Adapted terms such as deficite cognitive (from cognitive deficits) or alfabetizare în sănătate (from health literacy) illustrate how semantic content is retained while linguistic form is recalibrated to align with Romanian grammatical patterns and cultural-linguistic expectations.

The choice between these strategies is not arbitrary but determined by several interrelated factors:

1. Degree of International Standardization – Terms embedded in globally recognized taxonomies (e.g., WHO classifications, ICD coding systems) are more likely to be retained in their original form to ensure interoperability (WHO, 2019: 15).
2. Target Audience – Texts aimed at medical specialists tend toward foreignization, while materials intended for patients or the general public often employ domestication for clarity and ease of processing (Crystal, 2003: 113).
3. Linguistic Policy and Institutional Norms – Language planning bodies, such as the Romanian Academy, have historically favored domestication in alignment with national linguistic identity, whereas academic publishing norms in international journals promote foreignization (Pîrvu, 2020: 84).
4. Speed of Knowledge Transfer – In rapidly evolving fields such as biotechnology, molecular medicine, and digital health, foreignization is frequently preferred because it enables immediate integration of cutting-edge terminology into professional discourse without the delays inherent in coining and popularizing a domestic equivalent (Salager-Meyer, 2008: 129).

Historically, 19th century borrowings, particularly those transmitted via French, were predominantly domesticated, mirroring broader patterns in Romanian's integration of Latinate vocabulary during the modernization of the scientific lexicon (Rosetti, 1978:203). By contrast, the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries have witnessed an increased prevalence of foreignized forms, driven by the dominance of English as the lingua franca of medicine and the demand for real-time access to emerging terminologies (Phillipson, 1992: 68; Seidlhofer, 2011: 19).

This strategic duality has yielded a hybridized Romanian medical lexicon: one part deeply rooted in the historical adaptation of foreign terms, another functioning as a repository of internationally standardized expressions. Such hybridity not only reflects Romania's embeddedness in global medical networks but also underscores the role of translation strategies as active agents in shaping both professional practice and linguistic identity.

4. Theoretical Foundations for Linguistic Translation in Medical Terminology

The evolution of Romanian medical terminology is grounded in a set of enduring translational principles that have shaped its development from early scholarly medicine to the present globalized era.

First, the preservation of precision through classical borrowings has historically provided the backbone of terminological stability. Greek and Latin lexemes such as patologie, proteză, and terapie were integrated not merely as linguistic artifacts but as internationally standardized designators that ensured semantic accuracy across national boundaries (Ullmann, 1977: 92). This classical layer continues to function as a semantic anchor, enabling Romanian medical professionals to participate in transnational discourse without risking conceptual drift.

Second, the enhancement of lexical diversity through neologisms reflects the adaptive capacity of the Romanian medical lexicon to accommodate new conceptual domains. The targeted introduction of novel terms—often to describe emergent procedures, diagnostic tools, or therapeutic approaches—has expanded the expressive range of medical language (Crystal, 2003: 113). Such neologisms serve both to capture technological innovation and to differentiate between closely related medical concepts, thereby facilitating nuanced communication within and across specialties.

Third, the maintenance of morphological compatibility underscores the role of phonological and derivational integration in securing the long-term viability of borrowed terms. By adapting foreign elements to Romanian inflectional and derivational patterns, translators and terminologists have ensured both ease of use and linguistic coherence (Bidu-Vrănceanu et al., 2001: 66). This morphological alignment is particularly significant in patient-facing communication, where clarity and familiarity influence comprehension and adherence to medical advice.

Together, these principles inform the contemporary balancing act between direct adoption of English terms, favoured for their immediacy and international recognition and adaptation into Romanian forms that preserve linguistic accessibility and cultural specificity. This tension is not merely lexical but reflects broader socio-linguistic considerations, including language policy, educational practice, and the symbolic value of linguistic sovereignty in an era of intensified global medical exchange.

5. Adoption of English Terms

The adoption of English medical terms into Romanian occurs through two primary mechanisms:

1. Direct borrowing, where the term is transferred unchanged, preserving its original spelling and phonetic structure.
2. Adaptation, where the English term is partially or fully integrated into Romanian orthographic, morphological, and phonetic norms (Bidu-Vrănceanu et al., 2001; Pîrvu, 2020).

In many cases, business-driven branding decisions by multinational companies and the global dissemination of English-language medical research accelerate the entrenchment of such borrowings (Crystal, 2003). As these terms circulate in Romanian academic publications, conferences, and even clinical practice, they undergo varying degrees of localization depending on their perceived technicality, novelty, and domain specificity.

Table 1. Directly Borrowed and Hybrid Medical Terms in Romanian

Category	English Term	Definition	Notes on Usage in Romanian
Latin/Greek Borrowings	In vitro	Latin "in glass," tests outside the body	Fully preserved; used in lab and research contexts
	In vivo	Latin "within the living," tests inside an organism	Unchanged; standard in biomedical discourse
	Placebo	Latin "I shall please," inert substance in trials	Fully internationalized
	Aura	Greek "breeze," neurological pre-seizure sensation	Used without adaptation
Technologically Influenced "E-" Prefix Terms	E-health[1]	Digital health services and records	Often used as brand-driven borrowing
	E-medicine	Electronic/digital medicine platforms	Borrowed directly in tech-medical contexts
	E-consult	Electronic consultation between providers	Common in telehealth services
	E-prescription (E-Rx)	Digital prescription orders	Used as hybrid code; no Romanian equivalent in practice
	EHR (Electronic Health Record)	Digitized patient medical record	Borrowed acronym; understood in health IT
Borrowed or Adapted English/Brand-Like Terms	Code Blue	Hospital emergency code for cardiac arrest	Used in training and emergencies
	Scrubs	Informal term for medical attire	Borrowed via TV/media exposure
	Medtech	Medical technology sector	Used in conferences and publications
	Telemed	Short form of telemedicine	Brand-like shorthand
	Lab-on-a-chip	Microfluidic diagnostic technology	Borrowed for precision; hybrid form exists
	Wearables	Health-monitoring devices	Common in health tech marketing
Hybrid or Stylized Terms	M-Health	Mobile health services or apps	Hybridized form; international use
	Bio-bank	Storage for biological samples	Used in research administration
	Neuro-markers	Biomarkers linked to neurological function	Hybrid form; popular in neuroscience
	Onco-genomics	Combination of oncology and genomics	Used in research settings

[1]Definitions for terms marked with a superscript are provided in the glossary (Appendix A).

Table 2. Adoptions and Adaptations of English Medical Terms into Romanian

Domain	English Term	Romanian Equivalent / Form in Use	Notes on Adaptation
Neuroscience & Psychology	Brain–computer interface	Interfață creier–computer	Used as direct calque or English form
	Cognitive load	Cognitive load / încărcare cognitivă	Both forms in use
	Cognitive deficits	Deficite cognitive	Morphological adaptation
	Cognitive map	Hartă cognitivă / cognitive map	Mixed usage
	Mindfulness therapy	Terapie mindfulness	Borrowed for branding; partial translation rare
	Emotional intelligence	Inteligență emoțională	Full translation adopted
Biotechnology & Pharmacology	Drug delivery system	Sistem de livrare a medicamentului	Fully translated
	Targeted therapy	Terapie țintită	Literal calque
	Checkpoint inhibitor	Inhibitor de checkpoint	Retained English component in oncology
	Slow-release capsule	Capsulă cu eliberare lentă	Literal translation
	Monoclonal antibody	Anticorp monoclonal	Morphological integration
Digital Health & Emerging Technologies	Telehealth / Telemedicine	Telemedicină	Fully adapted form
	Wearable biosensor	Biosenzor purtabil	Literal calque
	Cloud-based EMR	Dosar medical electronic în cloud	Partial calque
	AI triage assistant	Asistent AI pentru triaj	Partially translated
	Digital twin	Dublu digital / digital twin	Mixed use
Biomedical Engineering / Medical Technologies	Lab-on-a-chip	Laborator pe cip / lab-on-a-chip	Both used in research
	Smart prosthesis	Proteză inteligentă	Literal calque
	Nanodrug delivery	Livrare de medicamente la nivel nano	Partial adaptation
	Bioimprimare 3D	Borrowed from “3D bioprinting”	Adapted structurally
	Photoradio stimulator	Stimulare fotoradio / photoradio stimulator	Mixed use
Public Health / Medical Sociology	Health literacy	Alfabetizare în sănătate	Calque; used in education
	Task-shifting	Redistribuirea sarcinilor / task-shifting	Mixed usage
	Food desert	Deșert alimentar	Literal calque
	Medicalization	Medicalizare	Morphological adaptation
	Gender medicine	Medicină de gen	Literal calque

The entries in Tables 1 and 2 reveal a continuum between foreignization and domestication in Romanian medical terminology. Terms such as placebo, in vitro, and E-health remain unmodified, signifying a foreignizing approach that aligns Romanian usage with international standards and facilitates cross-border research exchange (Venuti, 1995; Montgomery, 2013). Conversely, inteligență emoțională, capsulă cu eliberare lentă, and medicină de gen illustrate domestication, ensuring morphological and phonetic integration while retaining conceptual precision (Bidu-Vrănceanu et al., 2001).

This dual strategy reflects the tension between global standardization and local linguistic identity, a theme that recurs throughout the evolution of Romanian medical language (Pîrvu, 2020). The tables thus function not merely as lists of terms but as evidence of the adaptive capacity of Romanian in absorbing medical innovations while negotiating its linguistic autonomy.

6. Translation Challenges

The translation of medical terminology in Romanian occupies a uniquely complex position within applied linguistics, situated at the crossroads of terminological precision, audience accessibility, and institutional regulation. Medical language functions not only as a system of scientific nomenclature but also as a communicative bridge between research, clinical practice, and patient care (Pîrvu, 2020: 96). The translation strategy adopted can directly influence the accuracy of diagnoses, the clarity of treatment instructions, and ultimately, patient safety.

From a functional perspective, direct borrowings—the unmodified importation of English terms into Romanian—offer significant advantages in professional and academic registers. They facilitate rapid integration of novel concepts into the lexicon, maintain terminological alignment with global research databases, and ensure that Romanian healthcare professionals can fully participate in international scientific discourse. For example, terms such as checkpoint inhibitor or lab-on-a-chip are typically preserved in their original form within specialist communication to avoid semantic drift and to maintain compatibility with clinical trial protocols and scholarly literature.

However, in contexts aimed at non-specialist or patient audiences, these same borrowings can create linguistic opacity. Without adequate contextualization, patients may misinterpret borrowed terms, leading to confusion or non-compliance with medical advice. This underscores the need for domestication, whereby the term is adapted into Romanian morphology, phonology, or syntactic patterns—e.g., alfabetizare în sănătate for health literacy, to improve comprehensibility. Such adaptation aligns with the ethical imperative to communicate in language that ensures informed consent and promotes patient autonomy (Bassnett and Lefevere, 1990: 12).

Yet, over-domestication carries its own risks. Excessive modification or substitution of international terms may sever the conceptual link between local medical practice and the global research community, potentially isolating practitioners from advances in international medical science. In this way, domestication that prioritizes linguistic familiarity at the expense of scientific precision can hinder the interoperability of Romanian medical discourse with broader scientific networks.

The challenge is further complicated by institutional gatekeeping. The Romanian Academy, Ministry of Health, and academic publishing bodies set the formal parameters for terminological usage, determining which borrowings are sanctioned, how they are adapted, and under what circumstances foreignized forms should be retained. These decisions are influenced by language preservation policies, public health priorities, and the pace of medical innovation.

In sum, the translation of medical terminology in Romanian is not merely a matter of lexical choice but an act of strategic mediation between global alignment and local comprehensibility. The optimal solution lies in a register-sensitive approach:

- Foreignization for specialist discourse, where precision and international interoperability are paramount.
- Domestication for patient communication, where accessibility and cultural resonance are critical.

This balance ensures that Romanian medical language remains both globally intelligible and locally meaningful, safeguarding the integrity of medical communication across contexts.

7. Comparative Perspective: The French Model

French medical terminology provides an instructive comparative framework for evaluating Romanian strategies of integrating foreign medical terms. Historically, French has adhered to a policy of systematic domestication, in which borrowed terms are adapted to conform to the morphological, phonological, and orthographic norms of the language. This approach ensures that foreign-origin terminology remains compatible with native linguistic structures and easily comprehensible to speakers at varying levels of medical literacy. Classic examples include infection becoming infecție and pathologie becoming patologie, both of which illustrate the incorporation of Latinate roots into a fully domesticated form while preserving their original semantic scope (Ciobanu, 2006: 133).

This domestication tendency in French is reinforced by institutional language policy, notably the role of the Académie française and associated medical institutions in standardizing terminology. Such bodies actively promote the use of French-derived equivalents even when English forms are dominant in international discourse. This linguistic intervention aligns with broader cultural preservation strategies and reflects France's historical position as a major source of medical education and literature throughout the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries (Gotti, 2008: 174).

Romanian, by contrast, has demonstrated a greater tolerance for unassimilated English forms, particularly in fast-evolving domains such as digital health, biotechnology, and molecular medicine. The rapid pace of technological innovation in these fields often outstrips the capacity for term domestication. Consequently, English terms, such as lab-on-a-chip, telehealth, or wearables, are frequently imported wholesale into Romanian medical discourse. This pattern reflects both pragmatic considerations, such as maintaining immediate compatibility with English-language research databases and professional protocols, and socioeconomic factors, including Romania's integration into international research consortia where English serves as the operative language.

While the French model prioritizes linguistic sovereignty through adaptation, the Romanian model, especially in contemporary contexts, favors functional interoperability. This divergence highlights a central tension in medical translation policy: whether to prioritize linguistic integration into the national lexicon or unmodified adoption to preserve terminological currency in global networks. Both strategies carry trade-offs, French risks slower uptake of novel concepts, whereas Romanian risks diluting linguistic distinctiveness in specialist registers.

For Romanian medical policy-makers and translators, the French experience suggests the value of selective domestication, reserving full adaptation for stable, widely disseminated terms, while allowing temporary foreignization for cutting-edge terminology that may evolve or become obsolete in a short timeframe. This hybrid approach would maintain the lexical vitality of Romanian medical language while safeguarding its cultural-linguistic integrity.

8. Technological and Interdisciplinary Influences

The ongoing digital transformation of healthcare has significantly intensified the influx of English terminology into Romanian medical discourse. Innovations such as telemedicine, wearable biosensors, and AI-assisted diagnostics are typically conceptualized, developed, and disseminated in English-dominated research environments, resulting in a terminological pipeline that favors direct borrowing over immediate domestication. This is particularly evident in cases where the terms are not only linguistic labels but also embedded in technical standards, software interfaces, and regulatory documentation, which would require costly or impractical adaptation.

A distinctive feature of this influx is the interdisciplinary nature of many borrowed terms. Emerging research areas, combining medicine with informatics, bioengineering, and nanotechnology—routinely generate multi-word compound terms that pose integration challenges for Romanian morphology and syntax. Expressions such as nanodrug delivery, lab-on-a-chip, or cloud-based EMR resist straightforward translation without losing brevity or semantic precision. In some cases, partial calques such as bioimprimare 3D gain traction, striking a balance between accessibility and international recognizability, but the overall tendency remains towards preserving the English form in professional contexts.

Moreover, the advance of new subfields—including medical cybernetics, infodemiology, digital therapeutics, and precision public health, is likely to reinforce this trend (Pîrvu, 2020: 118). These areas not only produce novel terminology but also reshape conceptual taxonomies, requiring terms that can function across multiple disciplinary boundaries. For instance, infodemiology, a hybrid of epidemiology and information science, encapsulates both a methodological framework and a public health strategy, making the adoption of the unaltered English form pragmatically advantageous for ensuring interdisciplinary communication.

The adoption patterns in these technological and interdisciplinary domains also reflect economic and institutional pressures. Participation in EU-funded research projects, clinical trials, and multinational innovation consortia often requires terminological conformity with English-language protocols, which constrains the scope for Romanianization. While this accelerates professional interoperability, it also risks creating a register gap between technical documentation, which retains English terminology, and patient-facing communication, which still demands domesticated or explanatory equivalents.

In the long term, these influences suggest a dual-track evolution: a highly foreignized lexicon in cutting-edge research and technological contexts, coexisting with a domesticated, morphologically integrated vocabulary in public health and clinical education. The sustainability of this model will depend on active terminological mediation by translators, editors, and policy-making bodies to prevent fragmentation between professional and lay medical discourse.

9. Conclusion

The evolution of Romanian medical terminology is the product of a complex interplay between historical legacies, translational strategies, and contemporary forces of globalization and technological change. Rooted in the classical precision of Greek and Latin, enriched by the systematic domestication of French borrowings in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, and increasingly shaped by the rapid influx of English terms in the post-war and digital eras, the Romanian medical lexicon now stands as a hybrid construct—simultaneously local and transnational.

The analysis shows that the two primary mechanisms of term transfer, foreignization and domestication, are not mutually exclusive but operate as complementary strategies responsive to domain-specific needs, communicative objectives, and institutional constraints. Foreignization preserves alignment with international research standards and ensures interoperability in specialist discourse, particularly in rapidly evolving fields such as biotechnology, nanomedicine, and digital health. Domestication, by contrast, integrates terms into Romanian morphology and syntax, safeguarding accessibility, cultural resonance, and patient comprehension.

Comparative evidence from the French model highlights the broader policy spectrum within which Romanian practice is situated, revealing both the advantages and the trade-offs of prioritizing linguistic sovereignty versus functional interoperability. While French institutional policy tends to domesticate, Romanian practice increasingly tolerates unassimilated English borrowings in cutting-edge domains, a pragmatic adaptation to the speed of global scientific innovation and Romania's integration into international research networks.

Technological and interdisciplinary drivers have further accelerated the entry of English terms, producing compound expressions and specialized designators that challenge traditional mechanisms of morphological assimilation. In this environment, the risk is not only lexical saturation with foreign forms but also the emergence of a register gap between professional and lay discourse. Bridging this gap requires a deliberate, register-sensitive approach to medical translation, foreignizing where precision and global compatibility are paramount, domesticating where accessibility and public engagement are essential.

Ultimately, the sustainability of Romanian medical terminology in the twenty-first century will depend on active terminological governance: coordinated efforts by translators, domain specialists, lexicographers, and policy-making institutions to mediate between the demands of international scientific communication and the imperatives of national linguistic identity. By maintaining this balance, Romanian medical language can remain both a credible participant in the global medical knowledge economy and a linguistically coherent resource for the communities it serves.

THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE STATE AS GUARANTOR OF FREEDOM OF RELIGION

Ingrid Ileana Nicolau
Assoc. Prof., PhD, "Spiru Haret" University of Constanța

Abstract: The importance of freedom of thought, conscience, and religion has been repeatedly emphasized by the European Court of Human Rights. In general, freedom of thought, conscience, and religion is considered to be one of the pillars of democratic society; in particular, the judges regard religious freedom as a vital element in shaping believers' identity and their views on life. In fact, the Court has elevated freedom of religion to the status of a substantive right under the Convention, initially indirectly and later more directly.

It should be noted that, in the last 15 years, the number of cases examined by the Court in relation to Article 9 has been steadily increasing; one explanation for this trend is the growing role of religion and related issues within sociopolitical discourse.

Keywords: freedom of thought; conscience; and religion; sociopolitical discourse; negative obligation; systems of ideas and beliefs.

Introducere

Libertatea de gândire, de conștiință și de religie este un drept fundamental, consacrat nu doar de Convenția europeană a drepturilor omului, ci și de multe acte naționale, internaționale și europene.

Pe lângă Convenție, libertatea de gândire, de conștiință și de religie face parte, desigur, din drepturile fundamentale consacrate de Organizația Națiunilor Unite. Astfel, în conformitate cu art. 18 din Pactul internațional cu privire la drepturile civile și politice, orice persoană are drept la libertatea gândirii, conștiinței și religiei; acest drept implică libertatea de a avea sau de a adopta o religie sau o convingere la alegerea sa, precum și libertatea de a-și manifesta religia sau convingerea, individual sau în comun, atât în public cât și în particular, prin cult și îndeplinirea riturilor, prin practici și prin învățământ. Nimeni nu va fi supus vreunei constrângeri putând aduce atingere libertății sale de a avea sau de a adopta o religie sau o convingere la alegerea sa. Libertatea manifestării religiei sau convingerilor nu poate fi supusă decât restricțiilor prevăzute de lege și necesare pentru ocrotirea securității, ordinii și sănătății publice ori a moralei sau a libertăților și drepturilor fundamentale ale altora.

Carta drepturilor fundamentale a Uniunii Europene protejează, de asemenea, libertatea de gândire, de conștiință și de religie în termeni identici cu cei din Convenție (art. 10 din Cartă). De asemenea, Carta garantează dreptul „de a asigura educarea și instruirea copiilor lor, potrivit propriilor convingeri religioase, filozofice și pedagogice, sunt respectate în conformitate cu legile interne care reglementează exercitarea acestora" [art. 14 alin. 3].

Importanța libertății de gândire, de conștiință și de religie a fost subliniată în mod repetat de Curtea Europeană a Drepturilor Omului. În general, libertatea de gândire, de conștiință și de religie este considerată a fi unul dintre pilonii societății democratice; în special, judecătorii consideră libertatea religioasă ca fiind un element vital pentru formarea identității credincioșilor și a concepțiilor lor despre viață. În fapt, Curtea a ridicat libertatea de religie la rangul de drept material al Convenției, la început în mod indirect, iar ulterior în mod mai direct.

Trebuie reținut faptul că, în ultimii 15 ani, numărul cauzelor examinate de Curte în raport cu art. 9 este în continuă creștere; una dintre explicațiile acestei tendințe este creșterea rolului religiei și a chestiunilor conexe în cadrul discursului sociopolitic.

Obligații negative: respectarea autonomiei organizațiilor religioase

În mod tradițional și universal, comunitățile religioase există ca structuri organizate. Atunci când în joc se află organizarea comunității religioase, art. 9 se interpretează prin prisma art. 11 din Convenție, care protejează viața asociativă împotriva oricărei ingerințe nejustificate a statului. Sub acest aspect, dreptul credincioșilor la libertatea de religie presupune posibilitatea comunității religioase de a funcționa în mod pașnic, fără ingerință arbitrară din partea statului. Autonomia comunităților religioase este indispensabilă pentru pluralism într-o societate democratică și constituie însăși baza protecției oferite de art. 9 din Convenție. Aceasta este de interes direct nu doar pentru organizarea comunităților respective ca atare, ci și pentru exercitarea efectivă a dreptului la libertatea de religie de către toți membrii activi ai acestora. Dacă organizarea vieții comunității nu ar fi protejată de art. 9 din Convenție, toate celelalte aspecte ale libertății de religie a persoanei ar fi vulnerabile [Hassan și Tchaouch împotriva Bulgariei (MC), 2000, pct. 62 și 91; Fernández Martínez împotriva Spaniei (MC), 2014, pct. 127]. Structura internă a unei organizații religioase și condițiile pentru a dobândi calitate de membru constituie mijloace prin care aceste organizații își manifestă convingerile și își păstrează tradițiile religioase (Sviato-Mihailivska Parafiia împotriva Ucrainei, 2007, pct. 150).

Principiul autonomiei enunțat mai sus interzice statului să oblige o comunitate religioasă să admită noi membri ori să îi excludă pe alții. Organizațiile religioase trebuie să fie complet libere să decidă condițiile și modalitățile de admitere a noilor membri și de excludere a membrilor existenți (Sviato-Mihailivska Parafiia împotriva Ucrainei, 2007, pct. 146 și 150).

În cadrul activităților lor, comunitățile religioase se supun normelor pe care adepții acestora le consideră adesea ca fiind de origine divină. Ceremoniile religioase au o semnificație și o valoare sacră pentru credincioși atunci când sunt oficiate de personalul clerical (episcopi, preoți, pastori, rabini, imami, muftii etc.) care sunt împuterniciți în acest sens în temeiul acelor norme. Personalitatea acestora din urmă este, cu siguranță, importantă pentru orice membru activ al comunității, iar participarea lor la viața comunității este așadar o manifestare specială a religiei care, în sine, beneficiază de protecția conferită de art. 9 din Convenție [Hassan și Tchaouch împotriva Bulgariei (MC), 2000, pct. 62; Miroļubovs și alții împotriva Letoniei, 2009, pct. 80].

Pedepsirea unei persoane pentru simplul motiv că a acționat în calitate de lider religios al unui grup care îl urmează de bună voie – chiar dacă acest lucru nu a fost recunoscut de stat – nu poate fi compatibil cu cerințele pluralismului religios într-o societate democratică (Serif împotriva Greciei, 1999, pct. 51). Astfel, Curtea a constatat încălcarea art. 9 ca urmare a condamnării penale a reclamantului, teolog musulman grec, pentru „uzurparea funcțiilor de preot al unei religii cunoscute” și „purtarea în public, fără drept, a ținutei de preot al acestei religii”. În speță, reclamantul fusese ales muftiul cultului musulman din Rodopi de către credincioși musulmani, dar nu fusese recunoscut de stat, care numise o altă persoană pe acel post. Într-adevăr, acesta participase la o serie de slujbe religioase ca muftiu, însă nu încercase niciodată să exercite funcțiile judiciare și administrative prevăzute de legislația statului privind muftiii și personalul clerical al „religiilor recunoscute”

Ingerința în exercitarea drepturilor protejate și justificarea acesteia

În conformitate cu art. 9 § 2 din Convenție, scopurile legitime care pot justifica restrângerea manifestării, de către o persoană, a religiei sau convingerilor sale sunt siguranța publică, protecția ordinii, a sănătății sau a moralei publice ori protejarea drepturilor și libertăților altora.[1]Această listă de scopuri legitime este strict exhaustivă, iar definiția acestor excepții este restrictivă; pentru a fi compatibilă cu Convenția, o restrângere a acestei libertăți trebuie să fie inspirată, printre altele, de un scop care poate fi legat de unul din cele enumerate în dispoziția respectivă.

Spre deosebire de art. 8 § 2, art. 10 § 2 și art. 11 § 2 din Convenție, precum și de art. 2 § 3 din Protocolul nr. 4, „securitatea națională” nu se numără printre scopurile enumerate la art. 9 §

Această omisiune nu este nici pe departe accidentală; dimpotrivă, refuzul autorilor Convenției de a include acest motiv specific în lista motivelor legitime ale unei ingerințe reflectă importanța primordială a pluralismului religios ca fiind „unul dintre pilonii societății democratice”, precum și faptul că statul nu poate dicta persoanei ce trebuie să creadă ori să ia măsuri coercitive pentru a o obliga la schimbarea convingerii. Astfel, statul nu se poate baza exclusiv pe necesitatea de a proteja securitatea națională pentru a restrânge exercitarea dreptului unei persoane sau al unui grup de persoane de a-și manifesta religia.

Pe de altă parte, trebuie observat că art. 15 din Convenție permite statelor să deroge de la obligațiile prevăzute la art. 9, „în măsura strictă în care situația o cere și cu condiția ca aceste măsuri să nu fie în contradicție cu alte obligații care decurg din dreptul internațional", cu condiția, totuși, de a respecta formele procedurale prevăzute la alin. 3 al art. 15.

O ingerință în exercitarea drepturilor protejate de art. 9 din Convenție poate lua, printre altele, următoarele forme:

- sancțiune penală sau administrativă, concedierea sau refuzarea reînnoirii contractului de muncă, pentru exercitarea drepturilor în discuție (Kokkinakis împotriva Greciei, 1993; Ivanova împotriva Bulgariei, 2007; Masaev împotriva Moldovei, 2009; Ebrahimian împotriva Franței, 2015; Taganrog LRO și alții împotriva Rusiei, 2022, pct. 269);
- o sancțiune disciplinară, chiar și una ușoară (Korostelev împotriva Rusiei, 2020, pct. 50);
- presiuni psihologice exercitate de reprezentanții statului asupra unei persoane deosebit de vulnerabile, îndemnând-o să renunțe la convingerile sale (Mockutė împotriva Lituaniei, 2018, pct. 123-125);
- un obstacol fizic în calea persoanelor care își exercită drepturile în temeiul art. 9, cum ar fi întreruperea, de către poliție, a unei întruniri (Boicev și alții împotriva Bulgariei, 2011);
- dizolvarea unei organizații religioase (Martorii lui Iehova din Moscova și alții împotriva Rusiei, 2010, pct. 99-103;
- adoptarea unei legi care aparent este neutră, dar are ca efect ingerința directă a statului într-un conflict intraconfesional [Sfântul Sinod al Bisericii Ortodoxe Bulgare (Mitropolitul Inokent) și alții împotriva Bulgariei, 2009, pct. 157];
- folosirea, în documente oficiale, a unor termeni peiorativi la adresa unei comunități religioase, în măsura în care este posibil ca aceasta să aibă consecințe nefavorabile asupra exercitării libertății de religie (Leela Förderkreis e.V. și alții împotriva Germaniei, 2008, pct. 84; Centrul Asociațiilor pentru Conștiință Krishna din Rusia și Frolov împotriva Rusiei, 2021, pct. 38).

În cazul în care ingerința reclamată ia forma unui refuz sau a unei scutiri speciale acordate unui grup de persoane din cauza credințelor sau convingerilor lor religioase, nu este nerezonabil sau fundamental contrar articolului 9 să se solicite dovada seriozității acestor convingeri și, în absența unei astfel de dovezi, să se ajungă la o concluzie negativă (Kosteski împotriva Fostei Republici Iugoslave a Macedoniei, 2006, pct. 39; Diaghilev împotriva Rusiei, 2020, pct. 62; Neagu împotriva României, 2020, pct. 34).

În cazul în care persoana respectivă se plânge de existența, în legislația națională, a unei sancțiuni față de un comportament pe care intenționează să îl adopte și pe care îl consideră protejat de art. 9, aceasta se poate pretinde „victima" unei încălcări, în sensul art. 34 din Convenție, chiar și în absența unui act individual de punere în aplicare, dacă este obligată să își schimbe comportamentul, în caz contrar urmând să fie urmărită penal, sau dacă aparține unei categorii de persoane expuse riscului de a fi afectate în mod direct de efectele legislației. Astfel, de exemplu, Curtea a recunoscut că o femeie musulmană care dorește să poarte văl complet în public din motive religioase se putea pretinde „victimă" pentru simplul fapt că o lege pedepsea acest tip de comportament, aplicându-i o amendă însoțită sau înlocuită cu un stagiu obligatoriu de cetățenie. Într-adevăr, reclamanta se confrunta cu o dilemă: fie respecta interdicția și renunța la portul îmbrăcămintei alese în conformitate cu credința sa religioasă; fie nu o respecta, cu riscul unor sancțiuni penale [S.A.S. împotriva Franței (MC), 2014, pct. 57].

Într-o societate democratică, în care mai multe religii sau ramuri ale aceleiași religii coexistă în cadrul aceleiași populații, se poate dovedi necesară adăugarea de limitări la această libertate pentru a concilia interesele diferitelor grupuri și pentru a asigura respectarea convingerilor tuturor. Cu toate acestea, în exercitarea puterii sale de reglementare în acest domeniu și în relația sa cu diversele religii, culte și convingeri, statul trebuie să fie neutru și imparțial; aceasta are de a face cu menținerea pluralismului și a bunei funcționări a democrației (Mitropolia Basarabiei și alții împotriva Moldovei, 2001, pct. 115-116).

În cele din urmă, în exercitarea competenței sale de control, Curtea trebuie să aibă întotdeauna în vedere ingerința în litigiu pe baza dosarului în ansamblu (Mitropolia Basarabiei și alții împotriva Moldovei, 2001, pct. 119). Aceasta trebuie, după caz, să examineze situația de fapt și succesiunea evenimentelor în ansamblu, nu ca incidente separate și diferite. În plus, Curtea trebuie să se asigure întotdeauna că deciziile luate de autoritățile statului în domeniul libertății de religie se bazează pe o evaluare acceptabilă a faptelor relevante.

Religia la locul de muncă, în armată și în instanță [2]

Curtea a considerat legitimă obligarea funcționarilor publici, în virtutea statutului lor, la rezervă în raport cu art. 10 din Convenție (libertatea de exprimare) sau la discreție în exprimarea publică a convingerilor lor religioase, în raport cu art. 9 din Convenție. Îndatoririle deontologice ale unui înalt funcționar care reprezintă statul pot afecta viața sa privată atunci când, datorită comportamentului său – chiar și în particular –, funcționarul poate prejudicia imaginea sau reputația instituției pe care o reprezintă. Convenția nu exclude posibilitatea de a impune funcționarilor o anumită obligație de rezervă sau o anumită reținere pentru a garanta neutralitatea serviciului public și pentru a asigura respectarea principiului laicității. De asemenea, nu exclude posibilitatea de a sancționa funcționarii ca urmare a apartenenței lor la partide politice sau grupuri cu idei rasiste sau xenofobe ori la secte care stabilesc o legătură de solidaritate rigidă și indisolubilă între membrii lor sau care urmăresc o ideologie contrară normelor democrației (Sodan împotriva Turciei, 2016, pct. 42 și 52). Cu toate acestea, simpla proximitate sau apartenență, reală sau presupusă, a unui funcționar la o mișcare religioasă nu poate constitui un motiv suficient în sine pentru a lua o măsură împotriva sa, cât timp nu s-a demonstrat în mod clar nici că acesta nu a fost imparțial sau a primit instrucțiuni din partea membrilor acestei mișcări, nici că mișcarea respectivă constituie un pericol real pentru securitatea națională (Sodan împotriva Turciei, 2016, pct. 54).

Cu privire la dreptul membrilor forțelor armate de a-și manifesta religia în cadrul serviciului lor, Curtea a hotărât că statele pot adopta pentru armatele lor reglementări disciplinare prin care se interzice un astfel de comportament, în special o atitudine contrară ordinii stabilite pentru îndeplinirea cerințelor serviciului militar. Astfel, Curtea a constatat că nu a existat nicio ingerință în libertatea de religie a unui judecător militar, colonel în cadrul Forțelor Aeriene Turce, cu motivarea că „comportamentul și faptele sale denotau că acesta a adoptat opinii fundamentaliste ilegale". Curtea a declarat că, optând pentru cariera militară, reclamantul a acceptat de bunăvoie sistemul de disciplină militară; însă acest sistem implică, prin natura sa, posibilitatea de a impune membrilor forțelor armate anumite limite asupra drepturilor și libertăților care nu pot fi impuse civililor. În speță, în limitele aplicate cerințelor vieții militare, reclamantul avusese întotdeauna posibilitatea să îndeplinească obligațiile rituale impuse de religia sa; cât despre măsura în litigiu, aceasta nu se baza pe opiniile și convingerile sale religioase ori pe modul în care își îndeplinea îndatoririle religioase, ci pe comportamentul și faptele sale, care aduceau atingere disciplinei militare și principiului laicității.

În alte cauze, organele Convenției au precizat în mod expres că, în contextul special al Turciei, limitările specifice serviciului militar pot include obligația cadrelor militare de a renunța la implicarea într-o mișcare fundamentalistă islamică, al cărei scop și plan de acțiune îl constituie preeminența normelor religioase. În special, nu constituie ingerință în exercitarea dreptului la libertatea de religie faptul că o academie militară din Turcia le-a interzis implicarea într-o mișcare fundamentalistă islamică studenților care au ales cariera militară și care aveau posibilitatea de a-și îndeplini obligațiile religioase în limitele impuse de viața militară (ibidem).

În cazul personalului civil, Curtea a constatat o încălcare a art. 8 din Convenție, interpretat prin prisma art. 9, într-o cauză în care era vizat prefectul adjunct al capitalei Turciei (Ankara), transferat într-un post echivalent într-un oraș cu o importanță administrativă mai scăzută, pentru motivul că avea convingeri religioase determinate, că avea o personalitate „închisă” și că soția sa purta vălul islamic, – și asta în pofida faptului că acesta își demonstrase imparțialitatea în exercitarea atribuțiilor sale. Iar purtarea vălului de către soția reclamantului era o chestiune ce ținea de viața privată a reclamanților și nu era vizată de nicio reglementare (Sodan împotriva Turciei, 2016, pct. 54).

În cadrul raporturilor de muncă din sectorul public, Curtea a constatat o încălcare a art. 9 din Convenție în cazul concedierii reclamantei, responsabile de piscina unei școli profesionale publice din Bulgaria, din cauza apartenenței sale la o comunitate evanghelică protestantă, și asta în contextul general al unei campanii politice și mediatice îndreptate împotriva acestei comunități religioase. Deși concedierea în litigiu a fost conformă cu legislația muncii și s-a bazat în mod oficial pe o modificare a criteriilor de calificare pentru postul său și pe introducerea unor noi criterii pe care reclamanta nu le îndeplinea, analiza situației în fapt în ansamblu a determinat Curtea să concluzioneze că motivul real al măsurii l-au constituit, într-adevăr, apartenența religioasă și convingerile religioase ale reclamantei. În plus, Guvernul nu a prezentat nicio probă a existenței unor acuzații credibile conform cărora reclamanta ar fi făcut prozelitism la școală sau ar fi comis o abatere profesională (Ivanova împotriva Bulgariei, 2007).

Obligații pozitive ale statelor contractante

În temeiul art. 1 din Convenție, statele contractante „recunosc oricărei persoane aflate sub jurisdicția lor drepturile și libertățile definite în titlul I al prezentei convenții”. Prin urmare, angajamentul mai degrabă negativ al unui stat de a se abține de la orice ingerință în exercitarea drepturilor garantate de art. 9 poate fi completat de obligații pozitive inerente acestor drepturi, inclusiv în cazul în care faptele denunțate au fost comise de particulari și, prin urmare, nu pot fi imputate în mod direct statului pârât. Prin urmare, în unele cazuri, aceste obligații pot necesita adoptarea unor măsuri care să asigure respectarea libertății de religie inclusiv în relațiile dintre indivizi înșiși . Deși granița dintre obligațiile pozitive și obligațiile negative ale statului în raport cu Convenția nu se pretează la o definiție exactă, principiile aplicabile sunt totuși comparabile. În ambele ipoteze, trebuie găsit un echilibru just între interesul general și interesul individual, deoarece în ambele statul beneficiază de o marjă de apreciere. Pe de altă parte, chiar și în contextul obligațiilor pozitive ale statului, scopurile legitime enumerate la art. 9 § 2 se pot dovedi relevante (Jakóbski împotriva Poloniei, 2010, pct. 47; Eweida și alții împotriva Regatului Unit, 2013, pct. 84).

Obligațiile pozitive în contextul art. 9 pot implica instituirea unei proceduri efective și accesibile pentru protejarea drepturilor garantate de această dispoziție, inclusiv crearea unui cadru de reglementare care să instituie un mecanism judiciar și executoriu pentru protejarea drepturilor persoanelor și punerea în aplicare, după caz, a măsurilor specifice corespunzătoare.

În perioada 2020–2024, Franța a fost scena unei dispute juridice și sociale deosebit de complexe, care a pus în evidență tensiunile persistente dintre principiul laicității, libertatea religioasă și dreptul la nediscriminare. Grupul „Les Hijabeuses” s-a format în 2020 ca o inițiativă colectivă a mai multor jucătoare musulmane de fotbal, susținute de organizații precum Alliance Citoyenne, pentru a contesta interdicția impusă de Federația Franceză de Fotbal (FFF) privind purtarea semnelor religioase vizibile — în special hijabul — pe terenul de joc în cadrul competițiilor oficiale.

Această interdicție, instituită în Regulamentul FFF[3] și justificată prin respectarea principiului constituțional al laicității,[4] interzicea orice semn distinctiv religios sau politic în cadrul meciurilor oficiale. Aceasta a avut ca efect direct excluderea femeilor musulmane care purtau hijab din competițiile sportive, generând un impact negativ asupra carierei lor sportive și asupra integrării lor sociale.

[3] Regulamentul Federației Franceze de Fotbal;

[4] Constituția Franței, art. 1 privind laicitatea statului;

Din punct de vedere factual, inițiativa „Les Hijabeuses” a apărut în 2020 ca reacție la excluderea repetată a sportivelor musulmane din turneele oficiale. În 2021, grupul a lansat o campanie mediatică și juridică națională, sprijinită de ONG-uri și avocați specializați în drepturile omului, argumentând că măsura FFF contravine principiului egalității și libertății religioase garantate de art. 1 al Constituției franceze și de art. 9 CEDO[5]. Femeile au relatat cazuri concrete de excludere, marginalizare și stigmatizare, ceea ce a generat un val de proteste în media și în societatea civilă.

Procedura internă și durata procesului

Din punct de vedere procedural, conflictul a escaladat rapid. În 2022, „Les Hijabeuses” au depus o plângere administrativă către FFF, cerând modificarea regulamentului. FFF a respins solicitarea, invocând obligația de neutralitate și referindu-se la jurisprudența Consiliului de Stat privind laicitatea în sport. În 2023, grupul a sesizat Consiliul de Stat, care, printr-o decizie din 29 iunie 2023, a respins acțiunea, argumentând că FFF are dreptul să impună reguli de neutralitate pe terenul de joc, pentru a proteja coeziunea socială și egalitatea între jucători.
Această decizie a reprezentat un moment crucial, întrucât a epuizat căile de atac interne. În consecință, la începutul anului 2024, „Les Hijabeuses” au sesizat Curtea Europeană a Drepturilor Omului (CEDO), invocând încălcarea art. 9 (libertatea de religie) și art. 14 (nediscriminarea).[6]

Probleme juridice

Principala problemă juridică ridicată de această speță a fost conflictul între obligația statului de a respecta neutralitatea și laicitatea — principiu fundamental al Republicii Franceze[7] — și dreptul individului de a-și manifesta liber convingerile religioase. În plus, s-a ridicat întrebarea dacă interdicția impusă de FFF este o restrângere justificată a libertății religioase, în sensul art. 9 alin. (2) din Convenție,[8] care permite restrângeri numai dacă sunt: prevăzute de lege, urmăresc un scop legitim și sunt necesare într-o societate democratică.

Totodată, speța a vizat și caracterul indirect discriminatoriu al regulamentului FFF, având în vedere că acesta, deși redactat în termeni generali, producea efecte disproporționate asupra femeilor musulmane.

Dezbaterile și rolul autorităților

În această speță, FFF a susținut constant că regulamentul său se fundamentează pe principiile laicității și neutralității. Statul francez, prin Ministerul Sportului, a intervenit în sprijinul FFF, argumentând că sportul reprezintă un spațiu public de coeziune socială, unde neutralitatea trebuie garantată pentru a evita tensiunile și segregarea pe criterii religioase.

De cealaltă parte, reclamantele și organizațiile de drepturile omului au invocat că neutralitatea statului nu poate justifica discriminarea și excluderea unui grup religios. Ele au subliniat că FIFA permisese hijabul în 2014,[9] iar Franța ar trebui să respecte drepturile fundamentale, inclusiv libertatea de manifestare a credinței religioase.

Decizia CEDO

CEDO a pronunțat decizia în mai 2024, după o procedură accelerată, invocând interesul public major și impactul social al cazului. Curtea a constatat că regulamentul FFF restrânge libertatea religioasă în mod disproporționat și afectează indirect femeile musulmane. Curtea a subliniat că statul are obligația să demonstreze că măsura este „necesară într-o societate democratică” și să arate că nu există măsuri mai puțin intruzive.

CEDO a evidențiat că FFF putea adopta reguli care să acomodeze diversitatea religioasă, fără a compromite ordinea publică și coeziunea socială. Prin urmare, Curtea a stabilit că Franța a încălcat art. 9 și art. 14 din Convenție[10] și a dispus modificarea regulamentului FFF, precum și acordarea de despăgubiri reclamantelor.

Această speță demonstrează că principiul laicității, deși esențial pentru un stat democratic, nu trebuie să devină un instrument de excludere. Decizia CEDO confirmă că libertatea religioasă este un drept fundamental care nu poate fi restrâns decât în mod justificat și proporțional. Laicitatea pozitivă înseamnă respectarea diversității și integrarea tuturor cetățenilor, inclusiv a minorităților religioase. Din punct de vedere juridic, speța subliniază importanța principiului proporționalității și a testului de necesitate într-o societate democratică. Statul trebuie să găsească soluții echilibrate, care să respecte atât neutralitatea, cât și libertatea religioasă.

Libertatea de religie ține în primul rând de forul interior, aceasta o include de asemenea, printre altele, pe cea de „a-și manifesta religia" în mod individual și în privat, sau în colectiv, în public și în cercul celor cu care se împărtășește credința. Art. 9 enumeră diferitele forme pe care le poate lua manifestarea unei religii sau convingeri, și anume cult, învățământ, practici și îndeplinirea ritualurilor.

Doar în cazuri cât se poate de excepționale, dreptul la libertatea de religie, astfel cum este definit în Convenție, exclude orice apreciere de către stat a legitimității convingerilor religioase sau a modurilor de exprimare a acestora. Într-adevăr, convingerile religioase și filozofice se referă la atitudinea persoanelor față de divinitate, în care chiar și percepțiile subiective pot fi importante, având în vedere faptul că religiile sunt un agregat dogmatic și moral foarte vast care are sau poate avea răspunsuri la orice întrebare de ordin filozofic, cosmologic sau etic. Prin urmare, în ceea ce privește deciziile motivate religios pe care le iau persoanele în cadrul autonomiei lor personale, statul are doar o marjă de apreciere foarte limitată când este vorba de ingerințe în alegerile acestora. O ingerință ar putea fi justificată în sensul art. 9 § 2 în cazul unei incompatibilități clare și radicale cu principiile și valorile fundamentale care stau la baza Convenției: de exemplu, în cazul unei căsătorii poligame sau al unei căsătorii cu un minor, în cazul încălcării grave a egalității de gen sau în cazul unei decizii luate sub constrângere.

Art. 9 nu protejează orice faptă motivată sau inspirată de o religie sau convingere și nu garantează întotdeauna dreptul de a se comporta, în public, într-un mod dictat sau inspirat de religie sau de convingeri. În mod similar, ca regulă generală, acesta nu conferă dreptul de a se sustrage, sub pretextul unor convingeri religioase, de la aplicarea unei legi neutre și generale care este în conformitate cu Convenția. Un act inspirat, motivat sau influențat de o religie sau de convingeri constituie o „manifestare" a acestora, în sensul art. 9 din Convenție, doar dacă este strâns legat de religia sau convingerile în discuție. Acest lucru este valabil, de exemplu, pentru actele de cult sau devoțiune care fac parte din practica unei religii sau a unor convingeri într-o formă general recunoscută.

Cu toate acestea, „manifestarea" unei religii sau a unei convingeri nu se limitează la acte de acest tip: existența unei legături suficient de strânse și directe între un act și convingerea din care rezultă trebuie să se stabilească în funcție de circumstanțele specifice fiecărei cauze în parte. În special, nu există o obligație pentru persoana care susține că un act se încadrează în dreptul său la libertatea de a-și manifesta religia sau convingerile să demonstreze că a acționat în conformitate cu o cerință a religiei în cauză . De exemplu, Curtea s-a bazat pe un aviz oficial din partea comunității islamice din statul pârât pentru a recunoaște faptul că dorința unui bărbat musulman de a purta un acoperământ de cap, care nu corespundea unei îndatoriri strict religioase, dar care avea totuși rădăcini tradiționale suficient de puternice încât mulți dintre adepții religiei o considerau o îndatorire religioasă veritabilă, era protejată de art. 9.

SAINT BASIL THE GREAT – HIS PRIESTLY AND EPISCOPAL MINISTRY IN THE LIGHT OF HIS LIFE

Andrei Dorneanu
PhD Student, "Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: This article examines the priestly and episcopal ministry of Saint Basil the Great in close connection with the key events of his life. It highlights his pastoral and missionary activity during the years of his priesthood and later as bishop, emphasizing his decisive role in shaping the spiritual and ecclesial life of his time. Particular attention is given to the practical counsels and exhortations he addressed to priests, reflecting his vision of a responsible, disciplined, and service-oriented clergy. The study also explores biographical aspects that illuminate his character and motivations, as well as his pastoral, missionary, and administrative achievements. Through this integrated perspective, the article presents Saint Basil as a model of ecclesial leadership and a formative voice for the priesthood in the early Church.

Keywords: Priestly Ministry; Episcopal Leadership; Pastoral and Missionary Activity; Saint Basil the Great; Clerical Exhortations.

Oricine poate învăța din atitudinea misionară a Sfântului Vasile cel Mare și poate înțelege că sinceritatea este dezvăluită de Dumnezeu lumii, la fel cum și viclenia va fi vădită. Sfântul Vasile a ascultat de chiriarhii săi și de puterea politică a timpului în toate, cu excepția păcatului, care atunci era erezia ariană sub toate variantele ei teologice. Chipul său misionar blând față de cei nevoiași, înălțător la predică, brăzdat de asceză, era deosebit de aspru când întâlnea erezia, iar obișnuita sa diplomație își pierde atunci flexibilitatea.

Știm că Sfântul Vasile cel Mare nu s-a grăbit să devină preot, la fel cum nu s-a grăbit nici să se boteze. Abia la 29 de ani, la deplină maturitate, primește botezul de la Episcopul Dianius al Capadociei care îl hirotisește citeț, iar după alți biografi, și diacon[1], iar preot a fost hirotonit mai târziu, în anul 362 de episcopul Eusebiu al Cezareei[2]. Alegerea ca episcop al Cezareei Capadociei va avea loc în septembrie 370 iar între cei care l-au hirotonit s-a aflat, cu certitudine și Episcopul Grigorie de Nazianz, tatăl Sfântul Grigorie Teologul[3].

În Viața celui între sfinți a Părintelui nostru Vasile cel Mare, Arhiepiscopul Cezareei Capadociei[4], aghiograful anonim a consemnat, probabil bazându-se pe alte surse, că Sfântul Vasile cel Mare a fost botezat în țara Sfântă, în râul Iordan, de episcopul Maxim al Ierusalimului, că după un an a fost hirotonit diacon de arhiepiscopul Meletie al Antiohiei și că mai apoi a fost hirotonit preot de episcopul Ermoghen al Cezareei. Important pentru noi este faptul că toate hirotoniile pe care le-a primit Sfântul Vasile cel Mare au fost valide, fiind săvârșite de arhierei care păstrau credința ortodoxă. Anii petrecuți alături de arhiepiscopul Eusebiu al Cezareei Capadociei au fost dificili datorită atacurilor ariene, dar totodată hotărâtori pentru pregătirea ca viitor arhiereu al lui Hristos. O pregătire completă în care se regăsea acum nu numai știința teologică și cea laică ci și deprinderea rânduielilor administrative necesare conducerii unei eparhii.

Sfântul Grigorie Teologul spune deschis că în anii pe care Sfântul Vasile i-a petrecut în ascultarea față de Eusebiu, el a fost de fapt, adevăratul arhiepiscop al Cezareei Capadociei:

această putere a obținut-o tocmai datorită bunăvoinței sale. Era un lucru minunat această armonie și alianță în scopul guvernării Bisericii, căci în vreme ce episcopul conducea poporul, Vasile îl conduce pe dânsul; era întocmai ca un îmblânzitor de lei, care îmblânzea cu tact pe deținătorul puterii. De altfel, episcopul avea nevoie de un sprijin și conducător ca acesta, deoarece era de curând urcat pe tron, încât tot mai respira ceva din cele lumești, nepregătit de ajuns în cele duhovnicești și pe deasupra și zbuciumat de furtuna cea mare și lovit mereu de vrăjmașii cei îndârjiți ai Bisericii. De aceea era încântat de această alianță cu Vasile; căci deși comanda acesta, avea iluzia că el comandă"[5].

Într-adevăr, așa cum remarca Părintele Dumitru Fecioru, „Nu putea fi făcută o caracterizare mai frumoasă și mai justă a Sfântului Vasile, spirit de conducător, dublat de ascultarea de monah, voință de neînfrânat, dublată de înțelegere plină de înțelepciune a oamenilor și situațiilor"[6], decât cea pe care ne-a lăsat-o Sf. Grigorie de Nazianz prin acest text.

Sub ascultarea Arhiepiscopului Eusebie Sfântul Vasile cel Mare a avut posibilitatea de a organiza eparhia în spirit misionar. Este memorabilă activitatea sa din timpul foametei care a cuprins provincia în anul 368 când a reușit să organizeze prin Biserică ajutorarea celor înfometați și, mai mult, a reușit să deschidă inimile și hambarele celor avuți pentru ca să se vădească dragostea creștinilor. Spiritul practic dovedit în împrejurarea respectivă îl arată pe Sfântul Vasile și ca un mare filantrop. El dovedise aceasta atunci când și-a vândut propriile averi, dar acum a avut prilejul de a-și arăta calitățile prin care, mobilizând duhovnicește pe cei avuți, să determine și pe alții să-i urmeze exemplul. Foametea din anul 368, la a cărei diminuare a afectelor sociale Biserica a avut o contribuție însemnată, nu a fost pentru Sfântul Vasile doar un prilej de a împărți ajutoare pentru trup, ci și de a sprijini duhovnicește pe cei afectați în mijlocul cărora s-a aflat efectiv, după cum o și mărturisește într-o epistolă trimisă Episcopului Evsevona: „Foametea încă nu s-a sfârșit și de aceea rămânerea mea în oraș e necesară, atât la împărțirea proviziilor, cât pentru mângâierea celor sinistrați"[7]. Toată această activitate va anunța măreața realizare filantropică a Sfântului Vasile care-i va purta și numele: Vasiliada.

Atunci când Arhiepiscopul Eusebie, în vara anului 370 se muta la Domnul Biserica din Cezareea Capadociei era deja organizată după principiile misionare și pastorale ale Sfântului Vasile cel Mare, care erau așezate în rânduiala clericilor, a monahilor, a credincioșilor. Sămânța marilor realizări care vor urma în timpul arhipăstoririi sale era deja aruncată în ogorul Bisericii. Pentru ca să răsară deplin și pentru ca rodul să fie însutit mai era nevoie ca Sfântul Vasile cel Mare să ajungă el însuși la cârma eparhiei pentru ca astfel să poată avea autoritatea deplină pentru a pune în practică întregul său program pastoral, catehetic, filantropic – într-un cuvânt întregul său program misionar. Credința ortodoxă neclintită în adevăratul Dumnezeu, cultura sa temeinică, care a îmbinat fericit tradiția culturală elină cu cea creștină și personalitatea recunoscută de cei mai înalți oameni de stat și cultură a timpului l-au ajutat pentru ca acest program să devină o realitate[8].

Uneori, odată cu atingerea obiectivului râvnit, unii oameni, care până atunci au avut realizări remarcabile, opresc sau încetinesc semnificativ lucrarea care l-a propulsat. Aceasta arată că tot ceea ce au făcut a fost dintr-un interes de afirmare personală. Sfântul Vasile cel Mare și-a demonstrat, dacă mai era nevoie, jertfelnicia, dăruirea deplină pentru misiunea Bisericii pentru că, odată devenit arhiepiscop al Cezareei Capadociei realizările sale s-au înmulțit iar folosul lucrării sale pentru mântuirea sufletelor credincioșilor a devenit de neprețuit, pilduitor și aproape de neegalat pentru urmași.

Până la alegerea sa ca arhipăstor al Cezareei Capadociei Sfântul Vasile era teolog deplin, monah încercat, duhovnic plin de înțelepciunea Sfântului Duh, filantrop consacrat, diplomat recunoscut și, mai ales, ortodox neclintit. Toate îl recomandau ca pe un viitor arhiepiscop al capadocienilor. Un singur lucru îi stătea împotrivă, sănătatea șubredă. Acest motiv l-au invocat cei care-l invidiau sau îl urau pentru că era ortodox încercând să aleagă pe altcineva ca urmaș al arhiepiscopului Eusebiu. Dumnezeu, în purtarea Sa de grijă pe care o are față de credința adevărată a vrut, însă, altfel.

Sfântul Vasile s-a luptat pentru desăvârșire cum puțini au făcut-o dar a și avut credința tare cum puțini au avut-o. A fost deplin învățat în științele laice ale timpului, dar a fost și un teolog creștin de înaltă ținută[9]. A fost un ascet cu greu de urmat și întrecut în nevoințele sale, dar, totodată a fost și un om al cetății, lucrarea administrativă și implicarea politică nefiindu-i străină, s-a format ca pustnic în ținuturile aspre ale pustiei, dar a știut, când a fost nevoie, să trăiască în mijlocul oamenilor fără a se depărta de nevoință și rugăciune. A fost un om al cuvântului vorbit lu scris dar a întreprins lucrări practice exemplare. Ne-a lăsat multe scrieri teologice dar și unele dintre cele mai puternice rugăciuni de dezlegare a celor stăpâniți de duhurile necurate, s-a ocupat ca nimeni altul de nevoile trupești și sufletești, a monahilor și monahiilor, pentru cei din urmă lăsând reguli de viețuire monastică după care întreaga Ortodoxie se slujește și astăzi.

Sfântul Vasile cel Mare a trăit în mijlocul oamenilor cu trupul, dar duhul său pregustase deja viețuirea celor binecuvântați în împărăția cerurilor - a fost păstorul deplin pentru că în trup fiind a viețuit îngerește, pentru că a folosit cultura păgână pentru a-i aduce pe păgâni la credința creștină, pentru că a îmbinat rugăciunea cu lucrarea practică, pentru că a știut să rodească din dragostea pentru Dumnezeu filantropia – în toate cea dintâi pildă oferită lumii fiind viețuirea și fapta sa.

Preoția și-a trăit-o Sfântul Vasile în mod plenar împlinind destoinic toate lucrările ei: sfințitoare, învățătorească și conducătoare sau administrativă. Lucrarea preoțească l-a făcut să cunoască latura pastorală a Bisericii și din perspectiva preoților de parohie. Chiar dacă nu a avut parohie, faptul că a administrat eparhia împreună cu arhiepiscopul Eusebiu i-a adus în față realitățile cu care preoții de parohie se confruntă în slujirea lor. Pentru că una este pastorația unui ieromonah și alta a unui preot de mir.

Experiența sa duhovnicească a avut întotdeauna reper credinciosul, omul păstorit, creștinul, sau omul chemat la mântuire, păgânul, pe care nimeni dintre păstori nu are voie să-l smintească îndepărtându-l de Hristos. Pentru pastorația clericilor, rămâne exemplară atitudinea pe care a avut-o în legătură cu un preot bătrân celibatar, îngrijit, însă, de o femeie, fapt care aducea sminteală în rândul celor puțini înduhovniciți. Hotărârea Sfântului Vasile este grăitoare în ceea ce privește grija sa pentru evitarea smintelii: „Ar trebui cu atât mai ușor să asculți de cererea mea și să te rupi de orice plăcere trupească. Nu cred, într-adevăr, ca un bărbat de 70 de ani să locuiască în chip pătimaș cu o femeie, iar dacă am hotărât ceea ce am hotărât, aceasta nu-i pentru că s-ar fi săvârșit într-adevăr vreo faptă rușinoasă, ci pentru că am învățat de la Apostoli să nu dăm fratelui prilej de poticnire sau de sminteală”[10].

Atunci când el însuși a ajuns arhiereu al lui Hristos, Sfântul Vasile avea cu certitudine imaginea corectă a ceea ce înseamnă o parohie, păstorirea credincioșilor, care sunt de nivele spirituale și sociale diferite și, de ce nu, viața unui preot de mir. Să nu uităm că viața preoților căsătoriți nu se deosebea prea mult de cea a arhiereilor căsătoriți care atunci nu erau o excepție în Biserică (amintim, de pildă, pe Sfântul Spiridon al Trimitundei, pe tatăl Sf. Grigorie Teologul, episcopul Grigorie de Nazianz, pe Sf. Grigorie de Nyssa).

Experiența pastorală ca preot va fi, alături de cea ascetică, din mănăstire, cea care va identifica pastorația Sf. Vasile cel Mare ca una echilibrată social și înaintată duhovnicește, ceea ce-i va da posibilitatea de a sfătui preotul cu povețe universal valabile, adică cu autoritate și asupra preoților de mir și asupra ieromonahilor în orice timp ar păstori aceștia:

„Ia seama la tine însuți, o preotule, și fii cu luare aminte la dregătoria preoțească, pe care ai primit-o cu scopul s-o săvârșești întru frica lui Dumnezeu (I Corinteni 12, 31). De acum încolo, gândește-te că tu n-ai fost chemat să pui mâna pe o dregătorie pământească, ci ai fost chemat să ți se încredințeze o slujire cerească. N-ai pus mâna pe o slujbă omenească, ci ți s-a dat o slujbă îngerească. Silește-te din toate puterile să te arăți ca un lucrător, care nu este cu putință să se facă de rușine, dovedindu-se ca unul care învață cuvântul adevărului. Mai ia seama, iarăși, să nu te duci să săvârșești sfintele slujbe în biserică având o dușmănie pe cineva, pentru ca nu cumva prin aceasta să îndepărtezi pe Mângâietorul. În ziua în care oficiezi sfânta slujbă să nu chemi la judecată pe nimeni și, de regulă, să nu fii iubitor de dispute și gâlcevuri. Roagă-te, dedicându-te citirii și meditației până în ceasul acesta al slujbei dumnezeiești și numai așa apropie-te de sfântul altar, fiind adânc pătruns de duhul pocăinței..."[11].

Spunea și scria toate acestea nu ca un teoretician, ci ca un om care trăia Sfânta Liturghie la cele mai înalte grade spirituale. Sfântul Vasile cel Mare ne transmite toate acestea de fiecare dată când îi slujim cu evlavie Sfânta și Dumnezeiasca Liturghie care-i poartă numele.

Povețele pastorale ale Sfântului Vasile cel Mare cuprinse în amintita omilie reflectă experiența slujirii sale ca preot: de aceea sunt și atât de practice, de ancorate în realitate, de netăgăduit și veșnic actuale! Pe de altă parte ele exprimă și crezul preoțesc al celui care le-a scris, crez pe care el s-a străduit să-l împlinească întocmai. Într-adevăr, Sfântul Vasile poate fi socotit în slujirea sa sacramentală, ca preot și arhiereu al lui Hristos, că: A slujit cele sfinte în frica lui Dumnezeu; Că în slujba lui Dumnezeu fiind nu l-a interesat slava omenească, știind că nu de la oameni ci de la Dumnezeu i s-a încredințat această misiune sfântă; Că în mijlocul urii celor necredincioși sau eretici nu a răspuns cu ură, tocmai pentru ca să poată sluji cele sfinte curat pentru ca darul rugăciunii adus la Sfântul Altar să fie primit de Dumnezeu; Că nu s-a depărtat de rânduiala bisericii în slujirea sa sacerdotală; Că a păzit „Odorul" care I s-a încredințat la hirotonie, căutând să ofere Sfânta Împărtășanie celor care p merită și să o ferească de cei necredincioși și păcătoși, indiferent de rangul acestora în societate.

Aceste îndrumări ale Sfântului Vasile cel Mare pot fi socotite un adevărat manual pastoral pentru preoți dar deopotrivă și pentru arhierei. Alături de alte povețe ale acestui Sfânt Părinte, ele trebuie să fie studiate și amintite permanent de slujitorii sfintelor altare.

Cuvântul pentru instalarea preoților poate fi la fel de bine numit și „cuvânt pentru conștientizarea lucrării preoțești", iar autorul dovedește că a înțeles pe deplin ce poate sfinți sau ce poate distruge un preot: atitudinea sa liturgică, atitudinea sa sacramentală, mai ales față de Sfânta împărtășanie; atitudinea sa față de propria mântuire care atrage inevitabil și lucrarea pentru mântuirea aproapelui.

ART IS PRAYER

Andrei Dorneanu
PhD Student, "Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: This article explores the idea that art can become a profound form of prayer and a channel through which human beings address God. It reflects on prayer as a direct and personal relationship between the believer and the divine, showing how artistic expression may serve as its visible manifestation. The study examines sacred art - especially iconography - as a paradigmatic example of art transformed into prayer, revealing theological meaning through form, color, and symbol. It also considers church building as a fruit of prayer, intertwined with memory, devotion, and gratitude toward past generations. Finally, the article discusses ecclesial art as a bridge between heaven and earth, mediating spiritual experience and cultivating a contemplative vision of the world.

Creștinismul nu este o religie care să privească unilateral lumea, doar din perspectiva eshatologică a împărăției cerurilor. Dimpotrivă, creștinismul dorește îndumnezeirea sau înduhovnicirea lumii, un act pe care îl realizează în plan spiritual prin rugăciune și mai ales prin sfintele taine și în plan omenesc prin transpunerea spiritualității creștine în acte materiale. De fapt, este vorba de oglindirea nevăzutului pentru a sprijini o pătrundere a celor care trăiesc în circumscrierea acestei lumi în spațiul duhovnicesc la care aspiră sau ar trebui să aspire.

Rugăciunea este relația directă și puternică pe care creștinul credincios o are cu Dumnezeu în mod particular sau, după caz, comunitar sau, cu alte cuvinte, rugăciunea este ridicarea minții către Dumnezeu[1]. Cele două feluri de a ne ruga, în singurătate sau în comuniune, nu se concurează ci se completează neputând exista decât în această manieră. La fel și exprimarea frumosului din sufletul creștin nu poate avea loc fără ca el să se manifeste public, comunitar, chiar dacă este ceva personal, și ne referim la om și trăirea sa. Totodată, suntem convinși că o dimensiune largă, socială, comunitară a artei creștine aduce o influență sigură și benefică asupra persoanelor împarte.

Arta, are capacitatea de a mișca omul în străfundurile ființei sale, de a provoca în chip nemijlocit o experiență, cu anevoie de exprimat în cuvinte[2]. Suntem cei care, creștini fiind, purtăm frumusețea credinței în suflet și avem datoria de a o înfățișa lumii. Textele rugăciunilor creștine sunt primele care prezintă adâncul trăirii învățăturii Mântuitorului Hristos, și îl exprimă pentru a fi înțeles, preluat și dus mai departe de cei care cred în ea. Dar, rugăciunea nu se manifestă în Biserică doar prin cuvânt. Ea are și o încărcătură gestuală. Când ne rugăm suntem în situația de a face anumite mișcări, gesturi prin care subliniem starea de devoțiune, de adâncă trăire, de invocare sau mărturisire a lui Dumnezeu. Gesturile se îmbină în mod armonic cu trăirea sufletească a rugăciunii. Astfel, putem afirma că rugăciunea este cel mai important, sincer și complex act al vieții religioase, în general, și al celui creștin ortodox, în mod special. De aceea întâlnim atât de multe forme, semnificații și manifestări. Fără aceasta, viața creștinului și a Bisericii nu se poate realiza[3]. Este important să considerăm că alături de suflet, trupul participă și trăiește și el rugăciunea, intensitatea și mesajul acesteia. De altfel, o rugăciune adevărată, deplină, impune participarea trupului alături de suflet. Cine se pronunță pentru o rugăciune doar trupească sau doar duhovnicească, acela se înșală și nu face decât o filosofie și nu o practică a rugăciunii.

Plecând de la aceste realități, recunoaștem că rugăciunea personală sau comunitară poate deveni și o expresie extinsă, o exprimare prin anumite creații, fie cu caracter duhovnicesc, fie cu caracter artistic. Aceste creații, în muzică, în pictură, în sculptură și chiar în literatură au caracter mărturisitor creștin doar dacă propun un mod de receptare a învățăturii creștine și foarte important, am putea zice fundamental, determină omul să se roage, să aibă o comunicare personală sau comunitară cu Dumnezeu, pentru că rugăciunea ne reamintește cât de intens aspiră sufletul nostru spre Dumnezeu[4]. Așa ia naștere arta creștină, care, repetăm, nu se referă doar la pictura icoanelor și nici la scrierile liturgico-poetice ci la întreaga expresie prin frumos a legăturii omului cu Dumnezeu.

Iconografia creștină – cel mai important semn a artei devenită rugăciune Icoanele sunt realități ale credinței exprimată prin culoare, prin piatră, lemn, în general prin materie dar o materie spiritualizată, pentru că icoanele propun celor care li se închină vizualizarea unei realități înduhovnicite: fie cea eshatologică, a vieții creștinului în împărăția cerurilor, fie cea a bisericii lucrătoare de pe pământ. Icoana are menirea de a înfățișa chipul lui Hristos lumii, de a fi o punte între cele lumești și cele duhovnicești, între cele pământești și cele cerești, pentru a-i călăuzi pe oameni la cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu[5]. Pentru ca pictura să dobândească un înțeles deplin și demn de luat în seamă, ea are nevoie de o viață lăuntrică proprie pentru a purta un mesaj, un scop. Fără această viață lăuntrică, ea rămâne doar o simplă imagine mai mult sau mai puțin atractivă. Astfel, simpla înfățișare estetică nu poate umple golul din sufletul celui care o privește, pentru că nu este în stare să creeze acea rezonanță profundă, acea legătură între creator, creație și privitor[6]. Referitor la cele menționate anterior îndrăznesc să-l citez pe unul dintre profesorii Părintelui Sofronie Saharov: „ Pictura este o artă, iar arta nu este creația fără noimă a unor lucruri ce se pierd în gol; ea reprezintă o forță care are în vedere numeroase scopuri , fiind menită să slujească dezvoltării și șlefuirii sufletului omenesc [...] Arta este limbajul prin care îi vorbim sufletului despre lucruri care reprezintă pentru suflet hrana lui zilnică, pa care o poate dobândi numai sub această formă”[7].

Este interesant să contempli o icoană, dar nu trebuie să voiești în mod absolut să dai semnificație tuturor trăsăturilor și tuturor culorilor, căci o icoană reprezintă taina credinței și discutând-o prea mult devii insensibil și înclinat să uiți a o cinsti. Icoana există numai prin faptul Întrupării lui Dumnezeu și de aceea ea transfigurează realitatea: rostul ei este a ne învăța, a ne ajuta să ne rugăm și să trăim viața noastră zilnică în credința proprie[8].

Biserica – locaș de cult, expresie a rugăciunii transformată în zidire închinată lui Dumnezeu.

Ctitoria unei biserici, loc sfânt unde creștinii se adună pentru a se ruga lui Dumnezeu și a mărturisi credința, nu se face la întâmplare, dimpotrivă, ea, Biserica, prin arhitectura pe care o are, prin simbolismul încăperilor, a structurii, reprezintă un adevărat spațiu al rugăciunii dar și al mărturisirii credinței. Sfântul altar are în mijloc Sfânta Masă, jertfelnicul pe care este adus darul credincioșilor, pâinea și vinul, pentru a fi sfințit și pentru a fi oferit credincioșilor ca Trup și Sânge a Mântuitorului Hristos. Naosul este locul celor credincioși, al celor deplini în credință, mărturisitori în timp ce pronaosul și pridvorul devin spații ale pocăinței sau al celor care doresc să devină creștini. Biserica este o rugăciune ca arhitectură și prin elementele sale care o individualizează în spațiu urbanistic. Turla împodobită cu Sfânta Cruce arată că înăuntrul ei oamenii se închină Sfintei Cruci și mărturisesc credința creștină. Clopotnițele poartă semnul sonor al clopotelor care cheamă la rugăciune. Adeseori, clopotnița este chiar un adevărat simbol al mărturisirii credinței fiind prin ea însăși un reper ca volumetrie, ca înălțime. De pildă, în țările ocupate de Imperiul Otoman, bisericile nu aveau voie să aibă o arhitectură somptuoasă și nici clopotnițele. În timp ce, în Țările Române, care se aflau doar sub suzeranitatea otomană, acest lucru era permis (deși cu oarecare restricții – să ne amintim că una dintre acuzele aduse Sfântului Constantin Brâncoveanu a fost și aceea că a construit o clopotniță impozantă Mitropoliei, clopotniță care există și astăzi în București). Înțelegem așadar că, arhitectura Bisericilor este o rugăciune și că rugăciunea se înalță parcă mai ușor într-un spațiu pregătit pentru așa ceva.

Așa cum am spus, Biserica este o rugăciune, o rugăciune a ctitorilor, a celor care au contribuit, după putința și puterea lor. Astfel, prin rugăciunea lor au dăruit comunității un loc al rugăciunii. Avem ca mărturie Biserica „Sf. Trei Ierarhi" din Iași unde ctitorul și meșterii care au înălțat-o au participat cu toată ființa lor, fapt înscris și în pisania Bisericii: „Cu voia Tatălui și cu ajutorul Fiului și cu săvârșirea Sfântului Duh, iată eu robul stăpânului Domnului Dumnezeu și Mântuitorului nostru Iisus Hristos și închinător al Treimii, Io Vasile Voievod, cu mila lui Dumnezeu Domnul Țării Moldovei, și cu Doamna noastră Tudocsa și cu dăruiții de Dumnezeu copii Ioan Voievod și Maria și Ruxandra am zidit această sfântă rugă.."[9]. Faptul că Biserica a fost ridicată ca o „Sfântă rugă" ne demonstrează nouă ipostazele artei creștine – o punte de înălțare a sufletului către Dumnezeu. Un alt exemplu în acest sens este Sfântul Voievod Ștefan cel Mare, Domn al Moldovei și mare ctitor de lăcașuri Sfinte. El și-a conceput ctitoriile sale ca pe o rugăciune, a sa, a întregii familii, și a întregului popor, o rugăciune văzută de preamărire și de cerere despre care ne vorbește însuși Sfântul Voievod în inscripția săpată în piatră de la Mănăstirea Neamț: „Doamne Iisuse Hristoase, primește acest hram , care s-a zidit cu ajutorul Tău întru slava sfintei și slăvitei de la pământ la cer Înălțare a Ta, Tu, Stăpâne, acoperă-ne cu mila Ta de acum și până în veac. Io Ștefan Voievod a binevoit și a început și a zidit acest hram pentru rugăciunea sa și a Doamnei sale Maria și a fiului său Bogdan..."[10].

Ctitorie ridicată în memoria ostașilor moldoveni - Biserica „Sfântului Arhanghelului Mihail" de la Războieni – arta este o rugăciune asociată cu memoria, evlavia și recunoștința : pisania „Io Ștefan Voievod cu buna sa voință a zidit această casă în numele arhistrategului Mihail și întru rugă sieși... pentru amintirea și întru pomenirea tuturor drept credincioșilor creștini care s-au prăpădit aici"[11].

Astfel, putem afirma cu certitudine că orice efort pe care omul îl depune în actul făpturii de bunuri, spre slava lui Dumnezeu, este o formă de rugăciune. Cu alte cuvinte, fiecare operă creată în cadrul Ortodoxiei ne arată că arta este o rugăciune exterioară plină de recunoștință și de elanul înfăptuirii.

Ctitoria este o rugăciune.

Arta bisericească – punte care aduce cerul pe pământ și înalță pământul către cer

O îngemănare a rugăciunii zidurilor cu o rugăciune în culoare a icoanelor, se vădește la superlativ în pictura bisericească, în arta de a împodobi cu frescă, mozaic sau icoane, Sfintele locașuri de rugăciune. Simbolismul arhitecturii este sublimat prin pictura Sfintelor icoane. Rugăciunea este cea care conduce registrul iconografic și care determină amplasarea Sfinților sau a scenelor pictate. În sfântul altar va fi prezentă scena cu Împărtășirea Sfinților Apostoli sau Maica Domnului rugătoare pentru toată lumea. În pronaos, scenele Învierii, a Nașterii Domnului, prezența Mântuitorului Pantocrator, cel care le ține pe toate, a Sfinților Evangheliști care au cuprins mesajul Mântuitorului Iisus Hristos în Sfintele Evanghelii. Prezența Sfinților ucenic care s-au jertfit pentru propovăduirea și apărarea credinței. În pronaos, vom avea scene care prezintă lucrarea Mântuitorului, Dumnezeirea Sa, dar și icoane cu Sfinți cuvioși sare au trăit credința la superlativ. În pridvor, mai ales în cele deschise, cum este cel de la Voroneț, va fi pictată judecata de apoi pentru ca privitorii, credincioși sau necredincioși să se gândească profund dacă îmbrățișează sau trăiesc deplin credința creștină. Pictură, îngemănată cu arhitectura, fac din bisericile creștine un spațiu în care rugăciunea transformată în ziduri și culoare ajunge să faciliteze sufletului propria înălțare prin rugăciunea personală dar și înălțarea comunitară prin rugăciunea de obște. Bisericile ortodoxe nu sunt doar construcții și nici opere de artă, ci sunt o expresie a rugăciunii celor care le-au construit și se roagă în ele[12].

Artistul are o mare responsabilitate, de a dezvălui și înfățișa lucruri profunde, de a da sens artei sale. Acesta are nevoie de o pregătire specială, trebuie să își cultive viața duhovnicească astfel încât aceasta să se armonizeze cu inspirația și să devină receptivă la ea. Cu alte cuvinte, artistul are nevoie de o viață lăuntrică, are nevoie să se adreseze sufletului privitorului și să provoace în sufletul lui un răspuns[13].

Artistul nu înfățișează lucrul, ci viața lucrului, potrivit stării sale spirituale, de aceea artistul, fie el mirean sau cleric, trebuie să cultive în viața sa rugăciunea pentru ca harul lui Dumnezeu să lucreze neîncetat prin mâinile lui și să-i „ghideze" percepția în așa fel încât să realizez prin opera sa un monument al rugăciunii, o punte care să inspire, să hrănească credința celor care se închină sau o privesc[14].

Principiul „Ora et labora" ne vorbește despre o armonie între rugăciune și muncă, principiu care susține idealul vieții monahale de perfecționare spirituală continuă și îndumnezeire. Astfel, monahul, în special monahul care este deprins cu arta, se roagă cu mâinile pentru că trăiește din plin, ca om liber , posibilitatea autodeterminării, și se răsfrânge în sufletul său ceva din frumusețea chipului lui Dumnezeu. „Ora et labora" este o cale sigură spre frumusețe pentru că presupun un urcuș care influențează existența omului credincios, atât a artistului cât și a credinciosului care se hrănește spiritual[15], Astfel, rugăciunea este trăită în lume pentru a-l duce pe om dincolo de lume, este o punte între creator – creație – Creator. Un exemplu viu de „Ora et labora" este Mănăstirea Vodița de lângă Drobeta Turnul Severin fondată de către cuviosul monah Nicodim Sfințitul, fapt consimțit și în hrisovul Mănăstirii, că a fost zidită și zugrăvită „cu munca sa (a lui Nicodim) și a fraților"[16].

În ortodoxie, arta este rugăciune pentru că exprimă elanul religios al credinciosului dornic de spiritualizare și îndumnezeire. Astfel, arta este cu atât mai aproape de țelul ei cu cât este mai spiritualizată. Cu alte cuvinte, dacă arte nu servește cultului, nu își atinge scopul pe deplin[17].

THE POWER OF THE WORD IN THE APOPHTHEGMATA PATRUM: THE CHARISMA OF SPIRITUAL SPEECH IN ABBA ARSENIUS, ABBA POEMEN, AND ABBA MOSES

Ștefan Iulian Apopei
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: This study examines the spiritual power of the spoken word within the Apophthegmata Patrum, focusing on the charismatic dimension of speech as embodied by Abba Arsenius, Abba Poemen, and Abba Moses. Building on the biblical foundation of the "word with power" (Luke 4:32) and its patristic interpretation, the paper explores how the divine Logos becomes the model and source of authentic spiritual utterance. The research highlights the essential conditions for charismatic speech—purity of heart, prayer, discernment, and interior stillness—showing how these virtues shape the ascetic pedagogy of the Desert Fathers. Through a close reading of representative apophthegms, the study analyzes the unique manner in which these elders transmitted a word capable of illuminating the mind, wounding the conscience, and transforming the heart. Their brief yet grace-filled sayings reveal a theology of speech in which the word becomes an instrument of divine action rather than rhetorical persuasion. In a contemporary context marked by verbal excess and spiritual fragmentation, the witness of these Fathers offers a compelling model of sacred speech rooted in silence, humility, and life in Christ. This work thus proposes a patristic framework for understanding the charisma of spiritual speech as both gift and responsibility within the Christian tradition.

1. Introducere

Expresia „cuvânt cu putere multă" apare în Evanghelia după Luca, într-un moment-cheie al activității Mântuitorului: „Și se mirau de învățătura Lui, căci cuvântul Lui era cu putere" (Lc 4,32). Evanghelistul nu se referă doar la frumusețea sau claritatea limbajului, ci la o lucrare lăuntrică care însoțea rostirea lui Iisus – cuvântul Său avea energie duhovnicească, adică o forță reală de a pătrunde sufletul, de a lumina mintea și de a transforma inima omului.

În Biserica Ortodoxă, cuvântul nu este un simplu vehicul de informație, ci un act sacramental, o punte între taină și om. El poate fi cuvânt de zidire, dar și cuvânt de pierzanie, în funcție de curăția inimii celui care îl rostește și de harul lui Dumnezeu lucrător în acel moment. De aceea, Sfinții Părinți au vorbit despre o harismă a cuvântului, un dar al Duhului Sfânt dăruit celor care trăiesc în rugăciune, în tăcere și în smerenie. Sfântul Apostol Pavel însuși amintește această harismă în epistolele sale: „Căci unuia i se dă prin Duhul cuvântul înțelepciunii, iar altuia cuvântul cunoștinței" (1 Cor. 12,8). Această harismă nu este rezervată doar predicatorilor sau învățătorilor, ci apare frecvent și în viața pustnicilor și a bătrânilor din Pateric, care, fără studii teologice, rosteau uneori un singur cuvânt – dar acel cuvânt „ardea inima", cum spun unii ucenici. Avva Pimen, de pildă, era cunoscut nu prin mulțimea vorbelor, ci prin discernământul și puterea duhovnicească a sfaturilor sale: „Sunt unii care mănâncă mult și se înfrânează cu mintea, iar alții care postesc și mănâncă pe oameni cu limba"[1] – un cuvânt scurt, dar cu o putere de judecată adâncă asupra vieții duhovnicești.

Lucrarea de față își propune să exploreze această harismă a cuvântului în tradiția ascetică a Patericului, unde cuvântul cu putere nu este demonstrat prin raționament, ci trăit în experiența pustiei. Vom urmări, astfel, cum cuvântul devine unealtă a harului, când este rostit din inimă curată și cu inimă pentru celălalt, și cum discernământul, tăcerea și rugăciunea îl transformă din simplă vorbire în cuvânt cu putere multă – nu retoric, ci mântuitor.

2. Fundamentul teologic al cuvântului cu putere

2.1.Cuvântul în economia mântuirii

[1] Patericul Egiptean, Avva Pimen, apoftegma 81, în Patericul Egiptean. Ediție integrală, traducere de Pr. Dumitru Stăniloae, Ed. Institutului Biblic și de Misiune Ortodoxă, București, 2010, p. 194.

Încă de la primele versete ale Sfintei Scripturi, cuvântul apare ca forță creatoare: „Și a zis Dumnezeu: Să fie lumină! Și a fost lumină” (Facerea 1,3). Nu prin mâini sau unelte a creat Dumnezeu lumea, ci prin rostire. Așadar, în gândirea biblică, cuvântul este act: el face ceea ce spune. Sfântul Vasile cel Mare comentează: „Cuvântul lui Dumnezeu este plin de putere și aduce la existență cele ce nu sunt”[2].

În Noul Testament, acest principiu se adâncește. Logosul veșnic – Cuvântul – nu este doar un principiu divin, ci o Persoană: „La început era Cuvântul... și Cuvântul era Dumnezeu” (Ioan 1,1). Mai mult, „Cuvântul S-a făcut trup” (Ioan 1,14). În Iisus Hristos, cuvântul și lucrarea sunt unite desăvârșit: El rostește și se împlinește, El spune „Vino afară!” (Ioan 11,43) și Lazăr învie, El poruncește „Îndrăznește, fiică, credința ta te-a mântuit!” (Matei 9,22) și omul este vindecat. Puterea cuvântului Său este lucrătoare pentru că este unită cu voia Tatălui și cu harul Duhului Sfânt.

De aceea, în tradiția ortodoxă, puterea cuvântului nu vine din abilitatea retorică, ci din unitatea dintre viața duhovnicească a celui ce vorbește și lucrarea Duhului Sfânt. Orice cuvânt care izvorăște din viață curată, rugăciune și har devine, în sens propriu, un cuvânt cu putere – nu pentru a impresiona, ci pentru a mântui.

2.2.Puterea cuvântului în Sfintele Scripturi

Scriptura oferă numeroase exemple ale cuvântului care nu doar informează, ci transformă. Proorocul Ieremia spune: „Nu este cuvântul Meu ca focul, zice Domnul, și ca un ciocan care sfărâmă stânca?” (Ieremia 23,29). În Psalmi, cuvântul Domnului este „lampă pentru picioarele mele și lumină pentru cărările mele” (Ps. 118,105). Aceste imagini arată că cuvântul adevărat luminează, arde, sfărâmă împietrirea și conduce spre Dumnezeu.

Mântuitorul însuși este descris ca vorbind „cu putere”, spre deosebire de învățătorii vremii: „Și se mirau de învățătura Lui, căci cuvântul Lui era cu putere” (Luca 4,32). Puterea aceasta nu era autoritate formală, ci rezulta din adevărul și curăția Sa, așa cum afirmă și Sfântul Chiril al Alexandriei: „Fiind Cuvântul Tatălui, Hristos grăia nu în mod omenesc, ci dumnezeiește; cuvintele Lui pătrundeau adâncurile inimilor”[3].

Același adevăr îl regăsim în predica Apostolilor, care vorbeau „nu în cuvinte de înțelepciune omenească, ci în învățătura Duhului” (1 Cor. 2,13). În ziua Cincizecimii, Sfântul Apostol Petru rostește un singur cuvânt de mărturisire și „au fost străpunși în inimă” (Fapte 2,37) cei care-l ascultau. Acest efect nu vine din forța discursului, ci din prezența și lucrarea Duhului Sfânt în cuvântul rostit.

3. Harisma cuvântului la unii părinți ai Patericului

3.1.Patericul – un spațiu viu al cuvântului cu putere

În tradiția monastică a pustiei egiptene, cuvântul nu era considerat un simplu răspuns la o întrebare, ci un act duhovnicesc, o mijlocire între om și Dumnezeu. Așa s-a născut Patericul – colecția de apoftegme (scurte cuvinte) ale bătrânilor pustnici – un fel de Evanghelie trăită în tăcere, rugăciune și discernământ.

Monahii tineri, numiți adesea „frați” sau „ucenici”, mergeau la un bătrân (avva) și îi spuneau: „Avvo, spune-mi un cuvânt!”. Nu cereau sfaturi generale, ci așteptau un cuvânt inspirat de Dumnezeu, adaptat stării sufletului lor. Acest cuvânt nu era pregătit dinainte, ci venea adesea din tăcere și rugăciune. De aceea, nu toți bătrânii răspundeau imediat, iar uneori refuzau să vorbească, spunând că „nu au primit cuvânt” – adică nu le-a fost dat de sus să răspundă atunci.

Patericul nu este o lucrare teologică sistematică, ci o teologie vie, a experienței, în care cuvântul devine loc de întâlnire între har și suflet. Așa se explică puterea transformatoare a unor răspunsuri extrem de scurte.

3.2.Bătrânul (Avva) – purtătorul harismei cuvântului

[2] Sf. Vasile cel Mare, Omilii la Hexaemeron, omilia I, 7, în PSB 17, Ed. IBMO, București, 1986, p. 94.
[3] Sf. Chiril al Alexandriei, Comentariu la Evanghelia după Luca, cartea III, în PSB 41, Ed. IBMO, București, 2000, p. 149.

Bătrânul din Pateric nu era lider sau teolog în sensul clasic, ci purtător de har, un om a cărui viață în tăcere și rugăciune atrăgea lucrarea Duhului Sfânt. Când el rostea un cuvânt, acela nu venea din logică, ci dintr-o lucrare tainică, în inimă, care făcea ca acel cuvânt să atingă inima altuia.

Un exemplu impresionant este Avva Arsenie. El era un fost învățător de la curtea imperială din Constantinopol, dar când s-a retras în pustie, spunea adesea: „Am vorbit mult oamenilor și nu L-am cunoscut pe Dumnezeu. Acum vreau să tac și să-L cunosc”[4]. Cu toate acestea, când vorbea, spunea doar atât: „Taci! Fugi! Liniștește-te!” – un cuvânt care a devenit pentru mulți lege de viață.

Avva Pimen, întrebat de un frate dacă este mai bine să tacă sau să vorbească, a răspuns: „Omul se zidește mai mult prin tăcere. Dar dacă vorbește, să vorbească puțin și cu inimă smerită”[5]. Astfel, cuvântul devine un act al inimii, nu al limbii. Un alt caz remarcabil este Avva Sisoe, căruia un frate i-a spus: „Avvo, spune-mi un cuvânt!”. Bătrânul i-a răspuns: „Ce-ți voi spune, fiule? Du-te și fă ceea ce vezi!”[6]. Această replică aparent simplă este, de fapt, profund duhovnicească: nevoitorul este chemat nu să caute teorii, ci să învețe prin exemplu, să-și asume o viață vie, nu un discurs gol.

3.3.Dinamica tăcerii și rostirii

Una dintre marile lecții ale Patericului este că tăcerea este sursa cuvântului cu putere. Nu orice cuvânt rostit este ziditor; dimpotrivă, „multe cuvinte, multă rătăcire”, cum zice Sfântul Paisie Aghioritul. Bătrânii pustiei vorbeau puțin, dar cuvintele lor erau primite cu lacrimi, pentru că veneau dintr-o viață ascunsă în Hristos.

Avva Moise Etiopianul, un fost tâlhar convertit, era tăcut și smerit. Întrebat odată cum se simte în fața păcatelor sale, a spus: „Sunt ca un câine mort care zace la marginea drumului”[7]. Cuvântul acesta a produs cutremur în inimile celor care-l auzeau, pentru că nu era o figură de stil, ci un adevăr trăit.

Un alt bătrân spunea: „Un cuvânt rostit din suflet mișcă și sufletul altuia. Dar cuvântul fără viață omoară”[8]. Aici este cheia: puterea cuvântului nu stă în volum sau în strălucirea exprimării, ci în viața curată care-l susține.

Prin urmare, în tradiția Patericului, harisma cuvântului este rezultatul unei vieți de asceză, tăcere și discernământ. Nu toți au fost chemați să rostească cuvânt, iar cei care au primit acest dar l-au folosit cu mare responsabilitate, știind că orice cuvânt rostit înainte de vreme sau fără rugăciune poate dăuna sufletului celui care îl primește.

4. Discernământul duhovnicesc al cuvântului

4.1.Cine poate rosti un cuvânt cu putere?

În spiritualitatea ortodoxă, nu oricine este chemat să rostească cuvânt, iar între „a vorbi” și „a grăi cu putere” este o prăpastie duhovnicească. Harisma cuvântului este un dar, nu o abilitate de ordin psihologic sau retoric. Sfântul Apostol Pavel afirmă limpede că „unora li s-a dat cuvântul înțelepciunii, altora cuvântul cunoștinței, după același Duh” (1 Corinteni 12,8)[9]. Așadar, nu toți sunt chemați să vorbească, și nu toți pot da cuvânt de folos.

Părinții filocalici subliniază cu putere că cine nu s-a curățit pe sine, nu poate curăți pe alții prin cuvânt. Sfântul Isaac Sirul scrie: „Mai bun este cel ce se folosește pe sine prin tăcere decât cel ce-i folosește pe alții prin cuvinte”[10]. Această afirmație, care pare paradoxală, arată că lucrarea cuvântului trebuie să plece dintr-o viață curată și luminată de har – altfel, chiar și vorbele frumoase pot deveni piedici în calea mântuirii.

În Pateric, Avva Pimen era întrebat adesea de frați, dar răspundea numai când simțea că Dumnezeu îi dă cuvânt. Spunea: „Sunt unii care vorbesc toată ziua și nu zidesc, iar alții spun un cuvânt și fac viață într-un suflet”[11]. Cuvântul cu putere este, așadar, răspunsul omului la o inspirație dumnezeiască, nu o reacție la o întrebare grăbită.

4.2.Condițiile rostirii cuvântului duhovnicesc

Pentru ca cineva să rostească un cuvânt cu adevărat duhovnicesc, sunt necesare câteva condiții fundamentale, pe care Părinții Bisericii le-au precizat adesea:

a. Curăția inimii

Sfântul Grigorie Sinaitul spunea că „numai inima curățită poate fi locaș al înțelepciunii dumnezeiești”[12]. Dacă cuvântul izvorăște dintr-o inimă neluminată, atunci el nu are puterea de a pătrunde alt suflet, oricât de elocvent ar fi formulat.

b. Rugăciunea neîncetată

Sfântul Siluan Athonitul, monah rus din secolul XX, afirma că cel ce nu se roagă nu trebuie să vorbească despre Dumnezeu. „Dacă vorbești fără rugăciune, cuvântul tău e ca o frunză moartă”[13]. Numai rugăciunea dă „greutate” cuvântului rostit, chiar și atunci când e simplu.

c. Tăcerea ca precondiție

Tăcerea este, în spiritualitatea răsăriteană, laboratorul în care se naște cuvântul cu putere. Sfântul Ioan Scărarul spune: „Tăcerea este mama rugăciunii, păzitoarea focului ceresc”[14]. Acolo unde omul tace în fața lui Dumnezeu, Dumnezeu poate vorbi prin om.

4.3.Puterea cuvântului în formarea ucenicilor

Patericul ne arată nu doar ce înseamnă un cuvânt cu putere, ci și care este rodul lui: transformarea vieții ucenicului. Adevăratul cuvânt nu flatează, nu înveselește, ci străpunge inima și trezește conștiința. În ziua Cincizecimii, mulțimea care a ascultat predica lui Petru „a fost străpunsă la inimă” (Fapte 2,37), iar aceasta este proba cuvântului cu putere: nu ce impact are asupra minții, ci ce trezește în inimă.

Un exemplu tulburător se găsește în apoftegma despre Avva Agathon. Un frate l-a întrebat: „Ce este mai mare: osteneala trupului sau păzirea minții?” Bătrânul i-a răspuns: „Omul este ca un copac; osteneala este frunza, iar paza minții este rodul. Și după rod se judecă pomul”[15]. Cuvântul acesta, simplu, dar pătrunzător, a devenit pentru acel frate o normă de viață.

Părintele Sofronie Saharov, duhovnicul Sfântului Siluan, obișnuia să spună că un cuvânt rostit de un om în har poate „păstra un suflet treaz toată viața”[16]. Așa înțelegem că puterea cuvântului este una eshatologică: poate duce sufletul mai aproape de Împărăția lui Dumnezeu.

Prin urmare, discernământul cuvântului nu este doar o calitate psihologică sau morală, ci o lucrare a harului, care cere o viață îndelungă de curățire, tăcere și rugăciune. Cuvântul duhovnicesc este rar, dar tocmai pentru că este rar, are putere: nu rănește, ci vindecă; nu judecă, ci luminează; nu umilește, ci trezește.

5. Actualitatea harismei cuvântului

5.1.Cuvântul duhovnicesc în epoca comunicării în exces

Trăim într-o epocă în care cuvântul este prezent pretutindeni: discursuri, postări, opinii, predici, comentarii. Paradoxal însă, această abundență de comunicare nu a dus la mai multă luminare sau liniște lăuntrică. Dimpotrivă, asistăm la o inflație de cuvânt și o secetă de sens. Mulți vorbesc, dar puțini zidesc. Mulți predică, dar puțini rodesc.

În acest context, harisma cuvântului se arată cu atât mai prețioasă și mai rară. Este nevoie astăzi, poate mai mult ca oricând, de cuvinte care nu doar informează, ci transformă, nu doar umplu mintea, ci trezesc inima. Într-un climat de zgomot continuu, cuvântul cu putere este cel născut din tăcere și smerenie.

Sfântul Paisie Aghioritul spunea cu realism: „Astăzi oamenii nu mai au nevoie de multe cuvinte, ci de puține, dar care să fie pline de har și viață”[17]. El însuși evita predicile lungi și scrise, dar când vorbea, cuvintele sale rămâneau întipărite în suflet, pentru că erau rostite cu rugăciune și cu durere pentru lume.

5.2.Modele contemporane ale cuvântului cu putere

Chiar și în vremurile noastre, Dumnezeu nu încetează să dăruiască Bisericii oameni care au darul cuvântului. Un exemplu viu este Părintele Arsenie Papacioc, duhovnic de la Mănăstirea Techirghiol, care, deși nu avea o formare academică teologică extensivă, rostea cuvinte care mișcau inimi și trezeau conștiințe. Spunea adesea: „Cuvântul trebuie să aibă duh, să ardă, să trezească. Dacă nu schimbă nimic în om, e mai bine să taci”[18].

Alt exemplu este Părintele Sofian Boghiu, care, în predicile sale simple, dar pătrunse de blândețe și lumină, reușea să transmită adevăruri adânci ale credinței. El mărturisea: „Un cuvânt rostit după Liturghie, în starea aceea de har, face mai mult decât o mie de cuvinte din cărți”[19].

În Biserica Ortodoxă rusă, Sfântul Luca al Crimeei, arhiepiscop și chirurg, a fost un om al științei, dar și un predicator inspirat. Predicile sale, rostite în anii prigoanei comuniste, nu erau filozofice, ci pline de curaj, de mărturisire și de lumină. Ele erau ascultate cu lacrimi chiar și de cei care nu aveau credință[20]. Acești oameni nu au avut succes pentru că vorbeau frumos, ci pentru că viața lor era unită cu cuvântul lor. Iar asta este esența harismei: cuvântul rostit devine o prelungire a vieții întru Hristos.

5.3.Cum se cultivă această harismă astăzi?

Harisma cuvântului nu este un privilegiu al Părinților din pustie sau al marilor duhovnici ai secolului XX. Ea este posibilă și necesară și astăzi, în orice context duhovnicesc: într-o familie, într-o parohie, într-o clasă de catehеză sau într-o conversație de taină. Dar pentru a rosti un cuvânt cu putere, este nevoie de trei condiții esențiale:

a. Rugăciunea – numai omul care vorbește cu Dumnezeu va putea vorbi și despre Dumnezeu cu har.
b. Curăția vieții – fără o minimă luptă cu patimile, cuvântul riscă să devină teorie seacă.
c. Ascultarea – cel care vrea să rostească un cuvânt cu putere trebuie să știe mai întâi să asculte: de Dumnezeu, de oameni, de tăcerea inimii Părintele Rafail Noica afirma că „nu putem da cuvânt de folos dacă nu ne-am învățat să tăcem în fața lui Dumnezeu. Cuvântul e rodul tăcerii fecunde”[21]. Așadar, și în viața noastră de zi cu zi, suntem chemați să rostim cuvinte care nu rănesc, nu judecă, nu umilesc, ci care încurajează, zidesc, trezesc. Iar pentru aceasta, nu avem nevoie de diplome, ci de inimă smerită și de dorință sinceră de a-L face prezent pe Hristos în cuvântul nostru.

6. Concluzie – Cuvântul ca foc: între dar și responsabilitate

„Nu ardeau oare inimile noastre în noi, când ne vorbea pe cale și ne tâlcuia Scripturile?” (Lc 24,32). Aceste cuvinte ale ucenicilor din Emaus nu evocă o metaforă, ci o realitate duhovnicească: cuvântul lui Hristos arde, luminează, naște viață. Cuvântul creștin, cuvântul rostit în Duh și adevăr, nu este decorativ. Nu este un moft cultural, nici o opțiune stilistică în discursul public. Este sabie și balsam, judecată și mângâiere, foc și rouă, în funcție de inima celui care îl rostește și de cel ce îl primește. Este harismă, dar și judecată asupra noastră, dacă îl folosim fără inimă, fără viață, fără rugăciune.

Cuvintele mântuiesc sau osândesc. Dacă tăcem când ar trebui să vorbim – păcătuim. Dacă vorbim fără să ne fi curățit gura și inima – rănim. Dacă vorbim de dragul vorbirii – risipim darul. Cuvântul gol este o trădare a Logosului.

Astăzi, Biserica nu duce lipsă de vorbitori. Duce lipsă de bătrâni care să tacă și apoi să rostească un singur cuvânt care frânge inima. Avem cărți, podcasturi, bloguri, predici – dar uneori lipsesc acei cuvântători în rugăciune, cei care, precum avva Antonie, rosteau din plinătatea inimii lor și scuturau iadul, fără să ridice tonul.

Este vremea ca fiecare creștin – preot, mirean, monah – să se întrebe: cu ce fel de cuvinte hrănesc lumea? Dau viață sau sporesc zgomotul? Semăn lumină sau doar informație? Vindec sau doar conving?

Cuvântul creștin trebuie să fie ca rugul lui Moise: să ardă, dar să nu mistuie în van; să lumineze, dar să nu orbească. Cuvântul duhovnicesc este icoană a Logosului, iar cel care îl rostește devine, în chip smerit, gura lui Dumnezeu pentru aproapele. A fi dăruit cu harisma cuvântului înseamnă a deveni, clipă de clipă, slujitor al focului. Și nu te joci cu focul lui Dumnezeu fără să arzi mai întâi tu însuți.

GUARDIAN SAINT FEASTS: HISTORICAL, LITURGICAL, AND PASTORAL PERSPECTIVES

Ştefan-Iulian Apopei
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: The study The Feast Day – A Historical and Liturgical Event explores the theological, historical and missionary significance of the feast in the Romanian Orthodox tradition. The study analyzes the origins of the term "feast", originating from the Slavonic „hramu", and its development as an expression of the sanctification of space and time through the grace of the Holy Spirit. Through an interdisciplinary approach – liturgical, symbolic and pastoral-missionary – we wish to emphasize the role of the feast as a moment of communion, of reaffirmation of ecclesial identity and consolidation of community life. The theological dimensions are examined, the relationship between the Eucharistic sacrifice and the sacrifice of the martyrs, spiritual, the sanctification of time and place, and pastoral, the missionary and community impact of feasts and pilgrimages. In the Romanian context, feasts are analyzed as living forms of confession of faith and preservation of spiritual and national unity, while also being expressions of the continuity of Christ's saving work in the world.

Keywords*: church patron saint; pilgrimage; liturgy; holy place*

1. Etimologie, dezvoltare și semnificații teologice

Termenul „hram" prezintă mai multe valențe, atât religioase, cât și culturale sau sociale. Hramul bisericii, reprezintă ocrotitorul lăcașului de cult, precum un înger păzitor care supraveghează asupra comunității credincioșilor. În tradiția creștin-ortodoxă, icoana hramului bisericii este așezată în catapeteasmă, în rândul principal, lângă de icoanele Mântuitorului Iisus Hristos și ale Maicii Domnului[1]. Sărbătorirea hramului devine, pentru comunitate, un prilej de solemnitate liturgică, adunând credincioșii în rugăciune, întărind, astfel, comuniunea din Biserica. În ziua hramului, icoana reprezentativă este așezată spre închinare pe iconostasul mic[2]. „Hram (vechiul slv. hramu = patron) – hramul bisericii sau serbarea patronului bisericii (ocrotitorul bisericii). Hram poate fi un sfânt, un eveniment din Istoria Bisericii (ex. Pogorârea Sf. Duh, Înălțarea Sfintei Cruci, Bunavestire, Sf. Dumitru etc.)..."[3]. Etimologic, cuvântul hram provine din slavonescul hramu, care se traduce prin „casă", făcând referire la casa lui Dumnezeu, împreună cu sfinții Săi. Această semnificație face referire la tradiția Vechiului Testament, unde patriarhul Iacov, după viziunea sa în care a văzut scara ce unea cerul cu pământul, a denumit locul sfânt Betel, adică „Casa lui Dumnezeu"[4]. Mai târziu, Mântuitorul Hristos întărește caracterul sacru al lăcașului de cult, poruncind: „Casa aceasta este casa Tatălui Meu, casă de rugăciune" (Luca 19, 46). Așadar, Biserica nu este doar un spațiu topografic, ci devine un loc sfânt, unde harul lui Duhului Sfânt se revarsă asupra omului, iar acesta, prin rugăciune sinergică, poate intra în comuniune cu cerul[5].

Părintele Profesor Nicolae D. Necula susține că biserica nouă primește hramul din momentul sfințirii locului unde urmează a fi ridicată, acest act simbolic marcând predestinarea sa fiind „Casă a lui Dumnezeu" și lăcaș de cult. „În timpul slujbei prin care o biserică nou construită este sfințită pe Sfântul Altar, în toate cele patru colțuri sunt așezate icoanele celor patru Evangheliști. Acest fapt arată, potrivit Sfântului Simeon din Tesalonic, că Biserica este adunată din cele patru margini ale lumii și a fost zidită prin propovăduirea Bunei Vestiri”[6].

Odată cu construirea bisericii, spațiul sfânt este delimitat de cel profan, împlinind funcțiile slujirii cultice și împlinirii lucrării sacerdotale[7]. Actul de consacrare tranfigurează atât locul, cât ci și comunitatea, chemând-o la o viață în Dumnezeu prin răspuns sinergic la chemarea sa, rugăciune, dobândirea harului prin Sfintele Taine și participarea la cultul divin zilnic.

În Biserica Primară, odată cu libertatea creștinismului acordată de Sf. Constantin cel Mare, creștinii au ridicat altare pentru Cuminecare pe mormintele mucenicilor pentru a le păstra vie amintirea.

Așadar, până astăzi, Sfânta Liturghie, centrul și nucleul vieții creștine, se săvârșește pe Sfântul Prestol sau Altar[9]. Spațiul liturgic consacrat este definit prin prezența Sfântului Antimis[10] care este alcătuit dint-un material sfințit, și conține în interior sfinte moaște de martir[11], acesta fiind acoperit de o pânză specială numită iliton[12]. Această rânduială liturgică pune în evidență unitatea adâncă dintre jertfa euharistică și cea a mucenicilor, primii mărturisitori ai credinței creștine, ale căror suferințe și biruințe au stat la temelia Bisericii lui Hristos. În gândirea teologică ortodoxă, arta sacră și arhitectura eclesială nu sunt simple expresii estetice, ci adevărate forme de teologie vizuală, ce contribuie la înțelegerea și trăirea misterului Bisericii. Părintele profesor Viorel Sava insistă asupra legăturii profunde dintre spațiul sacru, liturghie și experiența Bisericii ca anticipare a Împărăției lui Dumnezeu. În studiul său, sfinția sa arată că Altarul și Antimisul depășesc funcția lor ritualică, devenind semne vizibile ale comuniunii ecleziale și ale prezenței continue a Împărăției, atât în interiorul Bisericii, cât și dincolo de zidurile ei. Prin aceste simboluri, sfințirea și prezența lui Dumnezeu se fac simțite în viața credincioșilor, iar prin Euharistie, comunitatea creștină devine locul real al întâlnirii omului cu divinitatea. În continuare, părintele profesor Viorel Sava evidențiază legătura organică dintre artă, spiritualitate și cult, arătând că acestea constituie împreună structura vie a trăirii liturgice ortodoxe.

„The Altar confers the quality of a Church, because it synthesises what Church is in its whole: the image of the Kingdom of God. Another proof is the Antimension, (‘instead of the table’), on which the faces of Saint Evangelists also appear in the four corners, while the rest of the saint apostles surround the icon representing the burial of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Its content makes of the Antimension a ‘portable’ church. In this church the sacrament of Eucharist is celebrated permanently on the the Antimension that remains on the Altar table. When, due to various reasons, the Eucharist is celebrated outside the Church, it cannot be celebrated without the Antimension. In other words, even when we celebrate Liturgy outside the Church, due to the Antimension we can still celebrate it in the church, because church art and architecture are not added elements and exterior to the liturgical life in the Orthodox Church, but they are constitutive parts and together with it, is closely connected with the teaching of faith and its expressions"[13].

[10] „La mijlocul Antimisului este imprimată scena coborârii de pe cruce și punerii în mormânt a trupului Mântuitorului. În colțuri sunt pictate chipurile celor patru evangheliști. În partea de jos se află inscripția cu mențiunea Hramului Bisericii pentru care este dat Antimisul, data și semnătura ierarhului care l-a dat. În spatele Antimisului, într-un mic buzunăraș, este cusută o părticică din moaștele unui sfânt mucenic”. Ierom. Dr. Petru Pruteanu, Arheologia Liturgică..., p. 33.

[12] „După Isidor Pelusiotul († 636), ilitonul aminteşte năframa cu care a fost înfăşurat capul Mântuitorului, când a fost pus in mormânt şi pe care, după înviere, Apostolii au văzut-o învăluită într-un loc deosebit» (Ioan 20, 7), iar antimisul simbolizează giulgiul cu care a fost acoperit tot atunci trupul Domnului 400, Intrucât însă întrebuințarea antimisului este aceeași ca și a Sfintei Mese, s-ar putea spune că el închipuie mai degrabă mormântul Mântuitorului, mai cu seamă in anumite momente ale oficiului”. Pr. Prof. Dr. Petre Vintilescu, Liturghierul Explicat, EIBMBOR, București, 1998, p. 157.

„Unitatea de credință și viața în Hristos, a celor mulți care se adună «la hram», crează conștiința interdependenței familiale, conștiința fraternității creștine, făurită prin puterea iubirii [...]"[14]. În perspectiva creștină, hramul exprimă, în conformitate cu tradiția și învățătura Sfintei Scripturi, adevărul că Biserica este locul autentic al rugăciunii și al slujirii lui Dumnezeu. Prin sfințirea ei și prin punerea sub ocrotirea unui sfânt, lăcașul devine spațiul legitim în care se poate aduce jertfa nesângeroasă a Mântuitorului Iisus Hristos, împlinind astfel menirea sa de centru al comuniunii liturgice.

Hramurile, asemenea pelerinajelor, reprezintă momente de mare încărcătură spirituală și de solemnitate aparte, care presupun o pregătire atentă pe două planuri complementare. Pe de o parte, este necesară o pregătire duhovnicească, orientată spre o trăire liturgică deplină, iar pe de altă parte, se impune o organizare practică riguroasă, menită să asigure desfășurarea armonioasă a evenimentului care să reflecte în mod autentic spiritul învățăturii creștine. În privința acestei laturi organizatorice, V. L. Beloiu subliniază: „Pregătirea (materială și spirituală) - creștinul vizualizează mental locul unde dorește să ajungă, apoi se informează. Pentru a avea folos duhovnicesc, depune un efort: post, rugăciune, spovedanie, luând și binecuvântarea preotului duhovnic"[16]. Din punct de vedere tipiconal, Jean-Claude Larchet susține: „La hramul unei biserici de parohie sau de mănăstire, se poate consuma peşte, pe langă untdelemn şi vin, chiar şi atunci cand este vorba despre o zi de post aspru"[17]. Prin urmare, se poate afirma că sărbătoarea hramului presupune o dublă pregătire: una materială, care privește aspectele exterioare și organizatorice, și una duhovnicească, menită să pregătească sufletul pentru întâlnirea cu harul lui Dumnezeu. Astfel, bucuria hramului răspunde deopotrivă nevoilor Martei, cele legate de slujire și osteneală, și dorului Mariei, cel al comuniunii și al ascultării cuvântului divin.

2. Caracterul liturgic al hramului.

Din perspectivă spiritual-liturgică, hramul, în înțelegerea ortodoxă, se revelează ca o expresie a sfințirii timpului și a locului prin lucrarea harului dumnezeiesc. În el se manifestă prezența Duhului Sfânt, care unește cerul și pământul într-o comuniune de iubire și lumină, făcând din sărbătoare un moment de întâlnire reală între Dumnezeu și oameni, în spațiul sfințit al Bisericii.

„Familiaritatea aceasta spirituală face ca toate locaşurile noastre de închinare să fie puse sub ocrotirea puterii cereşti: bisericile au un nume care se regăseşte în calendar, locul sfinţit îşi găseşte proiecţia în timpul sfinţit şi totodată în Împărăţia cerurilor. Sunt biserici închinate Sfintei Treimi, uneia dintre persoanele treimice sau unei epifanii, unui eveniment în care Dumnezeu se descoperă oamenilor în chip văzut. Persoana Mântuitorului Hristos şi opera de mântuire a lumii sunt prezente în numele multor locaşuri de cult. De asemenea, există biserici care poartă nume de îngeri, de apostoli sau de sfinţi din alte cete care s-au învrednicit de cununa sfinţeniei. Astfel, legătura aceasta spirituală subliniază în mod fericit comuniunea raţională dintre cer şi pământ, dintre Biserica triumfătoare şi Biserica luptătoare"[18].

Legătura tainică dintre cer și pământ se oglindește în alegerea sfinților ocrotitori ai bisericilor, fiecare lăcaș de cult devenind loc al harului și al comuniunii cu Împărăția cerească. Prin sărbătoarea hramului, spațiul sfințit se unește cu timpul sfințit, chemând pe credincioși să trăiască în lumina și bucuria prezenței lui Dumnezeu. Denumirile bisericilor, inspirate din Persoanele Sfintei Treimi, din marile Praznice sau din viețile sfinților, mărturisesc continuitatea lucrării mântuitoare a lui Hristos în lume. Astfel, fiecare biserică se înfățișează ca o icoană vie a împreună-lucrării omului cu Dumnezeu, un loc în care cerul se deschide spre pământ, iar timpul se umple de veșnicie. „Turla centrală este rezumat de Altar (Sfânta Sfintelor), locul unde se întâlnesc Cerul și Pământul și granița de unde începe veșnicia, datorită modului în care este realizat și ornamentat. […] Cerul și Pământul se întâlnesc întotdeauna în Sfântul Altar, în cadrul Sfintei Liturghii”[19]. Această formă de „apropiere duhovnicească” face din biserici adevărate centre de sfințire și de comuniune, în care credincioșii se împărtășesc din lucrarea harului dumnezeiesc și sunt îndrumați pe drumul sfințeniei, având drept modele pe sfinții ocrotitori. Hramul nu se reduce la o simplă celebrare anuală, ci devine un permanent îndemn la trăirea în duh și la statornicie în credință, sub binecuvântarea celor care au dobândit cununa vieții veșnice.

În contextul ortodoxiei, hramul are o dimensiune liturgică universală, dar în spațiul românesc el capătă trăsături proprii, modelate de tradiția, cultura și sensibilitatea spirituală a poporului[20]. În provinciile țării noastre, conceptul de hram s-a dezvoltat diferit[21]. Integrarea hramului în tradițiile locale și în conștiința comunitară a generat o varietate de sensuri și moduri de raportare la sărbătoarea ocrotitorului unei biserici, a unui sat sau a unei mănăstiri. În încercarea de a evidenția specificul liturgic al hramului în spațiul moldav, părintele Nicolae Dascălu subliniază: „Participarea la sărbătoarea de hram în Moldova este pentru orice pelerin o formă de împărtășire a bucuriei în Biserică, iar pentru călătorul venit de departe înseamnă șansa de a experimenta modul de a fi în această lume a unui popor iubitor”[22].

Un alt element fundamental legat de înțelesul hramului este rânduiala sfintei hirotonii întru preot. În momentul în care un candidat este chemat la această treaptă a slujirii, el este hirotonit pe seama unei biserici, fiind menționate hramul acesteia, localitatea și protopopiatul de care aparține[26]. Prin acest act sacramental, noul slujitor al altarului își asumă, în mod solemn, responsabilitatea de a sluji lui Dumnezeu, de a rămâne în ascultare față de ierarhul său și de a păstori cu dragoste comunitatea

Subsemnatul, diacon (N) chemat la hirotonia întru preot, pe seama parohiei……judeţul…… cu hramul……. din localitatea…….. Protopopiatul (Protoieria)…… mărturisesc înaintea lui Dumnezeu şi a Chiriarhului meu, Înaltpreasfinţitul Părinte Teofan, Arhiepiscopul laşilor şi Mitropolitul Moldovei şi Bucovinei, că voi împlini cu râvnă tot ceea ce este spre mântuirea credincioşilor încredinţaţi mie spre păstorire. În toată viaţa mea mă voi călăuzi după învăţăturile Sfintei Evanghelii, ale Sfinţilor Apostoli, după Sfintele Canoane şi învăţăturile Sfinţilor Părinţi ai Bisericii Ortodoxe.

Mă voi strădui să împlinesc în viaţa şi activitatea mea îndemnul Sfântului Apostol Pavel, care cere ca preotul: să fie fără de prihană, bărbat al unei singure femei, veghetor, înţelept, cuviincios, iubitor de străini, destoinic să înveţe pe alţii; nebeţiv, nedeprins să bată, neagonisitor de câştig urât, ci blând, paşnic, neiubitor de argint, bine chivernisind casa lui, având copii ascultători, cu toată bună-cuviinţa; căci dacă nu ştie cineva să-şi rânduiască propria lui casă, cum va purta grijă de Biserica lui Dumnezeu? (1 Timotei 3, 2-5). Voi purta totdeauna cu demnitate ţinuta preoţească şi voi locui împreună cu familia mea în parohia încredinţată mie spre păstorire, păstrând şi sporind toate bunurile parohiel. Nu mă voi ocupa cu activităţi contrare chemării preoţeşti şi nu mă voi face părtaş la adunări şi lucrări potrivnice Bisericii. Prin întreaga mea slujire învăţătorească, sfinţitoare şi pastorală, precum şi prin armonia vieţii de familie, mă voi strădui să apăr Sfânta Biserică, păzind-o de defăimare şi de dezbinare, stând permanent în ascultare faţă de Chiriarhul meu şi în comuniune cu întreaga Biserică Ortodoxă.

Mărturisesc, de asemenea, că voi fi întru toate supus şi fidel Chiriarhului meu şi succesorilor săi în scaunul chiriarhal. Voi respecta Statutul pentru organizarea şi funcţionarea Bisericii Ortodoxe Române, celelalte legiuiri bisericeşti, hotărârile Sfântului Sinod al Bisericii Ortodoxe Române, ale organismelor eparhiale deliberative şi executive (precum şi Statutul eparhiei - la eparhiile din afara graniţelor ţării).

În caz contrar, voi suporta consecinţele canonice, statutare şi regulamentare bisericeşti ce decurg din nerespectarea în viaţa şi activitatea mea a prevederilor acestei Mărturisiri.

Aşa să-mi ajute Dumnezeu!

Ziua, luna, anul, Semnătura candidatului la hirotonie>>"[27].

3. Aspecte misioane ale hramului.

Dimensiunea misionară a hramurilor constituie un aspect fundamental al acestor evenimente religioase, care merită o atenție mai amplă decât cea acordată până în prezent. Mărturisirea deplină a lui Dumnezeu, atât în familie, cât și în cadrul comunității, reprezintă nucleul acestei dimensiuni misionare. Totodată, trebuie remarcat faptul că funcția misionară a hramului este strâns legată de celelalte componente ale sale – teologică, morală și liturgică – care, împreună, îi oferă sensul deplin și echilibrul necesar în viața Bisericii.

În studiul său, „Hramurile și pelerinajele: evenimente liturgice și misionare", părintele Nicolae Preda subliniază faptul că hramurile constituie un instrument pastoral-misionar valoros pentru preotul contemporan, contribuind la întărirea unității parohiale și la dinamizarea vieții comunitare. Fie că este vorba despre implicarea adulților în pregătirea materială și duhovnicească, fie despre participarea tinerilor voluntari, sărbătoarea hramului devine un prilej de comuniune și de coeziune în jurul preotului și al altarului[28].

În spiritualitatea românească, hramurile și pelerinajele au avut un rol misionar deosebit, contribuind decisiv la păstrarea unității de credință și la afirmarea identității naționale. Aceste momente de comuniune religioasă nu doar că au întărit conștiința ortodoxă, ci au devenit și repere de solidaritate morală și spirituală între românii din Transilvania, Țara Românească și Moldova. Prin continuitatea lor, hramurile și pelerinajele au susținut coeziunea comunitară și au alimentat sentimentul apartenenței la o credință și o tradiție comună. Despre aceste roade duhovnicești și misionare ale hramului amintea, cu aproape o jumătate de secol în urmă, protosinghelul R. Simion:„Pelerinajele considerabile, care se făceau cu ocazia hramului la mănăstirile din Transilvania, Țara Românească și Moldova, au fost izvoare de credință și înviorare a elanului religios-moral al credincioșilor, dar și de întărire și luminare a idealului național, ocazii de strîngere a legăturilor de frățietate dintre toți românii[29]. Căci cu prilejul acestor întâlniri creștinești creștea dragostea de libertate și unitate a tuturor românilor într-o singură Românie Mare. La aceste ocazii, intelectualii se revedeau și – în mod tacit – luau hotărâri mari în interesul și binele nostru național”[30].

În cele din urmă, momentul care adună în unitate întreaga comunitate a credincioșilor și în care sensul pelerinajului se contopește pe deplin cu semnificația hramului este Praznicul Învierii Domnului — sărbătoarea biruinței vieții asupra morții și a comuniunii desăvârșite dintre Dumnezeu și oameni. Deși, din diferite motive – unele obiective, altele subiective – nu toți credincioșii pot lua parte la hramurile bisericilor lor sau la pelerinaje de-a lungul vieții, totuși participarea la Taina Învierii Domnului rămâne o chemare și o datorie fundamentală pentru fiecare creștin, fiind expresia supremă a comuniunii cu Hristos Cel Răstignit și Înviat[31]. Această participare constituie o chemare neîntreruptă la împărtășirea din taina Pătimirii, Morții și Învierii Domnului nostru Iisus Hristos. În această perspectivă, Preafericitul Părinte Patriarh Daniel subliniază:

„În ultimul pelerinaj al lui Iisus la Ierusalim se descoperă sensul cel mai sacru al pelerinajului. Intrarea Sa triumfală în Ierusalimul pământesc, unde avea să fie răstignit, devine prefigurare sau anticipare a intrării Sale în Ierusalimul ceresc. În Pelerinul-răstignit în Ierusalim, pelerinajul se transformă în Paște (In 10, 17-18; 1 Co 5, 7), călătoria pământească se împlinește în trecere sau mutație cerească: «Am ieşit de la Tatăl şi am venit în lume; iarăşi las lumea şi Mă duc la Tatăl» (In 16, 28) [...]. Pelerinul respins dintre oameni în Ierusalim prin răstignire revine între ei prin Înviere. Dar Iisus-Pelerinul înviat nu mai merge spre templul de zid al Ierusalimului pământesc, ci din Ierusalimul ceresc al învierii călătorește ca un necunoscut spre Emaus, pentru a face din fiecare pelerin o gazdă, un primitor de Dumnezeu [...]”[32].

THE TERM "HEN" AND ITS THEOLOGICAL INTERPRETATION WITHIN THE CONTEXT OF THE OLD TESTAMENT

Dragoș-Alin Fârtăeș
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: The Old Testament writings utilise complex terminology when addressing the theology of grace in the era preceding the incarnation of Christ. From a linguistic perspective, the Hebrew vocabulary contains two terms for the concept of "grace": "hen" and "hesed". The noun "hen" is found in the Old Testament over 60 times, most commonly used in the construction: "to find favour in someone's eyes". The term "hen" is employed to denote the action of a superior, whether divine or human, towards an inferior. "Hen" is employed to convey the notion of undeserved favour.

Keywords: grace; mercy; favour; gift; Old Testament

Introducere

Problema harului divin a ridicat mereu dificultăți teologilor, fiind deseori adusă în discuție încă din primul mileniu creștin[1]. Aceasta a stârnit controverse și în timpul celui de-al doilea mileniu, iar aici amintim doar două momente: disputa dintre Sfântul Grigorie Palama și Varlaam de Calabria, respectiv, învățătura despre Sola gratia formulată în timpul Reformei protestante în secolul al XVI-lea[2].

Pentru a înțelege acest aspect teologic fundamental și modul cum s-a dezvoltat ulterior în teologia creștină, trebuie început prin a ne raporta la textul revelat al Sfintei Scripturi.

Din punct de vedere biblic, harul divin ocupă un loc central în teologia Noului Testament, datorită Sfântului Apostol Pavel, care dezvoltă în Epistolele sale o „teologie a harului". Din acest punct de vedere, scrierile Noului Testament se bucură de întâietate, observându-se o lăsare în „umbră" a că Vechiului Testament în ceea ce privește învățătura despre har cuprinsă în Sfânta Scriptură. Nu poate fi pusă la îndoială și nici negată afirmația ioanină conform căreia „harul și adevărul" au venit în lume prin Iisus Hristos (In 1:17), însă nu se poate afirma despre întreaga istorie a Vechiului Testament că este lipsită de harul lui Dumnezeu, acesta manifestându-se în principal prin grija lui Dumnezeu față de poporul Israel.

Termenul „har" îl regăsim în traducerea Sinodală a Bibliei începând cu textul din cartea Facerii 6:8 unde aghiograful afirmă despre Noe că „a aflat har înaintea Domnului Dumnezeu". De asemenea, tot în acest capitol textul biblic vorbește despre Duhul lui Dumnezeu care este prezent în om sub chipul harului (Fc. 6:3).

A doua carte a Pentateuhului prezintă un episod foarte important cu privire la prezența harului: dialogul dintre Moise și Yahweh (Ieș. 33), care a avut loc în urma apostaziei poporului Israel atunci când s-a închinat vițelului de aur (Ieș. 32). Moise Îi cere lui Dumnezeu să meargă împreună cu Israel în călătoria lor spre ținutul Canaan, iar acest lucru se întâmplă deoarece, Moise a aflat bunăvoință sau milă înaintea lui Dumnezeu.

Așadar, termenii bunăvoință, milă sau har în Vechiul Testament pot fi înțeleși ca sinonime. De asemenea, harul lui Dumnezeu se manifestă și prin loialitate, credincioșie sau dragostea statornică, adică prin legământul încheiat între Dumnezeu și oameni[3]. Un alt criteriu prin care poate fi identificat harul în epoca veterotestamentară este providența lui Yahweh față de poporul Său. Dumnezeu nu alege acest popor ca dovadă a neprihănirii lui, ci prin voința Sa proprie și liberă:

„Şi Domnul v-a primit, nu pentru că sunteţi mai mulţi la număr decât toate popoarele - căci sunteţi mai puţini la număr decât toate popoarele, - Ci pentru că vă iubeşte Domnul; şi ca să Îşi ţină jurământul pe care 1-a făcut părinţilor voştri, v-a scos Domnul cu mână tare şi cu braţ înalt şi v-a scăpat din casa robiei şi din mâna lui Faraon, regele Egiptului." (Dt. 7:7-8)[4].

Observăm cum Vechiul Testament „abundă" în exemple de har din partea lui Yahweh, mila, dragostea statornică și providența fiind atribute divine. De asemenea, întreaga perioadă anterioară întrupării lui Hristos reprezintă o perioadă de căutare a umanității a comuniuni harice cu Dumnezeu. Dacă Adam înainte vorbea cu Dumnezeu în mod direct, fără intermediari, după căderea în păcatul neascultării, dialogul cu Dumnezeu s-a realizat prin jertfe, iar mai târziu prin profeți trimiși în numele Lui pentru a călăuzi poporul și pentru a supraveghea respectarea Legii lui Moise (Evr.1:1). Comuniunea deplină s-a realizat prin Hristos datorită jertfei Sale soteriologice. Prin El, întreaga umanitate a reintrat în comuniune cu Dumnezeu primind harul în mod deplin (In. 1:14). Astfel, Vechiul Testament are în vedere o teologie harică „nedeplină", care are ca scop călăuzirea oamenilor spre Hristos și restabilirea comuniunii depline[5].

Mila lui Yahweh ca manifestăre harică în Vechiul Testament

Scrierile Vechiului Testament dispun de o terminologie complexă când abordează teologia harului în epoca premergătoare întrupării Mântuitorului Hristos. Din punct de vedere lingvistic, vocabularul ebraic are doi termeni pentru înțelesul cuvântului har: hen și hesed[6].

Hen – favoare, milă și/sau har divin

Termenul hen este folosit cu referire la acțiunea unui superior, fie el divin sau uman, față de un inferior. Hen transmite ideea de favoare nemeritată. Varianta Autorizată a Bibliei King James alege să traducă termenul hen prin „har" de 38 de ori și prin „favoare" în 26 din cazuri[7].

Înțelesul primar al rădăcinii hnn este „har", care este prima dintre cele două traduceri pentru substantivul înrudit hen. Al doilea sens al substantivului ebraic hen este cel de „favoare". Aceleași înțelesuri sunt regăsite și în cuvântul grec charis, folosit adesea pentru a-l traduce pe hen în LXX. Ambele sensuri ale lui charis pot fi văzute în Sir. 40:17, 22[8].

Substantivul hen este regăsit în Vechiul Testament de peste 60 de ori, cel mai frecvent folosit în construcția: „a afla har în ochii cuiva" (eng. „find favor in someone's eyes"). Oamenii din Antichitate tindeau să măsoare bunăvoința (hen) altei persoane, uitându-se în ochii ei. Noi, astăzi, ne uităm în schimb la expresia feței, la zâmbetul persoanei. Expresia luminoasă a unei fețe care oferă bunăvoință (hen), se poate reflecta pe fața celui care beneficiază de această favoare[9]. Exemple scripturistice importante în acest sens sunt consemnate în mai multe cărți din Vechiul Testament:

În primul rând, în episodul împăcării dintre Iacov și Isav, Iacov dorește să câștige bunăvoința (harul) în fața fratelui său: „Ca să afle robul tău bunăvoință înaintea domnului meu" (Fc. 33:8), „De am aflat bunăvoință înaintea ta, primește darurile din mâinile mele, căci, când am văzut fața ta, parcă aș fi văzut fața lui Dumnezeu, așa de binevoitor mi-ai fost" (Fc. 33:10), „Mi-ajunge mie bunăvoința ce am aflat înaintea domnului meu" (Fc. 33:15).

[9] FREEDMAN, LUNDBOM, „hanan; hen; hannun; hanînâ, tehinnâ; tahanun". pp. 24-25.

Un alt episod în care o persoană află har sau se bucură de mila sau bunăvoința altei persoane este consemnat în Fc. 39:4. Iosif află trecere înaintea egipteanului Putifar punându-l stăpân peste casa sa.

De asemenea, moabiteanca Rut află trecere în fața lui Booz: „Și a căzut ea cu fața la pământ și s-a închinat până la pământ și a zis către el: <<Cu ce am dobândit eu milă înaintea ta de mă primești, cu toate că sunt străină?>>" (Rut. 2:10).

Nu în ultimul rând, cartea 1Regi 1:18, când Ana, mama proorocului Samuel, află har (bunăvoință, trecere) în ochii preotului Eli, ea pleacă cu fața veselă: „Să afle roaba ta trecere înaintea ochilor tăi! Apoi s-a dus ea în calea sa și a mâncat și fața nu-i mai era tristă ca mai înainte"[10]. Episoadele evidențiate anterior au în vedere mila și bunăvoința ca atribute umane. Textul biblic din Fc. 33:10 aduce în discuție „fața lui Dumnezeu". Iacov află har înaintea lui Isav, iar acest lucru ne trimite să credem că, mila umană pe care o arată o persoană față de semenul său este „înrudită", sau se aseamănă, cu mila sau bunăvoința divină. Pasaje reprezentative care vorbesc despre mila lui Yahweh sunt Ieș. 34:29-35, (fața lui Moise strălucește după întâlnirea cu Yahweh, acest lucru sugerând bunăvoința lui Dumnezeu față de slujitorul său) și Ier. 31:2[11].

Deducem din exemplele anterioare că întrebuințarea termenului hen în contextul milei omenești are o importanță deosebită, desemnând un atribut dumnezeiesc. Omul învață să fie milostiv având-l exemplu principal pe Dumnezeu, deoarece a fost creat după chipul Său, iar prin practicarea acestei virtuți se poate ridica la asemănarea cu El (Fac. 1:26).

De asemenea, literatura sapiențială veterotestamentară prezintă importanța virtuții milei, prin numeroase exemple. Psalmii îl prezintă pe omul milostiv ca fiind în același timp și drept (Ps. 36:21). Iov cere prietenilor săi să fie binevoitori față de el, deoarece Dumnezeu Și-a abătut mânia Sa peste el. Proverbele lui Solomon afirmă referitor la persoane că milostenia îi aduce bucurie celui care oferă. Aceste afirmații au fost preluate în Noul Testament de către Mântuitorul Hristos și Sfântul Apostol Pavel (Mt. 5:7, F.A. 20:35). Când o persoană este binevoitoare sau milostivă față de semeni, ea îi aduce lui Dumnezeu cinste (Pild. 14:31), iar când avem milă de săraci, noi Îi împrumutăm Domnului și El ne va răsplăti fapta (Pild. 19:17; Mt. 25:40,45).

Nu în ultimul rând, hen poate fi întrebuințat și în afara contextelor strict teologice. În acest sens, termenul are rolul de a scoate în evidență o calitate, care poate fi posedată atât de o persoană, cât și de un animal sau alt obiect neînsuflețit. Astfel, în cuprinsul Vechiul Testament putem identifica și remarca următoarele exemple: „o piatră prețioasă" (Pild. 1:9; 17:8), „frumusețea unui animal" (Pild. 5:19), armonia sau frumusețea unui discurs (Ps. 44:2)[12].

Vechiul Testament prezintă tema bunăvoinței sau a harului din două puncte de vedere: relația dintre Persoana divină și persoanele umane, respectiv relațiile interumane.

Primul om amintit de Sfânta Scriptură care „a aflat har înaintea lui Dumnezeu" este Noe. Referatul biblic amintește că era „drept și neprihănit între oamenii timpului" (Fc. 6:8-9). Ebraicul maṭa`hen apare pentru prima oară în Sfânta Scriptură având un bogat simbolism din punct de vedere teologic, neavând un echivalent perfect în altă limbă, fapt pentru care, majoritatea traducerilor redau expresia prin „aflase trecere, har, bunăvoință", ceea ce implică o stare morală deosebită, un merit[13]. În versetul imediat următor se afirmă despre Noe că era un om drept. Dreptatea acestuia reiese din cinstirea lui Dumnezeu prin aducerea de jertfe, iar nu din respectarea unei Legi[14]. Noe reprezintă prin comportamentul său, o rază de lumină care strălucește peisajul mohorât al umanității acelor timpuri, iar acest fapt Îl determină pe Dumnezeu să îl cruțe de judecata ce avea să vină[15].

În afară de Noe, regele David se bucură de asemenea de bunăvoința lui Yahweh. Bunăvoința divină presupune o deplină libertate de manifestare și este vizibilă doar în situații limită sau de rugămintea clară a persoanei care dorește să se bucure de ocrotirea acesteia[16].

Cartea 2 Regi ne prezintă două episoade în care regele David Îl imploră pe Dumnezeu să-i facă o favoare. În ambele cazuri Dumnezeu alege însă să îi răspundă diferit.
În primul caz, Yahweh rămâne nemișcat la cererea lui David de a-i însănătoși copilul (2 Rg. 12:22).
În a doua situație, Dumnezeu i-a arătat bunăvoință regelui Israelului de a se întoarce în Ierusalim după ce a fost alungat de Abesalom (2 Rg. 15:22)[17].
Se poate observa, astfel, că Dumnezeu nu poate fi influențat în acordarea milei Sale, după cum reiese și din dialogul cu Moise de pe Sinai (Ieș. 33:19).

Un episod important din Vechiul Testament care în vedere bunăvoința umană este cel din Facere, capitolele 32 și 33, unde este relatată istoria reconcilierii fiilor lui Isaac, Iacov și Isav. Scena înfățișează vârful învățăturii despre bunăvoința umană din Vechiul Testament[18]. Relatarea conține patru locuri unde se vorbește despre bunăvoința/harul pe care Iacov o cere fratelui său Isav (Fc. 32:5; 36:8,10,15). Din versetul 15 reiese că Iacov dorea bunăvoința fratelui său fără a obține un lucru material în schimb. El dorea să fie acceptat de Isav, întrucât acesta îi „furase" atât dreptul de întâi născut (Fc. 25:31-34) cât și binecuvântarea tatălui (Fc. 27: 27-30) și știa că acceptarea darurilor presupunea în același timp și acceptarea sa.

Sfântul Ioan Gură de Aur explicând episodul împăcării celor doi, afirmă consideră că Iacov a vrut să îi „înmoaie inima, să-l îmblânzească" pe fratele său practicând virtutea smereniei[19].

Observăm așadar, că smerenia este esențială atunci când oamenii urmăresc să primească un dar fie din partea semenilor sau chiar de la Dumnezeu. Sfântul Apostol Iacov exprimă acest fapt în Epistola sa Sobornicească: „Dumnezeu celor mândri le stă împotrivă, iar celor smeriţi le dă har" (Iacov 4:6). Evenimentul prezentat în Geneză a avut un „ecou" important pentru tradiția biblică mai târzie, făcându-se referire despre el și în scrierile profetice, când se afirmă: „a plâns şi l-a rugat să se milostivească spre el" (Os. 12:5)[20].

De asemenea, întâmplarea dintre cei doi frați a servit ca sursă de inspirație pentru Hristos atunci când a rostit parabola fiului risipitor (Lc. 15:11-32), unde se arată că fiul cel mic a aflat trecere (har) în fața tatălui[21]. Referitor la iconomia divină, relatarea din Geneză cu privire la împăcarea dintre Iacov și Isav amintește doar o singură dată de Dumnezeu, dar printr-o imagine puternică: „parcă aș fi văzut fața lui Dumnezeu, așa de binevoitor mi-ai fost" (Fc. 33:10). Iacov aseamănă gestul făcut de Isav ca și cum ar fi fost din partea lui Dumnezeu. Această imagine va fi reluată și în Ieș. 33:18-23 când Moise îi cere lui Yahweh să se reveleze în mod deplin.

Harul lui Dumnezeu – un dar comunitar

Harul divin nu a fost arătat de Dumnezeu doar anumitor persoane în mod individual, precum în cazul lui Noe sau David. Dumnezeu Își revarsă harul și asupra comunităților, cum a fost cazul poporului Israel. Yahweh este El Însuși binevoitor și milostiv, aceste calități reprezentând două dintre atributele Sale divine. Dumnezeu își revelează calitățile esențiale și caracterul, fiind înainte de toate rahum w^{e}hannun (Ieș. 33:19). Pluralul substantivul rehem (pântece, uter) face referire la sentimentele mamei față de copii. Construcția aceasta, în cazul de față, evidențiază „suferința" sau compasiunea lui Yahweh pentru copiii săi, în același mod precum o mamă experimentează alături de copil bucuriile și suferințele[22].

Punctul central al teofaniei sinaitice relatate în Ieș. 33-34 este milostivirea dumnezeiască față de păcatul idolatriei comis de Israel.

Capitolul 33 din Cartea Exodului prezintă dialogul dintre Moise și Yahweh. Profetul „negociază" cu Dumnezeu iertarea lui Israel, care a încălcat porunca de a nu cădea în idolatrie (Ieș.20:2-5). Pentru a se încredința că a aflat bunăvoință (har) în fața lui Yahweh, Moise Îi solicită, „să îi arate slava Sa" (33:18). Această rugăciune de mijlocire a lui Moise este structurată în trei părți distincte:

Prima parte a rugăciunii o constituie Ieș. 33:12-14. Moise amintește de misiunea încredințată lui de către Yahweh, amintind că Dumnezeu îi cunoaște foarte bine persoana și caracterul, dar nu putem afirma aceleași lucruri și în cazul lui Moise când aducem în discuție de Persoana divină. Versetele 15-17 prezintă situația de „criză" în care se regăsește Israel și înfățișează cererea lui Moise către Dumnezeu, ca El să însoțească poporul în „pelerinajul" său până în Canaan.

În ultima parte distingem dorința lui Moise de a vedea slava dumnezeiască, accentul mutându-se de pe misiune pe revelația divină supranaturală. Profetul consideră că descoperirea, lui Yahweh este suficientă pentru a-l încredința de succesul misiunii sale[23].

Se poate observa că primele două părți ale rugăciunii de mijlocire sunt dominate de discursul profetului. Însă ultima parte este marcată de tăcerea lui, acest fapt presupunând revelația dumnezeiască. Astfel, atunci când Dumnezeu se revelează umanului prin harul și energiile Sale, persoana umană devine conștientă cu privire la capacitățile ei în raport cu Persoana dumnezeiască[24]. În secțiunea din Ieș. 33:12-19 întâlnim termenul hen de patru ori, anume versetele 12, 13, 16 și 17, iar în versetul 19 verbul hanan.

Traducerea Sinodală a Bibliei redă primele patru cazuri prin „bunăvoință", iar versetul 19 alege să traducă hanan prin „milă" (pe cel ce va fi de miluit îl voi milui - Ieș. 33:19). Biblia Anania alege să meargă pe varianta Septuagintei și redă ebraicul hen prin charis (har). Observăm în schimb similitudini între cele două variante biblice în privința versetului 19. Ambele ediții traduc hanan prin termenul milă.

Există două aspecte repetitive în Ieș. 33:12-17 care definesc „prietenia", (Ieș. 33:11) dintre Moise și Dumnezeu: „te cunosc după nume" și „ai aflat har". Harul, mila, sau favoarea reprezintă răspunsul sincer față de o persoană aflată în nevoie, dar care, în ciuda problemei sale, nu forțează mâna celui care oferă. Relația apropiată dintre Dumnezeu și Moise reprezintă fundamentul actului de restaurare a lui Israel în urma căderii lui în păcatul idolatriei relatată în capitolul anterior.[25] Credincioșia lui Yahweh a făcut posibilă binecuvântarea poporului și a lumii prin el (v.16). Dumnezeu Și-a descoperit iubirea față de Israel când Moise a văzut slava și bunătatea Sa (Ieș. 33:18-19; 34:5-7), iertându-i pe israeliți pentru greșeala lor[26].

În teofania din Ieș. 33 se poate observa o schimbarea de atitudine a profetului față de momentul chemării sale la misiune prezentat în al treilea capitol din Ieșire. Dacă în primul caz (Ieș. 3:6), Moise refuza să privească fața lui Dumnezeu, în Ieș. 33:19-23, Yahweh refuză să Își arate fața. Ezitarea profetului de la început, se preschimbă în îndrăzneală. Moise Îi cere lui Yahweh să însoțească poporul în pelerinajul său spre Canaan[27]. El arată față de poporul Israel o atitudine excepțională, de jertfă și dragoste. Cererea sa „de a fi șters din cartea lui Yahweh" (Ieș. 32:32) pentru binele poporului este unică în toată Biblia[28]. Din acest verset putem desprinde ideea unei identificări a lui Moise cu Israel. Faptul că el nu a căzut în păcat împreună cu restul poporului a reprezentat un privilegiu și astfel, a aflat har înaintea lui Dumnezeu. Împărtășindu-se Moise de mila dumnezeiască, aceasta nu a rămas „izolată" doar la persoana sa. Mila, harul divin s-a răsfrânt și asupra poporului iar acest fapt a dus la iertarea păcatului comis. Așadar, gestul lui Yahweh s-a dorit a fi un semn care să indice iubirea și iertarea divină[29].

Versetul 19 pregătește teofania din Ieș. 34:6-7. Darurile lui Dumnezeu precum mila și compasiunea, oferite lui Israel în timpul exodului din Egipt și în Legea de pe Sinai rămân prerogativele Lui proprii. Prin alegerea lui Israel, Dumnezeu Și-a revelat mila și compasiunea asupra întregii lumi, mai ales prin întruparea lui Hristos la „plinirea vremii", după cum afirmă Sfântul Apostol Pavel (Gal. 4:4). Textul scripturistic indică faptul că bunătatea lui Yahweh nu este una abstractă, ci personală și relațională[30].

Capitolul 34 reprezintă punctul culminant al narațiunii începute în capitolul 32. Ieș. 34 narează refacerea legământului și iertarea păcatului. Revelația lui Yahweh amintită în versetele 5-7 este înfățișată ca împlinirea promisiunii față de Moise din capitolul precedent. Repetiția sintagmelor „trecând pe dinaintea" și „a rosti numele" stabilește intenția autorului. Efectul plasării teofaniei în contextul restaurării legământului schimbă atenția de pe experiența individuală a lui Moise cu divinitatea, pe ratificarea legământului lui Dumnezeu cu Israel prin mijlocitorul său[31]. Yahweh se face acum cunoscut ca Dumnezeu al milei și al dreptății și iartă poporul. De altfel, ideea iertării divine este inima acestei revelații. În contrast cu alte teofanii prezente în Sfânta Scriptură, în care cuvintele lui Dumnezeu sunt de obicei descriptive având în vedere credința oamenilor, aici Dumnezeu descrie ceea ce Scriptura înțelege ca făcând parte din ființa Lui, calitatea de a fi milostiv și iertător[32].

Așadar, afirmația despre Dumnezeul Vechiului Testament că ar fi crud și neiertător este respinsă în cea de a treia teofanie sinaitică[33]. Pe de altă parte, versetul următor amintește că Yahweh nu lasă păcatul nepedepsit. Poporul trebuie să conștientizeze gravitatea idolatriei, pentru ca pe viitor să nu se sprijine doar pe îndurarea lui Dumnezeu, ci să conștientizeze faptul că El este Dumnezeu drept[34].

Moise nu reprezintă exemplul singular care încearcă să retrezească conștiința poporului și să implore mila lui Yahweh. El reprezintă un deschizător de drumuri, rolul său fiind asumat în istoria veterotestamentară atât de conducători politici (Iosua, David, Solomon etc.), cât și de către profeții insuflați de Duhul lui Dumnezeu, care aveau misiunea să propovăduiască mesajul de îndreptare și pocăință pentru a-l feri pe Israel de îndepărtarea de Dumnezeu, care are drept consecință retragerea milei și/sau harului divin.

Concluzii

Harul reprezintă o componentă esențială a teologiei biblice veterotestamentare fiind prezent în persoana umană încă de la creație, ca dar al lui Dumnezeu. Vechiul Testament prezintă parcursul omenirii spre a recupera acest dar, pierdut începând cu păcatul adamic. Hen înțeles ca milă sau bunăvoință este prezent în relația dintre Yahweh și diverși oameni, precum Noe sau profetul Moise. De asemenea, prin manifestarea milostivirii față de persoane individuale, mila sau bunăvoința lui Dumnezeu se revarsă și asupra comunităților omenești (Fc. 6:8-9, Ieș. 33:12-17), făcând din acest dar un mijloc de refacere a comuniunii dintre om și Dumnezeu, care își va atinge apogeul în Noul Testament, prin opera mântuitoare a Fiului lui Dumnezeu Întrupat.

THE THEOLOGY OF GRACE IN THE PROLOGUE ACCORDING TO THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Dragoș-Alin Fârtăeș
PhD Student, „Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: The first eighteen verses of the Gospel according to John are recognised in specialised literature as the "prologue" or introduction. Its importance is not only due to its uniqueness compared to the rest of the Gospel writings, but also because it contains terms that characterise St John's theology: "Word" (λόγος), "fullness" (πληρώματος), "grace" (χάρις) and "truth" (ἀλήθεια). Focusing strictly on the term "grace", it is notable that it appears only four times in the Gospel, and only in the prologue (John 1:14, 16, 17). This is very little compared to Paul's writings, but these verses should not be overlooked. They demonstrate the theological depth of the role of grace in Christ and in the economy of human salvation, thus summarising the theology of grace developed by Saint Paul the Apostle in his letters.

Keywords: grace; truth; fullness; deification; law

Introducere

Evanghelia a IV-a, atribuită Sfântului Ioan Evanghelistul, ucenicul pe care Iisus îl iubea, (In. 19:26) a fost considerată de către scriitorii patristici din secolele II-III ca fiind „evanghelia spirituală" sau „evanghelia evangheliilor", întrucât reflectă o hristologie deosebită față de sinoptici, completând evangheliile anterioare, care prezentau faptele concrete realizate de Hristos în activitatea Sa pământească[1]. Critica biblică plasează scrierea evangheliei ioanine undeva spre sfârșitul primului secol (anii 90-95) evidențiindu-i caracterul teologic profund, prezentându-L pe Hristos „luminos, biruitor, optimist"[2], iar acest lucru îl remarcăm încă din primele versete ale primului capitol.

Primele optsprezece versete ale evangheliei sunt recunoscute în literatura de specialitate ca fiind „prologul" sau introducerea evangheliei. Deosebirea față de sinoptici se vede încă de la început. Dacă Matei și Luca vorbesc despre nașterea lui Iisus din Fecioara Maria, iar Marcu omite cu totul acest subiect, Ioan își începe relatarea cu nașterea din veci a Fiului din Tatăl (In. 1:1, 14).

Importanța prologului nu se rezumă doar la unicitatea sa față de restul scrierilor evanghelice, ci și datorită faptului că în el se regăsesc anumiți termeni care marchează teologia Sfântului Ioan: Cuvânt (λόγος), plinătate (πληρώματος) har (χάρις), adevăr (ἀληθείας). Referindu-ne strict la cuvântul „har", vom observa că acesta se regăsește doar de patru ori în cuprinsul evangheliei, numai în prolog (In. 1:14, 16, 17). Este foarte puțin dacă îl comparam pe Ioan cu Pavel, totuși versetele nu trebuie neglijate. Profunzimea lor teologică este evidentă cu privire la rolul harului în persoana lui Hristos și pentru iconomia mântuirii oamenilor, rezumând astfel teologia harică dezvoltată de Sfântul Apostol Pavel în scrisorile sale.

Harul în prologul ioanin

Prologul ioanin este împărțit de către comentatorii biblici în trei părți: preexistența Logosului și rolul Lui în creația lumii (In. 1:1-5), cuvântul lui Dumnezeu în istoria universală și în Israel (In. 1:6-13), întruparea Logosului și comunitatea creștină (In. 1:14-18)[3]. Punctul culminat al prologului se regăsește la începutul celei de a treia secțiuni, în versetul 14: „Și Cuvântul S-a făcut trup și S-a sălășluit între noi și am văzut slava Lui, slavă ca a Unuia-Născut din Tatăl, plin de har și de adevăr." (In. 1:14). Teologia creștină consideră întruparea lui Hristos ca fiind evenimentul de maximă importanță din istoria umanității, iar din redactarea textului putem observa un anumit paralelism și o contrapunere a versetelor 1 și 14:

Cuvântul era // Cuvântul S-a făcut
Cuvântul era la Dumnezeu // Cuvântul a locuit între noi Cuvântul era Dumnezeu // Cuvântul S-a făcut trup[4].

Din acest paralelism se pot extrage următoarele înțelesuri: Cuvântul sau Fiul lui Dumnezeu exista din veșnicie împreună cu Tatăl și cu Duhul fiind de aceeași natură cu Ei, iar la „plinirea vremii" (Gal. 4:4) a hotărât să Se întrupeze pentru mântuirea umanității, asumându-Și firea omenească, rămânând neschimbată dumnezeirea Sa. Întruparea, comentează părintele John Breck, reprezintă desăvârșirea revelației „harului și adevărului", iar sălășluirea (gr. ἐσκήνωσεν-lit. a ridica un cort sau a trăi într-unul) lui Dumnezeu între oameni aduce aminte de teofaniile veterotestamentare, care cu greu au reușit să prefigureze slava Fiului lui Dumnezeu[5]. Întruparea lui Cuvântului lui Dumnezeu întrece orice concepție veterotestamentară cu privire la slava și înțelepciunea divină care trebuie să locuiască în Israel (Ieș. 25:8-9, Zah. 2:10)[6]. Nu în ultimul rând, termenul μονογενής reflectă termenul ebraic yahîd, având înțelesul de „prețios", „unic" (Fac. 22:2, 12, 16; Evr. 11:17)[7].

În continuare, evanghelistul relatează că a văzut slava Cuvântului Întrupat, El fiind în același timp plin de har și de adevăr. În redactarea sa, aghiograful utilizează pluralul cu privire la „vederea" slavei lui Hristos. Exegeza biblică a încercat să identifice la cine se referă acest „am văzut". Exegeții consideră că pluralul se referă la comunitatea creștină, sau comunitatea apostolică, sau doar la Sfântul Ioan[8]. J. Ramsey Michaels consideră că „am văzut" se referă la comunitatea apostolilor, a celor doisprezece ucenicii ai Mântuitorului. Exegetul aduce în discuție ipoteza dacă acest „noi" (versiunea în limba engleză are: „We have seen") este exclusivist, dacă autorul se deosebește de cititorii textului său ca și cum ar spune: „Cuvântul S-a întrupat și S-a sălășluit între noi (primii ucenici ai lui Hristos), și noi (martorii celor menționate în această Evanghelie) am văzut slava Sa. Astfel, Sfântul Ioan, ar avea în vedere un „noi apostolic", făcând analogia cu I In. 1:1-4.[9]. De asemenea, același exeget distinge între „noi" din versetul 14 și „noi toți" din versetul 17, care include toată comunitatea creștină indiferent de epoca istorică și spațiul geografic[10]. „Vederea" slavei trebuie înțeleasă drept contemplare a lui Hristos Întrupat. Credința în divino-umanitatea lui Hristos este fundamentată de această contemplare a ucenicilor care L-au ascultat și urmat pe Hristos în învățătură și faptă. Actul contemplării care este menționat în prolog poate reprezenta și o aluzie la minunea Schimbării la față a Domnului. Deși evenimentul nu este menționat, știm din textele sinopticilor că Ioan a fost alături de Petru și Iacov la momentul respectiv (Mt. 17:1, Mc. 9:2, Lc. 9:28). Nu trebuie înțeles acest episod ca singular în manifestarea slavei dumnezeiești. Ea se face vizibilă prin toate minunile săvârșite de Hristos: vindecări, învieri din morți, minuni asupra mediului înconjurător, dar mai ales prin Patimile, Moartea, Învierea și Înălțarea la Cer[11].

Versetul 14 se încheie cu afirmația că Logosul întrupat este „plin de har și adevăr". Profesorul Vasile Gheorghiu, consideră că adjectivul „plin" (gr. πλήρης), demonstrează faptul că Hristos este deplin și rămâne neegalabil în ceea ce privește împărtășirea harului, adică a binefacerilor pe care El le revarsă din totdeauna asupra oamenilor[12]. Această idee o regăsim și în perioada patristică la Sfântul Chiril al Alexandriei care scrie în scrie în acest sens: „teologii (autorii Noului Testament) și mucenicii spun că slava și harul Unuia-Născutului nu sunt comparabile cu cele ale tuturor, ci mult mai presus de acelea și înălțate peste ale tuturor prin culmile lor fără asemănare[13]".

Construcția „har și adevăr” este foarte profundă. Dacă am menționat anterior, că versetul 14 reprezintă punctul culminant al Prologului ioaneic, structura „har și adevăr” este punctul culminant al versetului, reprezentând un ecou din Vechiul Testament al celebrei perechi de cuvinte hesed we`emet, care în traducere înseamnă dragoste milostivă sau dragostea legământului[14]. Expresia, afirmă pr. Constantin Preda, este în același timp și o figură de stil, numită hendiadă[15]. În acest caz hendiada exprimă darul sau harul revelației eshatologice, adică adevărul[16]. Construcția o identificăm în Vechiul Testament într-o formulă liturgică din Cartea Exodului (Ieș. 34:6). Yahweh afirmă despre El Însuși că este „bogat în bunătate și credincioșie; tradus de LXX prin „πολυέλαιος καὶ ἀληθείας ” fiind favorizată de contextul care vorbește de „slava” și vederea feței lui Dumnezeu (Ieș. 33:18-23)[17]. Cu privire la termenul ἀληθείας, deși este de sorginte greacă, autorul evangheliei redă un termen ebraic. Din punct de vedere semantic, ebraicul emet este diferit de grecescul ἀληθείας [18]. Sensul lui ἀληθείας implică în special o dimensiune gnoseologică, pe de altă parte emet evidențiază un adevăr moral identificându-se aici cu legea lui Dumnezeu[19]. De asemenea, aplicat la Dumnezeu, emet trebuie înțeles drept „credincioșie, fidelitate”. Vedem cum Sfântul Ioan reamintește indirect termenul veterotestamentar pentru har, hesed[20].

Literatura patristică își îndreaptă și ea atenția asupra textului din In. 1:14. Observăm în interpretările date de Sfinții Părinți o pluralitate de sensuri. Sfântul Ioan Hrisostom în Omilia a XII la Evanghelia după Ioan scrie:

Sfântul Ioan Hrisostom înțelege slava, harul și adevărul în lumina vieții și activității profetice a lui Hristos pe pământ. În schimb, reprezentanții teologiei alexandrine pun accentul pe firea dumnezeiască a lui Hristos, accentuând că slava și harul Fiului lui Dumnezeu sunt incomparabile dacă le raportăm și comparăm cu ființele create. Chiril al Alexandriei înțelege harul lui Hristos ca energie necreată, dăruită oamenilor prin dragostea și mila Sa[22]:

„Slava și harul Unuia-Născutului nu sunt comparabile cu ale tuturor, ci mult mai presus de acelea și înălțate peste ale tuturor, prin culmile lor fără asemănare. El nu are harul măsurat, ca de la altul, ci adevărat și desăvârșit în Cel desăvârșit, adică nu adăugat, nici procurat din afară ca o parte adăugată, ci existând în El în mod ființial, ca un rod al Ființei”[23].

Referitor la In. 1:14, teologii latini văd în Iisus Hristos exemplul primordial și maximal al harului sfânt[24]. În privința adevărului care a venit în lume prin Hristos, Ioan Scotus Eirugena argumentează că adevărul se află în chip natural în Persoana, Mântuitorului, deoarece El Însuși afirmă cu privire la propria persoană ca fiind Calea, Adevărul și Viața[25].

Observăm din comentariile patristice mulțimea de abordări care îmbogățesc teologia harică ioanină. Abordările patristice, deși diferite în privința anumitor nuanțe, sunt complementare punând în fața oamenilor complexitatea, nemărginirea și taina Persoanei Mântuitorului Iisus Hristos.

Critica modernă propune o abordare ușor diferită a textului ioanin. Una dintre abordări este tributară teologului Francis J. Moloney, care traduce structura „πλήρης χάριτος καὶ ἀληθείας" prin "the fullness of a gift that is truth" (plinătatea darului care este adevărul)[26]. Moloney abordează termenul „har" din punct de vedere literal și apoi interpretează substantivul care urmează după „și" (καὶ), ca o explicație suplimentară a darului gratuit. Astfel, traducerea teologului romano-catolic propune o nouă cheie de interpretare a versetului. Logosul Întrupat reprezintă darul deplin al lui Dumnezeu pentru umanitate. Hristos este darul desăvârșit, fiind Însuși Adevărul[27].

A doua traducere care iese din tiparul clasic este a exegetului Raymond E. Brown, care pentru versetele 14-17, acesta propune următoarea variantă de traducere a cuvântului χάρις: "enduring love" (In. 1:14), "love in place of love" (In. 1:16), "the law was a gift trough Moses, this enduring love came trough Jesus Christ" (In. 1:17)[28]. Brown preferă traducerea „dargoste îndelungată sau dragoste statornică", deoarece consideră că redă cel mai fidel hesed we`emet, dar nu crede ca fiind eronate celelalte traduceri, întrucât pasajul se bucură de o imensă bogăție teologică și literară[29].

Următorul text din Prologul ioanin în care regăsim termenul χάρις este In. 1:16: „Și din plinătatea Lui noi toți am luat har peste har". Textul din In. 1:16 reprezintă reluarea lui In. 1:14, dar la un alt nivel[30]. Construcția „har peste har" (χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος) a ridicat multe dificultăți de interpretare și traducere cercetătorilor textului ioaneic. Problema cu acest verset este de ordin gramatical, datorându-se pluralităților de sens pe care le are prepoziția „ἀντὶ". În limba română „ἀντὶ" are trei variante prin care se poate traduce: „pentru", „împotriva", „în locul"[31]. Diferențe se pot vedea și între Biblia Sinodală, care preferă varianta „har peste har" și Biblia Anania care traduce „har pentru har", dar admite și alte modalități de traducere a textului[32].

Sintagma χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος se află în strânsă legătură cu termenul πλήρωμα. Cuvântul apare o singură dată în evanghelia ioanină, ca o aluzie la plinătatea harului și milostivirea lui Dumnezeu (Ps. 105:45)[33]. Din această plinătate a harului, toți cei născuți din Dumnezeu prin credința în Mântuitorul Hristos au primit bogăția harului Lui[34]. Ca să înțelegem mai bine termenul πλήρωμα, trebuie să recurgem la textele Sfântului apostol Pavel care proclamă rolul lui Hristos în planul Sfintei Treimi (cf. Ef. 1:10, 23; 3:19: Col. 1:19; 2:9). În textul din Col. 2:9, Pavel afirmă că persoanele care au crezut în Iisus Hristos participă la plinătatea dumnezeirii „care întru El locuiește trupește". Textul paulin ne ajută să interpretăm afirmația prologului Sfântului Ioan în contextul celebrativ al Bisericii primare, pentru care Fiul lui Dumnezeu înomenit este lăudat și mărturisit ca izvor inepuizabil de daruri mântuitoare[35].

Sfântul Ioan Gură de aur oferă în comentariul său lămuriri cu privire la termenul πλήρωμα. El argumentează că Hristos posedă harul în mod deplin și tot prin intermediul Lui se oferă oamenilor:

> „<<Și ce înseamnă>> - întrebi tu - <<din plinătatea Lui noi toți am luat?>> (...) Nu spune evanghelistul că El are darul prin împărtășire, ci că este prin Sine izvorul și rădăcina tuturor bunătăților, viața în sine, lumina în sine, adevărul în sine. El nu ține pentru El bogăția bunătăților, ci o revarsă peste toți ceilalți, rămânând însă plin chiar și după ce o revarsă. Prin dăruirea către ceilalți, El nu se micșorează nicidecum, ci pururea izvorând și împărtășind tuturor aceste bunătăți, păstrează aceeași desăvârșire"[36].

Sfântul preot Dumitru Stăniloae înțelege textul ioaneic în lumina nemărginirii și infinității lui Hristos Întrupat, afirmând că oamenii doar din această plinătate infinită pot primi la nesfârșit darurile dumnezeiești:

„Plinătatea e nemărginită în toate. În nimic Fiul lui Dumnezeu întrupat nu mai are trebuința și putința să înainteze. Întrece orice margine. Numai din această plinătate pot primi și făpturile la nesfârșit bunătățile Lui. Și de fapt trebuie să existe undeva această plinătate a tuturor bunătăților existente. Și ea trebuie să fie trăită personal ca să producă o bucurie adevărată, deci ca să fie plinătate adevărată. Trebuie să se bucure cineva de această plinătate"[37].

Profesorul Vasile Gheorghiu interpretează structura „har peste har", identificând un număr de trei „haruri" aflate într-o strânsă relație, fiind de asemenea și un raport de complementaritate între ele. Ultimele două „haruri" sunt strâns legate, dar în același timp determinate de primul. Primul har pe care umanitatea l-a primit de la Hristos a fost cel al răscumpărării prin Jertfa de pe Golgota[38]. Prin moartea Lui pe cruce, Hristos ne-a împăcat cu Tatăl, oferindu-ne harul de a ne reface viața din punct de vedere spiritual, iar prin credința în El am primit puterea ca noi să devenim fii ai lui Dumnezeu după har (In. 1:12), omenirea sperând la redobândirea slavei pe care au avut-o în rai Adam și Eva, înainte de căderea în păcat[39]. În lumina acestei exegeze observăm întâlnirea dintre teologia ioaneică și cea paulină, cu privire la mântuirea întregii umanități prin Hristos. Vasile Gheorghiu întrevede prin explicația oferită textului din In. 1:16 „înfierea" de care vorbește Pavel în Rom. 8:15. Ioan nu întrebuințează în scrierile sale termenul înfiere, cum o face Pavel (Rom. 8:15), dar ideea este exprimată în mod clar pe parcursul Evangheliei a patra (In. 3:16; 14:2) și anticipată chiar în prolog în versetul 12: „Și celor câți l-au primit, care cred în numele Lui, le-a dat putere ca să se facă fii ai lui Dumnezeu" [40]. Prin înfierea în Hristos oamenii nu au încetat de a fi umani, nu vorbim despre o „contopire" a umanului cu divinul în sensul „absorbirii" firii omenești. Firea umană a fost îndumnezeită fără ca aceasta să își piardă calitățile sale proprii. Pentru a explica mai clar acest lucru, putem oferi un exemplu practic din mediul înconjurător: când introducem un metal în foc, acesta ia proprietățile focului, precum căldura și lumina, dar fără a înceta de a fi metal. Așadar, omul acceptând harul lui Dumnezeu devine fiul al Lui sau un „dumnezeu după har", după cum mărturisește și Mântuitorul (In. 10:34), citând Psalmul 81:6[41].
Așadar, In. 1:16 poate fi explicat prin In. 1:12, care prezintă rezumativ două tematici dezvoltate larg de către Pavel în scrierile sale: credința în numele lui Hristos și înfierea noastră prin El.

Χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος a fost interpretat și în sensul că, harul lui Hristos înlocuiește sau mai corect formulat, completează un „har" oferit anterior. Exegeți precum Craig S. Keener și Francis J. Moloney interpretează textul în lumina versetului 17 din prolog. Keener este de părere că rolul lui Hristos nu a fost acela de a anula sau de a desființa Legea lui Moise, ci de a o completa sau desăvârși[42]. Aceeași opinie o împărtășește și Francis J. Moloney, argumentând că două „haruri" nu pot fi puse în opoziție, unul anulându-l pe celălalt, dar putem vorbi despre două „daruri" care sunt în relație de complementaritate, cel de-al doilea fiind superior, îl desăvârșește pe precedentul[43]. exegeților își are argumentul în scrierile sinoptice, mai precis în Predica de pe munte din Evanghelia mateeană. Mântuitorul Hristos Însuși afirmă despre El în că nu a venit să strice Legea pe care a dat-o Dumnezeu prin Moise, ci să o împlinească, desăvârșind-o (Mt. 5:17).

Exegeza hrisostomică a pasajului din In. 1:16, confirmă cele exemplificate. Teologul antiohian pune în contrast Legea lui Moise cu Legea harului, folosindu-se pentru interpretarea textului ioanin, texte din scrisorile Sfântului Apostol Pavel:

„Și ce am luat? „Har în loc de har." Care în loc de care? Cel nou în locul celui vechi. După cum era dreptate atunci, este dreptate și acum; căci zice: „În ceea ce privește dreptatea cea din Lege, fără de prihană fiind (Filip. 3:6). Credință atunci, credință și acum: „Din credință spre credință" (Rom. 1:17) Înfiere atunci, înfiere și acum: „A cărora este înfierea" (Rom. 9:4), zice. Slavă atunci, slavă și acum: „Căci, dacă ceea ce a trecut a fost în slavă, cu mult mai mult ceea ce rămâne este în slavă (2 Cor. 3:11). Lege atunci, lege și acum: „Legea Duhului vieții"- zice - „m-a eliberat" (Rom. 8:2). Slujire atunci, slujire și acum: „A cărora este slujirea"(Rom. 9:4), zice; și iar: „Slujind lui Dumnezeu în Duh (Filip. 3:3). Legământ atunci, legământ și acum: „Voi încheia cu voi legământ nou, nu ca legământul pe care l-am încheiat cu părinții voștri" (Ier. 31:31-32). Sfințenie atunci, sfințenie și acum. Botez atunci, botez și acum. Jertfă atunci, jertfă și acum. Templu atunci, templu și acum. Tăiere împrejur atunci, tăiere împrejur și acum. Tot așa, har atunci har și acum[44]".

Sfântul Ioan Hrisostom referitor la același pasaj ioanin, pune în balanță „mântuirea" prin harul providenței a poporului Israel din mâna egiptenilor, (Deut. 7:7-8), cu mântuirea întregului neam omenesc din robia morții și a diavolului:

„După ce a zis: „Din plinătatea Lui noi toți am luat", a adăugat: „Și har peste har" , arătând că prin har și iudeii s-au mântuit. Căci zice: „Nu pentru că sunteți numeroși, ci pentru părinții voștri v-am ales" (Deut. 7:7-8). Deci, dacă nu pentru isprăvile lor au fost aleși de Dumnezeu, este limpede că prin har au dobândit această cinste. Și noi toți am fost mântuiți prin har, dar nu la fel ca ei, nu pentru aceleași pricini, ci pentru unele mult mai mărețe și mai înalte. Deci harul de care noi avem parte nu este ca acela. Într-adevăr, nouă nu ni s-a dat numai iertarea păcatelor (...), ci și dreptate și sfințenie și înfiere și har de la Duhul mult mai strălucit și mai îmbelșugat. Prin acest har am devenit iubiți lui Dumnezeu, nu numai ca robi, ci și ca fii și ca prieteni. De aceea zice: „Har peste har"[45].

Nu trebuie omisă nici opinia interesantă și totodată corectă a lui Ioan Scotus Eriugena asupra versetului 16 din prolog. Teologul apusean consideră că primul har din face referire la harul credinței, iar al doilea este harul adevărului prin care Îl înțelegem pe Hristos[46]. Tiparul pe care îl folosește Eriugena pentru a-și construi exegeza biblică este al Fericitului Augustin. Succesiunea „har peste har" are în vedere în primul rând credința, ca fiind primul har dat omului de către Dumnezeu, iar odată acceptat, Dumnezeu oferă al doilea har, pe acela al vieții veșnice[47].

Ultimul verset din prolog (și totodată din evanghelia ioaneică) care aduce în discuție cuvântul „har" pune în paralel două persoane și două concepte. Evanghelistul Ioan scrie: „Pentru că Legea prin Moise s-a dat, iar harul şi adevărul au venit prin Iisus Hristos". Este pentru prima oară când Ioan vorbește despre Legea poporului Israel și prorocul Moise. Exegeții consideră că νόμος-ul nu denotă în contextul prologului doar Pentateuhul, ca fiind distinct de scrierile profetice sau de restul scrierilor Vechiului Testament, nici la „legislația" cuprinsă în Pentateuh, ci la tot corpus-ul învățăturilor conținute în Lege, în profeți sau scrierile sapiențiale, care de asemenea sunt considerate derivate și tributare inspirației lui Moise și reprezintă autoritatea divină de la temelia credinței poporului Israel[48].

Diferența calitativă dintre Legea lui Moise și harul venit prin Hristos se observă imediat la nivel textual. „Inferioritatea" Legii mozaice constă în faptul că a fost oferită poporului prin intermediari umani, dar acest fapt nu îi poate nega proveniența divină (Legea a fost dată prin Moise și nu de Moise)[49]. Față de Moise, Hristos nu este intermediar. Dumnezeu S-a revelat în mod plenar și desăvârșit în Persoana Fiului Unul-Născut din veșnicie, preexistent creației și de o ființă cu Tatăl. Așadar, nu trebuie să vedem între lege și „har și adevăr" o opoziție strictă, ci mai degrabă o un progres în din punct de vedere teologic, spiritual și revelațional[50].

Sfântul Ioan vede în venirea lui Hristos între oameni o reinterpretare a episodului din Ieș. 33-34, când Moise intră în dialog cu Yahweh, dar nu Îi vede decât spatele. Prin întruparea Mântuitorului, Dumnezeu a venit în maximă apropiere față de om. Numai Hristos L-a văzut pe Dumnezeu față către față, oamenii pot doar să contemple urmele lui Dumnezeu în creație, sau, ca să folosim o imagine plastică, să Îi vadă spatele precum Moise pe Sinai[51].

Concluzii

Evenimentele relatate în prologul ioaneic au produs, după cum afirma și John F. McHugh, „o tensiune între Biserică și sinagoga iudaică din vremurile respective"[52]. Întruparea Fiului lui Dumnezeu, a Logosului divin, a schimbat în mod evident conștiința religioasă a iudeilor din secolul I. Dumnezeu Cel transcendent vine în maximă apropiere de om schimbând raportarea sa la divinitate de până atunci, Hristos desăvârșind revelația Vechiului Testament. Harul și adevărul se „întrupează" în lume împreună cu Hristos. Acesta nu mai reprezintă doar o favoare, ci devine absolut necesar omului în vederea desăvârșirii sale ființiale.

MYSTICAL ROLES. A PHENOMENOLOGICAL INTENDMENT OF DOGEN'S SUPERMAN

Alexandru-Ioan Cânda
PhD Student, West University of Timișoara

Abstract: Gaining a surge of public notoriety in the West, especially after the first two World Wars, Zen mysticism established itself as a benchmark for understanding existence that was intended as a move beyond the doctrine of classical Buddhism towards an approach with immediate practicality, simplified, efficient and reduced to a minimum of mechanisms for addressing the numinous – of course, a numinous seen as an aseity (Pali Tathatā) that just is and is not addressed. Like Buddhism, Zen also highlighted and supported the importance of the community – Sangha (Sans. saṃgha) – through which the practitioner, advanced as a mystic who has already had the experience of the numinous, discovers himself as a belonged who offers himself to help the spiritual journey of the members of the community. It is precisely on this aspect of the mystic as dedicated to his own path but also to others that Dōgen (†1253) focuses, introducing the concept of a superior man characterized by eight great realizations (Jap. satori) achieved through the practice of meditation of sitting (Jap. zazen). Such a mystic achieves a fixation in enunciation of these eight roles that arise from spiritual realizations – fixation through which he gives himself to other Zen practitioners and which become templates carrying the other towards reaching a superior numinous reality.

Keywords: Hermeneutics; phenomenology of community; roles; superman; transience.

1. Self and affirmation

Among the more recent religious movements of world notoriety – or among the mystical ones, if we prefer another framing in terms of focusing on an interiority of the unfoldings of one's own existence –, Zen Buddhism stood out as a breath of fresh air for a religion already settled in a ritualistic rhythm, with an impact similar to the neo-Protestant "awakenings" (but settled and calm, without manifest exuberances or transformative theological-pastoral repositionings).

Of course, belonging to the world of inner experience and interpretation characteristic of Buddhism has always meant belonging both to an immediate community – Sangha (from Sans. saṃgha), whether lay-communal or monastic – and to a community of a totality of existence – Tathatā (Pali for aseity or ultimate reality, but without a personal semantic addressability – imploratory or devotional). To reach one of these communions means not only to position them symbolically as ultimate goals of a spiritual journey, but also to consider them as vehicles-means of accessing those expected or desired realities (Sans. nirvāṇa).

Thus, for Buddhism, reaching nirvāṇa means learning to find the original as an unconstructed (Sanskrit asaṃskṛta) – so not only reaching or identifying an essentiality, but also realizing what that reality is: a surprising non-structurality that is so by itself (Ro. nestructuralitate care așa este prin sine) – and not a construction or a dissolution-deconstruction (which would have assumed an initial construction, a to-be-constructed as a plan-idea, a sense, a will, a constructor etc.)

In all this flow of reality-one-with-all (Ro. realitate-una-cu-tot), the magical man finds himself as being in harmony with the essences of this reality (See Blaga, 2014, p. 185), yet not diluted in consciousness, but present through his idea of who he is – about a material, transient and illusory self. Therefore, Buddhism only denies the absolutization of the self that remains only an illusion of the identity of the repetitions of manifestations (See Davy, 2000, pp. 19, 182) – of temporary fixations with relational characters that, however, become cumulatively permanent in a karmic "baggage" that forms and monopolizes this self, pushing it to cyclical travails and sufferings (Sans. Saṃsāra).

Even if suffering comes to be seen as a "conjunctural ontological given of humanity" (Cânda, 2022, p. 7) in which the human can find himself only as an absurd creation (See Cânda, 2014, p. 165), Buddhism indicates a positioning on this particular self both through the practice of an adequate spirituality, and, especially, through the understanding of what it should be (even if this being of the self is also an illusory state recognized as such, at the same time it can be used as a means towards the enlightenment preceding the achievement of nirvāṇa); overcoming illusory matter will come from identifying with the vacuity of one's own strength (See Abhayadatta, 2004, p. 59) – therefore through an achievement beyond ability and helplessness.

On the other hand, always being a belonged (Ro. aparținut), for the success of this travail as a given of humanity (Ro. travaliu ca dat al omenirii), a positioning of semantic realization of intersubjectivity is imposed – a leaning towards understanding that can only be possible through the concept of subjectivity (See Zahavi, 2024, p. 257) – therefore through precisely that concept that in Buddhism either escapes from a framework of semantic accuracy, either – once caught in a formalizing semiotics – finds itself as impermanent in its conceptual-formal existence.

2. Above and beyond self

Starting from the offering foundation of Hinduism, classical Buddhism benefited from a long period of ritual and conceptual developments starting from the archetypal framework already existing in the Indian subcontinent. However, as missionaryism – intentional or conjunctural to already natural commercial developments – took this new positioning towards the numinous to realms where the familiarity of the collective imaginary was no longer a given of the immediate.

So, Buddhism had to adapt: first to the fairly settled (but welcoming) institutional-regularized Chinese culture where it ended up transforming into Chán, and later, in the fertile realm of welcoming, veiling myths of East Asia, to thrive amazingly well under the assimilating forms of Zen in Japan and Sŏn in Korea – subsequently becoming "nurseries" for spreading of Zen throughout the world.

A remarkable landmark with a reverberating influence throughout the world of Buddhism – be it classical or not – was that of Dōgen (†1253). A complex and intellectually effervescent personality, with a particular appetite for spiritually driven journeys, Dōgen managed to reposition Zen towards a fluid approach that not only pursued an intellectually satisfying reconceptualization and founded new religious institutionalizations but focused above all on the practicality of always being resolutely oriented towards a pertinent and palpable here-and-now attainable.

Among Dōgen's new positions and developments, the most important are those on the practice of zazen as a form of sitting meditation and satori as a "great realization" or understanding as the goal to be achieved through meditation.

A reference writing by Dōgen is Hachi Dainin Haku – The Eight Satori of the Superior Man – in which he develops his vision over these positions towards understanding through the practice of zazen.

If Buddhism – be it of any vehicle or school – aims to find a supramundane vision (Sans. lokottara) that would substantiate a cathartic lack of substantiality of the ego (Sans. pudgala-nairātmya) (See Davy, 1999, pp. 226, 235), Dōgen's Zen focuses on that superior man who, by himself and together with others like him, nevertheless develops a material framework. This framing through the fact of zazen does not aim to "fill" a conceptual-illusory self that is in any case unfixable to itself as a perceptible reality, but focuses on preparing settings that facilitate the experience of the numinous – therefore mystical roles (Ro. roluri mistice) viewed as clarifying instantiations of positioning-within-sense-of-beingness (Ro. poziționare-întru-sens-ființial) (See Cânda, 2024[a], p. 42). Thus, Dōgen describes the following great achievements achieved through the specific meditation of sitting – achievements specific to a superior man on the path to enlightenment (See Dogen, n.d.c, p. 234):

a. Shoyoku – having few desires;
b. Chisoku – sufficient understanding;
c. Onri – calm joy through detachment from the crowd;
d. Shojin – as effort and especially gonsho as a permanent effort for practicing zazen;
e. Fumonen – no illusion or right thinking;
f. Zenjo – stability of the state of meditation;
g. Chiei – wisdom produced through zazen;
h. Fukeron – non-discussion.

What is observed in this enumeration is not a despair of the refusal of an identity with oneself (See Kierkegaard, 1998, p. 53) – escape or denial of self –, but precisely the construction of an identity that is certainly volatile, but which, through multiple positionings, defines an idea of self through simultaneously-manifest roles (Ro. idee de sine prin roluri simultan-manifeste). Therefore, man no longer defines himself through an appreciation of a state – perceived or imagined –, but by finding a definable and relatable phenomenon that is delimited by manifestations "(from-)beyond-self (Ro. (de-)dincolo-de-sine)" (Cânda, 2024[b], p. 112).

Therefore, achieving such an identity based on roles of reporting to zazen means proposing towards the other – another or one's own conceptual self – a potential narrative content of addressing in the form of a "surplus-enunciation (Ro. enunț-surplus)" (Cânda, 2025[a], p. 573).

As the other does not belong to the beingness of the Zen mystic (without developing here what from aseity as all-uniformly existing or by what mechanism it can be discredited as being-existence), the defining roles of the mystic's character end up imposing an enunciation-already-ready-to-be-answered (Ro. enunț-deja-gata-de-a-fi-răspuns) (See Cânda, 2025[a], p. 575) hence an impatience to address an enunciation considered as definitive in its semantic content.

Thus, the enunciation of essentialized and crystallized narratives towards addressing becomes a diffusing enunciation of own roles (Ro. enunț difuzant al propriilor roluri) which, through the universalizing orientation towards the numinous, becomes a numinous meta enunciation (Ro. meta-enunț numinos) (See Cânda, 2025[a], p. 576).

Yet the characteristics that Dōgen proposes are not only addressed to one's own conduct and transformation, but also to others, to the community, to the Sangha – thus of formalizing some semantic relationships – cataphatic or apophatic – with the numinous-as-given-through-the-being-of-the-other (Ro. numinosul-ca-dat-prin-ființa-celuilalt) which, in turn, makes itself known through its own enunciation outlined by projective roles (so the mystic offers himself through his own roles).

Thus, by addressing the numinous present in both the mystic and in the others, the role-bearing-enunciation (Ro. enunțul-purtător-de-roluri) becomes a semiotic reality independent of the right holder of the enunciation, which is however sublimated into roles – pluralities of anonymous third parties (See Ricœur, 2020, p. 253). Since acts of expression carry within themselves their own interpretation as a purpose (Kundgabehandlungen) (See Schutz, 1967, p. 117), the role-bearing enunciation becomes a mechanism for transcending beyond the intrinsic unaddressability of the human being arising from the non-linguistic barrier of being (See Cânda, 2025[b], p. 48-49).

If from his own profound meditative approach (zazen) the mystic realizes that he cannot "account for himself [raison de lui-même] through his own essence" (Meillassoux, 2014, p. 51), from the inevitable unfolding of the community conjuncture a feeling of reintegration of being is generated (See Dufrenne, 1976, p. 87) and of ultimate-revealing realization (satori) of the ghostly subsistence of one's general (See Noica, 1997, p. 59) – but also of the unconfirmable exterior of one's mind (See Nagel, 1994, p. 12).

In order to be able to overcome the framework of beingess-as-unknown-phenomenality-given-to-me (Ro. fiindul-ca-fenomenalitate-necunoscută-dată-mie) – thus to semantically integrate the limiting character of this volatile perception-interpretation immediacy –, precisely by fixing one's own roles in the enunciation as a mirroring of the roles of others, one achieves what one of the eighty-four Tibetan masters – Siddha Kankaripa – calls "the phenomenal appearance of void space" (Abhayadatta, 2002, p. 54).

3. Shared silences

If this realization of vacuity veiled in a phenomenal unfolding of transience (Ro. desfășurare fenomenală de tranziență) brings a serene tranquility as an expression of one's own joy of detachment (Jap. onri) as a result of a right thinking (Jap. fumonen), for the other members of the community this still remains a truth far from attainable, thus positioning them as spectators of a tragic phenomenon (See Liiceanu, 1975, p. 34); as Lama Anagarika Govinda (1998, p. 200) notes: "the intellect directed outwards sinks us ever deeper into the process of becoming, into the world of 'things' and of material forms or into the illusion of a separate self – into the illusion of death."

It is precisely through these external phenomena represented as illusory constructed and conceptually assimilated realities that the transition must be made from the roles assumed by the mystic already advanced on the path towards the numinous and the roles of others – therefore not only through a transposed co-presence (übertragene Kompräsenz) of mirroring the feeling of the other (See Ricœur, 2007, p. 140), but through a giving of self as character (Ro. dăruire de sine ca personaj). Through such an act towards an-another-of-the-community (Ro. un-altul-al-comunității), the mystic gives himself as idea of a multiplicity of realities (See Maimon, 2015, p. 138) – idea of some essential positionings that become hypostases-templates to carry the other towards a subsequent and superior numinous reality.

Thus, the roles that outline the idea of the character-as-numinous-transpositional (Ro. personajul-ca-transpozițional-numinos) will not only impose a model to follow, but will provoke a semantic repositioning towards the numinous that will direct the ordinary practitioner from knowing the fact of being to knowing-that-it-is-with-necessity-for-sacred (Ro. a-ști-că-este-cu-necesitate-pentru-sacru) (See Cânda, 2024[b], p. 114), thus achieving a sharing of serene silences – silences of the mind contemplative of the end of all worlds (See Abhayadatta, 2002, p. 145) external and internal, vacating and aseitive.

MYSTICAL NARRATIVE. A PHENOMENOLOGICAL INTENDMENT OF ESCRIVA'S WAY

Alexandru-Ioan Cânda
PhD Student, West University of Timișoara

Abstract: After the spiritual and cultural peak reached in the full religious and the already ecclesiasticly institutionalized Middle Ages, Latin mysticism finds a theological, pastoral and personal experience refreshment through the impetus of the Second Vatican Council (1962-1965) which fundamentally repositions the Catholic Church in the challenging realities of contemporary times. If the roots of Latin mysticism were the monastic centers of the West – with their iconic peaks Saint John of the Cross and Saint Teresa of Ávila – , in modernity, after the 20th century, a new religious positioning focused on small local groups – but with an all-encompassing vision of reality will emerge. In this new context, Josemaría Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás (†1975) becomes an essential landmark of this new trend in which the laity firmly assert themselves as full-fledged pillars of a Living Church (for example Adrienne von Speyr, Hans Urs von Balthasar and Carlo Acutis). A phenomenological understanding of Escrivá's Way (Camino) means addressing the mystical narrative as a form of positioning towards the numinous, as well as towards the other. Therefore, to follow a path proposed by a mystic – here, by Escrivá – means to seek a permanence of the presence of the numinous through the very shared community narrative.

Keywords: Enunciation; fictional worlds; hermeneutics; narrative; phenomenology of community.

1. Crossing and breakthrough

Among the mystical currents best known theologically – but rather sporadically "frequented" by philosophers and ordinary believers –, Latin mysticism nevertheless stands out as a surprisingly dynamic and conceptually fruitful theological current, which – especially after the dogmatic-institutional refreshment of the Second Vatican Council (1962-1965) – has come to reconfigure itself into excitingly current approaches and developments, addressed especially to the young people of the Church.

If classical Latin mysticism emerged mainly and developed in the monastic centers of gravity of the medieval civilization (the most prominent examples being Saint John of the Cross and Saint Teresa of Ávila) – thus being, through their socio-cultural importance, also reflections of historical contexts (See Davy, 1998, p. 67) –, the new Western mysticism of the 20th century will take a considerable and special boost, with reverberations that will go beyond the limits of the usual path from monastic "leavening" to the communitarian-ecclesiastical "maturation" of small local groups.

A such new mysticism of all and sundry (Ro. misticism al tuturor și a toate) is encountered at Saint Josemaría Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás (†1975), who becomes an essential landmark of this new trend through which the laity no longer have the shyness or barrier of institutional support and prestige, but firmly assert themselves as pillars with full rights of a Living Church – a church of The Call of Jesus (Mt. 5:48, but also Lev. 19:2) to holiness and working fullness (we can exemplify here with Adrienne von Speyr, Hans Urs von Balthasar and even the new saint of the youth – Carlo Acutis).

Like the mystics of the Middle Ages, Escrivá also urges a journey of breakthrough towards God, but a special one, through which the pilgrimage is no longer an external one to holy places with cathartic potential, nor to architectural-imaginary representations as reflections of the Jewish mysticisms of the Throne or the Divine Chariot (see Book of Ezekiel – Chapter 1 or Book of Isaiah – Chapter 6), but becomes a pilgrimage of unification in itself corresponding to the unity of the Divine Kingdom (See Davy, 1998, p. 99) and through Christ received as a pre-orbiting light (See Unamuno, 2015, p. 129) – a pilgrimage that has a special aridity, but still decidedly optimistic in the success of achieving the experience of the numinous.

If Escrivá's Way (Camino) has awakened a perpetuating theological-devotional interest, the same interest is imposed by the phenomenological focus on the religious phenomenon – a focus that seeks to go beyond the factic-initiatic journey, towards a breakthrough at essences (Ro. răzbire la esențe), addressing in particular the mystical narrative (Ro. narațiune mistică) as a fact of positioning towards the numinous.

It is precisely in this narrative passage from the Camino that living like Christ in the world itself is a mysticism, a mystery affirmed by Jean Baudrillard as the real, sense and truth as exceptions (See Baudrillard, 2008, p. 53); therefore the exceptionality of ultimate realities becomes an ontic identity frameworking achieved through a "series of deaths towards one's own self, of renunciations of oneself" (See Laroche, 2023, p. 65) – from leaves (Ro. lăsări) behind of the instantiations of the ego, the path to God continuing on a new path by abandoning the exhausted intellect (See Špidlík, 2001, p. 117).

However, in this very "vanity" of the desolation of the lack of horizons, the "despair of necessity" (Kierkegaard, 1998, p. 36) appears as the persistence of an impulse of breakthrough that is associated with an avidity for dissemination of self within one's own self (Ro. aviditate de diseminare a sinelui în propriul sine) – hence of a narrative-unfolding-told-only-to-me (Ro. desfășurări-narative-spuse-numai-mie).

2. Worlds and enunciations

From the very first pages of The Way, we discover that the path proposed to us is not one of traditional reaching a sacred-symbolic geographical location nor of a travail of struggle through successive stages towards an inner reality with the aim of a catharsis obtained from contemplative fixation (Ro. fixare contemplativă) on the numinous revealed only for oneself, but is in fact an unfolding of rules-settlements – so rather an advancement of conducts (Ro. parcurs de conduite) of settling in the presence of God (See. Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás, 2011, p. 46).

Throughout the book, Escrivá generally oscillates between three directional exhortations: (1) the reminder that now, life is a reality contorted by suffering and dystopian mirrored to the Kingdom of God ("crosses, labors, unrests: you will have them as long as you live" – See Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás, 2011, p. 203), (2) from this reality that is foreign to being and perpetually alienating in turn, you can only escape through a change that brings detachment from matter – but a detachment obtained through self-mortification as the foundation of communication with God ("do not go beyond the nature of things: if God himself gives himself to you, what good is this attachment to creatures?", "you are of no use (...) if you do not change", "if you do not mortify yourself, you will never be a soul of prayer" – See Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás, 2011, pp. 62, 66, 106) and (3) there is still a hope of reaching Godhood, but only through a persevering toil that at some point will attract God's cooperation ("persevere and you will 'ascend'", "He will work, if you entrust yourself to Him" – See Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás, 2011, pp. 213, 287).

Observing this anguishing-tensioning construction, it can delimit a particular style of relating to the sacred that mirrors both the cult of a crucified Christ or a sorrowful Mary in agony (See Unamuno, 1995, p. 37), as well as an address to oneself and to others that – like that in Paul's epistles – is agonizing precisely because of the combative positioning that forgets to dialogue (See Unamuno, 1995, p. 51). If you nevertheless dedicate yourself to adhering to the will of God (See Gasparino, 2001, p. 53), you will find yourself – agonizing and anguished (an inner experience also related to agony – See Laroche, 2023, p. 52), of course – on an endlessly narrow path (See Colliander, 2003, p. 128), but which, nevertheless – as Hans Urs von Balthasar notes – rediscovers the narrowness as an "objective process of dilation" (See Balthasar, 2016, p. 56).

This touches on a paradox of faith already familiar from the psalms of the Old Testament ("You brought me out of trouble into a wide-open space" – Ps. 4:2, Bible, 2020, p. 1316): the delight as a spaciousness of living that is reached beyond the constraints of immediate materiality.

To reach this contentment coming from the spatiality of living (Ro. spațialitatea trăirii) does not only mean a repositioning just of oneself, but – since The Way is not a diary or a collection of meditations addressed to oneself, but is an address to the other – it also imposes a world as semantic comprising (lume ca cuprindere semantică) – therefore of a spatiality of senses addressed to each believer as a mechanism-framing of settlement-of-the-other-in-narrative (Ro. așezare-în-narațiune-a-celuilalt).

In this spatiality of senses, through the given of intentions and addressees, self-consciousness is no longer isolated from intentionality (See Zahavi, 2024, p. 95) but uses it to gather other similar intentionalities around it and to carry the inner experiencer towards the numinous that brings man to it (See Cânda, 2024[a], p. 25). If we also accept an unconscious component of the will, then Lucian Blaga's (2011, p.64) remark that "a horizon of a certain structure is projected from the unconscious (...) into the environment in which the unconscious must be realized" helps to understand the connection that is established between intrinsic intentionality and the connection with the numinous through a commonly-shared "space of unfoldings (Ro. spațiu al desfășurărilor)" (Cânda, 2024[b], p. 259) through a "numinous-language-already-natural (Ro. limbaj-numinos-deja-firesc)" (Cânda, 2025[a], p. 570).

So intentionality-as-mobilizer-to-ourselves (Ro. intenționalitatea-ca-mobilizantă-nouă) is constituted in a corroborated effort that is above practice – in a "travail of semantic assimilation (Ro. travaliu de asimilare semantică)" (See Cânda, 2025[b], p. 69) which, semantically augmenting the understanding of one's own reality, leads to the awareness of a new potential that would happen if one were to leave the current state of being (See Noica, 1978, p. 170) – hence a leaving-the-limit-behind (Ro. lăsare-în-urmă-a-limitei) towards another rediscovery-of-self (Ro. redescoperire-de-sine) (See Cânda, 2024[b], p. 258).

This rediscovery becomes a re-settlement of one's own dynamic mechanism of understanding – a configurating act that gives sense to the narrative necessity (See Ricœur, 2020, p. 188) and that orients the structuring of the narrative world (See Eco, 1991, p. 14) towards subsequent configurations that in turn become fictional possibilities of addressing the other (Ro. posibilități ficționale de adresare a celuilalt). The possible content of the addressing becomes a fictional enunciation that describes through itself possible alternative worlds (See Ryan, 1991, p. 24) – hence a backwards-enunciation (Ro. enunț-răspăr) (See Cânda, 2025[a], p. 569) still addressed to oneself.

But the-not-yet-addressed (Ro. încă-neadresatul) belongs by intention to the others, thus imposing a narrative-not-only-to-me (Ro. narațiune-nu-numai-mie) that brings with it both the presence of the divine as the Other-enunciation (Ro. Celălalt-enunț) (See Cânda, 2025[a], p. 568), and the presence of the others as characters to whom the mystic will address his narrative content – the presence of a community-enunciation (Ro. comunității-enunț) as a narrative world in which the characters have propositional attitudes (See Eco, 1991, p. 178) as sub-structures of semantic positioning that carry within themselves a transfiguring potential when uttered to others as real addressees-receivers of the enunciation.

Since the real is not denied to the fictional (See Noica, 1978, p. 45), it means that the narrative has a potency of a reality as being what is encountered in the world (See Špidlík, 2001, p. 107) – this potency, however, raising the issue of the validating encounter of the narrative fact by the other.
Like the fictional seen as an aesthetic object that refuses to be integrated into the world through perception and action (See Dufrenne, 1976, p. 225), the narrative of addressing towards God – whether He is a person or a presence in the other – becomes a numinous object that retains its autonomy of substance, while allowing both perception and aggregation into the factual.

3. A search for light

Even if for Escrivá, accessing the Godhead means going through a labyrinthine and obscuring travail, his guidance nevertheless exudes a hope of encountering Christ – so, ultimately, not a burning down in the shadows but an ascent into the light (See Chardin, 2007, p. 104) through the four things necessary for the believer (Colliander, 2003, p. 63): "humility, unwavering vigilance, the will to resist, and prayer."

Beyond an assiduous and regulated practice, what Escrivá seeks – both for himself through his own experience and for the help of others – is to achieve a permanence of the presence of the numinous that becomes an accompany-of-mystery (Ro. însoțire-de-taină) (See Cânda, 2024[b], p. 256). It is precisely this mystery of the Godhead that out of love is given to the knowledge of believers (See Unamuno, 1995, p. 43) that becomes, in fact, a reference as an aprioric given of the collective naturalness (See Cânda, 2022, p. 13) – thus associating a narrative-as-numinous-reference (Ro.

narativ-ca-reper-numinos) that establishes a relationship of permanence with the sacred through which it can be named (See Michel, 1994, p. 230) and become a personally-addressable This One.

But the others being already present in this narrative of addressing the numinous through the community-enunciation, is also achieved a communion with God that starts from precisely this communion with people (See Speyr, 1996, p. 65). Therefore, to reach God, one must first reach people (See Cânda, 2014, p. 164) as part of a stable world through its very manifesto (See Meillassoux, 2014, p. 120) – thus through participation and observation itself as forms of communal scrutiny of the numinous.

Scrutinizing the numinous alongside others – whether they are already familiar with the sacred or novices – reveals the narrative as a glancing for the numinous (Ro. narațiunea ca o căutătură a numinosului), which maintains its importance through the very common participation in constructing an address of welcoming and unveiling of the numinous.

It is pertinent and fulfilling to conclude with the statement of Cardinal Tomáš Špidlík (2001, p. 142): "Union in grace and in love is the only value that will not pass away. Everything else will change until the end of times."

THE LIGHT OF THE RESURRECTION IN THE THEOLOGY AND HYMNOGRAPHY OF ST. JOHN OF DAMASCUS

Cristian Dragomirescu
PhD Student, University of Bucharest

Abstract: This study examines how the theme of Resurrection light structures the theology and hymnography of St. John of Damascus. Far from treating light as a poetic embellishment, the Damascene presents it as the uncreated radiance through which Christ's divine identity becomes manifest. Rooted in the Nicene confession that the Son is "light from light," the Paschal mystery reveals the unity of Christ's divinity and humanity in a single luminous act. The article explores how St. John integrates biblical motifs, patristic insights, and liturgical experience into a coherent vision in which light renews both the human person and the cosmos. Special attention is given to the Paschal canon, where hymnography transforms theology into communal encounter. In this perspective, the light of the Resurrection is not merely symbolic but functions as the center of Christian existence and the anticipation of the world's final transfiguration.

În teologia Sfântului Ioan Damaschin, lumina ocupă un loc central, deoarece prin ea sunt exprimate atât identitatea lui Hristos, cât și chemarea omului și destinul final al întregii creații. Pentru Ioan, lumina Învierii nu este doar un simbol al victoriei asupra morții, ci limbajul propriu al lui Dumnezeu, felul în care El Se descoperă și lucrează în lume. Lumina pascală devine astfel cheia de înțelegere a întregii istorii a mântuirii: în strălucirea ei se revelează pe deplin adevărul proclamat de Sinodul I Ecumenic de la Niceea – că Fiul este de aceeași ființă cu Tatăl[1].

Din această perspectivă, lumina nu poate fi înțeleasă separat de Persoana lui Hristos. Pentru Ioan, lumina revelată în Întrupare, pe muntele Tabor și în dimineața Învierii este chiar strălucirea necreată a firii divine, aceeași lumină pe care Fiul o împărtășește cu Tatăl din veșnicie. De aceea, lumina devine manifestarea vizibilă a dumnezeirii Sale, dovada concretă că Hristos este Fiul lui Dumnezeu și că în El firea umană și firea divină sunt unite fără confuzie. În această lumină se confirmă că revelația nu constă doar în cuvinte, ci în însăși prezența și lucrarea reală a lui Dumnezeu în lume[2].

Ioan interpretează istoria biblică în lumina acestui adevăr. El vede în lumina creației, în teofaniile veterotestamentare, în slava de pe Sinai și în profețiile mesianice etape succesive ale unui itinerar divin care pregătește revelarea deplină a luminii în Hristos. Pentru el, Scriptura este o pedagogie luminoasă: tot ceea ce a fost prefigurat în Vechiul Testament se împlinește în realitatea pascală, în care lumina devine vizibilă în trupul înviat[3].

Pe lângă fundamentele doctrinare și biblice, lumina are un rol esențial și în imnografia alcătuită de Ioan Damaschin. Canonul pascal – una dintre cele mai renumite opere liturgice ale sale – nu reprezintă doar o succesiune de tropare armonios structurate, ci o adevărată teologie a luminii, exprimată poetic și ritmic. În aceste cântări, lumina nu este descrisă de la distanță, ci este împărtășită direct credincioșilor, introducându-i în experiența strălucirii dumnezeiești a lui Hristos care umple întreaga celebrare pascală. Astfel, cântarea bisericii devine locul în care teologia se convertește în contemplație, iar cunoașterea despre Hristos se transformă în comuniune vie cu El[4].

În concepția damaschiniană, omul este orientat constitutiv către lumină datorită faptului că poartă chipul lui Dumnezeu. Păcatul nu anulează această orientare, dar o distorsionează, introducând fragmentare și obscuritate în capacitatea omului de a-L percepe pe Dumnezeu. Mântuirea este înțeleasă ca luminare treptată, prin care harul restaurează chipul și îl orientează din nou către izvorul luminii[5]. În această perspectivă, lumina pascală devine însăși temelia antropologiei creștine, deoarece dezvăluie scopul ultim al omului: participarea reală și veșnică la slava dumnezeiască a lui Hristos, Cel înviat[6].

Teologia luminii se extinde și asupra dimensiunii sacramentale. În Euharistie[7], credincioșii primesc trupul înviat al lui Hristos, care este izvorul luminii necreate. Prin comuniunea sacramentală, lumina nu rămâne un obiect al contemplației, ci devine realitate lăuntrică, principiul unei transformări care atinge întreaga persoană: suflet și trup. Astfel, Ioan afirmă în mod clar caracterul integrator al luminii, care străbate întreaga viață eclezială[8].

Dimensiunea cosmică a luminii ocupă un loc la fel de important în gândirea damaschiniană. Ioan vede în lumina Învierii începutul restaurării universului întreg, nu doar al omului. Cosmosul, creat prin Logos, este chemat să participe la strălucirea pascală, iar această participare devine anticiparea transfigurării finale, când Dumnezeu va fi „totul în toate". Lumina paștilor nu rămâne astfel un eveniment interior comunității creștine, ci se extinde asupra întregii creații[9].

Prin armonizarea hristologiei, antropologiei, liturgiei și cosmologiei, Ioan Damaschin propune o viziune unitară asupra luminii, în care se concentrează întreaga dinamică a mântuirii. Lumina Învierii apare ca principiul care ține împreună întreaga revelație: în ea se întâlnesc adevărul dogmatic despre dumnezeirea lui Hristos, experiența vie a comuniunii cu El în Biserică și împlinirea eshatologică a omului și a creației în slava Sa[10]. Această viziune conferă operei sale o profunzime și o coerență remarcabile, făcând din teologia luminii un element central pentru înțelegerea tradiției creștine[11].

În teologia Sfântului Ioan Damaschin, hristologia niceeană constituie fundamentul care permite interpretarea corectă a luminii revelate în evenimentul Învierii. Ioan nu vede doctrina consubstanțialității ca pe un cadru abstract, ci ca pe axul care explică modul în care lumina se manifestă în Hristos. Pentru el, lumina pascală este confirmarea vizibilă a adevărului definit la Niceea: Fiul împărtășește în mod real aceeași ființă și aceeași slavă cu Tatăl[12].

Pornind de la această bază dogmatică, Ioan interpretează lumina nu ca un fenomen exterior, ci ca strălucirea propriei naturi divine a Fiului. În momentul Învierii, această lumină devine accesibilă în mod deplin prin trupul unit ipostatic cu Cuvântul. Astfel, lumina nu este o podoabă poetică, ci expresia ontologică a dumnezeirii manifestate în umanitate. În acest sens, Învierea este deopotrivă hristologică și revelatorie, deoarece confirmă adevărurile formulate de tradiția dogmatică.

Unul dintre punctele importante ale hristologiei damaschiniene este unirea ipostatică. Ioan subliniază că, în Hristos, divinitatea și umanitatea sunt unite fără amestecare și fără separare. Această unire face ca trupul omenesc să devină izvor al luminii divine. Nu este vorba de o lumină antrenată din exterior, ci de cea care izvorăște din Persoana Logosului și pătrunde întreaga natură asumată[13]. Învierea reprezintă momentul în care această luminare interioară a trupului atinge plinătatea vizibilă. Ioan acordă un rol privilegiat Scripturii în susținerea acestei perspective. El interpretează momentele importante ale revelației veterotestamentare ca anticipări ale luminii pascale: lumina creației, rugul aprins, stâlpul de foc, slava de pe Sinai, profețiile mesianice. Toate acestea sunt interpretate ca prefigurări ale luminii eterne care va iradia din Hristos în ziua Învierii. În acest fel, Ioan ancorează interpretarea sa hristologică într-o viziune unitară asupra întregii iconomii divine[14].

[5] În teologia Sfântului Ioan Damaschin, „lumina" nu este metaforă poetică, ci energie divină necreată, accesibilă omului prin har. Orientarea ontologică spre lumină exprimă vocația de îndumnezeire, iar lumina pascală revelează transfigurarea firii umane înviate în Hristos, adevăratul ei scop ultim.

[7] Pentru Ioan Damaschin, Euharistia este locul privilegiat al pătrunderii luminii necreate în om. Trupul înviat al lui Hristos transmite energiile dumnezeiești care transfigurează întreaga ființă, arătând că lumina nu este doar contemplație, ci realitate comunicată sacramental și transformatoare a vieții ecleziale.

Lumina Învierii devine criteriul interpretativ al întregii economii a mântuirii, integrând hristologia, experiența liturgică și orientarea eshatologică a creației spre slava lui Dumnezeu.

Această viziune unitară îl conduce pe Ioan Damaschin să atribuie luminii și un rol soteriologic. Lumina nu doar dezvăluie dumnezeirea lui Hristos, ci devine și forța prin care natura umană este transfigurată și ridicată la comuniune cu Dumnezeu.[15]. Prin Înviere, trupul lui Hristos devine primul trup uman transfigurat în lumina dumnezeiască, inaugurând astfel restaurarea firii omenești. Lumina devine, în această logică, energia prin care mântuirea atinge ființa umană în mod real și nu doar simbolic.

În acest context, Ioan dezvoltă o hermeneutică a luminii care dă sens întregii revelații. Evenimentele din viața lui Hristos sunt înțelese prin prisma luminii: Nașterea ca intrare a luminii în lume, Taborul ca anticipare a luminii pascale, iar Învierea ca plinătate a acestei lumini. Această viziune face ca lumina să fie criteriul teologic prin care toate misterele credinței se leagă într-un tot coerent. De aceea, lumina nu este un element marginal, ci un punct central al hristologiei damaschiniene[16].

Teologia luminii are și o importantă dimensiune apologetică. Ioan folosește lumina ca argument împotriva interpretărilor eronate ale lui Hristos. Pentru el, dacă lumina care se manifestă în Înviere este necreată, atunci Hristos nu poate fi considerat creatură. Lumina devine astfel mărturie împotriva arianismului și criteriu hermeneutic pentru interpretarea corectă a revelației. În acest fel, lumina funcționează atât ca experiență spirituală, cât și ca argument doctrinar[17].

Pe lângă dimensiunea apologetică, Ioan vede lumina ca principiu al unității dintre teologie și liturgie. Tot ceea ce dogma afirmă este trăit în mod concret în celebrarea pascală. Lumina Învierii nu rămâne un concept abstract, ci devine realitate văzută, cântată și împărtășită. Canonul pascal nu doar transmite o doctrină, ci o face trăită, arătând că lumina hristologică aparține vieții Bisericii, nu doar formulărilor teologice[18].

Fundamentele hristologice niceene constituie coloana vertebrală a teologiei luminii în opera Sfântului Ioan Damaschin. Pentru el, lumina Învierii este dovada vizibilă a consubstanțialității Fiului cu Tatăl, confirmarea unirii ipostatice și începutul restaurării firii omenești. Această perspectivă integratoare explică de ce lumina devine criteriul de interpretare a întregului mister creștin: în lumina Învierii se clarifică identitatea lui Hristos, vocația omului și destinul final al creației[19].

Pentru Sfântul Ioan Damaschin, doctrina luminii ocupă un loc central în înțelegerea modului în care Dumnezeu Se revelează și acționează în lume. Lumina este forma privilegiată prin care

[15] În teologia damaschiniană, lumina Învierii este temeiul transfigurării firii umane. Ea arată că mântuirea nu este doar juridică sau simbolică, ci o schimbare ontologică prin participarea la energiile divine. Trupul lui Hristos devine prototipul restaurării întregii umanități.

[17] Apare aici tema bine-cunoscută a „trecerii", deoarece Irmosul Cântării I se inspiră din cântarea de mulțumire a lui Moise și a Mariei, după trecerea poporului Israel prin Marea Roșie (Ieșirea 15,1-19). Cântarea lui Moise exprimă bucuria eliberării de sub puterea faraonului, în timp ce Irmosul pascal prezintă bucuria întregii creații în fața biruinței lui Hristos asupra morții. Deși nu există corespondențe textuale directe, motivul „trecerii" le este comun: Moise cântă trecerea din robie în libertate, iar Irmosul proclamă că, prin Învierea Sa, „Hristos Dumnezeu ne-a trecut" „din moarte la viață", din robia păcatului la libertatea vieții veșnice (André Lossky, Le canon des matines pascales byzantines..., 25-261).

Dumnezeu comunică omului realitatea prezenței Sale, fără a-Și diminua transcendența[20]. În această perspectivă, lumina nu este o imagine simbolică, ci un mod al energiilor divine necreate care pătrund în creație și o susțin în existență.

Un aspect central al teologiei lui Ioan Damaschin este afirmarea caracterului necreat al luminii dumnezeiești. Lumina care strălucește din Hristos, mai ales în evenimentul Învierii, nu ține de lumea creată, ci este manifestarea vizibilă a dumnezeirii Sale. Ea confirmă în mod experiențial adevărul mărturisit dogmatic la Sinodul de la Niceea: Fiul este de aceeași ființă cu Tatăl, împărtășind aceeași slavă și aceeași putere veșnică. În această lumină, doctrina energiilor divine capătă o dimensiune concretă – prin ele, omul poate percepe și trăi prezența reală a lui Dumnezeu în istorie[21].

Pentru Ioan, evenimentele Scripturii constituie cadrul privilegiat în care lumina devine revelatoare. Rugul aprins, stâlpul de foc, slava lui Dumnezeu pe Sinai — toate acestea sunt interpretate ca manifestări ale luminii necreate. Ioan vede în ele nu simple simboluri, ci anticipări reale ale luminii pascale, în care dumnezeirea se arată nu doar în mod indirect, ci în trupul uman al lui Hristos. Această continuitate îl conduce să construiască o viziune unitară a revelației, în care lumina devine firul conducător al planului mântuitor[22].

De aceea, lumina are în opera sa și o profundă dimensiune hristologică. Ioan subliniază că lumina Învierii nu se separă de persoana lui Hristos, ci este expresia naturii Sale divine. Trupul înviat nu reflectă o lumină exterioară, ci manifestă lumina necreată. Unirea ipostatică explică această realitate: divinitatea și umanitatea fiind unite în Persoana Fiului[23], lumina dumnezeiască transfigurează firea omenească. Ioan vede Învierea ca momentul în care această transfigurare devine deplin vizibilă[24].

Teologia luminii susține întreaga antropologie damaschiniană. Omul este creat după chipul lui Dumnezeu și, prin urmare, este orientat către lumină. Păcatul întunecă această orientare, dar nu o elimină. În mântuire, harul luminează treptat sufletul, restabilind capacitatea omului de a primi lumina divină. Pentru Ioan, această luminare este începutul îndumnezeirii, adică participarea reală la viața lui Dumnezeu. În acest cadru, lumina nu este doar revelare, ci și transformare, o energie care străbate ființa umană și o reorientează către izvorul ei[25].

Dimensiunea liturgică este inseparabilă de această teologie. În cult, lumina devine o realitate trăită, nu doar afirmată. Cântările, gesturile și simbolurile liturgice fac vizibilă lumina Învierii, iar credincioșii sunt invitați să intre în strălucirea ei. Ioan vede Liturghia ca spațiul în care lumina teologică devine experiență comunitară, unind credința Bisericii cu viața sacramentală. În mod special, Euharistia este prezentată ca participare la lumina trupului înviat, ceea ce conferă teologiei sale o puternică dimensiune mistică[26].

Lumina are în teologia damaschiniană și o dimensiune eshatologică. Pentru Ioan, lumina pascală anticipează lumina desăvârșită a Împărăției, în care Dumnezeu va fi „totul în toate". În această perspectivă, lumina nu aparține exclusiv timpului prezent, ci este un semn al viitorului. Omul, luminat prin Înviere și prin sacramente, este chemat să se pregătească pentru această lumină finală, în care [20] În concepția damaschiniană, lumina exprimă modul în care energiile divine necreate devin accesibile creației fără a compromite transcendența lui Dumnezeu. Ea reprezintă prezența activă a lui Dumnezeu în lume, menținând existența tuturor și oferind cadrul în care omul poate percepe și primi revelația divină.

[23] La Ioan Damaschin, lumina Învierii este inseparabilă de Persoana lui Hristos și exprimă energiile divine ale Fiului manifestate prin trupul înviat. Unirea ipostatică face posibilă transfigurarea reală a firii umane, iar Învierea dezvăluie pe deplin această luminare interioară a umanității asumate (Cf. John Meyendorff, Byzantine Theology: Historical Trends and Doctrinal Themes, New York 1974, 143–146).

[25] La Ioan Damaschin, lumina divină constituie principiul restaurării firii umane: harul luminează sufletul, redându-i orientarea originară spre Dumnezeu și inaugurând procesul îndumnezeirii. Lumina nu este doar manifestare a prezenței divine, ci energie transformatoare care reînnoiește și reorientează omul (cf. Andrew Louth, St John Damascene: Tradition and Originality in Byzantine Theology, Oxford 2002, 159–165).

[26] Pentru Ioan Damaschin, liturgia pascală devine locul unde lumina Învierii se trăiește efectiv: cântările și riturile transformă lumina divină într-o realitate comunitară. Euharistia, ca participare la trupul înviat, introduce credincioșii în strălucirea energiilor divine, conferind teologiei sale un pronunțat caracter mistic și sacramental (Cf. Aidan Nichols, Byzantine Gospel: The Theology of St. John Damascene, Edinburgh 1994, 112–118).

întreaga creație va fi transfigurată. Astfel, lumina devine atât începutul, cât și sfârșitul itinerarului mântuirii.

Lumina necreată descoperă dumnezeirea lui Hristos, lucrează transfigurarea omului, dă formă vieții Bisericii și orientă întreaga creație spre împlinirea ei eshatologică. În această sinteză coerentă, Ioan Damaschin se profilează ca unul dintre cei mai importanți teologi ai luminii din tradiția creștină, oferind o perspectivă unitară în care revelația, mântuirea și transfigurarea universului sunt strâns legate de aceeași lucrare luminoasă a lui Dumnezeu.

Imnografia Sfântului Ioan Damaschin este locul în care teologia luminii ajunge la expresia ei cea mai vie și mai accesibilă credincioșilor. Dacă sistemele dogmatice expun adevărul în mod conceptual, imnografia îl traduce în limbajul rugăciunii, al cântării și al experienței liturgice. Canonul pascal, compus de Ioan, reprezintă unul dintre cele mai importante exemple de teologie exprimată poetic, în care lumina nu este doar tema centrală, ci și atmosfera spirituală în care se desfășoară întreaga celebrare[27].

În acest canon, lumina apare încă din primele tropare ca semn al biruinței lui Hristos asupra morții. Ioan nu descrie lumina ca un simplu ornament literar, ci ca manifestarea reală a dumnezeirii care iese la iveală prin Înviere. Troparele invită comunitatea să pășească în această lumină, subliniind faptul că participarea liturgică este o intrare în strălucirea pascală. Astfel, canonul devine un spațiu de întâlnire între teologie și experiență, în care lumina se comunică prin însăși structura cântării.

În imnografia sa, Ioan Damaschin pune în permanentă legătură lumina cu dumnezeirea lui Hristos, arătând că strălucirea liturgică nu este doar un simbol, ci chiar manifestarea prezenței Sale divine în mijlocul Bisericii. Pentru el, lumina care se arată în ziua Învierii este aceeași care a strălucit pe Tabor și aceeași pe care Tatăl o împărtășește Fiului din veșnicie. Această continuitate teologică este exprimată nu prin argumentație dogmatică, ci prin repetarea poetică a motivului luminii. În acest mod, imnografia devine o predică rituală, prin care Biserica proclamă adevărul consubstanțialității într-un limbaj accesibil tuturor[28].

Unul dintre elementele definitorii ale canonului pascal este caracterul său comunitar. Ioan compune într-un mod care nu izolează credinciosul, ci îl integrează în comunitatea luminată a Bisericii. Repetițiile, refrenele și ritmul cântării sunt gândite pentru a crea unitate spirituală, astfel încât lumina să fie primită nu individual, ci în comuniune. Această dimensiune eclezială a luminii este o constantă a teologiei damaschiniene, care vede în Biserică spațiul privilegiat al luminării[29].

Imnografia exprimă și dimensiunea antropologică a luminii. Troparele nu se limitează la a proclama lumina învierii, ci invită credincioșii să se lase transformați interior de această lumină. Ioan folosește imagini ale inimii luminate, ale întunericului risipit, ale omului renăscut în lumina lui Hristos. Aceste expresii nu sunt metafore morale, ci semne ale procesului real de luminare prin care omul participă la viața divină. Astfel, imnografia devine un ghid spiritual, orientând credinciosul spre îndumnezeire[30].

Dimensiunea cosmică a luminii este exprimată cu o forță deosebită în imnografie. Ioan afirmă că lumina pascală nu se limitează la spațiul comunității, ci se extinde asupra întregului univers. Expresia „toate s-au umplut de lumină” sintetizează această viziune cosmologică: marea, pământul, cerurile și cele de dedesubt sunt cuprinse de strălucirea Învierii. În mod poetic, canonul exprimă o teologie în care întreaga creație participă la restaurarea inaugurată de Hristos. Astfel, imnografia devine proclamare cosmică, iar Biserica se recunoaște ca mărturie în interiorul acestui univers luminat[31].

[30] În imnografia pascală, luminarea interioară a credinciosului exprimă participarea reală la energiile divine. Imaginile transformării inimii, alungării întunericului și renașterii în Hristos nu sunt simple metafore morale, ci descrieri poetice ale procesului îndumnezeirii, trăit personal și comunitar în liturgie (cf. Dumitru Stăniloae, Spiritualitate și comuniune în Liturghia ortodoxă, București 1993, 152–156).

[31] Imnografia pascală exprimă extinderea luminii Învierii asupra întregului cosmos. Tema „toate s-au umplut de lumină” arată că restaurarea adusă de Hristos nu privește doar omul, ci întreaga creație. Canonul devine astfel un imn cosmic, în care universul participă la luminarea inaugurată de Înviere (cf. Kallistos Ware, The Orthodox Way, Crestwood NY 1995, 67–70).

În canonul pascal există și o dimensiune sacramentală subtilă. Ioan sugerează în tropare că lumina pascală devine accesibilă în mod deplin prin participarea la Euharistie, în care credincioșii primesc trupul înviat, izvorul luminii necreate. În acest sens, imnografia nu doar descrie lumina, ci pregătește sufletele pentru primirea ei reală în sacrament. Astfel, cântarea devine o pedagogie spirituală, conducând credincioșii spre luminarea interioară care izvorăște din sacramente.

Imnografia lui Ioan Damaschin reprezintă o mărturie unică asupra modului în care lumina Învierii poate fi înțeleasă, celebrată și trăită în Biserică. În cântările sale, teologia se unește organic cu poezia liturgică, doctrina se transformă în rugăciune, iar contemplația devine participare la viața lui Hristos. În canonul pascal, lumina devine elementul care armonizează toate dimensiunile existenței creștine: credința, cultul, destinul omului și sensul creației. Astfel, Ioan Damaschin oferă Bisericii nu doar o capodoperă imnografică, ci și una dintre cele mai profunde sinteze ale teologiei luminii din întreaga tradiție creștină.

Antropologia Sfântului Ioan Damaschin este profund marcată de teologia luminii, întrucât destinul omului este înțeles ca intrare progresivă în lumina lui Dumnezeu. Pentru Ioan, omul poartă chipul lui Dumnezeu și este, prin însăși structura sa, orientat către lumină. Lumina nu este doar o realitate exterioară, ci mediul natural în care firea umană își regăsește plenitudinea. Această orientare fundamentală explică de ce mântuirea este văzută ca proces de luminare, prin care chipul întunecat de păcat este restaurat[32].

În acest context, păcatul este interpretat de Ioan nu ca simplă încălcare morală, ci ca diminuare a capacității de a primi lumina divină. Întunecarea spirituală afectează întreaga persoană și rupe dinamica naturală a comuniunii cu Dumnezeu. Restaurarea, în schimb, este prezentată ca luminare treptată, prin care harul redeschide ochiul lăuntric al omului și îi permite să participe din nou la strălucirea dumnezeiască. În această logică, lumina devine criteriul sănătății spirituale și al adevăratei libertăți[33].

Un aspect fundamental al antropologiei lui Ioan Damaschin este viziunea unitară asupra persoanei umane. El respinge orice separare radicală între suflet și trup și afirmă că acestea formează împreună o singură existență. Lumina Învierii nu transfigurează doar sufletul, ci și trupul, care este chemat să participe la slava viitoare. Astfel, destinul omului nu constă în eliberarea de corporalitate, ci în transfigurarea ei într-o existență luminată, asemenea trupului înviat al lui Hristos. În această perspectivă, lumina devine principiul transformării complete a persoanei umane[34].

Această dimensiune integratoare se manifestă cu putere în perspectiva sacramentală a lui Ioan Damaschin. El acordă un rol central Euharistiei, în care credincioșii primesc trupul înviat al lui Hristos, izvor al luminii necreate. Participarea la acest sacrament nu doar întărește viața sufletească, ci o luminează, pregătind omul pentru îndumnezeire. Prin comuniunea euharistică, omul gustă anticipat lumina eshatologică și începe restaurarea chipului umbrit de păcat. În acest fel, liturgia devine spațiul în care teologia luminii se unește cu transformarea concretă a persoanei.

În imnografia pascală, Ioan folosește imagini antropologice care întăresc această viziune. Troparele vorbesc despre „inimi luminate", „suflete curățite", „vieți renăscute în lumină". Aceste expresii nu sunt simple metafore morale, ci reflectă realitatea harului care transfigurează lăuntric persoana. Imnografia devine astfel un manual spiritual pentru iluminare, orientând comunitatea către participarea tot mai deplină la lumina lui Hristos.

Ioan Damaschin abordează antropologia luminii dintr-o perspectivă profund hristologică. Chemarea omului la lumină își are temeiul în faptul că Hristos este „lumina lumii" și modelul deplin al umanității transfigurate. Prin Întrupare, lumina dumnezeiască pătrunde în condiția umană, iar prin [32] Pentru Ioan Damaschin, orientarea omului spre lumină derivă din faptul că el poartă chipul lui Dumnezeu. Lumina este mediul firesc al împlinirii umane, iar mântuirea reprezintă restaurarea capacității de a o primi. Procesul luminării exprimă vindecarea și transfigurarea ființei umane întunecate de păcat (Cf. Dumitru Stăniloae, Teologia Dogmatică Ortodoxă, vol. II, București 1997, 91–94).

[33] Sfântul Ioan Damaschin, Canonul Indictionului, de la Utrenia din 1 Seprembrie, Cântarea I, în Mineiul pe Septembrie, București 2003, 14.

[34] În antropologia lui Ioan Damaschin, lumina Învierii transfigurează întreaga persoană, nu doar sufletul. Unitatea suflet–trup exclude orice dualism, iar trupul este chemat să participe la slava lui Hristos. Lumina devine principiul îndumnezeirii integrale, orientând omul spre destinul său eshatologic (Christopher Veniamin, The Orthodox Understanding of Salvation: Theosis in Scripture and Tradition, Dalton 2013, 132–136).

Înviere ea strălucește în trupul lui Hristos, dezvăluind destinul la care este chemată firea noastră prin har. Astfel, Hristos nu este doar izvorul luminii, ci și forma ei desăvârșită: în El omul contemplă ceea ce este chemat să devină[35].

Dimensiunea ascetică ocupă un loc important în această viziune antropologică. Ioan prezintă viața ascetică drept colaborare cu lumina dumnezeiască. Rugăciunea, postul, milostenia și curățirea inimii sunt pași prin care omul își deschide ființa către iluminare. Ascetismul nu este o negare a lumii, ci un mod de a înlătura umbrele păcatului pentru a permite luminii să pătrundă fără piedici. În acest sens, viața morală devine un proces de iluminare continuă, orientat spre transfigurarea finală.

Antropologia luminii la Ioan include și dimensiunea comunitară a persoanei. Restaurarea nu se petrece în izolare, ci în Biserică, unde lumina se transmite prin cuvânt, cântare și sacramente. Comunitatea devine locul în care omul învață să primească și să împărtășească lumina. În această perspectivă, Biserica nu este doar o instituție, ci icoana unei umanități restaurate, unite în lumina Învierii.

Antropologia damaschiniană evidențiază unitatea profundă dintre identitatea persoanei umane și lumina divină. Omul este creat pentru lumină, chemat la lumină și restaurat prin lumină. În această viziune coerentă, lumina nu este un simplu element descriptiv, ci principiul însuși al mântuirii și al îndumnezeirii, care dă formă întregii existențe creștine.

Teologia Sfântului Ioan Damaschin nu limitează lumina Învierii la nivelul experienței personale sau comunitare, ci o extinde asupra întregului cosmos. Pentru el, lumina pascală nu este doar semn al biruinței lui Hristos, ci începutul transformării universale. Învierea nu reprezintă o simplă revenire la viață, ci o intrare a luminii dumnezeiești în toate straturile existenței, inaugurând o lume nouă. Această viziune îl așază pe Ioan printre cei mai coerenți teologi ai transfigurării cosmice[36]. În perspectiva sa, cosmosul este creat prin Logos, iar lumina este prima realitate care poartă amprenta ordinii divine. Astfel, lumina pascală este înțeleasă ca restaurare a luminii primordiale, o reactivare a principiului care a structurat creația încă de la început. În acest sens, Învierea este interpretată ca momentul în care creația intră din nou în ritmul său originar, după ce fusese afectată de întunecarea păcatului. Lumina pascală devine, astfel, începutul unei noi creații[37].

Dimensiunea cosmică a luminii este evidențiată cu o deosebită intensitate în imnografia pascală. Ioan afirmă că „toate s-au umplut de lumină”: cerul, pământul, marea și chiar lumea celor de jos. Această universalitate nu este doar poetică, ci exprimă o convingere teologică: întreaga creație participă la transfigurarea inaugurată de Hristos. Cosmosul nu mai este perceput ca un cadru inert al istoriei mântuirii, ci ca un actor implicat în restaurarea divină[38].

Ioan integrează această viziune cosmică în cadrul mai larg al tradiției patristice. Pentru el, lumina Învierii reprezintă împlinirea profețiilor veterotestamentare privind restaurarea creației și confirmarea teofaniilor care au pregătit poporul pentru revelația pascală. Evenimente precum slava lui Dumnezeu pe Sinai sau lumina din viziunile profetice sunt interpretate ca fragmente ale unei perspective cosmologice mai ample, care se realizează pe deplin în Învierea Domnului[39].

Această viziune cosmică este strâns legată de antropologia luminii la Ioan Damaschin. Omul, creat ca microcosmos, este chemat să fie puntea de legătură dintre lumea materială și cea spirituală. De aceea, luminarea omului are urmări cosmice: odată cu restaurarea persoanei umane, întreaga creație este reașezată pe direcția ei firească spre Dumnezeu. Destinul universului devine astfel inseparabil de destinul omului, deoarece lumina pascală se revarsă în lume prin trupul înviat al lui Hristos și prin Biserica alcătuită din cei transfigurați de această lumină.

[37] Ioan Damaschin interpretează lumina pascală ca restaurare a luminii originare a creației. Deoarece Logosul este principiul ordonator al lumii, lumina Învierii readuce cosmosul în armonia inițială, înlăturând întunecarea produsă de păcat. Ea devine începutul noii creații, inaugurate prin Hristos (John Behr, The Mystery of Christ: Life in Death, Crestwood NY 2006, 165–169).

[39] Ioan Damaschin integrează lumina Învierii în continuitatea marilor teofanii veterotestamentare. Slava Sinaiului și lumina profeților sunt înțelese ca anticipări ale restaurării cosmice împlinite în Hristos. Învierea devine astfel punctul culminant al unei economii divine în care lumina conduce întreaga creație spre împlinirea ei (Jaroslav Pelikan, The Christian Tradition, vol. 2: The Spirit of Eastern Christendom (600–1700), Chicago 1974, 105–109).

Teologia damaschiniană pune un accent deosebit pe caracterul unificator al luminii. În viziunea lui Ioan, lumina Învierii este energia divină care aduce armonie între cer și pământ, între văzut și nevăzut, între trecutul creației și viitorul ei eshatologic. Lumina nu doar alungă întunericul, ci restaurează relațiile, reface ordinea cosmică și orientează întreaga existență spre împlinirea finală. În acest sens, lumina pascală devine principiu al unității cosmice[40].

Imnografia pascală exprimă această unitate prin limbaj simbolic, dar cu un profund conținut teologic. Ioan descrie universul transfigurat: stelele care reflectă lumina Învierii, elementele naturii care se înnoiesc, „toată zidirea" care se bucură de strălucirea restaurată. Aceste imagini nu sunt simple alegorii, ci expresii ale convingerii că Învierea are efecte reale asupra cosmosulu[41]. Lumea este chemată să participe la lumina care izvorăște din trupul înviat al lui Hristos.

În această perspectivă, cosmologia damaschiniană nu este separată de eshatologie. Lumina Învierii anticipează lumina veșnică a Împărăției, în care întreaga creație va fi transfigurată. Ceea ce se întâmplă în momentul Învierii este începutul unei transformări care va fi deplină doar în Parusie. Ioan sugerează că lumea actuală este un spațiu în tranziție, luminat parțial de slava pascală, dar încă în așteptarea luminii definitive.

Dimensiunea cosmică a luminii la Sfântul Ioan Damaschin dezvăluie o viziune optimistă și profund coerentă asupra destinului universului. Lumina pascală nu este doar un element spiritual sau moral, ci principiu ontologic al restaurării cosmice. În această lumină, cosmosul nu este un decor al mântuirii, ci participant activ la transfigurarea inaugurată de Hristos. Prin această perspectivă, Ioan se distinge ca un teolog al luminii universale, în care creația și mântuirea sunt unite de aceeași strălucire divină.

Teologia luminii elaborată de Sfântul Ioan Damaschin reprezintă una dintre cele mai coerente sinteze patristice, în care hristologia, antropologia, liturgica și cosmologia se unesc într-o viziune teologică profundă. Lumina nu este, în această perspectivă, un element decorativ al limbajului teologic, ci principiul central prin care se exprimă revelația dumnezeiască. În lumina Învierii se regăsește fundamentul consubstanțialității, confirmarea unirii ipostatice și începutul restaurării omului și a creației[42].

Pentru Ioan, lumina care izvorăște din trupul înviat este manifestarea vizibilă a naturii divine a lui Hristos. În această lumină se confirmă ceea ce Sinodul de la Niceea a formulat dogmatic: Fiul este de o ființă cu Tatăl[43]. Lumina devine astfel locul în care teologia dogmatică se întâlnește cu experiența revelatorie, într-un mod care transcende explicația pur conceptuală.

În plan antropologic, lumina joacă un rol transformator. Omul, purtător al chipului lui Dumnezeu, este chemat să se lase luminat din interior, pentru ca prin har să fie restaurat în vocația sa originară. În viziunea damaschiniană, îndumnezeirea nu este o metaforă, ci procesul real prin care omul participă la lumina dumnezeiască. Această transformare cuprinde întreaga persoană și îi oferă orientarea spre viața veșnică.

Imnografia pascală oferă un cadru liturgic în care această teologie devine experiență. Canonul compus de Ioan este unul dintre cele mai clare exemple de îmbinare între dogmă și rugăciune. În cântările sale, lumina nu este doar proclamată, ci trăită; comunitatea este invitată să intre în strălucirea Învierii, să primească lumina și să devină purtătoare a ei. În acest sens, imnografia funcționează ca un instrument de luminare și de formare spirituală, integrând teologia în viața Bisericii.

Perspectiva cosmică a luminii completează această viziune. Pentru Ioan, lumina Învierii nu transformă doar omul, ci întreaga creație. Cosmosul este chemat să participe la restaurarea inaugurată de Hristos și să se orienteze către lumina eshatologică a Împărăției. Această viziune conferă teologiei [41] Imnografia pascală a lui Ioan Damaschin exprimă credința că Învierea transformă întreaga creație. Imaginile naturii care se luminează și se înnoiește indică faptul că efectele pascale nu sunt metaforice, ci reale: cosmosul este chemat să participe la lumina dumnezeiască revărsată din trupul înviat al lui Hristos (cf. sale un caracter profund, în care universul este văzut nu ca o realitate condamnată la degradare, ci ca un spațiu destinat transfigurării și împlinirii.

În ansamblu, teologia luminii formulată de Ioan Damaschin dezvăluie o perspectivă unitară asupra istoriei mântuirii. Lumina pascală devine criteriul de interpretare al întregii revelații și punctul în care se întâlnesc creația, întruparea, mântuirea și destinul cosmic. Această sinteză nu doar reafirmă profunzimea gândirii damaschiniene, ci și relevanța actuală a operei sale: în lumina Învierii, omul și cosmosul își descoperă adevărata identitate și destinație.

Prin această viziune, Sfântul Ioan Damaschin se distinge ca unul dintre marii teologi ai luminii creștine. Opera lui arată că lumina nu este un simplu simbol, ci realitatea prin care Dumnezeu revelează, restaurează și conduce întreaga existență spre împlinirea finală. În lumina pascală se reflectă atât adevărul dogmatic, cât și dinamica spirituală a Bisericii, precum și întreaga chemare a lumii către transfigurare.

REASON, REVELATION, AND CONTEMPLATION IN THE THEOLOGY OF ST. JOHN OF DAMASCUS

Cristian Dragomirescu
PhD Student, University of Bucharest

Abstract: This article explores the function of reason in the knowledge of God according to St. John of Damascus, highlighting his unique position as the principal architect of Eastern Christian scholasticism. For John, reason is not opposed to faith but operates as its natural ally, enabling the human person to discern the order of creation and recognize the divine presence reflected within it. Rooted in a theology that affirms both the intelligibility of the world and the spiritual orientation of the human mind, the Damascene understanding of reason integrates philosophical inquiry with revealed truth. By analyzing the relationship between natural knowledge, contemplative ascent, and the illumination of grace, this study reveals how John constructs a holistic epistemology in which reason becomes a path toward communion rather than an autonomous instrument. Furthermore, the article examines how this synthesis shapes John's defense of Christian doctrine and his contribution to the development of theological method. Ultimately, reason emerges as an essential dimension of the human vocation: a gift through which the person participates in divine wisdom and responds to the call of truth.

Între marii teologi ai tradiției creștine, Sfântul Ioan Damaschin se distinge prin articularea unei sinteze remarcabile între credință și rațiune. Considerat pe bună dreptate „părintele scolasticii răsăritene", el situează rațiunea într-un loc privilegiat în demersul cunoașterii lui Dumnezeu, fără a o separa însă de revelație. În perspectiva sa, rațiunea nu este opozantul credinței, ci instrumentul natural prin care mintea umană poate percepe ordinea lumii și, prin aceasta, înțelepciunea Creatorului. Prin urmare, epistemologia damaschiniană se întemeiază pe o armonie fundamentală între capacitatea cognitivă a omului și structura rațională a creației[1].

Pentru Ioan, cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu se desfășoară pe două niveluri complementare: unul natural, accesibil rațiunii, și unul supranatural, oferit de revelație. Această distincție nu conduce la o separare, ci la o continuitate. Lumea creată, fiind ordonată prin Logos, devine un mediu privilegiat pentru exercițiul rațiunii. Contemplând ordinea firii, omul poate ajunge la o cunoaștere analogică a lui Dumnezeu, recunoscându-L ca origine și finalitate a cosmosului. Această perspectivă acordă rațiunii un rol central în itinerariul spiritual, dar o menține în același timp în dependență de har[2]. Este avută în vedere puterea și capacitatea rațiunii umane de a înțelege și explica realitatea prin gândire logică. Se face referire la cât de departe poate ajunge mintea omenească prin propriile sale mijloace, fără sprijinul revelației. Această limitare nu este o slăbiciune, ci expresia respectului față de transcendența lui Dumnezeu. În această lumină, rațiunea nu devine un scop în sine, ci un drum către o întâlnire personală cu Dumnezeu, în care revelația împlinește ceea ce intelectul poate doar intui. Astfel, credința nu contrazice rațiunea, ci o depășește în mod firesc, conducând-o spre un nivel superior de cunoaștere.

Epistemologia teologală pe care Ioan o propune se sprijină pe o antropologie solidă. Omul este creat după chipul lui Dumnezeu, ceea ce înseamnă că rațiunea sa reflectă, într-o anumită măsură, raționalitatea divină. Această corespondență ontologică permite omului să perceapă ordinea lumii și să recunoască prezența Logosului în creație. Pentru Ioan, acest proces de cunoaștere este actul prin care omul își exercită vocația sa spirituală: rațiunea devine astfel un instrument de comuniune, nu doar de analiză[3].

În același timp, Ioan subliniază rolul harului în dinamica cunoașterii. Harul nu suspendă funcția rațiunii, ci o vindecă și o ridică. Căderea a afectat capacitatea cognitivă a omului, întunecându-i înțelegerea și orientarea, însă harul restabilește claritatea percepției și direcția ei corectă. În această perspectivă, rațiunea iluminată devine capabilă să depășească limitele sale naturale și să intre într-o cunoaștere participativă a lui Dumnezeu. Astfel, epistemologia damaschiniană este în mod fundamental sinergică: cunoașterea este rezultatul cooperării între harul divin și efortul uman[4].

Pentru Ioan, rațiunea este indispensabilă și în teologia dogmatică. Structura logică a tratatelor sale, claritatea definițiilor și apetența pentru demonstrația conceptuală arată că teologia are nevoie de instrumentele rațiunii pentru a exprima adecvat conținutul credinței. În această privință, Damaschin se apropie de metoda teologică a Occidentului medieval, anticipând parțial demersul scolastic. Totuși, el rămâne fidel tradiției răsăritene, pentru care teologia nu este doar discurs, ci participare. Rațiunea, deși necesară, nu e suficientă: ea trebuie însoțită de rugăciune, smerenie și viață virtuoasă pentru a conduce spre adevăr[5].

Introducerea acestei perspective permite o înțelegere mai profundă a funcției rațiunii în teologia lui Ioan. Ea nu este doar un instrument descriptiv, ci o dimensiune constitutivă a persoanei umane, orientată spre Dumnezeu. Studiul de față își propune să examineze acest rol complex al rațiunii, analizând modul în care Ioan articulează raportul dintre cunoașterea naturală și revelația supranaturală, precum și funcția rațiunii în viața spirituală și în definirea dogmatică.

În viziunea Sfântului Ioan Damaschin, rațiunea nu este un element secundar al naturii umane, ci darul fundamental prin care omul poate percepe ordinea lumii și, prin intermediul ei, pe Dumnezeu. Ea este înscrisă în însăși structura creației, derivând din actul divin prin care Logosul a adus totul la existență. Astfel, rațiunea umană este concepută ca participare la raționalitatea Logosului, ceea ce înseamnă că omul, în mod natural, este orientat spre adevăr și are capacitatea de a-l recunoaște în creație[6].

Pentru Ioan, această raționalitate naturală este un instrument indispensabil în teologia naturală. El insistă asupra faptului că omul poate ajunge, prin contemplarea lumii, la cunoașterea existenței lui Dumnezeu și a unor atribute ale Sale. Ordinea, frumusețea și armonia universului nu sunt simple impresii estetice, ci urme ale înțelepciunii divine. Cosmosul funcționează ca o „carte a creației", în care mintea umană citește semnele prezenței Creatorului. În acest sens, rațiunea nu este în opoziție cu revelația, ci reprezintă primul pas al unui itinerar spiritual care își găsește împlinirea în credință[7].

Această epistemologie se sprijină pe o intuiție fundamentală: lumea este inteligibilă pentru că a fost creată de un Dumnezeu inteligibil. Pentru Ioan, cosmosul nu este guvernat de hazard sau necesitate impersonală, ci de o rațiune care îl structurează și îl conduce. Astfel, rațiunea umană își găsește corespondența în raționalitatea creației; între mintea omului și ordinea lumii există o consonanță ontologică, rezultată din faptul că aceeași înțelepciune divină este sursa ambelor. Această corespondență justifică folosirea rațiunii în cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu, deoarece ceea ce este adevărat la nivelul lumii este reflexul adevărului divin.

Pentru Ioan, capacitatea omului de a contempla lumea nu este doar un act intelectual, ci o formă de ascultare spirituală. Rațiunea îl conduce pe om spre uimire, iar uimirea devine începutul teologiei. Ordinea creației trezește dorința de a cunoaște cauza ei ultimă, iar această dorință este o expresie a structurii naturale a sufletului uman. Astfel, rațiunea nu este un mecanism autonom, ci un drum interior care, atunci când este folosit corect, conduce inevitabil spre Dumnezeu. În această lumină, cunoașterea naturală devine o veritabilă formă de teologie[8].

În același timp, Ioan este atent să excludă orice formă de autosuficiență rațională. El afirmă cu claritate că rațiunea, deși necesară, are limite. Ea poate descoperi că Dumnezeu există, dar nu poate înțelege esența Lui. Această limitare nu reprezintă un obstacol epistemic, ci o protejare a misterului divin. Rațiunea are rolul de a conduce la credință, iar credința deschide mintea spre adevăruri care o depășesc. Prin această articulare, Ioan evită atât raționalismul, cât și fideismul, situându-se într-un echilibru teologic exemplar.

Totodată, rațiunea este strâns legată de libertatea umană. Ioan subliniază că omul nu este constrâns să îl cunoască pe Dumnezeu, ci este invitat. Funcția rațiunii nu este de a impune adevărul, ci de a-l descoperi. Omul, fiind creat după chipul lui Dumnezeu, are capacitatea de a discerne binele de rău și adevărul de eroare. Acest discernământ este actul prin care rațiunea participă la înțelepciunea lui Dumnezeu. Prin urmare, cunoașterea naturală nu este un proces neutru, ci unul moral, deoarece adevărul cere un răspuns al libertății[9].

În această perspectivă, rațiunea devine o dimensiune esențială a vocației umane. Ea nu este doar un instrument filozofic, ci o parte constitutivă a chemării omului la comuniune cu Dumnezeu. Ioan vede rațiunea ca pe un dar menit să fie folosit pentru a pătrunde în misterul creației și, prin aceasta, în misterul lui Dumnezeu. De aceea, folosirea rațiunii nu este opțională în viața spirituală, ci necesară: omul este chemat să își împlinească demnitatea de ființă rațională prin participarea la adevărul divin. Astfel, în teologia lui Ioan Damaschin, rațiunea este un dar natural, dar profund teologic. Ea permite omului să înțeleagă ordinea lumii, să recunoască prezența lui Dumnezeu și să intre într-un dialog cu realitatea creată. Prin articularea acestei viziuni, Ioan fundamentează o teologie a rațiunii care anticipează într-o anumită măsură dezvoltările ulterioare ale scolasticii, fără a renunța la dimensiunea contemplativă specifică tradiției răsăritene[10].

Pentru Sfântul Ioan Damaschin, credința și rațiunea nu apar ca două registre antagonice, ci ca două dimensiuni complementare ale cunoașterii adevărului. Această complementaritate se întemeiază pe însăși structura creației: rațiunea este darul prin care omul descoperă ordinea lumii, iar credința este răspunsul liber la revelația dumnezeiască. Teologia damaschiniană refuză atât raționalismul autosuficient, cât și fideismul care disprețuiește rațiunea. În schimb, Ioan propune o epistemologie sinergică, în care cele două facultăți se susțin reciproc în căutarea cunoașterii lui Dumnezeu[11].

În cadrul acestui raport, credința deține primatul, dar nu în mod exclusiv, ci în sensul că deschide o perspectivă asupra realităților care depășesc capacitatea naturală a rațiunii. Ioan subliniază că rațiunea poate indica existența lui Dumnezeu și unele atribute ale Sale, însă misterele centrale ale credinței – Treimea, întruparea, harul – nu pot fi pătrunse prin speculație. Credința nu desființează rațiunea, ci o luminează, conferindu-i direcția adecvată. Fără luminarea credinței, rațiunea riscă să rătăcească printre opinii, să cadă în autosuficiență sau în contradicție[12]. Totuși, Ioan nu înțelege credința ca un act irațional. Dimpotrivă, credința este un act al rațiunii, prin care omul acceptă adevărul revelat pe baza autorității lui Dumnezeu. Această autoritate nu este una arbitrară, ci întemeiată pe veracitatea lui Dumnezeu și pe experiența istorică a Bisericii. Astfel, credința este o extindere naturală a rațiunii: mintea umană, recunoscând limitele propriei cunoașteri, acceptă ceea ce este revelat dincolo de aceste limite. Prin urmare, credința împlinește rațiunea, nu o anulează.

Un alt aspect important în gândirea lui Ioan este modul în care rațiunea ajută la formularea credinței. Dogmatica sa este structurată logic, utilizând concepte precise și argumente deductive. Această abordare arată că teologia necesită rigoare intelectuală pentru a evita confuziile doctrinare. De aceea, Ioan este văzut ca precursor al metodei scolastice: el demonstrează că adevărurile revelate pot fi explicate și apărate prin argumente raționale, fără a le dilua caracterul misterial. Astfel, rațiunea devine instrument de clarificare și de protejare a credinței[13]. Pentru Ioan, credința nu exclude investigația rațională, ci o stimulează. Cunoașterea revelată trezește în om dorința de a înțelege mai profund sensul adevărurilor pe care le primește. Această dinamică este vizibilă în explicarea întrupării, unde Ioan folosește distincții conceptuale – fire, ipostas, voință – pentru a elucida misterul fără a-l reduce la rațiune. Astfel, teologia devine un efort al rațiunii de a formula adecvat ceea ce credința afirmă.

Ioan acordă un rol crucial experienței spirituale, afirmând că rațiunea, fără purificare morală, devine incapabilă să perceapă adevărul. Pasiunile necontrolate, mândria sau interesul egoist întunecă mintea și o fac incapabilă să contemple ordinea divină. Credința, însă, purifică intelectul, făcându-l apt pentru contemplare. Prin urmare, raportul credință–rațiune nu este unul pur teoretic, ci unul transformator: credința vindecă rațiunea, iar rațiunea susține credința în drumul către adevăr[14]. În plus, Ioan distinge între cunoașterea discursivă, proprie rațiunii, și cunoașterea contemplativă, care este dar al harului. Rațiunea pregătește terenul, dar contemplarea este cea care unește sufletul cu Dumnezeu. Această distincție arată că rațiunea nu este absolutizată, ci integrată într-o ierarhie epistemologică în care harul deține primatul. Totuși, fără rațiune, contemplarea nu ar putea fi nici înțeleasă, nici exprimată. Această armonie face din Ioan o figură emblematică a echilibrului între teologie și filozofie.

Astfel, credința și rațiunea se întâlnesc în mod exemplar în Liturghie. Pentru Ioan, Liturghia este locul unde adevărul revelat devine experiență și unde rațiunea este ridicată dincolo de limitele sale naturale. În Liturghie, rațiunea se închină misterului, nu prin negarea ei, ci prin recunoașterea transcendenței divine. Această perspectivă face din raportul credință–rațiune nu o tensiune, ci o sinergie destinată să conducă omul spre plenitudinea cunoașterii lui Dumnezeu.

Un aspect important al gândirii lui Ioan Damaschin este modul în care integrează instrumentele rațiunii în formularea teologiei. Spre deosebire de tendințele pur apofatice ale unor autori răsăriteni, Ioan recunoaște valoarea metodologică a definițiilor și distincțiilor conceptuale în procesul de exprimare a credinței. Folosirea sistematică a acestor instrumente îl apropie de metoda scolastică, anticipând prin rigoarea lui multe dintre preocupările teologilor medievali. Pentru Ioan, definirea corectă a termenilor nu este un exercițiu dialectic steril, ci o condiție necesară pentru exprimarea fidelă a adevărului revelat[15].

În formularea dogmaticii, Ioan insistă asupra distincției între esență și energie, între fire și ipostas, între natură și voință. Aceste distincții nu sunt artificial introduse în structura teologiei, ci provin din analiza atentă a datelor Scripturii și din Tradiția Bisericii. Ele permit articularea unei teologii coerente, în care misterele credinței sunt exprimate fără confuzie și fără reducționism. În acest sens, distincțiile conceptuale nu reduc misterul, ci îl protejează de interpretări greșite. Prin ele, rațiunea devine un instrument de clarificare și de apărare doctrinară[16].

Demonstrația teologică ocupă, de asemenea, un loc important în opera damaschiniană. Ioan formulează argumente logice pentru a explica de ce anumite doctrine sunt coerente, în timp ce altele, precum ereziile hristologice, conduc la contradicții. El arată că rațiunea, folosită corect, poate identifica incoerențele doctrinare și poate apăra integritatea credinței. Astfel, demonstrația devine un instrument apologetic, necesar în contextul disputelor doctrinare din secolele VII–VIII. Această utilizare a argumentului logic îl apropie de tradiția occidentală, fără a-l desprinde de sensibilitatea răsăriteană[17].

Pentru Ioan, limbajul teologic trebuie să fie precis și riguros. Vocabularul său sistematic – termeni precum „ipostas", „ousia", „prosopon", „energeia", „theandrism" – arată preocuparea pentru acuratețea conceptuală. Această preocupare nu reflectă o înclinație filozofică abstractă, ci convingerea că adevărul despre Dumnezeu trebuie formulat în mod responsabil. Dacă limbajul este confuz, atunci și credința va fi înțeleasă greșit. Astfel, rațiunea participă la puritatea credinței prin claritatea conceptelor pe care le utilizează[18].

Un alt element important este utilizarea analogiei. Ioan recunoaște limitele rațiunii și ale limbajului în ceea ce privește misterul lui Dumnezeu, dar afirmă totuși valoarea analogiilor ca instrument de apropiere. Analogii precum „lumina din lumină", „izvor și râu", „chip și strălucire" sunt folosite pentru a exprima relațiile treimice sau hristologice. Analogiei nu îi este atribuită o valoare absolută, dar ea permite minții să urce de la creat la necreat, de la vizibil la invizibil. Astfel, rațiunea devine capabilă să exprime ceea ce nu poate cuprinde[19]. Ioan folosește, de asemenea, argumente negative (apofatice) pentru a proteja misterul divin. El afirmă că mintea poate înțelege ceea ce Dumnezeu nu este, chiar dacă nu poate înțelege ceea ce este. Această metodă negativă nu anulează rațiunea, ci o eliberează de pretenția de a domina misterul. Prin negări succesive, rațiunea recunoaște limitele sale și face loc revelației. Astfel, apofatismul damaschinian este rațional și pedagogic, nu anti-rațional.

În cadrul disputelor doctrinare, Ioan utilizează definițiile și demonstrațiile pentru a apăra credința ortodoxă împotriva ereziilor. În special în tratatele hristologice și anti-iconoclaste, el arată că doctrinele eretice conduc la incoerență logică și la contradicții cu Scriptura și Tradiția. Această analiză dialectică demonstrează funcția apologetică a rațiunii: ea nu doar clarifică, ci și protejează adevărul. În acest fel, Ioan contribuie decisiv la dezvoltarea metodei teologice în Răsărit[20]. Modul în care Ioan folosește definițiile, distincțiile și demonstrația arată că rațiunea, în teologia sa, nu este nici marginală, nici autosuficientă. Ea este integrată organic într-un proces viu al cunoașterii lui Dumnezeu, în care analiza intelectuală pregătește sufletul pentru contemplare. Acest echilibru între rigoarea intelectuală și misterul participativ face din Ioan un punct de întâlnire între tradiția patristică și începuturile scolasticii creștine.

În teologia Sfântului Ioan Damaschin, cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu nu este rezultatul exclusiv al rațiunii discursive, ci al unei sinergii profunde între facultățile cognitive, trăirea spirituală și iluminarea harică. Rațiunea constituie începutul itinerariului, însă cunoașterea deplină este rodul unei transformări lăuntrice prin har. Această viziune integratoare plasează cunoașterea contemplativă la vârful activității raționale, nu într-o opoziție față de aceasta. Pentru Ioan, contemplarea nu este o anulare a rațiunii, ci o extindere a ei în registrul spiritual, acolo unde harul devine principiul de cunoaștere[21].

Pentru Damaschin, experiența spirituală nu este un fenomen subiectiv sau pre-rațional, ci o participare ordonată la lumina divină. Purificarea minții prin virtute, rugăciune și înfrânare devine condiția necesară pentru ca rațiunea să funcționeze corect. Patimile, spune Ioan, tulbură intelectul și îl fac incapabil să perceapă adevărul. De aceea, asceza nu este simplă disciplină morală, ci act de restaurare a facultății cognitive. Omul nu poate contempla ordinea lumii sau pe Dumnezeu dacă mintea nu este luminată și eliberată de dezordinea interioară. Această antropologie cognitivă integrează rațiunea într-un proces ascetic continuu[22].

Rațiunea purificată devine aptă pentru ceea ce Ioan numește „vederea intelectuală" a lucrurilor, adică perceperea profunzimii lor spirituale. În această etapă, cunoașterea nu mai este strict discursivă, ci intuitivă, participativă. Mintea nu analizează, ci primește, se deschide și contemplă. Contemplarea, în sens damaschinian, nu înseamnă absența rațiunii, ci trecerea ei la un mod superior de funcționare, în care percepe direct ordinea divină prezentă în creație. În acest fel, cunoașterea naturală și cea supranaturală se află în continuitate, nu în opoziție.

Această viziune se regăsește și în modul în care Ioan descrie revelația. Revelația nu este doar comunicare de conținuturi doctrinare, ci luminarea lăuntrică a minții. Harul nu suspendă activitatea rațională, ci o ridică la un nivel pe care ea singură nu-l poate atinge. În această perspectivă, funcția rațiunii este dublă: pregătitoare și cooperantă. Rațiunea pregătește mintea pentru primirea harului, iar harul transformă rațiunea, făcând-o aptă pentru contemplarea adevărului divin. Această sinergie este una dintre cele mai originale contribuții ale lui Ioan la teologia epistemologică[23].

Experiența liturgică joacă un rol important în această dinamică. În liturgie, rațiunea este purificată și luminată într-un mod unic. Imnografia – în special imnele lui Ioan însuși – funcționează ca un mediu de transpunere a adevărului doctrinar în experiență spirituală. Prin cântare, simbol și lumină, mintea este condusă dincolo de discurs, într-o participare reală la frumusețea divină. Liturghia devine, astfel, un laborator al cunoașterii contemplative, unde rațiunea și simțurile cooperează pentru a conduce sufletul la Dumnezeu[24].

Cunoașterea contemplativă nu este rezervată unui grup restrâns, ci este vocația universală a fiecărui creștin. Ioan afirmă că Dumnezeu dorește ca toți oamenii să ajungă la cunoașterea adevărului, iar această cunoaștere nu este doar doctrinară, ci personală, existențială. Contemplarea devine astfel împlinirea naturală a rațiunii, nu contrariul ei. Din acest motiv, Ioan respinge orice formă de anti-intelectualism spiritual care ar trata rațiunea ca pe un obstacol. Dimpotrivă, ea este poarta prin care omul intră în mister[25].

În același timp, Ioan avertizează împotriva autosuficienței raționale. Mintea care se bizuie doar pe propriile puteri nu poate ajunge la contemplare. Pretenția de autonomie a rațiunii duce la mândrie și orbire spirituală. De aceea, smerenia este o condiție epistemologică: numai mintea care recunoaște limitele propriei capacități poate primi iluminarea divină. Astfel, epistemologia lui Ioan este și o etică a cunoașterii. Pentru Ioan Damaschin, rațiunea și experiența spirituală nu sunt două niveluri paralele ale cunoașterii lui Dumnezeu, ci două momente ale aceluiași itinerar. Rațiunea deschide calea către contemplare, iar contemplarea împlinește rațiunea. În acest mod, Ioan oferă o viziune integratoare, în care cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu este atât un act intelectual, cât și unul transformator, realizat prin cooperarea dintre natură și har[26].

Pentru Sfântul Ioan Damaschin, rațiunea nu este doar instrument de contemplare, ci și armă apologetică în apărarea adevărului revelat. În contextul disputelor doctrinare ale secolelor VII–VIII, utilizarea riguroasă a rațiunii devine esențială pentru clarificarea poziției Bisericii și pentru respingerea ereziilor. În special în controversa iconoclastă, Ioan folosește logica, analiza conceptuală și argumentul deductiv pentru a demonstra incoerența poziției adversarilor. Această metodă arată în mod exemplar rolul rațiunii în păstrarea integrității credinței[27].

În tratatele sale contra iconoclaștilor, Ioan construiește o argumentație sistematică pornind de la premise antropologice, hristologice și cosmologice. Fiecare premisă este formulată într-un limbaj precis, iar concluziile sunt deduse logic. El arată că iconoclasmul, negând legitimitatea reprezentării vizibile, contrazice însăși ordinea creației: dacă materia a fost creată bună și rațională, atunci ea poate servi drept mediu pentru simbolizarea realităților spirituale. Astfel, icoana nu este o invenție arbitrară, ci o consecință a modului în care Dumnezeu a constituit lumea[28].

Argumentul central al lui Ioan se bazează pe întruparea Logosului. Dacă Dumnezeu Cel nevăzut a devenit vizibil în trup, atunci reprezentarea Lui este legitimă. Această logică este formulată cu o claritate remarcabilă: iconoclastul care refuză imaginea lui Hristos neagă implicit realitatea întrupării. Ioan demonstrează că nu icoana este problema, ci înțelegerea insuficientă a misterului hristologic. Prin urmare, teologia icoanei este o continuare firească a teologiei întrupării, iar raționamentul teologic protejează unitatea credinței[29].

Un alt aspect fundamental în argumentația damaschiniană este distincția riguroasă între venerare și adorare. Ioan arată, folosind termeni preciși și analogii conceptuale, că icoana nu primește adorare (latreia), ci venerare relativă (proskynesis), care se îndreaptă în mod ultim către prototip. Această distincție, formulată în limbaj rațional, demontează acuzația de idolatrie prin clarificarea semantică a actelor religioase. Astfel, rațiunea devine instrument de delimitare a granițelor cultului, protejând credința împotriva interpretărilor greșite[30].

Rațiunea are și o funcție hermeneutică în lectura Scripturii. În disputa cu iconoclaștii, Ioan analizează textele biblice pentru a arăta că interdicțiile din Decalog nu se referă la interzicerea oricărei imagini, ci la idolatrie. Prin apelul la context, analogie și analiza intenției divine, el demonstrează că Scriptura nu contrazice practica iconografică. Această interpretare rațională a Scripturii permite depășirea literaturismului iconoclast și restabilirea unei lecturi coerente cu tradiția Bisericii[31].

În plus, Ioan folosește rațiunea pentru a clarifica statutul ontologic al icoanei. El afirmă că icoana nu reproduce firea divină, ci forma vizibilă a prototipului. Această distincție conceptuală evită atât confuzia ontologică, cât și reducerea simbolului la o simplă convenție. Pentru Ioan, icoana este o realitate simbolică în sens tare: un semn care participă, într-o manieră analogică, la realitatea pe care o reprezintă. Această participare este fundamentată nu pe imaginația artistului, ci pe structura ontologică a creației[32].

Apărarea icoanelor devine astfel o apărare a funcției rațiunii în teologie. Iconoclasmul, prin refuzul logic al reprezentării, atacă armonia dintre credință și rațiune. Ioan demonstrează că o credință care își neagă expresia vizibilă devine incoerentă; iar o rațiune care refuză misterul se închide în sine. Prin argumentele sale, el restabilește echilibrul și arată că icoana este expresia vizibilă a unei teologii raționale și întrupate.

În acest sens, contribuția lui Ioan la controversa iconoclastă nu este doar dogmatică, ci metodologică. El arată că rațiunea, atunci când este folosită în sinergie cu credința, devine garantul autenticității teologice. Rigoarea logică, definirea clară a termenilor, distincțiile precise și demonstrația coerentă sunt pentru el mijloace de a proteja misterul, nu de a-l explica suficient. Această armonie între rațiune și credință face ca Ioan să fie considerat, atât în Răsărit, cât și în Apus, un precursor al metodei teologice clasice[33].

Analiza funcției rațiunii în cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu la Sfântul Ioan Damaschin arată că acesta dezvoltă una dintre cele mai echilibrate și coerente epistemologii din tradiția patristică. Rațiunea, departe de a fi marginalizată, este recunoscută ca dar al creației, instrument natural al sufletului și cale de acces spre adevăr. În același timp, Ioan păstrează în mod exemplar distincția între ceea ce rațiunea poate cunoaște prin contemplarea lumii și ceea ce este dezvăluit prin har. Această tensiune armonioasă între natură și revelație constituie fundamentul gândirii sale teologice și explică influența pe care opera sa o va avea asupra dezvoltării scolasticii[34].

Rațiunea este orientată spre Dumnezeu prin însăși structura firii. Lumea, fiind creată de Logosul divin, devine un spațiu inteligibil, iar mintea, participând la raționalitatea Logosului, poate citi urmele înțelepciunii divine[35]. Astfel, rațiunea devine primul instrument de teologie naturală, oferind omului posibilitatea de a ajunge la o cunoaștere analogică a lui Dumnezeu. Totuși, Ioan este explicit: această cunoaștere naturală rămâne limitată. Ea conduce la credință, dar nu o poate substitui.

În același timp, credința nu este prezentată ca act irațional, ci ca răspuns întemeiat pe autoritatea lui Dumnezeu. Rațiunea este chemată să analizeze, să verifice și să formuleze adevărurile credinței, însă rămâne deschisă misterului. Cunoașterea deplină apare doar în cooperarea dintre rațiune și har, iar această cooperare este posibilă datorită faptului că omul este creat pentru comuniune și transfigurare. Epistemologia damaschiniană evită astfel excesele ambelor extreme: raționalismul autosuficient și fideismul anti-intelectualist[36].

În plan metodologic, rolul rațiunii se manifestă în utilizarea definițiilor, distincțiilor conceptuale și demonstrațiilor logice. Ioan arată că teologia, pentru a rămâne fidelă adevărului, trebuie să folosească limbaj precis și raționamente coerente. Această rigoare intelectuală nu diminuează misterul, ci îl protejează de interpretări greșite. Opera sa demonstrează că teologia poate fi în același timp contemplativă și analitică, iar această sinteză îl situează pe Ioan ca precursor al marilor teologi ai Evului Mediu.

Rațiunea, afirmă Ioan, are nevoie de purificare morală pentru a percepe adevărul. Patimile întunecă mintea, în timp ce virtuțile o luminează. În această lumină, cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu nu este doar un act intelectual, ci un proces de transformare interioară, în care harul ridică rațiunea la un nivel superior de percepție. Astfel, cunoașterea teologică devine o formă de îndumnezeire, o participare a omului la viața divină.

Funcția rațiunii devine evidentă și în controversa iconoclastă, unde Ioan utilizează analiza logică pentru a apăra legitimitatea icoanei. El demonstrează că reprezentarea vizibilă nu este o abatere idolatră, ci rezultatul coerent al întrupării Logosului și al structurii raționale a creației. Această argumentație nu doar apără practica iconografică, ci reafirmă armonia profundă dintre credință și rațiune în tradiția creștină.

În concluzie, pentru Ioan Damaschin, rațiunea este un dar constitutiv al persoanei umane, o scară către cunoașterea lui Dumnezeu și un instrument indispensabil în formularea și apărarea credinței. Integrată în dinamica harului, purificată de patimi și luminată de credință, rațiunea își împlinește vocația atunci când devine mijloc de participare la adevăr. Prin această sinteză, Ioan oferă una dintre cele mai solide și actuale articulări ale raportului dintre credință și rațiune din întreaga tradiție creștină.

HUMOR AS A DISCURSIVE STRATEGY IN MODERN HOMILETICS: THE CASE OF FATHER CONSTANTIN NECULA

Ioan-Nicolae Pop
PhD Student, Technical University of Cluj-Napoca

Abstract: This paper aims to explore the role and functions of humor as a discursive strategy in modern homiletics, using Father Constantin Necula's sermons and public lectures as a case study. In an era when religious preaching struggles with the loss of audience and the widening gap between theological language and modern sensibility, Father Necula's approach stands out for its accessible, empathetic, and profoundly human tone. Humor in his discourse becomes a bridge between the sacred and the secular, tradition and modernity. The research draws on rhetorical theory, discourse analysis, and religious communication studies, focusing on a corpus including several recorded conferences available on the official YouTube. The study concludes that humor, far from trivializing theology, humanizes it, serving as a pedagogical and therapeutic discourse that meets the communicative needs of contemporary society.

Introducere. Discursul teologic modern și nevoia unei retorici a apropierii

În ultimele decenii, discursul teologic românesc a traversat o transformare semnificativă, încercând să răspundă provocărilor aduse de modernitate, secularizare și pluralism cultural. Într-o societate în care limbajul religios tradițional pare tot mai îndepărtat de limbajul cotidian, succesul comunicării teologice depinde tot mai mult de capacitatea predicatorului de a crea punți de sens între credință și experiența imediată. În acest context, apariția unor figuri precum Părintele Constantin Necula reprezintă o veritabilă revoluție discursivă în spațiul omileticii românești. Discursul său, prezent atât în spațiul eclezial, cât și în mediul academic și digital, redefinește raportul dintre sacralitate și umanitate, propunând o formă de comunicare care îmbină profunzimea teologică cu firescul conversației cotidiene. Unul dintre elementele esențiale ale acestei reconstrucții este umorul, un instrument retoric care, folosit cu discernământ și empatie, devine o formă subtilă de evanghelizare, de apropiere și de educație morală.

Una dintre coordonatele esențiale ale discursului său este credința ca experiență de bucurie și comuniune, nu de teamă și formalism. Umorul devine, în acest sens, un limbaj al bucuriei, o strategie prin care predicatorul transformă ascultătorul din receptor pasiv într-un partener de dialog.

Studiile recente asupra retoricii religioase contemporane (Burke[1], Perelman & Olbrechts-Tyteca[2], Meyer[3]) subliniază că eficiența discursului nu rezidă doar în autoritatea spirituală a vorbitorului, ci și în capacitatea sa de a genera identificare. În cazul părintelui Necula, identificarea se produce printr-un mecanism complex: empatie + umor + autenticitate. Prin aceste elemente, el construiește un ethos de „părinte apropiat", care comunică fără distanță, cu un zâmbet înțelept, dar niciodată ironic.

Umorul este folosit nu ca ornament sau efect de divertisment, ci ca strategie de deschidere discursivă. El sparge rigiditatea limbajului sacru, permițând intrarea unui ton colocvial, care invită la reflecție, nu la frică. În predicile și conferințele sale, părintele Necula adesea demontează clișee printr-o replică jovială sau o comparație neașteptată, precum: „Fac parte din generația crescută fără duminică în cartier, fără manuale de religie și fără să audă de Dumnezeu până către 20 de ani. […] Voi să nu vă pierdeți anii, nici clipele! Stați lângă El ca să învățați că adevărata libertate înseamnă să-L ai pe Hristos, că împotriva acestei prezențe nici o libertate diin lume nu are voie să dicteze, nici un liberalism, nici un marxism al consumismului, nimeni, niciodată, nu poate să vă spună să renunțați la Hristos! Să țineți inima sus și […] să învățați că sunteți apa cea vie a Biserici alături de tot ceea ce înseamnă Biserică."[4]

Acest tip de formulare are o dublă funcție: retorică și psihologică. Pe de o parte, umorul relaxează receptorul, permițând accesul la mesajul teologic fără sentimentul de constrângere morală; pe de altă parte, el creează un spațiu de reflecție autentică, în care omul modern se poate regăsi fără a se simți judecat.

Din perspectivă teologică, această abordare poate fi pusă în legătură cu conceptul de koinonia[5], comuniune, transpus la nivel discursiv printr-o comunicare participativă. Umorul, în această ecuație, nu este o simplă trăsătură stilistică, ci o formă de iubire comunicativă, o manifestare a harului prin cuvânt.

În literatura de specialitate, această formă de discurs este descrisă de Henri Bergson ca momentul în care inteligența își afirmă superioritatea asupra rigidității vieții. „Râsul nu ține, așadar, de estetica pură, deoarece el urmărește, inconștient și chiar imoral în multe cazuri particulare, un scop util, acela al perfecționării generale"[6]. În cazul discursului religios, inteligența spirituală se afirmă nu pentru a ridiculiza, ci pentru a vindeca, un fenomen evidențiat și de psihologia religiei, unde umorul este văzut ca expresie a libertății interioare.

În România postcomunistă, unde predica s-a confruntat mult timp cu formalismul și limbajul rigid, părintele Necula reintroduce firescul și bucuria în predică. Umorul devine o strategie de „însoțire discursivă", care transformă predica într-un dialog pastoral și nu într-un monolog doctrinar. Scopul prezentului articol este de a demonstra, prin analiza unui corpus de texte și conferințe, că umorul constituie una dintre cheile stilistice majore ale omileticii moderne și că, în cazul părintelui Constantin Necula, el dobândește valoare teologică, pedagogică și terapeutică. Analiza va urmări formele, funcțiile și efectele umorului în discursul său, integrându-le într-o perspectivă interdisciplinară: lingvistică, retorică, psihologică și teologică.

1. Fundamente teoretice: umorul ca strategie comunicativă și retorică

1.1.Umorul – între expresie culturală și mecanism retoric

Umorul, ca formă de expresie a spiritului uman, nu este doar un fenomen estetic sau psihologic, ci și un mecanism comunicativ fundamental. Din perspectivă teoretică, el reprezintă o strategie discursivă prin care vorbitorul gestionează relația cu interlocutorul, creează empatie și atenuează tensiunea mesajului. Într-o formulare celebră, Henri Bergson definea râsul ca un act social care corectează rigiditatea: „Râsul trebuie să răspundă anumitor exigențe ale vieții în comun. Râsul trebuie să aibă o semnificație socială."[7] În contextul omileticii, această observație capătă profunzime: umorul devine un act de comuniune, o formă prin care predicatorul „îndreaptă" fără să judece, propune reflecție fără a impune culpă.

Literatura de specialitate identifică trei dimensiuni ale umorului: cognitivă, emoțională, socială[8]. Toate aceste dimensiuni pot fi observate în discursul religios modern, unde predicatorul trebuie să fie simultan orator, pedagog și psiholog. În acest sens, umorul funcționează ca strategie de mediere între autoritate și apropiere, între mesajul dogmatic și receptivitatea credinciosului.

The person enjoys the perceived (thought, imagined) incongruity at least partly for itself, rather than solely for some ulterior reason."

1.2.Umorul în tradiția teologică

Deși adesea perceput ca nepotrivit în contextul sacru, umorul nu este străin tradiției teologice. Umorul este compatibil cu credința, fiind expresia unei libertăți interioare oferite de har. Râsul nu diminuează sacralitatea, ci o umanizează, făcând-o accesibilă. În teologia ortodoxă, această idee este reflectată de Dumitru Stăniloae, care vorbește despre firescul bucuriei în comuniune, văzut ca stare în care omul descoperă sensul iubirii prin seninătate: „În general în relația iubitoare dintre persoane spațiul e transfigurat, copleșit de subiectivitatea acelei persoane. Din persoana iubită iradiază peste spațiu o lumina transfiguratoare, care face spațiul din jurul ei plin de sufletul ei, plin de ea însăși, personalizat”[9]. În acest cadru, umorul teologic nu este un joc frivol, ci o manifestare a seninătății divine, acea stare de încredere și speranță care permite credinciosului să privească lumea cu ochii credinței, fără teamă.

1.3.Umorul ca instrument retoric

Retorica clasică, de la Aristotel la Quintilian, a recunoscut valoarea strategică a spiritului și a ironiei. Aristotel, în Retorica[10], considera că ironia bine calibrată susține ethosul oratorului, arătând inteligență și măsură. Quintilian, în Arta oratorică[11], avertiza că spiritul glumei trebuie să zidească, nu să distrugă. În analiza discursurilor religioase, umorul îndeplinește funcția de captatio benevolentiae[12], stabilirea unei relații de încredere între orator și auditoriu. Predicatorul contemporan, confruntat cu o audiență sceptică sau detașată, are nevoie de mijloace prin care să reactiveze atenția. Umorul, integrat cu discernământ, produce o deschidere cognitivă, pregătind terenul pentru receptarea mesajului spiritual.

Așa cum subliniază Paul Ricoeur în Metafora vie[13] jocul limbajului metaforic și ironic permite depășirea literalității, transformând comunicarea religioasă într-un act hermeneutic: „metafora poate şi trebuie să fie definită ca transpunere a numelui”[14] În cazul omileticii moderne, umorul este forma prin care mesajul teologic se resemnifică în spațiul profan, fără a-și pierde dimensiunea sacră.

1.4.Umorul și discursul religios modern

Odată cu evoluția mediilor de comunicare, predica s-a extins dincolo de biserică, devenind fenomen mediatic. În acest nou context, teologia trebuie să concureze cu discursul publicitar, politic și mediatic, adaptându-și strategiile de expresie. Părintele Constantin Necula ilustrează perfect această transformare. În conferințele sale publice există și sesiunea Q&A sau sesiunea de întrebări și răspunsuri unde umorul funcționează ca strategie de traducere culturală.: „Q: „[...] – Povestiți o minune pe care a făcut-o Dumnezeu cu Dumneavoastră!” A: „ – (un moment de tăcere cu mâna dreaptă sprijinindu-și capul): Păi nu-i o minune că tac? (râsete) Nu vânați minunile! Lăsați-vă vânați de ele! Viețile nu ni se schimbă în funcție de minuni, ci fiecare schimbare din viața noastră este o minune! Uneori și ce pare că este rău, la primă citire, poate deveni o minune care ne apropie de bine [...] Întâmplări nu există, ci doar purtarea de grijă a lui Dumnezeu [...]”[15] .

El convertește limbajul teologic într-un limbaj viu, recognoscibil, prin care ascultătorul modern se simte inclus. Predicatorul reușește astfel să construiască o formă de retorică a proximității, în care autoritatea se exprimă prin căldură și zâmbet. Necula nu ironizează credința, ci ironizează fricile și ipocriziile care o pot distorsiona.

1.5.Umorul ca ethos

Potrivit teoriei ethosului discursiv[16] credibilitatea oratorului derivă din imaginea de sine pe care o proiectează. În cazul discursului teologic, această imagine trebuie să combine autoritatea spirituală cu umanitatea comunicării. Umorul este tocmai puntea dintre cele două: prin el, oratorul devine accesibil, credibil și autentic.

În discursurile lui Constantin Necula, ethosul nu este construit prin solemnitate, ci prin firescul unei prezențe vii, capabilă să râdă cu publicul, nu de public. Într-o conferință din 2014 părintele afirmă: „[...] – Fiecăruia dintre noi Dumnezeu ne-a dăruit un mod de a fi pe cale. Despre mine toată lumea spune că sunt bufon. Da, dar e calea mea. Sunt foarte aspru judecat că râdeți la conferințe. Vă rog frumos! Am ajuns de râsul vostru? (râsete). E calea mea, o simt, o simțiți și dumneavoastră”[17]. Această formulare rezumă întregul sens al umorului teologic: el eliberează conștiința de vinovăția sterilă, deschizând calea unei înțelegeri mature a iertării. Din această perspectivă, umorul devine parte a spiritualității discursului și expresie a eticului comunicării.

2. Omiletica modernă – între sacru și cotidian

2.1.Transformarea discursului religios în contemporaneitate

Omiletica, în sensul clasic al termenului, desemnează arta predicii creștine, acea formă de comunicare orală menită să transmită și să interpreteze Cuvântul lui Dumnezeu. În spațiul tradițional, predica era caracterizată de o structură monologică, o formă solemnă și o distanță ierarhică între vorbitor și ascultător. Modernitatea a impus însă o serie de mutații majore: transformarea auditoriului, diversificarea mediilor de comunicare și apariția unui tip de om contemporan care nu mai ascultă doar, ci dialoghează.

În literatura de specialitate, această schimbare este analizată de autori precum: Paul Tillich[18] sau David Tracy[19] care atrag atenția asupra nevoii de traducere culturală a mesajului teologic. „Teologia creștină constă în explicarea, în termeni publici și în acord cu exigențele propriilor sale mărturisiri primare, a sensului deplin și a adevărului evenimentului iluminator originar care a prilejuit și continuă să modeleze înțelegerea ei asupra întregii realități”[20]. Teologia nu poate rămâne captivă limbajului dogmatic, ci trebuie să se exprime într-o formă accesibilă și semnificativă pentru omul modern. În această perspectivă, predicatorul devine mai degrabă mediator cultural decât simplu interpret al Scripturii.

În România, această transformare a fost lentă și marcată de o tensiune între tradiționalismul bisericesc și nevoia de actualizare discursivă. După 1990, odată cu apariția libertății religioase și a exploziei mediatice, predica a ieșit din perimetrul bisericii și a pătruns în spațiul public: radio, televiziune, internet. Astfel, discursul religios devine fenomen social, adresându-se nu doar credincioșilor practicanți, ci și unui public general, divers, aflat în căutarea sensului.

În acest cadru, omiletica modernă trebuie să găsească un echilibru între sacralitate și cotidian, între limbajul revelației și limbajul experienței. Predicatorul contemporan este nevoit să „vorbească limba lumii” fără a-și pierde rădăcina în transcendent. Astfel, predicatorul se află astăzi între două lumi: cea a credinței, care îi dă autoritate, și cea a culturii, care îi cere dialog.

2.2.De la monolog la dialog: schimbarea paradigmei omiletice

Una dintre cele mai importante mutații ale omileticii contemporane constă în trecerea de la monolog la dialog. Dacă predica tradițională se baza pe modelul vertical al comunicării (Dumnezeu → preot → credincios), discursul modern adoptă un model circular, participativ. Predicatorul nu mai este doar „transmițătorul” Cuvântului, ci însoțitorul credinciosului pe drumul înțelegerii.

Predicatorul contemporan nu mai poate vorbi „de sus”, ci trebuie să asculte înainte de a vorbi. Într-un context saturat de discursuri persuasive, politice, comerciale, ideologice, credibilitatea omiletică se construiește prin autenticitate și vulnerabilitate. În cazul părintelui Constantin Necula, această paradigmă dialogică este evidentă atât în structura discursului, cât și în tonul său. În multe dintre conferințele sale (ex.: „Conferința pr. Constantin Necula de la Focșani - Întrebări și răspunsuri, VN 2017”; „Întrebări și răspunsuri cu Părintele Constantin Necula la Baia Mare, 2024), predicatorul interacționează constant cu publicul: răspunde întrebărilor, glumește, oferă exemple personale, folosind frecvent formule de apropiere precum „Știți”, „Hai să fim sinceri”, „V-ați gândit vreodată că…?”.

Aceste forme de adresare transformă predica într-un dialog viu, iar umorul joacă rolul unui lubrifiant discursiv care elimină frica de autoritate și stimulează participarea emoțională. Publicul nu mai este un receptor pasiv, ci un partener de reflecție.

2.3.Cotidianul ca spațiu teologic

Una dintre inovațiile esențiale ale omileticii moderne este integrarea cotidianului în discursul sacru. Spre deosebire de predicile tradiționale, axate pe exegeze rigide și pe moralism, predica modernă coboară teologia în viața de zi cu zi. Această tendință este ilustrată magistral de stilul părintelui Necula. El aduce în prim-plan teme și situații comune: relațiile de familie, educația copiilor, suferința, stresul cotidian, tentațiile societății de consum: „– Nu-L văd pe Hristos stând liniștit când voi copiați, de exemplu, la examene. Profesorul stă liniștit că el e mulțumit: s-a prefăcut că predă, voi v-ați prefăcut că ați învățat”[21].

Prin astfel de formulări, discursul său se ancorează în experiența umană concretă, ceea ce conferă mesajului o autenticitate existențială. Umorul, în acest context, devine expresia încrederii în firescul credinței: a crede nu înseamnă a te înstrăina de lume, ci a trăi lumea cu ochii limpezi ai speranței. Umorul prezent în discursul lui Necula nu trivializează mesajul teologic, ci îl umanizează, aducându-l în proximitatea experienței cotidiene.

2.4.Omiletica și media digitală: predica în era rețelelor

În epoca digitală, predicatorul nu se mai adresează doar comunității locale, ci unui public global. Platforme precum YouTube, Facebook sau TikTok transformă predica într-un produs mediatic, supus regulilor vizibilității și impactului emoțional. Această realitate a generat o nouă formă de discurs teologic: omiletica digitală.

Părintele Constantin Necula este una dintre cele mai vizibile figuri ale acestei noi omiletici. Canalul său oficial de YouTube include sute de conferințe și predici, unele depășind 100.000 de vizualizări. Într-o societate în care atenția este fragmentată, el reușește să combine densitatea teologică cu atractivitatea discursivă. Umorul devine aici o strategie de retenție: provoacă zâmbetul, menține atenția și creează memorabilitate. Un exemplu revelator este conferința „Dialog cu tinerii” din Cluj-Napoca unde afirmă: „– A, dacă stați până să fiți bun creștin, o să vă prindă Parusia cu gura căscată (râsete). Măi oameni buni, ieșiți din flecușteț media! [...] Sunt mii de feluri de a te păcăi, miliarde, combinări de un infinit luate de un infinit de ori. Că de aceea, pentru fiecare om în parte, Hristos are un zâmbet special, pentru fiecare dintre noi în parte are o mână care se întinde, pentru fiecare dintre noi în parte are un sărut special [...]”[22]

Această metaforă ilustrează perfect modul în care umorul se convertește în simbol teologic. Predicatorul reușește să transmită un mesaj de profunzime spirituală printr-o imagine simplă, ludică, aproape proverbială. În mediul digital, astfel de formule devin repere de identitate discursivă, circulând viral și consolidând imaginea părintelui ca „teolog al bucuriei”.

2.5.Sinteză

Omiletica modernă redefinește predica drept act de comunicare participativă în care sacralitatea nu este contrapusă lumii, ci trăită în lume. Umorul reprezintă unul dintre instrumentele privilegiate ale acestei reconcilieri, deoarece: reumanizează teologia, restabilește încrederea între orator și public, creează o pedagogie a seninătății, permite traducerea adevărurilor divine în limbaj existențial. În acest nou model discursiv, părintele Constantin Necula este un arhetip al predicatorului modern, capabil să transforme predica într-o formă de dialog pastoral, în care cuvântul devine bucurie împărtășită.

3. Constantin Necula – stil, ethos și particularități discursive

3.1.Ethosul predicatorului modern

În tradiția retorică, ethosul desemnează imaginea de sine pe care oratorul o construiește în fața publicului. În cazul discursului religios, ethosul este dublu: el derivă atât din autoritatea spirituală a preotului, cât și din credibilitatea personală ca om între oameni.

Părintele Constantin Necula reușește să unifice aceste două dimensiuni, configurând un ethos specific, pe care îl putem numi pastoral carismatic. În prelegerile sale, tonul cald, umorul subtil și spontaneitatea dau naștere unei prezențe care inspiră încredere și apropiere, nu teamă sau solemnitate distantă. După cum observă el însuși într-un interviu acordat revistei Formula AS: „Oamenii au nevoie de cuvinte vii, iar a lăsa uneori deoparte amvonul și a vorbi, de la inimă la inimă, cu unii dintre semenii noștri, care cel mai adesea sunt disprețuiți sau ignorați, poate fi salvator. Nimeni nu-și închipuie ce înseamnă un prânz cu cei care au fost dependenți de droguri, de pildă, și care au făcut eforturi să rămână întregi. Nimeni nu cunoaște valoarea unei vorbe bune și a unei îmbrățișări mai bine decât ei. Dar și noi o învățăm, prin această apropiere”. [23]

Această mărturisire poate fi considerată un manifest al omileticii moderne: predicatorul nu mai este doar un exeget al dogmei, ci un vindecător prin cuvânt, un companion spiritual care se întâlnește cu omul acolo unde acesta se află.

În toate aparițiile sale publice, Necula cultivă un ethos al firescului: nu pozează în „orator sacru”, ci în „om viu”. Folosește un limbaj simplu, presărat cu expresii colocviale, proverbe și anecdote. Acest stil îl apropie de ascultătorii săi, mai ales de tineri, care se regăsesc în spontaneitatea și sinceritatea sa.

3.2.Stilul omiletic: oralitate, ritm și spontaneitate

Discursul lui Constantin Necula are o structură orală fluidă, bazată pe dialog, repetiție și improvizație controlată. Stilul său nu este rigid sau scris dinainte, ci performativ, adică se construiește în timp real, în funcție de reacțiile publicului.

Un exemplu relevant apare în conferința “Biserica, Mireasa lui Hristos”: „[...] – Ce sfat puteți să-mi dați? Simt că sentimentele nu sunt la fel de puternice!”/ – Ee! Acuma pot fi rău și să spun « – Dacă ați mâncat borcanul de miere înainte [...]» Dar dacă n-ați mâncat borcanul de miere? Aș fi măgar să spun asta! [...] Atunci trebuie să știți un lucru: în viață niciodată nu suntem egali în sentimentele noastre, decât, dacă, într-adevăr suntem legați de Dumnezeu. Doar Dumnezeu ne dă fidelizarea sentimentelor noastre [...]”[24]. Această formulare, simplă, dar plină de spirit, reflectă caracteristicile esențiale ale stilului său: oralitate autentică (propoziții scurte, ritm viu, adresare directă), umor paradoxal (transformarea unei plângeri într-o lecție de speranță), memorizabilitate (construcția aproape aforistică a frazei).

Astfel prin jocul între grav și ludic, părintele Necula transformă ideea teologică într-o experiență retorică accesibilă.

3.3.Tipologia umorului: autoironie și paradox moral

Umorul prezent în discursurile părintelui Necula nu este uniform; el se manifestă în mai multe registre, fiecare cu o funcție distinctă.

a. Autoironia – forma smereniei discursului

Autoironia este una dintre trăsăturile cele mai pregnante ale stilului său. Predicatorul nu vorbește „deasupra" celorlalți, ci se așază alături de ei. Într-o conferință despre credință și greșeală: Prin astfel de declarații, el neutralizează potențialul autoritar al statutului sacerdotal, oferind publicului o imagine de vulnerabilitate autentică. Autoironia devine astfel o strategie de demitizare și un semn al smereniei: credinciosul nu urmează un model perfect, ci unul care se recunoaște pe sine ca imperfect.

b. Paradoxul moral – umorul ca revelator al sensului

Necula folosește adesea paradoxul ca instrument de revelație. În conferința de la Biserica Sfântul Anton – Curtea Veche sau Curtea Domnească, București 2015 (Sesiunea Q&A)[25] „[...] – De ce s-a stricat celula de bază a societății, familia?" «[...] – Nu s-a stricat [...] În primul rând că familia nu e «celula de bază a societății», asta e așa « – Dragi tovarăși și prieteni!», asta nu-i la sector teologie. Familia este spațiul în care Dumnezeu îngăduie să se nască Împărăția Cerurilor: cu intimități, cu tandrețuri, cu bolovănișuri. Ieșiți din conceptul «familia ca celulă» pentru că familia nu e o celulă. Doamne ferește să fie o celulă! În loc să fie căsnicie, să fie căznicie! [...] Familia este, în esența ei, darul lui Dumnezeu pentru fiecare dintre noi [...] Fiecare căsnicie este o împărăție [...] A te căsători înseamnă a te pune pe cruce [...]". Acest tip de umor paradoxal are funcția de provocare intelectuală: invită la depășirea gândirii liniare și la o perspectivă teologică matură. Prin paradox, predicatorul își conduce publicul spre o înțelegere mai adâncă a libertății divine și a sensului suferinței.

3.4.Lexicul și expresivitatea limbajului

Stilul părintelui Necula se caracterizează printr-o hibridizare lexicală între limbajul teologic și cel cotidian. În același paragraf pot apărea termeni precum „mântuire" și „curaj", alături de expresii colocviale: „să fim oameni de treabă", „nu-i sfânt cine n-a greșit, ci cine se ridică fără scandal". Această alternanță lexicală conferă discursului o textură polifonică, apropiată de ceea ce Mihail Bahtin[26] numea dialogism: suprapunerea registrelor limbajului creează efectul de autenticitate și apropiere.

În predicile sale, Necula nu ezită să folosească proverbe și ziceri populare, dar le resemnifică teologic. Spre exemplu: „Q: «[...] – Cum să ne alegem un duhovnic în prezența căruia să nu avem nici o reținere, să putem să avem inima deschisă, și îndrumările de care avem mare nevoie?» A: «[...] – Când îl aflați, să-mi spuneți și mie! Băi oameni buni, da duhovnicu' nu e tipul cu care să bei cafeaua «– Hello!», să te duci la părintele Lucian și să zici: «– Servus, Lucian! Am venit să-ți spun că am curvit, dragă! Dar să nu deranjeze, da?» (râsete/aplauze). Duhovnicul este o autoritate. În fața unei autorități nu te prea simți bine, ai așa un pic de frison! Că dacă te tragi de brăcinar cu popa, îi gata! Orice intimitate naște monștri! Vă dau scris! [...] Inima deschisă se deschide în fața unei inimi deschise. Preoții lucrează foarte mult cu inima lor. Părem noi așa mai tăntălăi, mai rupți de lume. Toată lumea zice «– Voi sunteți cu capul în nori!» Păi ăla e locul meu de muncă, nu? (râsete/aplauze)»"[27]. Această combinație între familiar și metafizic este o marcă a stilului său, producând un efect de umor soteriologic, râsul care mântuiește prin înțelegere.

3.5. Sinteză

Stilul omiletic al părintelui Constantin Necula se distinge printr-o serie de trăsături definitorii: ethos pastoral carismatic, bazat pe empatie și umanitate, oralitate spontană, cu ritm viu și intonație afectivă, umor polifuncțional: autoironie, ironie empatică, paradox moral, lexic hibrid, între sacru și colocvial, discurs afectiv ciclic, care alternează gravul și ludicul. Prin aceste elemente, părintele Necula devine un model de omiletică modernă, capabil să reînnoiască predica fără a-i altera sacralitatea. Umorul, în acest context, nu este un adaos ornamental, ci esență a ethosului său discursive, semn al discernământului și expresie a iubirii active.

4. Umorul ca strategie de apropiere: analiza conferințelor și textelor scrise

4.1. Umorul ca act de apropiere spirituală

În omiletica tradițională, distanța dintre predicator și auditoriu era adesea justificată de autoritatea sacrului: preotul vorbea în numele lui Dumnezeu, iar credincioșii ascultau într-o atitudine de reverență și tăcere. În discursul lui Constantin Necula, această ierarhie se estompează deliberat. El transformă predica într-un spațiu al comuniunii, iar umorul devine instrumentul principal al acestei apropieri spirituale.

Într-o conferință părintele afirmă: „[...] – Lepădarea de sine înseamnă să nu te crezi tu punător de coadă la prună și gaură la macaroană, asta-i boală românească: toți inventăm găuri la macaroane. Adică a te lepăda de sine înseamnă a-ți lua în serios starea în care Dumnezeu te-a așezat, dar să știți că nu e ușor! Mai încercați! [...]”[28].

Prin astfel de imagini, umorul nu servește amuzamentului, ci deschiderii afective: reduce tensiunea emoțională și permite receptorului să se recunoască fără rușine. După cum afirmă John Morreall[29] râsul are capacitatea de a reseta sistemul emoțional”, favorizând receptivitatea și empatia.

4.2. Umorul în dialogul cu tinerii

O parte semnificativă a activității pastorale a părintelui Necula este dedicată tinerilor. În discursurile adresate lor, folosește umorul pentru a relaxa tensiunile și a deschide teme delicate. Un exemplu concludent este modul autoironic în care abordează fragilitățile emoționale ale relațiilor moderne: „[...] – Sigur, nu te poți băga ca duhovnic în toate ciorbele acestea, da uneori chiar își vine să-i bați. Deci, fetelor, pentru ochiuleț, oculin! (râsete) La băieți, Aghiazmă Mare că e rău de tot! Că bărbatul e mai fragil decât femeia în relațiile acestea! [...] Bărbații actuali sunt mult mai fragili decât femeile din generațiile anterioare, cu mult, iar decât cele din generația lor, vă dau scris, că sunt foarte fragili! S-a creat femeia motociclist, care bârâie când nu vrea să audă, dă cu roata pă loc, scoate fum. Și amărâtul face «ia-mă, nene!» că n-are ce face. Deși e motocicleta lui, e casca lui, a pus el benzină, dar nu contează [...]”[30].

Gluma redă o realitate socială prezentă în rândul tinerilor, fără a-i judeca sau culpabiliza. Prin această ironie blândă, părintele transformă frustrarea și confuzia lor în invitație la reflecție asupra propriei identități, a rolurilor de gen și a modului în care se raportează unii la alții.

În locul unei explicații moralizatoare, el răspunde cu un zâmbet care încurajează introspecția calmă. Astfel, umorul devine modalitate de evanghelizare prin bucurie, adaptată culturii tinerilor. Aceștia, obișnuiți cu ironia mediilor online, recunosc în discursul părintelui un stil apropiat lor: ferm în mesaj, dar cald în ton. Râsul nu desființează realitățile sensibile, ci le face suportabile și le oferă un cadru de vindecare.

4.3. Umorul și problematica suferinței

Un aspect aparte al discursului părintelui Necula îl constituie capacitatea de a vorbi despre suferință prin umor. În teologia sa, râsul nu este opus lacrimii, ci complementar acesteia, reprezentând un mod de a converti durerea în înțelegere și speranță. De aceea, predicatorul valorifică umorul pentru a elibera tensiunea afectivă din jurul unor teme sensibile precum eșecul, creșterea copiilor, presiunea socială sau rănile interioare.

Într-una dintre conferințele dedicate părinților și educației familiale, el afirmă cu o ironie blândă și tandră: „[...] – Cât despre creșterea copiilor, vă rog eu mult, nu-i forțați! Copiii nu sunt poligonul

4.4.Sinteză

Analiza corpusului de texte și conferințe permite formularea câtorva concluzii:

1. Umorul funcționează ca mecanism de apropiere spirituală, reducând distanța dintre predicator și public.
2. Are o funcție pedagogică, facilitând învățarea morală prin exemplu și autoironie.
3. Devine instrument hermeneutic, actualizând mesajul biblic.
4. Are rol terapeutic, transformând durerea în speranță.
5. Este expresia ethosului empatic al predicatorului modern.

În toate aceste forme, umorul nu alterează sacralitatea mesajului, ci o umanizează, făcând din comunicarea religioasă o experiență de bucurie și reflecție.

5. Funcțiile umorului în predica contemporană: pedagogică, terapeutică și morală

5.1.Funcția pedagogică – a învăța prin zâmbet

Una dintre funcțiile evidente ale umorului în discursul părintelui Constantin Necula este cea pedagogică. Predica devine, astfel, un proces de învățare prin emoție, în care râsul ajută la înțelegerea mesajului moral. În loc să transmită ideile teologice în mod abstract, părintele folosește anecdote care fac adevărul mai ușor de acceptat.

Un exemplu este gluma pe care o spune despre călugărul întâlnit cu leul în pustie: „[…] Primul meu banc teologic, când, la un momentat, un călugăr abia mergea prin pustie, terminat, obosit, «- aoleu!», se târa și, pac, îi iese un leu în față. Ăsta, săracul «- Doamne, dă-I un gând creștinesc leului acesta!». La care leul se ridică în două labe «- Doamne, Iisuse Hristoase, Fiul lui Dumnezeu, binecuvântează mâncarea și pe leul Tău că Sfânt Ești […] L-a binecuvântat pe călugăr și l-a mâncat […]”[31].

Prin această istorioară, părintele arată că umorul poate atinge subiecte sensibile fără a le minimaliza. Lecția este simplă: omul își dorește de multe ori soluții rapide și convenabile, dar realitatea este mai complexă. Râsul permite înțelegerea acestei limite fără tensiune și fără rușine.
În acest fel, umorul îl ajută pe ascultător să treacă de la rezistență la claritate, deschizând drumul spre reflecție și schimbare interioară. Pentru părintele Necula, zâmbetul devine o cale prin care adevărul se spune mai ușor, iar mesajul moral se poate fixa mai profund.

5.2.Funcția terapeutică – râsul ca vindecare spirituală

Discursul religios modern se confruntă cu o provocare majoră: cum să răspundă suferinței omului contemporan fără a recurge la clișee consolatoare. În acest context, părintele Necula reușește să introducă o dimensiune terapeutică a cuvântului, în care umorul joacă un rol fundamental.
Această frază dezvăluie logica profundă a umorului teologic: el nu e distragere de la durere, ci exercițiu de abandon în iubire. Umorul te ajută să redevii copil al lui Dumnezeu, să recunoști fragilitatea fără disperare.

În acest sens, râsul devine antidotul anxietății religioase. În locul predicii moralizatoare, părintele Necula propune o pastorație a seninătății, în care vindecarea se realizează prin dialog și compasiune.

5.3.Funcția morală – adevărul spus cu blândețe

Un alt rol important al umorului în discursul părintelui Necula este cel moral. Prin glumă, el transmite adevăruri serioase fără agresivitate. Într-o lume în care mesajele morale sunt adesea dure sau critice, umorul lui devine o formă de corectare blândă.

[31] DA BRAVO! Podcast #71 cu Părintele Constantin Necula din 14.04.2023, https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=epSCNBqoF3I, accesat în 05.12.2025, la 22:22.

Un exemplu este modul în care vorbește despre responsabilitatea în familie: „[…] A-ți iubi soția înseamnă a pune pamperșii la copil, a spăla vasele, WC-urile, inclusive dacă ești popă, că nu-ți cade nici o mână. Popa-i popă de la ușă încolo. În casă e părintele copiilor săi și soțul soției sale. Deci trebuie să știe măcar să spele vasele din când în când. Nu ești atins de Duhul Sfânt chiar tot timpul […] A te întări în familia ta înseamnă a te întări în valori comune”[32]. Gluma nu ridiculizează pe nimeni, ci arată, simplu și direct, că adevărata credință se vede în gesturile mărunte și în împărțirea responsabilităților. Prin acest tip de umor, mesajul moral devine ușor de acceptat și reținut

5.4.Funcția comunitară – râsul care unește

Nu în ultimul rând, umorul îndeplinește și o funcție comunitară, pentru că ajută la formarea unui sentiment de apartenență, solidaritate și identitate comună. Părintele Necula își exprimă deseori atașamentul față de oameni, locuri și rădăcini într-un mod care apropie auditoriul și îl face să se simtă parte din aceeași poveste. Într-o declarație plină de emoție, afirmă: „[…] Țara aceasta mi-a dat cea mai frumoasă copilărie, cea mai strălucită adolescență, cea mai sănătoasă maturitate și cea mai frumoasă împlinire sufletească. Sunt gata să mor pentru ea. Mie îmi place să trăiesc pentru România, dar sunt dispus oricând să mor pentru ea dacă o va cere. Sunt gata. Sunt aici […]”[33].

Prin astfel de momente, umorul și căldura mesajului său devin mijloace prin care predicatorul aduce oamenii împreună. Zâmbetul creează apropiere, iar cuvintele simple, fără solemnitate artificială, dau naștere unei comuniuni autentice. În comunitățile parohiale, râsul devine semn al împăcării, al recunoașterii reciproce și al sprijinului discret.

În acest fel, umorul rupe barierele dintre amvon și popor, dintre instituție și viața de zi cu zi. Devine un limbaj comun care îi pune pe toți la aceeași masă a umanității, amintind că, în ciuda imperfecțiunilor, fiecare om este demn de iubire, înțelegere și iertare.

Concluzii

Analiza discursului părintelui Constantin Necula demonstrează că umorul constituie una dintre strategiile fundamentale ale omileticii moderne, oferind o alternativă viabilă la retorica solemnă și moralizatoare a predicii tradiționale.

Într-o lume dominată de anxietate, scepticism și fragmentare, părintele Necula propune un model de comunicare teologică bazat pe empatie, seninătate și inteligență spirituală. Umorul său nu e frivolitate, ci formă de discernământ duhovnicesc: el luminează fără să ardă, învață fără să impună și vindecă fără să judece. Stilul său, caracterizat prin autoironie, paradox, oralitate expresivă și ton familiar, reușește să reumanizeze discursul religios și să restabilească dialogul dintre Biserică și societate. Umorul devine, astfel, limbaj al harului: o retorică a iubirii care nu ridiculizează slăbiciunea, ci o transformă în prilej de întâlnire cu Dumnezeu.

Lucrarea de față confirmă că în omiletica contemporană râsul poate fi o formă de rugăciune – un mod de a-l lăsa pe Dumnezeu să vorbească prin bucuria simplă a cuvintelor.

VENERABLE EUSTATHIUS THE PROTOPSALT AND THE MATHEMA FOR SAINT PARASKEVA

Ștefan-Iulian Apopei
PhD Student, "Alexandru Ioan Cuza" University of Iași

Abstract: The present study examines the personality and contribution of Eustathios the Protopsaltes, founder of the Musical School of Putna Monastery and arguably the most important composer of Byzantine music in the medieval Romanian lands. The research highlights his decisive role in shaping an autochthonous musical idiom through the composition and adaptation of chants in Slavonic and Greek, integrated into a coherent liturgical system informed by Late Byzantine tradition and by Bulgarian-Serbian influences. The focal point of the investigation is the analysis of a calophonic matima composed by Eustathios in honour of Saint Parascheva, preserved in the 1511 Anthologion. This unique piece—lacking any known Byzantine or Slavonic prototype—is interpreted as the response to a concrete liturgical need and as evidence of the School of Putna's capacity to generate original creations within the context of the adaptation of the Jerusalem Typikon. The study underscores the significance of this matima as an expression of the synthesis between Byzantine musical tradition, local consciousness of sanctity, and the Moldavian liturgical identity.

1. Eustatie Protopsaltul, Cucuzel al Moldovei

1.1.Cine a fost Eustatie Protopsaltul?

Încă de la întemeiere, Mănăstirea Putna a fost considerată necropolă domnească și centru de referință în viața bisericească din Moldova. După finalizarea lucrărilor fizice, a început cea mai importantă perioadă, anume, formarea unei obști și înfrumusețarea cu obiecte de cult și toate cele necesare unei mănăstiri. Astfel, s-a luat drept model cea mai importantă mănăstire a vremii, anume Mănăstirea Neamț, pe care a depășit-o ulterior, cultural și artistic[1]. La acea vreme, în Mănăstirea Neamț s-a atins apogeul artistic în muzică psaltică, dar și în caligrafie. Aceasta se demonstrează prin primul manuscris muzical din Moldova, păstrat în biblioteca Mănăstirii Putna și astăzi. La întemeierea mănăstirii, Domnitorul Ștefan cel Mare nu a neglijat nici un aspect, ci a acordat o deosebită atenție realizării unei ambianțe duhovnicești. Din acest punct de vedere, muzica bisericească ocupa un loc central. Slujbele obișnuite, dar și marile sărbători erau acoperite de fastul cântărilor bisericești bine executate. Cu toate acestea, cele mai frumoase cântări erau scrise de compozitori greci, iar cum limba greacă era necunoscută de popor, era nevoie de oameni pricepuți în traduceri și adaptare la cultul liturgic local. Psaltichia se preda din generație în generație. Această categorie de oameni era foarte restrânsă, greu de găsit și cu multă muncă de învățat. Această ascultare avea o dublă slujire. Pe de o parte, înfrumusețarea sfintelor slujbe prin voci, cântări și compoziții înălțătoare, iar în același timp, formau cântăreți pentru a-i trimite în parohiile și mănăstirile din jurisdicția mitropoliei. La felul cum a fost gândită Mănăstirea Putna, era neapărată nevoie de un protopsalt care să formeze o școală de cântăreți și să adune ucenici în jurul său. Aceste calități s-au găsit omogenizat perfect în monahul Eustatie. „Fericitul Eustatie ducea o nevoință cu totul aleasă, în post, în rugăciune și în negrăită bucurie a Duhului Sfânt. Din această duhovnicească bucurie a călugărilor și au împodobit slujbele din biserica Mănăstirii Putna aproape o jumătate de secol. Acest vestit protopsalt avea și multă învățătură de carte. Cunoștea limbile greacă și slavonă și știa toate cântările compuse de marii sfinți și protopsalți bizantini și atoniți, ca: Ioan Damaschin, Roman Melodul, Ioan Cucuzel și mulți alții"[2]. Școala muzicală de la Putna poartă amprenta sa. Această școala muzicală de la Putna a stat la temelia muzicii bisericești din Moldova vreme de peste 250 de ani.

Odată cu venirea în țară a cuviosului Paisie Velicicovski, la Mănăstirea Neamț, s-a reorganizat școala de muzică psaltică după duhul athonit. Antologhioanele apărute la Putna au fost singurele cărți de muzică bisericească autohtone apărute în întreg Evul Mediu în spațiul moldovenesc. Ele au fost folosite atât în marile centre monahale din țară, precum Secu, Slatina, Dragomirna, Probota și Bisericani, dar și în Grecia sau Bulgaria. Din această perioadă ne-au rămas până astăzi 20 de antologhioane complete, dar și fragmente, scrise în limba greacă și slavonă în notația specifică Sfântului Ioan Cucuzel. Până la epoca brâncovenească nu s-a mai scris nimic în materie de muzică bisericească. În ierarhia valorică, aceste antologhioane ocupă locul al treilea după broderii și tetraevangheliarul ilustrat[3]. Numai interpretarea după cuviință și solemnitatea slujbelor pot inversa această ordine valorică.

Printre cele mai importante slujbe pe care le-a cântat monahul Eustatie a fost înmormântarea măritului Voievod Ștefan cel Mare,[4] la data de 2 iulie 1504. Aceste odoare de mult preț ale Moldovei trebuie prețuite la adevărata lor valoare pentru a evidenția munca, strădaniile și lacrimile monahilor compozitori.

1.2.Cele mai importante lucări ale lui Eustatie

Cuviosul Eustatie protopsaltul este autor a peste 200 de cântări și cel mai important compozitor român din perioada medievală[5]. Totodată, el poate fi socotit între cei mai importanți creatori de muzică bisericească din întreg spațiul ortodox[6]. Deși informațiile biografice sunt foarte restrânse, Anne E. Pennington îl descrie ca fiind „una dintre cele mai remarcabile figuri din viața culturală a Moldovei timpului său”[7]. Acesta s-a născut în satul Cristești la jumătatea secolului al XV-lea. De mic copil s-a îndrăgostit de strana bisericească și a început să-și înmulțească talantul, dar pe cât era dorința de mare, pe atât erau posibilitățile de reduse. Turcii ocupaseră majoritatea centrelor de muzică bisericească creștină. Tânărul Eustatie avea nevoie de un dascăl care să-l inițieze în arta psaltichiei. În urma analizei operelor sale, s-a constatat că, cel mai probabil, ar fi ucenicit într-una dintre mănăstirile isihaste din despotatul Serbiei. Un argument fundamental îl reprezintă unele asemănări izbitoare între creațiile lui Eustatie și creațiile lui Isaia ieromonahul, protopsaltul Mănăstirii Matejce, Macedonia de astăzi. Datorită experienței acumulate, la Putna a primit o îndoită slujire. A fost rânduit protopsalt al mănăstirii și domestic[8]. Demnitatea de protopsalt îi conferea întâietate între toți cântăreții, cu unele intervenții solistice, iar atribuțiile din ascultarea de domestic includeau formarea de noi cântăreți, organizarea și conducerea corului mănăstirii și o activitate didactică constantă în acest sens. Această demnitate mai fusese îndeplinită de monahul Paisie, autor al Mineiului de la 1504, destinat Mănăstirii Dobrovăț, ultima ctitorie a lui Ștefan Voievod.

Opera cuviosului Eustatie se concretizează în două Antologhioane autografe în care se cuprind toate genurile muzicii psaltice: papadic, stihiraric și irmologic. Scrierile sale sunt scrise în limbile greacă și slavonă. Aceste antologhioane sunt de două feluri: mari, pentru strană, ca să poată vedea tot corul și mici sau personale folosite de protopsalți la chilie sau în deplasări. Odată cu Eustatie, la Putna s-a născut o tradiție ca fiecare protopsalt să își alcătuiască propriul antologhion, atât de strană cât și personal. „Chiar titlul de protopsalt pe care și-l dă Evstatie este un indiciu că pevții (cântăreții de strană) alcătuiau un corp organizat, cu o ierarhie bine stabilită”[9]. Primul antologhion publicat, cel din anul 1511, reprezintă un unicat în istoria muzicii bisericești. Acesta însumează mai multe stiluri muzicale specifice zonei grecești si slave. Celălalt antologhion, personal, finalizat în anul 1515, conține un repertoriu calofonic în care sunt cuprinse câteva opere personale. Munca lui Eustatie se vede în compunerea de cicluri muzicale pentru cele opt glasuri pentru toate genurile irmologice și papadice. Dintre acestea amintim: Troparele Învierii și ale Născătoarei, Prochimenele, Stihurile, Aliluia, Heruvice și Chinonice. Pe lângă toate acestea, scrie chinonice pentru toate Praznicele Împărătești de peste an și completează cu celelalte cântări din cadrul Sfintei Liturghii. Tot el compune un ciclu complet de stihiri pentru toate sărbătorile însemnate de peste an. În acea perioadă, puțini protopsalți erau capabili de o astfel de lucrare însemnată. Ultimul protopsalt al catedralei Aghia Sofia din Constantinopol, Manoil Hrisaf, a compus ceva asemănător, dar nu pentru toate glasurile. În mod practic și concret, Eustatie continuă și finalizează lucrarea lui Hrisaf și o extinde în tot spațiul slav, el fiind primul compozitor care a scris astfel de lucrări în limba slavonă[10]. Eustatie nu doar a compus, ci a și valorificat ceea ce au lăsat înintașii săi. Astfel, în Rusia, la Muzeul-Rezervație de Stat de Istorie și Ahitectură din Smolensk, nr. 9927[11] se regăsește un manuscris, anume Liturghierul de la 1569. Acesta a fost copiat după un Liturghier mai vechi, scris pe la 1532 de către monahul Spiridon. Acest Liturghier copiat de Eustatie este deosebit de important pentru noi deoarece el reprezintă o capodoperă a cărților medievale românești. Până astăzi nu se cunosc date cu privire la felul cum acest Liturghier a ajuns în Rusia.

Opera lui Eustatie conține unele aspecte originale. Compune în stilul calofonic noi cântări și adaptează operele altor compozitori la stilul locului. Compune și în stilul asmatic, de catedrală, dar nu lasă deoparte nici vechile psalmodii. Acestea sunt omogenizate și se naște un stil nou adaptat necesităților liturgice ale vremii, practicat în parohii și mănăstiri. Acest nou stil muzical a fost preluat de Eustatie din tradiția bulgaro-sârbă. A fost șlefuit și perfecționat de către protopsalții putneni, în frunte cu Eustatie, iar apoi cu ușurință a fost implementat în viața liturgică din Moldova. Din această zonă a fost preluat de românii din zona actuală a Ucrainei iar de acolo a fost adoptat de Biserica Rusă sub denumirea de cântare bulgărească[12]. Acest stil se caracteriza prin simplitate și frumusețe, fapt pentru care era cu ușurință de practicat. Cântările erau ușor de memorat fiind deseori executate de toată lumea din biserică, după modelul psalților. Eustatie a simplificat interpretarea evitând salturile mari și oferind cântării fluență, moderație și sobrietate. Ethosul românesc se caracterizează prin echilibru, simplitate și frumusețe. Se căuta ca toată suflarea să laude pe Domnul. „Din manuscrisele păstrate de la Putna se remarcă trei figuri mari de profesori: Eustatie, Antonie și Lucaci. Primul este socotit om de înaltă cultură, cunoscător al celor patru arte: gramatica, muzica, retorica și filtele, lucru atestat de el însuși într-o criptogramă din manuscrisul de la Moscova[13]. Faptul că folosește în textul slavon cuvinte sau terminații românești[14]: aliluiarele, filtele, etc, dovedește că era român”[15].

Mănăstirea Putna și-a asumat rolul de centru muzical, înfluențând muzica tradițională a vremii[16]. Mirean sau monah, acesta era inițiat în principiile corecte ale psalmodierii. „Faptul că la Putna a existat un centru muzical puternic, înființat și condus de Evstatie Protopsaltul, că aici și-au manifestat măiestria numeroși alți psalți și copiști, că ne-a rămas un fond compact de manuscrise ce se derulează în timp pe o perioadă de mai bine de o sută de ani și că aceste manuscrise au în structura și grafia lor o unitate clar determinată, toate acestea ne-au convins să recunoaștem existența, în acest centru de artă și cultură medievală românească, a unei școli muzicale, cu valențe și caracteristicile pe care le presupune o astfel de instituție”[17].

Muzicologul acad. Octavian Lazăr Cosma îl decalară pe Eustatie „întâiul mare creator român de muzică”[18]. De remarcat este faptul că, pe primele file ale Antologhionului mare, de strană, sunt oferite câteva informații de bază cu privire la gramatica muzicii psaltice. Aceste antologhione au stat la baza tuturor cărților de cântări psaltice apărute în Moldova în secolul al XVI-lea. Exista o tradiție nescrisă ca fiecare mănăstire nou înființată, dar și cele vechi să aibă protopsalt școlit la Putna și cărți de muzică bisericească din care să oficieze sfintele slujbe. Cei mai importanți ucenici ai școlii de la Putna sunt[19]: Macarie de la Dobrovăț, Isachie de la Râșca, Vasile de la Slatina, Ieromonahul Vasile și monahul Isachie[20] etc. Cu toate că era un învățat al muzicii din Moldova, Eustatie era mereu conștient că la un moment dat va trece la Domnul, așa că a zidit ucenici vrednici de a continua opera începută de el. În general, marile personalități ale artei, din toate timpurile, au lăsat ucenici vrednici, capabili să le ducă opera mai departe. Dată fiind evoluția ulterioară a școlii putnene, este de la sine înțeles că și Eustatie a avut cel puțin un astfel de ucenic. Moștenirea muzicală lăsată de el este enormă și reflectă marea sa personalitate, care numai din iconomie divină a fost trimis în Moldova acelor vremuri spre a reorganiza și pune temelia unei istorii muzicale autentice[21]. Eustatie, ca și ceilalți părinți ai muzicii psaltice au fost monahi, ulterior canonizați: Ioan Damaschin, Roman Melodul, Ioan Cucuzel[22], etc.

„Era o vreme când Bucovina era într-adevăr ca o grădină duhovnicească, plină de cântec și de miros îmbătător”[23]. Școala muzicală de la Putna reprezintă un nucleu de muzicologie bizantină, des studiat de cercetători de renume precum: Titus Moisescu[24], Vasile Vasile[25], Gheorghe Ciobanu, Marin Ionescu, Nicolae Gheorghiță[26], Arhid. Avraam Bugu[27], etc., iar manuscrisele putnene se află printre cele mai importante izvoare ale muzicii românești. Acest lucru nu a putut trece neobservat, iar unii cercători de rang internațional și-au aplecat atenția asupra muzicii medievale din Moldova. Dintre aceștia amintim pe Anne E. Pennington[28] și Dimitri Conomos[29], Svetlana Kujumdzieva[30] și alții. Centrul de Studii Bizantine de la Iași, în secolul al XXI-lea, a acordat o deosebită atenție lucrărilor muzicologice ieșite din Școala de la Putna. Cu toate acestea, o întrebare definitorie încă persistă, la care nu putem găsi un răspuns concret, ci trebuie să ne bazăm strict pe tradiție și fidelitate: Cum se interpretau aceste partituri din vremea Sfântului Ștefan cel Mare? Cum ar fi sunat interpretarea acestora dacă ar fi fost înregistrate? Calofonia din Bizanț și Moldova este reprezentată de două piscuri, Sf. Ioan Cucuzel și Eustatie Protopsaltul[31]. Muzica creată de cel de-al doilea se altoiește pe trunchiul primului din Bizanț. „Exighisirea cântărilor genului papadic, căruia îi aparţin în întregime cântările Şcolii de la Putna, nu este numai o tehnică fină, ci şi o înaltă artă ermeneutică. Cântarea formei exighisite a compoziţiilor muzicale, tehnoredactarea acestora, iar apoi transcrierea şi analiza lor, pot forma un itinerar muzicologic spre cunoaşterea melosului bizantin. Ulterior, se pot efectua încercări de exighisire a unor cântări din repertoriul Şcolii de la Putna, care s-au transmis numai în Vechea Sistimă”[32]. Sfântul Ioan Cucuzel a fost unul dintre maeștrii bizantini ai muzicii psaltice. Viețuind la începutul secolului al XIV-lea, ne-a lăsat o moștenire imensă. În manuscrisele putnene era supranumit adesea dascălul dascălilor sau maestrul maeștrilor. Acesta și-a dedicat întreaga viață lui Hristos, părăsind Constantinopolulul cu toate desfătările lui, și intrând în cinul monahal și-a afierosit întreaga viață ishiei și studiului psaltichiei. Nici până astăzi nu este defintitivată o listă a tuturor creațiilor sale, ea fiind foarre amplă. A atins majoritatea punctelor de interes ale muzicii bizantine: paralaghie, octaihie, notație, metrofonie, intervale, hironomie, arta componistică, etc. Ceea ce este relevant pentru noi este faptul că pe filele manuscriselor putnene se regăsesc multe dintre lucrările sale. În mod logic, odată cu împrumutul partiturilor se realiza și preluarea interpretării. Eustatie Protopsaltul este, fără îndoială, cel mai prolific compozitor de muzică bizantină medievală în spațiul românesc, meritându-și din plin supranumele de Cucuzel al Moldovei. Antologhioanele sale de la Putna însumează 98 de compoziții în limba greacă și 87 în limba slavonă[33]. Astfel, Școala muzicală de la Putna reprezintă o filă importantă din istoria universală a muzicii bizantine. La scurt timp după căderea Constantinopolului, muzica psaltică din Moldova atinge un prim pisc, devenind totodată un nucleu ce lega poporul grec, de cel român și de cel slav. Cu toate acestea „în evul mediu românesc, creația muzicală s-a desfășurat în trei mari direcții: muzica religioasă bizantină, muzica georgiană și muzica populară[34]. Toate aceste trei mari filoane au apărut și au evoluat într-un paralelism clar diferențiat, fiind consemnate în vechi codice muzicale și păstrate în biblioteci și arhive românești sau străine”[35]. Comparația celor trei stiluri, medio-bizantină, hrisantică și kieveană, ar putea aduce la lumină noi compoziții muzicale românești.

1.3.Cuviosul Eustatie și matima închinată Sfintei Cuvioase Parascheva de la Iași

1.3.1. Ce este o matimă și de ce e importantă

Termenul matimă[36] provine din tradiția bizantină muzicală și desemnează o cântare festivă, amplă, caracterizată printr-un stil melismatic și o alcătuire imnografică de laudă, menită să preaslăvească virtuțile sfinților și lucrarea lui Dumnezeu în viața lor. În practica liturgică ortodoxă, matima este o cântare „pe larg”, destinată momentelor solemne, în special slujbei de seară (Vecernia), în cadrul litiei, atunci când are loc ieșirea la Litie. Aceasta corespunde de obicei primei stihiri, fiind compusă în stil papadic pentru a însoți procesiunea până în Naosul Bisericii acolo unde se săvârșea Litia.

Stilistic, matima se încadrează în repertoriul calofonic bizantin târziu, fiind caracterizată prin:

- formule ornamentale complexe (kratema, teretismata),
- libertate interpretativă dirijată,
- repetiții melismatice și variațiuni pe teme liturgice prestabilite.

Kujumdzieva observă că „Stihira este inclusă în capitolul stihirilor melismatice praznicale […] al cărui scop este acoperirea timpului liturgic conform noii redacții a Tipicului Ierusalimitean”[37]. Cu alte cuvinte, matima este o creație adaptată ritmului liturgic extins al slujbelor reformate în sec. XIV, cu funcție teologică, muzicală și ceremonială clar definite.

Matima compusă de Eustatie este păstrată într-un manuscris de o importanță fundamentală pentru studiul muzicii liturgice ortodoxe din spațiul românesc: Antologhionul lui Eustatie (1511)[38], un codex reprezentativ pentru activitatea Școlii Muzicale de la Mănăstirea Putna. Cântarea apare între filele 153v-157v[39], în cadrul unui corpus imnografic dedicat sărbătorilor și sfinților cu o semnificație specială pentru comunitatea locală, fiind ultima din acest corp. Incipitul său slavon – „Преподобна мати дево девице Параскеви" („Preacuvioasă maică, tânără fecioară Parascheva") – anunță caracterul solemn și teologic al cântării, în care sunt concentrate imagini scripturistice, atribute hagiografice și expresii de adâncă evlavie.

Importanța acestui manuscris rezidă nu doar în păstrarea unei cântări unice, ci și în apartenența sa la un program liturgic coerent, susținut de școala muzicală putneană. Manuscrisul nu este un unicat izolat, ci parte a unui corpus în care regăsim și alte compoziții atribuite lui Eustatie, dedicate unor sfinți, cum ar fi Sfântul Ioan cel Nou de la Suceava – semn al unei conștiințe liturgice orientate către construirea unei „sfințenii locale" prin muzică.

În analiza Svetlanei Kujumdzieva, matima compusă de Eustatie reprezintă o parte a unui proces mai detaliat de adaptare a tipicului ierusalimitean în practica slavonă și moldovenească, cu accent pe elaborarea muzicii melismatice în funcție de contextul liturgic festiv: „Tradiția manuscriselor de la Putna a urmat elaborarea melismatică a cântării potrivit structurii praznicale"[40].

1.3.2. Argumentul unicității

Importanța acestei matime constă în caracterul ei de unicat în cadrul tradiției ortodoxe a vremii. După cum notează Kujumdzieva, „Această stihiră nu are un model cunoscut nici bizantin, nici slav"[41] – o observație fundamentală care ne permite să afirmăm că aceasta nu este o traducere sau adaptare, ci cu o creație originală, alcătuită special pentru contextul liturgic moldovenesc. Faptul că stihira nu apare în corpusul bizantin cunoscut, nici în textele slavone anterioare, nici în mineiele de la Putna sau Dragomirna, despre care am amintit mai sus, este un indiciu solid al caracterului său autohton.

Această unicitate nu este doar de ordin muzical, ci și liturgic: matima se înscrie într-o logică festivă specifică, fiind destinată ieșirii solemne la Litie în Naosul Bisericii cu icoane sau sfinte moaște[42]. Așa cum remarcă autoarea bulgară, „Această compoziție trebuie să fi fost creată dintr-o necesitate liturgică"[43] – o formulare care sugerează că practica locală a impus alcătuirea unui imn propriu, adaptat realităților evlaviei moldovenești.

Din punct de vedere muzical, structura calofonică, plasarea în glasul plagal 2 și utilizarea formelor ornamentale specifice bizantinismului târziu oferă cântării o sonoritate înaltă, destinată unui public format și sensibil la nuanțele teologice ale muzicii psaltice. Această alegere stilistică confirmă faptul că matima lui Eustatie a fost gândită pentru un context monastic cu educație muzicală avansată, nu pentru uzul comun.

Această stihiră calofonică, compusă de Eustatie, nu a fost alcătuită ca un simplu exercițiu imnografic, ci dintr-o necesitate practică a cultului. Potrivit rânduielii liturgice vechi, în cadrul slujbei Vecerniei, momentul Litiei presupune ieșirea clericilor în pronaos[44] sau în pridvorul bisericii, unde se rostesc ecteniile și se cântă stihirile specifice[45]. Pentru a acoperi procesiunea și a susține intensitatea sărbătorii, era nevoie de o cântare „pe larg", amplă, solemnă, cu desfășurări melismatice – ceea ce o simplă stihiră de strană nu putea oferi.

Această practică este atestată în tipicele bizantine și continuă astăzi doar în forma sa completă în Muntele Athos, fiind rareori păstrată în câteva mănăstiri din România care conservă rânduiala integrală a litiei[46]. Din acest motiv, matima lui Eustatie trebuie înțeleasă ca un răspuns liturgic contextualizat, înscris în fluxul viu al cultului, și nu ca o compoziție izolată[47].

Un argument suplimentar în sprijinul ideii că această cântare a fost alcătuită pentru o nevoie liturgică practică, în contextul desfășurării vechii rânduieli a Litiei, este faptul că în partea finală a stihirei, autorul introduce un terirem[48]. Această formulă muzicală – compusă din silabe fără sens lexical, de tipul terirem, nerem, nerem[49] – este specifică repertoriului calofonic bizantin, fiind utilizată pentru a prelungi cântarea, a susține atmosfera meditativă și a marca solemnitatea momentului. Includerea unui terirem indică fără îndoială că piesa nu era destinată unei simple lecturi sau execuții rapide, ci era gândită pentru interpretare festivă, probabil în procesiunea litiei, în momentul în care clericii, purtând cinstitele moaște, ieșeau din altar și traversau naosul.

Părăsirea naosului în timpul Litiei semnifică alungarea din Rai, iar rămânerea în tinda bisericii, în fața ușilor închise, devine o imagine a rugăciunii penitențiale „înaintea ușilor cerești". Această simbolistică este confirmată de referința la Simeon al Tesalonicului, care explică: „Facem Litiile în tinda bisericii... stând noi înaintea ușilor sfintei biserici, ne închinăm ca înaintea ușilor cerești [...] și mai cu seamă dumnezeiasca milostivire, pe care rău o am închis"[50]. Mai mult, teriremul funcționează și ca o punte între textul teologic și contemplația tainică, deschizând un spațiu sonor în care comunitatea participă prin ascultare la o formă de laudă care transcende cuvântul[51]. În tradiția muzicală bizantină, acest tip de ornament este asociat cu imnografia de înaltă clasă, destinată unor prăznuiri mari sau unor momente de apogeu duhovnicesc.

Astfel, caracterul inedit, neextrapolabil și festiv al acestei matime susține ipoteza că ne aflăm în fața primei compoziții muzicale complete dedicate Sfintei Parascheva în tradiția ortodoxă slavonă și românească. Este o creație care reflectă, în același timp, fidelitate față de canoanele bizantine și capacitatea de creație liturgică a unui mediu monastic de excepție.

1.4.Concluzii

Matima compusă de Eustatie pentru Sfânta Cuvioasă Parascheva reprezintă o realizare de excepție a muzicii liturgice moldovenești. Ea este, din câte cunoaștem până în prezent, prima stihiră complet notată muzical dedicată acestei sfinte în întreaga tradiție ortodoxă slavonă și românească. Compoziția sa nu are model bizantin cunoscut și nu este o simplă traducere, ci o creație originală, elaborată în contextul unei practici liturgice vii, în care cultul sfintei se dezvoltă pe fundalul unui program spiritual, artistic și identitar susținut de Școala Muzicală de la Putna[52]. Această cântare nu trebuie să fie percepută doar ca o manifestare a artei psaltice, ci ca expresia unei sinteze între teologia ortodoxă a sfințeniei și vocația muzicală a comunității monastice moldovenești, aflată la răscrucea influențelor bizantine, slavone și autohtone[53].

Prezența teriremului, alegerea glasului plagal 2, poziționarea în cadrul Litiei, precum și transmiterea piesei în mai multe manuscrise, sunt toate elemente care întăresc ideea că matima lui Eustatie nu este doar un imn de laudă, ci o afirmație sonoră a memoriei ortodoxe moldovenești. Într-

THE COMBINATION OF THEOLOGY WITH PHILOSOPHY IN THE THOUGHT OF DUMITRU STĂNILOAE

Vasile Cosmin Petrovai
PhD Student, Technical University of Cluj - Napoca, North University Center of Baia Mare

Abstract: Since his youth, when he began his journalistic activity at the newspaper of the Transylvanian Metropolitanate „Telegraful român", Dumitru Stăniloaie briefly outlined his own conception regarding the status of Philosophy and its relationship with Theology. Thus, in the article „What is Philosophy good for?", he wrote that Philosophy is eternal perplexity, eternal thinking that questions natural or already established evidence, in order to raise others that, in turn, are to be overthrown by the criticism of a subsequent thought.

It is in the nature of philosophy to question the immediate data of the senses, like any other. Thus, it approaches religion in two ways: first, that it gives a note of relativity to visible things and tears away their halo of absolute and exclusive values, and second, that it accustoms man to think abstractly, to realities of a different nature than the material ones. Religion also wants to accustom man to these inclinations, and it is understood that philosophy helps it a lot in this direction. Moreover, theology works with a philosophical apparatus and requires from those who study it a thorough familiarity with philosophy. Although you can be a man with a profound religious life without having studied philosophy, nevertheless, to be a good theologian, you need philosophy.

1. Introducere

Putem privi lucrurile din două puncte de vedere complementare: de la Filosofie spre Teologie și, invers, de la Teologie spre Filosofie. Privind lucrurile de pe pozițiile filosofiei, putem pleca de la faptul că un important filosof german din secolul XX, Wilhelm Windelband, arăta în Prelegerile sale de Istorie a filosofiei că prima interepretare filosofică a creştinismului a fost realizată în chiar primele decenii care s-au scurs de la apariţia acestei religii. Și anume, Philon din Alexandria (mort către 54 d.H.) a transpus în noţiunile filosofiei platonice reprezentările primitive ale noii religii. Ideea Binelui suveran a primit în sine reprezentarea lui Dumnezeu, iar diferitele idei platonice particulare îşi subsumează reprezentările îngerilor[1]. La fel și unul dintre primii mari teologi creștini, Origen (cca 185-252 d. H.) îşi intitulează scrierea sa de bază în spirit aristotelic Despre principii (în greacă Peri Arhon)[2], scriere care este în realitate primul tratat de Teologie Creștină Sistematică și totdată și primul sistem filosofic specific creştin. Aici principiile teologice ale lumii sunt: Dumnezeu, Sfântul Duh, apoi îngerii, fiinţele nevăzute care proneiază lumea, care sunt inspirate sau cel puțin se află în deplină analogie cu principiile lumii din filosofia platonică și neoplatonică. Și procesul de împrumutare de către teologia creștină primară a unor noțiuni filosofice, eventual cu o schimbare de ordin pur nominal, a continuat şi pe parcursul următoarelor trei-patru secole de creştinism. Ulterior, cu o anumită periodicitate istorică, cele două domenii – teologia creştină şi filosofia – au cunoscut momente de apropiere reciproc profitabile, respectiv momente în care reflecţia şi problematica teologică au fost dezvoltate cu mijloacele filosofiei, de exemplu în cazul lui Toma d'Aquino.

Apoi, privind lucrurile din celălalt punct de vedere, din cel al teologiei, putem susține că apariția religiei creștine pe scena Istoriei a produs o reală mutație filosofică, o veritabilă revoluție în mentalitatea lumii antice, revoluție care a avut și un important impact asupra filosofiei. Componentele acestei revoluții ar fi: (1) Iubirea faţă de om, față de aproapele, devine principiul fundamental al vieţii morale; (2) Toţi oamenii sunt egali în faţa lui Dumnezeu, indiferent de condiţia lor socială sau de neam, întrucât toți sunt fiii aceluiași Dumnezeu; (3) Omul este valoarea supremă în această lume şi Dumnezeu însuşi, în ipostaza Sa umană, se jertfeşte pentru mântuirea omului; (4) Dumnezeul creştin nu mai este local sau naţional, ci este un Dumnezeu universal, care cheamă la mântuire toate neamurile. Totodată, trebuie să avem în vedere că, cel puţin în Antichitate şi Evul Mediu, religia este un factor determinant în configurarea unui sistem de civilizaţie, un mediu generator de instituţii morale sau politice, calendar sau cetate, de exemplu Civitas Dei a Sf. Augustin.

În creştinism, vechile virtuţi filosofice capătă un specific propriu. Virtutea filosofică se fundamentează doar pe omul natural, în timp ce virtutea creştină este expresia unui raport al omului cu Dumnezeu, chiar şi atunci când specia concretă a virtuţii priveşte relaţiile cu semenii. Virtutea filosofică este exclusiv raţională, în timp ce virtutea creştină implică prezenţa harului divin. Scopul virtuţii filosofice este eudemonismul, al celei creştine este apropierea de Dumnezeu. Apoi există şi virtuţi proprii creştinismului, fără un trecut filosofic, numite virtuţi teologice: credinţa, nădejdea (speranţa) şi dragostea (iubirea). Credinţa în Dumnezeu, speranţa în mântuire şi iubirea faţă de Dumnezeu şi faţă de semeni. Acestea sunt virtuţi pur creştine, chiar dacă una dintre ele (iubirea) apare oarecum nominal şi la filosofii precreştini: eros la Platon, phylia la Aristotel sau agapesis la stoici. Iubirea creştină faţă de Dumnezeu înseamnă nu doar că omul se înalţă spre Dumnezeu, ci şi că Dumnezeu coboară spre om, alcătuind o miraculoasă unitate teandrică. Iar iubirea faţă de oameni înseamnă să iubim nu doar pe prietenii noştri, ci şi pe vrăjmaşii noştri, un precept cu atât mai greu de pus în aplicare, cu cât este mai divin în substanţa sa.

Asta sub raport etic. Sub raport conceptual ontologic, nu putem ignora contribuția filosofului american William James, potrivit căruia filosofia contemporană poate să facă vreo câteva lucruri utile pentru teologie. Anume, filosofia poate să depășească localul, accidentalul şi subculturalul din înţelegerea Fiinţei divine. Poate să contribuie la eliminarea elementelor de doctrină religioasă care, în raport cu evoluţia vremurilor şi a mentalităţilor, ajung a fi inadecvate (celebrul agiornamento). Filosofia, crede James, poate să contribuie, într-un efort comun cu teologia, la elaborarea unor noi simboluri şi interpretări alegorice[3].

În mod concret, cu referire la cazul marelui teolog român Dumitru Stăniloaie am putea menționa în mod preliminar câteva puncte în care gândirea sa teologică se interferează cu filosofia și are ea însăși substanță și caracter filosofic. Opera lui Dumitru Stăniloaie conține concepte și principii filosofice care se pot identifica pe mai multe planuri, și anume: (a) în plan gnoseologic avem considerații filosofice referitoare la raportul dintre cunoașterea rațională și cea apofatică. (b) În plan ontologic, dogmatic, teologul nostru definește atributele lui Dumnezeu prin opoziție cu însușirile Marelui Anonim al celebrului filosof român Lucian Blaga. (c) În planul diferențelor ecclesiologice, al raporturilor Ortodoxiei cu alte biserici și confesiuni creștine, Dumitru Stăniloaie profesează o filosofie politică proprie cu privire la națiune, la natura și rolul ei în Istorie. Și (d) în planul Eticii, în domeniul Teologiei morale, autorul nostru are o înțelegere particulară a Catharsis-ului aristotelic, a ceea ce el numește „curățirea de patimi prin virtuți" și afirmarea unui sens al vieții.

Încă din tinerețe, de pe la treizeeci de ani, înainte de a-și fi elaborat scrierile teologice proprii, pe când și-a început activitatea publicistică la ziarul Mitropoliei Ardealului „Telegraful român", Dumitru Stăniloaie și-a conturat pe scurt o concepție proprie privind statutul Filosofiei și raportul ei cu Teologia. Astfel, în articolul „Pentru ce e bună Filosofia?", el scria că „Filosofia este veșnică nedumerire, veșnică gândire ce pune la îndoială evidențele firești sau stabilite deja, pentru a ridica altele care, la rândul lor, să fie surpate de critica unei gândiri ulterioare. Este în firea filosofiei ca să pună sub semnul întrebării datele imediate ale simțurilor, ca și oricare altele. Astfel, se apropie în două chipuri de religie: întâi că dă o notă de relativitate lucrurilor vizibile și le sfâșie nimbul de valori absolute și exclusive și al doilea că în obișnuiește pe om să gândească abstract, la realități de altă natură decât cele materiale. Religia încă vrea să deprindă pe om cu aceste înclinații și se înțelege că filosofia o ajută mult în direcția aceasta. De aceea, aproape totdeauna religia și filosofia s-au căutat una pe alta și s-au înțeles destul de bine. Mai mult religia, în teologia ei, lucrează cu aparat filosofic și cere de la cei ce o studiază o temeinică familiarizare cu filosofia. Deși poți fi om cu profundă viață religioasă fără a fi studiat filosofia, totuși pentru a fi și teolog, adică a comunica și altor intelectuali credința ta, ai nevoie de filosofie”[4]. Iată că teologul nostru pune aici în evidență statutul filosofiei de gândire critică, precum și necesitatea teologiei de a recurge sistematic la filosofie, în virtutea unei importante moșteniri conceptuale comune.

În ceea ce ne privește, ca principiu metodologic, pentru a distinge clar ce este filosofie și ce nu este filosofie ci teologie în gândirea lui Dumitru Stăniloaie, vom urma o sugestie a filosofului român Mircea Florian, cu privire la trăsăturile comune și deosebirile principale, esențiale dintre cele două domenii. Astfel, după Mircea Florian[5], Filosofia și Teologia au următoarele trăsături comune: (1) Ambele domenii concep Universul în totalitate, în mod unitar, în ansamblu, holistic, ca pe o unitate organică. (2) Obiectul ambelor nu este unul fizic, ci metafizic. (3) Atât filosofia cât și teologia au în tematica lor problema sensului vieții, reflecții asupra statutului și destinului ființei umane în univers. Deosebirile între Filosofie și Teologie, nu mai puțin importante, sunt tot trei la număr. (1) „Obiectul” teologiei, Dumnezeu este conceput obligatoriu ca fiind o Ființă absolută înzestrată cu însușiri personale, însușiri care fac din El o Persoană (cunoaștere, putere, voință, bunătate, dreptate etc.), însușiri postulate ca absolute, dezvoltate dincolo de limita perfecțiunii. În timp ce obiectul / obiectele filosofiei sunt principii logice, categorii abstracte, în cazul cărora nu se pune nicidecum problema ca să aibă însușiri personale. (2) Teologia și orice religie în genere va susține că se bazează pe cunoștințe revelate, învățături transmise omului, într-un fel sau altul, de către divinitate. În schimb filosofia afirmă că se bazează exclusiv pe rațiunea umană. (3) Proprie teologiei îi este componenta credinței, în timp ce filosofia caută să fie, dimpotrivă, cunoaștere critică și examinare critică a tuturor cunoștințelor produse de-a lungul întregii sale istorii. Acesta va fi firul metodologic călăuzitor al demersului nostru. Prin această grilă vom (dis)cerne ce este filosofie și ce este teologie.

2. Încadrarea experienței religioase în sistemul cunoașterii în general

După cum arată autorități recunoscute în domeniul epistemiologiei, Filosofia ca ştiinţă primă (în teremenii lui Aristotel), era gândită drept cunoaştere a determinărilor celor mai generale şi esenţiale ale existenţei[6]. În acest context, „cunoaşterea prin excelenţă este: (a) cunoaştere prin raţiune, opusă cunoaşterii întemeiată pe experienţă; (b) cunoaştere pentru cunoaştere, adică cunoaşterea principiilor care unifică şi explică toate faptele. O asemenea cunoaştere ar satisface în cea mai mare măsură nevoia noastră de a înţelege”[7]. Dar acest concept al cunoaşterii a fost criticat de filosofii sceptici şi empirişti. Empiriştii secolului XX, afirmă că nu avem nici o cunoaştere care depăşeşte experienţa și că o cunoaştere prin raţiunea pură a existenţei este iluzorie. Astfel că în timp s-au conturat două orientări principale în teoria cunoașterii: empirismul și raționalismul, în simetrie cu cunoașterea comună și cunoașterea științifică.

Disputa între formele clasice ale empirismului și raționalismului din secolele XVII-XVIII poate fi considerată exemplară în acest sens. Raționalismul (de la cuvântul latin ratio, temei, fundamenet) și susține că cunoașterea prin rațiune sau prin intelect, separată de cunoașterea prin simțuri, constituie sursa cunoașterii autentice. Filosofii moderni raționaliști afirmă acest lucru în diferite modalități, cu diferite expresii. Astfel, Descartes: „lumina naturală a raţiunii e sădită în noi de către creator”. Spinoza: „numai raţiunea poate pătrunde lucrurile aşa cum sunt, iar cunoaşterea prin simţuri e mutilată şi confuză”. Leibniz: „Există un adevăr necesar, adevărat în toate lumile posibile”.

De cealaltă parte, empiriștii clasici susțin punctul de vedere opus. Termenul empirism a fost utilizat, mai întâi, pentru a desemna punctul de vedere că întreaga noastră cunoaştere despre lume provine din simţuri. John Locke, în „Eseu asupra intelectului omenesc” arată că, dacă se va stabili din ce surse se constituie cunoştinţele noastre, vom putea determina cât de departe se întinde cunoaşterea noastră, iar determinarea limitelor cunoaşterii constituie cea mai puternică stavilă, atât împotriva pretenţiilor nesăbuite de a cunoaşte absolutul, cât şi împotriva scepticismului radical. În concepția lui Locke, principiul empirismului este acela că toate ideile, „toate cunoştintele noastre despre lume îşi au sursele în impresiile simţurilor (experienţa externă) şi de asemenea în observaţiile pe care le facem asupra operaţiilor sau activităţii minţii noastre (experienţa internă). Intelectul este de la naştere o „încăpere goală" (tabula rasa), el e pe deplin pasiv în dobândirea primelor sale idei. Primele elemente ale cunoaşterii îşi au originea în acţiunea lumii exterioare asupra simţurilor"[8]. După Locke, Dumnezeu i-a dat omului intelect pentru a-şi întări credinţa, a-şi cunoaşte îndatoririle şi a-şi satisface nevoile materiale. Aceste obiective pot fi atinse, în timp ce omul poate să rămână în totală necunoaştere asupra ultimelor temeiuri ale existenţei.

Alți epistemologi contemporani susțin că empirismul naiv aflat în siajul lucrărilor lui John Locke trebuie depășit, deoarece „în cunoaștere obiectul este decelat cu ajutorul structurilor perceptive și raționale ale subiectului și nu ar exista pentru subiect altfel"[9]. Din momentul în care este sesizat, obiectul este scos dim mediul său natural pentru a se mișca în lumea ideilor, fiind prin însuși acest fapt transformat de către postulatele subiectului. Când realul devine obiect de cunoaștere, acesta este transformat. Trecerea din mediul pur fizic în mediul cunoașterii alterează faptul, apare o diferență reală între faptul brut și faptul științific.

Cum am putea defini faptele? Într-o primă aproximație, notele definitorii ar fi următoarele: (1) „Faptul" este un ceva ce există concret în realitate[10]. Conceptul de fapt este opus față de ceea ce există doar imaginat sau gândit. (2) Faptul se produce în mod inevitabil atunci când sunt întrunite anumite condiții. Întrucât poate fi reprodus și repetat în anumite condiții, faptul devine un obiect de experiență și poate fi observat și controlat și de alte persoane.

(3) Există însă și fapte care sunt doar obiect al experienței interne a unui subiect, care sunt sesizate, „simțite", trăite numai de către o singură persoană, care se mai numesc și „inefabile", deoarece nu pot constitui și obiectul experienței altor persoane. Aici avem un punct de contact cu teologia, pe care îl vom dezvolta mai încolo, în sensul în care teologia în general și teologul Dumitru Stăniloae în particular vorbesc despre modul inefabil în care individul uman poate experimenta fenomenul credinței și despre bogăția de experiențe subiective pe care le încearcă omul credincios în apropierea sa de Dumnezeu. Faptele din această categorie, aceea a experienței interioare, omul încearcă să le comunice și altora prin poezie, muzică sau prin „încercarea de a transpune verbal trăirile religioase"[11]. Dar în ceea ce privește știința în general, introspecția nu este o metodă valabilă nici măcar pentru psihologie, iar faptul trebuie să fie obiectivat pentru a deveni obiect de experiență științifică. De exemplu, cineva poate să aibă puternice sentimente de nemulțumire și revoltă în sufletul său, dar atâta vreme cât nu își exteriorizează trăirile prin gesturi sau cuvinte, aceste trăiri nu constituie un fapt în sensul observației și al experienței științifice.

Generalizând, am putea spune că faptul brut sau preștiințific, constă în ceea ce este dat imediat în raport cu simțurile și observația noastră, iar faptul elaborat științific constă în același fapt dat, dar asociat cu reprezentări generale și încadrat în genul din care face parte, interpretat cu atribuirea unor semnificații mai extinse și încadrat în cunoașterea anterioară[12]. La limită, faptul științific poate fi un construct abstract în raport cu faptul brut concret senzorial.

În ceea ce privește faptele brute și experiența interioară, teologul Dumitru Stăniloae are un punct de vedere cu totul original[13]. Gândirea sa nu este o simplă compilare de texte patristice, așa cum au criticat-o unii, şi nici o repetare a lor, ci o regândire[14] şi o re-adâncire a Teologiei Părinţilor Răsăriteni, în special a Sfinţilor Grigore de Nyssa, Maxim Mărturisitorul şi Grigore Palama. Scopul pe care l-a urmărit părintele Stăniloaie în opera sa este: „înnoirea tradiţiei şi dezvoltarea doctrinei"[15], despre care el spune astfel: „Înnoirea constă pe de o parte în eliminarea unora din excrescenţele neesenţiale sau deviate ale Tradiţiei originare, pe de alta, în regăsirea şi aprofundarea sensului ei viu, a potenţelor ei spirituale, şi în trăirea lor. Această regăsire, aprofundare şi trăire, face ca veşmântul exterior al Tradiţiei să devină transparent. Înnoirea tradiţiei nu o realizăm prin ţinerea exterioară la textul Scripturii, ci prin înnoirea noastră interioară, în conformitate cu împlinirile duhovniceşti cele mai impresionante şi mai autentice din cursul istoriei Bisericii, începând cu perioada apostolică, în care avem primele modele."[16]

Această revenire la izvoarele tradiţiei originare, nu este doar o întoarcere spre operele părinţilor, ci şi spre scopul învăţăturii lor: mântuirea omului prin Hristos. Pr. D. Stăniloae a înţeles şi a realizat, că mesajul său vizează mântuirea omului şi se bazează pe ideea „că omul este o fiinţă personală şi nemuritoare destinată comunicării infinite cu Dumnezeu, până la măsura îndumnezeirii lui"[17]. La întrebarea: Ce este omul?, Stăniloae nu putea răspunde decât raportând omul la Fiinţa Supremă, căci „om" tocmai aceasta înseamnă: an-thropos în greaca veche înseamnă o fiinţă „răsucită", o fiinţă orientată în sus, spre cer. Această raportarea a omului la Dumnezeu însă, nu este una de vis-a-vis, deegalitate, ci una de comuniune care are ca scop umanizarea noastră prin conformarea tot mai reală a chipului lui Dumnezeu din noi, cu Arhetipul. Iar aceasta se realizează prin Fiul, în Duhul Sfânt. Aceste adevăruri ale antropologiei ortodoxe sunt specifice Pr. D. Stăniloae, dar în orizontul de gândire al său, ele capătă noi şi profunde valenţe. Pornind de la idei ca: iubire, chip (icoană), persoană, înfiere, îndumnezeire ş.a., Pr. D. Stăniloae dezvoltă o nouă doctrină sau cel puţin aprofundează nişte note specifice ale Teologiei, caracteristice într-o măsură oarecare numai lui și anume: • Sfânta Treime este structura supremei iubiri şi baza mântuirii noastre prin înfierea adusă de Fiul în Duhul Sfânt; • Omul este o fiinţă personală apofatică, creată după chipul lui Dumnezeu şi destinată relaţiei de comuniune cu El; • Omul şi celelalte creaturi au fost făcute din iubire, nu din necesitate, de aceea omul trebuie să se întoarcă spre Creator prin eliberarea de sine şi acelaşi lucru trebuie să facă şi cu creaţia, adică să o ofere euharistic lui Dumnezeu, ca în felul acesta, lucrurile din lumea aceasta să devină nu zid, ci scară spre Dumnezeu.

Revenind la opera acestui mare teolog, nu putem trece cu vederea varietatea şi complexitatea ei, mai ales în ce priveşte antropologia teologică. Aproape toate cărţile dânsului sunt marcate de acest suflu antropologic, dar nu în sensul că toate ar trata aceeaşi problemă, ci în sensul că el a înţeles modul în care trebuie să răspundă frământărilor omului contemporan, răspunzându-i teologic la întrebarea: Ce sau (mai degrabă) cine este omul? Într-o lume în care antropologia este tot mai mult ruptă de ontologie, iar „conceptul de suflet" nu este acceptat de ştiinţă, folosindu-se tot felul de termeni psihanalitici, credem că un răspuns teologic la această întrebare ne-ar ajuta cât de cât.

3. Elemente filosofice în gândirea lui Dumitru Stăniloae

În ceea ce privește cunoașterea faptelor exterioare și experiența interioară, teologul Dumitru Stăniloae are un punct de vedere cu totul original[18]. Gândirea sa nu este o simplă compilare de texte patristice, așa cum au criticat-o unii, şi nici o repetare a lor, ci o regândire şi o re-adâncire a Teologiei Părinţilor Răsăriteni, în special a Sfinţilor Grigore de Nyssa, Maxim Mărturisitorul şi Grigore Palama. Scopul pe care l-a urmărit părintele Stăniloaie în opera sa este: înnoirea tradiţiei şi dezvoltarea doctrinei, despre care el spune astfel: „Înnoirea constă pe de o parte în eliminarea unora din excrescenţele neesenţiale sau deviate ale Tradiţiei originare, pe de alta, în regăsirea şi aprofundarea sensului ei viu, a potenţelor ei spirituale, şi în trăirea lor"[19].

Specificul cunoașterii în teologie este total diferit față de cel din științele naturii. În teologie, experiența aici este una interioară, orientată nu spre faptele lumii din afară, ci asupra sinelui omului. Cu privire la modul în care experimentăm noi lumea și pe Creatorul ei, pe Dumnezeu, și apoi relația dintre Creator și Creație, pr. D. Stăniloae spune: „Lumea trebuie să ne fie oglindă străvezie a lui [17] Aici cuv. „măsură", are oarecum un sens peiorativ, pentru că nu se poate vorbi despre o măsură aîndumnezeirii. Termenul este totuşi folosit des, inclusiv de Sf. Ap. Pavel (Ef.4,13), el exprimând mai mult ideea de ajungere la limita de jos a desăvârşirii, nu cea de sus; se referă la actul pregustării, nu la cel al supraabundenţei.

Dumnezeu. Ea ne e dată ca să vedem prin ea dincolo de ea. Ea ne face mai accesibilă măreţia lui Dumnezeu. Neputinţa ei de a fi prin ea, dar în acelaşi timp măreţia ei, ne arată pe Dumnezeu, Creatorul ei, mai presus de puterea noastră de a-L defini"[20]. Dumitru Stăniloaie a re-actualizat în limbajul teologic ortodox contemporan conceptul de „cunoaștere apofatică", care face din neştiinţa prin depăşire o poziţie de cunoaştere adevărată. E vorba de a cunoaște însuşirea lui Dumnezeu de a fi cu totul de neînţeles, căci „pe Dumnezeu îl cunoaştem cel mai bine necunoscându-L"[21]. Cunoaşterea de care se vorbeşte și pe care o numeşte apofatică, nu este doar o simplă negaţie prin depăşire, cum credeau greşit unii,[22] ci este o participare efectivă la misterul lui Dumnezeu, la taina Persoanei Lui, este o împărtăşire din „întunericul supraluminos" în care „locuieşte" şi „lucrează" Dumnezeu. La fel ca și la Hegel, misterul Ființei Supreme se situează dincolo de întuneric și lumină perceptibile omenește, acolo unde lumina pură este totuna cu întunericul pur. Deci nu este vorba de o cunoaştere raţională care doar îşi recunoaşte limitele, ci de una supra-raţională, dar în acelaşi timp relaţională.

Marele nostru teolog Dumitru Stăniloae arată că ținta spritualității creștine ortodoxe este unirea omului credincios cu Dumnezeu. Dar cum Dumnezeu este nesfârșit, ținta unirii cu El nu corespunde niciodată unui capăt, de la care să nu se mai poată înainta. Astfel, unirea noastră cu Dumnezeu ni se arată ca un progres infinit. Tot astfel vorbea și filosoful german Immanuel Kant (1724-1804), când postula necesitatea nemuririi sufletului. Noi nu putem să facem în această viață tot binele moral pe care constiința noastră îl reclamă. Perfecțiunea morală are nevoie de o viață viitoare infinită pentru a fi atinsă. Kant postulează necesitatea nemuririi sufletului prin faptul că omul moral nu poate realiza în timpul vieții sale finite cerința infinită a sfințeniei, definită drept „conformitatea deplină a voinței cu legea morală"[23].

Din studiul scrierilor sale se poate consstata că Dumitru Stăniloae cunoștea bine filosofia existențialistă cu care era contemporan. Părintele Stăniloae intră în contact cu filosofia existențialistă de inspirație creștină, inclusiv cu opera lui Martin Heidegger, în anul 1928, când se afla la studii de specializare în Germania, la Munchen și Berlin. Potrivit lui Heidegger, omul este în permanență „lansat înaintea sa prin grijă". El consideră „grija" ca pe o structură ce cuprinde întreaga constituție a omului, aceasta fiind originară, iar celelalte trăsături ale omului ca fiind derivate. Dar Dumitru Stăniloae spune că, așa cum Heidegger recunoaște pentru „grijă" o virtute gnoseologică în raport cu viitorul, tot așa trebuie să se recunoască și pentru nădejde o anumită capacitate de a anticipa viitorul. Nădejdea creștină ține tot așa de mult de firea omului ca și „grija" heideggeriană, dar există și o diferență și o opoziție între ele. Nădejdea religioasă, nădejdea fericirii într-o viață viitoare este cu atât mai prezentă în sufletul credinciosului, cu cât este mai absentă grija și invers"[24].

Teologul român Dumitru Stăniloae era familiarizat cu temele de reflecție ale filosofiei existențialiste de expresie germană și franceză, cu care era contemporan, deși nu-i citează pe foarte mulți autori din domeniul filosofiei. Filosoful german Karl Jaspers (1883-1969) este cel care analizează conceptele de Necondiționat și Facticitate. Viaţa în totalitatea ei este condiţionată, viaţa noastră individuală, fiinţarea noastră are o anumită facticitate (de la factum, fapt condiționat de alte fapte), prinsă fiind în aleatoriul vieţii de zi cu zi. De la viaţa factice la cea autentică ajungem traversând situaţii-limită, situaţii excepţionale, care impun întemeierea vieţii noastre pe Necondiţionat. Acest drum l-au parcurs oamenii care, subordonându-se unei exigenţe necondiţionate, şi-au riscat viaţa și uneori au ales chiar mai bine să-şi piardă viaţa, decât să continue cu orice preţ o fiinţare factice. Aceştia sunt martirii, care au dat dovadă de energia morală cea mai pură în ataşamentul faţă de credinţa lor. Sfinţii rămân pentru noi adevărate călăuze, modele pedagogice, sunt figurile umane

Concluzie

Este celebră împrejurarea în care Dumitru Stăniloae a purtat o polemică cu filosoful Lucian Blaga. În rezumat, trebuie să reținem că teologul Dumitru Stăniloae susține că filozofia lui Blaga, așa cum se dezvăluie ea în liniile ei de temelie, este o filozofie a lucrurilor și a forțelor impersonale. Blaga atacă misterul prin rațiune și susține că omul nu poate cunoaște realitatea care este un mister impenetrabil. În concepția sa despre Marele Anonim, Blaga îl concepe pe Dumnezeu lipsit de două însușiri fundamentale pentru o persoană: de voință și de iubire, ca să nu mai vorbim de aceasta ciudată restrângere prin rațiune a posibilităților divine care trebuie să fie neasemănat de multe. O realitate lipsită de voință și de iubire este orice, numai persoană nu. Iubirea, în special, este un criteriu după care se măsoară gradul de dezvoltare, de perfecțiune a unei persoane. Cu cât este mai puțin lipsit de iubire cineva, cu atât este mai mult purtat de impulsuri și de griji nestăpânite, ca o victimă impersonală și involuntară a lor. Prin iubire, noi creștem în spirit, îi înțelegem pe alții, dar ne înțelegem și pe noi înșine.

În domeniul antropologiei, trebuie să mai observăm că metoda preotului Dumitru Stăniloae este una înnoitoare şi întregitoare dar, în acelaşi timp, în concordanţă cu teologia Sfinţilor Părinţi Răsăriteni. Pe de altă parte, teologul român recurge şi la o adaptare a limbajului pentru omul de astăzi, dându-i în felul acesta răspuns la multe din întrebările de care este frământată umanitatea contemporană. Omul, după cum spune Dumitru Stăniloae, simte că nu este doar „una din făpturi", ci făptura prin excelenţă: cauza şi scopul pentru care au fost zidite toate celelalte făpturi. Lumea, întreagă, inclusiv omul, au fost făcute de Dumnezeu nu din necesitate, ci din iubire şi pentru iubire. Însă de la iubirea ca şi cauză, până la iubirea ca şi scop, este un drum anevoios, mai ales după păcat, căci iubirea implică şi tinde spre comuniune, or omul, prin păcat, tinde mai mult spre închidere în sine.

Chipul conferă omului un loc aparte în creaţie, adică îl ridică deasupra celorlalte creaturi, dar în sens mai profund el este, aşa cum spune Pr. D. Stăniloae, şi o înrudire cu Dumnezeu la nivel de persoană, nu şi de fiinţă. Prin urmare, Dumnezeu a dorit din veci o viaţă de comuniune cu noi şi de aceea ne-a făcut persoane, căci comuniunea nu poate avea loc decât numai între persoane. Dar chiar şi atunci, comuniunea nu este suficientă şi deplină dacă în această relaţie sunt antrenate numai două persoane, căci fiecare dintre ele poate deveni zid celeilalte în deschiderea spre întregul lumii, de aceea este nevoie de cel puţin trei persoane. Pornind de la aceste premise, Pr. D. Stăniloae a dezvoltat o înaltă teologie a persoanei şi a comuniunii, iar acest lucru îl va distinge în mod vizibil de ceilalţi teologi contemporani lui.

Un al treilea aspect antropologic prin care se impune teologia Pr. D. Stăniloae, este acela al conlucrării omului cu harul divin, din acest punct de vedere omul fiind de la început un „Templu al Duhului Sfânt" (I Cor. VI). Prin însăşi constituţia sa psiho-somatică, omul este şi spiritual, dar printr-o viaţă de comuniune cu Dumnezeu prin Biserică, omul devine un sălaş permanent şi real al Duhului Sfânt, un pnevmatofor şi deci un teofor. Toate le face Duhul Sfânt, dar numai prin credinţa în Hristos ca Fiu al lui Dumnezeu – Tatăl. Duhul este cel care dă formă, lumină, viaţă, putere şi tot El este cel care ne face fii ai lui Dumnezeu prin har, adică ne îndumnezeieşte. Dar la această Persoană a Sfintei Treimi, care este Duhul Sfânt cheia spre comuniunea Sfintei Treimi nu se poate ajunge decât prin Biserică, căci în Biserică a ales Dumnezeu să ni Se comunice prin harul sfinţitor al sfintelor Taine şi numai Ea este spaţiul prezenţei depline a lui Dumnezeu între noi până la sfârşitul veacului.

Marele merit al pr. Dumitru Stăniloae constă în regăsirea echilibrului dintre Ființă și Persoană, la Ființa Divină, pe de o parte, iar pe de altă parte, accentuarea posibilității de trăire în comuniune cu Dumnezeu. Ceea ce nu știa teologia scolastică – faptul că se poate crea o legătură de comuniune personală cu Dumnezeu Cel Întrupat – a fost insistent propovăduit de către pr. Dumitru Stăniloae, în toată opera sa. El acordă persoanei, fie divine, fie umane, în funcție de subiectul concret abordat, locul central. Pentru el, nu există ființă neipostaziată în persoană, după cum nu poate să existe nici persoană lipsită de ontologie. Aceste două realități – ființa și persoana – se subînțeleg reciproc, neputând exista una fără cealaltă, părintele Dumitru Stăniloae reușind să împace într-un mod fericit ontoteologia cu teologia persoanei, teologia raționalistă a Ființei Divine, cu teologia și filosofia personalistă.

CHRISTIANITY, JUDAISM, AND THE SLAVE MORALITY IN FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE'S INTERPRETATION

Melisa Mateaș
PhD Student, Technical University of Cluj-Napoca

Abstract: This study examines Nietzsche's critique of Judaism and Christianity as historical embodiments of slave morality, highlighting the manner in which these religious traditions contributed to overturning the ancient aristocratic value system. In Nietzsche's interpretation, the priestly form of Judaism initiated a radical revaluation of values by redefining "good" in terms of weakness, suffering, and submission—a process later continued and amplified by Christianity. His quotations emphasize the "spiritual revenge" enacted by the Jewish priesthood and the strategy through which a new moral hierarchy, grounded in guilt and ressentiment, was imposed. Nevertheless, this critique does not align with the racial antisemitism of his time; Nietzsche explicitly rejects rasiological interpretations and attributes to the Jewish people a regenerative potential, even the capacity to become "creators of values."

Christianity is depicted as a mass religion that institutionalized slave morality through its ecclesiastical structures, intensifying guilt and dependence on the divine. Nietzsche assigns to the apostle Paul the role of founder of dogmatic Christianity, arguing that he reshaped the original message into an instrument of power. In contrast to Christian universalism, Nietzsche retrieves pre-Christian values, calls for the overcoming of guilt, and announces the need for a new transvaluation of values centered on the will to power, master morality, and the ideal of the Overman. Moreover, the concept of the eternal recurrence is interpreted as a mystical and ontological principle meant to ground a renewed affirmative stance toward existence.

Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900) este unul dintre cei mai influenți și mai radicali gânditori ai modernității târzii, un filosof care a pus sub semnul întrebării fundamentele metafizice, morale și religioase ale culturii occidentale. Formația sa filologică riguroasă, dublată de o sensibilitate filosofică orientată spre genealogie și psihologie, i-a permis să dezvolte un stil critic unic, în care erudiția istorică se îmbină cu intuiția speculativă și cu o forță interpretativă deosebită. Nietzsche nu oferă sisteme, ci „diagnostice": analize ale formelor de decădere spirituală, ale mecanismelor ascunse ale moralei și ale simptomelor degenerative ale civilizației europene. Prin concepte precum moartea lui Dumnezeu, nihilismul, voința de putere, morala de stăpân și morala de sclav sau Eterna Reîntoarcere, Nietzsche deschide un orizont critic complet nou, plasând problema valorilor în centrul filosofiei. El nu investighează doar istoria ideilor, ci și dinamica afectivă și psihologică care stă la baza lor, demontând legitimitatea tradițiilor metafizice și religioase printr-o metodă genealogică revoluționară. Critica sa la adresa creștinismului și a iudaismului, înțelese ca forme istorice ale unei morale reactive, nu este una teologică, ci una antropologică și axiologică. Pentru Nietzsche, religiile dominante ale Occidentului reprezintă expresia unei „revolte a sclavilor în morală", un proces de inversare a valorilor care, în opinia sa, a condus la slăbirea instinctelor vitale, la reprimarea afirmării de sine și la instaurarea unei culturi a vinovăției. În această perspectivă, proiectul său filosofic se constituie ca o încercare de reevaluare a tuturor valorilor și ca o chemare la depășirea nihilismului prin afirmarea unei noi tipologii umane.

Înțelegerea criticii nietzscheene asupra creștinismului fondator și asupra tradiției iudaice preoțești are, astfel, un caracter esențial pentru întregul edificiu conceptual al gânditorului. Aceste analize nu sunt simple judecăți istorice, ci momente centrale ale unei genealogii a moralei occidentale, în cadrul căreia Nietzsche urmărește mecanismele ascunse ale devenirii culturale și posibilitățile depășirii ei. Prin această perspectivă, opera lui rămâne un instrument major de interpretare a modernității și un punct de plecare pentru numeroase curente filosofice ulterioare, de la existențialism și fenomenologie până la hermeneutică și post-structuralism.

În viziunea nietzscheană, iudaismul este criticat pentru rolul său de precursor al creștinismului, fiind perceput ca sursa valorilor promovate ulterior de acesta, precum și pentru faptul că a stat la baza formării unei clase sacerdotale ce a exercitat o dominație asupra vieții sociale și spirituale. Conform filosofului german, codul etic instituit de sacerdoții evrei a modificat morala de stăpân privind rasa ariană, pe care el nu o identifica la germanii contemporani, deoarece îi considera degenerați[1]. El recurge la o critică dublă, anti-iudaică și anti-creștină. „Nimic nu este mai puțin ingenuu decât Noul Testament. Se știe pe ce sol a crescut. Acest popor cu o voință neînduplecată față de sine, care, după ce-și pierduse demult orice fond natural și dreptul propriu la existență, a știut totuși să se impună, având, în plus, nevoie să se legitimeze prin ipoteze cu totul artificiale și pur imaginare (ca popor ales, comunitate de sfinți, popor al făgăduinței, ca «biserică»): acest popor a manipulat vechea pia fraus cu o asemenea desăvârșire, cu un asemenea grad de «conștiință curată», încât nu poți fi suficient de precaut atunci când el predică morala. Dacă evreii se înfățișează drept puritatea însăși, pericolul a devenit major: trebuie să-ți aduni micul fond de inteligență, neîncredere și răutate atunci când citești Noul Testament”[2].

Nietzsche arată o apreciere față de încercările pe care a reușit să le depășească poporul evreu. El acuză iudaismul pentru crearea unei morale religioase, manifestată prin înființarea castei clericale. Din perspectiva sa, au început să se degradeze valorile inerente moralei de stăpân, odată cu folosirea de către evrei a ideii de Dumnezeu. „Tot ceea ce s-a făcut pe pământ împotriva «nobililor», a celor «puternici», a «stăpânilor», a «despoților» nu înseamnă aproape nimic în comparație cu ce au făcut evreii împotriva lor; evreii, acest neam preoțesc care în cele din urmă și-a găsit satisfacția împotriva dușmanilor și împlicatorilor lui numai printr-o reconsiderare radicală a valorilor acestora, deci printr-un act de răzbunare spirituală. Această cale era singura pe măsura unui popor de preoți, a poporului celei mai adânci răzbunări proțești. Evreii au fost aceia care, cu o logică înspăimântătoare, au îndrăznit răsturnarea ecuației aristocratice a valorilor (bun = nobil = puternic = frumos = fericit = iubit de Dumnezeu), menținând răsturnarea prin ura cea mai îndîrjită (ura neputinței), afirmând că «doar necăjiții sunt cei buni, doar săracii, doar neputincioșii, înjosiții sunt cei buni, suferinzii, nevoiașii, bolnavii, urâții sunt și singurii pioși, singurii evlavioși, numai lor li se cuvine fericirea – pe când voi, voi nobilii și despoții, voi sunteți pentru veșnicie cei răi, cei cruzi, lacomi, nesătui, lipsiți de Dumnezeu, voi veți rămâne veșnic și cei nefericiți, blestemați și osândiți!»”[3] Utilizarea acestei strategme a continuat și în creștinism prin instituirea suveranității Bisericii asupra maselor, Nietzsche considerând-o pe aceasta o altă formă de manipulare inerentă moștenirii tradiției iudaice. În contrast cu naționalismul antisemit, filosoful oscilează între admirația pentru capabilitatea de regenerare a poporului evreu și o critică referitoare la morala de sclav. El acuză evreii pentru instaurarea unei ierarhii axiologice, care constă în răsturnarea naturii acestei lumi. „Evreii – popor «născut pentru sclavie», cum spune Tacit și, împreună cu el, întreaga lume antică, «popor ales între popoare», după cum spun ei înșiși și o cred, - evreii au realizat acea miraculoasă răsturnare a valorilor grație căreia viața pe pământ a dobândit pentru câteva milenii o atracție nouă și primejdioasă: - profeții lor au contopit într-una singură noțiunile de «bogat», «păcătos», «rău», «violent», «senzual», și pentru întâia oară au stigmatizat cuvântul «lume». În această răsturnare a valorilor (din care face parte și folosirea cuvântului «sărac» ca sinonim al «sfântului» și «prietenului») constă importanța poporului evreu: o dată cu ea începe revolta sclavilor în domeniul moralei”[4].

Friedrich Nietzsche face o serie de enunțuri referitoare la iudaismul sedimentat în cultura occidentală. „El se folosește de istorie pentru construirea paradigmelor hermeneutice, prin care se ilumineză straturile psihologice și existențiale – tipuri diverse de raportare la viață – cuprinse latent în formele de cultură pe care Nietzsche le supune examenului critic, cum ar fi elenismul olimpian, cel tragic și cel socratic sau iudaismul din epoca Mikra (iudaismul veterotestamentar), iudaismul preoților, iudaismul din diaspora etc. [...] ceea ce însă este clar e faptul că, în termenii lui Nietzsche însuși, critica iudaismului antic nu constituie baza teoretică a antisemitismului, ci servește ca baza genealogică de respingere a creștinismului. Mai mult decât atât, critica iudaismului preoțesc constituie, în final, motivul de respingere a antisemitismului, deoarece evreii contemporani trebuie considerați aliați puternici în depășirea creștinismului"[5]. Drept punct central în analiza gândirii nietzscheene este faptul că filosoful respinge antisemitismul, care în perioada respectivă se manifesta din perspectivă rasiologică. Conform ideilor sale, eliminarea din gândirea colectivă a elementelor vechilor table de valori, atât creștine, cât și iudaice, reprezenta soluția pentru implementarea moralei de stăpân, iar antisemitismul de masă, pornind de la premise eronate, poate să ducă la împiedicarea acestui demers.

Reflectând asupra profeției referitoare la mântuirea spectaculoasă a Israelului, Nietzsche susține că evreii ar putea deveni „creatori de valori". În filosofia sa, crearea de valori este cea mai importantă sarcină, care reprezintă transmutația valorilor, evreii fiind destinați să fie un catalizator istoric, deținând un rol important în acest demers. Dorința lui Nietzsche de a mobiliza populația evreiască europeană pentru a contribui la această transfigurare a valorilor îl face să exclame: „Ce binefacere este un evreu printre germani!"[6] În acest context, Nietzsche propune, pentru îmbunătățirea culturii europene, căsătoriile între evrei și germani, subestimând, în acest sens, reticența puternică a mediului iudaic european. Opiniile sale referitoare la căsătoriile mixte pot părea paradoxale, privind admirația pe care a avut-o față de viziunea iudaică privind „puritatea rasei".

Datorită paradoxurilor existente în lucrările sale, Nietzsche a fost considerat un antisemit, la acest fapt contribuind și interpretările abuzive ale regimului nazist. Chiar destinul postum al creației nietzschene ne pune în postura de a reevalua opera în mod corect, iar pentru un demers de acest gen trebuie luate toate aspectele care au marcat gândirea sa în analiză. Pe lângă aspectele prezentate privind antisemitismul nietzschean, care poate fi perceput printr-o critică indirectă a iudaismului ca precursor al creștinismului, pe Friedrich Nietzsche îl regăsim și ca pe un apărător al culturii evreiești, sau ca pe un admirator al forței de regenerare a poporului evreu. O posibilă interpretare o putem identifica în gândirea sa iudeofobă, în care morala de sclav instituită de clerul mozaic a fost transpusă în preceptele creștinismului. Pentru gânditor, creștinismul reprezintă o formă de cripto-iudaism, fundamentată pe aceeași matrice morală, manifestată din punct de vedere psihologic și etico-atitudinal prin tipologia comportamentală a sclavului. Critica nietzscheană a creștinismului se ilustrează prin originile sale iudaice, prin critica unor elemente inerente fondului moral iudaic, neconform „moralei de stăpân", iar sentimentele creștine precum iubirea aproapelui sau mila au fost implementate de Biserică, considerată o continuatoare a cutumelor religiei. Obiectivul gândirii nietzscheene constă în eliminarea fundamentelor religioase tradiționale din matricea culturală europeană, printr-un proces de înlocuire a creștinismului cu o construcție culturală edificată pe paradigma voinței de putere, însoțită de o etică specifică numită morala stăpânului, în cadrul căreia conceptul de Supraom se conturează ca un ideal axiologic suprem.

Poziția lui Nietzsche împotriva creștinismului nu s-a definit doar printr-o dezbatere teologică propriu-zisă, ci s-a conturat și din reacțiile venite din ambientul social-cultural impus de epocă, acumulând toate nevrozele imprimate de creștinismul instituționalizat pe parcursul secolelor. Din perspectivă nietzscheană, creștinismul reprezintă o doctrină a maselor, sintagma celebră a morții divinității, afirmată în Așa grăit-a Zarathustra, Nietzsche o va traduce conceptual în cadrul lucrării Voința de putere.

Genealogia moralei și Antichristul pot fi citite drept meditații la dezbaterile din secolul al XIX-lea privind relația dintre rasă și religie. În lucrarea Amurgul idolilor, Nietzsche neagă moștenirea nobilă a rasei creștine, el considerând creștinismul ca fiind „[...] religia antiariană par excellence: creștinismul este reconsiderarea tuturor valorilor ariene, victoria valorilor Chandala[7], evanghelia săracilor, predicată celor de jos, revolta generală a tuturor celor desconsiderați, mizerabili, nereușiți, rataţi împotriva «rasei» - nemuritoarea răzbunare Chandala ca religie a iubirii..."[8]. Din perspectivă axiologică, creştinismul pentru Nietzsche poartă toate valorile antinomice rasei ariene, care se situează în opoziţie cu cea mai joasă castă din sistemul social din India, Chandala. Filosoful considera religia creştină ca fiind tipică şi conformă în principii morale unei caste inferioare, de asemenea, o considera doar un tertip al evreilor de a iudaiza lumea prin infuzia culpei şi a păcatului în mentalul colectiv. Deşi filosoful german vede în creştinism o armă a răzbunării evreilor, iar în momentul în care compară cele două testamente biblice, el apreciază faptele şi personajele veterotestamentare, în detrimentul celor din Noul Testament. Pe acestea le denigrează, deoarece, în opinia sa, fondul moral promovat în cadrul acestei scrieri are la bază puterea exemplului unei virtuţi şi anume smerenia, care nu era conformă moralei de stăpân. Nietzsche considera că degradarea a fost produsă datorită implementării în mentalul colectiv al sentimentelor de vină şi păcat, care impun un anumit tip de obligativitate, transformată în obedienţă faţă de divinitate. Gânditorul de la Weimar propune inclusiv adoptarea ateismului, pentru o revigorare a spiritualităţii. Conştiinţa culpei creată de creştinism a dus la o degradare a valorilor morale superioare şi la transformarea individului în sclav.

De aceste evoluţii ale societăţii, Nietzsche face responsabilă Biserica şi creştinismul instituţionalizat. „Venirea Dumnezeului creştin, expresia cea mai înaltă a divinului atinsă până atunci, a făcut, de asemenea, să sporească pe pământ maximum de sentiment al obligaţiei. Presupunând că am început să intrăm în mişcarea contrară, ne va fi permis să conchidem, cu oarecare îndreptăţire, asupra declinului irezistibil al credinţei în Dumnezeul creştin, a declinului conştiinţei datoriei (al greşelii) la om, declin deja foarte accelerat astăzi; am putea chiar prevedea că triumful complet şi definitiv al ateismului ar elibera omenirea de orice sentiment al obligaţiei faţă de originea sa, de a sa causa prima. Ateismul şi un fel de seconde innocence sunt legate unul de celălalt"[9]. După cum am menţionat anterior, întreaga metamorfoză în rău a religiei creştine, prin implementarea sentimentului de culpă, a fost produsă printr-o intruziune pe filieră iudaică.

Observăm căutarea filosofului în substraturile imanente ale creştinismului, în special în rolul apostolul Pavel. În opinia sa, apostolul Pavel[10] este întemeietorul religiei creştine, acesta fiind un creator de tertipuri manipulatoare pentru a institui, prin intermediul creştinismului, o ipostaziere a iudaismului. Nietzsche îl priveşte pe acesta drept un evreu care a implementat elementele iudaice pentru consolidarea creştinismului, care de fapt a fost construit pe consternare şi ură pe siajul iudaismului. „Viaţa, exemplul, învăţătura, moartea, sensul şi dreptul întregii Evanghelii – nu mai există nimic în afară de ceea ce înţelegea, în ura lui, acest falsificator de bani, de ceea ce îi putea fi lui de folos. Nici o realitate, nici un adevăr istoric!... Şi încă o dată, instinctul preoţesc al iudeilor a comis aceeaşi mare crimă împotriva istoriei – el a şters pur şi simplu ieri şi alaltăieri din creştinism şi-a născocit pentru sine o istorie a creştinismului primitiv. Mai mult încă: el a falsificat istoria lui Israel încă o dată, astfel încât ea să apară ca o preistorie a faptelor sale: toţi profeţii au vorbit despre «Mântuitorul» său... Mai târziu, Biserica a falsificat istoria omenirii pentru a face din ea preistoria creştinismului"[11]. Apostolul Pavel a surprins, din perspectiva lui Nietzsche, tot ceea ce ar putea să îi fie folositor pentru întemeierea unei religii, iar Iisus Christos, adevăratul îndreptăţit în acest sens, este valorificat doar prin sacrificiul său. Prin dorinţa de a inventa o mişcare cultică pe o cu totul altă axiologie morală, care să fie asimilată ca o religie a viitorului, Nietzsche se raporta la decadenţa lumii contemporane, gânditorul abordând aceeaşi atitudine de fondator al unei religii.

Pentru interpretarea impactului pe care religia îl manifestă la nivelul maselor, Nietzsche a comparat începuturile creştinismului şi aportul apostolului Pavel la cristalizarea mişcării religioase din cadrul Imperiului Roman cu schimbarea de paradigmă produsă de protestantism în lumea catolică prin laicizarea religiei, fapt care a condus la o destructurare a normelor sociale instituite de Biserică. Filosoful a apreciat în mod deschis vitalismul conferit de protestantism, care, prin expulzarea sfinţilor din panteonul cultic se distanţează de creştinismul catolic. El vede în protestantism o revoluţie purtată împotriva unei tiranii a religiei, reprezentată prin instituţia Bisericii Romano-Catolice. Apreciază revoluția produsă de lutheranism, considerând creștinismul instituit clerical prin universalismul catolic neconform spiritului germanic, prin aceasta aderând la ideea unei religii naționale. În acest sens, translatează caracteristica divină de la poporul evreu, pe care îl apreciază drept model istoric, la cel german. Gânditorul de la Weimar dorește crearea unui cult personal, anticlerical și anti-religios, în demersul său observăm că pentru a-și impune viziunea mistică asupra lumii, va ajunge să depășească rasialismul, iar răul cel mai profund al religiei, identificat de el în clasa sacerdotală, nu provine din spiritul iudaic, ci de la o rasă superioară, cea ariană. După cum am identificat anterior, filosoful elogiază evreii pentru modalitatea acestora de a rezista în istorie prin subterfugiul spiritual al conservării, care este exprimat într-un ansamblu religios aplicat prin norme sociale. Totuși, remarcăm că, în viziunea sa, instituționalizarea religiei prin inventarea preoției a fost inspirată evreilor pe filieră babiloniană de arieni. Coagularea întregului corpus social s-a realizat prin religie de către sacerdoții arieni, castă care divinizează sentimentul de putere, transmis de războinici.

Originiea marilor teme nietzscheene, precum moartea lui Dumnezeu, Voința de putere, nihilismul și Eterna Reîntoarcere este regăsită în lucrarea Nașterea tragediei. Filosoful pune pe seama lui Apollo și Dionysos[12] funcțiile care anticipează doctrina voinței de putere, în măsura în care unitățile acestea constitutive ale sinelui sau ale sufletului au capabilitatea de creare a unor mituri protectoare, cunoscute sub denumirea de morală și eliberare a energiilor, care dezvăluie caracterul constructiv al tradiției, făcând vizibilă adevărata temelie a culturii. Datorită forțelor transfiguratoare ale artei, Nietzsche este de părere că elinul antic conservă nealterate dragostea și bucuria propriei existențe și ca filosof al viitorului va prefigura, în acest mod, ceea ce avea să devină cel mai înalt model uman, Supraomul. Pentru explicarea raportului dintre acest concept și religie, Martin Heidegger, în lucrarea sa Despre eterna reîntoarcere a aceluiași[13], face apel la opera postumă a filosofului. Din fragmentele citate de Heidegger, se poate observa ceea ce Nietzsche speculează în intenția sa de a-și atribui rolul unui creator al unei morale noi, și anume germinarea efectului unei idei care va contura religia din ipostaza filosofului și a moralistului. Filosoful intuiește temporalitatea tipică instaurării unei noi axiologii, care se impune în schimbarea paradigmei inerente unei morale, conștientizând funcția istorială pe care o deține în contextul transformării ontologice.

Revoluția valorilor va fi, pe de-o parte atavică, exprimată prin Supraom, și pe de altă parte, se va manifesta prin impunerea anumitor norme antitetice codului creștin, transpuse în morala de stăpân. Departajarea celor care posedă morala de stăpân în cadrul culturii maselor, dezavuată de Nietzsche, va fi posibilă, în viziunea sa, prin libertatea spirituală a acestora, care va contribui la justa înțelegere a viziunii sale. Referitor la înțelegerea prin percepție mistică a eternei reîntoarceri a aceluiași și a gândului care vizează conceptul acesta, Nietzsche predicționează un evoluționism mistico-filosofic, asemănător într-o oarecare măsură cu darwinismul social, însă în cazul religiei propuse de filosof, cel adaptat să înțeleagă, respectiv să aplice normele moralei de stăpân, va fi cel care va supraviețui. Făcând referire la interpretările făcute de exegeții lui Nietzsche privind conceptul eternei reîntoarceri a aceluiași și asupra gândului care se poate avatariza în credință, Heidegger va aduce o apreciere extrem de prețioasă. Interșanjabilitatea dintre gând și credință, utilizată frecvent de autor în explicarea conceptului eternei reîntoarceri a aceluiași, a condus exegeții pe un traseu hermeneutic care să le permită a-l eluda, considerând că acest concept reprezintă un crez personal și religios.

Prin identificarea cauzelor care au constituit instituirea noilor norme imanente schimbării de paradigmă produse odată cu apariția modernismului, în contextul revoluționar impus de perioada fin de siècle, din analiza fenomenologică a creației nietzscheene se decelează că acest concept al eternei reîntoarceri este un element de factură mistică, exprimat inerent și filosofic unei posibile religii personale. Pentru filosof, Eterna Reîntoarcere constituie principala cheie pentru înțelegerea tuturor lucrurilor. În calitatea sa de fondator al unei „noi religii", Nietzsche se raportează într-o manieră paradoxală la apostolul Pavel, manifestând o formă de reprimare față de experiența mistică trăită pe drumul Damascului, experiență ce a permis fondarea creștinismului, cât și o atitudine critică, justificată prin acuzarea iudaizării cultului creștin prin incorporarea elementelor rabinice.

Analiza relației nietzscheene cu iudaismul și creștinismul evidențiază complexitatea unui demers critic care transcende interpretările reductive sau ideologizante. Departe de a constitui o formă de antisemitism rasiologic, lectura lui Nietzsche reprezintă o genealogie a originilor moralei occidentale, în cadrul căreia tradiția iudaică și creștină sunt înțelese ca etape ale „revoltei sclavilor în morală". Prin investigarea mecanismelor psihologice ale resentimentului, ale culpei și ale interiorizării vinovăției, Nietzsche urmărește să identifice procesul prin care valorile reactive au subminat instinctele vitale ale culturii europene. În acest sens, critica sa este îndreptată nu împotriva unui popor sau a unei rase, ci împotriva unei structuri axiologice care a remodelat modul de a interpreta lumea și existența. Totodată, interpretarea nu poate ignora ambivalența care traversează întreaga sa operă: poporul evreu este acuzat de instaurarea unei etici sacerdotale reactive, dar, în același timp, este apreciat pentru forța sa regenerativă și pentru potențialul de a deveni creator de valori în epoca modernității. În oglindă, creștinismul este înțeles ca o formă istorică a moralei de sclav, consolidată instituțional și amplificată de figura apostolului Pavel, pe care Nietzsche o interpretează ca exponent al unei strategii de putere. Prin contrast cu universalismul creștin, Nietzsche reabilitează valorile aristocratice precreștine, afirmând necesitatea unei transvaluări radicale a tuturor valorilor – proces ce culminează în idealul Supraomului și în adoptarea voinței de putere ca principiu constitutiv al devenirii umane.

Integrarea conceptelor de nihilism, voință de putere și eternă reîntoarcere în acest cadru critic dezvăluie vocația profund axiologică și ontologică a proiectului nietzschean. Religia, în formele ei istorice, este privită drept simptom al unei crize structurale a culturii, iar depășirea creștinismului reprezintă, pentru Nietzsche, o condiție a eliberării spiritului european de sub povara vinovăției și a resentimentului. În cele din urmă, lectura genealogică a tradițiilor iudaice și creștine nu urmărește distrugerea lor, ci înțelegerea mecanismelor prin care acestea au modelat cultura occidentală și posibilitatea de a gândi o nouă paradigmă morală. Prin această perspectivă, critica nietzscheană se constituie într-un demers de reconstrucție spirituală, care invită la depășirea nihilismului prin afirmarea unei existențe creatoare, autonome și profund afirmative.

STRANGE ABROAD, DANGEROUS AT HOME; VICTORIANS AND THE PERCEPTION OF CATHOLICS

Laurențiu Boșog
PhD Student, University of Craiova

Abstract: Since the Protestant Reformation the English perspective on Catholicism has been often characterised by negativity if not outright demonization. No aspect of English life during the years following the Reformation, be it artistic, spiritual or political, has escaped the disdain for Catholicism. It manifested early in the way art evolved and the topics approached by literature and later, with the reopening of the monasteries, incited a trend of paranoia as Victorian men began to fear the upheaval of the proper social order that might come from it. The scope of this paper is to explore these manifestations in English works of literature, especially from travel writers of the Victorian era - but not limited exclusively to the – and compare it to the perception of Catholic practices back in England.*

Keywords: Victorian literature; Catholicism; travel literature; Elizabethan literature*

BEFORE THE VICTORIANS

In a 2025 video on the effects of Henry VIII's dissolution of the monasteries, London tour guide J. Draper highlighted how, in the period following the split from the Catholic Church, not only was the political landscape affected, but also the cultural one. English Baroque being less colourful than the French and Italian one and the controversy caused by the addition of a dome to St. Paul's Cathedral are noteworthy examples she gives of Anglican reactions to any perceived referencing of Catholic aesthetics[1]. This anti-Catholic current caused the aesthetic trappings of Catholicism to be perceived in two intertwining manners; both as an exotic foreign import and as a threat to the stability of English civilisation. Disdain for these things did not limit itself to only the aesthetic transformation of churches and cathedrals in England; rather spawning a culture that was hostile to any slight hint of Catholicism –real or perceived- that manifested its disdain in other ways.

In literature, the most obvious example of this sentiment can be seen in Roger Ascham's The Schoolmaster (1570). Ascham uses this text to warn against the corrupting influences of Catholicism on the English mind; completely disavowing it in favour of a purer, English education[2] rather than allowing one to commit the grave sin of expanding one's cultural horizons. Indeed, any idea of expanding beyond the limits of Anglo-Protestant teaching is seen akin to the original sin, a downfall of biblical proportions from what has been constructed as an "original condition of national purity, of pristine Englishness"[3] to which any drop of Catholic influence results in nothing short of complete moral, spiritual and social degradation. The result of this, is then a fallen England in which none pay heed to any "real" virtues or values:

"[…]innocencie is gone: Bashfulnesse is banished: moch presumption in yougthe: small authoritie in aige: Reverence is neglected: dewties be confounded: and to be shorte, disobedience doth ouerflowe the bankes of good order, almoste in everie place, almoste in everie degree of man."[4]

Thus, we see how as early as the 16th century there had been a current of fear of Catholic influences eroding the basis of English society by creating a man who, through ignorance, sins against his own culture[5]. In contrast, to combat this perceived destructive influence, English writers seek to elevate Protestant values in a manner that presents them as not only morally superior but spiritually victorious over their Catholic rivals. Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590) is a clear example of this, as it portrays the influence of Catholicism in the sinister figure of the enchantress Duessa, whose outward pleasant appearance is a mask of saintliness that seeks to lead the true virtuous folk astray. She represents the constant threat of Catholic deception, outwardly hidden behind false virtue while scheming behind closed doors to mislead the innocent Protestants into "mistaking hypocritical evil for good, or cunningly disguised foulness for true beauty"[6].

What both these depictions of the "Catholic threat" have in common is the notion of deception and the transformative ability. By masquerading under the pretences of virtue and faith, in the radical Protestant mind the Catholic Church seeks not to bring spiritual salvation to its followers, but the exact opposite. Subversion and subterfuge are thus its tools to undermine English society at its spiritual core, and even the more common aspects of life among Catholic societies weren't forgotten.

VICTORIANS ABROAD

With time and distance, things change. The threat of Catholic infiltration seemed largely a background issue by the Victorian era. Ascham's condemnation of the Grand Tour lost its weight as access to Italy waned during the later 18th-19th century period. Napoleon's ambitions in Europe had the unfortunate side-effect of disrupting the tradition of the Grand Tour for many of Europe's privileged elites, as travel became crippled for two decades; the military conflict having a similar effect onto Italy[7]. With no more ease of travel, Italy became a distant landmark in the cultural landscape of England, imagination taking the reigns as the nation began its transformation into an ideal destination for travel and expanding one's cultural horizons.

While the Grand Tour was disrupted, that did not mean that travel ceased entirely. Those who did undergo the journey to Italy did so in the company of their peers and with the purpose of seeking refinement in the study of art and culture as well as to delect themselves on picturesque sights[8]. Later on, once the combined cultural impact of the end of the Napoleonic Wars and the Industrial Revolution made travel in Europe not only safe again, but even more accessible than before with industrialization leading to the opening of travel to a whole new class.

In this transformed landscape of travel, many Victorians found themselves on a wide spectrum of reactions during their travels to Italy. In the popular mind, Italy was the 'motherland of culture'[9]and history had not been kind to it. While some were disappointed and others satisfied with their journey, one aspect does not escape the discerning eye. While in the Elizabethan era the perception of Italy was had it play both the role of beacon of culture and den of (Catholic) vipers; the Victorians did not seem to share the same fear of foreign Catholic influences as before.

Perhaps it was the passage of time itself that played a role in this. As Italy lost much of its shine from various reasons, England had prospered, becoming a global empire in its own. Italy as the homeland of Catholicism was no longer a threat; but a curiosity and amusement; a place where time refused to progress and popular superstition still reigned[10]; a far cry from the perceived enlightened society of England. Among the Victorian era travellers that did make their views on Italian Catholicism known, the tone is not that of the apocalyptic preaching of Ascham, but rather a condescending one. To use Charles Dickens as an example, Pictures from Italy (1846) shows us Dickens, having taken up the mantle of a traveller for himself instead of relying on the travel writings of others, take on a personal narrative as he engages with Italians on a level that the more popular works of travel literature of the time, such as Murray's guidebooks, did not. While Dickens forms a closer, more human connection to Italy than the usual "armchair" tourist would have, it is in his interactions with elements of Catholic faith that we are interested in.

It is important to first note that Dickens does not show the usual Victorian apprehension to expression of culture. This is perhaps most evident during his participation in the Carnival celebrations. Dickens here takes is both participant and living camera, losing himself among the spectacle of light and sound as his gaze wanders from participant to participant, highlighting the veritable joy and chaos as people from all walks of Italian society mingle with no heed of distinction, be it class, age or gender:

"Then, everybody present has but one engrossing object; that is, to extinguish other people's candles, and to keep his own alight; and everybody: man, woman, or child, gentleman or lady, prince or peasant, native or foreigner: yells and screams, and roars incessantly, as a taunt to the subdued, 'Senza Moccolo, Senza Moccolo!' (Without a light! Without a light!) until nothing is heard but a gigantic chorus of those two words, mingled with peals of laughter."[11]

Here, Dickens offers no judgment or scorn. However, Dickens does not show the same joi de vivre when it comes to expressions of Catholic faith. In fact, where the popular celebration of the Carnival has him joining in with the rest of the crowd, his reaction to Catholic rites can be described as unimpressed at best and downright strange at worst. This is not uncommon, as a common element of travel accounts made by Protestant Victorians is the ridiculing, of common Italian Catholic elements of faith such as superstations and church processions[12] and Dickens, while more culturally sensitive in Pictures from Italy than other travel writers is no exception. The image he paints of the Catholic rites he witnesses is that of tedium and monotony; "the same monotonous, heartless, drowsy chanting"[13] he writes while in Rome, seeing each and every ritual procession as an interchangeable series of acts done over and over again; the same old prayers, same old gestures all done in front what might as well be the same old priest; all the same everywhere. Dickens sees such expressions of faith as being uninteresting, mechanically repeated acts born out of tired traditions; the perspective of a man to whom Catholicism has been nothing but "empty and imbued with basic hypocrisy"[14].

Although raised Irish Catholic and having been both extremely liberal and patriotic in her lifetime[15] Lady Morgan is a political beast first and foremost. To her the influence of the Church is less about the Catholic rites and the way in which the common people express their faith, but rather related to its political power in shaping the social expectations for Italians, particularly women. It is essential to note that, while a strong proponent for the autonomy of the Catholic Church in her native Ireland; Morgan is still willing to critique the institution's power in Italy, where the political situation differed. Lady Morgan's appeal lies in her outspoken nature, her ability to treat various subjects with attention to detail and cover many issues "as varied as the impact of tariffs on the economy to the treatment of religious orders, from the quality of libraries and universities to the nature of censorship […]"[16].

She particularly praises the ideals of the French Revolution and figures such as Madame de Lor for creating a new social order in Milan out of the ruins of the old, conservative one whose only purpose, she notes, "was calculated to make women concubines and devotees"[17], taking into account the Church's role in maintaining the patriarchal order. Morgan also has little patience for those who play into this system, as she sees the rites of the Catholic faith, the same old dreary rites that bored Dickens, as instruments of oppression:

"In Rome, on the contrary, and in most Catholic countries on the continent, the people, denied all interest in public affrays and condemned to poverty and inactivity by their political institutes, seek resource, and find almost their only recreation, in the ceremonies of the church […] The dictum of the church […] is nearly the same- the relaxation of its forms depends upon the greater or lesser illumination of the people."[18]

As such, women, particularly those of higher social standing became targets of her critiques. As Badin notes in her 2016 work Lady Morgan in Italy: A Traveller with an Agenda; the notion of playing into the assigned societal expectations of one's gender in a manner that reinforced the restrictive social order did not sit well with her*: „As a professional woman, she viewed their charitable role, imposed by the Church and by an unenlightened patriarchal aristocracy, as making them marginalized and subservient subjects"* [19].

In contrast to the disinterest and scathing critiques of Catholic rites and spirituality expressed by Dickens and Lady Morgan, Julia Kavanagh takes on the duty to present the more human aspect of these moments. Her narrative voice in A Summer and Winter in The Two Scillies (1858) acts as a counter to the lens previously held by the mainstay Victorian English travel writers in creating an opposing narrative to the presentation of Italian Catholicism as ridiculous superstition.[20]

Instead of casting judgment or remaining unimpressed; Kavanagh is moved by even the slightest expression of faith. Even hearing prayers sung by a simple working class family is enough to evoke a feeling of religious ecstasy: "It is a charming, graceful scene; and to make the picture more complete, they all sing the Litanies as they glide along the calm sea; and the atmosphere is so pure that one could count them-the air is so still that one can hear distinctly their 'Mater amabilis ora pro nobis'"[21]

Where Dickens seems to be able to separate the joyous events of the Carnival from the dullness of the Church services that followed, Kavanagh ensures that the reader knowns that one cannot untangle such public celebrations from the communal spiritual aspect. The Festa in Sorrento is the perfect example of this, with Kavanagh noticing its collaborative quality as community is placed in the heart of the celebration; joy and spirituality being entwined in contrast with the usual expressions of merriment found in England or France: "Here they pray and make merry; and, thrice happy in this, they do not separate joy from worship."[22]

CATHOLICS AT HOME

While the general consensus towards Catholics in Italy was to perceive them as anything ranging from strange and backwards to willing participants in their own oppression; back home the topic was mostly forgotten until the later part of the 19th century. The Oxford Movement and the increase in Irish immigrants into England placed the issue of Catholicism again into the forefront of the public view. Until this point, even during much of the lives of Kavanagh or Morgan, the English view of Catholicism was that of something was mainly "over there" as it were. Therefore, we can assume that as long as it stayed "over there" the threat to the stability of the Victorian social order would have been kept at a minimum; remaining an idle curiosity to ridicule.

Yet, ideas cannot be limited by borders, and so underlying fears of the spread of Roman Catholicism made their way in the art of the 19th century, particularly in the Gothic genre where: "These novels often had an anti-Catholic subtext which continued into the nineteenth century when fears around Irish Catholic immigration added more fuel to the belief that Roman Catholicism was a real threat to Protestant English society."[23]

When we see the return of monastic life in England, the Elizabethan era style fear of social subversion returns as well. But instead of travellers who became "corrupted" by Catholic ideas during their journeys to Italy, the danger shifted to those who sought to subvert Victorian society by undoing its central pillar - the traditional family structure; priests and nuns.

To say that the anti-Catholic sentiment back home in Victorian England took a sexual turn would be an understatement. Compared to the insulting, if rather condescending attitude that Victorian writers held towards Catholic Italians and their beliefs; the manner in which those remaining home or travelling through Ireland viewed local Catholics veers outright into the domain of sexual fantasy. While abroad we saw Catholicism being perceived as a set of superstitions; the gendered dimension is found alongside the greater critique expressed by Lady Morgan of the Church's role in maintaining the restrictive social order. Back in England however, movements of Catholic emancipation mixed with notions of sexuality as the basis of the social order; thus anything that might disturb the perceived nucleus of Victorian society were seen through this lens; be it in pamphlet or even in art.

The convent and the monastery, having already been associated with decay – structural, moral and spiritual – due to the evolution of the Gothic as both a genre and aesthetic were primed to be seen not as places of worship, but as sites which perverted the fabric of proper society. As Diana Peschier writes: "The Roman Catholic practice of incarcerating young women in convents was believed to be one of the causes of female insanity and convents and lunatic asylums were seen as similar types of institutions by many anti-Catholic writers"[24]. Literature that attacked the notion of the convents in particular was prone to the usage of sexual imagery in regards to the relationships between women and priests as they were both intensely scrutinized and overtly sexualised by Victorian men[25].

William Makepeace Thackeray's The Irish Sketch Book (1911), exemplifies the negative view of convents perfectly as, while inside the Ursuline convent, Thackeray describes an atmosphere of unease worthy of a Gothic novel; where the women there are seen as "poor, black-veiled things"[26]forced to abandon their proper place in society for out of a false sense of religious duty in an act deemed to be "cursed Paganism"[27]as she commits what is seen as spiritual and social suicide in his eyes by taking her vows:

"I had never seen the like before, and own that I felt a sort of shudder at looking at the place. There rest the girl's knees as she offers herself up, and forswears the sacred affections which God gave her; there she kneels and denies for ever the beautiful duties of her being: - no tender maternal yearnings, no gentle attachments are to be had for her and from her, - there she kneels and commits suicide upon her heart."[28]

For a woman to step outside of the confines of Victorian society and break away from expectations of settling down and becoming the ideal domestic keeper is to sin against God's given place for her. In an irony of fate, where Lady Morgan's critical of the Church's institutions for upholding patriarchal social hierarchies and values, Thackeray sees such institutions as eroding them instead. Even married women weren't safe from this perceived social infiltration, as the translation of Jules Michelet's Priests, Women and Families (1846) only fanned the flames of anti-Catholic paranoia. In his text, Michelet describes the paranoia of a man fearing what kind of relationship his wife must have been having with her confessor in a language that combines the Gothic notion of a slow moral degradation with elements whose purpose might also be to arouse:

"And this man now knows of this woman, what the husband has not known in all the long effusion of his heart by day and night, what even her own mother does not know, who thinks she knows her entirely […] And she, she knows full well she has a master of her intimate thoughts. Never will she pass by that man without casting down her eyes […] Then, master of her secret, of her thoughts, the thoughts of a woman, he became man again, without, perhaps, either wishing or knowing it, and laid upon her, weakened and disarmed, the heavy hand of man."[29]

The constructed narrative of cuckoldry where the priest secretly converts the wife from being the subject of her husband and household to being subservient to him is meant to exploit and shock; akin to our modern conception of a tabloid's tell-all article. The shock comes not from the act of taking advantage of a vulnerable woman, but in the transfer of authority, both social and sexual, from the "correct" owner (the husband) to the wrong one. The anonymous 1875 pamphlet The Confessional Unmasked also deals in such materials that walk the tight line between Protestant condemnation and sexual fantasy not by accident, but rather with full intent as Monkia Mazurek in Perverts to Rome: Protestant Gender Roles and the Abjection of Catholicism (2016) points out the use of sensationalist presentations and hints at unsavoury content in such pamphlets and works[30]. Here, the confessor's manipulating nature causes his helpless victim to shame both herself and her husband by confessing her refusal to sleep with him; sinning twice as the husband is thus emasculated through her exposing her failure to participate in one of "the most secret acts of the marriage" [31].The sexually provocative nature of the content not only helps garner attention, plays into expectations and reassures the reader that experiencing sexual thoughts over the notion of such abuses is natural due to the sexually deviant nature of the subject matter.

CONCLUSION

The Protestant Reformation's effects on the cultural perception of Catholicism among the English have run deep. Both the Elizabethans and the Victorians expressed their displeasure through conspiratorial thinking. Catholicism and the Roman Catholic Church became a large threat to the English status quo, with the ideal Anglo-Protestantism citizen being one that was aware of its corrupting power and thus ever vigilant, especially against other Englishmen who have ventured to Italy and have been deemed tainted by default. This Elizabethan era paranoia encouraged not only a nationalist mindset in which a divinely ordained notion of cultural Englishness was placed above any other, it also discouraged exploring outside of cultural boundaries. As the political landscape of Europe shifted, that fear became less pervasive on the surface.

The British Empire's ascension to power contrasting Italy's relatively unstable political climate for a long time meant that the supremacy of Englishness was guaranteed. In this context, Roman Catholicism was no longer perceived as a threat from afar, instead merely being a quirk; a spiritual relic of a superstitious and backwards people that have been left in the hind end of Europe's history; with the practice being seen as one of the main reasons for keeping the Italian people backwards and oppressed. Meanwhile, the various movements for Catholic emancipation birthed a growing concern over the religion's influence in regards to the ideal Victorian nuclear family. Rigidly based on notions of gendered roles in both family and society, the Victorians saw the institution as antithetical to the social order; especially since roles such as nuns and priests existed outside of the established functions for men and women.

This reaction to Catholicism took the form of a moral panic over the corrupting influences of priests and nunneries, devolving into something of a sexual nature as the intersection between religion, Victorian gender norms and Victorian sexuality led to the birth of a literature which sought to shock readers by revealing the debaucherous reality of the Church that would dismantle Victorian society by targeting and influencing women.

THE ETHOS OF CHURCH MUSIC BEYOND TECHNICAL SYSTEMS

Pavel-Vlad Cerlincă
PhD Student, Faculty of Orthodox Theology "Dumitru-Stăniloae" of Iași

Abstract: This article aims to question the increasingly influential idea, present in certain Orthodox circles, according to which only psaltic monody and Byzantine notation authentically express the ethos of the Church. Starting from the real diversity of Orthodox musical traditions, Georgian, Syriac, Coptic, Slavic, Romanian, Greek, the study shows that Orthodoxy has been lived from the very beginning through multiple legitimate sonic idioms, and that the Constantinopolitan model represents only one of these expressions, not an exclusive norm. Drawing on historical examples from both East and West, the article argues that polyphony is not, in itself, a late product of Westernization, but a natural stage in the internal development of ecclesial musical language, linked to the discovery of harmonic relationships and to the natural dynamics of voice superposition. The traditional tensions regarding multi-voiced singing, in the Orthodox as well as in the Catholic and Protestant worlds, are shown to concern primarily the infiltration of theatrical, operatic and concert aesthetics into worship, against the background of the modern process of desacralization, rather than the harmonic technique as such. The analyses devoted to Russia and especially to Georgia, where an ancient polyphonic tradition is organically integrated into liturgical life, demonstrate that polyphony can be profoundly compatible with the Orthodox ethos. The article concludes that the central issue is not polyphony, but discernment: the true criterion of authenticity remains the capacity of a given musical language to serve prayer, sobriety and liturgical beauty, while respecting the legitimate plurality of tradition.

Introducere

Articolul de față își propune să fie o reacție firească la o idee tot mai prezentă în mediul bisericesc românesc, idee întâlnită nu doar în unele cercuri monahale sau în influența tradițiilor de la Sfântul Munte[1], ci și în medii grecești[2] sau în rândul celor formați în spiritul muzical bizantin al ultimelor secole. Conform acestei perspective, cântarea psaltică ar fi singura formă cu adevărat autentică pentru rugăciunea ortodoxă, iar notația bizantină ar trebui privită ca un criteriu absolut al expresiei liturgice corecte. De aici apare uneori concluzia că alte stiluri muzicale nu ar putea susține rugăciunea sau viața duhovnicească a credincioșilor.

Scopul articolului nu este să intre în polemică, ci să privească obiectiv tradiția Bisericii și să arate, pe baza exemplelor istorice, că etosul ortodox nu poate fi limitat la un singur mod de cântare. De-a lungul timpului, Biserica Ortodoxă a înglobat o diversitate impresionantă de tradiții muzicale[3]: georgiană, siriacă, coptă, rusă, românească și grecească, fiecare cu propria evoluție, propriile moduri și propriile particularități. Multe dintre aceste tradiții sunt foarte diferite de modelul constantinopolitan, însă au fost primite, trăite și transmise ca expresii firești ale credinței ortodoxe, fără să fie considerate eretice sau să li se impună modelul bizantin.

În această perspectivă largă, articolul urmărește să clarifice, în linii generale, discuția actuală dintre cântarea bizantină și cântarea polifonică. Cele două nu trebuie privite ca stiluri aflate în opoziție, ci ca forme care au coexistat în diferite epoci și au răspuns unor nevoi reale ale comunităților. Pentru a înțelege apariția polifoniei în tradiția creștină, este important să depășim explicațiile simpliste care o atribuie exclusiv influențelor occidentale sau unor importuri culturale ulterioare.

Polifonia reprezintă, în mod fundamental, o etapă firească în dezvoltarea internă a muzicii bisericești, etapă care a apărut ca urmare a descoperirii treptate a fenomenelor acustice, a relațiilor dintre armonice și a modurilor în care vocile pot interacționa în spațiul sonor liturgic[4]. Cu mult înainte de cristalizarea formelor polifonice occidentale, practica eclesială a permis apariția simultaneităților sonore, a cântării pe intervale consonante și a unor structuri care prefigurează polifonia[5]. În acest sens, polifonia nu trebuie privită ca un element străin introdus în Biserică, ci ca o dezvoltare organică a limbajului muzical eclesial, născută chiar în interiorul experienței liturgice și favorizată de dinamica naturală a muzicii ca artă a suprapunerii și armonizării sunetelor[6].

Articolul va încerca să arate că etosul ortodox nu se reduce la o anumită tehnică sau la un anumit tip de notație. Astfel, fie că vorbim despre psaltică, polifonie sau alte tradiții mai vechi, toate pot exprima autentic frumusețea credinței ortodoxe atunci când sunt cântate cu respect față de principiile liturgice ale Bisericii.

Având în vedere climatul intelectual în care s-a format muzicologia românească, influențat multă vreme de proximitatea geografică și spirituală față de fostul Imperiu Bizantin, nu este surprinzător că numeroase voci au ajuns să considere cântarea psaltică drept singura expresie autentică a Bisericii. O asemenea perspectivă, deși născută din respect sincer față de tradiție, reflectă însă o înțelegere limitată a diversității reale a muzicilor liturgice ortodoxe din lume. În realitate, această viziune restrânsă s-a conturat pentru că, mult timp, accesul nostru intelectual a fost orientat aproape exclusiv către tradiția bizantină, fără a avea o imagine de ansamblu asupra modului în care se cântă în toate celelalte regiuni ortodoxe. În lipsa unei priviri cu adevărat globale, muzica psaltică a fost percepută ca normă universală, deși contextul istoric și geografic arată că ea reprezintă doar una dintre multiplele tradiții autentice ale Bisericii. În contextul actual, în carecercetarea are acces la surse din întregul spațiu ortodox[7], de la Georgia și Armenia până la Siria, Egipt și lumea slavă, o asemenea perspectivă exclusivistă nu mai poate fi menținută. Se impune, dimpotrivă, o privire mai largă, mai atentă la pluralitatea limbajelor muzicale care au însoțit aceeași credință și aceeași liturghie, și o reevaluare a afirmațiilor care reduc Ortodoxia la un singur idiom muzical. Într-o epocă în care studiul comparat este nu doar posibil, ci necesar, nu ne putem permite să gândim limitat, ci suntem chemați să înțelegem tradiția în ansamblul ei, cu respect pentru diversitatea care o constituie.

De asemenea, odată ce privim dincolo de proximitatea istorică a Bizanțului, devine limpede că ideea unui singur sistem muzical ortodox, identificat exclusiv cu monodia psaltică, nu poate fi menținută. Porunca de a vesti Evanghelia „la toate neamurile”[8] implică faptul că Biserica trebuie să își poată exprima credința în limbajele fiecărei culturi, inclusiv în limbajul muzical. Popoare cu structuri sonore esențial diferite de tradiția mediteraneană, precum culturile asiatice sau indiene, nu ar putea integra firesc un idiom melismatic și modal strict bizantin fără a se desprinde de propriile lor fundamente culturale. Prin urmare, dacă Ortodoxia este, prin definiție, o chemare universală, aceasta nu poate fi legată de un singur model muzical, ci presupune o diversitate de idiomuri capabile să transmită aceeași credință. În acest context, exclusivismul psaltic nu mai poate fi justificat, nici istoric, nici teologic.

În acest sens, premisa de la care pornește prezentul studiu este aceea că tradiția muzical-liturgică bizantină a fost primită în spațiul românesc nu ca expresie intrinsecă a unei ființe muzicale a poporului român, ci ca rezultat al contextului istoric în care s-a format creștinismul la nord de Dunăre. Centrul de iradiere al Ortodoxiei pentru întreaga regiune balcano-carpatică a fost vreme de secole Constantinopolul[9], iar tipicul, limbajul muzical și structurile modale au fost adoptate de români tocmai pentru că reprezentau practica oficială a Bisericii în proximitatea noastră geopolitică. În aceeași logică istorică trebuie înțeleasă și trecerea treptată către repertoriile armonico-polifonice în secolele XVIII–XIX, o schimbare care urmează, de fapt, reconfigurările politice majore ale epocii și diminuarea influenței directe a Constantinopolului[10]. Nici această evoluție nu exprimă o „trăsătură națională" preexistentă, ci adaptarea firească la un nou context cultural și eclezial. Din acest motiv, demersul muzicologilor români moderni și contemporani de a conferi repertoriului bisericesc o notă distinct românească, fie în plan monodic, fie în plan armonic, nu este o abatere de la tradiție, ci o încercare de a armoniza moștenirea bizantină cu sensibilitatea și expresivitatea specifică spațiului românesc. O astfel de căutare identitară, desfășurată în limitele tipicului liturgic, reprezintă un act de maturitate culturală și un răspuns firesc la dinamica istorică prin care au trecut toate popoarele ortodoxe.

Tensiuni istorice privind polifonia în spațiul ortodox

Deși, în discursul muzicologic ortodox contemporan, se propagă adesea ideea că polifonia ar fi afectat negativ cântarea liturgică[11], o analiză atentă arată că, în realitate, pot fi distinse cel puțin două direcții majore de interpretare. Prima direcție este reprezentată de muzicologi care nu contestă polifonia ca modalitate legitimă de expresie muzicală în Biserică, ci critică modul istoric concret în care aceasta a fost introdusă în anumite spații ortodoxe[12]. În astfel de contexte, de pildă, în spațiul românesc al secolelor XIX–XX, trecerea la cântarea corală armonică s-a produs adesea prin decizie administrativă, nu printr-o evoluție organică, iar repertoriile occidentale au fost preluate grăbit, fără filtrare stilistică și fără o adaptare treptată la ethosul liturgic ortodox. Prin urmare, critica acestor autori vizează mai ales circumstanțele istorice și modalitățile neuniforme de receptare, nu polifonia în sine, care rămâne, în această viziune, un limbaj muzical posibil și perfect compatibil cu Tradiția, atunci când este cultivată în mod responsabil și integrată în continuitatea expresiei liturgice.

În opoziție cu aceasta, se află o a doua direcție, mai radicală, care consideră că, în afara cântării bizantine psaltice, orice formă de cântare pe voci, armonizată sau corală, ar fi neautentică din punct de vedere ortodox[13], dacă nu chiar străină sau dăunătoare vieții liturgice. Pentru reprezentanții acestei orientări, monodia psaltică este singura formă legitimă de exprimare muzicală a Bisericii, iar polifonia, ca atare, este privită cu suspiciune sau respinsă, fără a mai ține seama de contextul concret în care ea a apărut sau de posibilitatea unei dezvoltări organice, în duhul tradiției.

Legat de prima direcție amintita, Sfântul Sinod al Bisericii Patriarhiei Ecumenice, în enciclica din 5 noiembrie 1846, califică folosirea polifoniei „de tip apusean" în biserică drept „păcat împotriva Sfintelor Canoane", considerând că aceasta are o „melodie nespirituală, nepotrivită cu cuviința bisericească"[14]. Enciclicele ulterioare ale Bisericii Greciei, din 1870, 1874, 1886 și 1888 reiau acest avertisment, interzicând corurile cu patru voci introduse în Atena în aceeași perioadă, pentru a proteja psaltichia tradițională de înlocuirea ei cu un limbaj sonor occidental[15].

Totuși, aceste reacții trebuie înțelese în contextul occidentalizării rapide a Greciei din secolul al XIX lea. În diaspora greacă din Viena sau Trieste, corurile tetrafonice deveniseră deja comune, iar elitele urbane ale Atenei[16], formate în spirit occidental, vedeau armonizarea corală ca semn de modernitate și prestigiu european. Introducerea tetrafoniei nu provenea dintr-o reflecție liturgică profundă, ci din dorința de a alinia cultul ortodox la modelele estetice occidentale (operă, oratoriu, cor mixt), în timp ce tradiția psaltică era percepută ca „orientală" și „învechită".

În această cheie, enciclicele grecești nu exprimă o condamnare teologică a armoniei vocale în sine, ci reacția unei Biserici aflate între presiunea occidentalizării și dorința de a-și păstra identitatea liturgică și moștenirea bizantină. De aceea, invocarea acestor enciclice nu poate susține teza că polifonia ar fi „neortodoxă", ci doar că, în Grecia secolului al XIX-lea, introducerea ei era percepută ca o presiune culturală externă asupra tradiției bizantine[17].

În același climat de presiune occidentală, și în Rusia unii ierarhi manifestă rezerve față de noul stil coral. Astfel, Sfântul Filaret Drozdov, mitropolit al Moscovei, scrie într-o scrisoare din 1855 împotriva introducerii cântării armonice, subliniind caracterul ei „străin" de tradiția bisericească[18]. Și aici însă reacția nu exprimă o condamnare teologică a armoniei în sine, ci temerea că o muzică importată din mediul cultural occidental, cu trăsături de salon și de concert, ar putea înlocui tradiția vechilor cântări[19]. Faptul că, în deceniile următoare, polifonia corală devine limbajul dominant al muzicii bisericești ruse arată limpede că aceste critici vizau contextul și maniera introducerii ei, nu incompatibilitatea dintre armonie și Ortodoxie[20].

Numeroase mărturii din spațiul rus al secolelor XVIII–XIX, de la Sfântul Ignatie Brianceaninov[21], starețul ieroschimonah Sampson[22] și până la mitropolitul Evghenie Bolhovitinov[23], critică nu polifonia ca tehnică, ci forma apuseană a cântării armonice, denunțându-i emoționalismul, caracterul teatral și îndepărtarea de ethosul vechii cântări bisericești. În toate aceste texte, problema nu este cântarea pe voci în sine, ci faptul că muzica armonică importată nu respectă principiile muzicii liturgice ortodoxe și provine dintr-un limbaj străin, adaptat sălii de concert, nu rugăciunii.

În același registru de rezervă față de polifonie se înscriu și câteva mărturii rusești de la sfârșitul veacului al XIX-lea și începutul celui următor, însă și aici ținta nu este „armonia" în sine, ci un anumit tip de polifonie de stil apusean. Sfântul Cuvios Varsanufie de la Optina, care în tinerețe cânta și aprecia opera, dezaprobă după intrarea în monahism folosirea repertoriului coral occidental în slujbe: biografia sa menționează explicit că era împotriva „Western style polyphony in a liturgical context"[24], adică tocmai a polifoniei de inspirație apuseană, asociate cu opera și cu muzica de concert, în timp ce continua să prețuiască muzica artistică în afara bisericii.

De asemenea, Sfântul Andronic, arhiepiscopul Permului, critică în scrisorile și pastoralele sale corurile „îmburghezite”[25] ale epocii, cu repertoriu de salon, și cere revenirea la cântarea simplă, la unison, a întregii obști. Faptul că în aceste texte se vorbește aproape invariabil despre „polifonie de tip apusean”, cor de operă, cor „îmburghezit”, arată că discernământul acestor duhovnici vizează importul unui idiom sonor occidental, teatral și de concert, nu exclude, în mod abstract, posibilitatea armoniei vocale în cult.

Apusul în fața aceleiași crize

În anumite cercuri ortodoxe contemporane, în special în rândul celor profund implicați în viața bisericească, preoți și credincioși cu un atașament pronunțat față de tradiție, se întâlnește frecvent tendința de a eticheta drept „cântări catolice” orice influență apuseană percepută ca fiind străină ethosului liturgic. Această percepție se formează adesea în medii unde atitudinea critică față de Apus a fost preluată din generație în generație, fără a fi reanalizată cu atenție. În realitate, ceea ce numim astăzi, în spațiul ortodox, „influențe catolice” în cântarea bisericească sunt, în mare parte, produse ale culturii muzicale apusene moderne, formate în secolele al nouăsprezecelea și al douăzecilea, sub impactul operei romantice și al vieții de concert, nu expresia fidelă a tradiției liturgice romane.

Ironia este că aceleași tendințe, pe care în Răsărit suntem tentați să le punem pe seama „catolicilor”, erau denunțate cu severitate chiar în interiorul Bisericii Romano Catolice. Regulamentul liturgic Tra le sollecitudini, promulgat de Papa Pius al zecelea la 22 noiembrie 1903[26], descrie explicit contaminarea repertoriului liturgic cu „muzică teatrală” și cu piese profane, fapt resimțit în numeroase țări catolice ca o adevărată criză a muzicii sacre. La un secol distanță, aceeași idee este reluată de Papa Ioan Paul al doilea, care, în scrisoarea dedicată celor o sută de ani de la publicarea documentului Tra le sollecitudini al Papei Pius al zecelea, subliniază că intenția acestuia a fost de a „purifica muzica bisericească de influențele teatrale profane”[27] care se strecurase în liturghie. Departe de a fi sursa acestor abateri, Roma însăși le percepea ca pe o alterare gravă a etosului liturgic și cerea o întoarcere la „decorul casei lui Dumnezeu” și la sobrietatea tradiției.

În spațiul catolic, mult înainte de celebrul Tra le sollecitudini, numeroși episcopi, compozitori și chiar autorități civile semnalau invazia „stilului teatral” în cult[28]. Împăratul Iosif al II-lea încercase încă din secolul al XVIII-lea să elimine muzica de divertisment din slujbe, constatând că limbajul operei pătrunsese excesiv în liturghie. În secolul al XIX-lea, Mișcarea Ceciliană denunța cu fermitate „caracterul operatic” al multor mise, cerând revenirea la simplitatea gregoriană și la polifonia de tip Palestrina[29], iar figuri precum Franz Liszt susțineau aceeași direcție de reformă[30]. Critici similare apar chiar în mediul protestant, unde unele lucrări religioase ale lui Bach sau Haydn erau considerate „prea teatrale” pentru cult[31]. În acest context amplu, Motu proprio al Papei Pius al X-lea nu condamnă polifonia în sine, ci exact ceea ce condamna și Biserica Ortodoxă: amestecarea muzicii liturgice cu estetica spectacolului, cu lirismul de operă și cu sensibilitatea emoțional-seculară a epocii. Această aliniere interconfesională arată limpede că problema nu este armonia ca tehnică muzicală, ci tendința firească a omului de a importa în biserică limbajul sonor dominant al culturii sale. Astfel, reacțiile ortodoxe din secolele XIX–XX se înscriu într-un fenomen mult mai larg, observat și criticat și în Apus: necesitatea de a delimita rugăciunea de muzica de inspirație laică, nu de a exclude polifonia în sine din spațiul liturgic.

Modernitatea și desacralizarea

Înțelegerea crizei stilistice care afectează muzica bisericească atât în Răsărit, cât și în Apus nu poate ignora un fenomen cultural mai larg, specific lumii moderne și contemporane: procesul de desacralizare a societății. Dacă în Evul Mediu și în primele secole ale Europei creștine aproape întreaga creație artistică se desfășura în proximitatea Bisericii, care era principalul comanditar al artelor[32], odată cu Renașterea, Iluminismul și modernitatea târzie, arta se emancipează treptat de sub tutela sacrului[33]. Biserica nu mai reprezintă centrul exclusiv al vieții culturale, iar muzica își capătă autonomia ca domeniu estetic, orientat tot mai mult spre spectaculos, expresivitate emoțională și divertisment.

Într-un astfel de context, nu este surprinzător că multe dintre formele și stilurile născute în mediul profan au început să fie percepute ca posibile modele și pentru muzica folosită în slujbe. Muzica de operă, simfonismul romantic, piesele de concert ori armonizările corale pentru săli mari de spectacol au fost uneori importate, conștient sau nu, în cult, în special acolo unde sensibilitatea religioasă a epocii nu a evaluat critic compatibilitatea lor cu ethosul liturgic[34]. Astfel se explică nu doar infiltrarea stilului laic în cântarea bisericească, ci și confuzia terminologică prin care aceste influențe sunt etichetate simplist drept „catolice", deși ele provin, în realitate, din cultura profană europeană modernă. Pentru a înțelege adevărata origine a acestor fenomene, este necesar să privim mai larg contextul cultural în care au apărut.

În mod firesc, fenomenul amestecării limbajului muzical profan în cult se manifestă mai devreme și mai intens în Apus, nu din cauza unei slăbiciuni dogmatice, ci pentru că societățile occidentale au intrat primele în modernitate. Renașterea, umanismul, Barocul și Iluminismul au creat în Vest o cultură artistică autonomă, orientată către expresivitate, teatralitate și spațiul public al concertului. Pentru prima dată în istorie, arta se desprinde treptat de orizontul sacru și devine un domeniu estetic independent. În această perioadă de tranziție, pe care Joseph Ratzinger o descrie ca fiind marcată de confuzia dintre cele două sfere estetice, societatea occidentală nu avea încă formate criterii clare pentru a distinge ce aparține liturghiei și ce aparține vieții culturale seculare[35]. De aici tendința ca limbajul operei și al muzicii de salon să pătrundă în slujbe. Această evoluție nu reprezintă o vină confesională, ci consecința firească a transformărilor culturale prin care Apusul a trecut înaintea Răsăritului.

Evoluția naturală a fenomenului muzicii

Pentru a înțelege de ce anumite forme polifonice au fost totuși acceptate în cult, este necesar să privim polifonia nu ca pe o ruptură față de tradiția monodică, ci ca pe o dezvoltare firească a cunoașterii muzicale. Odată cu progresul teoriei sunetului și al înțelegerii fenomenului acustic, muzicienii au descoperit structura armonică internă a sunetului: faptul că orice sunet emis conține, pe lângă frecvența de bază, o serie de armonice care îi conferă culoare și profunzime. Polifonia clasică nu face decât să pună în valoare această structură naturală a sunetului, văzută de mulți teologi și muzicieni drept parte a ordinii create de Dumnezeu[36].

În acest sens, armonia nu este o invenție arbitrară, ci o explorare a unui spațiu acustic real, fizic, integrat în creație.

Un prim argument în sprijinul ideii că polifonia, ca atare, nu se identifică automat cu „occidentalizarea târzie" este faptul că ea apare foarte devreme în tradiția apuseană, cu mult înainte de operă și de cultura concertistică modernă. Tratatul Musica enchiriadis, redactat în secolul al nouălea, este considerat primul text teoretic care fixează în scris reguli pentru cântarea pe două voci, așa numitul organum, adică adăugarea unei voci paralele la o melodie gregoriană existentă[37].

Discuția despre organum în Musica enchiriadis și în textul înrudit Scolica enchiriadis arată că încă din secolele IX–X, deci înainte de Marea Schismă, în Apus se cunosc și se practică forme simple de polifonie liturgică, legate organic de cântarea gregoriană, nu de spectacolele laice. Din această perspectivă, este clar că polifonia nu poate fi redusă la un produs târziu al „muzicii de operă", ci reprezintă o dezvoltare internă a tradiției bisericești occidentale.

În mod similar, și spațiul rus oferă exemple de polifonie bisericească anterioară atât reformelor lui Petru cel Mare, cât și valului de influență apuseană din secolele XVIII–XIX. Pe baza monodiei vechi, Znamenny, în secolele XVI–XVII se dezvoltă în Rusia forme de cântare pe mai multe voci, precum așa numitele troestrochie și demestvennoe penie[38]. Studiile recente subliniază că aceste tipuri de polifonie își au rădăcina în sistemul modal propriu Znamenny-ului și nu au legătură directă cu polifonia occidentală în sistem major minor[39], sonoritatea lor părând adesea disonantă urechii europene tocmai pentru că urmează altă logică modală.

Cu alte cuvinte, înainte de instaurarea „barocului rusesc" și înainte de politica de occidentalizare a lui Petru cel Mare, exista deja în Biserica Rusă o tradiție de cântare polifonică proprie, născută din interiorul practicii liturgice și fidelă etosului său.

Abia mai târziu, în secolele XVII–XVIII, odată cu contactele intense cu Polonia și Ucraina și cu reformele lui Petru cel Mare, se răspândește în Rusia așa numitul partesnoe penie, adică o polifonie de tip occidental, scrisă pe partituri separate pentru fiecare voce, care preia mai multe trăsături din stilul concertistic apusean[40].

Tocmai această etapă ulterioară, marcată de influențe străine și de integrarea unor idiomuri muzicale laice sau semilaice, va fi resimțită de mulți teologi și muzicieni ca o „occidentalizare" problematică a cântării[41]. Faptul că putem distinge clar între polifonia veche, legată de Znamenny și de modurile tradiționale, și polifonia occidentalizată de tip partesny întărește concluzia că polifonia, în sine, nu este echivalentă cu stilul laic sau cu „trădarea" tradiției, ci poate exista ca dezvoltare naturală a limbajului muzical liturgic, înainte și în afara influențelor seculare moderne.

Cazul Georgiei: o tradiție ortodoxă polifonică dintru început

După ce am analizat prima direcție de interpretare, cea care nu respinge în sine polifonia, ci doar anumite contexte istorice ale introducerii ei, se cuvine să oferim un răspuns și celei de-a doua perspective, mai radicale, potrivit căreia doar monodia ar fi conformă cu duhul ortodox. În acest sens, exemplul Bisericii Ortodoxe Georgiene, care a cultivat o tradiție polifonică încă din zorii creștinismului ei, oferă un contraargument convingător.

Este recunoscut în rândul muzicologilor că tradiția polifonică din Georgia are origini extrem de vechi, datând cel puțin din perioada premergătoare creștinării regatului[42], unii mergând până la a afirma că polifonia georgiană păstrează urme ale unui fond muzical străvechi, cu mult anterior creștinării[43].

Polifonia georgiană nu reprezintă o imitație a vreunui model extern, ci un fenomen autohton, profund înrădăcinat în cultura locală. Georgia constituie o adevărată insulă muzicală în Caucaz[44], fiind înconjurată de popoare cu tradiții monodice; în acest context, cântul polifonic georgian apare ca un fenomen cu totul autonom și original, cu reguli proprii de contrapunct și acordaj, independent de orice model extern[45].

Studiile contemporane arată că posibilele influențe creștine timpurii, cum ar fi cele siriene sau bizantine, asupra muzicii georgiene erau exclusiv monodice, ceea ce sugerează că tradiția polifonică locală preceda aceste influențe și a evoluat independent, și că polifonia cântărilor ortodoxe georgiene nu își are originea în Occident, fiind probabil alimentată de o tradiție folclorică polifonică deja existentă[46].

Această continuitate internă explică de ce polifonia a devenit parte integrantă a identității spirituale a georgienilor încă de la începuturile creștinării lor. Muzicologia liturgică indică faptul că muzica a fost dintotdeauna o componentă centrală a cultului ortodox georgian, un motiv de mândrie națională, iar practica polifonică sacră s-a dezvoltat organic din practicile polifonice indigene mai vechi Transmiterea pe cale orală a fost esențială în perpetuarea acestei tradiții. Până spre sfârșitul secolului al XIX-lea, muzica populară georgiană a fost o tradiție orală pură, cântecele erau învățate din auzite în comunitate, și abia atunci au început să fie transcrise sistematic de către culegători[47].

De altfel, notația muzicală europeană s-a dovedit inadecvată pentru redarea exactă a intervalelor și scărilor specifice polifoniei georgiene, astfel că până astăzi în ansamblurile tradiționale piesele se deprind tot prin imitare directă și memorare orală[48].

Această modalitate de transmitere a permis conservarea unor trăsături arhaice unice. Astăzi, cercetătorii consideră polifonia georgiană drept cea mai veche tradiție polifonică din lumea creștină, păstrând reminiscențe ritualice precreștine adaptate noului context religios[49].

Biserica Ortodoxă Georgiană a îmbrățișat în mod firesc cântarea polifonică drept parte a cultului, fără conflicte interne sau încercări de a o corecta către forme monodice. Odată cu creștinarea Georgiei în 337 d.Hr., modul tradițional de cântare populară, pe mai multe voci, a fost adus în biserică și a coexistat armonios cu textele traduse din greacă. Între secolele V–VIII, călugării georgieni din diverse centre monastice, atât din Georgia, cât și din comunități din Grecia sau Palestina, au început să compună imnografie liturgică proprie[50].

Un document elocvent provine de la filosoful și teologul Ioane Petriți (sec. XI–XII), care descrie explicit natura triplă a cântării bisericești georgiene: el notează denumirile celor trei voci:

mzakhr (prima voce), zhir (a doua voce) și bami (basul), și laudă armonia generată de contopirea lor, pe care o consideră analogia muzicală a Sfintei Treimi[51].

Faptul că Petriți folosește această paralelă teologică atestă prestigiul de care se bucura forma polifonică în Biserica Georgiană medievală și acceptarea ei deplină în rânduiala liturgică. Practic, cântarea în trei părți a devenit o expresie a evlaviei locale, considerată pe deplin compatibilă cu Ortodoxia, spre deosebire de alte contexte unde uniformitatea monodică era normativă.

În mod remarcabil, Biserica Georgiană nu a manifestat tensiuni doctrinare privind polifonia. Nu există enciclice sau corecții impuse cântului pe mai multe voci; dimpotrivă, tradiția a fost considerată firească și legitimă. Chiar influențele bizantine timpurii s-au adaptat acestei realități: imnele bizantine traduse în georgiană au fost cântate după maniera polifonică locală, încât treptat imnografia bizantină a incorporat tradiția polifonică georgiană, în exprimarea ei pe teren georgian[52].

Abia în epoci târzii au survenit tentative de alterare, venite din afara comunității ecleziale autohtone: spre exemplu, după anexarea țării de către Imperiul Rus, în 1801, autoritățile țariste au impus temporar în biserici cântări monodice în limba rusă, amenințând continuitatea vechilor școli locale[53].

Totuși, astfel de încercări nu au reușit să altereze tradiția, numeroși clerici și muzicieni georgieni au depus eforturi pentru transcrierea și salvarea repertoriului de imnuri polifonice în a doua jumătate a secolului al XIX-lea[54]. Grație lor, iar mai târziu prin revitalizarea practică inițiată de corul Catedralei Anchiskhati în anii 1980[55], cântarea polifonică medievală a fost readusă la viață, devenind din nou modul oficial de interpretare liturgică în Biserica Georgiană post-sovietică.

Astăzi, Sinodul Bisericii Georgiene susține explicit această tradiție, hotărând ca Sfânta Liturghie să fie oficiată numai cu vechile cântări polifonice locale, ca parte a patrimoniului spiritual național.

Concluzie

Polifonia, departe de a fi un intrus în spațiul liturgic, a apărut, în unele regiuni, ca o dezvoltare firească a înțelegerii acustice a muzicii, fiind asimilată organic în cult. Mai mult, exemplele Georgiei, Rusiei sau ale primelor forme polifonice apusene, arată că polifonia poate exista și s-a născut uneori în interiorul tradiției, nu prin contaminare culturală. Critica ortodoxă față de anumite forme de armonizare nu vizează tehnica în sine, ci mai degrabă esteticile teatrale, operatice și emoțional-seculare care au pătruns în cult ca urmare a procesului general de desacralizare a societății moderne. În acest sens, Apusul nu este sursa crizei, ci a fost el însuși afectat de aceleași transformări, dovadă fiind luările de poziție ferme ale autorităților catolice împotriva muzicii teatrale în biserici.

Prin urmare, adevărata problemă nu este armonia, ci discernământul. Etosul muzicii bisericești nu depinde de sistemul de notație sau de numărul vocilor, ci de capacitatea unui anumit limbaj muzical de a susține rugăciunea comunității și de a exprima sobrietatea, claritatea și frumusețea slujirii. A reduce ortodoxia la un singur stil înseamnă a ignora bogăția și pluralitatea unei tradiții care a crescut firesc în timp și spațiu. Într-o epocă a redescoperirii identităților liturgice și a reevaluării surselor istorice, suntem chemați nu la uniformizare estetică, ci la o asumare matură și critică a moștenirii noastre muzicale, cu respect față de tradiție, dar și cu deschidere față de formele ei de expresie.
